Weber: 'I'm not going to resign'

ASASU president faces impeachment effort in Senate today

By TIMOTHY TAIT
STATE PRESS

Student government President Chris Weber has put his political future into the hands of the Associated Students of ASU Senate after announcing Monday that he will not resign from office.

"I'm not going to resign," a tearful Weber told the Academic Senate on Monday.

Weber said he "used poor judgment but broke no laws," in the events surrounding his arrest last Monday for trespassing and disorderly conduct at Palo Verde Main. "The best thing for Chris Weber and the students is that I stay and do the job that I was elected to do," he said.

However, Articles of Impeachment to be submitted at the ASASU Senate meeting today state that Weber violated the ASASU Constitution and his oath of office.

"President Chris Weber will be unable to complete the purpose of the ASASU as listed in the constitution ... by being unable to represent the Arizona State University student body," the articles state.

It remains a matter of conjecture whether the articles will pass. Sen. Evan Itzkowitz said the Senate is not justifying in impeaching Weber.

"He has screwed up, but it can be fixed," he said. "They are only looking at the negative and not the positive."

Up to three different votes may be taken during the impeachment proceedings against Weber tonight, Executive Vice President Angelo DeSimone said.

A simple majority of the 23 senate votes will be needed to pass the Articles of Impeachment and convene an impeachment hearing. Eighteen votes, or a 3/4 majority, is required to determine if Weber is guilty of the impeachment charges. The third vote, if the first two pass, will determine how to punish to Weber.

DeSimone said Weber could be found guilty of the impeachment charges, but may not necessarily be removed from office.

"Unfortunately, we will have to deal with this in the Senate," Sen. Alex Shivers said. "It will be a knock-down, drag-out fight."

DeSimone, the president of the Senate, called each senator over the weekend to explain the impeachment process.

"A lenient Senate should be perceived as a weak Senate," he said. "They are expected to do what is right."

Weber's decision to weather the storm is a change of course from last week. Following his arrest last Monday, Weber informed the ASASU Executive Committee that he

Faculty delay effort to lower graduation credit hour standard

By CODY V. AYCOCK
STATE PRESS

A proposal to reduce the number of credit hours required for graduation was tabled Monday by the Academic Senate after faculty members expressed concern that the plan would lower ASU's educational standards.

A motion to reduce the current graduation requirement of a minimum of 50 upper-division hours to 45 was debated for a half-hour before members tabled the motion and sent it to the Curriculum and Academic Programs Committee for further review. The committee will report its findings to the Senate before its meeting next month.

Several faculty members protested the plan. They said a 10 percent reduction in required upper-division courses would make it difficult for students to get a complete and specialized education.

"I think we ought to resist efforts to get us to bring our standards down," said Richard Jacob, professor of physics and astronomy. "Our main responsibility is to maintain the standards that we as faculty have set."

University President Lattie Coor said the proposal would not diminish the education that students receive from the University.

He said because the proposal set a minimum requirement, and not maximum limits, that colleges could maintain high standards.

The reduction is an effort to meet an Arizona Board of Regents requirement

Official: Great Mall no threat to Mill Avenue

By ANGELA MULL
STATE PRESS

Tempe's Great Mall of Arizona will be a big retail machine, but will not squash downtown Tempe, a Tempe official said Monday.

"My guess is it won't have a huge negative impact," said Rodney Keeling, executive director of Downtown Tempe Community Inc., a non-profit organization that manages downtown Tempe. "I don't see it as a competitor to downtown Tempe."

The Great Mall of Arizona, set to open in early 1997 at I-10 and the Superstition Freeway, will occupy 1.2 million square feet of space with 12 anchor stores, such as Saks Fifth Avenue Outlet, Oshman's Super Sports USA, Linens N Things Superstore and Harkins Great Mall Luxury 20

Cinemas. Another 210 retailers, family entertainment venues and restaurants will be included.

However, the plethora of shopping opportunities may not be enough to draw some customers away from downtown Tempe.

Dan Cortez, a 30-year-old advertising executive with Spanish Accents, said, "If I knew I was going to shop and look around, I'd go (to the Great Mall). But if I just wanted to hang out and people watch, I'd come to Mill."

Keeling agreed that while the mall will serve a broad market, establishments along Mill Avenue are oriented more toward a niche market.

"If we were a stand-alone community away from the rest of the metropolitan area, a large retail development would not be good for downtown," he said. "But the fact is we're in a sea of retail opportunities."

In addition to providing sales tax revenue and at least 3,000 jobs for Tempe, one of the mall's co-developers said it will provide many different shopping possibilities for customers.

"This is an alternative that is a complement to the current shopping base," said Hal Scudder, vice president of Michigan-based Taubman Company. "It's kind of like the kitchen sink. It's a wide variety of uses under one roof."

Cortez, who lives near the mall, said the Tempe mall is a good use for a once empty area.

"Malls are king here, so I'm sure it will do well," he said.

planned to resign from office.

"Chris said that he would be resigning by the end of the week," Sen. Alana Chavez said. "We expected him to follow through on what he said."

Buddy Early, Weber's chief of staff, said Weber decided not to resign because of the support he has received from students and local politicians.

"The reason for his change of heart," Early said, "was due to the number of students telling him not to resign. We are confident that we have a lot of quiet support in the Senate."

Itzkowitz called the impeachment a "joke," but said he remains confident that the senate will examine the facts.

"A lot of people are going off half-cocked," he said. "Many of the senators would vote to impeach even if God stood in front of them and said that he (Weber) didn't do anything."

"I am confident in the fact that people will wake up and see the light and realize that there are a lot of things that they have not considered."

Chavez said the Senate needs to react to Weber's arrests to preserve the students' trust in the association.

"It was a lack of good judgment on his part. He needs to pay the consequences for his actions," she said. She added that Weber's arrests have "affected the student body's trust and perception of the association."

Itzkowitz said he believes that many of Weber's programs will go "down the drain" if he is removed from office.

"Many of the senators want to think that removing Chris from office will fix everything," he said. "I want to help before I convict."

A Senate representative, who asked to remain anonymous, said senators who are also fraternity members may impede the proceedings. Both Weber and Itzkowitz are members of the Pi Kappa Alpha Fraternity.

"The only thing that I'm worried about are the fraternity members," said the unnamed representative. "Chris has claimed (in the past) that seven senators are fraternity members. I kind of wonder if they are going to do what is best for the students — it is a question of loyalty."

Other members of the Senate, however, believe the Greek senators will vote based on the facts.

"Being Greek, I'll vote against Chris," Shivers said. "I don't think that being Greek is a criteria for voting for Chris — there are other reasons to vote for Chris."

Shivers confirmed that seven senators are also members of fraternities.

"I can't say how the fraternity members will vote, but he probably won't get all of their votes," Sen. Daren Wastchak said.

"Whatever happens, it will be extremely difficult."

to reduce the amount of time it takes students to graduate from the state's three universities. The Board passed a resolution in December of last year requiring the universities to lower the number of credit hours needed to graduate from 126 to 120.

"We are constantly criticized because currently it takes five and a half years to graduate. We are trying to change that for the student's benefit," said Regent Rudy Campbell.

"I think we have been dragging education out too long," he said.

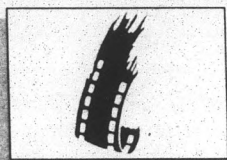

The universities have until Fall '97 to meet the Board's reductions, but University Provost Milton Glick said he is hopeful ASU can make its upper-division requirement adjustments before the Fall '96 catalog is distributed in approximately two months.

FBI uses roadblocks in search for saboteur

PHOENIX (AP) — FBI agents stopped motorists at roadblocks near the site of last week's Amtrak derailment on Monday, hoping to find someone who could shed some light on the saboteur who caused the crash.

One crewman was killed and at least 78 people were injured when Amtrak's Sunset Limited derailed at a remote desert wash early last Monday.

Several copies of a bizarre anti-government letter were found at the scene 55 miles southwest of Phoenix, but the letter did not claim responsibility for the derailment.

FBI spokesman Jack Callahan said the roadblocks were set up early Sunday morning on rural roads near the derailment site. All passing cars were stopped, Callahan said. Agents had previously interviewed some of Hyder's 1,500 residents.

The FBI still is trying to locate a person in a cowboy hat spotted walking about 100 yards south of the derailment site by an Amtrak employee and a passenger 10 to 15 minutes after the crash.

Sheriff: Escaped inmates made run to the border

SAFFORD (AP) — Two federal prisoners who escaped from jail are probably safely in Mexico, the sheriff said today.

Juan Pelayo Silva, 29, and Antonio Garcia, 25, managed to climb through a hole in a fence and climb out of the recreation yard at Graham County Jail on Sunday, said Sheriff Richard Mack. He said the hole is repaired but that no other inmates will be allowed into the area until it is secured.

The two probably got a ride out of town, Mack said. Dog teams picked up a scent trail for a few blocks, but it ended suddenly.

"I have to assume that they took off, they had someone pick them up," he said. "I imagine both of them are having breakfast in Mexico right about now."

America West is normal after weekend protest

PHOENIX (AP) — After a pilot shortage caused it to cancel more than 60 flights over the weekend, America West Airlines was back to normal Monday, a spokesman said.

Stephen Johnson, America West's vice president for legal affairs, said about 50 of the Phoenix-based airline's 1,000 pilots called in sick over the weekend to protest work schedules.

Hiro Notany, a spokesman for the airline, said 67 flights were canceled on Friday, Saturday and Sunday. The airline normally has about 600 flights a day.

Notany said there were no cancellations on Monday and that the pilots who called in sick were back at work.

"There may have been one or two (who called in sick), but the number was no more than you would expect on a normal day," he said.

One pilot, who spoke on condition that his name not be used, told The Arizona Republic he knew nothing of pilots calling in sick but said they were trying to avoid what they consider excessive work.

Million Man March

Huge crowd revels in black unity

Farrakhan leads promise of healing, betterment

WASHINGTON (AP) — In an unprecedented revival-style rally, hundreds of thousands of black men bonded, prayed and echoed Nation of Islam leader Louis Farrakhan in a litany of promises Monday to heal black America.

"I pledge that from this day forward, I will never raise my hand with a knife or gun to beat, cut or shoot any member of my family or any human being, except in self-defense," they repeated after Farrakhan, vowing to better themselves and all of black America. Some wept.

The dramatic recitation captured the rally's spirit of atonement and brotherhood much as Martin Luther King Jr.'s "I have a dream" speech served to symbolize the goals of the 1963 March on Washington.

The U.S. Park Police estimated that 400,000 men came together for the peaceful day of praying, singing and reveling in racial unity. The crowd, eclipsing the 250,000 who gathered in 1963, stretched 12 blocks down the National Mall.

The "Million Man March" was the fourth-largest demonstration in Washington history, and the largest predominantly black gathering.

March organizers insisted the crowd was more like 2 million. That's typical; the police and demonstrators almost never agree on turnouts at such mass events.

As the rally's dramatic finale, Farrakhan spoke for 2 1/2 hours, often addressing white America. The root of the nation's suffering, he said, is "white supremacy."

"That makes you sick, and you produce a sick society and a sick world," Farrakhan said. "White supremacy has to die in order for humanity to live."

He urged the men to go home and join black organizations — even those that refused to endorse his rally — to take hold of political power, unite against racism, and cleanse black communities of crime, drugs and violence.

Farrakhan brushed aside critics who have condemned his inflammatory statements about Jews, Catholics, gays and Asians, saying he had divine guidance.

"Whether you like it or not, God brought the idea through me, and he didn't bring it through me because my heart was dark with hatred and anti-Semitism," he said.

"If my heart was that dark, how is the message so bright?"

The day was sunny but chilly, the mood serious yet buoyant.

Young men dressed in jeans, sweatshirts and jackets dominated the crowd. But men of all ages were jammed shoulder-to-shoulder in front of the stage. Others climbed onto statues, light posts and trees for a better view. A few waded through the Reflecting Pool, one wearing few, if any, clothes.

"There is no violence here, no racism," said Omar Holt of Detroit. "It's very moving."

People lined up 10-deep around the food vendors, and the mixed aromas of barbecue and vegetarian curries filled the air. Scores of Nation of Islam members, standing erect in suits and their trademark bow ties, lent an air of solemnity.

"It's a healing feeling to see so many black men come together, and not a whole bunch of violence or drugs or all that stuff," said Donald Simms of the Brooklyn borough of New York City. "This whole thing is about self-respect."

Civil rights veterans Jesse Jackson, Rosa Parks and Dick Gregory were among dozens of back-to-back orators who spoke from behind bulletproof glass. Stevie Wonder sang briefly and Maya Angelou read a poem urging the crowd to do right by itself and "save your race."

Giant speakers and video screens were set up around the Mall, but most men couldn't get near enough to them to benefit. "We can't hear," said Harold Johnson of Reading, Pa., "but we can feel the important feel of it."

Farrakhan challenging, confrontational on stage

NEWS ANALYSIS
By DENISE CABRERA
ASSOCIATED PRESS WRITER

WASHINGTON — In a lengthy oratory under the fading afternoon sun, Louis Farrakhan scolded, praised and encouraged a mass rally of black men and strengthened his claim to a growing leadership role among American blacks.

"Like it or not," he pointedly told critics.

His tone was challenging and confrontational, but the leader of the Nation of Islam conceded with a thin smile, "Because this is America, you allow me to speak even though you don't like what I say."

Climaxing a daylong rally Monday on Washington's Mall, Farrakhan often criticized white America, tracing its roots to Europe, while offering an olive branch to critics at civil rights organizations like the NAACP and the Urban League. He proposed a dialogue with American Jews who oppose his leadership because of past antisemitic remarks.

Early in his address, Farrakhan directly addressed critics.

"You came not at the call of Louis Farrakhan," he told the crowd of hundreds of thousands. "But you have gathered here at the call of God."

Farrakhan's speech on the national stage was his opportunity to make clear his vision for the future of America. He confronted his critics and directly challenged President Clinton and leaders of the Republican Congress.

Sacrificing quality for quantity

The Academic Senate is trying to make it easier to graduate from ASU.

In order to comply with an Arizona Board of Regents mandate, the Academic Senate is considering lowering the number of upper division hours needed to graduate from 50 to 45.

This vote will doubtlessly be encouraging to students who feel like they've spent an eternity and a day going to college.

But it does raise nagging questions as well — and worries that a watered-down ASU education is being watered down even more.

Certainly, this is not the fault of the Academic Senate. They've really got no choice in the matter — the ABOR has already decreed that the number of hours required to graduate must be lowered to 120.

But should the number of hours be lowered? And should upper division courses be the target?

Once again, let us examine the mission of the university — and what an education there is supposed to accomplish.

The ABOR mandate — like so many others — appears to be viewing the university through purely utilitarian eyes.

The idea that is being insinuated here is that students don't come to ASU to learn — they come here to get a diploma and a better job.

The lowering of credit hours will merely make it easier to churn out more diplomas in a shorter period of time.

Quantity over quality makes good fiscal sense — but does it make academic sense?

In the past, a college degree was a symbol of prestige — something that one had to actually work for. It was recognized that only a minority of people would have what it took to be admitted to college, to say nothing of earning a bachelor's degree.

In the past, even lower division courses were time-consuming and challenging.

What about today?

Today, students are herded into massive lecture halls 400 at a time for lower division classes. Professors rarely know a tenth of their students, and students are rarely graded on anything past a handful of multiple choice exams.

Such classes might be considered challenging in a high school. But they cannot — and should not — be considered representative of the depth of education that a university is supposed to provide.

Even more disturbing is the drop in quality of some upper division courses. While some courses can be considered fairly challenging, many more are just as lacking in depth as lower division classes.

Students, who are always quick to adapt, quickly focus on what they must do to get a good grade in a class, rather than focusing on the learning process itself — often sacrificing the independent, free thinking that is supposed to be the hallmark of a university.

Slashing at graduation requirements is the last thing we can afford to do. Educational quality has been sliding dangerously. The time has come to bring the quality back up.

This can be difficult in a state like Arizona, where funding for education takes a back seat to redecorating the governor's office.

So rather than sacrificing quality, why not cut back on quantity?

Rather than admitting just about everyone that turns in an application, why not start being selective about who is admitted to this University?

Many people are here because they want to learn. Don't destroy their learning experience so we can pack more students into the classrooms of ASU.

Associated Press

Day of atonement, a day to rejoice

I sat there and watched the march, the different speakers and finally Minister Louis Farrakhan speak with about 20 or 30 other brothers and sisters at the Memorial Union.

The community, the peace, hope and love I felt was, and is, still beyond words. To see that many Black men in one place talking about change — talking about helping oneself and helping others — was truly a historical moment to behold.

As Farrakhan spoke, everybody around me sat a little straighter. More people wandered over to hear what he had to say. Would he blame the Whites for the troubled communities? Would he denounce Jewish people, Asians and organizations that denounced him?

Did he?
The answer is no.
So what did he do?

He reached out to them. He reached out to America. He reached out to all those who would listen and said something is wrong here but each and every one of us can fix it. Each and every one of us can help to attain a more perfect union — the ones our forefathers talked about.

How?

- Pointing out the wrongs we have committed. Thinking about where our actions or non-actions, our apathy or activism have gotten us — society — to where we are today.
- Acknowledging the wrongs we have made.
- Accepting the wrongs and confessing these wrongs. And to who should you confess to and why, he asked?
- To the people you have wronged, to God, to yourself. When the soul is riddled with guilt and conflict, how can you change or see that change is needed?

- Repent for the wrongs.
- Atone for those wrongs. That means not just talking about the things you did or didn't do, but taking action.
- Forgiveness is the next step. Forgive not just from our lips but from our hearts.
- Reconciliation and reparation is the next part. Then we will have a perfect union.

This march was not about blaming or blasting the "White man" for Black peoples' woes. It is not about Black, White, Red, Brown and Yellow.

Farrakhan said the real evil is not White flesh or Black flesh, it is the idea of White supremacy — the idea that some White people believe that the whiteness of their skin makes them superior to all others. He said it was that sickness that was destroying all of America and not just Black America.

Never once did I feel like Farrakhan was grouping all White people together as oppressors, as racists. Never once did I see him point to the Capitol and lay blame on the government. Nor did he deny the Jewish Holocaust or belittle Asians and Whites for owning businesses in Black communities.

CHRISTINA BAILEY
Opinion Editor

Farrakhan said Black men need to look to themselves for the answers. Black on Black violence must stop. Black men need to stop pointing fingers and saying, "It's the 'White man's' fault." Instead, they need to embrace their culture, their families, women, children and care for them. They need to make their homes and communities a safe place to live. They need to organize and start up their own businesses in their respective communities.

He asked Black people to join organizations that promoted liberation and freedom, to register to vote and gather others to register for the party that they felt the most comfortable with. He talked about organizing Black leaders and creating a fund to help rebuild schools and communities and to maintain, expand and build programs and organizations in the hopes of elevating the status of Black people. There was no talk of separatism, of debts owed to Black people or dividing this nation.

There was a man named Willie Lynch who proclaimed he knew exactly how to keep slaves from rebelling, from becoming free men and women. He said if you use fear, distrust and envy, you can control slaves.

That fear, distrust and envy, used to control the slaves 128 years ago, is still present today. The mentality that pitted old males against young males, males against females, dark-skinned slaves against light-skinned slaves, field slaves against house slaves and the mentality that said White overseers, slave owners and drivers were the only ones that could be loved, respected and trusted, needs to stop — today.

What struck me most was how Farrakhan kept giving props to God. God, he said, was the driving force behind the march; he was just the messenger. God had the answers, all we had to do was ask the questions.

What disappointed me the most is the media and the ones that prejudged and tuned the march out without doing the research or taking the time to hear the concepts and the message coming from all the people there.

I am not just taking a stand on this because I am a woman of color. I am taking a stand because I believe ethics have been tossed aside, objectivity has been trashed, facts are being skewed on a regular basis and twisted to fit the mind-set of the journalists — journalists who don't take the time to do the research, to walk the walk or understand. Both sides are not being told.

Editorials are made for the opinion pages, not the front pages. Controversy is not to be made by the media, it is to be reported by the media in a manner that allows the reader to come to his or her own conclusions.

This march was the start of a new beginning — to remind us that God created us all equal. We can draw power from him and change our own lives. The idea of unity, independence, responsibility and love for ourselves and others can be attained by all of America, not just Black America. And finally that the idea of White supremacy has to die in order for humanity to live.

ONE IN A MILLION

I pledge that from this day forward, I will never raise my hand with a knife or gun to beat, cut or shoot any member of my family or any human being, except in self-defense.

— Farrakhan asked Black America to pledge

Give us strength to put down our guns and pick up our babies.

— Prayer by the Rev. George A. Stallings, archbishop of AME Catholic Congregation

Photos by Associated Press

With the Washington Monument in the background, participants of the Million Man March gather on Capitol Hill and the Mall in Washington D.C. on Monday. Tens of thousands of Black men from across America gathered at the base of the Capitol, and the Mall, in a rally of unity, self-affirmation and protest.

Let us go back home from this place, my brothers, renewed, regenerated, resurrected from the grave of violence and self-destruction.

— The Rev. Joseph Lowery, Southern Christian Leadership Conference

Abraham Lincoln saw in his day what President Clinton sees in this day. He saw the great divide between Black and White ... There are still two Americas — one Black, one White, separate and unequal.

— Farrakhan

He's not a man of hate. He's truly a man of love ... You tell people 'I was part of the march and I love the message and we love the messenger, Louis Farrakhan.'

— Leonard Muhammad, chief of staff for Louis Farrakhan

One million men are right to be standing up for personal responsibility, but one million men do not make right one man's message of malice and division.

— President Clinton on Farrakhan in a speech in Austin, Texas

There has been an attempt to separate the message and the magnitude of this march from the messenger. We're not going to let that happen.

— Benjamin Chavis, former NAACP director and executive director of the march

I was concerned my presence on the stage with Farrakhan would give him a level of credibility I would not like to have seen.

— Colin Powell, retired chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, explaining why he didn't want to attend the march

"White Supremacy," is the root of American's suffering. That makes you sick, and you produce a sick society and a sick world.

— Farrakhan

If my heart was dark, how is the message so bright?

KAET show highlights ASU's extracurricular effort

BY PATTY KING
STATE PRESS

Not all the students who ASU serves carry backpacks, hang out at the Memorial Union or even make the height requirement for a Disneyland ride.

But that doesn't stop ASU from working to improve their education.

ASU's Search for the New, a 30-minute documentary/discussion program that airs tonight on KAET, highlights ASU's partnership with the community in the area of kindergarten through 12th-grade education.

The show will focus on three ASU programs that use new or innovative teaching methods and new methods of involving ASU students in teaching children, said Judy Knudson, executive director of Institutional Advancement, who researched and planned the program in conjunction with Channel 8.

The program will air 7:30 p.m. tonight and 2 p.m. Sunday. It is co-hosted by ASU President Lattie Coor and Michael Grant, host of KAET's Horizon television program.

Don Hopfer, executive producer of special events and public affairs for KAET, said the director of each of the three ASU programs will appear with a student or teacher who has worked with the program.

"That way, you get to hear about the focus of the project, and then you get to meet someone who's actually involved with it, and see why they are, and what they get out of it," he said.

Knudson said the show is the third installment in an ongoing KAET series highlighting the ways ASU fulfills its mission in the areas of undergraduate education, graduate and research programs, commitment to cultural diversity and commitment to community partnerships.

The first highlighted program is an ASU partnership with Phoenix's Julian Middle School and the Roosevelt School District, where eight ASU undergraduates enrolled in a service learning Botany 108 class work with 26 disadvantaged students from the middle school. Each ASU student works in a team with three children and each team develops scientific experiments that teach children basic botany concepts, such as photosynthesis.

The second feature involves ASU's Center for Academic Precocity. Cindy Paredes, academic coordinator for the center and one of the guests on the show, said CAP uses an innovative method for involving ASU students in the teaching process by having classes taught by graduate students who are doing research in professional fields such as computer science, space technology and science exploration. Students in the program work at a very high academic level with peers who share their interests, she said.

"They're in a space class with kids that are all interested in space and are all gifted," she said. "That's different than a regular classroom."

The third ASU program featured in the show is Project Prime.

Raul Cardenas, project director of Project Prime, said its six-member staff visits 11 schools weekly in Chandler, Phoenix, Avondale, Casa Grande and Hayden-Winkelman. They work with individual teachers to help identify students' deficiencies in verbal and mathematics skills.

Hopfer, who has taped segments of the show, said he thinks President Coor feels that it is the University's place to involve itself in K-12 education.

"(The University) has the resources," Hopfer said. "They have the people who are studying these issues, and in a case like Project Prime, are designing new ways to enhance education for the young."

"He just thinks that this is an area where the University can play an important role."

Meatless eating focus of diet seminar

BY KELLY WENDEL
STATE PRESS

A lecture series about the benefits of reducing the amount of meat in people's diet continues this evening at 7 p.m. in the Memorial Union.

"Eating for a Better Life," sponsored by Concerned Arizonans for Animal Rights and Ethics, focuses on the health, environmental and humane aspects of eating meat.

The seminar continues tonight with lectures by Russell Benford, a member of ASU's Environmental Resource Management Program and of CAARE, who will discuss energy use and the benefits of eating low on the food chain. Dr. Robert Ohmart, an expert in riparian ecosystem management, will also talk about land use and resource depletion in the southwestern United States.

Benford said the main goal of the seminar is to inform the public rather than deliver an anti-meat sermon.

"The lectures are to educate the public about the impact their diet has on their health, environment and animals," he said. "We are not preaching to people that they have to eliminate animal products from their diet. Our position is to educate people."

Benford said there is a misconception that people need meat in their diet.

"The argument isn't necessarily that we are killing animals for food. A lot of people say, 'I hate to do it, but I gotta eat,'" he said. "The focus of the argument is that we don't have to use animals for food. It's better for our health and our environment."

Many of today's environmental concerns are linked to the consumption of animal products, Benford said.

"When we think about population and start thinking how the top soils and the forests are being depleted because of grazing, we have to take a serious look at what's causing this," he said. "A large portion of it is directly related to diet."

Benford said the grazing of cattle poses a serious environmental threat.

"Cattle are a huge environmental problem, not only in America but in the world," he said. "As our society realizes it has a rapidly growing population and a very limited resource base, and the higher we eat on the food chain, the more quickly we use that resource base."

However, Margie Anderson, director of consumer affairs for the Arizona Beef Council, disagreed on the impact of cattle ranching on the environment.

"Cattlemen were the original environmentalists," she said. "Long before it was cool to be environmental, there were cattlemen out there managing the land and caring for their animals as well as the land."

Anderson compared cattle in a pasture to a lawn mower. "You mow the lawn, and it helps the grass come in thicker and stronger. The cow is nature's lawn mower," she said. "You use cattle as a management tool to improve and repair the land."

Anderson also rejected the notion of a meatless diet. "Our government recommends meat in your diet," Anderson said. "The meat group is an important part of your diet."

However, medical researchers have consistently found links between the consumption of meat and heart disease, strokes and cancer, Benford said.

"The medical establishment has proved and keeps proving that the fewer the animal products you have in your diet, the healthier you are," he said.

Benford added that special interest groups have used their power to keep Americans in the dark about the dangers of eating meat.

"The American Cattlemen's Association and American Beef Association have so much political clout, it's difficult to say what they don't want you to say," he said. "They have their agenda. The people who depend on selling animal products have a huge impact on everything in the food regulation (industry)."

Court rejects all-male Citadel bid

CHARLESTON, S.C. (AP) — The Supreme Court on Monday put The Citadel's effort to remain all-male back in the hands of a judge in Charleston, at least until the high court hears a similar case involving the Virginia Military Institute.

The justices, without comment, refused to hear South Carolina's bid to preserve the state military college's men-only policy.

Previously, a federal appeals court ruled that The Citadel can remain all-male if it comes up with a separate but comparable program for women.

The Supreme Court is expected to decide that very issue in a case involving VMI, the only other all-male, state-supported military school in the nation. The Clinton administration has asked the justices to reject VMI's recently created military-style program for women at Mary Baldwin College.

Administration lawyers opposed South Carolina's appeal as premature because The Citadel case is still before a federal court in Charleston.

U.S. District Judge C. Weston Houck has set a hearing next month on whether a state-funded leadership program at all-female Converse College in Spartanburg is an adequate alternative to admitting women to The Citadel.

Tempe police reported the following incidents Monday:

- A 60-year-old California woman died Sunday as a result of injuries she sustained Saturday after being hit by a car in the 1300 block of W. Broadway Road. The woman, Dorothy Jones, was crossing the road northbound when she was hit by a car driving westbound. She was taken to the Maricopa County Hospital, where she was placed on life support but later died. Alcohol is not a factor in the case.
- A 24-year-old man was arrested and charged with aggravated assault and four counts of endangerment after a fight broke out over a girl during an apartment party at 1216 E. Vista Del Cerro Drive. The man pointed a 9 mm handgun at one victim's head and later waved it at several other people in the apartment.

The suspect is described as a Black man, 25 to 30 years old, 6 feet tall and 180 pounds.

Farrakhan

while estimates of the crowd varied widely, most agreed it was the largest assemblage of black Americans in the national capital since the 1963 march, where the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. spoke of his dream.

Several participants suggested Farrakhan was stepping into a leadership vacuum in the black community that has existed since King's death.

In Alpharetta, Ga., House Speaker Newt Gingrich called Farrakhan an "unrepentant bigot" and worried that he would gain legitimacy.

"There's no question that the biggest winner out of today's march is going to be Farrakhan, and he's going to use this to argue he is the legitimate leader of African-Americans," Gingrich said. "Leaders who show up today (to speak at the rally) are clearly strengthening his position and making him a more important figure."

Farrakhan, referring to Clinton's speech earlier in the day at the University of Texas, said, "You spoke ill indirectly of me as a purveyor of malice and hatred. I must hasten to tell you, Mr. President, that I'm not a malicious person and I'm not filled with malice."

He told the crowd that whether his critics "like it or not, God brought the idea through me, and He didn't bring it through me because my heart was dark with hatred and antisemitism."

His speech — more than two hours long — was marked by references to the Jewish Torah and Christian Gospels as well as the Muslim Koran. He said the idea behind the rally was "to rebuild America." He ended his address by leading the rally in a rousing, detailed pledge of self improvement.

Good luck trying to get tickets to Super Bowl

(AP) — Want tickets to the Super Bowl? You have to be super lucky.

Unless you have a corporate connection or friends in high places, you can basically forget about it.

And don't reach for your checkbook. A fat bank account can't guarantee a ticket either, because most scalpers predict a limited supply.

"I've been in this business for 20 years and this will be the toughest ticket to get to a local event — ever. And the most expensive," said one broker, who spoke only on the condition of anonymity.

The face value of the tickets haven't been set by the NFL yet, but they are expected to be around $200.

Phoenix-area scalpers say the starting price for their tickets is $1,400. And that's just for upper-deck, end zone seats.

Lower-level, midfield seats will cost around $4,000 apiece.

"We're getting 20 to 30 calls a day from people asking about tickets," said Bruce Genzburg, co-owner of one agency. "They're in very, very high demand. But you got to understand. This game is for the high rollers. The average fan probably isn't going to get in the gate."

A recent NFL survey shows 81 percent of Super Bowl ticket holders are men with a median age of 41; 80 percent are in executive, management, professional or sales positions; 35 attend the game on corporate expense accounts; 27 percent own their own companies; 25 percent are corporate officers and 22 percent are on boards of directors.

The survey put the median salary of those ticket holders at $70,000 with more than a third making more than $100,000.

Sun Devil Stadium is expected to seat about 75,000 for the Jan. 28 Super Bowl, including up to 2,000 temporary seats. Some 5,000 of the seats already are reserved for overflow media, box suites for league and team officials, NFL mail-in drawing winners and the league's international needs.

So for the estimated 70,000 remaining seats, the NFL has this breakdown for Super Bowl ticket distribution:

— 25.3 percent are retained by the league office,

— 35 percent are split among the competing teams — 17.5 percent each.

— 29.7 percent is divided among the league's 27 other teams — 1.1 percent per team.

— 10 percent is given to the host team with the stipulation that two-thirds of the tickets go to season-ticket holders.

The Arizona Cardinals sold 40,797 season tickets this Denver Broncos safety Steve Atwater (27) heads up field after intercepting a pass intended for Oakland Raiders wide receiver Tim Brown (81) during the first quarter at Mile High Stadium in Denver Monday night. The Broncos went on to win 27-0.

Broncos clobber Raiders 27-0

DENVER (AP) — The Denver Broncos took the best shots the Oakland Raiders had to offer, then delivered some of their own.

The biggest blow was the scoreline, a 27-0 victory by Denver on Monday night that ended a run of frustration in which the Broncos had lost the last six games between the teams.

John Elway threw touchdown passes of 33 and 36 yards to Anthony Miller, and Denver held the NFL's highest-scoring team to only 19 yards of total offense in the second and third quarters combined.

The Broncos (4-3) had lost 11 of their previous 12 games to the Raiders (5-2), and the lopsided win avenged a 48-16 loss in Denver last year.

Elway, who came into the game with a 6-15 career record against the Raiders, completed 23 of 46 passes for 324 yards. Miller caught seven passes for 149 yards, and Jason Elam kicked four field goals.

The Raiders, who had been averaging 30.5 points and 396 yards a game, finished with only 169 yards.

Denver forced Raiders quarterback Jeff Hostetler from the game late in the third quarter, sacking him twice and sending him to the locker room to have X-rays on his larynx.

It was the second straight game in which Denver had not allowed a touchdown and its first shutout since Sept. 27, 1992. The Broncos also ended a seven-game losing streak on Monday night games.

The first quarter featured three turnovers, two fights and the ejection of Broncos linebacker Dave Wyman. Elam's 30-yard field goal, following Steve Atwater's interception, was the only score of the period.

On the game's second play from scrimmage, Hostetler's high pass was tipped by running back Derrick Fenner and Atwater intercepted, returning 18

McNown to start against Stanford, Donahue says

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Freshman quarterback Cade McNown will start against Stanford on Saturday despite his sub-par performance against Arizona over the weekend, according to UCLA coach Terry Donahue.

Donahue also said he hopes senior linebacker Donnie Edwards, who hasn't played since suffering a compression fracture of a vertebra against No. 12 Oregon on Sept. 16, will start against the No. 23 Cardinal at Stanford Stadium.

It appeared that Edwards, a third-team All-American last year, would be able to return to action against Arizona, but the NCAA suspended him for that game for his alleged involvement with a sports agent.

McNown completed just 3-of-18 passes for 80 yards, but UCLA (4-2, 1-2 Pac-10) still managed to beat Arizona 17-10.

McNown was relieved by Ryan Fien late in the third quarter. Fien, a junior who began the season as UCLA's starting quarterback, completed 6-of-10 passes for 104 yards and the first touchdown pass of his college career.

"I said last week, I'm really convinced we're (also) going to need Ryan and Rob (Walker) along the way," Donahue said Monday at his weekly meeting with reporters. "I was real happy with Ryan. I thought he came in and did a fine job when called upon.

"Several backup players have

"PICK IT AND WIN" CONTEST WINNER

Graduate student Jon Ruterma, who received his bachelor's degree from Notre Dame and is studying statistics at ASU, was the Week Seven winner of the State Press Sports "PICK IT AND WIN" contest for ASU football games.

Jon picked ASU to defeat the BYU Cougars 30-21, only one point off the actual score of ASU 29, BYU 21. Since none of the contestants correctly picked the exact score, Jon's prediction was determined to be the closest. Remember, the winner must correctly pick the winner and the final score of the game.

JON RUTERMAN

Ruterma on the game: "They needed the win, not only for their record, but they were honoring the best ASU team ever and it wouldn't have been fitting if they would've lost."

Why did you pick that score? "Traditionally, BYU doesn't believe in defense and ASU's offense is starting to come around, so I figured it might be a high score."

Season prediction: 6-5.

Favorite Sun Devils: Linebacker Scott Von der Ahe and wide receiver Keith Poole. Ruterma admitted partiality to Von der Ahe because it was his 31-yard interception return late in the game which all but sealed his victory in the contest. "He got that interception that won the contest for me. I was thinking at least we're going to win, but if we don't get another touchdown, I probably won't win the contest."

On Poole: "He's really a playmaker. Look at some of the catches he makes."

NOTE: There will be no contest this week due to ASU's bye-week. We will begin accepting entries for the ASU-Oregon game next week.

season and those people will be vying for less than 5,000 tickets in a lottery conducted by the team sometime soon.

In the NFL's mail-in drawing, more than 35,000 people entered but only about 750 will win a pair of Super Bowl tickets.

The league and most teams give or sell their tickets to large corporate sponsors and prominent supporters.

Phoenix-based Del Webb Corp. was among 21 companies that paid $150,000 for corporate-sponsorship packages to the game. In exchange for having their logo displayed at Super Bowl events and getting invitations to exclusive parties, the companies receive around 30 tickets apiece.

"The outlandish calls from people asking for our tickets haven't started yet, but they probably will in the next 30 days," said Del Webb spokeswoman Martha Moyer.

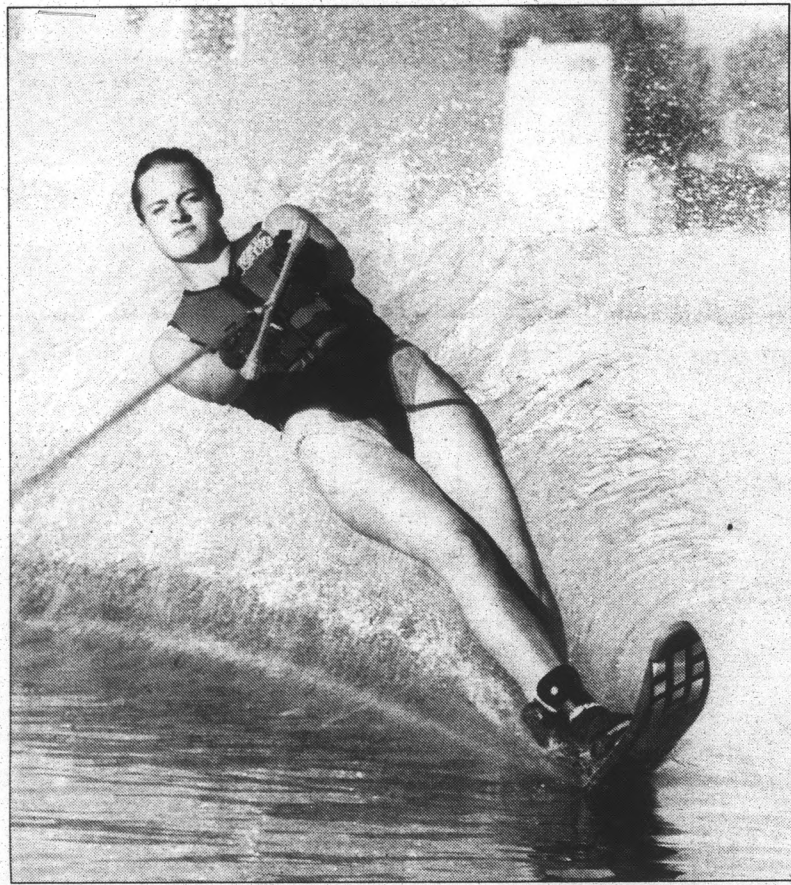

However, most of the companies plan to distribute the prized perks to executives, contractors, vendors and employees.

Intel Corp. is raffling off its 24 tickets to its 5,000 Phoenix-area employees. Chances cost $20 each with all the money going to charity.

That won't be the case with scalpers, many of whom said they expect to make some serious money from the handful of Super Bowl tickets they buy from sources they prefer not to identify.

"I think I might get up to 100 tickets," bragged one broker who spoke on condition of anonymity. "I usually pay double or triple the face value to get them. And with the going rate $1,400 for the cheapest seats... I should be rolling in dough by halftime."

Renee Miller finished second in the slalom event at the National Collegiate Water Ski Association National Championships in Austin, Texas last weekend.

Miller earns 2nd at championships

BY RON MATEJKO
STATE PRESS

The ASU water skiing team didn't finish as high as expected in the National Collegiate Water Ski Association National Championships at the Austin Aquaplex in Austin, Texas; last weekend.

ASU placed seventh in the event, which included 12 of the top teams in the nation. Each team represented its respective conference as a champion.

"It was disappointing for me," Coach Dave Phillips said. "My goal was to finish in the top five. We needed better performances from the women's jump and the men's trick."

The only top-five finish for ASU was by All-American Renee Miller, who placed second in the slalom. The only skier to beat Miller was Ronnie Barton, who is ranked first in the world in the event.

Phillips said despite the finish, the team got a lot out of the experience.

"We learned a lot. We need to have a curfew next time; we didn't have one," he said. "The teams that had a better chance at winning were stricter about it. We had self-imposed curfews, but next time there will be a coach-imposed one."

The next tournament for ASU will be this weekend at Crystal Point Estates in Phoenix.

yards to the Raiders 19. Elam converted four plays later.

The Raiders squandered a scoring opportunity later in the quarter, driving to the Denver 13, where Harvey Williams fumbled. Ex-Raider Lionel Washington returned 38 yards, but Wyman was ejected for scuffling with Hostetler at the end of the play.

Moments later, the Broncos crossed midfield on Miller's 17-yard reception, but Miller fumbled and Oakland linebacker Mike Jones recovered at the 30.

Elway completed 20-yard passes to Shannon Sharpe and Mike Pritchard and a 16-yarder to Miller to set up another field goal by Elam, from 32 yards, for a 6-0 lead with 11:43 left in the half.

Elway's 24-yard pass to Miller put Denver in scoring position again, but the drive ended on downs at the Oakland 26 when Terrell Davis dropped Elway's fourth-down pass in the left flat.

come in and done fine jobs, we're getting some better bench play than we've had."

Donahue said he's considered playing two quarterbacks on a regular basis the way No. 5 USC does with Brad Otton and Kyle Wachholtz.

"I don't know right now that our situation is the same as their situation," Donahue said. "Unless you have two guys who are as talented as USC's guys, I think the hesitancy is if you get a quarterback who is in good rhythm, is moving the team, I would generally put hesitant to take away that rhythm.

"I'd prefer to stay with the starter if he's on the money. It's just kind of a preference."

Rugby team on hot streak

From Staff Reports

In one swift move the Sun Devil Rugby Football Club equaled its win total from last year. The team compiled a 4-1 record en route to a second-place finish at the Camelback Invitational Rugby Tournament last weekend.

All of last year ASU, which was in a rebuilding season, only racked up three wins. Last year's win total was broken this year in just one weekend, which was made all the sweeter for the Sun Devils since three of the wins were over UofA.

"It means a lot to us because we beat the total wins from last season," said senior winger Nic Martin. "It was great to beat UofA because they're our archrival."

ASU lost to the Camp Pendleton team of the Southern California division II league. The Marines defeated the Sun Devils 14-0 in the finale.

Up next for ASU is a match against NAU this Saturday at noon on the ASU band field.
