ASASU candidate reports receiving death threats

Phone callers expressed anti-gay sentiments, Wendell claims

By BETTY MIHALOPOULOS
STATE PRESS

A candidate running for student government office said he received two telephone death threats last week and a splattered tomato on his bedroom window because he is gay.

Marc Wendell, who is running for activities vice president in this week's Associated Students of ASU runoff election, told the Mesa Police Department that the threats were not from the same person.

The first caller, believed to be a female, left a detailed message with his roommate on Wednesday, Wendell said. The next day, he said he talked directly to the second caller who he believed to be a male. On Friday, someone threw a tomato at his window while he slept, he said.

Wendell, who is openly gay, said his sexual orientation is irrelevant to his campaign and was not discussed by him or anyone else during it. However, he said both callers made it clear that they did not want him to represent ASU because he is gay.

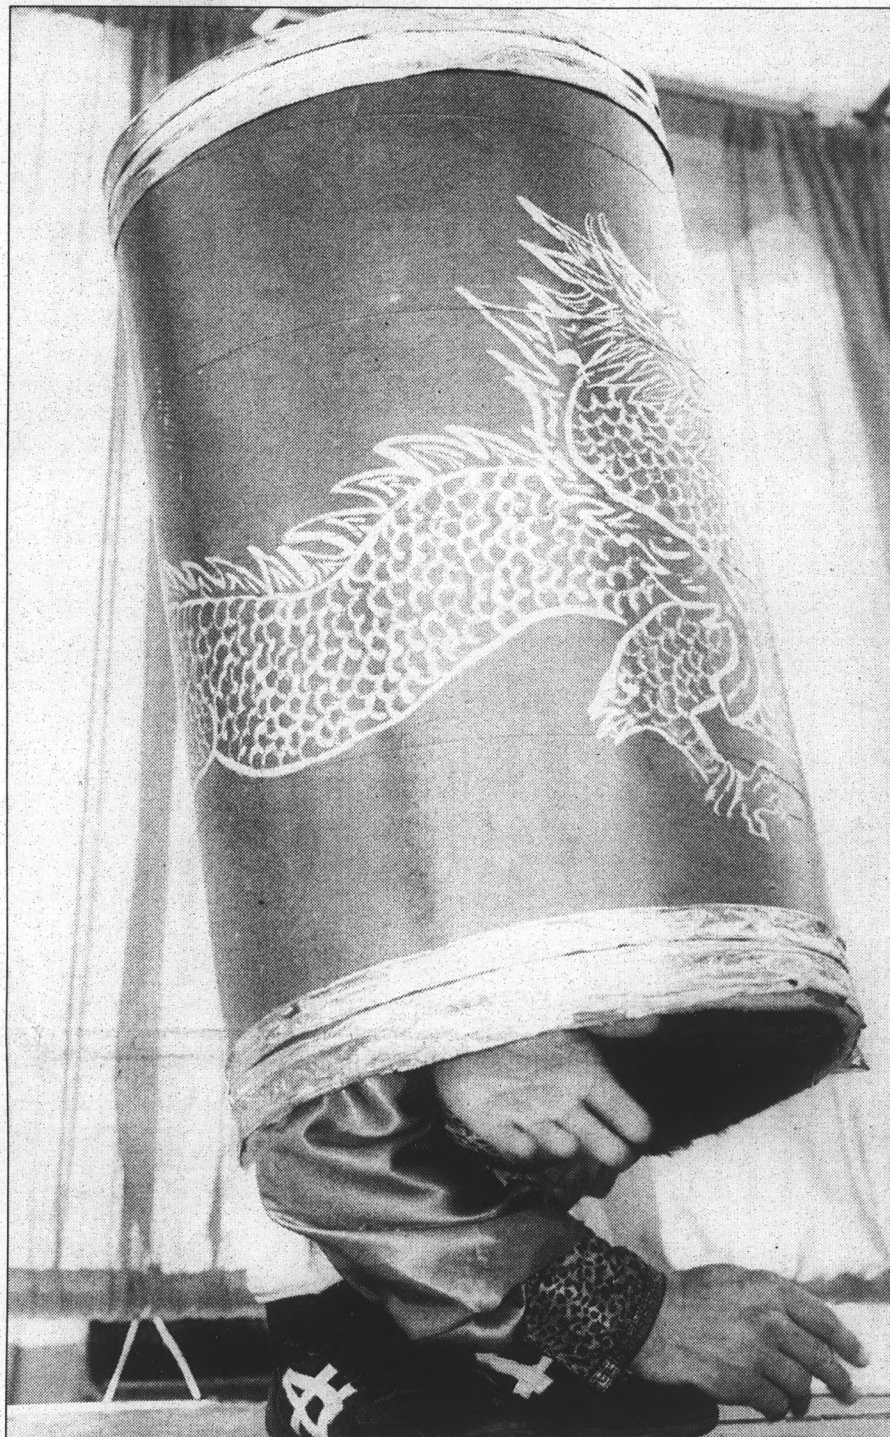

"My roommate told me the girl on the phone said 'Marc that (expletive) faggot shouldn't and wouldn't be vice president, because ASU doesn't like fags,'" Wendell said.

The second caller told him to watch out because he was going to die.

"I have been judged solely on the basis of nothing other than my sexual orientation," Wendell said. "The fact that I am male has

TALK RADIO

KHOT introduces new format with shock-jock Stern

By JOSH KRIST
SPECIAL TO THE STATE PRESS

The loud, screeching clamor of heavy metal on Valley radio was replaced Monday with something just as brazen — Howard Stern.

With the help of the man known as the godfather of shock-jocks, KHOT (100.3 FM) ushered in a new talk radio format, bumping heavy metal out of the Valley.

The showcase Howard Stern Show program, broadcast for the first time in the Valley, first aired in 1986 and originates in New York.

KHOT now carries the controversial show live from 4 a.m. to 6 a.m. Monday through Friday and replays it between 6 a.m. and 10 a.m. along with KGME (1360 AM).

The heavy metal format "wasn't working out," so owners changed what was KZRZ to talk, said KHOT spokeswoman Jennifer Whittle.

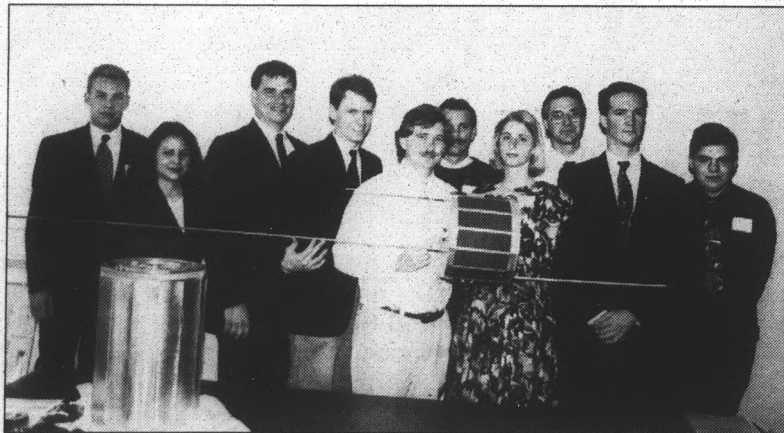

The station is the first FM talk station in the Valley. Station owners are hoping to capitalize on the popularity of talk radio while also bringing it to a broader, younger audience, Whittle said.

Stern took questions from Valley reporters via telephone during Monday's show, but asked more questions than he answered. Many reporters started off with a friendly tone but ended up sounding upset with Stern.

ASU satellite project given green light for further work

ASU's first satellite project met with high praise and was given the go-ahead for further construction by Valley industry representatives during a critical review analysis Monday.

"I'm very pleased with what I see," said Tom Irvine, an engineering manager at Orbital Sciences Corp. of Chandler.

The satellite, ASUSAT 1, has been in development for almost two years. It is scheduled to be launched in January 1996, said Joel Rademacher, a graduate aerospace engineer student and program manager for ASUSAT 1.

Weighing only 10 pounds, the satellite will be the lightest ever to be sent into orbit to perform detailed scientific experiments, Rademacher said.

ASUSAT 1 looks like a 14-sided hatbox, carrying sensitive equipment that will study plasma that forms when solar radiation strikes the outer fringe of the atmosphere 50 to 400 kilometers above the earth.

Based on the information collected, ASU may be able to provide valuable insight in the propulsion of future satellites.

"We're testing a plasma accelerator that will use part of the atmosphere as propulsion," Rademacher said.

He said he hoped that if the experiment is a success, other researchers will get ideas from them.

Some of the experiments on board will use plasma from the atmosphere for electrical power generation, an experiment to test directional controls fueled by the atmosphere, and gauges to measure the precise moment the satellite falls from orbit and burns up in reentry.

ASUSAT's outer body is made of graphite, a lightweight polymer similar to that used in competitive bicycles, and should resist the rigors of space, Rademacher said.

The project is expected to cost $200,000. ASU, the more to do with my identity than the fact that I am gay."

Threats

Viola Fuentes, who is running against Wendell in the election, said she was unaware of the threats, but thought the timing of them was a little strange.

"I just find it odd that it would occur this year when he has not openly affiliated himself with gay rights issues as opposed to last year when he did affiliate himself with gay issues," she said.

But Wendell said the threats were real and were not a ploy to gain publicity.

"It's easy for people to say it didn't happen because it's not happening to them," he said. "They don't have to deal with it. They don't have to pick up the phone and hear, 'Marc, you faggot, you're going to die.'"

Wendell said he believes the threats may be connected to smaller incidents that occurred around the ASASU offices at the beginning of the campaign and what he claims to be a false complaint filed against him on Feb. 24.

Stern

Arizona Republic, suffered the most abuse from Stern. He asked her what she was wearing and then told her that she would go out with him in "two seconds." Stern also told Newberg that he could get her a job at a good newspaper. He also asked about her marital status and sexual preference.

Reporters were not the only ones to receive Stern's wrath. He said he was unhappy with the way KHOT tampered with his show, adding that it failed to publicize his show enough.

After telling KHOT program director Carla Foxx that all she had to do was sit back and let the ratings come in, she thanked him for the advice.

"I guess you just want to make sure my ratings start at zero. ... It's not advice, it's what I'm telling you I want done," Stern said. "I want you to run the show without any interference."

Stern was slightly upset, but only because he did not have absolute control of everything, Whittle said. She added that when Stern goes into a new market, he normally does it quietly.

Stern also complained that the order of his show was tampered with, but Whittle said he simply did not understand that he would have to do certain things at certain times because of the press conference.

"It's part of his schtick. He's never going to tell you he's happy with anything," Whittle said. "He's going to ridicule people all along the way throughout his show."

According to the complaint, a female student wrote that Wendell used expletives to her and her friends while he was distributing campaign fliers.

Wendell said the complaint, which was thrown out by the elections commission, may be irrelevant to the threats, but he has not ruled out a possible connection.

"All I know is that someone or a group of people are out to get me," Wendell said. "There is a trend of little things happening that, if taken together, it makes sense."

Sgt. Earle Lloyd, public relations officer for the Mesa police, said the report Wendell filed will be assigned to a detective and investigated.

Alex Shivers, ASASU elections coordinator, said he is concerned that Wendell is being threatened.

"If it is a student (threatening him), then I am very disappointed in the student population," Shivers said. "I am hoping they find out who it is before it goes beyond just phone calls."

Orbital Sciences Corp. of Chandler, Intel and Motorola are just some of the companies contributing to the project.

"We'll piggyback as a secondary payload on another mission OSC will send up," Rademacher said.

ASUSAT 1 is projected to launch from a Pegasus rocket launched from an L-1011 jet.

But what makes ASUSAT 1 so important isn't the onboard experiments.

"It's people from entirely different backgrounds all involved and interacting," Rademacher said. "Even if we lose contact with ASUSAT, it's still a success, it's team experience that's the educational goal."

Jordi Puyg-suari, associate professor of mechanical engineering, said the project is a good hands-on learning experience for the 150 students that have been involved.

"You learn more with this then you would in a classroom," he said.

Overseeing the ASUSAT 1 project is Helen Reed, director of the ASU Aerospace Research Center, and associate director of NASA space grants at ASU.

"I had just become director when Joel came to me about (project)," Reed said. "I was really excited about it."

Team cooperation among faculty, students and local industries help students supplement classroom with real applications, Reed said.

She said she hopes the satellite will help industries and new students focus on ASU as the top center for aerospace research.

Gingrich's sister blasts AIDS stance of brother, GOP

'I wouldn't vote for him'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Newt Gingrich's lesbian half-sister joined dozens of gay activists lobbying Congress Monday for money to fight AIDS and for legal protection against discrimination. She said the agenda of her brother's party had pushed her into greater activism.

"The Republicans being in control means that some of the support that we've been used to with the Democrats isn't there anymore," said Candace Gingrich. "So it's kind of time for all of us to renew our commitment to the things that we find important."

Ms. Gingrich, 28, of Harrisburg, Pa., was invited to join the lobbying effort of the Human Rights Campaign Fund, the nation's largest gay and lesbian political group.

Asked repeatedly by reporters if she felt her brother was anti-gay, Ms. Gingrich said no.

"He's just maybe uninformed," she said. "Maybe he hasn't had people from both sides giving him information."

Asked if she approved of his political agenda, she replied diplomatically, "I certainly admire his efforts to try to mend things economically. I haven't really dissected his method yet, but I think his intent is good."

But she stuck to her guns when asked about a comment she has made that she probably would not vote for him.

"It's not a family thing. It's not personal," she said. "But unfortunately we're completely in disagreement on 90 percent of the issues. And I wouldn't vote for somebody that disagreed with me, so no, I wouldn't vote for him."

Gingrich said he hoped they could get together before she left.

"I relate to Candy as my sister," he said.

The activists visited dozens of lawmakers to draw attention to key concerns — from threatened cuts in AIDS funding to problems of job discrimination.

Her brother told reporters he believes "AIDS research is very important" though not more important than research on heart attacks, breast cancer or other forms of cancer that might affect children. "I think any viral epidemic is very very dangerous," he said of AIDS.

At a breakfast gathering, Ms. Gingrich thanked her fellow activists for "not waiting until you have a brother that was speaker to become active."

She said she began telling people about her lesbianism at age 20, but had never spoken to her brother about it.

"I personally did not discuss it with him. But my mother called him because she thought he should know," she said. "And through her, I found out that his reaction was pretty much one that kind of empowered me — because his response was that it's my life and I have every right to live it the way that I feel I should."

But Ms. Gingrich said her brother's attitude wasn't adequate as a policy stance.

"My position is that tolerance is not enough," she said. "At this point we have no federal protections. At any point at the job we can be fired just for being gay or lesbian, and that's completely unrelated to job performance or ability."

"That's discrimination. That's not tolerance. That's something wrong. And most American people believe that it's wrong."

Protesters against cuts in school lunch programs demonstrate as luncheon guests at the National Association of Counties continue eating. The protest caused the cancellation of a planned speech by House Speaker Newt Gingrich.

Protest derails Gingrich speech

500 turn out to protest GOP's drive to cut school lunch spending

WASHINGTON (AP) — A ballroom full of county officials was awaiting Newt Gingrich's arrival Monday when the kitchen doors burst open to reveal not dessert but about 500 protesters waving empty lunch trays and chanting, "No more cuts."

The demonstrators, many carrying small children, dodged waiters as they took over the head table and jammed the aisles, protesting reductions in the school lunch program. In doing so, they prompted cancellation of the House speaker's speech.

"Don't take the food out of the children's mouths," said Maxine Nelson of Pine Bluff, Ark., who, like the others, belongs to the Association of Community Organizations for Reform Now, or ACORN.

Faced with the raucous protest, luncheon organizers from the National Association of Counties abandoned plans for speeches by Gingrich and others before the 2,000 county officials. The demonstrators cheered the decision.

District police officials said there were no arrests.

In addition to eliminating proposed cuts in school lunches, the protesters want an increase in the minimum wage, a national voter registration drive and funding for subsidized housing.

Last week, House Republicans advanced a proposal to replace the federally mandated school lunch program with a state-administered system funded by federal block grants.

Opponents said it could lead to cuts in free and subsidized school lunches to the poor.

The legislation would increase spending by 4.5 percent per year — up from $6.68 billion next year to $7.85 billion in 2000 — but opponents say that would not keep pace with demand coupled with inflation.

The demonstrators at the Washington Hilton Hotel were "just tragically misinformed," Gingrich later told reporters, questioning their motives and criticizing their behavior. "Why weren't they at work? Who are they? Who paid them?"

"They broke into the meeting and had bullhorns, and their idea of a dialog was to chant with bullhorns," Gingrich said. "I thought that was an interesting commentary on those who would extort money out of the taxpayer."

Although Gingrich was the protest's target, some demonstrators directed barbs at county officials, shouting through bullhorns that the cost of one of their baked chicken meals probably would finance a week of school lunches.

The county officials, in turn, fumed. One NACO official said their luncheon leftovers were going to Washington homeless shelters.

"This only makes me less supportive of their cause," said Shirley Greene, county commission chairwoman from Latah County, Idaho. "It's about time people figured out they have to do something for themselves rather than have their hand out to the government."

Added Jack Olsen of Oakland County, Mich.: "I think they've probably not won many friends today."

The protesters left after 40 minutes and boarded the chartered buses that had brought them to the hotel.

Detective: Police never considered suspects other than Simpson

LOS ANGELES (AP) — One of the detectives in charge of the O.J. Simpson case testified Monday he never considered the possibility that Ronald Goldman, not Simpson's ex-wife, was the primary target of their killer, or that someone other than Simpson committed the murders.

"I had absolutely no other evidence that would point me in the other direction," Detective Tom Lange said under cross-examination.

Lange retook the stand after a 10-day interruption during which the jurors were left on hold at their hotel and housekeeper Rosa Lopez had her alibi testimony videotaped for possible use later in the trial.

"Detective Lange, you haven't retired yet?" defense attorney Johnnie Cochran Jr. joked as Lange took the stand.

"Not yet," Lange answered in the same deadpan delivery that marked his earlier four days of testimony.

Cochran took up where he left off, trying to elicit evidence of shoddy police work and a "rush to judgment" that Simpson was the killer.

"Did you ever consider that Mr. Goldman may have been the targets of the assassin or assassins that particular night? Did you ever consider that at all?" Cochran asked.

"The targets of an assassin?" Lange replied, incredulously.

Cochran then changed his wording to whether Goldman was "the target of ... the perpetrator or perpetrators" on June 12.

Lange still seemed mystified.

"Did you ever — as the investigating officer in this case — ever consider any other theory than if O.J. Simpson was the only perpetrator in this case?" Cochran asked.

"I had absolutely no other evidence that would point me in the other direction," the detective said.

Asked if he considered that Goldman might have been followed to Ms.

Simpson's condominium, Lange said, "I think it's entirely possible he was followed."

"Did you ever consider that something regarding him or his background may have led some person or persons to follow him there, to that location?" Cochran asked.

"I had no evidence at all to suggest that," Lange said.

"And so did you ever pursue that or look at it at all?"

"There was nothing to pursue."

Prosecutors have said that Simpson set out to kill his ex-wife and that Goldman happened upon the scene outside her condominium when he went there to return a pair of glasses.

Lange acknowledged finding a list of women's phone numbers, including Ms. Simpson's number, in a notebook at Goldman's apartment but was unsure anyone ever followed up on the names.

"I didn't see any other leads to follow up on," Lange said. "There was no other evidence to pursue."

Did you ever consider that Mr. Goldman may have been the targets of the assassin or assassins that particular night? Did you ever consider that at all?

The buck stops here

Ever faced the Curse of the Vending Machine?

Most of us probably have — between classes, anxiously attempting to smooth out that dollar bill and ram it into the waiting maw of a cantankerous candy machine.

We've watched that small scrap of paper get spat out again, and again, and again — until the tolling of the bell forces us to class, deprived of our beverage and/or snack.

It's not a problem of earth-shattering proportions but it is one that we face every day. And, luckily, it may not be a problem in the future.

Amidst the hubbub of cuts, lawmaking and political posturing on Capitol Hill, one of the lesser-heard events centers around that cornerstone of our financial lives — the dollar bill.

To wit, the elimination of all those green-and-white portraits of George Washington which currently decorate our wallets, purses and mattresses. The group of Treasury officials and congressmen propose bringing back the dollar coin — and it sounds like a winner.

The rationale is fiscal savings. The average life span of a dollar bill is around two years, while a coin can last decades, saving federal government money.

For banks, the advantage is the ability to transfer the hoards of dollar bills laboriously counted out by tellers into change hoppers, which can quickly sort out the money. Merchants can use cheaper coin-operated vending machines rather than today's expensive bill-operated venders.

And for students, staff and faculty, the advantage is that we won't have to stuff faded, crumpled dollar bills into those #@#%! Pepsi machines.

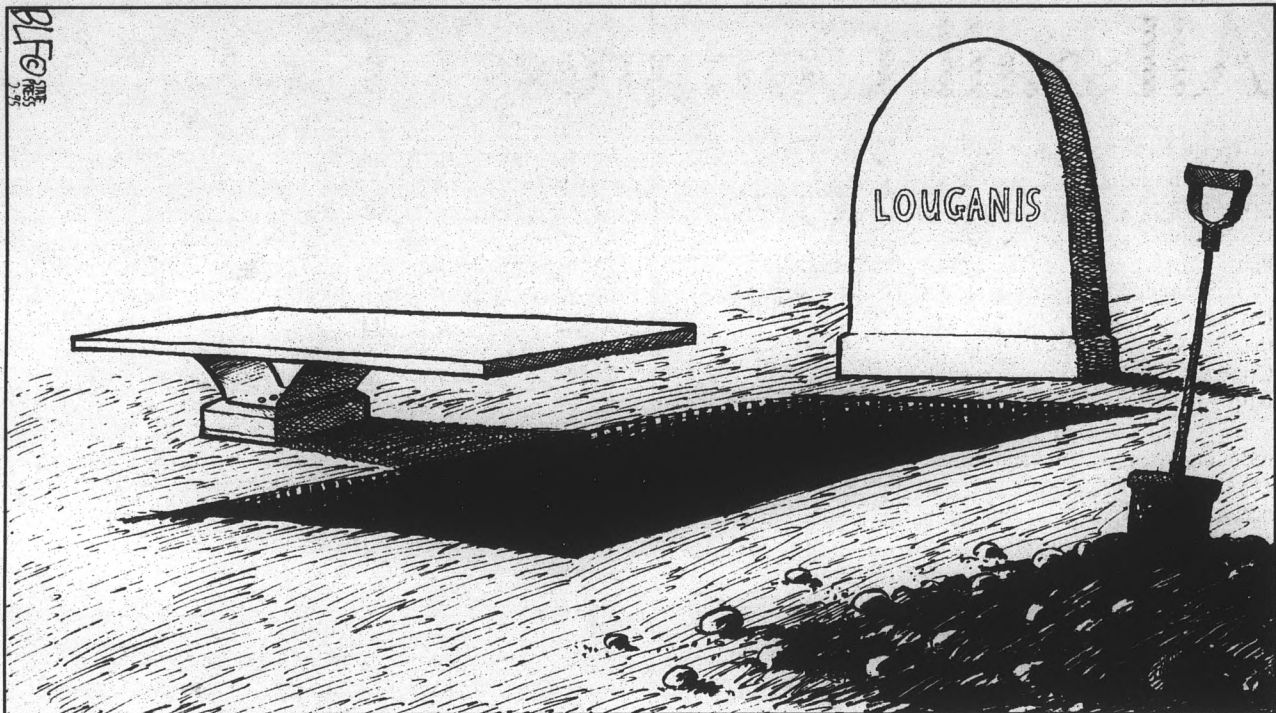

There are a few opponents of the measure. Mint workers fear that replacing the dollar bill may result in layoffs, while fans of President Washington profess distress at the thought of losing his distinguished mug on our money. (He'll still grace the quarter, but it's just not the same.) And there's always the fact that the last dollar coin, the Susan B. Anthony of the late 1970s, was a dismal failure.

But the last attempt at dollar coinage collapsed when consumers weren't willing to use a coin that vaguely resembled a quarter — and as a result, the federal government still has no few million of the coins sitting around in stockpiles.

Suggestions for the new coin include a different size, color (gold) and distinctive portrait, although there seems little consensus on which American pundit, patriot or president would grace the coinage.

It's a relatively minor issue for a turbulent Congress. Insignificant, perhaps, next to the weighty matters of budget-cutting, policy-making and name-calling.

But you know, we'd trade most of Congress' initiatives for a quick and easy way to snag a soda.

Louganis' reasoning for concealment understandable

I remember hearing the gasps that both my mother and I exhaled while watching Greg Louganis knock his head on the diving board at the 1988 Summer Olympics diving competition.

I had fallen in love with Greg that summer: his grace, his style and his ability to come back for a second gold medal. He was a model for what the Olympics meant to me.

Biting my lip, I watched nervously as he had his head looked at and I too felt the anguish which was shown so obviously on his face. He had come so far. A mistake could be his downfall. It wasn't fair.

The facts that he was homosexual and HIV positive were the farthest things from my mind. It was the farthest thing from anyone's mind who was watching the games.

It must have been the only thing on Greg's mind and the fear had to have been overwhelming.

After Louganis admitted to having the knowledge of his potential for a terminal illness during that time, I was shocked. Then I tried to put myself in his situation to help understand it.

This was hard. I don't want to have to conceive what it's like to have AIDS. To be honest, it scares the hell out of me.

I know no one who has ever contracted the disease. There haven't been any old friends of the family, either. I suppose, in that aspect, I am lucky. Reality-wise, I'm completely oblivious to something that has been plaguing our society for a long time and I'm not sure if that is lucky or not. Probably not.

It's frightening, like any other life-threatening illness: cancer, multiple sclerosis, cholera and many others. I've not had any contact with anyone who has had experience with these diseases. Thus, it makes it difficult to know.

I kept thinking, trying to recall any other situation that would enable me to put myself in the position of Louganis during the Olympics.

I found that I could not really empathize with him at all. So, I created a hypothetical situation and imagined myself in the position, attempting to experience what could or would happen to me, my family, my peers, my life.

I imagined myself training for a sought-after dream and having a chance not only to be remembered, but to be proud of my accomplishments and have something to show for it.

I imagined the days of working, straining constantly to be the best I could be since at any given moment I could be put on the spot.

I imagined the horror of an uncontrollable deadly force trying to prevent me from achieving that goal I had spent years, months, hours working toward. I remained thinking about the pain and the unavoidable urge to deny it — just for a while — so I could achieve my victory, my prize, my accomplishment.

Being put on the spot like that, I came up with the disturbing conclusion that I would have done the exact same thing. I would have kept the information from the judges. I would have ignored the problem. I would not have let it get me down because I would have pushed it to the back of my head and only let it out when I contemplated during my rare, quiet times.

I would have been scared to death.

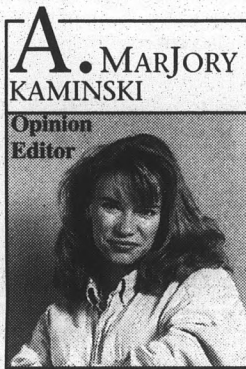

And that's why I can't condemn Louganis. I have an inkling that's why a lot of other people can't either.

It is a situation that the judge would have had to have been there to fully fathom the possibilities. One observing the situation couldn't possibly judge it either. The only possible way is to know exactly what he was going through and that's infeasible.

Now that the truth has come out about his homosexuality — it was learned much earlier — and that he has AIDS, I think I feel a deeper respect for him than in 1988 — a respect for his style, his grace and his courage to come back despite the incredible odds against him.

I wouldn't have it any other way.

All hail Congress' 'Conjob with America'

Hello? Is there anybody out there with half a brain, who really gives a crap about life, liberty and the supposed pursuit of happiness?

Is there anybody out there who has been keeping up-to-date with the "Newt" Congress Conjob, (or Contract, which ever you prefer) with America?

A contract that is hell bent on reducing spending on such unnecessary programs like school breakfasts and lunches, education, clean water, PBS, housing assistance programs, welfare and much more.

Mind you, while they are cutting and hacking away at our deficit in the best way the lobbyists, special interest groups and the rich and powerful see fit, such things as the House members' personal offices, including accounts that pay for the staffs and expenses of the 435 representatives and 100 senators, are left untouched. Hmm. Go figure.

The latest attack, and one that really has me quite annoyed, is the elimination of programs like Affirmative Action. For some, it's already being touted as a major campaign issue for the 1996 elections.

I used to think that Affirmative Action needed to be changed, revamped, and maybe it does. But I think what we really need is some education and the ability to question what we see, hear or read instead of taking everything at face value. That is where the real problems lies.

I have had enough of this propaganda being fed to the public about Affirmative Action being "reverse" discrimination and how qualified white males are losing jobs because of it. It is bunch of bologna.

First off, companies are moving from the United States and going to foreign countries because it's cheaper and they make more money. Others are downsizing and trying to get rid of full-time employees so that they don't have to shell out money for benefits. And everybody is using every available piece of technology to automate and computerize what they can. That is just simple economics, not discrimination or preferential treatment.

Secondly, if people choose to make this a black and white issue, we could just glance briefly at the recent U.S. Census Bureau's report to see it just isn't so.

During the past two decades, record numbers of African Americans have enrolled in college and entered the highly competitive, mostly white professional work world. The report stated that African-Americans earn less than their white counterparts in all jobs at all levels.

In 1993, African American men earned 72 cents for every $1 earned by white men, up a dime from 1969. That's a dime in a 24-year span, folks. And the income gap between young African-American men and white men who are recent college graduates is widening after almost reaching parity in 1980.

I just don't see where the "reverse" discrimination comes in. Twenty-five years ago, society said it could not find any qualified minorities and women. All Affirmative Action said to that society was to "Look harder" or "Cast a wider net." It had to actively recruit qualified minorities and women and give them the same opportunity for job placement that white men had been given.

I have talked to many business owners and top management people who have said point blank, they would not hire anyone, white, black, green or yellow, who wasn't qualified or had the potential to do the job. The competition is too fierce and it's a risk they couldn't afford to take.

I have to laugh when Sen. Bob Dull (Dole) says we have to look into whether or not the government is discriminating against white men. He wants a "colorblind" society.

Newt Gingrich says we have come to a point where society doesn't need government intervention. We can police ourselves.

Who voted these people in and what planet are they living on?

I agree that some Affirmative Action programs need to be changed. But I think first and foremost we all need to start educating ourselves about what programs like Affirmative Action are. Why does Congress think we don't need money for education, school lunches and housing assistance programs? Who decided that? And how is it going to affect us?

When are we going to pop out of this denial and realize we have a serious race problem and are still unable to be comfortable with those who do not resemble us? When are we going to wake up and realize there is something each of us can do. It isn't just about race, either. It's about the violence, guns, our children and health-care. These are issues that should concern all of us.

We are the future. What happens today affects us for the future. Too many people either sit by and wait for someone else to step in and fix it, or don't think there is anything we can do to change it. Or they simply feel so far removed from the situations that they don't really care.

That is a crock.

That is what these higher-ups want you to think. As long as you don't voice your opinion, these money-grubbing, greedy, rich, self-interested and sometimes crooked people will have a strangle hold on our Congress. They will get to make decisions about issues that will affect us now and in the future.

It takes ten minutes or so to write or call your congressman, mayor or governor and let them know that you voted them in and this is what you want them to do, or there won't be a next time.

I may be idealistic, but I became a journalist because I want to move people into action. I want people to know the truth. I want to change the way we do things and talk about issues that are taboo. I want to give the people the opportunity to take back their power and use it to make positive changes. Maybe through my writing, people will read it and do just that.

Fraternity fliers on campus not a big deal

This is a reply to the article in the March 3 edition of the State Press regarding Sigma Pi's rush posters placed around campus. I would like to approach this issue from the standpoint not of a male but of a rational American human being.

One of the rights guaranteed to us in the Constitution of the United States is freedom of speech. The flier that caused so much controversy is nothing that couldn't be seen in a PG or maybe PG-13 movie. One can walk down any beach in America and see women dressed in similar garments where it is not considered inappropriate. Kris Ewing's comments that the flier "perpetuates the exploitation of women" is a statement typical in a world where sexual harassment is a buzzword lawyers love to hear.

The argument against these fliers probably comes from the same people who oppose Hooters. One of the reasons America is the best country on earth is because of the rights given to its citizens. The fact that the organization who placed these posters up had to make a formal apology and may face sanctions is intolerable to me. I guarantee that if a sorority were to make a similar poster with a scantily-clad man on it there would not have even been an eyebrow raised.

In a free country at the end of the 20th century, people need to be tolerant of one another and not search through every incident that occurs for some type of controversy.

Knechtle makes sense in this crazy, growing world

Angela Mull's article regarding Cliffe Knechtle's visit to ASU really strikes a nerve. While I am not religious and detest the evangelical spirit of organized religion personally, Knechtle makes some sense about the pertinent issue of materialistic idolatry.

He is correct in realizing that after graduation, people lack time to "examine the purpose of life and their lifestyles" since they are too busy working and consuming. This is the biggest problem facing humanity now and in the future. The consumer class' tremendous need for more stuff and more money must be curtailed for the sake of all life on earth. There cannot be infinite growth on this finite planet.

Wake up, people. If what Knechtle has to say, in spite of its overt religious bias, can persuade people to concern themselves more with relationships than with rabid consumerism, perhaps we all owe it an honest listen. Are you listening, Mr. Patrick?

Eliminating funding for the arts is preposterous

Jim Mahin, if you want to convince your readers that federal arts funding should be cut, then give them a legitimate reason.

The money that the NEA, the Corporation for Public Broadcasting and other arts organizations receive is totally insignificant. A pittance. The largest grant the government gives out, $285 million to the CPB, is less than one-tenth of one percent of the deficit, let alone the budget.

Eliminating those funds will not even make a dent.

The argument that the arts only cater to an "elite" and not everyday people is a load of crap (I thought I'd use language more on your level, Jim). One of the ideas behind federal funding is to make the arts accessible to everyone, regardless of race or economic status. If the arts received more funding than it does now, then all museums could be free, inner-city youth could receive training in the arts, and everyone could be a member of this elite. With the money factor gone, all that membership would require would be curiosity and the desire to be a more educated citizen of the world.

If Congress desires to balance the budget by eliminating the arts, it will not only fail, it will drive this country down to one that embraces the lowest common denominator. We need more arts funding, not less. As it is, we fund our artists less than any other industrialized, first-world nation.

I urge everyone who supports the arts to write your congressional representative today. Don't let right-wing ignorance dictate what is culture. Don't let them take away artists' livelihood. The arts are fundamental, they are necessary and they should be federally funded without censorship.

New classified staff policy allows for raises for exceeding job requirements

By ANGELA MULL
STATE PRESS

A new salary increase policy allows classified staff who exceed their job requirements to receive raises without waiting for promotions or merit-pay increases.

"It allows us to recognize people taking on more complex work or additional responsibilities in their job level," said Susan Malaga, assistant vice president for Human Resources. "Up until now, we didn't have a way to do that."

Previously, salary increases for classified staff employees including custodial, secretarial and registration workers were provided through merit-pay increases or promotions. However, not all employees wanted to be reclassified to other jobs, and some did not qualify for promotions, Malaga said.

Effective last month, the Career Progression Within Classification Policy increases an employee's current salary by 5 percent or raises the salary to the midpoint of the salary range, whichever comes first.

Donalea Robertson, a sponsored programs administrator, said she likes the policy because classified staff will not have to leave their job classifications.

"You lose a lot of good people that way," she said.

According to the policy, eligible employees are "classified staff members whose knowledge, skills, duties and responsibilities have increased within his/her current job title and whose performance has exceeded the job requirements."

Departments recommend employees once a year, and divisional vice presidents or designees approve the recommendations. The salary increase is effective at the beginning of the next pay period, but employees cannot receive more than three increases within a job classification.

Malaga said the policy is not intended to replace the University's 5 percent merit-pay raise request from the Legislature.

"The idea is to help people get to the midpoint," she said. "To get from the midpoint to the maximum is done through merit pay."

K.C. Hooper, technical director senior, said that if the Legislature is "nit-picky," it could interpret the policy as a message that ASU no longer needs the merit-pay raise. However, he added that he does not expect this to happen.

"I can't imagine it being used as a rallying point by the Legislature," he said.

Although Robert Curry, president of the Classified Staff, said the policy provides an option not previously available, he added that it is not perfect. He said it could allow favoritism within departments.

"It doesn't address some human errors in the fairness issue," he said. "That's a universal problem."

In addition, Malaga said there is a limited amount of money available for the salary increases. Annually, vice presidential areas cannot exceed 1 percent of their classified staff personal service budgets for the increases.

"This is a small amount of money we have available for this purpose," she said. "It doesn't fix all of the salary problems."

PEOPLE

NEW YORK (AP) — Mention the title, The George Wendt Show, and the actor best known as Norm on Cheers rolls his eyes.

"That's probably the weirdest thing about all this," he said in the March 10 issue of Entertainment Weekly. "I can't tell you how weird that feels."

The series, which premieres Wednesday on CBS, revolves around two brothers and is loosely based on Tom and Ray Magliozzi and their National Public Radio call-in show, Car Talk.

After 10 seasons on Cheers, Wendt said he had a difficult time considering other scripts.

"The timing was wrong. It felt like the body wasn't cold yet, or the divorce wasn't final," he said.

However, there's a bit of Norm in Wendt's new character.

"I don't think they're gonna notice much difference other than the fact that I won't have a beer in my hand," Wendt said.

LONDON (AP) — Another shocking secret of the royal family: Prince Philip has trouble with fingerbowls.

Former footballer Norman Barson told the Today newspaper about one night in 1948 when the prince was about to eat loganberries and raspberries at the end of a meal.

"He looked at the fingerbowl and instead of dipping his fingers in it and drying them on his napkin, he reached forward, put it on top of his plate and said, 'Norman, there's water in this,'" Barson said in Monday's editions.

"I felt a right idiot but I emptied it. Then, rather than let me serve him, he took the bowl and poured the lot into this fingerbowl and topped up with cream," he said.

Elizabeth looked away, Barson said.

SPRINGFIELD, Mo. (AP) — Being related to the sexiest man alive is no picnic.

Brad Pitt's parents, Bill and Jane Pitt, got an unlisted telephone number.

Pitt's younger brother, Doug, said reporters are looking for the intimate details of his childhood.

"The problem with doing one media request is that it turns into 10," he said in Sunday's editions of the Springfield News-Leader.

People magazine picked Pitt, co-star of Legends of the Fall, as its latest "sexiest man alive."

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Boss is returning to work for the big screen.

Bruce Springsteen has agreed to write and perform songs for Sean Penn's The Crossing Guard, Weekly Variety reported Monday.

Penn is directing the movie due in October. It stars Jack Nicholson, Anjelica Huston and Robin Wright.

Springsteen won four Grammys and an Academy Award for his work on the soundtrack of Philadelphia.

Whoa! Phoenix couple wins $101M in Powerball

PHOENIX (AP) — For Shirley Pence, the $101.8 million Powerball lottery jackpot was almost literally the answer to a prayer.

"I looked in the paper, and did the Lotto numbers first. There was nothing," Mrs. Pence told reporters Monday.

"Then I read the prayer and looked at Powerball. I was going along and, 'Whoa.'"

Whoa indeed. The jackpot she and husband Don claimed is the second-largest in the 9 1/2-year history of the multi-state lottery and the fifth-largest ever in the United States.

Mrs. Pence called her husband, who at first thought something had happened to their dog.

"She said we won, and I said, 'What did we win?'" Don Pence said.

Mrs. Pence is 55 and a secretary at an insurance company. Her husband, 56, is a self-employed house painter.

The couple, married 38 years, said they'll retire. They haven't made more detailed plans for their loot —

$3,384,195.05 a year after taxes, according to lottery officials.

They will be paid over 20 years through an annuity, and payments will total $101,844,679.29 before taxes.

"I guess it means a dream come true. We've both worked hard all our lives and now we don't have to. I guess that means the most to us," Mrs. Pence said.

Mrs. Pence went to a convenience store at 24th Ave. and Greenway Road — a half-mile from her north Phoenix home — Saturday morning to buy $5 worth of Lotto tickets and $5 worth of Powerball tickets.

Normally, she would have bought them at the supermarket when she goes for groceries.

The winning numbers were 8-23-32-36-41. The Powerball was 40.

"We don't want anything extravagant," Shirley Pence said.

"We still want to be us," Don Pence added. "People tell us that's going to be hard."

The largest lottery jackpots were $118.8 million in California in April 1991 and $115.6 million in Pennsylvania in April 1989.

Tickets for the Powerball game were sold in 17 states and the District of Columbia. Louisiana joined the game Sunday and two more states join later this year.

The game began life as Lotto America in August 1985 and became Powerball in April 1992.

In Arizona, which joined Powerball in April, ticket sales have been about $15 million since this jackpot started building Jan. 18, lottery officials said. Sales on Saturday alone topped $2 million.

The prize goes to an estimated $3 million for Wednesday.

The Pences, who moved here 15 years ago from the Chicago suburb of Downers Grove, have a daughter, Karrie Smego, 36, and two grandchildren.

"I want a truck," 15-year-old Chris Smego told reporters. "And I'm 15 years, 7 months, so I can get my permit."

For the record, the prayer published above the lottery numbers in The Arizona Republic on Sunday: "Lord, you remind us that an unexpected task may hold a hidden blessing. Amen."

Simpson earns NCAA tournament appearance

Redshirt freshman makes most of 1st season of competition

BY DAN MILLER
STATE PRESS

ASU wrestler Aaron Simpson has been there before, but this time things will be different.

"I went to the NCAA tournament my senior year in high school. My Dad and I went and watched it," said Simpson, who was a spectator in Oklahoma City in 1992. "It was a neat experience and I always wanted to go. I always wanted to be on the floor and be one of the ones wrestling."

On March 17 in Iowa City, Iowa, Simpson's dream will become a reality.

The 20-year-old redshirt freshman will be wrestling at 177 pounds for the 17th-ranked Sun Devils at the NCAA Championships.

"I'm excited about it," said Simpson, who earned his invite by taking third at the Pac-10 Championships in Corvallis, Ore., two weeks ago. "It's the best in the nation all in one place."

"I felt all along that he was capable of qualifying and I feel he's capable of going to nationals and challenging for all-American honors," ASU Coach Lee Roy Smith said.

Simpson is confident he will make the most of his opportunity.

"I think I can keep it close with anybody," he said. "I really think I can be in the top eight (all-American) in this tournament. I guess you have to believe that."

Simpson, who grew up in McCook, Neb., a small town just north of the Kansas border in the southwest part of the state, moved to Wellton, Ariz., at age 12. There he attended Antelope Union High School where he was a four-time state champion at 145 pounds, 160 (twice) and 171 as a senior. The three-time prep all-American finished his prep career 142-1.

"He had an aggressive spirit about him that stood out," remembered Smith, who recruited Simpson.

Simpson's staggering list of accomplishments includes Arizona state prep records for season (230) and career take-downs (727), wins in a season (43), team points in a season (263) and pins in a season (36). He was also all-state in football and track. Simpson said his transition from high school to Division I wrestling was like a self-fulfilling prophecy early on.

"Once I graduated high school, people were always telling me as soon as you step in that room people are gonna be beating you every day and you're just gonna be a throwing dummy that first year," said Simpson, who was a runner-up at the 1993 junior nationals. "I guess I expected it too much and it started becoming habit to get beat on. But there comes a time when you get tired of it and you decide to beat on someone else."

During his redshirt year, he had the opportunity to practice with former Sun Devil Pat Lynch, who was an all-American at 177 in 1993.

"Pat taught me a lot," Simpson said. "He's as good a coach as any."

"He didn't waste that year," Smith added. "He made some substantial progress."

Simpson's strides are evident in his 15-13 record this season, which includes a fourth-place finish at the Michigan Open, one of the premier tournaments on the collegiate slate. He has been involved in some no-holds-barred brawls during the season, many of which were with nationally-ranked opponents. On Jan. 8, he pushed Oklahoma's fourth-ranked Quincey Clark to the limit before succumbing 9-4 in the third period. He has banged heads with Cal State-Bakersfield's eighth-ranked Derek Scott on two occasions.

"I think he's still trying to define himself technically and

ASU headed for March Madness, so live with it

I remember the days of ASU basketball, when if a student hit a three-point shot at half time he was given a jersey and played the second half, and more times than not he would be the leading Sun Devil scorer. Those were the days to whine about the ASU basketball program.

Now granted, most of you are probably still upset that the Sun Devils lost to Washington State Saturday and barely squeaked out a win against Washington a game before. I know that Saturday's loss means that ASU has no hope of finishing second in the Pac-10 and is going to result in the team's NCAA tournament seed to lower. I know that because of ASU's inconsistent play this year you're probably thinking the only big dance the Sun Devils are going to be in at the end of March is the one at Club 411, but — what was my point?

LEE

Columnist

Oh yeah. Those of us who were here six years ago, and I bet that's quite a few, remember the 1989 Sun Devil team that finished 12-16 overall and 5-13 in the Pac-10. That was the pre-Frieder era, when you could show up in the first half and get first-row seats in the student section. Hell, you could show up in the first half and sit at press row, because there wasn't any Gil Tyree pre-game commentaries (sometimes you have to take the bad with the good.)

This year, college basketball at the University Activity Center was reborn. ASU has been ranked between 12 and 17 all season. The Sun Devils have beaten national powerhouses Michigan, Maryland and UofA. They should have beaten UCLA twice, and they're on the way to the Big Dance for the first time since 1991. However, fans are still upset because ASU will be seeded five or six in its region instead of three or four. In just one year, Sun Devil fans have been spoiled by ASU's perennial play. They're expecting too much.

We should savor ASU's play because with Mario Bennett's likely departure to the pros, it might not last forever. Look at Mount St. Mary's Coach Jim Phelan. He has been a coach at that school for 41 years, is second among active coaches with 737 wins and with yesterday's 69-62 win over Rider in the Northeast Conference Final, Phelan will make his first appearance in the NCAA tournament — ever. Now that's a man who should be dancing.

Fortunately, ASU has never had to worry about a 41-year drought. The Sun Devils have made the NCAA tournament five times since the 1972-73 season. That's nothing to write home about, but it's nothing the program should hang its head about either. ASU has never been a basketball school that can compete with the likes of other schools for top talent. The program has had to work hard to achieve what it has.

Without much argument, this year's team is ASU's best in the program's 78-year history. The Sun Devils have proven they can beat the nations best and they can win close games, which is what you need to do in the Big Dance. It's time ASU fans quit saying we coulda or we shoulda and realize what they have, which is a college basketball team that doesn't have a limit on how far they can go. March Madness never meant so much.

Nebraska football coach wins public service award

LARCHMONT, N.Y. (AP) — Tom Osborne, coach of Nebraska's 1994 national football champion, has been chosen winner of the Distinguished American Award by the National Football Foundation and College Hall of Fame.

The organization said Monday that Osborne was honored for his "distinguished" public service work, especially with children.

"He established a Youth Foundation when he and his wife Nancy decided to contribute their own money to help junior high school students get on the right track," the group said. "Whether it be as the honorary chairman of the American Heart Association or speaking throughout the nation on behalf of the Fellowship of Christian Athletes, Coach Osborne has answered the call of public service far beyond the x's and o's of football coaching."

In 22 years at Nebraska, Osborne has compiled a 219-47-3 record, a remarkable .819 winning percentage. He has taken his teams to bowl games in 22 consecutive years, capped by last season's 24-17 victory over Miami in the Orange Bowl.

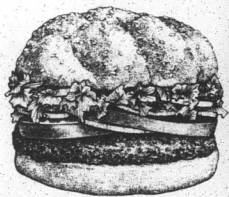

Others honorees announced by the organization were Harold Alfond, a Maine industrialist, the gold medal award winner; Fred Jacoby, commissioner of the Southwest Athletic Conference, outstanding contribution to amateur football, and Robert Gaston, a Southeastern Conference official for 25 years, football officials award.

The winners will be honored Dec. 12 at an awards dinner at New York.

ARIES
(March 21 to April 19)
It's a veritable whirlwind for you. Accept a special party invitation. New contacts made become valuable later.

TAURUS
(April 20 to May 20)
You are motivated to make changes on the domestic scene. A refurbishment perhaps will fit the bill. Emotionally, you feel a bit shy and insecure regarding a love relationship.

GEMINI
(May 21 to June 20)
Your self-perception is positive and beneficial and has a good impact on co-workers. Friendships are particularly fulfilling. A renewal of romance is in the works.

CANCER
(June 21 to July 22)
Your need for freedom is strong and leads you to be somewhat rebellious. Try to control this because trouble could result on the job. A sudden inspiration comes your way.

LEO
(July 23 to Aug. 22)
Your mental outlook expands into new areas. You find the answer to a tricky legal question at work. It's a good time for travel, especially if it's related to business.

VIRGO
(Aug. 23 to Sept. 22)
You're feeling rather complacent in your current love relationship. However, this could lead to boredom. Look for ways to brighten up your routine and spark things up.

LIBRA
(Sept. 23 to Oct. 22)
Possible romantic or marriage opportunities could present themselves at this time. It's a good time to pursue music, art or entertainment. A social engagement brings a happy surprise.

SCORPIO
(Oct. 23 to Nov. 21)
Higher-ups are supportive of your efforts on their behalf. A monetary reward for this is possible. Progressive ideas spill from you.

SAGITTARIUS
(Nov. 22 to Dec. 21)
Your stubborn adherence to your ways makes communication difficult. Make an effort to be more flexible. Others, whose views are different, have something of value to say.

CAPRICORN
(Dec. 22 to Jan. 19)
Take some time out to "stop and smell the roses." You are being much too serious about a certain issue. Remember, there is little about this you can control.

AQUARIUS
(Jan. 20 to Feb. 18)
Communicating with influential people is on the agenda at this time. Express your personal goals and aims as succinctly as possible. A short trip is possible.

PISCES
(Feb. 19 to March 20)
Your courage comes to the fore as you take a stand on a controversial issue. Co-workers agree and lend much-needed support. Doing something of a physical nature revitalizes you.

YOU BORN TODAY are sympathetic to the underdog and those in need. This propensity can result in mood swings between sunny and stormy, often confusing and frightening those around you. Time spent by yourself usually helps you stabilize this tendency. Careers which attract you are politics, social work, psychologist, physician or physical therapy. You are a natural healer and others seek you out.

Erickson tours Cardinals' facility

TEMPE (AP) — Still shopping for a quarterback, the Arizona Cardinals gave Tampa Bay restricted free agent Craig Erickson a tour of the training facility Monday.

Erickson, 25, watched workouts at the Cardinals' offensive school and also spoke with coach/general manager Buddy Ryan, who has had trade conversations with the Buccaneers about Erickson.

"They are definitely moving in the right direction. The foundation has been laid," Erickson said of the Cardinals. Arizona was No. 3 in total defense and No. 27 in scoring in the NFL last season.

"They are doing some things offensively to have a more potent attack. Obviously with this defense, you are going to have the opportunity to get the ball a lot," Erickson said.

Because Erickson is a restricted free agent, the Buccaneers have the option to match any contract offer he receives. If they choose to let him go, they will receive a No. 1 draft choice from the team that signs him unless another arrangement is reached.

"There has to be a lot of deal-making done, and everybody has to be happy. So far, that hasn't happened. I just want to go out and play football," Erickson said.

"There are worse situations to be in. Four years ago, I couldn't get anyone to draft me. I'm enjoying it. It's good to get your name out there and talked about."

Ryan gave up on erstwhile starter Steve Beuerlein last season, making him available in the expansion draft, and has said veteran Jim McMahon will not be invited back. Jay Schroeder, who replaced Beuerlein as the starter, is an unrestricted free agent.

But Erickson said the prospect of playing for Ryan does not bother him.

"When I played for coach (Jimmy) Johnson at the University of Miami, he's a very defensive-minded coach, similar to coach Ryan," Erickson said.

"There are pros and cons. Yeah, he is oriented toward the defensive side of the ball. But I'm a believer in that. I'm a believer that great defenses win championships. It also keeps the head coach out of the offense's hair. That's kind of nice, too."

Erickson said he feels secure in Tampa Bay, although he understands that 1994 No. 1 draft choice Trent Dilfer likely mat get the first shot at the starting job next season.

Erickson started 14 games last season, completing 225 of 399 passes for 2,919 yards with 16 touchdowns and 10 interceptions. His 82.5 quarterback rating was 10th in the league and second-highest in Tampa Bay history behind Steve DeBerg (85.3, 1987).

Simpson

skill wise, which is just a credit to his competitiveness," Smith said. "He's won a lot of matches as of late with a stronger heart than his opponents."

Simpson has also drawn the unenviable assignment of wrestling Oklahoma State's highly-touted freshman Mark Smith, Lee Roy's younger brother, this season. Though Smith has had the edge in their previous encounters, most notably at the junior nationals, Simpson gutted out a dramatic victory at the University Activity Center on Feb. 17.

"I like to be challenged like that," Simpson said. "You don't really have anything to lose. You have everything to gain and hopefully you can win those big matches."

The 6-footer's natural weight is in the 190-pound vicinity, but Simpson wants to beef up to 200 pounds to make for a bigger physique after cutting weight. His father Mike, a well respected high school coach, used to bring Simpson to his practices at Republican Valley High in Nebraska. Simpson remembers idolizing the team.

"All his wrestlers were just heroes to me," he said. "I always looked up to those guys, and I always knew I wanted to be successful and I wanted to be a wrestler."

Simpson's father has also been his worst critic and closest companion during the development years.

"He has been my best friend along the way," said Simpson, who has recently switched his interests to broadcasting from biology. "He's helped me in every way possible."

Simpson's discipline in the practice room may be one of the reasons he is reaping benefits when it counts.

"That's probably his greatest asset," ASU assistant coach Zeke Jones said of Simpson's discipline. "He's a talented athlete and his work ethic is excellent."

A self-proclaimed die-hard Nebraska fan, Simpson turned down an offer from the Huskers to become a Sun Devil. He said wrestling is his life's blood.

"It just taught me so much. I've been through so much with it," Simpson said of the sport. "You learn to appreciate things a lot more. The practices we go through — it's a struggle to survive every day."

That struggle is typified by Simpson's philosophy on the art of war.

"Wrestling is just a mind set," he said. "When you step on that mat, you step out there to do one thing and that's to win. You tie your shoes in a double knot."

"Every time you step out of bounds you get right back in the middle, let that ref blow the whistle and get after it again. That's really all it is. That's what the fans want to see. The fans want to see a mano-a-mano situation where it's just a brawl."
