ASU, fraternity try to resolve lawsuit

Phi Delta Theta claims rights were violated by Greek Board

CODY V. AYCOCK
STATE PRESS

Lawyers for ASU and Phi Delta Theta will meet today in an effort to resolve the group's lawsuit against the University.

The now-disbanded fraternity filed suit Aug. 10 against the University and the Arizona Board of Regents. They claim the Greek Review Board denied them a fair trial when they were found guilty of hazing violations last year.

"We are going to see what we can work out ... we are keeping open lines of communication to try and resolve (the suit) without any long, drawn-out process," said Bruce Phillips, attorney for Phi Delta Theta.

Cindy Ray, head counsel for the University, could not be reached for comment. But General Counsel Paul Ward, one of the attorneys representing ASU, said the University is reviewing the suit.

"They went through the process and were found responsible (for violating hazing policy)," said Tim Bills, Greek Life coordinator.

As a result, Christine Wilkinson, vice president of student affairs, revoked Phi Delta Theta's recognition as a fraternity.

The suit, filed in Maricopa County Superior Court, claims the GRB proceedings "failed to set forth any degree of protection of civil rights for the individual."

"(When) you are talking about revoking somebody's charter after they have been on campus for over 30 years, I think you need to look hard and fast at making sure the rights of all parties are recognized," Phillips said.

Affirmative action shockwaves touch ASU strategy

BY DAVID J. KOVACS
STATE PRESS

Changes in the University of California system's affirmative action policies have University officials questioning what it could mean to ASU.

The UC Board of Regents in June eliminated race, ethnicity and gender as factors in university admissions, hiring and contracting.

"Clearly, we're watching what's going on over there," said Barbara Mawhiney, director of Equal Opportunity and Affirmative Action at ASU. She added that the UC system's policy was very different from ASU's.

"Race is not a factor in our admissions policy," she said.

Mawhiney said designating ethnicity on the University admission application is voluntary and that neither race nor gender have an impact on admission. Ethnicity is only used for tracking demographic information at the University, she said.

Admission to ASU is based on either GPA alone or a combination of test scores and class standing, said Timothy J. Desch, associate director of admissions. He

Animal rights advocates want right to say no to dissection

BY PATTY KING
STATE PRESS

Students in science classes often face a painful decision — to dissect or not to dissect.

But it is a choice, said Russell Benford, the president of the ASU chapter of Concerned Arizonans for Animal Rights and Ethics. The group is working to inform students that they may be able to do alternative assignments, but only if they act at the beginning of the semester.

"We're not asking (teachers) to put an end to dissection," he said. "We're just asking them to let students know their options."

CAARE is also asking department heads to develop a written policy requiring teachers to notify students that animals will be used in classes and for what purpose. Professors should make that information known at the beginning of the semester and offer alternative classwork and assignments for students who object to dissection, Benford said.

However, ASU does not have a written policy about any of these issues, said Carol Johnston, chairwoman of Institutional Animal Care and Use Committee.

She said IACUC sends a letter to department heads and instructors every semester recommending they do those things. But IACUC does not take it any further than that.

She said such a policy would infringe on the faculty's academic freedom.

"Instructors ... have the right to choose means that they feel are most appropriate to their instructional goals and this right extends to decisions about the use of animals in laboratories," said Ronald Rutowski, the acting chairman of the zoology department. "So the University is not going to require that faculty accommodate students who have objections."

He said the University will only "strongly encourage" professors to accommodate students' objections.

However, Benford said the school should not have the right to require dissection, even in cases where individual teachers believe that it is the most effective method of learning.

"Ultimately, the school has the responsibility to provide students with an education consistent with their ethical values," he said.

He said the school can provide alternative methods of learning such as rubber models, virtual-reality computer programs, textbooks or charts.

Rutowski said that alternative methods don't always have an equivalent educational value.

"Suppose you want to teach someone about the ocean who had never seen it," he said. "Which do you think would be the most powerful or effective learning experience, to put them in a car and drive them to the ocean or to show them a bunch of pictures?"

Richard Satterlie, a professor of zoology, said he objects to a policy requiring alternative assignments.

"It's starting to get where people are telling us that what we can and can't teach," he said. "Academic freedom states that if an instructor feels strongly that a particular dissection is the only adequate way to learn something, then that instructor should be able to require it."

Satterlie, who teaches an anatomy and physiology course, said he allows students who object to do alternative assignments.

Rutowski said the zoology department is willing to listen to CAARE's requests and examine them.

"I'm not saying what the department will do or not do, but we're open to discussion," he said.

CAARE brochures detailing the best way to approach professors about alternative assignments are available at the ASU Bookstore, the Memorial Union, Student Services Building and the R.E.A.C.H. office. Anyone interested in obtaining a brochure can also call CAARE at 241-9778.

"Sometimes we forget that college students have the same rights as anyone else."

According to the suit, the fraternity was denied the right of cross-examination of witnesses, representation by counsel and a fair and impartial trial during the GRB proceedings. The organization "is suffering irreparable damages by being denied recognition," according to the suit.

In addition to the rescission, the fraternity lost the right to lease their house at 701 Alpha Drive The Phi Delta Theta House Corporation, an alumni group established to maintain and lease the house, entered into a 40-year lease agreement with the University in 1961. The agreement included the option to buy the house in 2002.

"Being unable to rent (the house) for four years basically cost them the chapter house after paying for it for 35 years," Phillips said.

Phillips added he wants to work in cooperation with the University to resolve the matter while protecting his client's rights.

"It is always a balance of working with the school and not necessarily against the school," he said.

said ethnicity would be considered only if a student appeals an admission denial.

However, the University does use broad-based recruiting to ensure a diverse student population, Mawhiney said.

The University recruits in areas where students are unfamiliar with the admissions process, she said, including schools with a large minority student population.

Many people confuse this kind of recruiting with providing an unfair opportunity, Mawhiney said.

"If the University went to a school with 99 percent white student population, would that also be considered discriminatory?" she asked, adding that recruiting is making sure everyone has an equal opportunity.

"It's our job to tell them what the rules are, how they work and how to play the game," she said.

A policy that aids a particular group must fall under the U.S. Supreme Court's test of "strict scrutiny," said Paul Ward, general counsel to the University. The test requires proof of current or past discrimination, he said.

The policy must also be "narrowly tailored" to address the need of a group, Ward said. For a policy to be considered narrowly tailored the institution must first consider race-neutral alternatives and the program must also be periodically examined, he said. However, he added that narrowly tailored is an undefined term.

"Even the Supreme Court is still struggling to make that distinction," he said.

University opinions on the role of affirmative action fall at both ends of the spectrum.

"I am against affirmative action because it stigmatizes minority students, many of whom are at the University based on their own academic merit," said Fernando R. Teson, ASU law professor.

Affirmative action puts minorities in groups rather than looking at them as individuals, he said.

However, Teson said he does favor the use of affirmative action in cases of financial need.

Mawhiney said most people don't know what affirmative action really means.

"Affirmative action is a concept," she said.

She stressed there is no national affirmative action policy, but rather different programs operating on a state-by-state basis. The role of her department, she said, is to ensure that the University is in compliance with state and federal laws.

Mawhiney also said people do not draw the distinction between the use of quotas by government contractors and the role of affirmative action at the University.

"People forget affirmative action is about providing equal opportunity," she said. "I don't want to see a slowdown. We're not there yet."

Arizona legislators are also paying attention to the California resolution.

Rep. Scott Bundgaard, R-Phoenix, recently proposed drafting legislation that would eliminate certain affirmative action policies at the University.

"I'm against setting aside any scholarships and waivers of fees solely for the use of minorities," he said.

Bundgaard said the policy is discriminatory. However, he said the specifics are still very flexible.

Tobacco tax a windfall; surplus money on hold

PHOENIX (AP) — The extra money generated from a voter-approved tobacco tax can't go toward indigent health care in Arizona until after the Legislature reconvenes next year, lawmakers were told.

Proposition 200 has provided the state with about $10 million per month, Revenue Director Harold Scott told a joint legislative panel overseeing the Tobacco Tax and Health Care Fund.

Lawmakers expected to take in only $34 million for the year when they passed a bill appropriating tobacco-tax money earlier this year.

The discrepancy between the projection and the actual revenues angered Rep. Andy Nichols, D-Tucson, who said it has delayed getting health care dollars to the poor.

"By my calculations, we're going to collect over $100 million. The voters didn't approve collecting this tax to put it in a rainy-day fund," Nichols said at the meeting Tuesday.

Rep. Sue Gerard, R-Phoenix, the committee chairwoman, defended the way the money is being appropriated.

"We took the conservative approach, which I think is the right approach," she said. "The money is not going anywhere. It's not going into the General Fund."

Proposition 200 increased the tax on tobacco products by 40 cents and created the Tobacco Tax and Health Care Fund, where the money must go. The fund is divided into four accounts: medically needy, health education, health research and an adjustment account, which mitigates any drain on the Corrections Fund, which also gets tobacco-tax money.

Mabel Chen, director of the Arizona Health Care Cost Containment System, told the panel that by the end of this fiscal year, the tobacco tax will have paid $5 million for organ transplants for the medically needy.

Tempe businessman dies, burned in '94 explosion

SCOTTSDALE (AP) — A man who clung to life for more than a year after he was severely burned in a 1994 fireworks blaze has died.

Todd Stout, 32, died Tuesday night after he underwent a three-hour surgery the day before which allowed him to move his left arm and hand for the first time since the June 1994 fire.

Following the surgery, Stout celebrated with family only to slip into cardiac arrest hours later at Scottsdale Memorial Hospital-North, a news release from the family said.

The release said the family doesn't know why Stout died, but they believe his lungs filled with fluid after the surgery.

The explosion at Stout's family fireworks factory in Tempe started after he checked a firecracker and it went off. It set off a fire that destroyed the family's 28-year-old Fireworks Production International, one of the largest fireworks companies in the Southwest.

While in the hospital, Stout underwent 15 surgeries and struggled through therapy five times a week. He eventually learned to walk again.

Rwandan orphans, who lost their families during last year's massacres in Rwanda, arrive at a new orphanage in Goma, Zaire, after being evacuated from Mugunga refugee camps, also in Zaire. An estimated 133,000 desperate Rwandan refugees fled into the countryside to avoid expulsion from Zaire, threatening a humanitarian disaster of epidemics and hunger, a United Nations spokesman said.

100,000-plus Rwandans flee camps

Assistance 'impossible'

GOMA, Zaire (AP) — Terrified by Zairian soldiers trying to force them back to their hostile homelands, more than 133,000 refugees from Rwanda and Burundi have bolted from refugee camps into the countryside, carrying scant food and water and raising fears of new epidemics and mass starvation.

"Getting any assistance to them is going to be impossible, and we don't know how long they can last out there in those conditions," Ron Redmond, a spokesman for the U.N. refugee agency in Geneva, said Wednesday.

The Clinton administration demanded an immediate end to the expulsions. But Zaire — which had warned the United Nations of the expulsions — said it would continue to force the refugees back across the border, despite warnings of an epidemic similar to that which killed 50,000 refugees in Goma last year.

Officials in Zaire have complained the 1.8 million refugees on its soil — more than any other country — have disrupted normal life in border areas and caused considerable environmental damage.

Zaire also decided to expel the refugees because it felt they posed a major security risk after the United Nations lifted an arms embargo against Rwanda last week.

The prime minister of Zaire, Kengo Wa Dondo, gave that explanation in a Aug. 17 letter to U.N. Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali. The letter, which warned of the coming expulsions, was released Wednesday by the United Nations.

Zaire apparently feared that battles between the Tutsi-led Rwandan government and Hutu extremists in the refugee camps would take place on its side of the border.

Almost all the refugees in eastern Zaire are Hutus from Rwanda and Burundi, two small Central African countries with similar ethnic makeups — and ethnic strife.

Nearly 2 million Hutus fled Rwanda in July 1994 when Tutsi-led rebels seized power. Hutu-led militias had killed an estimated 500,000 people, mostly minority Tutsis, in the preceding months and the refugees feared retaliation.

Rwanda's Tutsi-led government had demanded an end to the arms embargo, claiming that Hutu militias in the camps were rearming to attack Rwanda.

Burundian Hutus, who have long been dominated by their country's Tutsi minority, fled after the country's first Hutu president was killed in a failed 1993 coup, sparking ethnic violence that killed more than 100,000.

In Washington, the State Department called for an immediate halt to the expulsions.

START ME UP

Microsoft's Windows 95 launches today

SEATTLE (AP) — It took four years to create, was bitten by lots of bugs and subjected to a Justice Department investigation.

And so Microsoft Corp. wanted to make sure people knew that Windows 95 went on sale today. Really, really sure.

No product has ever received the build-up given to the company's new software for running a personal computer, a device that's not even found in most homes.

Microsoft already had marketers amazed by its plans for a prime-time TV special, newspaper inserts and carnival and satellite broadcast with Jay Leno from its suburban Seattle headquarters. It even got the Rolling Stones to license the song

"Start Me Up" for a TV spot.

And then Wednesday, the company revealed it would pay to light the Empire State Building in Windows 95 colors and buy out the press run of today's Times of London to pass out free with a Windows 95 insert.

"I think this is unprecedented in breadth and scope," said Rick Sherlund, technology industry analyst at Goldman Sachs. "It's become a media extravaganza."

Windows 95 information also will be splashed across the Internet and on commercial on-line services, including its own Microsoft Network slated to go into operation today.

Microsoft said it was spending about $200 million this fiscal year on advertising, mostly for Windows 95, the on-line service and Windows 95 products. Advertising for Windows 95 products by other companies will total hundreds of millions more.

When the hype is over, buyers will be left with a program that does a lot more than the current version of Windows but is not much different from products by IBM and Apple Computer Inc.

But since Windows is the foundation program for eight out of 10 computers, the advance affects many more people. The current version of Windows has been loaded on more than 100 million PCs.

The right to decide

The fight over "animal rights" — one of the more explosive moral battles around — is once again visiting our campus.

Concerned Arizonans for Animal Rights and Ethics is distributing pamphlets across campus — brochures which inform students that they have the right to not participate in animal experimentation, if they find it to be morally objectionable.

This is something that not all students know and something they have a right to be told.

The group is further requesting that the University put this policy in writing. Their suggested policy would require instructors to inform students at the beginning of the semester that animals will be used in the class, and for what purpose.

Further, the suggested policy would guarantee students the right to abstain from experimentation, if they found such behavior morally wrong.

Thirdly, the policy would require instructors to provide lab work of equal educational value to these "moral objectors."

These requests are sound ones. We can see no reason why they should not be implemented.

Currently, the Institutional Animal Care and Use Committee sends letters to instructors recommending that these steps be taken. But they are not required because of concerns that such a requirement would infringe on academic freedom — the right of professors to teach classes as they see fit.

However, it should be argued that students are equally protected under the right of academic freedom — and because of that right, they cannot and should not be forced to participate in activities that they believe to be inherently wrong.

Why not treat it like military conscription?

Military service is seen as a necessity in times of war. As citizens, we realize that at times we may be required to be called to military duty, no matter how distasteful that outcome may seem.

There are very few people that actually want to go to war, that want to go into battle, to kill or be killed. But fear or disgust isn't enough to save you from that duty.

However, moral objection is. If you believe, deep inside, that killing is always wrong, even if done in service of one's country, then you will be deferred from duty.

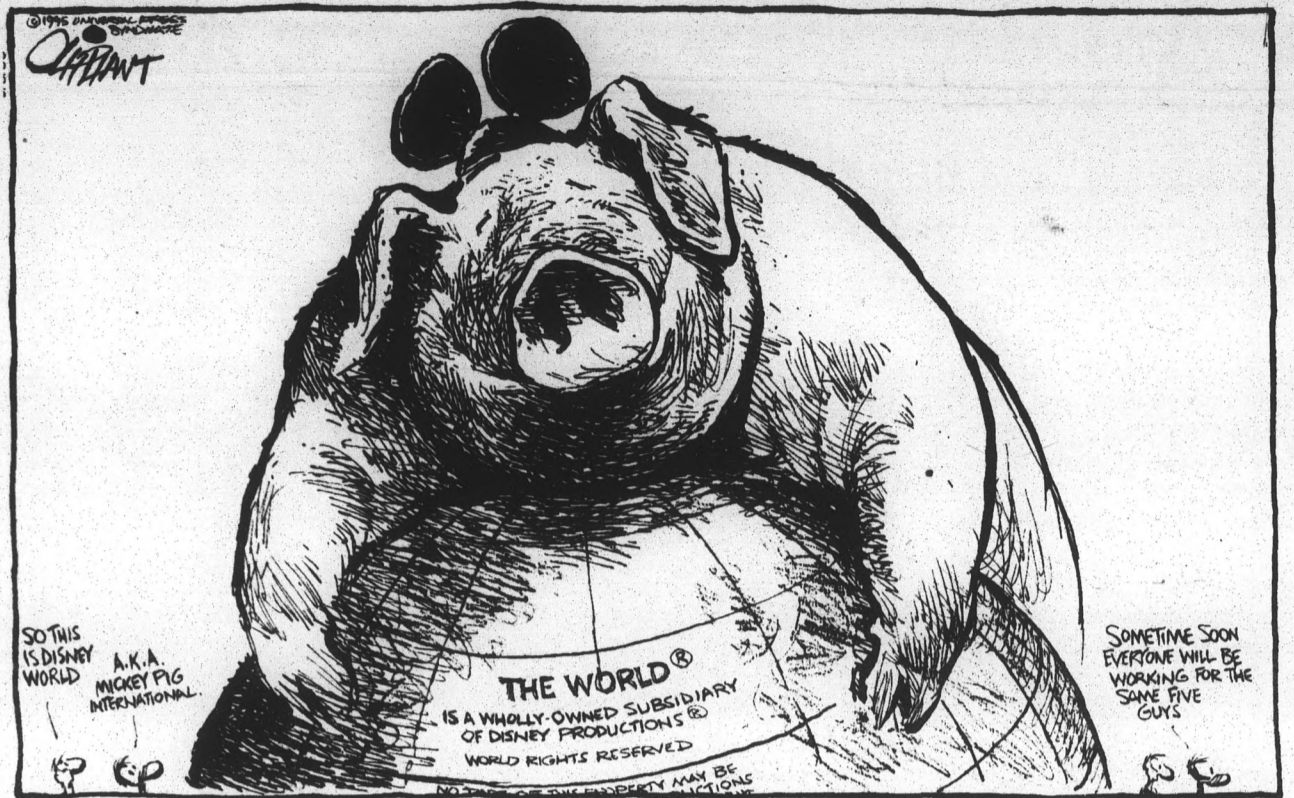

Likewise, mere disgust with dissection should not be enough to save a student from the lab. Most students, admit it or not, are at least slightly repelled by dissection the first time.

But unless a belief in animal rights is deep-seated — unless you really believe that it is a violation of a sentient creature's rights — you should not be deferred. Disgusting or not, dissection is a vital component of biology education.

To prevent abuse of this policy, it might be helpful to institute a procedure similar to that used by draft boards. Immediately after learning about the dissection portion of the class, students will be given one week to turn in a letter addressed to their professor — a letter outlining their reasons for objecting to the practice. If their beliefs are sincere — and the professor should be given the right to further question the student about these beliefs — then the student should be granted the request.

A written policy is not an unreasonable request. It will save a lot of trouble and confusion for everyone.

Let's get this policy on the books.

A fight for equal, not special, rights

Last fall two ASU students were leaving a local bar late in the evening when they were attacked by a band of thugs. The attackers chased one student behind the bar and repeatedly punched and kicked him in the head and chest.

The student was lucky enough to survive the pummeling. And while the cuts, bruises, strained jaw and hairline fractures of the skull and jaw eventually healed, the memory of that night will live with him forever.

The reason for the attack? The students were gay. But wait, there's more.

On July 26, Echo magazine, a 6-year-old news and entertainment publication for the gay and lesbian community, was left dealing with more than the usual telephone threats when a suspicious fire broke out in the building.

On Aug. 7, an amateur arsonist poured gasoline along the back exterior walls of Phoenix's largest gay dance club and tried to burn it down.

It leaves one to wonder whether these are just random acts of violence, or a growing trend of intolerance.

So far this year Phoenix police have recorded 19 hate crimes, 15 of which were armed robbery, aggravated assault or assault. In 1994, police departments statewide reported 26 such crimes.

Not all hate crimes are against gays. People have also been beaten and harassed because of their race, ethnic group, nationality or religion.

But gays are less likely than members of other targeted groups to report hate crimes, said Robert Bray of the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force Policy Institute in Washington, D.C.

"We risk losing our jobs, we risk getting evicted from our apartments, we risk losing our children if we reveal our sexual orientation," Bray said.

Gay harassment and violence has increased 31 percent in five major U.S. cities since last year, according to the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force Policy Institute.

Drive-by slurs and egg-tossings have given way with more frequency to nail-studded baseball bats and switchblades.

Gays have long been dismissed as deviant, perverted, or simply beneath mention. But in recent years the gay movement has been on an upswing. Gays are working in the White House and on Capitol Hill. Even Disney World has opened its heart and cash register to the gay community.

So why are so many heterosexuals ready to criticize or fight at the mere mention of a gay friend, neighbor or co-worker? It may be because the movement to give gays and lesbians equal rights is seen by many as a call for "special" rights.

But without this special right of equality, gays and lesbians will never be able to live "normal" lives. We've inadvertently embarked on a new category of being that we can term "virtually normal." This category falls somewhere between sexual deviants and traditionally normal, depending on who you ask.

Most gays live these virtually normal lives without even knowing it. At work, it's usually about 80 percent normal. Interaction with coworkers can involve work-related topics, friends and family.

But when it comes to discussing husbands, wives, girlfriends or boyfriends, gays and lesbians have to draw the line. Lovers suddenly become roommates or best friends.

This is a huge portion of a normal life. "Virtually normal" is simply another label given to a group who would rather not have any label at all.

For those of us who are "virtually normal," the future is unclear. But one thing is certain. Our civil rights are just as inherent in the Constitution as anyone else's. These rights are not "special." They are not any different from the rights granted to you when were born.

They are simply equal.

Animal-rights tales are a hoot and a howl

Someone recently sent me a copy of a publication called the American Family Association Journal. It contained one of the most unbelievable stories I have ever read. See if you agree:

"Jake Landon, a 42-year-old mechanic, is facing multiple counts of aggravated cruelty to animals as a result of his 21-day fight for survival when lost in the Adirondack Mountains in upstate New York.

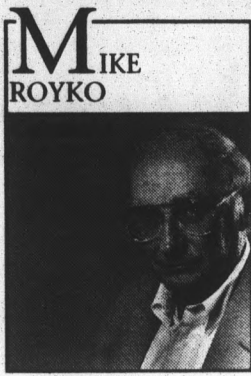

"Last April, Landon's pickup skidded on a muddy road and slid into a ravine, where he lay unconscious for possibly two days. He apparently struck his head on the windshield and awoke with no recollection of who and where he was. Dragging a severely injured right foot, he wandered about for the next three weeks, huddling at night in shelters made of pine boughs, surviving on fish caught with a pointed stick and squirrels he trapped then killed with the stick.

"On the 21st day of his ordeal, Landon stumbled into a road, where he collapsed. Two men, now thought to be escapees from a prison, indicated the direction of the nearest settlement. Landon finally reached civilization.

Landon's highly publicized story caught the attention of Humans for the Sensitive Treatment of Animals. The animal-rights advocacy group pressed the State of New York to bring charges of extreme cruelty to animals with special circumstances against him, specifying the known deaths of at least 10 squirrels and indeterminate number of fish.

"Each count of the Class A felony carries a mandatory sentence of 9 years without parole.

"One argument the state is expected to raise is that the number of animals Landon killed was unnecessarily large, owing to the fact that by moving about he elevated his caloric requirements. Had he conserved his energy and waited for rescuers to find him, he would not have needed more than one small fish and a few berries each day.

"Landon also faces a third-degree charge of failure to wear a seat belt and 21 federal charges of setting fires at unapproved sites on state lands."

At the bottom was a line saying the story was reprinted from the Center for the Study of Popular Culture.

Are you shocked? Many people were when they read the story.

Angry citizens phoned New York's state environmental agency to protest the persecution of poor Mr. Landon. Reporters called, asking where they could find Landon to interview him about his bizarre wilderness experience.

It was debated on radio talk shows. Even Rush Limbaugh mentioned it.

Which tells us something about how little confidence many Americans have in governmental agencies.

They'll believe anything is possible, including this wacky story.

Yes, as many of you surely recognized, it was a hoax.

Sounding a bit sheepish, Rusty Benson, associate editor of the American Family Association Journal, said: "The story originated in a newsletter called Heterodoxy. Someone sent us a copy. It was satire, but nothing on the page indicated that it was satire.

"Sadly enough, we didn't check it out. We got caught on that one."

Bruce Donaldson of Heterodoxy, a monthly newsletter published by the Center for the Study of Popular Culture in Los Angeles, said:

"That's from our back page, which is always satirical. The satirical page is to show how crazy this world can get. There are no disclaimers. The regular readers of Heterodoxy know they are satirical pieces."

"We did a thing about an airport shutting down because there were too many seagulls on the runway and the animal-rights groups wouldn't let them get rid of the birds.

"We did another about a girl who couldn't go topless to her senior prom.

"We write about silly things, but they are so plausible that some people believe them.

"The Jake Landon squirrel-eating thing, Rush Limbaugh talked about it. He made a comment that it was probably out of a liberal rag. But it turns out we're a very conservative publication."

And at the New York Department of Environmental Conservatism, a spokesman said: "Yes, we had a lot of calls from regular people and from reporters who wanted to know how the case turned out.

"But the whole thing was ridiculous. If someone walked out of the woods after 21 days of being lost and eating squirrels, we wouldn't bring charges against him.

"How can people believe something like that?"

How? Maybe I can explain how.

Recently, a story went around about an artist in Downstate Illinois who makes Indian headdresses. She used feathers she found on the ground, including an eagle feather she picked up at a zoo.

One of the headdresses was used as a gift to Hillary Rodham Clinton. Federal wildlife officials heard about it.

Hillary's gift headdress was confiscated. And the woman who made it landed in federal court, where she was convicted of violating the laws against possession of protected bird parts.

That's right. If you pick up a feather in a zoo or in your own back yard, you can end up as a convicted felon.

And this isn't a hoax.

So don't take any chances. Never eat squirrels.

Education continues to take a back seat to business

I am writing in response to the parking disaster in Lot 59. Last semester I waited in anticipation to find out what ramifications would arise as a result of having the Super Bowl here next January. I expected a minor inconvenience of about three days, yet now I must face the complications that will arise for a period of not three days, but rather three weeks. I expected the interim to be primarily hassle-free.

Boy, was I wrong!

Not only did the parking administration close down sections of Lot 59 for reconstruction, now they have made it a nightmare.

You will no longer be able to arrive 20 minutes before your class begins to find a descent parking spot. Case in point — I arrived an hour early for my morning class, only for the privilege of being able to park directly across from Packard Stadium.

The problem arises due to the increasing number of students enrolling, and the lack of the administration to allocate any additional money for parking close to campus. Each year students continue to pay increasing tuition costs, yet their service and comfort level have continually decreased.

The administration's solution to the parking disaster was the Flash. As most of you are already aware, it is extremely difficult to find seating during peak hours, not to mention having to arrive early enough to be able to miss the first Flash in case there are not enough seats available. The underlying message that I receive is that students are a low priority to the administration once tuition has been collected. You become another statistic they must try to find loopholes around.

To exacerbate my feelings of despair, I watched a news program that featured the parking problems that A.S.U. students will encounter when the Super Bowl party begins. Approximately 3,500 students will find their parking spots displaced to another location approximately a mile from their school so that tourists, who will undoubtedly be spending lots of money, can avoid a commute.

If students were a priority, their parking spots would be available still, and the tourists would park a mile from the school and commute. Once again, business takes precedence over education.

Linda Riegel, assistant director of purchasing, stated that: "Alternate parking will be provided at no additional cost."

Apparently she cannot see the costs the students will incur. To be specific, there's the cost of time involved to drive to the alternate parking spot, the time involved in the commute, the extra mileage put on the students' automobiles and the cost of what message the administration is sending when business comes before education.

The students are incurring additional costs. Although the increase in business will be economically positive, the negative impact it will create detracts from the benefits. Furthermore, it serves to illustrate that when push comes to shove, education continues to take a backburner to business.

Windows

Computer makers, software writers, distributors, retailers and the people who invest in them have all been eager for Windows 95.

It has a relatively small price tag, about $100. But buyers are likely to spend several hundred dollars more to accommodate it by adding memory, upgrading their main processing chip or buying new, compatible software.

Some people may wait to buy a new computer or for applications programs, like word processors and spreadsheets, to be improved for Windows 95.

Many companies are also expected to wait and see if any problems turn up before going to the expense of converting. Analyst Sherlund notes the product has received generally favorable reviews and been widely tested.

OCSS put on hold during hunt for new leader

By TIMOTHY TAIT
STATE PRESS

The administrative merry-go-round at the ASU Off-Campus Student Services office ground to a halt last week after the search for a new director came up short.

VAN BEMMEL

The OCSS is not open this week, but former Director Kim Demarchi said she did not feel that many students will be adversely affected.

"The service is most important during the summer when people are migrating to ASU and need a place to live," she said.

However, Andrea Van Bommel, Associated Students of ASU campus affairs vice president, said the services provided by the OCSS are widely used and will be missed.

"We have a lot of people that depend on the vacancy lists — people that come from around the world," she said.

The service's head position was left vacant after Demarchi resigned Aug. 19. She said she took the job as a favor to former Campus Affairs Vice President Eddie Lopez with the understanding that it was only temporary. Lopez also resigned this summer.

"I am no longer working there because I want to graduate," Demarchi said.

Van Bommel said she chose a replacement before Demarchi's resignation. However, that applicant, as well as Van Bommel's second choice, both turned down the job after receiving better offers, she said.

"We have received several applications for assistant director, but only one or two for director," she said. "I need to get someone in here, quick."

Van Bommel will be "taking care of things during the interim," she said, adding that she hopes to have the new director in place Monday.

Demarchi said she will remain with the OCSS to train the new director.

The department acts as a referral service for other campus organizations. It also produces the annual Guide to Off-Campus Living as well as an apartment vacancy list, child care and car pooling information. In addition, the OCSS sponsors a Commuter Expo, slated for Sept. 5 and 6.

Although no longer the director, Demarchi said she would like to see the OCSS expand its services.

"OCSS has the potential to do more than locate apartments. There are issues that can be taken up," she said.

ASU's Department of Public Safety will open an outreach office in Tempe Center. It will be their third station.

ASUPD plans new outreach office

BY GREG ZEMEIDA
STATE PRESS

Kathy Bracamonte just experienced every store manager's worst nightmare.

Standing alone one night in front of the First Interstate ATM machine in the Tempe Center, Bracamonte went to deposit receipts — and the bag got stuck in the deposit slot. She struggled for an hour to get the bag into the machine, constantly in fear of being robbed.

Bracamonte, the Radio Shack manager in the plaza, said her mind will rest a bit easier now that ASU police plan to open a community outreach station there.

"I get scared every time I go to the bank," she said. "We need it."

The station, scheduled to open early next month, will have one officer and two police aides working out of it. Located at the northern end of the shopping center next to Staples, the station will provide security services for the plaza and the west part of campus.

ASU Chief of Police Lanny Standridge said the station will be opened in part because of the high crime rates in the area. Because of the center's proximity to Mill Avenue, the dozen or so stores in the center get more than their fair share of shoplifters, trespassers and gang bangers, he said. Just Monday, a Chili's employee was robbed at gunpoint while leaving work.

"If we have a visible presence, that would logically deter crime," he said. "The closer we are to the scene, the quicker our response can be."

The station is the third on ASU's campus. The other two are in the Memorial Union and the Manzanita Hall lobby.

"It's our way of reaching out into the community to be a part of it," Standridge said.

Unlike the other two stations on campus that are state funded, business owners in the plaza will cover the construction costs and officer's salaries through lease payments they pay to the University.

ASU officer Charles Loftus, who is assigned to the new station, said he has been working in the area since January. He said the center's biggest problem was transients, but that it has been virtually eliminated over the past several months.

With the new station, Loftus said he will be able to continue to provide personal, hands-on service to customers and business employees in the area.

Employees at Tempe Center businesses said they were glad ASU police have been watching the area more closely and hope the station further reduces crime.

"What they have been doing so far ... has been excellent. We are really pleased with it," said Bruce Hochhalter, an assistant manager at Stabler's Market.

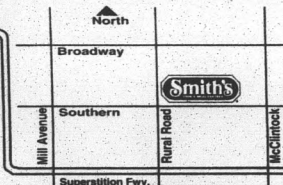

Hochhalter added that the station should cut down on the number of robberies in the area, but probably won't have much affect on shoplifters.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST by Sydney Omarr

Thursday, August 24, 1995

Color Red: Red is an Aquarian show business veteran. His routines are hilarious, mingled with touches of sadness. He is actor, comedian, writer — in some of his roles people cry and laugh almost simultaneously. He is Red Buttons — characteristic of Aquarius in that he is unorthodox and unpredictable, to say the least. Other Aquarians you might know: Carol Channing, Raymond Chandler, Babe Ruth, Jules Verne, Clint Black, Edgar Bergen, Lana Turner.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): At last! Moon in Leo represents freedom for you, invitation to romance, emphasis on style, physical attraction, sex appeal. Expand horizons, advertise, publish, sing your own praises.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Don't equate delay with defeat. You're merely coming up for air! You'll get solid backing, property value makes you happy. Repair work, coat of paint, elevates worth of possessions.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Obtain hint from Aries message. Don't scatter forces, move directly toward goal. Leo relative is sincere, but could be sincerely misinformed. Virgo and another Gemini figure prominently.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): What appeared to be loss will boomerang in your favor. Spotlight on financial stability, profit, revival of project previously thought dead and buried. Libra figures prominently.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Go for it! Emphasis on special appearances, mystery, intrigue, television production. Cycle high, what previously eluded you becomes available. Aim publicity at promoting image of mystic.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Key is organization, preparation, research. Clandestine arrangement works in your favor despite initial misgivings. Let others know you are "real" but reasonable. Cancer native involved.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Fame and fortune not as far away as originally anticipated. You're going places — obstacles removed, you'll have special clearance. Wishes come true in fantastic manner. Money, love!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Answer: affirmative, time to make new life. Leo native helps with showmanship, advertising, introduction to creative, talented people. Love will not be a stranger, you'll be fit, ambitious.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Travel blends with romance, don't rule out possibility of honeymoon! Long-distance correspondence fits into plans. You'll say, "Finally things are going my way!" Capricorn involved.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Study Sagittarius message. Roadblock removed, chart your own tour, you'll regain sense of direction, motivation. Individual from foreign land talks about economics, your financial future.

'Versatile' team heads for Pac-10 season

BY DAWN J. WAGNER
STATE PRESS

With little more than two weeks until the ASU volleyball team's first regular season tournament, the lack of a starting setter has left two Sun Devils battling for the top spot.

Junior Tracy Heflin and freshman Jolynn Faatulu are both waiting to hear who will get the starting position.

"Jolynn has the potential to be one of the top three or four setters in the country, but Tracy knows the hitters and she knows the offense," ASU volleyball coach Patti Snyder-Park said. "It's going to be a day-to-day thing. We'd like to clear a starter by next week."

Snyder-Park said both are competent setters, each excelling in a different area.

"Tracy came in with such great confidence and in great condition," Snyder-Park said. "but if it's all even, the height advantage would go to Jolynn."

Snyder-Park added that height is crucial for the Sun Devils to compete well.

"You get worked in the Pac-10," Snyder-Park said. "The hitters are so big. If they can block at 10 feet and you can only block at 9-foot-2, there's a problem."

Heflin, who is two inches shorter than Faatulu, said she has to fight every day to make up for the height disadvantage.

"You have to make it up with speed," Heflin said. "The taller girls can give 50-percent effort and still block shots that would go right by me."

Even without a definitive starting setter, Faatulu said the team is physically prepared for the start of the season.

"We've become really strong this year both defensively and offensively," Faatulu said. "As long as we can do what we need to, we'll have a good season."

However, the team is still feeling the effects of two summer mishaps.

Senior outside hitter Christine Garner was involved in a car accident earlier this summer, landing her in the hospital with multiple bruises and stitches, while senior middle blocker Annette Monsen fractured her wrist after falling down a flight of stairs.

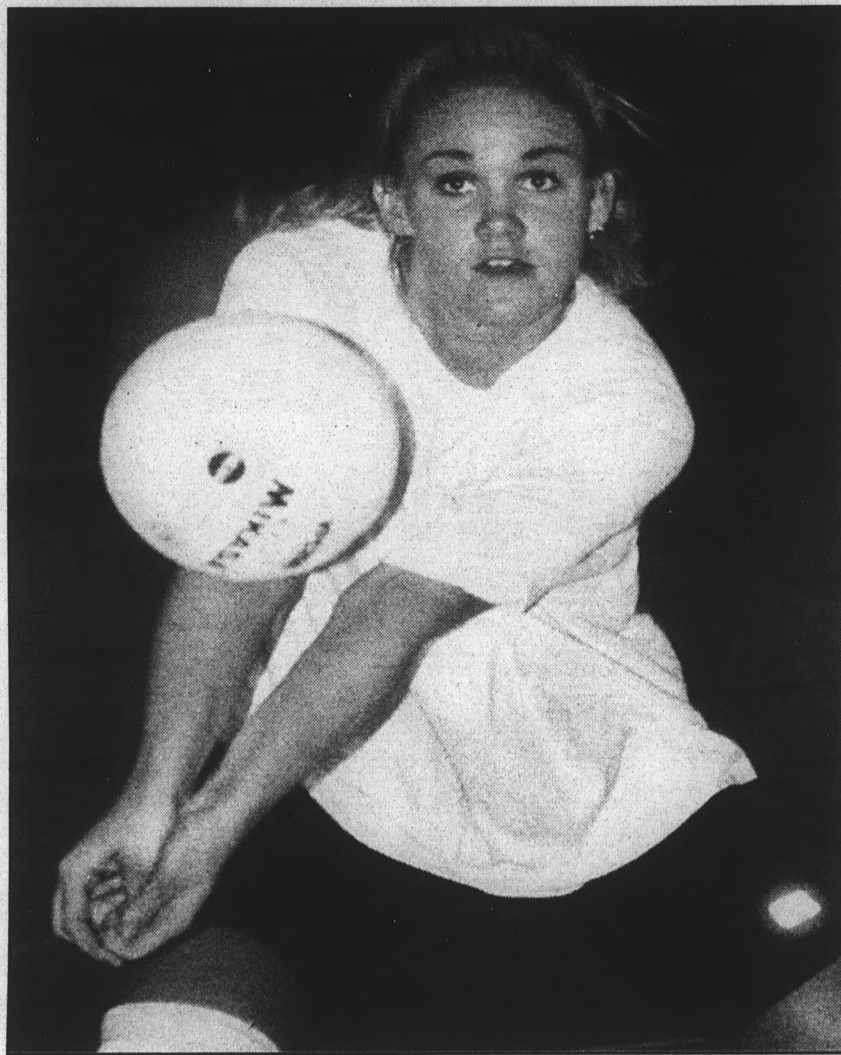

Garner and Monsen, who is still in a cast, are both practicing full-time with the team.

The Sun Devils used two-a-day practices to get ready for the regular season, adding to their depth, senior captain Holly Sones said.

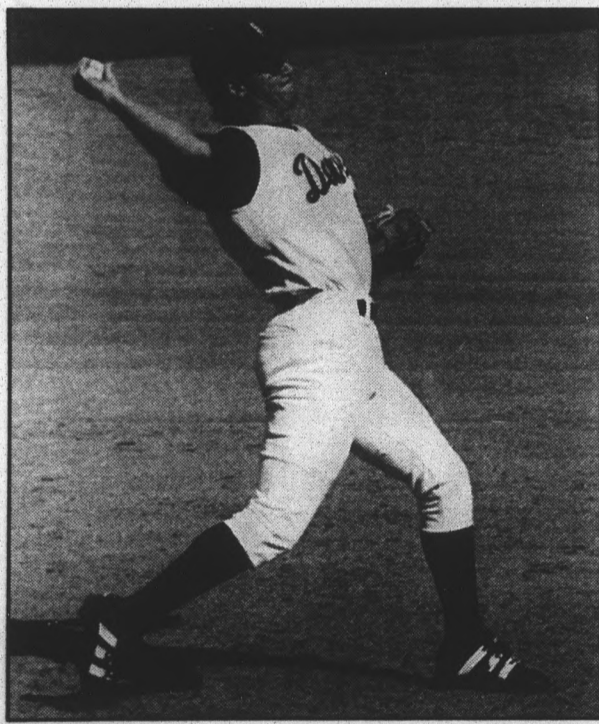

"Our versatility is our strong point by far," Sones said. "We have the versatility to play different positions and we have a defensively strong team."

Snyder-Park said the team hopes to compete at a level comparable to powerhouses Stanford and Nebraska this season. However, lack of experience may pose a problem.

"We're young," she said. "We have experience physically and mentally, but if we're four strong, they're six strong. They have outstanding middle teams and you live and die by your power in the middle."

ASU freshman outside hitter Mindi Larsen executes a dig during a workout Wednesday. The women's volleyball team will try to parlay a blend of youth and experience into a run at the Pac-10 title.

ASU's Cody McKay, who opted not to go to the major leagues, will be playing his third different position for the Sun Devil baseball team next season.

Sun Devil is jack of three trades

BY DUSTIN KRUGEL
STATE PRESS

Cody McKay can't ever seem to stay in one place—except when it comes to playing baseball for ASU.

McKay, a two-year starter, turned down an opportunity to play professional ball and instead opted for the Sun Devils again. Now ASU Coach Pat Murphy has projected him as this season's starting catcher, which would be his third different position during his ASU career.

McKay was drafted by the St. Louis Cardinals in the fifth round of the June amateur baseball draft.

"That's good for anybody," he said.

After contemplating whether to sign, McKay decided he could better hone his new catching skills for pro scouts by returning to ASU.

"He wanted to stay here so he could develop even more and show himself to pro people as a catcher," Murphy said of McKay, who will be eligible again for next year's draft.

"Next year if they (St. Louis) draft me I will sign," said McKay, who led the Canadian National team in RBIs, runs scored and hits over the summer. "They pretty much did everything they could to sign me. If this was any other school, I would have signed. This is the best place I can learn and play catcher."

McKay, who redshirted in 1994, played shortstop as a freshman in 1993 and third base in 1995. Murphy said McKay's move to catcher will fit nicely.

"We think he can help our team the most there and we think that's his position in the future," he said. "I used to kid him before games whenever he'd squat down anytime before a game, I'd say, 'Hey don't squat down there, you might stay there.'"

Murphy also sees the makeup of a quality catcher in McKay.

"He's got great hands and good throwing strokes. He's got a great sense for the game," Murphy said. "Most importantly, you have to be baseball smart. You handle the ball a lot. You're kind of like a quarterback out there."

McKay said being around his father, Dave McKay, a first-base coach for the Oakland Athletics and a former major leaguer, has definitely rubbed off him.

"It was the best," he said. "There's no possible way to compare it, especially from a learning experience."

Murphy said McKay will compete with freshman Greg Halvorson from Tucson's Canyon del Oro High and "anyone else who wants to step up and learn the trade."

Murphy expects to see a big improvement at the plate this year from McKay despite his position change.

"Cody will do a whole lot more this year," he said. "He's more confident and more comfortable."

Football teams plan to leave past behind

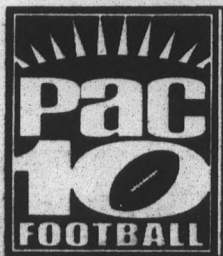

BY DAMIAN SHAW
STATE PRESS

This is the last in a series of Pac-10 football previews.

The players on Oregon State, Washington State, ASU and Stanford each hope that rebuilding years are a thing of the past as they brace for the upcoming Pac-10 season. Here is a look at the four teams as picked to finish in the West Coast media's preseason poll.

7. Oregon State

As the only team in the Pac-10 that runs the wishbone, the Beavers always demonstrate a challenge. Coach Jerry Pettibone brought the system over from Oklahoma but has yet to see success with it at Oregon State. Junior quarterback Don Shanklin provides a solid option system and can feel comfortable in handing the ball to seniors Cameron Reynolds or J.D. Stewart. Free safety Reggie Tongue needs one interception/return for a touchdown to set a new NCAA record.

8. Washington State

Chad Davis returns as the junior quarterback for the Cougars after compiling a record of 8-4 last year. Coach Mike Price has a target for him in receiver Jay Dumas but will need to fill the gap on both sides of the ball due to the loss of eight starters. On defense, senior Dwayne Sanders, who had five sacks and 26 tackles in a partial season last year, is touted as an All-America candidate.

9. ASU

The Sun Devils have all the ingredients of a team that will play a shoot-'em-out style with statistically the best returning passer in the Pac-10 in senior Jake (the Snake) Plummer. Plummer will have two big-play wide receivers on tap with juniors Keith Poole and Isaiah Mustafa, as well as 6-foot-8 preseason All-America junior Juan Roque defending his blind side.

Justin Drago, who was granted a sixth year of eligibility this year, should bring some leadership at the linebacker position, while senior right cornerback Marcus Soward heads a solid secondary.

"Of all the teams I've had at Arizona State I feel best about this one," ASU Coach Bruce Snyder said.

10. Stanford

New coach Tyrone Willingham has his hands full picking up the remnants of Bill Walsh's program. Senior offensive tackle Jeff Buckley will open holes for sophomore Anthony Bookman and junior Mike Mitchell at the running back position. Stanford will miss the Pac-10's best ever quarterback in Steve Stenstrom. The position will have to be filled by senior Mark Butterfield or junior Tim Carey.

Golfers anticipate another banner year

BY RON MATEJKO
STATE PRESS

Tee time is just around the corner on what looks to be another successful season for the ASU women's golf team. It is hard to imagine Coach Linda Vollstedt and her squad enjoying a season that could top the previous one, considering they finished the year undefeated and won their third consecutive NCAA championship, a feat which had never been accomplished until last year.

Vollstedt feels the pressure is off this year's crop of golfers and feels good about them despite a large number of freshmen on the team.

"We're going into this season with a lot of confidence and we're looking forward to a good year," Vollstedt said. "We're a young and new team but I think we're going to be a really good team."

Any hopes of a fourth title will depend on the one-two punch of seniors Linda Ericsson and Vinny Riviello. Both bring a vast amount of experience, especially Ericsson, who has been a part of the three championship teams.

Sophomore Kellee Booth, who was a first-team All American and Pac-10 all-conference player last year, hopes to have a repeat of her outstanding freshman campaign. Vollstedt considers her one of her best returning players and added, "she's going to be one of the best players in the country".

Booth's experience will be looked upon for guiding the many newcomers through this season.

"I can help them with the first semester because it's tough being away from home and then trying to balance golf with school. Hopefully they can come to me for a reference," Booth said.

The prized recruit on this year's team is Jody Niemann, who reminds Vollstedt of former ASU great Wendy Ward. Vollstedt said redshirt freshman Thuhashini "Tui" Selevaratnum is another golfer to watch for.

Vollstedt admitted this team might not be as dominating as last year's group, which won tournaments by an average of 26 strokes, but it will always be competitive and a fourth straight title is well within reach.

We need your HELP

Every weekday, we give you the State Press absolutely free. Great news. Great features. Even a magazine. Crosswords and horoscopes. Not to mention the huge savings from all the coupons.

We do this for you every day. Will you do something for us? Good! Thanks!

When the State Press has inserts, they tend to flop to the ground and create a safety hazard as well as an eyesore. Would you be so socially correct as to bend over and pick an insert that might slip out of your State Press? Thanks.

We appreciate your help. And so does the earth.
