No relief in sight for Sixth Street backups

Green arrow impractical, Tempe traffic official says

BY ANGELA MULL
STATE PRESS

The City of Tempe cannot lengthen the duration of the green light for northbound and southbound traffic at Rural Road and Sixth Street to decrease traffic backups, Assistant Traffic Engineer Ed VanDerGinst said Friday.

"We're maxed out with what we can do there," he said.

Although ASU's Department of Public Safety reported no accidents at the intersection since the Feb. 1 Rio Salado Parkway closure, students turning left onto Sixth to enter Parking Lot 59 are backed up as far as University in the early mornings.

Currently, the green light for northbound and southbound traffic lasts about 70 seconds, and the green light for eastbound and westbound traffic lasts about 30.

However, VanDerGinst said he cannot add time to one light without taking it away from another.

"We've got it cranked up as far as we can go without preventing people from getting out on Sixth," he said.

VanDerGinst said the Rio Salado closure compounds a traffic problem the Arizona Department of Transportation caused by opening the Red Mountain Freeway to Scottsdale (Rural) Road in January.

"We requested that ADOT not open it until it connected to Loop 101 at Price Road so we wouldn't have all of that traffic dumping off on Scottsdale Road," he said. "But because they wouldn't, we have those problems."

ADOT spokesman Mark Bonan said highway and transportation planners knew the opening would cause traffic problems.

"Everybody realized it was going to be inconvenient, but the convenience it does provide outweighs the trouble," Bonan said.

Bonan added that the Red Mountain Freeway should extend to McClintock Road by late March and join Loop 101 in late summer.

Meanwhile, one solution to the traffic backups is adjusting the signals at adjacent intersections at Rio Salado Parkway and University Drive. However, VanDerGinst said the city could only add a few seconds to the duration of the green lights.

"It would be best if we could get users to find a different temporary route," VanDerGinst said.

He suggested students turn left sooner than University to avoid the light at Rural and Sixth.

Political science senior Jeff Schroeder said he switched to using University and Stadium drive because of the traffic delays at the intersection.

"I had to wait in line for 20 minutes to turn left, and I got tired of that," he said.

Schroeder added he would prefer a left turn arrow at the Rural and Sixth intersection, but VanDerGinst said it would not be practical because the parkway reopens July 31.

Schroeder suggested placing a police officer or an ASU DPS officer at the intersection to direct traffic during morning rush hour.

However, Sgt. Mark Gorla of the Tempe police traffic bureau said this is not likely.

AIDS awareness, black history events battle ignorance

BY PATTY KING

Dressed in blue choir robes, members of the South Mountain High School gospel choir rocked back and forth as they sang an uplifting gospel number.

Pinned to most of the young singers' chests were red ribbons handed out during AIDS Awareness Week.

Although rainy weather forced the opening events of both Black History Month and AIDS Awareness Week to be held simultaneously in the Memorial Union Programming Lounge Monday afternoon, combining the two could have been beneficial, an Associated Students of ASU official said.

"One of the things that the AIDS Awareness committee and the African-American History Month have in common is that we're trying to decrease discrimination and ignorance through education," said ASASU's Counseling Health Advisory Committee director Greg German.

Jacque Salawu, president of the black group Students Taking Action to Reach Success (STARS) said that a tie does exist between the two groups.

"It's coincidental that these two events, which had separate focuses —

FOR LOVE ... OR MONEY?

Tempe businesses cash in on Valentine's Day

BY KENNES BOLIG
STATE PRESS

While people search for the perfect Valentine's Day gift for their loved ones how much they care, local business owners will be cashing in.

Valentine's Day is one of the biggest selling holidays, according to several store owners in Tempe. The biggest selling item is flowers, both alive and dead.

According to Sandy Pieper, owner of University Flowers at 425 S. Mill Ave., Valentine's Day is the best holiday for selling flowers. The biggest seller is a dozen red roses.

"You can buy anywhere from one rose in vase to a dozen," Pieper said. "But a dozen is definitely the most popular."

She added that men are just as likely as women to receive flowers from their significant other.

"Our business is about 50-50," Pieper said.

Not only does Valentine's Day give people the chance to show love for one another, it is also a prime time for the broken-hearted to seek revenge, according to Kim Clem, the owner of Drop Dead Flowers, a business specializing in sending arrangements of dead roses.

"Business is amazing," she said. "The phone has not stopped ringing. This is the second Valentine's Day that we have been open and this year business has tripled."

"With the manpower that we have, we're not going to be able to put an officer out there in the mornings," Gorla said.

Radawna Michelle, ASU DPS crime prevention coordinator, said another person would need to be placed at Sixth Street and Packard Drive because traffic would back up there, too. She added it could cost $9,000 to schedule special employees for the remainder of the semester.

"It's not feasible to dedicate one or two of our regularly-scheduled, day shift officers for one to two hours and leave the rest of our campus less secure," Michelle said.

Awareness

AIDS awareness and African American history awareness — have been brought together, in a sense, with an overall focus," she said. "One is affecting the other. AIDS is growing fastest in the African American population."

German added, "Just by our two groups being together, I realize that it's more important to reach the African American population, and, likewise, African Americans who attend this event might become more knowledgeable about AIDS."

Celebrating Black Heritage: the African American Month Kickoff Celebration was sponsored by the Black African Coalition, an umbrella organization for 15 black campus groups, including STARS, and the Black Business Students Association. Four acts were performed at the event, including performances by the South Mountain High School gospel choir and Adzido, a West African drum and dance ensemble.

Joanna Salawu, a member of the Black African Coalition and one of the organizers of the event, said that the kickoff celebration is an important event on campus.

"I think, often times, we forget about African American history," she said. "It's unfortunate that we only celebrate it for one month. Therefore, what we need to do is to celebrate all aspects of it like music, culture and arts."

Salawu said that Monday's event focused less on historical discussion and more on music and culture than some of the other history week events.

"Sometimes people forget that is a very important aspect of African American history," she said.

Denise Trimble, a secondary education junior who worked at the event, said that she became involved with the event to celebrate her black culture.

"It's hard enough to learn African American history, other than slavery, in the public schools," she said. "That's all they focus on."

Trimble added that blacks can benefit from the celebration as much as those from other races.

"Sometimes, we lose track of where we came from and lose focus of why we were put on this earth," she said. "The African American history month helps us to rededicate ourselves to our history."

Trimble added that she would have liked to see more ASU administrators and professors at the celebration.

"The African American population on campus is less than 1 percent," she said. "We have to stay together. It would be nice if some of the professors and the people we look up to as role models would come out and show their support, just to show that they know we're contributing on campus."

Melonee Gauff, an Alpha Kappa Alpha sorority member who also worked at the event, said that a month is not enough time to celebrate African American history.

"Personally, I try to learn about my history and celebrate my history year-round and not just one month out of the year," she said.

Eureka Skinner, a freshman English major who attended the event, said that the celebration will benefit those who take the time to learn.

"If there's one individual out of all the people at this school that has increased their knowledge about African American history by attending the event, the whole event has been worthwhile."

Gingrich nixes rumors of 1996 White House bid

SMYRNA, Ga. (AP) — House Speaker Newt Gingrich ended a brief flirtation with the 1996 presidential race Monday, saying he had decided it was more important to concentrate on the ambitious GOP congressional agenda.

"I think I should stay and focus on what I am doing and get things done," Gingrich told a business group in suburban Atlanta. "I hardly need to run for president to get my message out."

Few Republicans actually believed Gingrich would enter the race, given his longtime desire to be speaker, his often controversial views and pending ethics investigations.

But many activists had urged him to run, especially after other prominent conservatives, including former Vice President Dan Quayle and former HUD Secretary Jack Kemp, announced they would forgo the 1996 race. Gingrich never said he was interested, but he encouraged speculation by scheduling a summertime visit to New Hampshire, which holds the first presidential primary.

President Clinton noted wryly "there's still a few" contenders despite Gingrich's announcement. "I wish the absence of Republican opposition was my main worry but I don't think it is," he said. "Somebody will show up, sure as the world."

The GOP field now includes Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole of Kansas, Texas Sen. Phil Gramm and former Tennessee Gov. Lamar Alexander. Several others are likely to join them in the race, including Sens. Arlen Specter of Pennsylvania and Richard Lugar of Indiana.

In recent weeks, some House Republicans grumbled privately that Gingrich's refusal to rule out a 1996 run was an unnecessary distraction to their legislative work. Several had pressed him recently to make a definitive statement, according to GOP sources who commented in Washington on condition of anonymity.

In obliging them Monday, Gingrich said he had spent time over the weekend asking supporters whether they believed he should run for president in 1996. He said the discussions were prompted by Quayle's surprise announcement last week that he would not be a candidate.

"I talked with people and said, 'What do you think we should do?'" Gingrich told reporters after his speech.

He said some were "very willing" to back a presidential bid. But the consensus was that he should concentrate on getting the Republicans' "Contract With America" through Congress.

Cobb County Commission Chairman Bill Byrne said he advised his friend to settle in as speaker and focus on the GOP legislative agenda.

"He has a responsibility to see it through," Byrne said. Gingrich said he considered Dole, Gramm and Alexander "formidable" candidates and said he looked forward to working with a Republican president come 1997.

"We've had Republican presidents in the last 40 years. We haven't had a Republican speaker," he said during a visit to the Georgia Capitol after his speech. "And so I think being speaker with a Republican president could be a very important part of building the kind of team that could really complete the revolution and that's why I decided I'd stay."

REMEMBERING DRESDEN

WW II foes gather to honor victims of 1945 firebombing

DRESDEN, Germany (AP) — Flying 19,000 feet over Dresden, the British navigator saw his plane's firebombs spin through the night sky. Colin Campbell was aboard one of 772 Lancaster bombers that set the city on fire 50 years ago.

"We were told during the briefing Dresden was an important railway and communications center," said Campbell.

No mention was made that Dresden was a city of palaces and other architectural treasures.

Two British air raids on Feb. 13, 1945, and one by the Americans the next day left the city in ruins. An estimated 35,000 people died in the bombings and resulting firestorm.

On Monday, hundreds of Americans, Britons and Germans gathered to remember the dead and try to heal the lingering wounds.

The military chiefs of the three countries — U.S. Gen. John Shalikashvili, British Field Marshal Peter Inge and German military chief Gen. Klaus Naumann — laid wreaths at a cemetery where the unidentified remains of thousands were buried in mass graves.

Several hundred Germans, many of them elderly survivors of the firebombing, walked quietly to the wooded Heidehof cemetery, where they placed flowers at a marble monument with the inscription, "How many died, no one knows for sure."

German President Roman Herzog reminded those present that it was a time of "remembering and mourning, not of revenge and hate," and said the bombardment could not be morally weighed against other acts of war.

"One life can't be tallied up against another, pain can't be tallied against pain, exile against exile, horror against horror," he said. "Human suffering can not be balanced on a scale."

A later ceremony in the Dresden Cultural Palace was delayed about five minutes when three demonstrators pushed into the auditorium and hollered from the balcony: "Never again, Germany." Security guards took them out.

Members of the same group — which claims marking the anniversary treats Germans as victims and trivializes the Holocaust — disrupted a memorial service in Dresden Cathedral on Sunday.

Dresdeners see themselves as victims because of the firebombing, which some call their Hiroshima. But they are constantly reminded that their country started World War II and murdered 6 million Jews.

Joachim Aris, the leader of Dresden's 90 Jews, was one of those at the hilltop cemetery overlooking Dresden.

Aris owes his life to the Dresden firebombing.

He and his family had been ordered by the Nazis to go to the train station on the night of Feb. 16, 1945, for deportation to a concentration camp.

The bombers destroyed the train station, halting the Nazis' deportation of Jews from Dresden. The war, and Nazi power, ended three months later.

"I have mixed emotions about the firebombing," Aris said. "It saved my life. But I was saddened by my city's destruction."

Gore joins in White House offensive to confirm Foster

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Striking back Monday in the row over President Clinton's surgeon general nominee, Vice President Al Gore called Dr. Henry Foster Jr. the victim of an anti-abortion campaign to intimidate Congress. "We're not going to let the extremists win," he declared.

But critics of the Tennessee obstetrician showed no sign of easing up. House Speaker Newt Gingrich said in Georgia, "I think he's going to be very hard to confirm. I think it's going to be a very embarrassing set of hearings."

In Washington, White House press secretary Mike McCurry acknowledged, "We have our work cut out for us."

But McCurry also joined in the tougher rhetoric the White House has begun using. He said that extremists in the right-to-life movement "have now hooked Republicans and Congress by the nose and they're dragging them around."

Senate hearings are expected next month with a confirmation vote to follow.

Dispatching Gore to Tennessee was the latest in an aggressive set of White House moves to save the troubled nomination. While most nominees are held from public view until their confirmation hearings, Foster has defended himself in a medical school speech, a newspaper article and a national television interview.

On Monday, sitting elbow-to-elbow with Foster in a cramped low-income apartment, Gore stepped up the White House campaign to emphasize the doctor's efforts to reduce teen-age pregnancy among inner-city youths. The apartment houses Foster's "I Have a Future" program that teaches self-esteem and urges youths to abstain from sex.

Fewer unwanted pregnancies would mean fewer abortions, Gore said.

"Anybody who wants to see fewer abortions in this country ought to applaud the nomination of Dr. Henry Foster," said Gore, a former Tennessee senator. "He has devoted his life ... to making abortion less necessary."

The remarks were clearly aimed at anti-abortion groups rallying against the nomination — and the lawmakers who listen to them. The White House hopes to label any senator voting against Foster as an opponent of legalized abortions.

"There are people in this country who want to criminalize a woman's right to choose and they are now trying to make Dr. Foster a victim ... in order to make an ideological, political point and win on behalf of the extremists," Gore said.

"We are not going to let the extremists defeat this man," he said.

Foster had little to say, promising to defend himself at his confirmation hearing. "People have a right to speak," he said of his critics. "And I have a right to speak."

Asked for his position on abortion, Foster said, "Safe, legal and rare."

Foster has said he performed 39 abortions and supervised a drug trial in which 55 more women ended their pregnancies after moving to Tennessee in the 1970s. The White House angered some lawmakers, including Democrats, by twice understating the number of abortions performed by Foster.

The nomination ran into more trouble when it was disclosed that Foster had performed hysterectomies on severely retarded women in the 1970s. Backed by independent doctors, the White House said the practice was accepted medicine at the time.

In his attack on Foster opponents Monday, McCurry said that people in the right-to-life movement "intend to demand a payoff for the payoff they got from the Senate Campaign Committee on the Republican side."

It was a reference to money that Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, chairman of that panel, had authorized to be given to an anti-abortion organization before the November election.

Republican culture

Well, it's the Newt World Order on Capitol Hill, and time to make a few changes.

Whoa! That's a nasty deficit there, and it's time to trim it down.

Let's see, what's on the U.S. budget that we can live without?

Defense? Nope, Newt wants to whack Muslim fundamentalists.

Social Security? Nope, old people vote.

Hey — what about all those perverted cultural types?

And so, funding for such items as the National Endowment for the Arts and the Public Broadcasting System are top among the Republican's hit list in the budget decisions shaking the foundations of Washington D.C.

Which is a shame, considering the fact that the arts and culture aren't only for "elitist liberals" — they're for all of us.

PBS and the NEA fund a variety of programs which appeal to all of us. Who doesn't like Sesame Street, or is disinterested in tours of the great masters?

"Hmph," says the Senate. "Well, the good stuff might stay. But government cultural institutions are mismanaged six ways to Sunday!"

True enough. The fact that PBS aired and helped to fund and develop the insipid Barney show, yet doesn't see a dime from the merchandising money, is a symptom of management problems.

Channels like Discovery and Arts & Entertainment survive as private entities, so why is PBS struggling? Perhaps because where the management for other educational channels has sought to become competitive and meet demands, PBS has sluggishly moved along in the same old path.

Reform is needed, agreed — but are massive cutbacks?

For good or for bad, culture is irrevocably tied up with who we are, both as individuals and also as a nation. And so, funding cultural events, at a generally low price for the individual tax payer, isn't a bad price for high rewards.

Assuming, of course, the programs are well-run and the money well-spent. And also assuming that we can afford culture.

If there is a money crunch — and there is — and the money is needed elsewhere or funding has to be slashed as a whole, then cultural institutions probably are a good place to cut. If we need the money for roads, or for food, or for police, then museums and the theater come in a distant second.

But that's only if the money is cut or well-spent — not redistributed to buy military trinkets to gain jobs/votes for Clinton, padding social security or funding the pork-barrel project of the week.

When loss is experienced it is all mental, not physical

Love returns, but never the lover. It's not an easy thing to accept that the people you've loved in a romantic way will never come back into your life. They're gone forever; solid flesh transformed into memories.

JOSH KRIST
Guest Columnist

Anyone who has unsuccessfully tried to rekindle an old flame has found out the hard way that a love affair is dependent on a combination of circumstances that will probably never repeat themselves. The time and the place of a love affair are just as important as the two people who are drawn to each other.

Sometimes the setting can make the love more difficult, sometimes easier. Easy or hard, the time and place always make love possible. This is why people can look back and wonder why they ever felt anything for a particular person, or why the seemingly perfect love didn't last forever.

Since love is contingent on so many things, it's amazing that it ever happens. Most people are depressed that love doesn't last forever, but that it happens at all is something to respect.

Everyone is, to a certain degree, a failure at love. Unless you get married to the first person you fall in love with, and stay married to that person until one of you dies, all the feelings that happen when you lose a love are going to be experienced.

Standing in the shower, water dripping off your body, it's easy to wonder if it's all worth it, and what the point of this whole love thing is. Everything is quieter after the noise of the shower. You're naked and you're clean and there's nothing to distract you from the possibility that you will never find love that lasts.

Individual memories die out quickly. Many, if not most people, dream about being remembered for something, but probably won't be.

Think of one of your grandparents, and the stories they tell you about meeting your other grandparent, or living through the Great Depression, or any other important times of their life. Of all their important moments, they have only shared a few with you. Of those few, you only have one or two mental images of the past to pass on to your kids, and your kids have even less. A few generations from now, the living person who has done so much will just be a name. Few, if any, of the important stories of your grandparent's life will be remembered by anyone.

Love dies. Memories die. Memories of love die. The consolation is that the important memories of one person will be played out again, but by a different person in a different time. There is something unique in every situation that can never be replicated, but the same types of situations have happened before and will happen after everyone reading this is dead.

After my parents conceived me, their passion died for a short amount of time. Seven years later, their love died, or at least whatever they had together that allowed them to live in one house. Their love died, but because of their love, they created a life that still lives. The person they created is able to love someone else and is able to play out the same dramas that his parents did.

I wonder whether my father thought about what the future would bring the night he made me. I can imagine him lying there, in a young body similar to mine. He couldn't know that in seven years his marriage would be over. I can imagine him holding my mom as they both fall asleep with her back towards him. He could have probably felt her heart beating and may have tried to keep track of the beating of his own heart, and the way that both hearts fell in and out of rhythm with each other, like feet on the sidewalk that walk on the cracks and then in between the cracks in a regular and hard-to-understand pattern, like the pattern of falling in and out of love.

Valentine's: not many changes since childhood, high school

I skipped in from recess, sweaty from both running on the playground and in excited anticipation. A proud smile swept across my ruby cheeks as I glanced over at my brown paper bag dangling on the back of my pea-green chair hiding underneath the tiny, wooden desk.

Oh, that bag, it was a rare beauty. An hour's worth of work: gluing on cut-out hearts, pasting pink pom-poms and sprinkling on enough glitter to light the night sky.

What began as a lunch sack now held secret letters and possibilities of distant romance. A romance, yet to have taken root since that fateful blustery winter Valentine's Day of 1980.

The little white envelopes were popping out, some smooth with only a scribbled name and others lumpy with candy red hots or maybe half-melted Hershey kisses.

I methodically ripped open each envelope, urged on by quiet determination to discover every treasure. I did not mind getting cards with my name misspelled or even a blank card unsigned and unaddressed, I just wanted cards. Cards with candy made best friends. Gimme cards and candy, fill my bag to the rim and my heart will over floweth.

I jittered with sugar shock as my insulin catapulted to lethal levels. I hummed in the corner of the bus hoping to mask the gurglings and sloshing of a tummy overindulged. But this was kindergarten and quantity was the name of the game.

Innocence lost. The Valentine's Day once celebrated with faithful exchange of personally-licked Hallmark minis has been exchanged for chaos.

The last thing I wanted was for Kim, the loud-mouth, to announce to the class I wanted to go out with Jimmy based on the evidence of card giving.

Instead we wanted safe, neutral parties. Parties where the girls gathered on one side of room giggling and braiding hair while the boys shot slobbery balls of paper. Such gatherings, I later realized, modeled many of the things I attend today — out of control and an overwhelming amount of half-digested food lost to the porcelain god.

Years later, I do not know if what struck me upside the head was a Sweettart or a raging hormone. Hormones, pheromones and various other sexual chemicals bounced off the walls everyday in middle school. Valentine's Day caused these little chemicals to spontaneously combust and crawl beneath the pimply skin of my entire 7th-grade class.

I contemplated ditching, running to the nearest Quick Mart to hang with the crowd surely unaware of the date and my single status. Boyfriends meant waltzing around the halls with a teddy bear grumbling, "I love you" when you rub his tummy, love notes slipped in your tote bag in class and singing telegrams.

TORI EVANS

Envy invaded my lonely heart as I watched Jenny, my lab partner, with bigger breasts than my grandmother, get not one, but two candy-grams. She smirked when the door swung open on Valentine's Day. She was serenaded by a walking paper-mache heart then handed little bags of candy that I hated anyway. Jenny was every sweaty lad's possibility.

I wanted to be sung to in an entirely mature manner. For now I was a high school student prepared for commitment, ready for monogamy and dedicated to the proposition that all men are jerks.

Everything is unpredictable in early high school. My monthly cycles were out of whack, my parents mutated from accepting me to loathing me and my affections for "Boyfriend Brennan" shifted course with the breeze.

Valentine's Day was a day to proclaim love, a day to act loved and in some cases an excuse never to love again.

A nice simple note, dousing my life with a little stability, placed on my windshield beside a rose is what I wanted. I daydreamed in economics class of awakening to him outside my class waiting to toss me in his carriage for a picnic in the park. Instead, an oversized, walking mylar heart balloon and a mound of chocolate resembling something my pooch produced, sat upon my doorstep. Will Valentine's Day ever be the sensual TV-commercial experience that makes Country Crock Butter more than just a spread?

The butter on my toast was not spreading, the yellow chunks sat there on the shredded piece of uncooperative bread. Cold and hungry, a hot flash swept through me upon remembering the date: Feb. 14, 1993. I shoved the chunky toast down my throat hoping to digest the pain of being my own Valentine.

The day was unusually long. No offerings of sympathy from Father Time. The attempt to capture the spirit of the occasion felt like being held hostage in a lipstick factory. Poppy-red shirts with white hearts, cotton-candy pink jeans and rocket-red socks spoke the meaning of this enticingly sweet day-be mine.

Give me attention, notice me and flagrantly stare, wishing to know the colors underneath.

Nothing has changed since the paste and glitter of kindergarten. Any college student would die for a decorated brown bag dangling from a backpack bulging with truths. I wish for quantities of white envelopes snuck into my bag by total strangers.

Nothing has changed since the gluttony of parties in elementary school. A party in statistics, with Doritos, cupcakes and a keg of coke would definitely ease the pain for singles or increase the libido for the committed.

Nothing has changed since the savage sexuality in middle school; only now, as adults, self-control defines the desirable. Forget puritanical thoughts — let the chemicals fly like spring pollen.

Nothing has changed since the concept of "love" in high school. Roses, words and surprises are the elemental components in partaking in the Valentine's Day experience.

Hopefully, what has changed is a desire to spend next year with the same person who gave you that box of chocolate this year. First, I must find a princely recipient of a kiss (Hershey's).

Loving other, loving self 101: the basics

Loving someone intimately takes much courage, where, on the other hand, just having a relationship with someone seems to come so much easier.

CHRIS VARGA

Guest Columnist

Consider the concept of intimate love for a moment. In order to achieve a fulfilling, secure feeling about someone, you have to learn how to be honest with yourself.

For instance, the, uh, "relationship" between Lisa-Marie Presley and Michael Jackson. Was their publicity stunt (marriage) due to true love or was it just a ploy to untarnish Mr. Beat-it's reputation? Do you honestly believe that the daughter of Elvis Presley married such a limp-wristed, soprano-speaking guy because he fulfills all of her deepest desires? I don't think so. Besides, it seems he's having a hard enough time being honest with himself or he wouldn't have had to pay umpteen millions of dollars to a little boy to keep his mouth shut. Sorry Michael, no pun intended. But, I digress. No one knows the real story and who really cares anyhow?

The point is that true love requires a lot of work. It's hard to entrust your emotions to someone, especially over a long period of time. That's why there are so many relationships that start off great and then turn into a piece of burnt toast. "Wow, I can't believe they broke up! They looked so happy!" "Huh, who'd a thunk?" Sound familiar?

One of the biggest parts is not to let your ego get the best of you. Don't get me wrong, it doesn't mean you have to lose your own identity to truly love someone. Sometimes you have to put yourself and your ego on the back burner for a while — believe me, it's not going anywhere — and become more aware of your lover. Put yourself in his/her shoes once in a while and it can tend to make you understand a little more easily and allow you to feel more comfortable with the situation. Therefore, as time progresses, you learn to feel for them more fully.

Now, "fully" is to see things from all different perspectives. You not only consider the up-front and obvious emotions, but you have to learn a way to look deeper into the heart of the issue. For example: Have you ever been in an argument with your better half and found yourself thinking, "I don't need this"? Speaking from experience, I could say it's happened many of times. After considering it for a time, I've come to realize that I did need that. The reason you seem so uncomfortable in situations like that is because it causes you to confront your true feelings. Instead of looking at it as "things are falling apart between us," look at it as a step toward growing together.

This would be when the courage comes in. If you have courage enough to stay and work things out instead of running away, then you'll know the feelings are true. Of course, it's a two-way street. There's no reason for you to put in effort if they're not willing to do the same. If that's the case, then it's better to move on to bigger and better things because you'll just end up hurting your partner and yourself more in the long run.

Just remember that in order to find true love, you have to learn how to love yourself first. Once that is accomplished, you're set to let yourself be loved with whomever you deem fit. One of the most important steps in growing together is not to wait for him or her to start loving first. Once it's chosen, just do it; then things will fall into place much more naturally. Your relationship will flow easily and grow into a more fulfilling feeling of commitment.

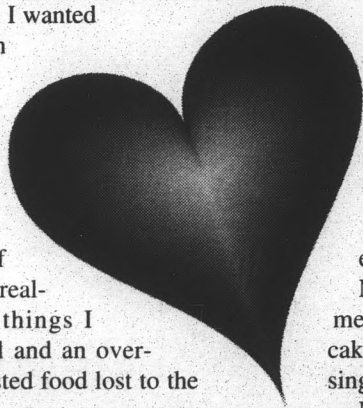

Finding the courage in yourself to take that first step toward commitment with someone who feels that same way puts you on the right track toward falling in love together.

So, in conclusion, if you truly love and care for that special someone in your life, invite them in and don't be afraid to show it. Showing all of your deep feelings and fears will not cause you to lose your identity, but instead it will reinforce that bond between you. If they're just as sincere with their feelings, then opening up and dealing with that fear of being rejected is the best gift (Valentine?) you can give them.

On a lighter note, don't take everything too seriously. Have fun, be happy and allow yourself to be loved without over-analyzing it. It will pay off in the long run and when it happens, it will seem unlikely to ever be unhappy again.

FLOUR POWER

123-year-old Hayden Mill withstands test of time

BY KATHLEEN GILBERT
SPECIAL TO THE STATE PRESS

Mill Avenue has always had traffic. While students biking or rollerblading today compete with cars for the street, 100 years ago farm wagons rolled unmolested down the road toward the Hayden Flour Mill, the state's oldest, continually operating industry.

"The City of Tempe was built around the mill. We have the first mailing address at the Post Office in Tempe," said Bob Shrewsbury, mill plant manager.

The mill, now a division of the Boston-based Bay State Milling Co., is located at the end of Mill Avenue at the base of Tempe Butte, also known as "A" Mountain. It was once the only industry in Tempe.

"It's registered as a state historical landmark. It has a lot of character," Shrewsbury said.

Scott Solliday, curator of the Tempe Historical Museum, said the street leading to the mill has always been informally known as "Mill" because it was the road from the farms out of town to the mill. In 1888, the Land Improvement Company made the name official.

The mill itself was built by Charles Trumball Hayden, who helped to found Tempe in 1870, Solliday said.

"Today the state considers it the oldest continually operating commercial operation or industry in town. Aside from farming, it was the only economy actually here in the Valley," he said.

The mill attracted farmers to this area because of the convenience of local milling. Hayden ran a freighting business that transported supplies to army posts and mining towns.

"Mr. Hayden had a lot of foresight," said Dean Smith, author of The History of Tempe.

Hayden was instrumental in establishing a modern system of irrigation in the Valley, working with existing Indian canals. He also operated a blacksmith, general store and ferry, for which the town was originally called Hayden's Ferry.

"The mill was the big money-making thing," said Smith, calling it the town's biggest employer with about 300 to 400 workers in its heyday.

Smith said Tempe retained its agricultural character, and the mill's strong industrial base, until after World War II when industry became increasingly important to the Valley.

Charles Trumball Hayden died in 1900 and his family operated the mill until Hayden C. Hayden, grandson of Charles Trumball and nephew of Arizona Sen. Carl Hayden, sold it to Bay State in 1981.

"It needed to be doubled and tripled in capacity at a cost of about $12 million," Hayden said. "It needed to be expanded by a big national company."

Today, he said, "it's just another big manufacturer, one of many industries adding to the payroll of the town."

Shrewsbury said the mill has undergone some modernization over its history, but much of its old equipment dates back to the 1940s.

"The biggest modification was changing from water-wheel power. The first electric motor was installed in 1923," he said.

Hayden said unlike many modern industries that use telecommunications and computers, the milling process has remained primarily the same.

Today the Hayden Flour Mill is not a heavyweight in the flour market, producing only 5,000 100-pound sacks of flour in a 24-hour period, compared with 12,000 hundred weight a day by companies like Gold Medal and Pillsbury.

Despite its relatively small size, the mill remains a familiar sight in the Valley.

"It's probably the most prominent landmark in Tempe," said Hayden, adding that Sky Harbor pilots sometimes use the mill as landmark when taking off to the east.

Shrewsbury said the mill often attracts attention from people on Mill Avenue.

"People eat lunch at Monty's (across the street) and come over wanting to look at it," he said.

The mill is not open for public tours.

Valentine's

the purchasing of living floral arrangements, women dominate the dead-flower buying population. Clem said she credits her business' success to "fantastic marketing" and her theory on the appeal of sending someone dead flowers.

"It's an alternative method of revenge," Clem said. "It is legal, you are not going to get caught and they usually can't track you down if you send it anonymously."

Besides sending flowers on Valentine's Day, college students have a second purchasing characteristic — they want to buy cheap.

Denise Trimble, a junior secondary education, history and sign language major, said students are not likely to spend a lot of money on the holiday of love. She has been working the Sigma Gamma Rho sorority table selling teddy bears on campus to raise money for Habitat for Humanity.

"People this year are cheap," she said. "Most people are getting the little, tiny bears for $4. Some people are getting the $30 bears, but those are usually for their moms. When it comes to their boyfriend or girlfriend, they won't spend more than $5; that's their limit."

Another runner-up to flowers is jewelry, which college students tend to buy cheap, according to the manager of the Tempe branch of London Gold Jewelers, 1804 E. Southern Ave.

"College-aged customers usually buy ankle bracelets or chains, and just gold, no jewels. They tend to buy the less expensive things."

Flowers, teddy bears and jewelry are not the only items ASU students purchase for Valentine's Day. Other gifts range from clothes to wear to things to wear when not wearing any clothes.

"I am buying a nightgown for Valentine's Day," said Jennifer Acton, a sophomore business major. "I know it sounds (weird), but I thought it would be cute, so I am getting my boyfriend a plaid nightshirt from the Gap."

Ann Watson, a sophomore education major, said her gift idea came from one of her boyfriend's jokes.

"I asked my boyfriend what he wanted for Valentine's Day and he said, 'How about a big screw,' so I am going to a hardware store and getting the biggest screw I can find," she said.

Some ASU students visiting from other countries were shocked to hear that boyfriends receive anything on Valentine's Day.

"In Europe, Valentine's Day is just for women," said Frau Fraulemann, a foreign exchange student from Germany. "If you go to work, your bosses give you flowers. If you go shopping, the stores will give you flowers. Men get nothing."

Cable TV informational show spotlights ASU's solar race car

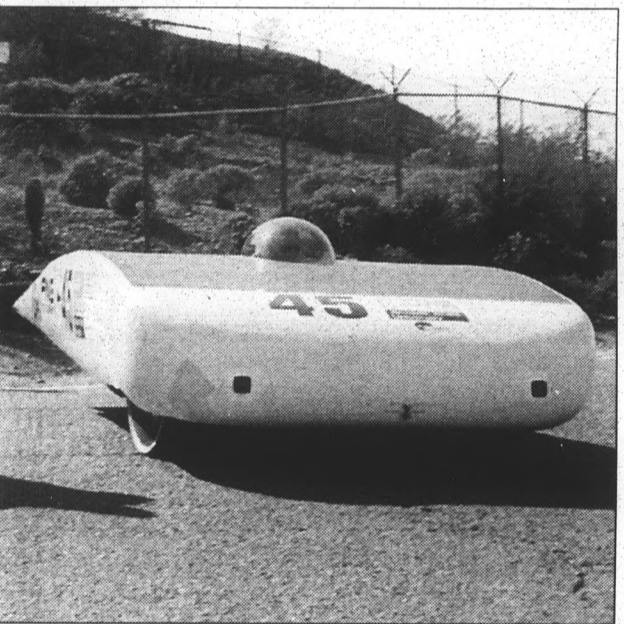

By KELLY WENDEL
SPECIAL TO THE STATE PRESS

ASU's solar race car gained national attention, and the engineering students behind the project got a taste of show business Saturday when a cable television network filmed the car going through its paces at Papago Park.

A Turner Broadcasting System crew from Atlanta came to Tempe to film the solar-powered vehicle for TBS's informational show, Feed Your Mind.

"We hope to get people interested in seeing that the sun is such a renewable source, and that we can use it for energy," said TBS producer Stephanie Bradley.

The air-foil shaped "Solar Phoenix" cruised silently along the twisty roads of Papago Park as a TBS camera crew caught the vehicle on tape. Crowds of onlookers gathered to see the 820-pound car move along on 800 watts of solar-generated electricity, about the same amount of power that a common hair dryer uses.

The vehicle is powered by a solar array containing more than 1,000 single crystal silicon cells, which propel the car up to speeds of nearly 60 mph. Volunteer ASU students designed and built the race car at the Goldwater Center for Energy Systems Research.

"The car is perfect for our show because it's so visual, and people are going to be like, 'wow!'" Bradley said.

This exposure for ASU's solar race team comes at a crucial point in the season. The team is gearing up for Sunrace 95, a 1,200-mile race across the heartland of America, as well as the annual Race to the Clouds in Pikes Peak, Colo., where the students will attempt to set the first record time in the first running of solar cars at the event.

But the solar racers may not make it off the starting line if a major budget shortfall is not met. While local companies such as APS and Sunbelt Batteries have contributed to the project, the team still needs more sponsors to cover further program costs.

"We're not sure who is going to be a sponsor; we're to pick up some more. About $35,000 would take all my worries away," said team leader Jim Troyer.

To cut costs, the group has recycled a previous year's foam composite body, but modifications to meet new rules in the race, the purchase of new Nicad batteries, and the addition of a lighter, more efficient belt-drive has taxed the teams resources.

Although ASU's solar-powered car won't be on television until late spring, the team hopes that the coverage will generate more donations and enable them to continue working on emission-free vehicles for the future.

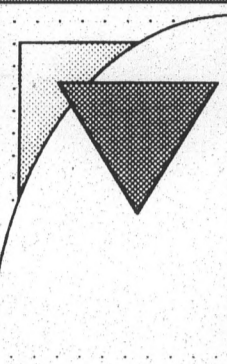

"We really need donors," Troyer said.

The solar racers are also short on volunteers. People interested in working on the vehicle may attend the team's weekly meeting at the Goldwater Engineering Center on campus, Room 302, at 3:30 p.m. Mondays, or contact Jim Troyer at 965-7298.

University Drive plan sees changes

BY DAVID PROFFITT
STATE PRESS

Plans to redesign University Drive are up in the air — again.

Tempe City Council members expressed support this weekend for an ASU proposal to narrow the street, where before only a chorus of naysayers was heard.

University currently has two lanes in each direction, but the ASU plan calls for it to be temporarily narrowed to one lane each way to determine what affect it would have on traffic. If approved, the narrowing would most likely occur after the Red Mountain Freeway is completed this summer.

"I think we should consider all our options, and I don't think we should rule out a test period," said Tempe Mayor Neil Guiliano. "It's important to remember that right now, what we're talking about is a test — we won't decide if we'll have a permanent change until the test is over."

The Downtown Tempe Community (DTC), a group of local businesses, and ASU agreed in principle to a compromise plan last week that contains many improvements sought by ASU. The proposal won't remove any lanes, or traffic, from the street.

The plan calls for leaving two lanes in each direction and adding bike lanes. This would be accomplished by decreasing the width of existing lanes.

However, not everyone was entirely pleased with it. "We support the (compromise) plan, but feel it doesn't go far enough," said Jennis Burton, ASU associate vice president of administrative services. "We're continuing to work with the city on the larger issue, which is the potential closing or narrowing of University."

City department officials have recommended the street not be narrowed, even temporarily.

According to a Tempe staff report, the street currently carries between 30,000 to 40,000 cars per day. If narrowed to one lane either direction, according to the report, its capacity would shrink to slightly more than 10,000 cars per day.

Jim Jones, Tempe city planner, said the move to one lane would be an "absolute disaster."

The Tempe City Council will address the issue Thursday at its weekly issue review session.

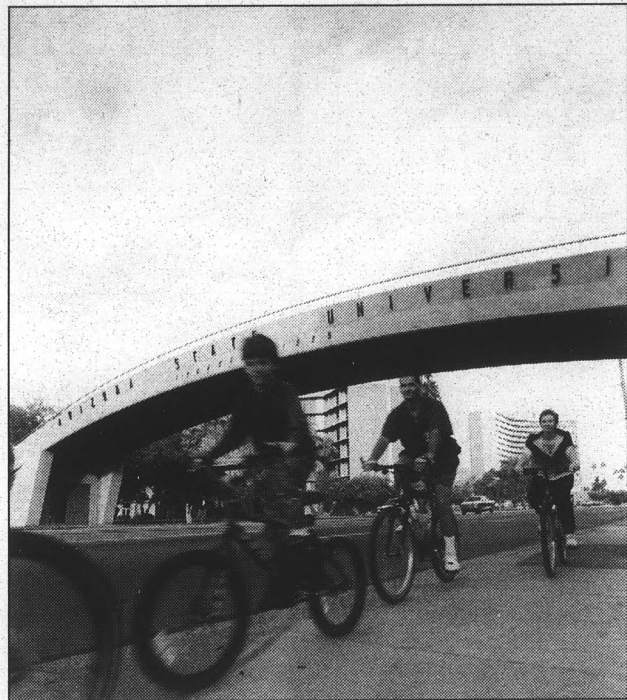

Regardless of what plan may be used, Guiliano said a redesign of the north side of University will likely go forward, but said the council "hasn't formulated" a decision about narrowing University.

Tempe officials expect to spend about $500,000 on landscape improvements, said Harvey Friedson, Tempe deputy public works director.

The DTC compromise plan includes narrowing the car lanes, widening the sidewalk, adding bicycle lanes and a median, and changing the signal timing to give pedestrians more time to cross the street.

The curbs would remain where they are, and the lanes would be narrowed from 12 feet to 11 feet wide. Bike lanes and a median would occupy the added space in the street.

According to Friedson, the traffic lights will be re-timed beginning in July or as soon as the Rio Salado Parkway re-

Dianne R. Bartsch/State Press

A plan currently being debated in Tempe City Council would reduce traffic on University Drive to about 10,000 cars per day. University currently gets about 30,000 to 40,000 cars per day.

opens, regardless of what plan is adopted.

"At the moment, pedestrians wait up to two minutes for the light to change, then only have 20 seconds to scurry across the street," said visiting ASU professor John Minett, author of the DTC plan.

He said it was important to make the street more pedestrian-friendly.

Guiliano said the redesign of the north side of the street would likely go ahead even if the temporary narrowing plan is rejected.

Additional space on the sidewalks will be made by removing some of the low walls in front of the businesses along the street. The plan also calls for a brick sidewalk, "old-style" street lights, and shade trees similar to those on Mill Avenue, Friedson said.

"At the moment, you're trapped between walls and trucks," Minett said. "The fundamental thing is to tidy up the north side (of University)."

He stressed that no structures will be relocated, despite the fact that some of them lie on the city's right-of-way.

The bike lanes will also ease the traffic on the sidewalk, Minett said.

"The current sidewalk is only four feet wide, and very often pedestrians share it with bicyclists," he said.

"The exciting times are yet to come," Minett said.

ASU recruits students by going on-line

BY KENNES BOLIG
STATE PRESS

In an attempt to attract more students to the University, ASU is turning to the world of computers to expand its recruiting techniques.

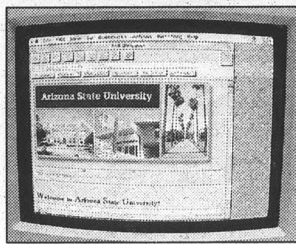

High school students across the country will have the opportunity to learn about ASU and other universities with the use of computers through the new programs adopted by the University. They can even take computerized tours of the campus and hear recordings of students and faculty, including a sound bite from ASU President Lattie Coor.

In November, ASU became one of 40 universities working with College View, a company that provides high schools with a CD-ROM network containing recruiting information. The University paid an initial fee of $13,500 and will pay College View an annual fee of $15,000 for the service.

The program became available for use Monday and will have a formal presentation Feb. 23 in the Memorial Union.

Tim Desch, associate director of Undergraduate Admissions, said that the CD-ROM network will be more cost efficient compared to conventional recruiting.

"It may seem like a substantial amount of money, but it will save money in the long run by using it instead of sending people out to schools," he said. "It will basically pay for itself."

Samantha Feldman/State Press

Information about ASU can now be accessed on the World Wide Web.

Students can also apply to ASU through the network and send the application via e-mail.

"If students can fill out an application on the spot, then they will be more likely to do it," Desch said, adding that the advanced technology will also help to attract more students.

"By making the process more attractive, students will have a far greater desire to apply to the University."

This semester, the University has also begun to use NetScape, a graphical interface on the World Wide Web. Through NetScape, people anywhere in the world can learn about the University. It is equipped with pictures, movies and audio clips.

NetScape has some advantages over CD-ROM, such as cost and speed, said Mike Emerson, a research technician working on the NetScape program. Disc space on NetScape for any ASU staff or faculty member is free and can be changed day by day, he said.

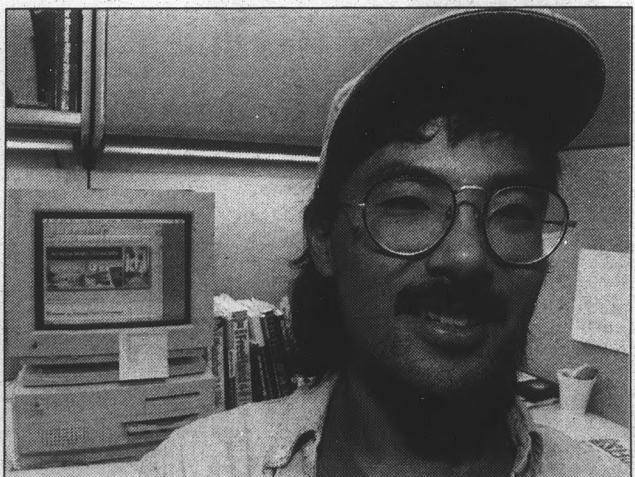

Access to NetScape is also easier, Emerson added. "If someone wanted to use CD-ROM and they were on the other side of town, someone would have to drive over there to give it to them," he said. "With NetScape all you have to do is double-click and you are there."

NetScape is faster and better than some of the past programs on World Wide Web, but anyone who wants to log on must have the necessary equipment, said Mark Ahns, the instructional technologist who helped to create the University's NetScape program.

"You have to be aware of what is out there," he said. "Most of the large corporations use it and it can be accessed from the University, but unless the person is a hacker then they probably do not have the equipment to access the program."

Students can also use a computer disc View Book to learn about the University. ASU admissions sends the disc out to various high schools to make it available to the students.

According to Kari Chesney, an instructional technologist and creator of the program, the View Book disc is equipped with only general information and some pictures but does not have a lot of sound or animation like the CD-ROM and NetScape programs.

2 ASA bills clear hurdle, face final opposition

BY KIM WATSON
STATE PRESS

Two bills drafted by the Arizona Students Association passed the Senate Education Committee with ease Monday, but their future is less clear as they are slated to go to another committee.

The bills, which would establish a work-study program and allow parents to pre-pay tuition, will go through their final hurdle in the Senate Appropriations Committee this Wednesday or next Wednesday to determine if they will get to the entire Senate.

Sen. Carol Springer, R-Flagstaff, said in a recent interview that money for the new programs is a concern and this concern over spending may end up killing the bills.

"We do not have the money to fund new programs, and since these are new, they will be at the bottom of the list."

Paul Allvin, executive director of ASA, said the group will continue to push for the plans even if they fail in their current forms.

"We have support from other senators, and alternatives we may be able to utilize if necessary."

The work study plan would place students in private sector or campus jobs related to their field of study.

Salaries would be comparable to non-student entry-level rates, with half paid by the business and half paid by the university.

David Bowers, an NAU political science major, testified in support of the bill.

"It will improve the link between the community and the university system by giving students hands-on training in their field."

Any resident student who qualifies for need-based financial aid can participate in the program.

Sen. John Wettaw, R-Flagstaff, added an amendment to include community colleges in the program.

Sen. Gary Richardson, R-Tempe, said senators were pleased with the amendment.

"It was a slight oversight that should have been in the bill. One reason for committee hearings is to add components that were left out," he said.

The bill passed 7-1, with Sen. John Huppenthal, R-Chandler, chairman of the Senate Education Committee, voting against it.

"The concept is a good idea, but I view this as a program that should come from the universities," he said.

The second plan the committee approved is Arizona TRUST — Tuition Reserves for University Students of Tomorrow. The plan would establish a tuition prepayment program that would allow families to pre-purchase years of university or community college study through monthly payment plans.

Parents could pre-purchase four years of university or two years of community college tuition for their children years in advance, locking themselves into today's tuition rates.

The pre-pay tuition plan passed with a 7-1 vote, with Huppenthal again casting the only no vote.

"I have trouble with not knowing the potential liability to the state if inflation were to increase dramatically," he said, explaining his vote.

Bill Denham, a Spanish senior at NAU, traveled to the capitol to testify on behalf of the pre-pay plan.

"I am a dad, and this is a way for me to guarantee my son a college education."

Sex survey: Many Americans naive about sexually transmitted diseases

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans don't know their risk for sexually transmitted diseases or their partners' sexual histories, and consequently don't protect themselves, says a survey released today.

The survey, funded by pharmaceutical giant Burroughs Wellcome Co., found 75 percent of Americans don't believe they could catch a sexually transmitted disease, even though doctors diagnose 12 million new cases — not counting AIDS — every year.

"The message is: Know enough to assess your risk before you decide not to worry" about sexually transmitted diseases. "It's a serious problem," said Ethel Klein of EDK Associates, which conducted the survey for Burroughs, a manufacturer of drugs for treating the diseases.

The survey marks the release of a new booklet, developed by a coalition of medical organizations, with explicit instructions for detecting the often hidden symptoms of sexual diseases. The government says one in four Americans may get a sexually transmitted disease, which left untreated can cause infertility or even death.

The survey of 1,000 adults attempted to assess Americans' sex lives, but turned up contradictions that Klein says illustrate people's "very complicated feelings about sexuality." For example, 76 percent insisted they're in monogamous relationships — but 51 percent said they knew at least four people who had more than one sex partner in the last year.

Men reported more sex partners: 51 percent claimed six or more, compared with 25 percent of women. And 28 percent of men reported at least 11 sex partners, compared to 10 percent of women.

Yet a fourth of those surveyed didn't know their partner's sexual history — key to determining risk. And those who think they know may be wrong. The survey said only 18 percent of women under 30 believe their partner has had sex with five other people, while 42 percent of men that age and 57 percent age 30-39 claim they have.

The survey concluded that 62 percent of the men polled and half of the women are at moderate or high risk of catching a sexually transmitted disease. Yet, 62 percent said they know very little about such diseases — and 46 percent of those at highest risk said they never use a condom.

People who practice safe sex agree it's the woman's job — 69 percent of women say they're the ones to insist on a condom, compared to 12 percent of men.

The survey has a 3 percent margin of error.

Theiler's rough roots pave way for collegiate success

BY DAN MILLER
STATE PRESS

It's no mystery why ASU senior wrestler Jeff Theiler appears oblivious to pain when he steps onto the mat.

Theiler's colorful childhood may have surpassed any war he will ever encounter in the circle.

"I grew up in a really tough neighborhood," said Theiler, 23, who is a native of Des Moines, Iowa. "I had some pretty tough neighbors. They'd always beat up on me."

Theiler specifically recalled an old pal named Dave Kephart, whom had apparently left a lasting impression on him.

"He used to hold me down and put firecrackers up my nose and try to light them," Theiler said. "He was about 19 or 20 and I was 7 or 8."

"But after a couple years of wrestling, he didn't do that anymore."

Theiler has come a long way since the good old days back in the neighborhood. Now the 5-foot-8, 150-pound captain is on line to become a two-time all-American on the 17th-ranked Sun Devil wrestling team.

Theiler, who is 17-3 this season, has picked up right where he left off last year. In the 1993-94 campaign, he went 25-9 and finished sixth at the NCAA Championships, earning him all-American honors for the first time in his career.

"His work ethic has progressed to a point where it's reflected in his record," ASU wrestling coach Lee Roy Smith said. "With his focus and commitment, he is providing a good example for the younger wrestlers."

Theiler's blue-collar work ethic currently has him ranked third in the nation. The national recognition comes as no surprise to the coaching staff.

"Jeff's work ethic stands for itself," ASU assistant coach Zeke Jones said. "All it takes is for you to watch just one practice."

The only two wrestlers standing between Theiler and the national championship are Illinois' second-ranked Steve Marianetti and Iowa's top-ranked Lincoln McClravy. Despite losses to both this season, Theiler may be on the verge of a breakthrough.

"He's got the two-time defending champ (McClravy) in his weight class, and Jeff is definitely capable of beating him," Jones said. "He's gonna have to study that guy."

Smith added that if anyone can go pound for pound with McClravy, it's Theiler.

"If anybody can and if the cards fall right, anything can happen," Smith said. "On any given day anything can happen. When he keeps the match in the area of his strengths, nobody's gonna beat him."

Theiler is well aware of the task that lies before him.

"He's really the guy I'm gonna have to beat for the national title this year," Theiler said of his rival. "He's tough all around. He's a goer. I gotta wrestle my match and slow him down."

McClravy or not, Smith believes Theiler is in control of his own destiny at nationals in March.

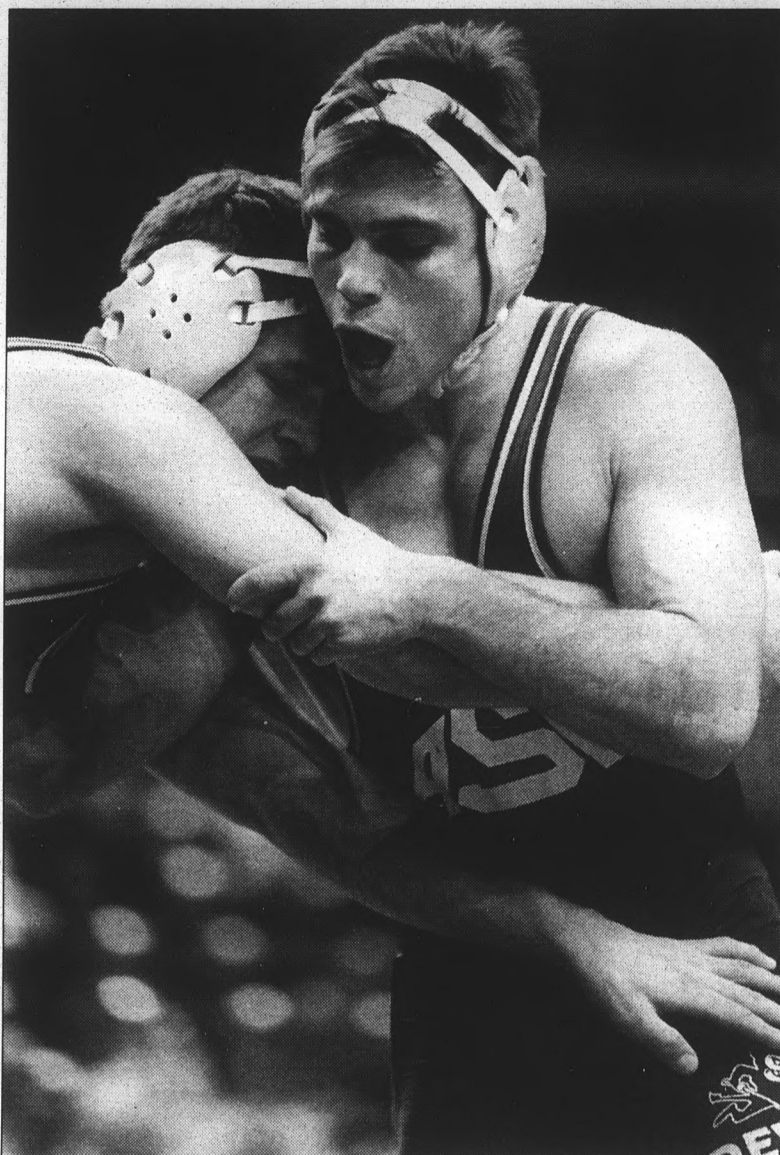

"It doesn't matter who's there," Smith said. "As long as he gets himself ready and he thinks he's ready and he believes in his dream."

Theiler, who won his first tournament in the first grade, began to realize his dream when he was 7 years old. As a 75-pound sixth-grader, he was already practicing with the Dowling High School varsity 98-pounders.

"That helped tremendously," explained Theiler, who credits his older brother Jamie, 27, with much of his early skill development.

Theiler eventually went on to become a three-time state-champion at Dowling, after placing third as a freshman. The three-time all-American won his last 95 matches in a row and ended his 178-7 prep career as one of Iowa's all-time winningest wrestlers.

"I hate losing. I hate everything about it," Theiler said. "But I just try to channel that."

Senior captain Jeff Theiler is in search of his second consecutive all-American honor this season for the 17th-ranked Sun Devils.

It's Valentine's Day on Sportscenter — Next!

Its Feb. 14, if you're scoring at home — or even if you're alone.

Anyways, Valentine's Day is a time to spend with the person you love. And if you can't, you're husband or wife is a good alternative. Hey now, I'm only kidding mom and dad.

Valentine's Day is a time when you think of the great matches you have had in your life, and the ones that were not so great. So today, since this is on the sports page, it's fitting to talk about the great and not-so-great matches of ASU athletics and the rest of the sports world. Here they are:

LEE NEWMAN
Columnist

- ASU basketball and the Pac-10 title? After five straight wins, the Sun Devils are dare I say, en fuego. But look out guys, you still have to travel to Pauley Pavilion, and UCLA might be in the mood to say, you, you're not good.
- ASU baseball and inconsistency. One game they play like they're already packing for Omaha, and the next they're packing for Hackensack. I don't even know what they're going to do in Hackensack, but it's not a fun town. It's time to go back, back, back, back, back, back in time and study 1981 a little. That's the last time ASU won the College World Series.
- ASU softball, women's basketball and the word "ouch."

Injuries haven't helped these two teams this year after rumblin' bumblin' stumblin' 1994 campaigns. Women's hoops started out this season hitting Nothin' but the bottomofthenet!, but now they're at the bottom of the Pac-10.

- Major League Baseball and major league baseball players. Pitchers and catchers report to spring training this week, and I use those terms loosely. The major league players need to come back to the game. When Dennis "Oil Can" Boyd is a team's franchise player, we have serious problems because talent issssss-GONE!
- Kevin Johnson (From? California) and Suns trainer Joe Proski. This is a match made in heaven. Joe spends more time with KJ than he does with his own wife.

- The Phoenix Suns and the NBA Finals. Phoenix could go all the way, but without Manning and his patented kiss off the glass, the rest of the Suns better be regulars on the plays of the week.
- The AFC and the NFC. If these two were a couple, the NFC would be arrested for spousal abuse. I did days and days of research all by myself to find out that the AFC hasn't won the big game in 11 years. The NFC has to learn that to make a relationship work they have to give a little more.
- Jerry Jones and the Dallas Cowboys cheerleaders. Jerry may like the idea, but he's NOT going to get 'em.
- Hockey and playing hockey. Gretzky, Hull, Federov, Messier, Lindros, for the love of humanity they are all, once again, leading power plays (hockey term).
- State Press columns and the cheap use of Sportscenter terms. Did you know, this has never been done before, and probably after you read it will never be done again. Happy Valentine's Day everybody, Up Close is comin' up next.

Bagwell, Messier, Smith each dual honorees at ESPY Awards

NEW YORK (AP) — Jeff Bagwell of the Houston Astros, Mark Messier of the New York Rangers and Charlotte Smith of the North Carolina women's basketball team each won two ESPY Awards Monday night on ESPN.

The two top ESPY Awards went to San Francisco 49ers quarterback Steve Young as male athlete of the year and Olympic gold-medal winning speed skater Bonnie Blair as female athlete of the year.

Televised live from Radio City Music Hall, the ESPY's were given out for the third year. Part of the proceeds goes to The V Foundation for cancer research, established in memory of the late Jim Valvano.

Thirty-three awards were given, including 17 performer of the year awards, seven so-called cross-cutter awards and nine video awards decided by ESPN viewers.

Bagwell was honored as baseball player of the year and breakthrough athlete of the year. Messier won NHL player of the year and best performance under pressure. Smith was named women's college basketball player of the year and was awarded the play of the year as well for her buzzer beater against Louisiana Tech in the women's final.

In addition to his two awards, Messier also was on the outstanding team of the year. George Seifert of the 49ers, meanwhile, was named coach of the year.

Repeat winners from 1994 were Nick Price, golfer of the year, and Pete Sampras, tennis player of the year.

Most outrageous play of the year went to the half-court shot by Corie Clouse of Cincinnati for a one-year scholarship at Midnight Madness. Comeback player of the year was Dan Marino of the Miami Dolphins.

In an award announced earlier, ailing broadcaster Howard Cosell received the Arthur Ashe Award for Courage. Bill Cosby accepted the award on his behalf.

Ducks name offensive coordinator Bellotti as new coach

EUGENE, Ore. (AP) — Just three days after the job became open, the University of Oregon named offensive coordinator Mike Bellotti as its football coach Monday.

Bellotti, 44, signed a four-year contract worth $175,000 a year.

He emerged immediately as the top candidate for the post after Rich Brooks resigned late last week to become coach of the NFL's Rams.

Bellotti said it was important to name Brooks' successor quickly "for the peace of mind of the coaches on the staff, peace of mind of the players in the program and the recruits that we had signed."

Dan Williams, Oregon's acting athletic director, said there were six candidates for the job and that he chose Bellotti because he was well thought of within the program, had coaching experience and had the appropriate values.

"He's very smart. He travels well," Williams said. "He's a wonderful public representative of the university and it's clear to me in the visits I've had with the players that he knows his football and they like him."

The other candidates were Oregon assistants Nick Aliotti and Neal Zoumboukas, California offensive coordinator Denny Schuler, UCLA offensive coordinator Bob Toledo and former Stanford offensive coordinator Terry Shea.

Bellotti came to Oregon in 1989 after five seasons as coach at Chico State, where he had a 23-25-2 record even though the school didn't offer athletic scholarships.

The Oregon offense has averaged nearly 4,000 yards per season under Bellotti, gaining a record 501 yards in a 38-20 loss to Penn State in the Rose Bowl last Jan. 1.

Bellotti was the fourth offensive coordinator during Brooks' 18-year tenure.

Brooks started out last season under pressure to resign after a miserable 1-2 start, but he finished by taking the Ducks to their first Rose Bowl in 37 years and was named national coach of the year.

Theiler

Theiler bypassed offers from several colleges including Clemson, Notre Dame, Syracuse, Iowa and Iowa State to attend ASU. After redshirting his freshman year, a broken hand kept him sidelined for his sophomore season.

This season's success has become even sweeter for Theiler after overcoming a near-death experience last September. The justice studies major was riding his motorcycle through the intersection of McClintock Drive and University Drive when he was side-swiped by a delivery truck.

"It was a rude awakening, I'll tell you that," said Theiler, who fought for his life for three days in intensive care. "The doctor said I was coughing up buckets of blood. My helmet had been covered with blood. I flew into a fire hydrant — a good 30 to 40 yards."

Theiler, who jokes about the accident now, said he was actually more concerned about the condition of his bike at first.

"I remember I was worried about my bike," said Theiler, who purchased the bike last April. "The first thing I felt was my foot. I knew my foot was broken. Then next thing you know my ribs felt real bad. Next thing you know I couldn't breathe. My lungs were filling up with blood. I felt like I was drowning. Then I went into shock."

Theiler, a leg specialist, drops about 25 pounds to get to his match weight. Early in the practice week he enjoys one meal a day and maybe a bagel if he's lucky.

"I appreciate just being able to have a meal," Theiler said. "It makes you really appreciate what other people take for granted."

When he's not submerged in training, he takes solace in gardening and carving miniature ships out of wood. Some day when his wrestling days are over, Theiler wouldn't mind a casual escape.

"I want to get a ship and sail," said Theiler, a die-hard outdoorsmen who loves the sea. "I want to go to the Caribbean and maybe the Aleutian Islands and write a book or something."

But first things first.

"After being here for five years I want to go out with the national title. I want to go out with a bang," Theiler said.
