Mourners attend memorial service for slain student

Woman shot in restaurant parking lot

By CAROLYN HORN
SPECIAL TO THE STATE PRESS

About 100 mourners turned out Monday night for a memorial service on campus for ASU student Angela Ivie, who was shot and killed this weekend.

"She was truly genuine. Her friendship was a blessing," said Ann-Denise Fuentes, a member of Sigma Sigma Sigma sorority, to which Ivie belonged. "She did everything for her friends. She'll be greatly missed and her spirit will live on in all of us."

Ivie, a 20-year-old junior pre-business major, was shot in the head and killed early Saturday morning in a Taco Bell restaurant parking lot in Phoenix.

The service, which was attended by Tri-Sigma members, Ivie's parents and other friends, took place at 7 p.m. at Danforth Chapel. During the service, sorority members performed a ritual in remembrance of Ivie's life.

Her friends said Ivie was a wonderful person and even "bubbly," earning her the nickname of "Bubbles."

"Her laugh could light up the world," said Gina Dinardi, a Tri-Sigma member.

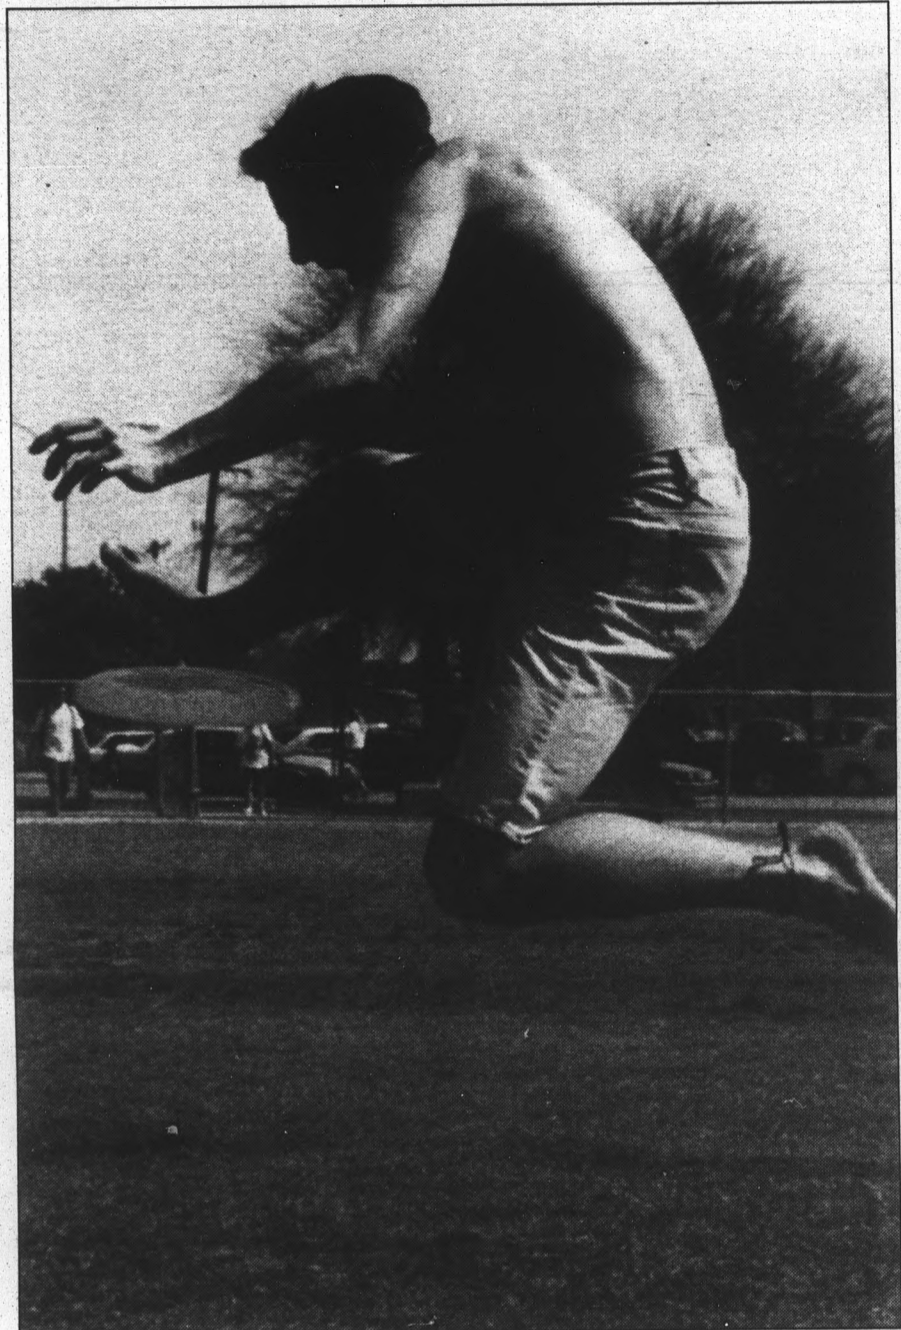

"She had a charming and sparkling personality," said Bill LaBrie, a friend of Ivie's.

Craig Ivie, Angela's father, said he was glad to hear all the good things said about his daughter.

"It was good for me to hear all these stories

Red Mountain Freeway extended to McClintock

By PATTY KING
STATE PRESS

More students can now drive on the Red Mountain Freeway without being driven crazy by it.

Many students will find it easier to travel to ASU now that the freeway (Loop 202) has been extended to McClintock Drive, said City of Tempe transportation planner Larry Shobe.

"If the student is coming from the west Valley and is getting off at Rural Road, he will find it easier today than he did when the freeway was only open to Rural Road," he said.

The Arizona Department of Transportation opened the one-mile stretch between Scottsdale/Rural Road and McClintock on March 15.

Shobe said students traveling to ASU from the east probably will not see a noticeable difference.

"They still have to use the surface streets to get here," he said.

Shobe said that the congestion caused by eastbound traffic exiting when the freeway ended at Scottsdale Road will go away. However, any congestion on Rural Road that existed before the freeway opened will remain.

Skyview traffic reporter Steve Ludwig said that traffic was congested in the Rural Road area last January when the Scottsdale Road exit first opened and increased even more during the first week of ASU classes.

"That's when we started to see a backup at the end of the freeway and then down Rural Road toward University," he said.

Weber wins presidency in ASASU runoff election

By LISA CARY
STATE PRESS

As the newly-elected student government president, Chris Weber said he wants to increase the organization's interaction with state legislators.

"I want to put emphasis on the legislators who make the ultimate decisions that affect students," said Weber, who won his seat during the Associated Students of ASU runoff election prior to spring break.

He narrowly defeated Brandy Aguilar by 29 votes, 493 to 464. Overall, 1,001 people, or 2 percent of the student population, voted during the March 8 and 9 elections.

"I'm pretty happy (about winning)," Weber said. "I'm discouraged about the low voter turnout. It's something to work on

In other races, Eddie Lopez defeated Christy Anderson for campus affairs vice president. Lopez received 449 votes to Anderson's 440.

The new activities vice president is Marc Wendell, who defeated Viola Fuentes 488 to 419.

In the primary election on Feb. 24, Angelo Desimone was elected executive vice president.

The newly elected students will take office on May 15. In the meantime, they will shadow the person they are replacing to learn the duties of their office.

Current ASASU president Alan Frost said he believes Weber has a good feeling of what the job entails.

He said while Weber is shadowing him, he will focus on upcoming Super Bowl XXX events, in addition to financial aid and tuition issues.

"Chris will learn why things are the way they are," Frost said. "He'll be embarking on new challenges."

Weber, currently ASASU's student relations director, said he expects a smooth transition, but he thinks his biggest challenge will be finding a "qualified and motivated" staff.

The election results are not final until all complaints filed are heard by the ASASU Elections Commission. There were two complaints filed, one against a candidate and the other against ASASU.

One complaint was filed by ASASU elections coordinator Alex Shivers against Wendell for not filing a proper runoff financial statement.

Shivers said Wendell allegedly didn't submit the original receipt for campaign materials. The bottom half of a receipt was not included and the expenses on a receipt didn't correspond to what he claimed.

The other complaint was filed by a student because "Republican Party" was printed at the top of ballot cards used in the election.

about her and how much fun she had and how happy she was," he said.

Ivie was shot dead in a Taco Bell parking lot at Seventh Street and Dunlap Avenue at about 12:17 a.m. She and four friends had just gone through the drive-through when Brian Reinhardt, the driver, pulled into the parking lot so Ivie could handout the food. Moments later, two Hispanic teenagers in a small, light-colored car who had been behind them in line pulled up near them. One of them got out and stood next to his car, staring at Ivie and her friends.

Reinhardt said he asked the teenager what he wanted, and he responded by opening fire with a semi-automatic weapon at Ivie's car.

The teenager walked toward the car while shooting, Reinhardt said.

"I didn't hear the shots; I just saw the flashes. I thought they were blanks," he said. "Josh (another passenger in the car) said 'I'm hit,' so I drove off."

Reinhardt drove toward Lincoln Hospital in Phoenix. On the way, he noticed Ivie was injured when she fell on him.

"I thought she was dead then," he said. "She fell from side to side like a doll. I was trying to hold her up."

Doctors worked on Ivie for more than an hour, but at 1:50 a.m., they told her father that she had died.

"Angie really enjoyed life," he said. "She had a lot of friends and she loved them."

Josh Pulaski, who was in the car with Ivie, was shot in the hip. He was treated and released. There seems to be no reason for the crime, said Phoenix police detective Mike McCullough.

Police described the suspect as a Hispanic male, 17 years old, 5 feet 8 inches tall and 130 pounds. Ivie's parents said they will bury their daughter in Utah, where her extended family lives.

Freeway

Ludwig said that the opening of the McClintock section has moved that congestion one mile east.

"Now, it's the same jam southbound on McClintock at University (Drive) that it used to be on Rural," he said.

Shobe said the Feb. 1 closing of a portion of the Rio Salado Parkway pushed additional traffic onto the Red Mountain Freeway and other streets when the freeway was only open to Scottsdale Road.

"When you close that road, 11,000 to 13,000 cars a day have to go somewhere else," he said.

He said that opening the freeway to McClintock also will help the Rio Salado situation.

"It already has alleviated that problem," he said.

Harvey Friedson, deputy public works director for the City of Tempe, said he does not think traffic will decrease on Rural or McClintock with the opening of the Loop 202 extension.

"We're going to have heavy volumes on both those streets, at least until the freeway is opened to Price Road," he said.

Friedson said future extensions of the freeway to Thomas Road, scheduled for next year, will have the greatest impact on reducing traffic in the area.

Robert Johnson, ADOT spokesman, said that the next section of the freeway is scheduled to open in late summer or fall. The department will open two more miles of freeway out to Dobson Road, he said. At that time, the Red Mountain Freeway will connect with Pima Freeway (Loop 101).

"Every time we open up a new piece of freeway it's significant, but this next opening will be twice as significant because of the amount of traffic that will be able to access that," he said.

The two-mile segment originally was scheduled to open in June, but 8 to 10 feet of water in the normally dry Salt River bed delayed work. Unusually high amounts of rain this year prompted the Salt River Project to release water into the river.

"We're hoping that the weather will give us a break and that we can get back on track now," Johnson said.

Rio Salado construction to be finished by August

BY PATTY KING
STATE PRESS

The construction displacing about 600 parking spaces in Lot 59 is expected to be completed on time this summer, despite rain-related delays on parts of the Red Mountain Freeway.

The City of Tempe's Rio Salado Roadway Improvements project involves installing a traffic signal at Rio Salado Parkway and Packard drives and replacing the lost spaces.

"They're supposed to have the parking lot and Packard Drive completed by August, so it doesn't obstruct future ASU activities," said City of Tempe planner Larry Shobe.

"When we realign the roadway, it will take a southern dip through Lot 59, and any parking that will have been displaced will be replaced on the north side of Rio Salado Parkway with no net loss of parking spaces," he said.

The project, which has closed the Rio Salado Parkway from Ash Avenue to Rural Road since Feb. 1, also will involve installing a traffic signal at Rio Salado and Packard Drive to accommodate the displacement, Shobe said. Packard Drive runs north to south, dividing Lot 59.

"You will have a signal to help students cross the roadway," he said.

The larger Rio Salado project involves widening the street to two lanes in either direction, and adding bike lanes, roadway lighting and landscaped medians, Shobe said.

Tokyo hospitals buried in nerve gas victims

More than 3,200 hospitalized after terrorists strike subway

Tokyo firefighters spray water on a hazardous materials expert Tuesday after he inspected several subway cars contaminated with nerve gas. Monday's terrorist attack killed six passengers and sickened more than 3,200.

TOKYO (AP) — Stepping off the subway, Masashi Ito was troubled by the funny smell coming from a large lunch box wrapped in newspapers on the platform. Then he saw the man sprawled nearby having convulsions.

Ito's own eyes soon began to hurt, enough to persuade him to go to the hospital. By the time he arrived, he was unable to move his fingers enough to write his name and was barely able to talk.

Like more than 3,200 other morning rush hour commuters and subway workers, Ito had been poisoned Monday by a lethal nerve gas planted by terrorists in boxes and jars on one of the world's busiest subway systems.

The attack on Tokyo's clean and efficient subway system, a symbol of pride in Japan's principal city, rekindled fears among Japanese that their country is not the safe, orderly place they had always considered it to be.

Gotfried Bachman, a Swiss businessman, said he was riding the subway to his office in central Tokyo around 8 a.m. when he noticed a container of what he assumed was paint thinner.

He didn't think anything more about it. But by the time he got out of the subway station onto the street, his eyes were hurting and he was losing his vision.

"I didn't really notice anything until I got off the train," Bachman said.

Hospital corridors in central Tokyo were packed with gasping, vomiting, red-eyed commuters and subway workers overcome by fumes from deadly sarin nerve gas planted on five subway trains.

Some people were coughing up phlegm, bleeding from the nose or suffering from blurred vision. Others, holding ice packs to their foreheads and eyes, complained of headaches or nausea. Six people died.

By late morning, St. Luke's International Hospital, one of Tokyo's largest, had to turn away all other walk-in patients. A sign on the door said "Sorry, no examinations today

I can't imagine how anyone could do this. This is a civilized country — we have no room for terrorism.

— Tokyo subway patron Masahisa Machida, denouncing Monday's attack because of this great accident."

"It's terrible," said Dr. Ryuzo Mikami as he looked over patients lying on gurneys waiting for treatment or sitting in waiting rooms with intravenous drips in their arms. "We've never had anything like this before."

Students let out early from a central Tokyo school wore cloth masks over their faces as they left for fear of possible remaining danger from the gas.

The first emergency call came from Tsukiji station near

One killed, 80 injured in 100-vehicle Alabama pileup

MOBILE, Ala. (AP) — People scrambled from their mangled cars and frantically tried to flag down approaching drivers as more than 100 cars and trucks crashed in a series of wrecks Monday on a foggy bridge over Mobile Bay.

One person was killed, six were critically injured and at least 74 were taken to the hospital.

"I was rear-ended by a truck, then a garbage truck just plowed through everybody," said James Coleman, who escaped without injury in the cluster of rush-hour collisions on the Interstate 10 span.

Some three miles of the seven-mile bridge were strewn with blackened heaps of wreckage, some of them consisting of dozens of cars. Cars looked like "somebody had crushed a beer can," said one witness, Ned Morris.

Fog is a frequent hazard on the bridge, which is a main commuter route and is often busy with vacation travelers.

Last August, a state highway consultant, in a preliminary report, had listed the bridge as dangerous because of "sudden fog flareups," said Transportation Department spokesman Ralph Holmes. He said the consultant recommended installing a $4.7 million to $6 million system under which computers would measure any fog and activate warning lights if necessary.

At the time of the accident, the proposal was still being

'92 Republican upstart Buchanan throws hat into '96 ring

MANCHESTER, N.H. (AP) — Commentator Patrick Buchanan cast himself Monday as the one true conservative in the presidential race, kicking off his GOP campaign with pledges to look out for "our own country first" and to rid America of "the purveyors of sex and violence."

Returning to the state where his insurgent candidacy stung President Bush three years ago, Buchanan said his 1996 campaign was "for those who want to make our country America the Beautiful again."

Buchanan portrayed himself as the champion of working Americans, and a crusader in a "cultural war" against lewdness and violence in the media, in music and in museums that "welcome exhibits that mock our patriotism and our faith."

Even as he formally announced his candidate to about 150 supporters at the Manchester Institute of Arts and Sciences, demonstrators jostled him and invoked a darker interpretation of the rosy America Buchanan seeks to revive.

Four protesters leaped toward the stage shouting, "Buchanan is a racist" and waving signs comparing him to former Louisiana Ku Klux Klansman David Duke.

Buchanan reached out his arm and pushed one back from the podium before his supporters leaped to hustle them from the room. Demonstrator Ronn Torossian, spokesman for the Coalition for Jewish Concerns-Amcha, said the group had shadowed Buchanan on his last presidential campaign, alleging his writings and statements betray an anti-Semitic outlook.

"Now you know what we're fighting against in this country," said Buchanan. He seemed more subdued than usual in his subsequent remarks.

Flanked by his wife, Shelley, and sister Angela "Bay" Buchanan, he recalled his own Catholic-school childhood and lamented that today's schoolchildren "are being poisoned against their Judeo-Christian heritage, against American heroes and American history."

"Together we will chase the purveyors of sex and violence back beneath the rocks whence they came," he said.

Buchanan, who was a speech writer for President Nixon and communications director for President Reagan, most recently has been a host of CNN's Crossfire. He unnerved Bush in 1992 by winning 37 percent of the New Hampshire primary vote to Bush's 53 percent. He said Monday he had come back to "resume the revolution we began here three years ago."

However, he does not expect to get as many votes as he did then, when his showing was in significant measure an anti-Bush protest. He faces a bigger field of candidates, better financed than he is and campaigning on similar conservative issues.

Already Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, Sen. Phil Gramm of Texas and former Education Secretary Lamar Alexander have devoted considerable time and resources to New Hampshire, which holds the nation's first primary. While they are aiming to raise at least $20 million, much of it from donors giving the $1,000 limit, Buchanan is relying on

Nations among us

Ready for a surprise?

The Clinton administration is responsible for attempts to rectify one of America's oldest diplomatic injustices. And if that isn't enough, it's doing a good job of it, too.

Ready for a second surprise?

It's not an international maneuver — it's a domestic one.

Specifically, it's about the Native Americans, whose relationship with the United States government has been a troubled one at best.

The U.S. history of U.S.-Native American relations is marked with injustice on the part of the former since independence was declared by the former: a new republic which promptly ordered the annexations of the latter.

From Jackson to Grant to Bush, Native Americans have slowly "moved up" in the governments' eyes from subhuman to second-class citizens to wards of the government.

Patronized, insulted and shunted aside by a largely ignorant executive that had little interest in the affairs of the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

But even if treaties remain broken and events remain set in the past, Clinton is demonstrating what has long been needed in government: respect.

Respect in the form of treating Native American ethnicities as sovereign nations, with the same authenticity as European ethnicities. Respect in the form of treating Native American leaders like leaders, worthy of the same respect as sovereign leaders of foreign countries.

And Clinton has also pushed reform in the way that the federal government sets policies and budgets with regards to Native American issues.

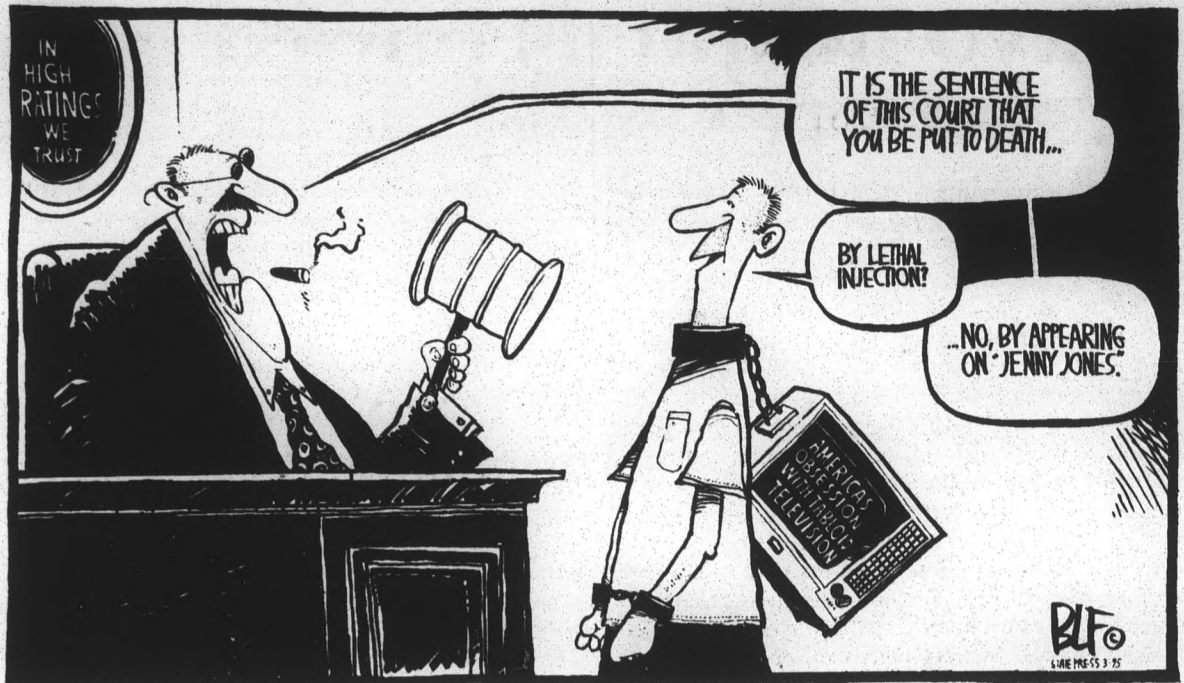

More and more departments and bureaus are dealing directly with the nations in question, instead of working through state governments — which traditionally have been even more hostile than the federal government as a whole.

And that's a damn good start — but it's only a start.

Native Americans, as citizens of the United States, aren't necessarily deserving of better treatment than any other American; that's not an issue for us.

But it remains true that the U.S. government has repeatedly failed to guarantee the rights of its Native American citizens, and we still await rectification of past and present injustices.

But for now, it is a step in the right direction that Clinton finally recognizes that which was here before the European discovery of the Americas — the nations among us.

Phooey on handguns — pass out melee weapons to campus, please

With all the violence on campus, lately, it looks like it's time to arm.

And, according to our campus' conservative activists, politicians and columnists, there's only one way to be safe these days on campus — guns.

Hmmm, great. Hell, I'll support anything that allows me to carry one of those nifty Russian 30mm Playma grenade launchers. Nothing deters crime like a few rounds of HE, right?

To be fair, the argument isn't the dire need for students to hustle anti-tank guns on campus (although if you do, the German PzB41 is a nice pick) but anger that ASU bans all weapons from campus.

Wah. My heart bleeds.

Let's be reasonable and argue that students should be able to bring their handguns to campus. Will that deter crime?

Statistically, it will — but Mark Twain reminds us that there are three types of lies: lies, damn lies and statistics. Using statistical proof is a matter of picking the statistics that prove your point.

Tossing guns out to the masses and chanting "more guns mean less crime" isn't realistic. It takes training to be able to shoot accurately and well. Of course, actually killing attackers isn't the motive; it's deterring them. So one can argue that the training issue could be waived (and invite in all kinds of shooting accidents).

The second problem is that a gun is only useful for deterrence while you've got it; screaming "I've got a 10-gauge in Manzanita" just isn't that impressive. So you have to carry the pistol, regularly, and have it ready for use — in a hip or shoulder holster. Backpacks and purses don't cut it, since its unlikely that attackers will courteously wait for you to fish it out and point it in their general direction. On a campus more concerned with fashion than crime, what are the odds they'll be carried?

And the biggest problem of all is that bullets travel. Even a small, cheap pistol useful for self-defense (say, a .38 or 9mm revolver) can be deadly out to 150 feet; freak chance can kill farther. Considering how lawsuit-happy some people are out there ("I'll sue ASU if I'm attacked and can't have a gun"), will they pony up the dough when they wing an innocent bystander across campus shooting at shadows? I think not.

The worst thing about the gun-happy hordes, however, is they forget that "self-defense" does not always equal "gun."

And why shouldn't they? NRA members are well-off enough to be able to afford guns: why push for the right to carry a knife, morning stars, katana or glaive on campus? (Besides, guns make such better phallic symbols.)

Furthermore, I don't hear the so-concerned conservatives urging women to rush out and enroll in martial arts classes, possibly a better solution than using guns to begin with — if your own body is a weapon, how can you be disarmed?

For those demurring that an 80-pound woman can't defeat a larger, male opponent, take a class or two yourself. After three years of martial arts study as an undergraduate, I was whumped more than once by a "little slip of a thing."

Despite the fact that the "non-gun" options above are cheaper, less likely to hurt innocent bystanders and are equally useful in deterring crime, where are the cries of "Women of Arizona State, find a good dojo!" Kind of makes you wonder what their motives are.

I don't doubt some people are genuinely concerned, but there seems to be a willingness on the part of some to push ideology through the fear and shock of rape.

Take it back to the rifle range, guys.

Tasteless cartoon had no shred of respect

I am outraged at the cartoon above the article concerning Greg Louganis' homosexuality and HIV admittance in the March 7 issue of the State Press. First of all, it offends me, a former swimmer, to see a diving board placed over a grave marked for Louganis. Anyone who can become an Olympic champion in spite of his personal problems deserves worldwide admiration, not criticism. After all, what are the Olympic games all about? "The important thing in the Olympic games is not winning, but taking part. The important thing in life is not the triumph, but the struggle." This was said by the leader of the International Olympic Committee during the 1992 Barcelona games, and it holds true, anytime and anywhere.

Secondly, I view the picture as if the cartoonist was implying that Louganis was digging his own grave for being homosexual and concealing it. I am heterosexual, but am not prejudiced against homosexuals. Maybe if we could put aside the "labels" society places on people such as "gay" or the more derogatory "faggot" and tone down the fear of HIV that society amplifies, we could see people as they are — fellow humans like you and I, with ideas, feelings, emotions, the ability to love, hurt and triumph over the things that try to restrain us. Louganis is a national, if not a worldwide hero, so at least you can give a shred of respect.

Kelley an 'idiot;' guns no solution to safety

I have to congratulate the State Press. They have managed to find one of the biggest idiots on campus — Barry R. Kelley — to write for them. I don't know where Kelley gets the idea that guns are the catch-all solution to the security problem faced by ASU students and faculty who find themselves on campus late at night.

First of all, perhaps Nancy Tribbensee didn't have to say what she said (if you don't feel comfortable, don't come on campus), but to compare it to the problem faced by the blacks in the South is ludicrous.

Secondly, if all it took to induce moral behavior in a society was to pass a law, we would have no need for lawyers, courts or jails. Laws are only as good as the society who makes them. ASU's policy is sensible (excuse my audacity), and furthermore, it is probably the best approach that can be taken. Fogger types of pepper gas have been shown to take down an assailant within a few seconds. Guns can be taken away and used against the victim who wields them in self-defense. On or off campus, guns are no solution to the problem of safety in our society.

Perhaps your Texas A&M economist, who probably isn't the best person to consult concerning such matters, didn't consider the effectiveness of alternatives. Maybe the best protection isn't the "escort trained in the art of French literature," but it sure beats a newspaper columnist unaware of the art of common sense.

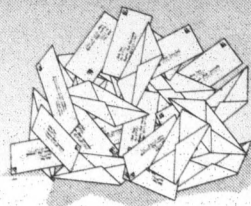

University administrators are trying to ensure that everyone will receive the education they come for while at the same time attempting to secure a campus of 40,000 students. This is not an easy task, but they do the best they can. The administration certainly is not an "implicit accomplice ... when it comes to violent crime on campus." Kelley, however, by openly encouraging students to break the law (handguns are prohibited from campus by state law by virtue of the Board of Regents' decision to ban them from campus), is a willing accomplice to that violation and should suffer the same punishment if that law is violated. He has the nerve to accuse Lattie Coor of audacity when he intends to incite people to break the very law he touts. I think Barry R. Kelley is the one who is audacious, not Lattie Coor.

Low ASASU voter turnout might not be bad

I am writing in response to the low voter turnout in the recent ASASU elections. The State Press has once again blasted the student body for being apathetic, and criticized the student government for not connecting with the student needs.

I argue that low voter turnout for student body elections might not be a bad thing. Maybe the majority of the student body is actually, dare I say it, happy with their tenure at ASU, and feel they do not need the student government's help at all.

So before we criticize the student body or ASASU, maybe we should give a hand to the school administrators for providing us with a good education with one of the lowest tuition rates in the nation.

Student parking should reign over Super Bowlers

I am writing in response to the issue of Super Bowl parking. Why should students give up their parking spots? Students pay for permits to park in specific lots and structures. Why can't shuttle service be provided to the attendees instead of the students and employees? This is the students' campus and we pay to attend school and park in lots and structures. We should not be forced into alternative parking and be inconvenienced. Shuttle service for Super Bowl attendees could generate revenue for both the National Football League and/or the University. Service for attendees would reduce the risk of injury to student pedestrians and bicyclists from careless drivers. The possibility for accidents and congestion is increased with visitors unfamiliar with the area. By providing this service to attendees of the Super Bowl, you cut down on the number of potential drunk drivers after the game. The students pay for parking privileges and these privileges should not be compromised. Therefore, the visitors should receive the alternative parking arrangement.

Students need to know the details of this plan. Is the shuttle going to run 24 hours, seven days a week? What are the guidelines? What about the students with jobs? Are those students supposed to change their work schedules because of the Super Bowl?

Why so long? The Super Bowl is only one day! So why are the lots and structures proposed to be closed for three to four weeks?

When it comes to sexuality, where do we draw the line?

I am writing about the article that appeared in the March 3 issue of the State Press titled "Fraternity Apologizes for 'Inappropriate' Flier."

While an undergraduate at another university, I was an "active" in a 60-member social fraternity. While I served as treasurer, the fraternity alumni officer mailed a letter to our alumni about an upcoming party which stated, "booze and broads will be there. Come enjoy the fun." The letter was not proofread before its mailing. When it was received, many alumni and active members were outraged by this letter and the officer was removed.

In my opinion, the flier, which was the focus of the article, is degrading to women and appropriate actions should be taken by the Interfraternity Council to correct the situation.

In my mind, this situation is far more complex.

This past Saturday afternoon, I was walking to a local restaurant on Rural Road. I noticed that a campus sorority was co-sponsoring a car wash with a business located on the same street. There were three women standing on the corner advertising a carwash. All of them were wearing bikini tops, denim hot pants and holding signs above their heads. One of them was standing with her knees bent, her waist twisted toward the on-coming traffic. As I observed them, I was reminded of the copy of the fraternity poster that was printed in the State Press. I remembered the letter that was written by my fraternity's former alumni officer. Upon further observation, I noticed these women would appear angry at the men who walked or drove past them and leered at them.

If a group of guys publish a flier of a scantily clad woman, it is degrading. If a group of women who are scantily clad attract business to a fund-raiser, it is cute and fun.

The questions I impose to my fellow students are: Where do we as a society draw the line? Is it appropriate for women to use their sexuality for charity? Is it appropriate for a men's group to use a woman's body on a flier to attract attention to an upcoming event? Is it okay if we do it to ourselves, just don't let anyone else do it to us? Where do our individual rights for self-expression begin and our responsibility to society and for ourselves begin?

In my mind, herein lies the double standard. What is right and what is wrong? I could only answer, "I am not certain."

But there are some things I do know. I know that women have struggled far too long for equality in the United States. I know the struggle is not over. I have seen too many women who were forced by society into roles that were not of their choosing. I've seen these women pass these beliefs on to their daughters and to their daughters' daughters. I know fathers who pass the stereotypes of women and society to their sons and their sons' sons. And so it goes.

I do not want this for my family or for me. Therefore, if things are to change in my small corner of this diversified world, it must begin with me, with you, with us. I know that men and women are constantly redefining their roles in the home, the workplace and in society as a whole. I believe the fraternity flier was degrading to women. While I do not discourage anyone from donating time and money to non-profit agencies in our community, I believe the actions of these women on Rural Road were as degrading as the flier. It reinforces the stereotype that women have fought against for more than 100 years in this country and on the cover of the State Press for the past few days. It perpetuates and illustrates to all of us that misunderstandings between men and women still exist between us. Much work is ahead of us all.

Coor, Curry: 2% merit-pay raise simply not enough

BY ANGELA MULL
STATE PRESS

Dissatisfied ASU officials are saying University employees deserve more money than the 2 percent merit-pay raise approved recently by the Legislature.

The increase, signed into law Thursday, fell short of ASU's 5 percent request.

"I believe that both the cost of living and the need to reward performance are such that if you look at the increases over the last couple of years, the 2 percent is not enough," said ASU President Lattie Coor. "We should have a larger pool from which to draw."

The merit-pay raise will be distributed in January to faculty, staff and employees who qualify under University guidelines. They will receive 2 percent of their existing annual base salary.

In addition, if one employee is not given an increase, another employee could then receive a 4 percent increase, said Rep. Mike Gardner, R-Tempe.

"We'll give all state agencies enough for a 2 percent raise for everybody, and how they dish it out is up to them," he said.

Coor said although merit increases for academic professionals will be determined by existing guidelines, a system for staff is still being developed.

"We have a basic system for staff, but it is still not completed," he said. "We will do that before the distribution takes place."

Although ASU and the Arizona Board of Regents requested a 5 percent merit-pay raise, two other budgeting groups recommended less. In early January, the governor's Office of Strategic Planning and Budgeting suggested a 4 percent increase while the Joint Legislative Budget Committee recommended no increase.

Gardner said he is not satisfied with the 2 percent increase, but added that the compromise is better than no increase.

"I wanted more, but I knew that was as good as the deal was going to get," he said.

Classified staff employees such as custodians, secretaries and groundskeepers also wanted a larger increase. According to ASU's budget request, these employees are 24 percent below their counterparts in the public and private sector of Maricopa County.

Classified Staff Council President Robert Curry said he is disappointed because he hoped for at least a 4 percent increase. He added that an across-the-board raise would be more fair in terms of the dollar amount because merit-pay raises allow employees already on the salary bracket's high end to receive more than those on the lower end.

"I think we have a long way to go to address the issue of paying staff employees the living wage," said Curry, who is also an office specialist senior.

Although the Legislature decided on a merit-pay raise, Gardner said that at one point, the Legislature considered approving an across-the-board increase. However, he said he preferred a merit-based increase.

"I think it's the correct way to manage the business of the state," he said.

Coor agreed that merit pay is the best method for distributing salary increases because it rewards employees based on their different responsibilities and salary levels.

"Across-the-board does not give us the ability to reward those who are teaching more effectively or working more effectively," he said.

A better option would have been combining a merit-pay raise with an across-the-board increase, Curry said.

"Just merit alone doesn't deal with the whole picture in terms of state employee salaries," he said. "If the state wants to be competitive in terms of recruiting and retaining employees, it needs to pay competitive salaries that can compete with similar jobs in Maricopa County."

Another reason University employees thought the increase should be larger is because Arizona's economy is improving, said Susan Malaga, assistant vice president for Human Resources.

"We understood that in the years when the economy was not doing well, it was not practical to give increases, but when it is doing well, we should benefit from that," she said.

Last year, the Legislature approved a 5 percent merit-pay raise for state employees. Three percent was effective in July and 2 percent takes effect in April.

Coor unveils official ASU logo to replace 130 others

BY KELLY WENDEL
SPECIAL TO THE STATE PRESS

ASU has a new graphic identity, thanks to a grant from the ASU Foundation, which paid for the design of the new logo.

Esser Design of Phoenix won the bid to produce the new icon, which will replace the 130 different marks and logos currently used throughout the University by various departments and schools.

"The administration felt they needed a graphic design system to uniformly represent the University everywhere," said George Cathcart, ASU director of Information and Publication Services.

The new logo, which features a golden-rayed sun sil-houetting the "S" in ASU, is not meant to replace the venerable "Sparky" logo dear to the hearts of many ASU fans.

"This doesn't do away with Sparky," Cathcart said. "Sparky is close to sacred around here."

He said the new logo will be put into place over the next two years. After July 1, 1996, all external communications will contain the new logo, and by July 1997, all University-generated material will have the new icon.

ASU President Lattie Coor presented the new logo on Monday at a breakfast meeting hosted by the foundation. He said he was "very pleased" with the new logo.

Reception to present American Indian adviser to students

ASU alumnus Zah served as Navajo Nation president

By BETTY MIHALOPOULOS
STATE PRESS

A welcoming reception is scheduled today for students to meet with ASU's new adviser on American Indian affairs.

All students can attend the reception and meet with Peterson Zah, the former president of the Navajo Nation, who joined ASU Feb. 6.

"They will have a chance to meet and share ideas about the American Indian community at ASU," said Cal Seciwa, director of the American Indian Institute at ASU. He added that Zah has an open door policy with students.

The reception will take place from 3:30 p.m. to 5 p.m. in the Arizona Room of the Memorial Union.

Zah, an ASU alumnus, was chairman of the Navajo Nation for four years before he served a four-year term as president of the nation.

As President Lattie Coor's adviser, Zah will work with issues affecting American Indian students from preparation for higher education through completion of degrees. He will meet with students, present guest lectures and implement programs for American Indian students.

In addition, Zah will represent ASU in external relations with American Indian communities and assist ASU in connecting with the needs of Indian communities in Arizona and nationwide.

"We hope there will be a substantial turnout of students at the reception to wish him a warm welcome," Coor said. "Peterson Zah can bring a lot of knowledge and information about the American Indian community to ASU."

Adelaida Velasco-Sverson, coordinator of special events, said today's open reception is especially for students.

"This one is for the students and we're doing another one for the faculty next week," she said. "It's kind of like an open house for them."

Velasco-Sverson said the reception will be informal with light refreshments and no guest speakers.

POLICE REPORT

ASU police reported the following incidents Monday:

- A female student reported that someone attempted to steal her rented vehicle while it was parked in Area 51.
- The intrusion alarm at the north tunnel system by the Old Main Building was set off by a cat.
- Two students and one man not affiliated with ASU were contacted in Sonora Center after three 911 calls came from the room. They were all warned of 911 violations and of alcohol violations.
- Two bicycles were reported stolen.

Tempe police reported the following incidents:

- A 55-year-old man was contacted after his neighbor saw him damage his boat by hitting the outboard motor with a piece of chrome stripping that he had removed from the boat. He also reportedly damaged a light component on the boat. He then went into the man's fenced yard and into a shed in the yard, where he took a can of carburetor cleaner and poured it over a blanket that was hanging on a line in the yard. The two men had had confrontations in the past.
- A 27-year-old man was arrested for being in possession of dangerous drugs and driving with a suspended license at Seventh Street and Priest Road after being stopped for improper registration. A search of the vehicle produced no drugs, but the man admitted that there were illegal drugs under the floor mat on the driver's side of the vehicle. A female passenger in the car also voluntarily turned over a small plastic bag with a yellow crystalline substance, believed to be methamphetamines. She was arrested as well.
- A 20-year-old man was contacted at 715 N. Mill Ave. He agreed to empty his pockets for the officer and handed over a small plastic bag containing about 1/16 of an ounce of marijuana. A further search produced another bag of marijuana and some rolling papers.
- A 20-year-old man was arrested at 3100 S. McClintock Road for being a minor driving a vehicle under the influence of alcohol. He was pulled over for running a red light and did not have a driver's license. He also claimed not to have been drinking.

Academic Senate approves Interdisciplinary Studies degree

Coor, ABOR must still approve new BIS

BY ANGELA MULL
STATE PRESS

The Academic Senate approved a degree Monday allowing students to relate two disciplines of study, preparing them to work in a variety of jobs.

ALVARADO

Ron Alvarado, chairman of the Faculty Committee on Development of an Interdisciplinary Undergraduate Degree Program, said there was some opposition to the degree, but he is pleased that the program passed.

He added that he is confident that President Lattie Coor and the Arizona Board of Regents will approve the degree.

"The administration has been supportive, and the ABOR gave advance planning approval for this type of degree program," he said. "While I anticipate specific questions, I think they will support the concept."

The Bachelor of Interdisciplinary Studies, or BIS degree, requires 120 semester hours, including about 45 hours divided between two areas of emphasis. In addition, students must complete 12 hours of interdisciplinary core classes to develop a career plan with faculty and advisers.

Not all senate members were enamored with the degree, however.

At the conclusion of a presentation by Alvarado, who is also associate dean of the College of Extended Education, English professor Arthur Colby asked a rhetorical question:

"How is this degree to be practically construed as anything other than a last resort for those students unable to succeed in other degree programs?"

Alvarado and Provost Milton Glick said the program is not for everyone. However, Glick said there are some students who will have a more satisfying experience and receive better preparation for job-hunting with a BIS degree.

"Most of us will not have a single job throughout our lifetime," Glick said. "We won't be identified throughout our career by a single job but by a multitude of jobs and activities."

Shortly before the degree was approved, an amendment by anthropology professor James Schoenwetter was approved. He requested that faculty, not advisers, have the authority to identify the courses in the area of emphasis and identify any substitutes for those courses.

"It is important that faculty recognize the responsibility to the success of the BIS degree program," Schoenwetter said.

In other business, the Senate approved changing the name of the Department of Civil Engineering to the Department of Civil and Environmental Engineering.

Beam collapse kills worker at Atlanta Olympic Stadium

ATLANTA (AP) — Metal beams holding up a bank of lights collapsed Monday at the Olympic Stadium under construction downtown. One worker was killed and two were injured.

It was the first major accident at an Olympic construction site in Atlanta. The $168.8 million stadium will be the site of the 1996 Summer Games' opening and closing ceremonies, as well as track and field events.

The beams were part of a 150-foot-tall light tower.

Mayor Bill Campbell said the tower had been in place for about a week. The dead worker had been performing "minor, inconsequential" work at the top just before it collapsed, he said.

Construction worker Thomas Houston said the dead worker had been hanging from the beams by a harness when they fell. He said the lights and the man both landed on the bleachers below, although the lights did not fall on him.

"He didn't move, man. That was it," Houston said.

Two other workers were injured, said Fire Department spokesman Tim Szymanski. He said one refused treatment; Georgia Baptist Hospital said it received one injured person, who was in satisfactory condition with a bruised hip and head injuries.

The stadium was "topped off" by union workers last week to mark the completion of major steel work. Construction began last summer.

The Atlanta Committee for the Olympic Games issued a statement saying there would be an immediate investigation. A woman who answered the phone at Atlanta Stadium Constructors, the joint venture building the structure, said no one was available to comment.

ASU students show off 'talent' on MTV's spring break 'Fame or Shame'

Shows taped at Lake Havasu to be aired Friday, Saturday

BY KENNES BOLIG
STATE PRESS

MTV came to ASU looking for people willing to embarrass themselves for its Fame or Shame spring break show in Lake Havasu City. It found them.

Judd Shulak, a junior communications major, said he tried out for the Music Television talent show March 8 at the Improv at 930 E. University Drive. To get on the show, Shulak said he told MTV he was willing to shave his body. He was told he would have no trouble making it.

"I just wanted to get on MTV and have a good time," Shulak said.

However, Shulak only had to sacrifice the hair on his head, along with half of one eyebrow that he lost during the audition, he said.

"Some girl I met shaved my head during the show, then (rapper) Ed Lover pulled me aside afterward and said, 'Let me finish you up and do you right,'" Shulak said. "I look like an idiot."

Despite his new hair style, Shulak said he still had a great time during the taping.

"I met a lot of people like Ed Lover and Dr. Dre," he said. "It was really cool."

Andrew Kennedy, a sophomore theater major, also tried out for the show at the auditions held March 9 on Hayden Lawn at ASU. He said he did impressions of Fire Marshal Bill and Puck, a cast member of MTV's Real World III, which he dedicated to Rachel Campos, who also starred on the Real World III and hosted the auditions.

Kennedy said although taping the show was fun, it was also hard work.

"It was kind of a bummer since it was during spring break," he said. "We had to be there at 9 in the morning and had to stay there until 5. It was like a work day."

Kennedy also said he noticed how staged the show was. "They totally staged it," he said. "They had funny things, and then they had the real talent. They had the joke acts set up to lose ... and they had three good ones picked out that the judges decided from."

According to Kennedy, the runner-up on the show was an ASU student who called himself the Yo-yo Assassin.

"He did all these tricks to a Nine Inch Nails song. ... He got the yo-yo going to the rhythm of the song, and that got the crowd pumped," he said. "He was really amazing."

The special is scheduled to air on MTV Friday through Sunday.

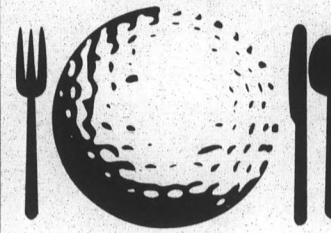

During MTV's stay in Lake Havasu City, things have been "pretty crazy," said Salli Frattini, executive producer of the spring break special. She said the experience so far has been positive.

"We possibly could return," she said. "We just want to get through this week first. We've got five down and two to go."

Amid the craziness accompanying the MTV filming, no major crimes have taken place in the city, according to Lt. Mike Reynolds of the Lake Havasu City Police Department.

"Things went pretty well as expected," he said. "We mostly had underage drinking and fairly minor assaults ... nothing significant."

Environmental leader to give 3 talks on climate, science, politics

BY PATTY KING
STATE PRESS

Sir Crispin Tickell, a former British ambassador who alerted the world's governments to environmental issues, will speak on campus today and Wednesday as ASU's Centennial Lecturer.

TICKELL

"No one in the world has been more influential in bringing the issues of climatic change, the environment and the human consequences of catastrophic climatic change to the attention of the world's governments and policy makers," said Ted Humphrey, dean of the Honors College.

Tickell, the warden of Green College in Oxford, will address the topic "Catastrophes: Extraterrestrial, Planetary, Biological, Human" at 10 a.m. today in the Arizona Room in the Memorial Union.

On Wednesday, his topic will be "The Human Hazard: Refugees and Environmental Change" at 7:30 p.m. in the ASU Music Theater. Admission is free for both lectures.

The Centennial Lecture Series is an annual ASU event underwritten by an endowment from the Flinn Foundation, which awards scholarships each year to top students in Arizona.

Tickell will spend this week on campus as part of a scholar-in-residence program arranged by the Honors College.

The environmentalist will also address

"Prospects for the United Nations and World Order" at 7:30 p.m. Thursday at Scottsdale's Kerr Cultural Center. There is no charge.

Tickell's focus is on the effects of climatic change and natural disasters on relationships between nations, Humphrey said, adding that Tickell is described as a doom-sayer as well as a diplomat.

"He has his own point of view on the relationship between human beings and the environment and he is not optimistic," Humphrey said.

Mary Charette, program coordinator senior of the Honors College, said Tickell is recognized as a mediator between science and politics.

"He feels strongly that the gap between politicians and scientists has a big effect on environmental policy," she said.

Tickell spent 26 years in the British Diplomatic Corps and served at embassies in Mexico and Paris. He took a leave of absence in 1976 to study environmental science at Harvard. In 1977, he published the book Climate Change and World Affairs, which explored the policy implications of climate change.

He currently serves as chairman of the Climate Institute of Washington, D.C., the Marine Biological Association and the Government's Committee on the Darwin Initiative.

Tickets are required for the evening lectures and can be picked up at Gammage Box Office or at Kerr Cultural Center for the Thursday lecture.

direct mail, radio and an 800 number to seek smaller contributions.

Bay Buchanan, who is her brother's campaign chairwoman, suggested he will have to come in at least second in New Hampshire and make a strong showing in the Iowa caucuses to keep his campaign going.

"The Buchanan brigades are not leap-year conservatives," Buchanan said, contending that some candidates turn to the right as presidential-election years approach.

After his announcement, he headed to Chicago and then to Iowa for a Winnebago tour of the nation's leadoff caucus state. His strategy is to try and knit together support from anti-abortion forces, Catholics, gun owners, Ross Perot voters, term-limits supporters and those who share his belief that immigration and foreign trade entanglements undermine job opportunity for Americans.

"This campaign is about an America that once again looks out for its own people and our own country first," he said.

He said he would use the National Guard if needed to defend border states from illegal immigrants who "break our laws, cross our borders and demand social benefits paid for with the tax dollars of American citizens."

Although he is relying on anti-abortion support, he did not mention the issue in his speech.

Tokyo gas

Tokyo's largest fish market about 8:15 a.m. Emergency workers in protective gear and gas masks rushed to several stations as choking passengers staggered or were hauled from trains.

At Kamiyacho station on the Hibiya line, some 30 passengers on a platform collapsed after they were overcome by fumes which were strong enough to be smelled one level up at the ticket hall.

At another station, subway workers and passengers sat sprawled, dazed and coughing on the streets to which they fled. Some were covered with blankets; others lay on newspapers or on blue plastic sheets brought by police and ambulance workers.

There was little panic among people walking to work as subway commuters poured out of the stations. Self-discipline is highly valued in Japanese society, and many people would have been reluctant to stop and offer to help because of the burden that would place on the injured to somehow repay them.

"I can't imagine how anyone could do this," said Masahisa Machida, a 37-year-old office worker who rides the subway regularly. "This is a civilized country — we have no room for terrorism."

PEOPLE

NEW YORK (AP) — Madonna hasn't lost her taste for discipline.

More than 1,000 people showed up for a party at a Greenwich Village nightclub to promote her new video, "Bedtime Story." The crowd was rowdy by the time she took to the stage to lounge on a brass bed and read "Miss Spider's Tea Party."

"I'll just wait till you shut up," she told the crowd late Saturday. "Show some respect."

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Professional house guest Brian "Kato" Kaelin wants to stretch his 15 minutes of fame.

Hollywood publicist Lee Solters, who has represented Barbra Streisand, Frank Sinatra and Michael Jackson, said he was hired to promote the career of the B-movie actor best known as a guest at O.J. Simpson's estate.

"I told him I was interested in only one thing — career publicity — and not using O.J. Simpson as a device," Solters said.

Solters said Monday that Kaelin has lost some potential movie roles because he has to be available to testify at Simpson's trial.

One of Kaelin's confirmed projects is a movie titled "The 16th Minute." The title stems from Andy Warhol's quip about everyone someday achieving 15 minutes of fame.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Country star Suzy Bogguss has given birth to her first child, a son.

Benton Charles Crider, 8 pounds, 12 ounces, was born Friday at a Nashville hospital.

Bogguss, 38, is married to songwriter Doug Crider. She recently released the album Simpatico with guitarist Chet Atkins and sang "Take It to the Limit" on the tribute album Common Thread: The Songs of the Eagles.

PARIS (AP) — Brigitte Bardot joined hundreds of animal-rights activists outside the Norwegian Embassy on Monday to protest the Oslo government's decision to allow hunting of baby seals on arctic ice floes to resume.

"As the ice melts, we have to make preparations this year so that it stops and is not started again next year," the former screen star said.

Norway had banned hunting of baby seals since 1989 but recently voted to resume the practice, saying the animals are used for scientific research.

MOSCOW (AP) — Boris Yeltsin sent 80th birthday congratulations Monday to pianist Svyatoslav Richter.

The Russian president called Richter's musical interpretations "a source of inspiration and love of beauty," and wished the maestro "many more years of creative work," the ITAR-TASS news agency reported.

Richter was traveling abroad, the agency said. But friends and admirers organized a music party in his honor.

Richter became the Soviet Union's leading pianist in the 1940s and toured the world's stages in the 1950s. He has toured rarely in recent years.

In Russia-Chechnya war, mothers go beyond call of duty

Associated Press

A group of Buddhist monks pray in Nazran, Russia, during a two-day prayer and fast session that began Monday in this town west of Chechnya to protest the war in the breakaway republic. The monks are traveling with Russian soldiers' mothers, who plan a protest march to the Chechen capital Grozny on Saturday.

MOZDOK, Russia (AP) — The women sit quietly, lining the walls of a small room in a converted movie house, a short drive from the Russian headquarters running the war in Chechnya.

They don't speak — everything has been spoken during the days of waiting.

They don't cry — the handwritten notices on the walls cry for them:

"Ivanov Oleg Alexandrovich, born 1974. Military unit 65345. Married; a 2-year-old daughter is missing her father very much. Those who have any information about him ..."

The two-story, decaying building is the meeting point for the mothers of Russian soldiers fighting in Chechnya. Some have covered thousands of miles to get to this dusty town in North Ossetia, northwest of the breakaway province.

There are women from Togliatti on the Volga and Naberezhnye Chelny on the Kama, and Omsk in Siberia, and Ryazan in central Russia.

Some two dozen women have spent months in Mozdok, awaiting news about their sons listed as missing in action. Some have located their sons' units and even traveled to the front lines to see them. But each day can bring the fatal words, and now they wait for the units to be ordered home.

A few are here for the second time, having spent a fortune on tickets and on renting a room in Mozdok.

"Maybe somebody knows something about Sultanov Danya. The family was told that he died but the parents did not identify him. Zarechny, Sverdlovsk region, tel. 3-43-77 ..."

Officers of the front units arrive at 10 a.m. and 4 p.m. They tell the mothers that their sons are not on the casualty lists and try to convince them not to venture into Chechnya and distract the soldiers. They tell them the roads are dangerous and their sons are about to be withdrawn anyway.

With the fighting in Chechnya turning more strategic and the flood of dead and wounded becoming a trickle, the military seems to be better organized and more open about its casualties. The number of dead officially stands at 1,300, the wounded at 4,000. Hundreds of soldiers, however, remain unaccounted for.

Some among the 400 MIAs might be held by the Chechen rebels. Others were probably those whose bodies were lying unburied for weeks on the streets of the Chechen capital, decomposing and feeding Grozny's stray dogs.

The Mozdok meeting place is informally run by the Committee of Soldiers' Mothers, a movement formed several years ago to defend the rights of young conscripts in the face of widespread hazing and brutal treatment. Its members have held rallies across Russia to protest the war and have traveled to Chechnya, convincing rebel fighters to free some of the Russian prisoners.

Continuing a protest journey that began with a march outside the Kremlin walls earlier this month, the committee is taking its anti-war actions to the battlefield.

Hundreds of mothers will travel from Moscow to Nazran, the capital of the ethnic territory of Ingushetia bordering on Chechnya, and march 50 miles to Grozny next Saturday.

Meanwhile, Russians are becoming accustomed to war. The paper notices on the wall in Mozdok are turning yellow with time.

"Akimochkin Vitya, military unit 5427-b. Sonny, I'm here in Mozdok. I'm in a railway car at the train station. Will be here until Jan. 30. Mama."

National Champion Mollica helps lead ASU

Junior Markus Mollica captured his second National Championship in three years Saturday at the NCAA Championships in Iowa City, Iowa. As a team, ASU finished fourth at the tournament.

BY DAMIAN SHAW
STATE PRESS

The Sun Devil wrestling team came back from spring break this weekend the fourth best team in the nation.

While men's and women's basketball teams from around the nation entered their NCAA tournaments, so did 82 schools which took part in the NCAA wrestling tournament in Iowa City, Iowa.

ASU, which finished fourth as a team, crowned a national champion in Markus Mollica at 167 pounds, and three other top eight finishers in senior Jeff Theiler (third), Steve St. John (third) and Danny Felix (seventh). All wrestlers finishing in the top eight are named all-Americans.

"Markus had a great tournament," ASU Coach Lee Roy Smith said. "There wasn't a match he wasn't in control of going into the third period."

In the finals Mollica faced a familiar nemesis, defending national champion Mark Branch from Oklahoma State, whom Mollica had already defeated twice this year.

"In the finals the score was close, but Markus didn't leave a doubt that he was going win," Smith said.

Mollica entered the tournament the favorite, seeded number one. But just because he had already defeated Branch before, didn't mean he was taking him likely.

"That can work both ways," Smith said. "He didn't assume Mark wasn't going to roll over for him. He was very well focused and turned out just an outstanding performance. One hundred sixty-seven is a very competitive weigh class and it would be no big surprise if anyone from the top five won it. But Markus has been the clearest most consistent performer throughout the year.

"That final match was something he'd prepared for all

Swimmer Kaszuba shines at NCAA Championships

BY HEATHER SNOW
STATE PRESS

ASU swimmer Beata Kaszuba stole the show at the women's NCAA Championships in Austin, Texas March 16-18.

Kaszuba, a junior, won the 100-yard breaststroke, breaking a minute and her own previous record of 1:00.41 with a time of 59:72.

Along with this, Kaszuba also won the 200 breast, setting a NCAA record of 2:09.71, and she came in 10th in the 200 individual medley with a time of 2:00.64, which was a new team record.

Kaszuba was not only voted the most outstanding swimmer of the meet, but she was also voted Swimmer of the Year by NCAA coaches.

Coach Tim Hill said that breaking a minute in the 100 breast was a big accomplishment.

"No one has ever come that close to swimming under a minute in the 100 breast, so this is a huge accomplishment," she said.

Although Kaszuba is only a junior, this was her last season swimming for ASU. The Poznan, Poland native lost a year of eligibility after transferring from a university in Poland, and was very pleased with the way here collegiate career ended.

"I was hoping to do well, but I didn't plan to do this well," she said. "This was a great way to end my career at ASU."

According to Hill, the relays also performed well.

The 400 medley relay finished in 11th place, the 200 medley finished in 12th and the 800 free relay finished 14th.

Hill also said senior Becky Hackiewicz swam strong for the Sun Devils.

"Becky had an outstanding mile swim, placing 21st with a time of 16:34.98," Hill said. "She had a great four years

ASU's Ward finishes in 4-way tie for 3rd at Ping Pro Tournament

BY HEATHER SNOW
STATE PRESS

ASU golfer Wendy Ward sure didn't compete like an amateur over the weekend at the Standard Register PING Pro Golf Tournament in Phoenix, finishing in a four-way tie for third.

Ward, the only amateur in the tournament, tied for third with professionals Joan Pitcock, Katie Peterson-Parker and Rosie Jones. While Laura Davies won the tournament and Beth Daniel finished second.

According to the senior Ward, she just thought of this tournament as any other one, although, knowing that if she was a professional she would have won close to $35,000 for her third-place finish.

"I knew that I could of won $35,000 if I was a pro, but that time will come," she said. "My biggest goal was to enjoy myself, and I had a great time."

Ward said that she didn't feel intimidated competing with such big name professionals, but rather received a warm welcome.

"I was competing and looking at all these stars I've looked up to over the years," she said. "I didn't feel intimidated and I downplayed myself knowing that they'll respect me for my game and not the title behind my name."

"Many of the pro's came up to me and introduced themselves and they were all very receptive and encouraging. That's what it's all about, feeling comfortable hitting next to Hall of Famers."

Ward said she realized this was a business for all of the professionals and she just kept to herself, however, they were all very social.

"I didn't want to make the first effort because I know that this is like a business for the pros, but they all made the effort and made me feel very comfortable," she said. "This puts me at peace to what will come in the future, since you see the same players at all the same tournaments it's as if we're all one big family."

ASU teammate, sophomore Heather Bowie, was Ward's caddie for the tournament and according to Ward it was a great experience for her.

"Heather had a blast and she talked with many other players and caddie's," Ward said. "Many of the caddies offered Heather help if she ever needed it and that made her feel like there was a lot of camaraderie."

ASU Coach Linda Vollstedt was very impressed with Ward's performance.

"This was a big stepping-stone for Wendy to go out in a professional event and do so well," Vollstedt said. "This will really give her a lot of confidence for her future as a pro."

"This definitely gives me a lot of confidence, knowing I can compete at a professional level," she said.

Despite the excitement, Ward is ready to get back to reality.

"I'm excited to get back to the team, since the season is coming to end," she said. "The whole experience helped me realize that I'm still a student-athlete."

Softball bounces back to post 5-3 record over break

By DAMIAN SHAW
STATE PRESS

While spring break got off to a slow start for the ASU softball team, the Sun Devils were en fuego down the stretch, as they posted a 5-3 record over an eight-day span.

ASU started the break with a California road trip, where it dropped two games to the then-No. 2 UCLA Bruins on March 11 by scores of 8-1 and 1-0 and split a doubleheader with UC Santa Barbara on March 13, 4-1 and 1-6. The Sun Devils bounced back though after returning home, crushing San Diego 11-0 and 7-0 on Saturday and Oregon 3-0 and 5-4 on Sunday.

Sunday's showdown with the Ducks was highlighted by freshman pitcher Carrie Breedlove. Breedlove picked up a rare two wins in one night in the doubleheader played at Sun Devil Club Stadium.

"It was really a good win, but once the second game went into extra innings I was really nervous," said Breedlove, who started the first game and came in as the reliever in the second game.

The second game lasted into the 10th inning, three more than the usual seven. According to NCAA softball rules, when a non-tournament softball game lasts more than nine innings, the last out from the ninth inning starts out as a runner at second base in the 10th.

"I was especially nervous going in with no outs and a runner on second," Breedlove said of the final inning. "It's not that hard to score off that, so when we held them it was really exciting."

The Sun Devils had 1994 All-Pac-10 player Alyssa Johnson on second to start the bottom of the 10th. Oregon's Kim Kampfer, who pitched the first game for the Ducks, also was brought back in relief, matching up the pitchers from the first game with the score tied 4-4. After an intentional walk of junior slugger Kerry Moloney, freshman catcher Leah Bartell launched a shot to left that brought home Johnson to score the winning run and nail down the 5-4 victory.

Coach Linda Wells was pleased with her team's performance.

"I was happy with the win. I think we totally outplayed them in the first game," Wells said. "We flattened out a little in the second game, but we had great individual efforts that carried us over."

Frieder looks to silence 'experts' Thursday vs. top-seed Kentucky

By DAN MILLER
STATE PRESS

Its mid-March and that usually brings several things to mind. Spring training. Spring break. March Madness and the NCAA basketball tournament. And with March Madness comes the American pastime that may rival only hot dogs and apple pie—the tournament office pool.

An ASU basketball fan who has even glanced at this year's 64-team draw might have been hard-pressed not to notice the Sweet 16 possibility of the top-seeded Kentucky Wildcats and fifth-seeded ASU in the Southeast Regional in Birmingham, Ala.

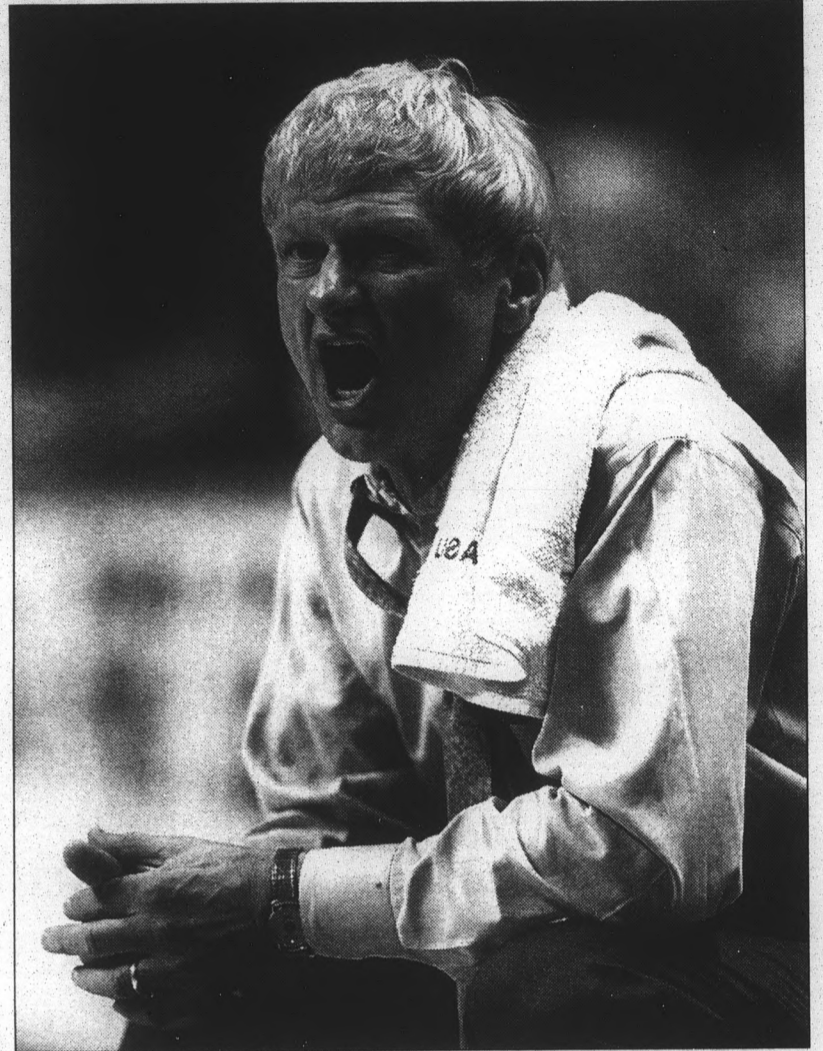

If one played by the numbers, the Wildcats would have been the obvious pre-tournament choice. And now with the match-up set, Kentucky is a 14-point favorite going into the game. So if you picked the Wildcats to advance despite you're undying commitment to ASU, don't feel guilty because you're not alone.

"I think my daughter's got Kentucky," joked ASU Coach Bill Frieder in his weekly press conference Monday. "What am I gonna do, beat her ass because she picked Kentucky?"

"You respect what people do in the office pools. That's the fun of the whole thing. That's why this is the greatest spectacle in all of college athletics. It's incredible."

Frieder knows his Sun Devils, who beat Ball State and Manhattan in rounds one and two to set up Thursday night's showdown, are heavy underdogs. But that doesn't bother him a bit.

"I have nothing against people that picked Kentucky, they're a great basketball team," said Frieder, who admitted to averaging about three hours of sleep a night over the last three weeks. "But we got to find a way to make the experts wrong."

The winner of the the game will play the winner of the North Carolina-Georgetown game for a ticket to the Final Four. It will be ASU's first Sweet 16 appearance since 1975, surpassing the last Sun Devil tournament-team which lost to Arkansas in the second round in 1991.

The other ASU swimmers that competed in the NCAA Championships were juniors Chris Jeffrey, Joanne Currah and Lisa Urban and freshman Erika Sohlen.

Overall the team finished in 14th place, but according to Hill, the meet was very tight.

"We would have liked to have finished a little higher, but the meet was very close between 11th and 20th place," Hill said. "The girls put a lot of effort into it and they all performed well."

By LEE NEWMAN
STATE PRESS

Most students are probably wishing that spring break was still going on so their headaches could be a result of a good time instead of upcoming tests. However, some students want spring break to continue because it marked a week in which ASU athletics have never been more successful.

From Wendy Ward's third-place finish in the LPGA's Standard Register PING to ASU basketball's first Sweet 16 appearance in 20 years, Sun Devil athletics flourished during the break. And right at the top of that list is the fifth-ranked ASU baseball team.

The Sun Devils started the week with two wins against the eighth-ranked defending National Champion Oklahoma Sooners, 6-2 on March 14 and 8-2 on March 15. The Sooners were responsible for ending ASU's season last year, beating them twice in the College World Series.

ASU followed the Oklahoma sweep with a three-game sweep of the team that was the preseason favorite to win the Pac-10 Southern Division — the 11th-ranked USC Trojans. It was a series that had most ASU fans exceeding their target heart rate for the weekend.

The Sun Devils beat the Trojans 7-6 in 15 innings on Friday in a five-hour-plus game. Then on Saturday, the Devils scored three runs in the bottom of the ninth inning to win another nail biter, 10-9.

The Sun Devils capped off their undefeated week with Sunday's 10-4 victory over the Trojans. ASU exploded for four home runs in the game. Freshman Dan McKinley started the onslaught in the second inning with a two-run shot. That was followed by back-to-back HRs by sophomore Cody McKay and junior Robbie Kent in the fifth inning. Junior Travis Flowers capped off the home-run barrage in the seventh inning in grand fashion, appropriately enough, with a grand slam.

"This was an exciting week," ASU Coach Pat Murphy said. "It's got to make us feel that we can beat anyone."

Sophomore Kaipo Spenser pitched his fifth complete game of the season and second of the week in Sunday's victory. His record now sits at 6-1 with a 1.51 ERA. He has also had 75 strikeouts in just under 66 innings pitched.

Offensively, McKay has been ASU's catalyst. A first-inning double on Sunday extended McKay's team-leading hitting streak to 19 games. For the season the third baseman is hitting .355 with 29 RBIs and 26 runs scored.

McKay's double and home run came on a day when he wasn't sure if he could play until moments before game time. McKay was hit by a pitch Saturday night, resulting in a swollen knee. He couldn't run when he came out to stretch on Sunday, but right before the start of the game he told Murphy that he could play.

"He's the type of kid who wants to play and loves to play," Murphy said. "He was hurting, but he knew he could help our team win."

ASU's record now stands at 23-6 overall and 5-2 in the Six-Pac. It's the Sun Devils best start since 1982, when they jumped out to a 23-4 mark. ASU's five wins against highly-ranked opponents last week jumped

Gymnastics ends dual-meet season with 2 wins

Freshman Kim Keever performs on floor during ASU's 193.675-192.200 victory over UofA on March 16 at the University Activity Center.

BY JEREMY STEIN
STATE PRESS

The ASU women's gymnastics team finished up its dual-meet season with two victories over the break.

The Sun Devils downed rival UofA 193.675-192.200 on March 16 in the University Activity Center and dropped BYU 194.350-193.700 Saturday in Provo, Utah.

While ASU's scores fell well short of the 195.700 the team posted against Denver in its previous meet on March 3, the Sun Devils were happy with last week's outings.

"We did really good considering we had a week off," senior co-captain Tina Brinkman said. "Anytime you go in streaks of constantly competing every weekend and then you take off a week, sometimes it's hard to get your motivation and it's hard to get back in that competition mode."

"It was good, but maybe a little out of focus," senior co-captain Danna Lister said of the team's performances. "We hit most of our sets and we did a good job. We came out with two good scores."

With the two wins, ASU finished the dual-meet season with a 10-4 mark and now must prepare for postseason competition, which begins Saturday night with the Pac-10 Championships.

According to Brinkman, the team's ability to perform well following an extended layoff will be helpful in the postseason tournaments.

"It's great that we had a weekend off, because I think that's going to prepare us to know how to work and to know how to compete when we have weekends off in between regionals and nationals and Pac-10s and regionals."

Against the Wildcats, ASU was led by junior Katie Freeland. Freeland posted a career-high score of 39.175 to take top honors in the all-around. She took second on the floor (9.825) and vault (9.9) and was third on beam with a 9.825.

The Sun Devils other top performers on the night were Brinkman, who finished first on vault (9.925) and floor (9.9), Lister, who captured first on beam with a 9.875, and freshman Meagan Wright, who tied for first on bars with a 9.875.

Saturday against the Cougars, Wright and Brinkman once again took center stage. Wright, who did not compete all-around against UofA, finished first in the all-around with a 39.025. She finished tied for second with Freeland on the beam (9.85) and tied for second with Brinkman on bars with a 9.825. Brinkman captured first on vault with a 9.9 and finished second on floor with a 9.875.

ASU next hosts the Pac-10 Championships Saturday at 7 p.m. in the University Activity Center.

Sun Devils jump on von Lindenau's bandwagon

BY DAN MILLER
STATE PRESS

It was the type of stuff of legends are made of. Seventh-ranked USC, winners of the NCAA men's tennis championship three of the last four years, against ASU, which had never beaten the Trojans at their home court in Sun Devil history. On Sunday, March 12, all that would change.

After the Sun Devils seized the doubles point, ASU top gun Sargis Sargsian and third singles player Paul Reber each posted straight-set victories. With the Sun Devils up 3-2 and freshman No. 4 player Tzolak Gevorkian waiting in the wings, one match was still being decided on the five-court complex.

Enter Wolf von Lindenau. The sophomore south-paw was trading blows with Kyle Spencer, a former standout in the junior ranks who has established himself as national doubles force in college. Von Lindenau was 2-8 heading into the confrontation.

It was David and Goliath revisited. "Everyone thinks about being in that position," von Lindenau said. "The match is on the line. Its USC. Its all up to you."

Needless to say, the Cinderella story from rural Idaho rose to the occasion.

After von Lindenau dropped the first set 6-2, he broke Spencer early in the second and evened the score 6-1. Spencer's crisp new balls to start the third set spelled trouble for von Lindenau. Before he knew it, von Lindenau was down 4-1 and looking for a large rock to hide under.

"I knew Sargis and Reber had already won and (Dave) Critchley and Sergio (Elias) had lost," von Lindenau recalled. "Tzolak had gone on and dropped the first set fast. I had to win my match."

The combatants each held their ensuing serves to make it 5-2 Spencer. After saving a match point, von Lindenau managed to hold in a marathon service game to make the score 5-3.

The gloves came off. It was time to brawl. A scorching von Lindenau-passing shot saved another match point at 5-3.

"I saw Wolf's score and I couldn't take my eyes off his match," said Geyorkian, who was two courts down struggling through cramps and fatigue to stay afloat with Fernando Samayoa. "It was really exciting. I didn't know what to do."

With von Lindenau serving down 5-4, he ran the gauntlet again, saving his third match point with a low angle volley into the corner. Soon it was 5-5 and the onlookers were living and dying on von Lindenau's every move.

"I'm thinking I can't believe I saved these match points," von Lindenau said. "I saw the rest of the team up in the bleachers. The adrenaline was running through me. I kept my composure real well."

After von Lindenau cracked a pair of textbook returns at Spencer's feet to make the score 30-love, the fledgling Trojan called an equipment timeout to change his shoelace.

Despite von Lindenau's frustration, he held on to go up 6-5. Five points later, Spencer misfired on a volley and the Sun Devils had clinched their first victory over the Trojans at their court in ASU history, 4-2.

"I cried out," said von Lindenau, whose teammates stormed the court afterward to join in the celebration.

"I just threw my racket and ran to him," said Gevorkian, whose match was suspended as soon as von Lindenau's ended. "It was like he had just saved my life."

"I think he did a heck of a job. The guy is just unbelievable. Wolf is a hero."

ASU Coach Lou Belken agreed. "Its a tribute to some of his hard work," he said. "He fought back and didn't quit."

Prior to the singles matches, Gevorkian teamed with Reber at third doubles for a knock-down-drag-out slugfest with Samayoa and Brett Hansen, who is the No. 4 singles player in the nation.

With the doubles point on the line, the pair were down 6-1 in tiebreaker at 8-8, but somehow they staved off five consecutive match points to triumph 9-8.

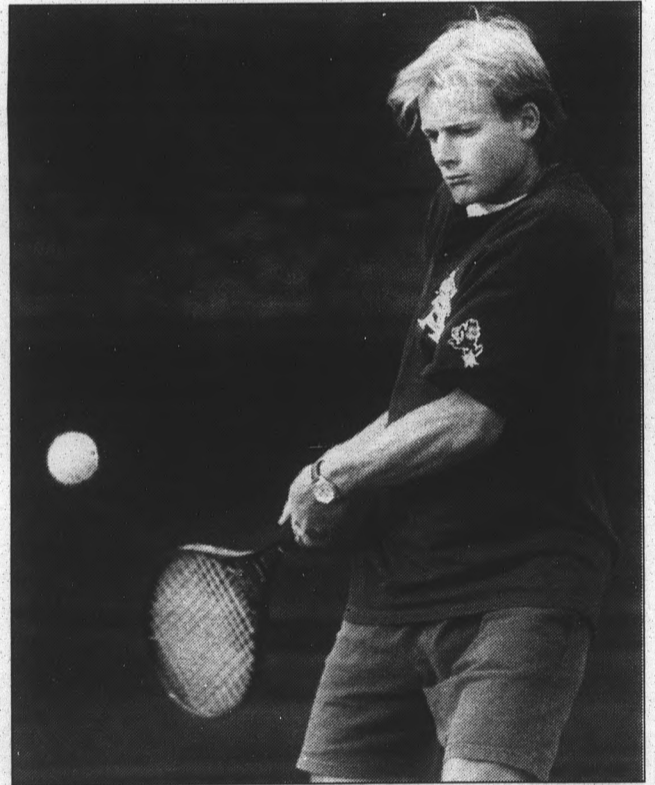

"I was kind of like eating the ball with my eyes," Gevorkian said. "The ball was like candy to me."

"Neither Gevorkian or Reber gave up down five match points," Belken said. "Gevorkian came back and played some solid tennis. Its a tribute to both of them."

The Sun Devils were actually a day behind schedule because last Friday's inclement weather forced them back to the hotel for a day full of Yahtzee and Starsky and Hutch reruns.

"I think the key to the match was on Saturday we had rain," Belken said. "Because of the rain, we played singles first (against UCLA). We lost 4-2 and we didn't feel like we should've lost that match."

Sargsian, the No. 1 player in the country, tasted defeat for the first time in months against friend and rival Robert Janecek of ASU sophomore Wolf von Lindenau played the match of his career against USC's Kyle Spencer on March 12 in Los Angeles. Von Lindenau's three-set victory at sixth singles clinched ASU's first victory over the Trojans on their court in ASU history.

UCLA. ASU is now 8-3 overall and 1-3 in the Pac-10 and will likely take a noticeable jump in the new team rankings scheduled for release today.

"I think on a national level people didn't know who we had on our team," Belken said. "People weren't giving us very much credit. We opened their eyes."

along. He'd planned to peak during the Pac-10 championships and the NCAA's, and it clearly paid off for him."

Theiler shared Smith's exuberance. "It was great, he really deserved it," Theiler said of his teammate. "He's been wrestling well all year."

Theiler finished his wrestling career on a high note, losing only one match in the tournament.

"I was happy that I went 5-1. I was a little disappointed that I lost that one match, but I think I was concentrating on other things," Theiler said.

Theiler's weekend was not all good though. While away at the tournament, Theiler learned his Tempe apartment had been broken into and that his wooded ship collection he'd had for four years had been stolen and vandalized. Theiler had carved all the ships himself.

The good news, however, was that Theiler, who is from Des Moines, Iowa, got to wrestle in front of his family at the tournament.

"It was great getting to see my family, I was real happy about seeing them," Theiler said.

As for the team, Smith was proud.

"I thought we had as good a tournament as could be expected," Smith said. "We had outstanding performances in the consolation rounds that pushed our final team score up. It made a big difference in bringing home a trophy."

The top four teams in the tournament bring home hardware along with bragging rights which will carry over to next year. Also, since the Sun Devils finished in the top 12, they will be more likely to have wild card wrestlers entered into the tournament next year.

Theiler was also pleased with how the team finished. "I thought it was outstanding placing fourth and having four all-Americans, with Steve and I repeating, Danny getting his first and Markus with his third," Theiler said.

With Theiler being the only senior, Smith thinks the team's future looks bright.

"We've only got one wrestler graduating," Smith said. "I think with all the guys we've got returning we're going to be in good shape next year."

◀◀ SUN DEVIL SPRING BREAK REWIND ▶▶

Women cause racket in 4-match homestand

By DAN MILLER
STATE PRESS

Home sweet home. That was the underlying theme of the ASU women's tennis team's spring break excursions. The Sun Devils leveled three of the four opponents that invaded Whiteman Tennis Center over the break to run their record to 9-4. "We've played really well overall," Sun Devils Coach Sheila McInerney said. "Kori (Davidson) has really started to play well. She beat (Jane) Chi, the top kid in the country." Most recently, the Sun Devils schooled the Notre Dame Fighting Irish on March 19, 8-1. Davidson, ASU's No. 1 singles player thought she might have her work cut out for her with Wendy Crabtree, but the Sun Devil sniper was firing on all cylinders and rushed Crabtree into the lockerroom 6-3, 6-1. "Crabtree is really good," Davidson said. "It was closer than the score indicated. She just got frustrated. I was hitting all of my shots."

Second singles player Joelle Schad, No. 3 Reka

Cseresnyes, No. 4 Kara Schertzer and No. 6 Anna Moll also rung up straight-set singles victories, while No. 5 Stephanie Lansdorp posted a three-set triumph. Moll has been smoking as of late with six straight victories.

In doubles action, the top two teams of Davidson and Schad and Schertzer and Moll picked up where they left off in singles with a pair of wins. Davidson and Schad were down 4-3 in the third set of their match before slamming the door.

"Sometimes its hard to go out and play the doubles after you've won the singles 6-0," admitted Schad, a senior.

On March 18, the Sun Devils mopped the court with Syracuse 8-1. Davidson was true to form again in the top slot with a 6-2, 6-4 snubbing of Jana Strnadova. Then Cseresnyes spanked Nicole Strnadova 6-4, 6-3 in the third spot. Schertzer and Moll both served up double bagels at fourth and sixth singles and Lansdorp pocketed a routine straight-setter at No. 5.

The highlight of the doubles trouncings was Davidson and Schad's 7-5, 7-5 humbling of Strnadova and Erica O'Neill, who were finalists at the national clay court championships.

Davidson couldn't find enough adjectives to describe the play of her partner.

"Joelle is just amazing at doubles," Davidson raved. "I just stand back and watch basically. With my groundstrokes and her ability to poach, we can play with anyone."

"I used to hate doubles but just playing with Joelle has changed that."

"When we're playing well, it doesn't surprise me," Schad said of the pummelling.

The UCLA Bruins handed the Sun Devils their only loss over the break on March 12. Davidson and Moll both won their singles tussles by identical 6-4, 6-1 scores.

Davidson avenged her loss to Jane Chi in the Rolex Championships last month and also climbed out of the rut she was in.

"It was a big match for me mentally because I was kind of out of it," confessed Davidson, who said a touch of senioritis may have been a reason for the minor lull. "For the first time in a while, I really feel good about my game. I'm confident again."

Wildcats drop ASU in women's basketball finale

FROM STAFF REPORTS

The ASU women's basketball team ended its season on March 11 with an 81-72 loss to UofA, despite Coach Jacqueline Hullah's guarantee of a victory prior to the meeting.

ASU's leading scorer on the season, sophomore Molly Tuter, finished with a team-high 15 points and added 11 rebounds. It was her sixth double-double of the season. Senior Tiffany Krahenbuhl played the last game of her college career and finished with 13 points, six rebounds and three assists.

ASU shot 51.7 percent from the field in the first half and trailed by three at the break, 40-37. However, in the second half the Sun Devils only shot 37.1 percent, while the Wildcats were 55.2 percent in the final 20 minutes. That proved to be the difference as ASU matched UofA in every other category.

UofA's Adia Barnes finished with a game-high 28 points and was 12 of 16 from the field.

ASU finished a disappointing year with an 8-19 overall record and a 2-16 mark in the Pac-10. The Sun Devils lost their final 11 conference games. ASU doubled its overall wins from a year ago, when it finished 4-22. However, the Sun Devils' conference mark remained the same as they finished last in the Pac-10.

One bright spot for the Sun Devils was the acknowledgment of forward Stephanie Freeman. Freeman was an honorable mention for the All-Pac-10 freshmen team. She averaged 9.2 points and 5.1 rebounds per game. She led ASU in scoring four different times. Her best game was in a 68-63 loss to the UCLA Bruins on Feb. 18, when she finished with 22 points and seven rebounds.

Remaining NCAA games have tough act to follow

BY ASSOCIATED PRESS

The 15 games left in the NCAA tournament have a tough act to follow.

With six overtime games, a few early upsets and a bunch of blunders and buzzer beaters, the first two rounds had everything a basketball fan could want.

One TV was not enough. The next act starts Thursday night with the first games in the round of 16. Following the Beatles on the Ed Sullivan Show might have been easier.

On Sunday alone, three of the tournament's greatest moments looked a lot like some of the NCAA's best highlights from years past.

Tyus Edney's length-of-the-court drive covering 4.8 seconds for UCLA's game-winning shot against Missouri looked like Danny Ainge's sprint that shocked Notre Dame in BYU's 51-50 win in the 1981 East Regional semifinals.

Don Reid's rebound and basket off Allen Iverson's airball gave Georgetown the buzzer-beating win over Weber State. The play was similar to North Carolina State's 54-52 title game win over Houston in 1983 when Lorenzo Charles dunked Dereck Whittenburg's airball at the buzzer.

Lawrence Moten's time-out when Syracuse had none left in a loss to Arkansas immediately had people bringing up Chris Webber's similar mistake in Michigan's 77-71 championship game loss to North Carolina in 1993.

Those harried endings capped four days of OTs, upsets and emotion.

Old Dominion's triple OT win over Villanova was the tournament's longest game in 13 years. Two No. 14 seeds won, and another could have if a buzzer shot hadn't bounced off the rim. And for every group of huggers and jumpers, there were just as many locker rooms full of criers.

The eight highest seeds — four No. 1s and four No. 2s — are still going, and none of the remaining teams are seeded lower than sixth. The round of 16 will also be without a team from the Big Ten — the first time that's happened.

Six Big Ten teams started and five lost in the first round. Purdue lost in the second round.

As bad as the first two rounds were for the Big Ten, they were perfect for the ACC, which has four teams still alive — one in each region. The SEC has three and the Big Eight and Big East still have two.

Each region has its own subplot this weekend.

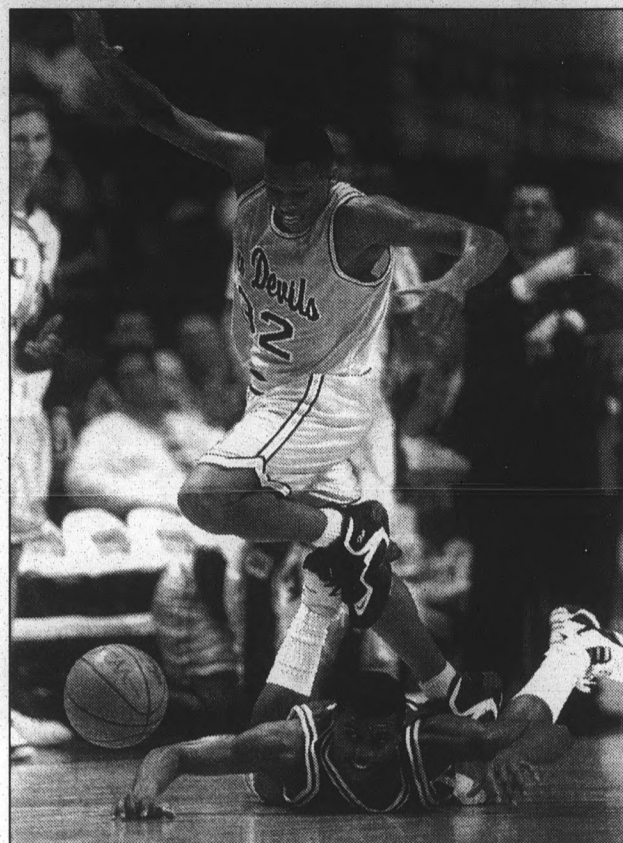

In the East, second-seeded Massachusetts figures to continue its bump-free ride to the regional final, playing six-seeded Tulsa. No. 1 Wake Forest and No. 4 Oklahoma State send their inside-outside combinations and tremendous defenses against each other.

If top-seeded Kentucky gets past No. 5 Arizona State and No. 2 North Carolina beats No. 6 Georgetown, there would be a Southeast Regional final between the two winningest programs in college basketball history.

The Midwest starts with the neighborhood battle between second-seeded Arkansas, the survivor of two cliffhangers, and No. 6 Memphis. That winner will face the winner of top-seeded Kansas against No. 4 Virginia. Kansas' proximity to Kemper Arena won't be anything new for Virginia, which had to beat Miami of Ohio at Dayton in the second round.

The West will have all eyes focused on top-seeded UCLA as it tries to make the 20th anniversary of John Wooden's last title even more special. The Bruins get fifth-seeded Mississippi State, while the other game is No. 2 Connecticut vs. No. 3 Maryland.

Fifteen more games over two more weekends. Plenty of chances for the NCAA tournament to try and top a great first four days.

the Sun Devils from 10th in the country to where they find themselves now — fifth.

The team's impressive start comes in what many called a rebuilding year for the Sun Devils — a year in which ASU had just two returning starters and not one position player returning to the same position they played a year ago.

"I have refused all year to call this a rebuilding season," Murphy said. "We know we're a good team, but we're still not where we'd like to be. We're getting better, but there's still things we need to work on."

Softball

Wells also praised Breedlove for her effort and sees great things in her future.

"Not only is she getting stronger, but she hasn't even started to be able to use all her pitches. She just has so much upside potential," Wells said. "She's been a big, big addition to our softball team."

Breedlove recorded her third shutout in a row with a 3-0, five-hit effort in the first game. The Sun Devils continued their streak, holding their opponents scoreless for 20 innings until the lucky Ducks picked up an unearned run in the second inning of the second game.

Sophomore Lisa Dacquist brought herself to the verge of ASU history in the first game against Oregon by snagging her 36th-career stolen base, one shy of the mark set by now assistant coach Ann Rowan. Dacquist had a shot at tying the record, but was called out for leaving first base too early in her attempted steal.

"I'm not stressing when I'm up to bat, thinking I've got to get on base so I can steal, but it is something in the back of my mind because it would be a big accomplishment," Dacquist said. "That's just something I'd like to get out of the way so I can work on shattering (the record)."

Ironically, when Dacquist, only a sophomore, does break the stolen base record, Rowan won't be able to witness it. Rowan is playing for the U.S. softball team in the Pan-American games.
