No arrests so far in 4 recent ASU rapes

By GREG ZEMEIDA
STATE PRESS

Although three of the four female students who reported being raped last month identified their alleged attackers by name, ASU police have not arrested any of the suspects so far.

And they may not arrest them at all.

If police cannot gather enough physical evidence to determine probable cause in the incidents, they will not charge any of the suspects, said ASU Chief of Police Lanny Standridge.

One of the victims went to the hospital and called police shortly after being attacked, but the three others waited a day or more to report their rapes. Police were unable to get bodily fluid samples from those three and the delay made it harder for investigators to gather other physical evidence, Standridge said.

"(The delay) poses some additional difficulties," he said. "When we have good, strong, solid physical evidence, that goes a long way on making a strong case."

One of the suspects has come forward. A male student who allegedly raped a woman at Palo Verde West told police the victim had given her consent to have sex. Police are in the process of talking to the other two suspects which were identified by name to find out their side of the story, Standridge said.

If no arrests are made, the cases will be turned over to the Maricopa County Attorney's Office for review where officials will decide if there is cause for arrests and trials.

Standridge would not speculate on whether any arrests will be made, but said he hopes the cases will be wrapped up in

ASU hopes to break even hosting Super Bowl XXX

By CODY V. AYCOCK
STATE PRESS

Despite the $185 million Super Bowl XXX will bring into Arizona, ASU officials are just hoping the University will break even.

"If we get through (the Super Bowl) without losing money, that would be a pretty good thing," said Steve Miller, chairman of ASU's Super Bowl Host Committee.

ASU will earn more than $300,000 in rent from the NFL and a small revenue from the sale of ASU and Super Bowl XXX apparel, said Brent Brown, vice president of University relations.

Most of this money will be consumed by stadium, parking and other improvements, he added.

Although the University is not expected to profit from the Super Bowl, officials emphasized that Sun Devil Stadium and stadium parking will be upgraded. The lighting and sound systems at Sun Devil Stadium will be supplemented for the Jan. 28 game day, and a new 2,300-space parking lot will be built.

The University and the City of Tempe will both benefit from the new jointly-owned parking lot, Brown said.

"We will break even," he said. "We will not spend any normal University resources on the Super Bowl."

Milton Glick said the University is not hosting the Super Bowl to make money. Rather, he sees it as ASU doing a service

ASASU program to blow whistle on potential campus crimes

By TIMOTHY TAIT
STATE PRESS

Associated Students of ASU Executive Vice President Angelo DeSimone is bringing the Whistle Stop program to ASU in an effort to reduce crime on campus.

Whistle Stop, established by the University of Illinois in 1978, is a program designed to distribute whistles to students and staff who are on campus at night. Programs on rape prevention and self-defense are also planned.

"I can't take credit for the idea," DeSimone said, "but I can take credit for stealing it."

DeSimone brought the program to ASU as a way for the ASASU Senate to address the issue of campus safety. The goal of the program is "to fight physical and sexual assault and other crimes on campus."

ASU Chief of Police Lanny Standridge said programs like this are excellent for promoting safety on campus.

"Everything helps as long as we remember that they are supplements," he said. "But (a whistle) won't do any good if it is tucked away in a purse. When you need it, you need it then."

Standridge said the only danger with the Whistle Stop program is misuse of the whistles.

"They should be used only when needed," he said. "False alarms become no alarms."

Standridge said people should use the whistles as a supplement to other safety measures, rather than depending on them for protection. He advises students on campus at night to walk with others, use the Safety Escort Service and stay alert.

"If anyone ever feels threatened, they should not hesitate to call us," he said.

DeSimone said he purchased 1,000 whistles for this year, with the hopes of expanding the program in the future.

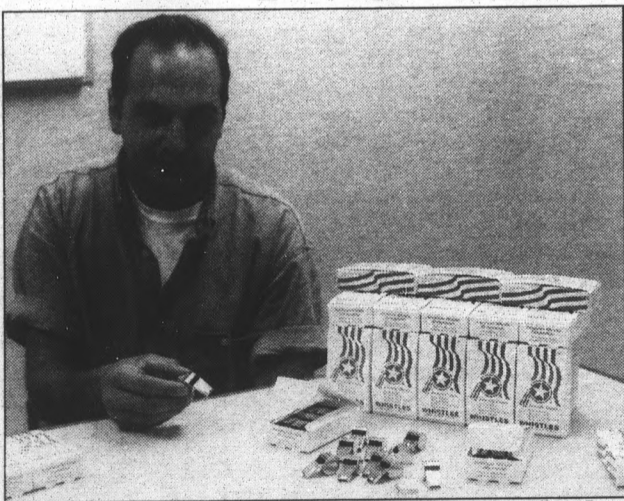

"It is hard to find someone to continue a program like this," DeSimone said. "This program should be passed on and become a legacy."

DeSimone hopes to budget $3,000 next year for the Whistle Stop program, which will cover the cost for about 2,000 of the "best whistles made."

"This is a good program," he said, "but ASASU funds are finite."

the near future.

"We will investigate the cases thoroughly," he said. All four female students reported being raped within one week in late September. One incident occurred at Manzanita Hall, one at Palo Verde West Hall, one at the Towers Apartments and one at an unidentified residence hall.

There have been seven reported rapes at ASU this year, the highest total since 1989, when 10 were reported.

ASU police are not releasing any of the incident reports or the names of the victims or suspects because the cases are still under investigation.

Although the victims delayed reporting their alleged rapes, Standridge said that is understandable.

"We realize the difficulty a rape victim will have with a situation like this," he said.

Standridge said he hopes future rape victims will not be afraid to report the incident to police. If police have a report, they may be able to make an arrest and help the victim put the crime behind her.

"Somehow a story has to end," Standridge said.

for Arizona.

"My view is we are doing this as a good citizen of Maricopa County and the state," he said.

Super Bowl XXX will bring exposure to ASU that can't be measured in dollars, Miller said.

"There are certain things you can't measure (monetarily)," he said. "There is a large TV worldwide viewing audience, and there has got to be a value associated with that exposure," Miller said.

More than 750 million people worldwide are expected to watch the game on television.

Glick said it would be "wonderful" if the University makes money, but he does not see a "pot of gold at the end of this one."

or those with night classes.

"They have the greatest need," DeSimone said. "But anyone who has a need should get one."

Along with distributing the whistles, speakers from the Center Against Sexual Abuse will give lectures regarding assault and rape prevention. DeSimone said he also wants to present self-defense workshops, focusing on "the ability to fight and get away."

Through the lectures, DeSimone said he hopes to standardize a definition on what constitutes acquaintance rape.

"I want to make sure that the definition is the same for males, females, staff, ASASU — everyone," he said.

DeSimone said a corporate sponsor would be ideal to expand the program in future years.

"I want to get the program off of the ground before I expand it," he said. "I want to turn it into something more."

An information meeting will be held at 1 p.m. this afternoon in the Memorial Union for the campus safety committee.

"I can start the program," DeSimone said. "But I need help to keep it going."

He added that the meeting is open to anyone who is interested.

"It is excellent that the community is galvanizing and working together to solve these problems," Standridge said. "It is our problem as a community."

Train saboteurs leave manifesto Wreck kills 1, injures 100; right-wing, anti-government extremists blamed

HYDER, Ariz. (AP) — Saboteurs calling themselves "Sons of Gestapo" pulled 29 spikes from a stretch of railroad track, sending an Amtrak train hurtling off a bridge into a dry stream bed Monday, authorities said. One person was killed and up to 100 were injured.

A note found outside the train in a remote expanse of desert referred to the federal sieges at Waco, Texas, and Ruby Ridge, Idaho — both rallying cries for right-wing, anti-government extremists.

"That's what leads me to believe this is a terrorist attack," said Maricopa County Sheriff Joe Arpaio. Asked who might be responsible, he said, "It leans toward the domestic side."

Amtrak's Sunset Limited, bound from Miami to Los Angeles with 248 passengers and 20 crew members, derailed while crossing a 30-foot-high bridge 50 to 60 miles southwest of Phoenix sometime after 1 a.m.

Four cars plunged from the bridge at 50 mph, with three coming to rest on their sides on the sandy bottom of the desert wash. Passengers, jolted awake, made their way through jumbled belongings and crawled out the windows.

"I heard babies screaming, and their mother was hollering each one of their names, one after the other," said Betty Addington, 60, of Dallas, who was traveling with her 80-year-old mother to visit a sister in Los Angeles.

One person was killed, 12 were seriously hurt and about 100 others suffered less serious injuries, said Sgt. Tim Campbell, a sheriff's spokesman. Some were treated at the scene and at least 67 were taken to Phoenix hospitals.

Amtrak put the total number of injured at 78. The railroad identified the dead man as Mitchell Bates, 41, a sleeping-car attendant based in Los Angeles.

"The last thing he said to me, before he went to bed last night, was 'See you tomorrow, baby doll,'" said Helen Martinez of Los Angeles, a waitress on the train.

Phoenix hospitals reported treating at least 40 people, including one woman who was listed in critical condition. Among the hospitalized were a 3-month-old boy and a 31-year-old woman who was on her honeymoon.

Deputies found a one- or two-page message signed "Sons of Gestapo" at the scene, the sheriff said. The note referred to the government sieges at Waco and Ruby Ridge, the FBI and the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms.

An electronic database search of U.S. newspapers big and small found no mention of a "Sons of Gestapo." A search of about six months' worth of Internet discussion groups and World Wide Web pages also found nothing.

The site — 27 miles east of this speck on the map of southwestern Arizona — is accessible only by air and by four-wheel-drive vehicle. It took an hour for the first rescuers to reach the victims.

Investigators from the FBI, National Transportation Safety Board and other federal and state agencies combed the scene.

The sheriff said the saboteurs somehow "separated" the rail and that a wire was attached to disable an electronic system that would have warned the crew of a break in the line.

Investigators found that in a 19-foot section of track, 29 of the spikes that hold the rail to the wooden cross-ties had been pulled out, according to a source who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Amtrak President Thomas M. Downs told a Washington news conference that someone removed a 36-inch steel bar weighing about 18 pounds that is used to connect two sections of rail. He said he hadn't heard about the spikes being removed.

"Someone obviously intended to drop the train off the trestle into the ravine," Downs said.

The bars are bolted to the rails and keep them from separating when trains pass over, Downs explained. He said the sabotage could have been done in about 10 minutes by someone with a rudimentary knowledge of railroading.

The last train to pass the spot was a freight that used the track

'I'm just hoping for the best'

Shocked relatives wait for information

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Hugh Stovall waited for his son to step off a train at Union Station Monday morning, but it never arrived.

The Amtrak train, carrying 268 people, derailed in the rugged Arizona desert 60 miles southwest of Phoenix, killing one person and injuring more than 100. Authorities blamed saboteurs who pulled spikes from the tracks.

About a dozen relatives were awaiting the 6:15 a.m. arrival when an electronic sign flashed that the train was "delayed."

"They were shocked," said Virginia Roman, who was working at the Amtrak service window. "We only had so much information to give them."

Amtrak officials told Stovall and others to go home and call a toll-free number set up for families trying to locate their loved ones.

About 10 hours after the accident,

Stovall received the call he was waiting for.

"He called me," Stovall said about his 43-year-old son, Hugh Jr. With a sigh of relief, Stovall added, "He's fine."

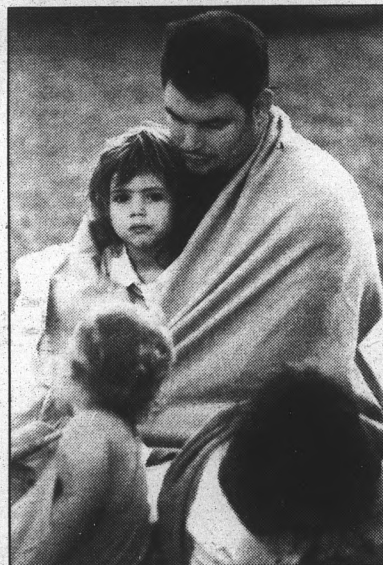

Also waiting for word was James Hall, who went to Union Station to pick up his mother traveling from Gulfport, Miss.

"She was coming in for an operation tomorrow," said Hall, tears streaming down his face. "I'm just hoping for the best, hoping she's all right."

Many of the unhurt passengers were taken to hotels in Phoenix, and Amtrak was setting up alternative transportation for them, said Steven Taubenkibel, a corporate spokesman for Amtrak.

Taubenkibel did not know when passengers would depart for Los Angeles.

"Whether it's by train, bus or plane, I haven't heard," he said.

A young unidentified girl sits under a blanket to keep warm in her father's lap as they await evacuation from the site of the Amtrak derailment.

6 hospitals treat patients

PHOENIX (AP) — At least six hospitals in the Phoenix metropolitan area took in patients after an Amtrak train carrying 268 people derailed early Monday.

One person was killed and more than 100 injured and treated either at the scene or in hospitals, according to the Maricopa County Sheriff's Office. The hospital reports:

- Good Samaritan Medical Center: Nine people brought in for treatment, three were discharged and six admitted.

- Maryvale Samaritan Medical Center: 13 people brought in for treatment, 10 were discharged.

- St. Joseph's Hospital: 14 people brought in for treatment, six discharged. Seven people admitted in conditions ranging from fair to serious, a 3-month-old boy listed in good condition.

- Maricopa Medical Center: 19 people brought in, all were treated and released.

- Phoenix Baptist Hospital and Medical Center: One woman patient was listed in serious condition.

- Luke Air Force Base Hospital: 11 people brought in for treatment, 10 were to be discharged by late Monday. One man was admitted and listed in serious condition.

Amtrak officials say people who want to find out if their relatives were aboard the Los Angeles-bound train that derailed in Arizona can call 800-523-9101.

Quake hits Mexico's Pacific coast; 59 die

MANZANILLO, Mexico (AP) — A powerful earthquake shook Mexico's Pacific coast Monday, toppling a seven-story hotel in a southern resort, cracking homes and bridges and killing at least 59 people, authorities said.

At least 90 people were reported injured. The 7.6-magnitude quake — felt as far north as Dallas and Oklahoma City, according to seismologists — was the second powerful tremor to hit Mexico in a month.

Forty-four people were killed in coastal communities in the Pacific state of Jalisco, state spokesman Jorge Alberto Salinas said by telephone Monday afternoon.

Thirty of them were killed in Cihuatlan, 11 in Melaque and three in La Huerta, he said. Fifteen others were reported killed in the neighboring state of Colima.

It struck at 9:37 a.m. and was centered three miles off the Pacific Coast between Colima and Jalisco states. The tremor lasted about two minutes and was followed by two small aftershocks.

Rescuers with bulldozers and cranes pulled 12 bodies and 10 injured people from the Costa Real hotel in the port and resort area of Manzanillo, the official news agency Notimex quoted civil protection officials as saying. Authorities feared the toll would rise.

"The rescue is going to be difficult," Navy Adm. Manuel Barron told the Mexican TV network Televisa. "Sounds have been heard. We think there are more people in the rubble."

At least 30 guests were registered at the hotel and 27 employees were working, Notimex said. It was not clear how many were in the building when the quake hit.

Reached by telephone, Manzanillo textile shop owner Livas de la Garza said the injured were being treated in makeshift outdoor clinics. He said he saw extensive damage.

"You can see houses destroyed. The injured are everywhere," he said.

The tremor cut telephone service and electricity to many areas, including the resort itself. Authorities canceled flights to Manzanillo, citing reports of damage to the runway.

A state of emergency was declared in the state of Jalisco, where homes and buildings crumbled. President Ernesto Zedillo sent five cabinet members to assess the damage and coordinate an emergency plan by the military.

"I regret this loss of human life," said Zedillo before flying as scheduled Washington on Monday afternoon for his first state visit. "We are doing all we can to provide aid and rescue services to possible victims."

STATE PRESS Editorial

End the violence

"If O.J. got away with it, so can I."

No matter what your opinion on the Simpson verdict, these words must surely send a chill down the spines of most Americans.

Domestic abusers see new reason to continue their perverted acts of violence against wives and girlfriends.

O.J. got away with it, they reason. So why shouldn't I?

These are dark times for opponents of the plague of domestic violence.

Ordinary men, seen by friends and co-workers as rational and calm, can suddenly transform into violent, irrational monsters once crossing the threshold of home.

We always hurt the ones we love — literally.

The 572,000 reported incidents of domestic battery in 1994 are scary enough.

Even more frightening is the fact that anywhere from 2 to 4 million more incidents of domestic violence occur each year — and go unreported.

Every 18 seconds, a woman is battered in the United States — and most of the time, she remains not only silent, but remains with the batterer.

"O.J. got away with it" isn't just encouragement for the abuser — it is seen as yet another reason for the one being abused to remain silent.

And, because the victim often stays in the relationship, the beatings and assaults continue again and again.

Sometimes, it takes a shocking incident — like the Simpson trial, or an event like Domestic Violence Awareness Month — to get us to wake up, stand up and put an end to the cycle of violence.

To women who suffer at the hands of spouses: leave.

Marriage is based on love and trust. By committing the act of violence against you, your husband is forfeiting on the marriage contract. Violent behavior is based on many emotions, but love isn't one of them.

If you leave, it is he that has voided the marriage contract — not you.

No matter the length of the marriage, no matter how many children you have or the financial obligations, there is no reason to suffer continuous violence at the hands of someone who claims to love you.

Actions speak louder than words.

There are places to run, people to turn to. Across the Valley are shelters for victims of domestic violence. Call one of them. Call a relative. Call the police. Call anyone.

But such advice doesn't apply solely to wives. Women suffer violence at the hands of boyfriends as well. Scenes of such violence are doubtlessly played out daily in the residence halls and apartment complexes ringing ASU.

No boyfriend is worth keeping if the price of his "love" is battery.

How can he really love you if he thinks the way to end an argument is hitting you?

Dump the slimeball. He's not worth your time or your love.

Beating on a loved one is the ultimate act of cowardice.

Leaving the setting of abuse is the ultimate act of strength.

Be strong.

Godless society still touched by Catholic Church

I was raised Catholic. There, I said it. I'm not ashamed of it, even though some people recoil from the word like it's a scorpion they found under their pillow.

I went to Catholic schools until I was 17. I lived in fear of nuns who told me I'd go to hell if I wore a bikini, and priests who insisted sex before marriage was immoral because we should treat our bodies like temples.

OK, things have changed since then, and not all Catholic leaders are so narrow-minded. And since I don't practice the faith I was born into anymore, I don't really think too much about the Roman Catholic Church's place in the world.

But the Pope's recent visit to the United States led me to reexamine the importance of this institution. Even though we live in what seems to be a Godless society, the Roman Catholic Church remains an undeniable force in the world. The thousands who flocked to the pontiff's appearances last week are proof of that.

In the latest issue of Time magazine, an article discusses what it defines as "the Catholic paradox." It seems that although many people still consider themselves a part of the Roman Catholic Church, few firmly believe in all of the church's doctrines, and many support changes to current ideology.

For example, 69 percent of the U.S. Catholics polled would allow divorced Catholics to marry in the church and 75 percent do not believe it is always wrong for unmarried people to engage in sexual activity.

These issues have one thing in common — they are based in the sexual morality the church teaches.

The fact that so many Catholics disagree with these traditional notions reflects a 90s mentality. It's almost laughable that a religion could still hold fast to the archaic ideas that two people must be married to have sex and that if a person makes a mistake in choosing a partner, his or her church would not recognize that person's right to a second chance.

On the other hand, promiscuous sex has alarming risks and the marriage bond has lost all sense of sacredness, resulting in divorces that disturb future generations of families.

I know some people who still believe staunchly in their faith and hold fast to these ideals. I respect them for that. I sometimes wish I had that much confidence in an ideology centered around an entity I'm not sure exists.

Still, it seems the Roman Catholic Church should shift some of its views to maintain integrity among its members.

Many so-called Catholics engage in pre-marital sex and get divorced, as well as support other church-condemned practices. For an institution to be true to its standards, the majority of its members should practice what it preaches!

Maybe the church has been right all along. It's survived this long, and it doesn't look like the institution is going to lose its momentum anytime soon. Even amid scandals of child-molesting priests, the church still continues to influence its parishioners worldwide.

Maybe we are all depraved and should actually be abiding by the sexual morality the church teaches.

But I don't think so.

Sure I agree with a certain moral code for behavior — to a degree. I don't think it's right to kill anyone, to steal from them or to degrade them in anyway.

But when it comes to sexual morality, I think the Roman Catholic Church should lighten up just a little bit.

There should be a middle ground. I'm not saying it's OK for everyone to engage in sexual behavior with whomever, wherever and whenever they choose. But sex, as in most things in life, is not a completely black and white issue.

Sex itself is not evil. There are many people in this country who use it in disgusting and degrading ways, but the act itself, when it is consensual between two mature people who aren't married, should not be deemed immoral.

And although divorce is never the easiest thing in the world for families, sometimes it may be necessary. I think the church should support people who have the courage to marry again after going through the trauma of a divorce (unless you're someone like, say, Liz Taylor).

Of course, I don't expect any of this to happen very soon. The church has been around for almost 2,000 years and they haven't changed their minds an awful lot yet.

But then again, I can always hope ... and pray.

Revisionists distort historical facts about A-bomb

In Steve Forsberg's column "A-bomb second guessed from start" in the Sept. 29 issue of the State Press, he attempts to make a case for the historical revisionists regarding the atomic bomb strikes of 50 years ago. He states "...that opposition to (and regret about) the bombings was present from the time they occurred, and that such views were fairly widely held." Therein lies the problem with revisionists — they distort the historical facts to make their case. There was no opposition (or regret) by any senior U.S. official when President Truman made the decision to use the bombs to terminate a terrible war. Nor was there any show of regret by any senior U.S. official at the time the bombs were dropped and Japan surrendered.

An important meeting to discuss alternatives to end the war in the Pacific was conducted on June 18, 1945, when Gen. George Marshall and other senior officers met with President Truman. Up until that time, many courses had been explored to terminate the war. Prominent among these was the plan to bomb the Japanese homeland into submission with conventional weapons. This tactic was tried, but without success. On the night of March 9, 1945, a force of B-29 aircraft (Superfortress) dropped 19,000 tons of incendiary bombs on the southern part of Tokyo. Sixteen square miles of the city was destroyed, killing 84,000 people. The attacks were stepped up in April, May and June as 65 cities were hit with 154,000 tons of incendiaries, killing 250,000 people and rendering 8 million homeless. The Americans dropped leaflets all over Japan indicating more bombing would follow unless Japan surrendered. But the only reaction from the ruling clique in Japan was one of defiance and increased resolve.

Another alternative was to persuade the Soviets to enter the war against Japan, creating such an impact that the Japanese leaders would see the futility of continuing hostilities. But the Soviets were being very coy about helping the Americans. They wanted to be in on the kill to get some of the fruits of victory, but only after the Americans were on the verge of success. Stalin stalled for time by making unreasonable demands for Soviet participation. (The Soviets finally declared war on Japan Aug. 9—three days after the Hiroshima bombing, and on the same day of the Nagasaki bombing.)

Other courses of action had been discussed including the possibility of a negotiated peace instead of the then-existing policy of "unconditional surrender." But this option was also discarded as unrealistic because the policy applied to Germany as well as Japan. At that fateful meeting of June 18, all of those present agreed that the options to terminate the war were reduced to two: drop the atomic bomb if its fabrication and test were successful or invade the Japanese homeland on Nov. 1, 1945.

President Truman asked his senior officers to give their estimates of U.S. casualties in an invasion operation. Marshall put the casualty estimate for the first 30 days at 31,000. He also reported that MacArthur's estimate for the same period was 50,800. But the figures that appalled the president were those for the total invasion. Gen. Marshall estimated 193,500 American casualties, including 40,000 dead, 150,000 wounded and 3,500 missing. Secretary of War Stimson projected the losses at about 1 million, and he made a plea to use the bomb if it became available before the Nov. 1 attack date. Adm. Leahy, Truman's chief of staff, estimated that the American losses would total 270,000.

The high casualty estimates had a certain validity for the president because he recalled the murderous Okinawa campaign, a relatively smaller one, that cost 12,000 American lives, and 36,000 wounded. He also took into consideration the new weapon that the Japanese had used—the suicide aircraft known as the "kamikaze." The toll on American ships had been great: 30 vessels sunk and 368 damaged, including 10 battleships and 13 aircraft carriers. The group which had gathered at that meeting knew that the fierce defense of Okinawa would pale in comparison to a fanatic defense of the Japanese homeland.

A month later, Truman learned of the successful detonation of a test atomic bomb. By this time, there was no doubt in his mind that he would use the weapon in an effort to save American lives. Later, when he received the report that two operational bombs had become available, he directed that they be employed against targets in Japan. He directed, also, that if the atomic bombs did not bring the war to a close, the attack on the mainland of Japan would start on the scheduled date, Nov. 1.

Forsberg quotes Stanford historian Barton Bernstein that Ambassador Grew, Gen. Dwight Eisenhower, Adm. "Bull" Halsey and Adm. Leahy thought that dropping the bomb was a mistake. This is an indication of the revisionist at work. Forsberg states that regret about the bombings was present from the time they occurred and that such views were widely held. But Grew, Eisenhower and Halsey were not at the decision meeting of June 18, nor were they ever consulted. These afterthoughts occurred much later when they wrote their memoirs, when it became politically correct to "regret" the atomic bombings. The regrets were not expressed at the time of the bombings.

As for Adm. Leahy, he was present at the June 18 meeting. The minutes of the meeting do not indicate that he opposed or regretted the president's decision. As for Gen. MacArthur, Forsberg quotes him out of context. I served as staff secretary to Gen. MacArthur in Japan, and heard his view on this subject several times. MacArthur, like many other senior military officers, believed that the unconditional surrender provision needlessly prolonged the war. Also, because of this firm declaration by the Allied leaders, it included Japan's emperor. However, given the fact that MacArthur could not change the policy of his superiors, he supported the president's decision to use the bombs because it stopped the slaughter in the Pacific.

I believe that the term "revisionist" is rightly a slur amongst historians in this case. These historians have twisted the facts on which President Truman made the fateful decision. The situation and the political climate of 50 years ago was different than it is now. The historians err by disregarding the hate and the passions that existed then.

Editor's note:

On Oct. 16, The Million Man March on Washington will take place. It has been hailed as a day of atonement for many men of color, a day to reunify, to register to vote and to let Congress know that people of color will not tolerate a rollback of the Civil Rights movement. The State Press wants to know how ASU students, faculty and staff feel about this issue. If you are a person of color, how have your life experiences shaped your perceptions about the state of this country and what kind of impact do you think this march can have? If you aren't a person of color, what does this march signify to you? How have your life experiences shaped your perceptions about the state of this country? The deadline for letters is 5 p.m. Thursday. If you want information on the march you can call 1-800-324-9243.

Lighten up, Hooters a hoot and a half for most

I am writing in reference to Liz Montalbano's Sept. 26 column "Hooters' girls sell sex, not lunch." Of course, I have to point out a couple of blatant errors in the article.

One, Hooters opened to the general public on Monday, not Tuesday.

Two, I believe the sign with the catchy logo you noticed, and assumed to be their sole effort to let you know they were open, was there at least a week before they opened.

I know this because I have a friend that is employed at Hooters, and as part of their training, they were allowed to have friends and family come in for dinner. I can't believe anyone has a problem with an owl's eyes! Have you ever taken a marketing class? Take a second look — sex sells. If you look hard enough you can claim sex is everywhere.

You are really showing your naiveté when you write, "I don't like being unnecessarily ogled. I don't like when I'm whistled at ..." Well, there is not a law against looking or even whistling. I have been known to "ogle" a guy myself occasionally — I'd whistle but I don't know how. Does that mean the guys should be offended, or flattered? If you don't want to be ogled or whistled at, try crawling under a rock and staying there, or joining a convent. By the way, did those whistles come from Hooters or are you trying to blame all of men's discourtesies on a restaurant?

Regarding the subject of scantily clad women permitting men to degrade the rest of us — what a crock! It is not any one woman's fault that a man feels he can degrade women, with the possible exception of the woman who raised him.

As to Hooters' girls getting a fatter tip than Denny's girls because of the difference in clothing — you must be kidding! I worked at Denny's for a while as a waitress on graveyard; I dealt with pretty much the same crowd as my friend at Hooters does. From what she tells me, I'd say the tips are not that different, given the waitress' personalities, of course. A good, friendly waitress can make a lot of money anywhere. However, at Hooters, unlike Denny's, there is a policy against customers touching the waitresses.

The statement: "But women can't fight sexual harassment if we place ourselves in compromising positions" is definitely not true. The way a woman dresses does not give her employers and co-workers the right to harass her. That is what sexual harassment is, isn't it? That's as bad as saying a woman deserves to get raped if she wears a short skirt or walks alone at night. This is the 90s — are women still supposed to take the blame for a man's actions?! And please, don't compare Hooters with Showgirls — there is no gang-rape occurring at Hooters.

If you don't like the location of the new Hooters, perhaps you could move down Mill Avenue a little, closer to Pink E's. Maybe their outfits will be more to your taste. By the way, have you even been in Hooters yet? I'd be glad to take you — maybe you would see that a lot of college students work very hard there and they could use some support instead of criticism. Besides, I've heard it's a great place to meet guys. Lighten up!!!

'Narrow-minded' views dangerous if kept unchecked

I would like to take this chance to respond to the views expressed in Delia Maldonado's article of Oct. 4, — views that she admittedly recognizes as narrow-minded. I appreciate that she is able to understand that they are narrow-minded, and I challenge her further by saying that they also represent a lack of good judgment. Nevertheless, these are her views, views that she is entitled to have, views that she can share.

What should frighten us, however, is not that these views exist, or even that she expressed them in such an open format; rather that she can take these views and vote with them, lest you think that she is the only one who holds these views as they are echoed on television, in the press and even in our representative government, both state and national.

If these views do not represent you or your beliefs (and I honestly hope that you are out there) I challenge you to go and vote. Furthermore, vote responsibly and critically. Please pay attention to what politicians are doing with our tax dollars and with our future. Don't allow this nation be lead by a group of people you don't agree with. Don't allow these sentiments become law. Rather than rushing to your computer feverishly (as I have done) take your energy and get involved and vote!

Ms. Maldonado is entitled to her opinion as are you. Please don't allow her opinion to be the only one that is heard.

knowledge of railroading.

The last train to pass the spot was a freight that used the track about 18 hours before the wreck, Downs said. He didn't know when the tracks were last inspected; ABC reported the last inspection was Thursday.

Derailing or wrecking a train involved in interstate commerce or its track or trestle is a federal felony, punishable by up to 20 years in prison. If death results from the crime, the death penalty can be imposed.

Klanwatch, an organization that tracks hate groups as part of the Southern Poverty Law Center in Montgomery, Ala., has never heard of "Sons of Gestapo," said Joe Roy, Klanwatch director.

He said it could be some kind of local group, or "this could be Fred the farmer who's mad at Amtrak for cutting across his land."

Roy said Arizona is a hotbed of anti-government paramilitary and white supremacist groups. Klanwatch counts about 20 groups in each category, he said.

Roberto Concepcion, an Amtrak bartender being treated in a Phoenix hospital, said a man he recognized as a passenger approached him after the wreck with a one-page typewritten document the passenger identified as an anti-government manifesto. The passenger described the paper as "anti-ATF, anti-FBI, anti-government" and said there were more copies lying around, according to Concepcion, who didn't read it before giving it to deputies.

It was not immediately known if the document was the same one that the sheriff's deputies found.

"I stood up on the train, looked at the horizon and saw all the people, sick, hurt, elderly, crying. What I saw was a sick mind," said Henry Ford, an Amtrak car attendant. "This was a very sick thing committed against mostly elderly people and we lost a crew member."

A "black box" recorder that tracks the train's speed, acceleration and other details was recovered. Investigators didn't immediately find any equipment problems with the train.

The most seriously injured were flown to Phoenix hospitals by helicopter. The rest were ferried to a triage site in the desert six miles from the wreck and treated or transferred to ambulances. A train was sent from Phoenix to bring back uninjured passengers and crew.

The train left Miami on Friday, but because of damage from Hurricane Opal, passengers were transferred to buses for the section of the journey from Jacksonville, Fla., to New Orleans. The regular route, about 3,000 miles, passes through Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, New Mexico and Arizona on the way to California.

Two years ago, an eastbound Sunset Limited train hurtled off a bridge into a bayou near Saraland, Ala., killing 47 people. It was the worst accident in Amtrak's quarter-century history. An investigation found that a barge lost in fog had struck the bridge shortly before the derailment, knocking the rails out of alignment.

Simpson agrees to NBC interview

LOS ANGELES (AP) — O.J. Simpson will give his first extensive interview since his acquittal to NBC, his former employer, for no pay and with no questions barred, the network said Monday.

Simpson will be interviewed live for about an hour on Wednesday by Tom Brokaw and Katie Couric on "Dateline NBC," said NBC News spokeswoman Beth Comstock.

Simpson's interview will air around 8 p.m., in the middle of a special three-hour broadcast, she said. Simpson spoke briefly by phone on CNN's "Larry King Live" last week.

A jury acquitted Simpson, 48, last week in the June 12, 1994, knife slayings of his ex-wife Nicole Brown Simpson and Ronald Goldman. Several jurors have come forward to say they believed the prosecution failed to prove its case beyond a reasonable doubt.

Meantime, sources told The Associated Press that Simpson's girlfriend, Paula Barbieri, has been at home in Florida and not off marrying Simpson in the Dominican Republic, as a newspaper in that country reported.

Domestic violence not ended with O.J. case

By KELLY WENDEL
STATE PRESS

The O.J. Simpson trial is only a fading memory, but more than 2 million women are still suffering the effects of domestic violence.

To shed light on the plight of these women, October has been designated "Domestic Violence Awareness Month." Rallies and ceremonies across the country will honor the victims of domestic violence.

"This trial has brought domestic violence from behind closed doors into unprecedented public scrutiny," said National Organization for Women Executive Vice President Kim Gandy. "Domestic violence has been discussed in living rooms, classrooms, bar rooms and board rooms across the country as never before."

Gandy said through this heightened awareness, "women may have the courage and public and judicial support to stop their abusers."

Although Simpson was found innocent of murdering his ex-wife Nicole Brown Simpson and her friend Ronald Goldman, Simpson admitted he had abused her in an earlier incident.

Despite this admission, Simpson was allowed to plea bargain an aggravated assault charge to a misdemeanor assault and was sentenced to community service, a $700 fine and an agreement to receive psychiatric counseling by telephone.

"This case has helped change the law and change our culture," said Gandy. "By putting violence against women in the national spotlight as never before, we have a new law (the Violence against Women Act) that may mean batterers will no longer be allowed to plea bargain for a puny sentence."

The Violence against Women Act, which passed last year, provides training programs for law enforcement, judicial and administrative court personnel and funding for battered women's shelters and services.

According to FBI statistics, a woman is battered every 18 seconds in the United States. Although 572,000 assaults are officially reported to federal officials each year, two to four million more assaults go unreported, according to most estimates.

Statistics provided by the American Medical Association reveal that domestic violence kills as many women every five years as the total number of Americans who died during the Vietnam War.

"I think the recent drama (the O.J. Simpson trial) we saw played out over the last nine months has brought the issue of domestic violence to the forefront," said Ann Timmer, a member of the Arizona National Organization for Women.

Timmer said society has become more aware of domestic violence over the last 20 years, but "still has a long way to go."

Your MONEY hasn't gone this far since you lived with your PARENTS.

Fold-down rear seats – means you can go places and take lots of stuff with ya

Your choice of a great-looking coupe (shown), sporty four-door sedan (not shown) or a hot, new convertible (hey, we told ya this was a cool car)

High-revving, 120-horsepower, fuel-injected engine (hey, this car's for driving, not just looking at)

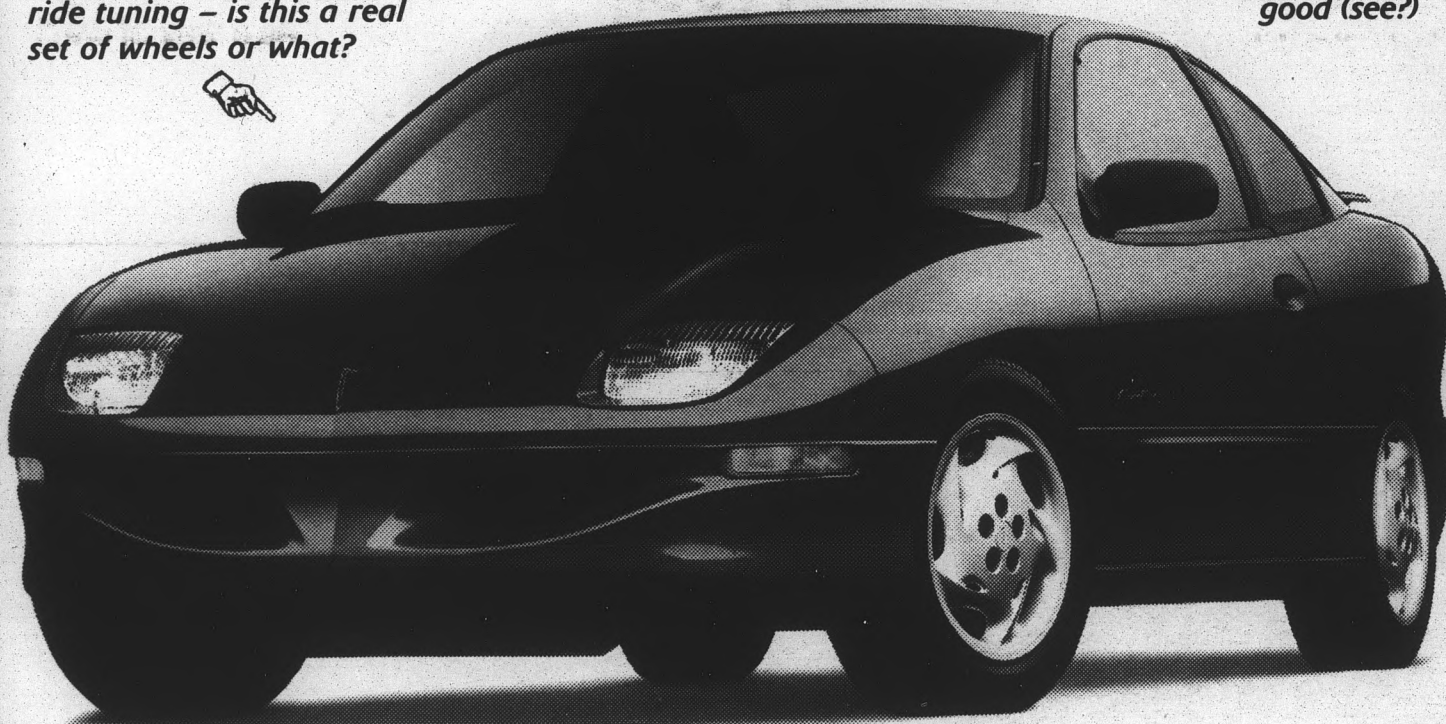

Daytime running lamps in '96 – they're a safety feature, but hey, they look good too

A HUGE glove box – some glove boxes are merely mouse-sized; this one holds a whole laptop computer

AM/FM stereo radio – standard? heck yeah! (what's driving without a little driving music?)

5-speed transmission and tubular rear axle with spring-over shock sport suspension and progressive ride tuning – is this a real set of wheels or what?

Clearcoat paint – paint you can't see keeps the paint you can see looking good (see?)

Single-key locking – one key locks & unlocks doors, trunk and all the fun of Sunfire

PONTIAC CARES – call an 800 number, get free Roadside Assistance – for flat tires, dead battery, even if you run out of gas or lock yourself out (Pontiac® wants to see you and your Sunfire® out driving)

Dual air bags and anti-lock brakes – two things you don't need until you really need 'em (and always wear those safety belts, even with air bags)

Oh, Courtesy Transportation – that's part of PONTIAC CARES too (see? we really do care)

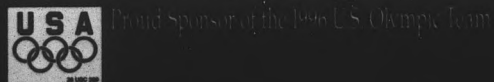

PASSLock™ theft-deterrent system – means you might save some $$$ on insurance (!!!)

100,000-mile spark plugs* – we're talking a long-term relationship here

Finally, a real set of wheels you can really afford.

Secret Service bicycle patrol replaces cars at White House

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secret Service Sgt. Doug Tuxbury patrols his White House beat from the seat of a sleek mountain bike.

In a silver helmet, black combat gear and comfortable shoes, Tuxbury spends his shift atop a $2,400 Trek two-wheeler cruising the three-block radius of the White House compound.

The Secret Service launched its latest beat Saturday. By the end of the day, Tuxbury said, he was hoarse from talking to so many people about the bike.

The space-age white bike with black wheels has 24 gears, a Secret Service seal in the middle of the frame, a black handlebag with the tools of the trade inside — which he refused to discuss — and a mid-frame shock absorber for off-road pursuits.

The bike officers trained for a week, learning how to shoot and tackle from the bike. They also went on a 40-mile, fast-paced trip in stormy conditions.

For now, only one officer shares the daylight beat with Tuxbury. But next month other officers will be trained for the bike patrol.

Tuxbury said he loves being able to ride around Lafayette Park across from the White House, talk to tourists on the plaza-like section of closed-off Pennsylvania Avenue and keep an eye on anyone suspicious lurking around the compound.

"The kids who know bikes — who live in bike shops — stop and say, 'Hey, that's the new wide frame!'" he told a reporter just before his 6 a.m. to 1 p.m. shift ended Monday.

And while Columbus Day brought hundreds of tourists, bikers and in-line skaters flocking to the avenue on a sunny afternoon, Tuxbury said he knows a cold winter lies ahead.

"We'll ride in rain and cold, but not in sleet," he said. "We're not the post office."

Dave Adams, a spokesman for the Secret Service, said the new beat was not related to the closing of Pennsylvania Avenue in front of the White House — a security move that followed the bombing of a federal building in Oklahoma City. "It just gives them a better way to get around the area," he said. "It's easy accessibility."

Uniformed Secret Service Officer Sgt. Doug Tuxbury sits on a new $2400 Trek mountain bike while talking to fellow officer Jeff Lauorgna in front of the White House on Monday. Now that four wheel vehicles are banned from the area in front of the White House, the Secret Service is using the two-wheelers to patrol the area.

Tailback Martin gets starting nod vs. BYU

Tim Hacker/State Press

Sophomore tailback Michael Martin rumbles through the line during ASU's 30-28 loss to Stanford Saturday. Martin's 98 yards on 23 carries helped him earn the starting job for this Saturday's game with BYU.

BY DAN MILLER
STATE PRESS

Sophomore tailback Michael Martin, who rushed for 98 yards on 23 carries and scored two touchdowns in ASU's 30-28 loss to Stanford, will start against Brigham Young this Saturday, Head Coach Bruce Snyder said Monday.

Senior Chris Hopkins, the previous starter, and sophomore Terry Battle, will also see action, Snyder said.

"It was the first chance Michael had the opportunity to go out and run," Snyder said. "I thought our offensive line did an excellent job creating holes, but Michael made some holes and broke some tackles."

Since a week before the first game, both Battle and Martin had been what Snyder referred to as "slashed" at the backup spot behind Hopkins. Hopkins, who started against the Cardinal, finished with 44 yards on 13 carries to go with one touchdown. In an effort to prevent any misconceptions among the three, Snyder informed them of the move as a group on Sunday.

Martin, who missed the Oregon State game to attend a funeral his hometown of Dallas, has 250 yards on 58 attempts in five games, an average of 4.3 yards per carry.

"He's bigger and I'm not suggesting that he's tougher," Snyder of the 6-foot-1, 204-pound Martin. "I'm not sure there's a guy on the team tougher than Chris Hopkins or Terry Battle for that matter, but his style of running is, 'I'll break this tackle darting and running through them.'"

"... He's harder to tackle. He's a load to tackle."

Battle, who is 5-11, 193 pounds, carried only four

Perks for college athletes: Fair or unfair?

College athletics has always been a medium for alumni pride and bragging rights, as well as a vehicle for the betterment of athletes. The tired debate of whether or not to pay college athletes for their services, though, may be a moot one.

The truth is, being a student athlete is a trade-off that can offer big bonuses as well as be painfully restricting.

Before I tell you everything that student athletes get, maybe I should tell you some of the things they don't get.

They don't get to have a job for extra spending money; they are only allowed to converse with certain people (i.e. pre-arranged media interviews); and most of all, they aren't afforded to have much of a life during their sports' season. Hours of practice, team meetings, film reviews, attending class and studying takes care of that. Although they create millions in revenue for their schools, they aren't allowed to earn any money from their likeness or from endorsing anything.

DAMIAN SHAW
Assistant Sports Editor

Before you start feeling sorry for them, you should take a look at what they do get. They get all their classes before you do. Athletes have a priority and are enrolled before you and I. They are also tutored free of charge in whatever subject they are having difficulty with. Standing in line at the Computing Commons? Not ASU athletes. They get their own set of computers in a separate building.

Let's get to some of the more important things, though, such as cash. Each athlete who is on scholarship receives free tuition (over $4,000 per semester, out of state) and $560 per month. All of this is regardless of financial need, so while many students are filing papers with financial aid trying to prove they need money to attend class, athletes just have it handed to them. Pre-game meals are free, and post-practice buffets are taken in credit out of their monthly checks.

To be fair it could be said that the athlete and the school benefit from one another. Schools generate revenues far beyond the cost of the athletic programs and athletes receive a free education, free room and board and the opportunity to develop themselves into professional athletes.

Justin Dragoo, a graduate linebacker for the Sun Devil football team, is an example of an athlete who benefited from his career at ASU. Dragoo, due to various injuries, is in his sixth year of eligibility. Hailing from Napa, Calif., Dragoo would have paid out-of-state

Sun Devil men's tennis team ready to return to NCAA championships

BY DAN MILLER
STATE PRESS

Last season's men's tennis team won the Region V Championship, advanced to the NCAA round of 16, beat USC for the first time in school history and boasted its first-ever national champion.

Talk about a tough act to follow.

This year's team, with the exception of one player, will have much the same look as last year's. Only legendary senior Sargis Sargsian, a winner of an unprecedented four collegiate Grand Slams and the 1995 NCAA champ, has been lost to graduation.

At least one ASU player believes this year's Sun Devils can reach new heights.

"We're going to be better than last year," said junior southpaw Wolf von Lindenau, who held down the No. 6 spot for most of last year and played in Germany over the summer. "Our goal is not to go to Georgia, but to go far as Georgia."

Von Lindenau was referring to Athens, Ga., where the Sun Devils made a surprise appearance at the NCAA championships in May, losing to second-ranked Georgia, 4-1.

"It's nice to have the maturity of a group that's been successful," said Coach Lou Belken, who is entering his 14th season at the controls. "We're a lot further along on the mechanical stuff this year, so that allows us to do more of the competitive stuff earlier."

Senior Paul Reber, a three-year letter winner, headlines the list of returning players. Reber has graciously accepted his role as the old man on the team.

"This is it. This is last hurrah right here," said Reber, who incidentally hasn't had a haircut in 14 months. "I don't think there's going to be much more tennis for me after this. Individually, it would be great to do well, but it's more important to me that the team does well."

Reber said he has kept his hair short for most of its life, but for some reason he had had the inkling to just let it grow out. Is it because of his large female following?

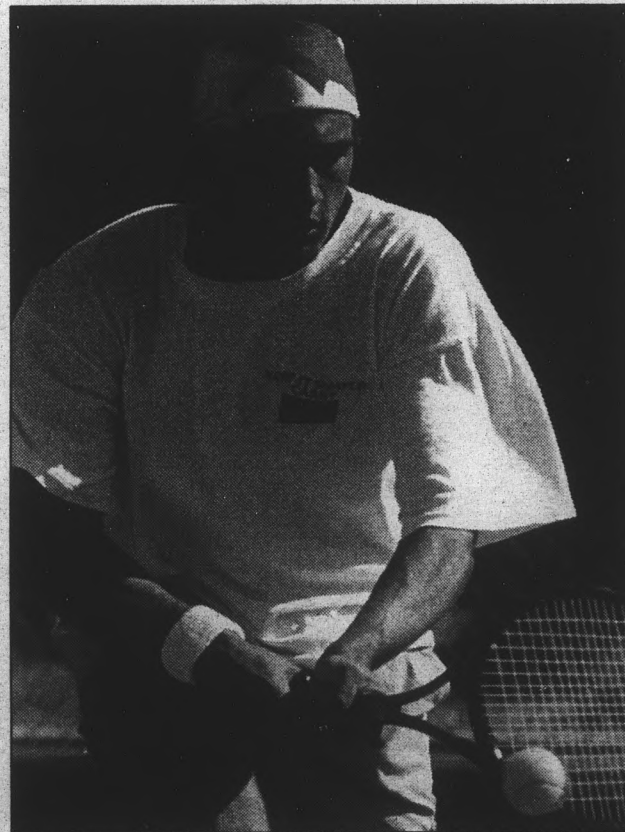

"They don't complain too much," Reber admitted.

Reber and fellow Canadian Dave Critchley, a transfer from West Virginia last year who was plagued with injuries, may both wear Canadian flag bandannas on their heads during matches this year. Reber already sports one during practice.

Critchley, who packs a scorching 130 mph serve, is currently suffering from bursitis in his shoulder.

Critchley is joined by junior Sergio Elias, who played times for 12 yards against Stanford, giving him 260 yards and 53 carries for the season. His 66 yards against USC two weeks ago was a team-high.

Hopkins, a 6-0, 189-pound, three-year letterman, has 362 yards on 79 tries this year. Against Texas-El Paso in week two, he rushed for 131 yards on 18 attempts, which marked the first time an ASU back rushed for over 100 yards since he did so in September of 1994.

Whether or not Martin will maintain the starting spot for the rest of the season depends, Snyder said.

"I would hate to say it's a season because he's only done it once," he said, referring to Martin's outburst. "But he did do it once and I would like to recognize that, and I would like to give him the chance to do it twice. And if he does it twice, he'll get a third chance."

Martin, who played in four games as a true freshman in 1993, missed the 1994 campaign after tearing knee ligaments during preseason drills at Camp Tontozona.

NOTE:

Snyder said sophomore Pat Tillman, who was hit with an unexpected punt snap in the fourth quarter of the Stanford game, had an interesting perspective on the whole thing.

He said when he conferred with Tillman about the play, Tillman remarked: "I didn't know what to think. I thought maybe a bird hit me or something."

tuition at a rate of over $8,000 a year. In a span of six years, that's an education clearly worth over $50,000, not including his lieu checks, per diem meal money for road trips and other free meals.

While six years isn't the norm, it's not unusual for athletes to get four or five years of school, room and board. Not all athletes want all that, however. Tonya Harding, a softball pitcher who shares her name with the infamous skater, attended UCLA last year and led the team to a national championship. School officials deny that Harding, an Australian National team player, was a hired gun. All the same, Harding came on midway through the Bruins season last spring, attended classes in the third trimester and pitched the team through to the championship. But Harding, who was 23 at the time, never took her finals and left school, championship ring on hand, sans degree.

If UCLA knew of her plans to leave school ahead of time, it probably would have been looked into by the NCAA, but as it stands, it was only questionable ethical behavior by UCLA. Did the Bruins have a desire to graduate their student athlete, or did they just have a desire to win a championship?

The mass structure that is the NCAA, college athletics ruling body, has set up rules to protect players and stop corruption. Most important, however, is its roll in overseeing collection of revenues for both the universities and college sports as a whole.

After all, it's not only a game, it's a business.

between No. 2 and No. 3 singles last year. Elias used the summer to rediscover himself.

"It was a summer where I grew up a lot," said Elias, who received a Pac-10 Southern Division honorable mention for conference honors. "I had a lot of time to think about who I was and what I wanted. I realized no matter how much I want something, I can't let adverse things make me freak out."

Elias is also among the gimpy, with a stress fracture in his right foot and a pulled hamstring.

One man who is consistently a bastion of confidence is sophomore Tsolak Gevorkian. Gevorkian stormed on the scene last year, winning over 20 matches as a true freshman. After winning two tournaments in France over the summer and tasting a wide range of international competition, Gevorkian has perfected his baseline and serve and volley game.

"I feel I'm playing an all-around game," he said. "I'm like a combination of (Pete) Sampras and (Andre) Agassi, only about two levels lower."

"I love the way I'm playing right now."

The Sun Devils' star recruit is Oscar Bustos, who transferred from Anderson junior college in Anderson, S.C. Bustos, who like Elias is a native of Santiago, Chile, won the Rolex small college national championship last year. He was one of the most recruited players in the nation, bypassing offers from such powerhouses as UCLA, USC and Pepperdine.

"He will be one of the premier players in the nation this year based on his past results," Belken said.

Tim Hacker/State Press

Junior Sergio Elias demonstrates his textbook forehand during a practice at Whiteman Tennis Center Monday. Elias played No. 2 and No. 3 singles for the Sun Devils last season.

Bustos won the Sun Devils' intrasquad tournament two weeks ago, losing only one set to Reber in the final.

"I think the team is very good," said Bustos, a hard-hitting baseliner. "It is very cohesive."

Hiroshi Nagoshima and Casey Was made the team as walk-ons.

Nagoshima earned high praise from Belken.

"He may be the best walk-on I've seen come through here," Belken said. "He's been a very pleasant surprise."

ASU golfers lead by 13

BY RON MATEJKO
STATE PRESS

The ASU women's golf team is in first place after the first two rounds of the Diet Coke-Roadrunner Invitational. The tournament is being held at the New Mexico State Golf Course in Las Cruces, N.M.

The Sun Devils lead second-place Texas Tech by 13 strokes. ASU shot a 599 through the first two rounds with Texas Tech in second at 612 and New Mexico State in third at 615. ASU is leading a group of 16 teams competing in the tournament.

ASU has all five of its golfers in the top

25 overall. The Sun Devils are led by sophomore Kellee Booth, who is currently in second place by one stroke after shooting a 73 in both rounds. Each round tied Booth for the second best score posted by any golfer.

Senior Linda Ericsson and freshman Jody Niemann are tied for sixth, with junior Vinny Riviello tied for 11th. Rounding out the fivesome is redshirt-freshman Keri Cornelius, who is currently tied for 22nd.

All golfers played the first 36 holes Monday with the final 18 scheduled for today.

ASU FOOTBALL FANS: IT'S WEEK SEVEN

As a reminder, the State Press sports department is sponsoring the weekly "PICK IT AND WIN" contest for ASU football games. Last week's lucky winner was freshman Dale Aaron Burger.

To win, contestants must correctly predict the winner and final score of the ASU football games on Saturday. The Sun Devils' next game is Saturday against the Brigham Young Cougars at 7 p.m. at Sun Devil Stadium.

The weekly winner receives: an ASU cap courtesy of The Cap. Co. on 6th and Mill, an autographed Jake Plummer poster schedule of courtesy of ASU athletics, a headshot in Monday's State Press sports section, an ASU sports calendar and a bonus prize!

If none of the contestants in a given week predict the exact score, then the winner will be determined by which contestant comes closest.

In the event of a tie, the winner will be drawn out of a hat.

Entries must be either faxed to 602-965-8484, "Attn: Sports Editor," or dropped off at the State Press offices in the basement of Matthew's Center. Valid entries should include full name, student #, year in school, major and daytime phone # where you may be reached. Winners will be contacted the Sunday after the game.

The entry deadline each week is Thursday at 5 p.m. Entries received after the deadline will not be considered. Telephoning the State Press is not a valid form of entry.
