Sexual assault investigation deepens

BY GARIN GROFF AND DUSTIN KRUGEL
STATE PRESS

A fifth Sun Devil basketball player is wanted for questioning in connection with an incident that occurred early Wednesday morning in which police said two women were imprisoned at gunpoint and one was raped.

Three highly-touted basketball recruits — who are sitting out this season because they do not meet academic qualifications — have been charged in connection with the case. A fourth player was questioned but faces no charges.

Police planned to interview the fifth player — freshman guard Duane Davis — Monday, but Chief of ASU Police Lanny Standridge said he did not know if the questioning occurred.

Police want to question Davis because he may have been a witness to the incident, Standridge said.

One of the victims said Monday that Davis drove her and others to Sonora Center, 725 E. Adelphi Drive, where police said the crime occurred. However, she said Davis was not involved.

Police said Monday that one of the players threatened the victims with a pellet gun. Although the gun was not considered life-threatening, the man was still charged with aggravated assault because the weapon provided a danger in the eyes of the victim, Standridge said.

Standridge also said police believe the fourth basketball player, freshman center Okeme Oziwo, was present for at least part of the alleged incident. He was questioned but has not been charged.

When police wanted to question Oziwo on Wednesday, he was already in Seattle preparing for Thursday's game at the University of Washington. He flew back to Arizona Thursday for questioning and

Victim claims players previously abused her

BY GARIN GROFF
STATE PRESS

Some of the basketball players charged with holding two women captive and raping one had threatened the two before and physically abused them, one of the victims said Monday night.

In an interview with the State Press, the woman who was not raped said she had been locked in a room two or three times before and that her friend had been locked in a room even more times.

The State Press is withholding the woman's name. When given the name, Chief of ASU Police Lanny Standridge would not confirm or deny if the woman was one of the victims. But her account of the incident matches details so far unreleased to the public by police.

The 18-year-old woman is not a student, but lived in a residence hall with the other victim, whom police said was raped.

Repeated attempts to contact the players involved were unsuccessful.

The woman, who met the players in January, characterized her relationship with the players as friendly, but would not say if she had dated or had sex with any of them in the past.

"They were just real cool people to be with," she said.

That changed in the last few weeks, she said. When she visited the players recently, she said one of them threw her against the wall when she said she wanted to go home.

"After a while, it started getting worse and worse, and they just overdid it," she said.

The freshman players — Thomas Prince, Rico Harris and George "Gee" Gervin — were arrested and charged Thursday in connection with the crime. They are sitting out this season because they do not meet academic qualifications. A fourth player, freshman center Okeme Oziwo, was questioned but faces no charges.

Police advised the woman to seek counseling, but she has not.

"I really don't like talking about it," she said. "I'm just trying to forget it happened."

Sigma Chi frat suspended by review board

BY TIMOTHY TAIT
STATE PRESS

The Sigma Chi Fraternity has been suspended from the Interfraternity Council for one year following last week's investigation by the Greek Review Board in the wake of two fights involving fraternity members and African Americans.

The Friday suspension effectively excludes the fraternity from any Greek activities, including Rush. However, the fraternity can remain intact.

Sigma Chi President Mark Buntz said the Greek Review Board's decision was motivated by political pressure.

"We were railroaded," he said. "The facts became secondary. We were definitely prejudged."

"The board was tremendously swayed by the racial tension on campus."

Sigma Chi plans to appeal the decision.

However, Denise Trimble, president of the Pan-Hellenic Council, said Sigma Chi's punishment was consistent with their actions.

"The facts have shown that they have a problem with violence," she said. "They have to be held accountable for every member of the fraternity — they were not railroaded."

The Interfraternity Council investigation came after two Sigma Chi members were involved in a fight with a black man following the Super Bowl. Tempe police have made no arrests.

Police also investigated Sigma Chi in August for the beating of an African-American man found inside the fraternity's house.

Fraternity member Bryan Southard was arrested, but the county attorney's office dropped the charges, calling the incident "mutual combat." However, several other fraternity members were arrested and charged with lying to police during the initial investigation.

Sigma Chi Vice President Bryan Beham said the review board disregarded the facts involving the fights during the hearing.

"If they had looked at the facts, they would have concluded that there were no racial overtones," he said.

The group received the worst possible sanctions under the power of the review board, Buntz said.

"The decision is irrational because the punishment does not even come close to the charges that we were up for," he said.

Trimble said the fraternity should look at the year of disqualification from IFC as an opportunity to improve internal problems in the fraternity.

"They need to look at this as an advantage," she said. "They can use this time to fix some internal problems."

missed both games against UW and Washington State last week.

Thomas Prince, Rico Harris and George "Gee" Gervin were arrested and charged Thursday in connection with the alleged crime. Some of the charges brought against the three were aggravated assault, threatening and intimidation, unlawful imprisonment, kidnapping and sexual assault. Only Prince faces all of these charges.

The players were released shortly after their arrest, but Standridge said the victims should not have to worry about their safety and players are cooperating with police. Police advised the suspects not to contact the victims, Standridge said.

Meanwhile, ASU athletic officials scrambled Monday to defuse the situation. Standridge and the officials fielded media questions all day.

Frieder told KTAR (620 AM) Monday night that if the players are convicted, they will not play for ASU.

"We will be in bad shape next year, but I would rather be 0-27 and making the right decision rather than making the wrong decision," Frieder said.

He added that Oziwo could face disciplinary actions if he broke a team rule. Oziwo has also been suspended indefinitely.

Interim Athletic Director Christine Wilkinson said ASU is ready to move according to the student-athlete conduct policy when police release a final report. She said ASU immediately reacted to the situation when it arose Wednesday by having Oziwo return to Arizona.

"The first step was requesting that the student-athlete return from an away game and that was within hours from being notified," Wilkinson said. "We couldn't have acted any faster than that. "We initially took action even when there was potential involvement. I think that was real appropriate on our part. Somebody might question that we acted maybe too quickly."

Wilkinson added that it would be inappropriate for the ASU Athletic Department to conduct its own investigation. The Department of Public Safety will conduct the investigation, she said.

Prince, Gervin and Harris were expected to play next season for the Sun Devils with sophomore eligibility remaining.

She said she spoke about the incident in hopes that she could prevent the players from treating anyone else the way she claims she was treated.

"They think they can get away with things because they play sports and they know that nothing's going to happen to them," she said. "I guess they didn't think that anybody's going to believe us."

She gave the following account of the incident:

Freshman player Duane Davis picked her and the other woman up early Wednesday morning at their apartment and drove them to the Sonora Center, 725 E. Adelphi Drive, where two of the players live.

Davis was not charged in connection with the incident, but police said Monday they planned to question him.

Once at the Sonora Center, each woman willingly went into a bedroom with a player.

One of the other players, who wore a ski mask, jumped through one of the bedroom windows and pointed a gun. One of the women screamed and ran out of the room, causing the other to scream and run out of the bedroom. The man took off his mask and the players apologized, saying they didn't mean to scare the women.

The women began to feel uncomfortable.

"We asked if we could leave, and they said no," said the woman, who is not affiliated with the University.

The women separated again, and the woman was told to have sex with one of the players while others watched. She refused, but agreed to do so if the other players left the room.

"He told me that I had to give him oral sex, and if I did not, that (the player with the gun) was going to shoot me."

The other players left the room and the lights were turned off. But the players snuck back in, one hiding under the bed while the other was near the door.

"I saw that someone else was in the room, and I started screaming," the woman said.

After this, the player who wanted to have sex with her released her.

"Then he told me to go home because I wasn't worth his basketball career," she said.

One of the players offered the women a ride home, but they refused and walked.

"We didn't even think we would leave alive," she said. "When we got home, all we were doing was crying and hugging each other."

She said the two have not talked about the incident with each other.

Now, she said she is trying to put the incident behind her. She said she was going to attend ASU next semester but plans on attending an out-of-state college because of the incident.

She has since moved back with her mother in Phoenix, she said.

She added that the other student left ASU to move in with her parents out of state.

She said she does not wish any harm on the players, but does not want them to go to ASU or play basketball.

"I don't think anything of them," she said. "They don't even exist to me. They just mess with others' lives, and they really don't care."

Hamas kills 13 in Tel Aviv holiday bombing

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Muslim suicide bombers took their terror campaign to Tel Aviv's biggest shopping center Monday, killing at least 13 people and wounding 109. Victims included children dressed in costumes for a Jewish holiday.

The attack outside the Dizengoff Center shopping mall was the fourth bombing in Israel in nine days. Forty-seven people died in the three previous attacks, including 18 in a bus bombing in Jerusalem on Sunday.

The Muslim militant Hamas group claimed responsibility for Monday's attack, as it did for the other three. The bombing war, which has targeted the heart of Israel's two major cities, has traumatized the country and left peacemaking with the Palestinians in a shambles.

Tel Aviv Police Chief Gabi Last said the suicide bomber was on foot, crossing with shoppers at the busy intersection of King George and Dizengoff streets when he set off the bomb. Witnesses said the attacker struck next to a line of people waiting at a cash machine.

Israel radio said 13 people died Monday, including the bomber. Police earlier had said 109 were wounded, but cautioned that the count was preliminary.

Witness Eli Shurany said he saw bodies flying through the air, among them a woman and a girl, about 10 years old, who were killed instantly. "There was one girl with the bottom of her leg blown off," Shurany said.

Children in costumes for the Purim holiday, which began tonight, were among the casualties.

A woman said she was at the mall with three daughters in costume when the blast went off. "The children were covered with glass," said the woman. One of her daughters was cut.

"All her back was full of glass fragments. She was bleeding. She has a hole in her back. It was horrifying," said the woman, who did not give her name.

Most of the wounded were taken to Ichilov Hospital, which treated four children. One was in serious condition, two were in stable condition, and one child was released.

An empty baby carriage stood several yards from where the bomb went off. A mother pulled her sobbing daughter away, tears streaking the Purim makeup on the girl's face.

Israelis, angry and frightened after the wave of bombings, shouted "Death to Palestine" and "Death to the Arabs," as they tried to surge through police barriers around the bombing site. People jeered Prime Minister Shimon Peres, the principal architect of Israel's peace policies, when he appeared at the site.

Hamas claimed responsibility for Monday's bombing in a call to Israel radio. In a later call to the station, a man said the bombings were a joint operation between Hamas and the smaller sister group Islamic Jihad. The caller said the bomber was from Islamic Jihad and the attacks would continue.

Tonight, Palestinian security forces announced the arrest of the man they called the "mastermind" of three of the last four suicide bombings in Israel: Mohammed Abu Wardeh, 28, of the West Bank town of Ramallah.

Brig. Zakariya Baloushi, deputy chief of Palestinian intelligence, said Abu Wardeh apparently received instructions via coded messages from abroad, and Israel TV said his handlers were based in Damascus.

The bombings threaten to paralyze Mideast peacemaking, and prompted Peres to declare war on Hamas and suspend peace talks with Syria. Israel's ambassador to the United States said in Washington that the Israeli delegates had been ordered to return home.

The ambassador, Itamar Rabinovitch, said in Washington that Israel was establishing a special group to combat "terrorist organizations anywhere."

Israel declares war on Hamas

AL FAWAR, West Bank (AP) — Launching a tough campaign against Muslim militants, Israeli troops raided the Al Fawar refugee camp Monday, herding hundreds of Palestinians into a schoolyard and arresting at least 30 wanted men.

The raid followed Prime Minister Shimon Peres' declaration of "total war against Hamas," an Islamic group that killed 44 people and paralyzed Mideast peacemaking with three suicide bombings in Israel in eight days. Three bombers also died, including two from Al Fawar.

In Jerusalem, where 19 people died in a bus bombing on Sunday, security on buses was tightened Monday. About 1,000 soldiers were stationed at bus stops to monitor passengers boarding buses. An extra 1,200 police officers patrolled Jerusalem.

In Gaza City, thousands of Palestinians gathered for a demonstration to denounce the Hamas attacks and express support for peace with Israel. Yasser Arafat's Fatah movement organized the rally in the seat of his government out of concern that the bombings have eroded support in Israel for peace talks with the Palestinians.

"Yes to peace, no to violence," read a banner in Hebrew. "Terrorism is our enemy," proclaimed another sign.

The demonstration marked the first time since self-rule began in May 1994 that Palestinians took to the streets to distance themselves from attacks by militants.

A Hamas terrorist exploded a bomb in this Tel Aviv shopping center Monday, killing himself and at least 11 others, including three children. The attack came while the bomber walked along the street during the peak shopping hours and marks the fourth Hamas bombing in nine days.

Under pressure from Israel, Arafat's security forces rounded up 125 more suspected militants overnight in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, bringing to 380 the number arrested by Palestinian forces since two bombings Feb. 25.

Serb general faces U.N. trial

THE HAGUE, Netherlands (AP) — A Serb general pleaded innocent to war crimes charges Monday, claiming he was facing trial by a U.N. tribunal just because he fought for the Bosnian Serbs.

Gen. Djordje Djukic, who was indicted Friday after he refused to give evidence against the Bosnian Serb leadership, faces life in prison if found guilty for his role in the 1992-95 shelling of Sarajevo that killed 10,000 civilians.

"The fact that I appear before this tribunal means that any member of the army of Republika Srpska can appear here ... I will leave it to the tribunal to solve this dilemma," the 61-year-old Djukic told the court, referring to the Serb entity that comprises 49 percent of Bosnia.

He took notes while the indictment was being read. When asked to enter a plea, he said he had "not done anything that would have to put me in front of this tribunal today."

Tribunal prosecutors claim Djukic, a senior aide to the Bosnian Serb army commander, Gen. Ratko Mladic, coordinated the logistical support behind 3 1/2 years of Serb artillery attacks on the Bosnian capital.

The U.N. court put Djukic in detention after he was extradited to the Netherlands by the Bosnian government, whose forces arrested him when his car made a wrong turn in Sarajevo in January. Djukic called the arrest a "kidnap" in court Monday.

"I was captured, or kidnapped, as a civilian. I was wearing civilian clothes and I was on a road that was under international control," Djukic said.

Djukic's lawyer, Milan Vujin, labeled the proceedings a "judicial, legal nonsense," saying he believed the tribunal had broken its own rules in indicting Djukic.

Vujin said he would study prosecution evidence against the general before deciding what kind of pre-trial motions to file.

Apartheid trial postponed

Ex-officials allegedly sponsored internal terrorism

DURBAN, South Africa (AP) — A judge has delayed opening a trial expected to uncover explosive details about the white minority government's fight to preserve its power.

The trial of former Defense Minister Magnus Malan and some of his top generals was to have opened Monday, but Durban Supreme Court Justice Jan Hugo granted defense lawyers another week to prepare.

"My conscience is clear," Malan said after the hearing Monday. "We have a very good judge."

He and 19 other defendants are accused of sending fighters loyal to the Zulu nationalist Inkatha Freedom Party on murder missions against anti-apartheid activists, particularly those linked to the African National Congress.

The indictment, issued in December, described the massacre of 13 people — including six children under the age of 10 — at a house in the KwaMakutha black township in 1987.

Convictions in the case would prove longstanding allegations by President Nelson Mandela and the ANC that white leaders instigated black-on-black violence during the apartheid era to divide and weaken opposition to white minority rule.

Police have been implicated in political killings — even before apartheid fell in 1994 — but never before have such high-level officials been charged.

White leaders called the trial the start of the long-feared ANC witch hunt against apartheid officials. They asked Mandela to grant a blanket amnesty for all the defendants but he refused, saying they had rejected previous opportunities to apply for amnesty.

STATE PRESS Editorial Taking back ASASU

Take hope, ASU. Eleven students have expressed interest in running for the Associated Students of ASU presidency. Interest in the other offices, including senate seats, is also high.

ASASU is an organization in turmoil. It is a ship that desperately needs to be righted.

The events of the past year have tarnished student faith in their government more than ever before. But now would be the worst time for students to turn their back on the process.

Students must take back their student government. Most on the Third Floor have forgotten what they are supposed to be doing. Politics and power have become the sole motivator for many student politicians.

Holding office in ASASU is seen as a resume-builder. Titles are seen as something to be paraded around, for every student to gaze at.

This has to end. To begin with, these are the things that ASASU needs to change:

- Involvement with students. Students must feel a kinship with their student leaders. Student leaders should make every effort to interact with the student body.

But right now, the only time student leaders are seen rubbing elbows with the students is when they're running for re-election.

The only way ASASU will know what student concerns are is if they are out talking to the students. Rather than staging events, perhaps ASASU officials should just walk down from the Third Floor, go out into the MU and just talk with passing students.

- The student-Legislature link. ASASU has much potential, but nowhere is the potential higher than in its lobbyist role.

It isn't enough for ASASU to know what student concerns are. It must actively voice those concerns to Arizona lawmakers.

The only way to do that is to aggressively lobby the Legislature.

ASASU must make it a point to talk to legislators regularly — whether by picking up a phone and calling them, or going down to the Capitol to mingle.

It's not enough to merely have the ear of the governor, the regents or the state Legislature. ASASU must use it.

- Competition. In order to have a healthy democracy, one must have contested political races. This is what we are hoping for this semester.

It is doubtful that all 11 presidential hopefuls will make it through the petitions process. But it is clear that ASU students will have a decent choice for ASASU president this semester.

Only when races are contested are candidates forced to campaign. To do that, they must give thought to the issues facing the student body, and come up with intelligent solutions.

More importantly, voters need a choice other than whether or not to vote.

- Student involvement. This, ultimately, is the only way that ASASU is going to change.

Unless students take an active role in ASASU, it will remain a highly-politicized organization. One that is not receptive to student input and concerns.

Unless students show that they want student government to work for them, nothing will change.

Let this spring be remembered as the year that the student body finally took back ASASU.

Athletes, sexual assault go hand in hand

Since I've been a columnist at the State Press, I've written three columns that had something to do with rape.

I didn't want to have to talk about it again. I thought I'd exhausted the issue last semester when a rash of date rapes struck a chord of fear in the women of this campus.

But now it seems I have no choice.

The arrest of three ASU basketball players for allegedly sexually assaulting two women in the Sonora Center serves only to prove my theory that male athletes and degradation of women seem to go hand in hand.

Last semester Mike Tyson's return to boxing was hotly debated. I was of the unpopular opinion that a man convicted of rape should not be allowed to walk down the street, let alone stand in the boxing ring and get paid millions of dollars to throw a few punches.

This semester, Magic Johnson has been stealing headlines. The HIV-positive basketball player's return to the court after a brief retirement has brought him more kudos than scorn. People seem to conveniently forget how Johnson contracted the virus — by indiscriminate sex with scores of women, even while he was personally and sexually involved with a woman who is now his wife.

Sure Johnson didn't rape them — those women were probably willing to sleep with him, or any other basketball player or sports figure who happened to ask.

Professional athletes, like rock stars, get laid. Period. One can speculate that it's the same with male student athletes. I'm not saying every single male athlete runs amok screwing every woman he sees, but someone who plays on, say, ASU's basketball team has an easier time meeting women than a guy who spends his time examining paramecium under a microscope in the Biology Department.

The ASU basketball players involved in the incident have not been convicted, so of course, I must reserve judgment on their guilt or innocence until all the facts are in and have been examined thoroughly in a court of law.

Even then justice may not be served, since men convicted of sexual assault usually are not handed the sentences they deserve anyway.

But the athletes' guilt or innocence is not the point. An incident that could lead to such an arrest should never even come close to occurring, especially when those accused of the crime are under public scrutiny.

Male college athletes, especially at a school like ASU who recruits them carefully to assemble a winning team, are prize possessions. The men involved in the incident, though not yet actually playing on the basketball team, are considered its future.

LIZ MONTALBANO

To put it bluntly, they are the ones expected to bring in the bucks for a struggling ASU basketball program in years to come.

They are the ones who have a shot at big-time fame in the NBA.

Even if they're not convicted of any crime, the arrests could deal a fatal blow to their reputations.

In a perfect world. More realistically, conviction or no conviction, nothing will happen to them at all.

It's no secret that men, especially men in positions of authority or fame, or who possess substantial financial worth, can easily get away with sexual harassment, assault or rape.

Mike Tyson is just one example. Sen. Bob Packwood and O.J. Simpson are a couple of others.

Athletes especially are exonerated of guilt for such crimes. After all, with all that testosterone racing through their veins, it's no surprise they feel the need to have sex every once in awhile. And the woman (or women) were probably asking for it anyway.

Male athletes often consider themselves invincible. On the professional level, they're famous, they're rich and they have their pick of beautiful women with whom they can frolic. What more could a man ask for?

And college athletes at schools with big athletic programs are much the same. Many are paid or given preferential treatment by their schools, their faces are splashed across ESPN and ripe college women are lining up for their attention and affection.

But no male athlete, professional or college, should treat women with anything but the utmost respect.

And if it is proven that any of them do, they should be dealt with accordingly.

Male athletes at other universities have been accused of rape, but rarely are there solid convictions. And even if there are, the accused still get off the hook on some technicality or another.

Sadly, rape and the sexual assault of women is still an excusable crime. If you're an athlete and a lot of people are depending on you for their financial gain, it's even more forgivable.

This isn't how it should be, but in a society where the almighty dollar reigns supreme, where men are allowed to abuse women but women who fight back are sentenced to prison terms, it's just the way it is.

And unless someone sets a precedent against it, it's going to be that way forever.

Buchanan's positions not akin to Catholic beliefs

Ever religious, which befits a believer with 16 years of Catholic school education, Patrick Buchanan has asked the faithful to "say your prayers about this cause and campaign."

As the Jesuit fathers could have told Buchanan in the eight years he was presumably listening to them in high school and college, God answers all prayers but sometimes the answer is "no."

While awaiting the Almighty's response to the requests of the newly-formed Buchanan Prayer Group, it's safe to assume that Pat the good Catholic is right with the Lord. That's private. Whether he's squared away with church teaching on issues of social justice is something else. That's public.

Many of Buchanan's positions, mostly heaved as hunks of raw meat to his starved-for-a-simple-solution followers, are far out of line with the teachings of the United States Catholic Conference and its 350-member bishops.

Since the mid-1970s, the conference has published a document every four years called "Political Responsibility: proclaiming the gospel of life, protecting the least among us and pursuing the common good." The 1995 statement covers 20 topics, including immigration, foreign aid, capital punishment, abortion, housing, human rights, food and agriculture.

Some of Buchanan's surest applause lines are for his promise to build "a security fence along our southern border" and stop illegal immigration "cold." For a further freeze: "a basic moratorium on legal immigration for five years because I think this country is in danger of pulling apart."

The bishops, remembering a century ago when U.S. Catholicism was an immigrant church, teach differently: "(We) support a generous U.S. immigration policy and U.S. commitment to providing temporary safe haven for those in need." The bishops pledge their "solidarity with the undocumented."

COLMAN MCCARTHY
Columnist

It's natural that they would. The bishops understand that a new immigrant church is taking shape, much as the old one once was. This time, they are Hispanics pouring in through Tijuana and Nogales, not Europeans being stamped in Ellis Island. They are Asians who send their kids to the kind of Catholic elementary schools that also took in the Scotch-Irish Buchanan — then called Paddy Joe — in the 1940s.

Despite the increased wealth and social standing now enjoyed by large numbers of grandchildren of Catholic immigrants, the bishops see no need for fences or furies to keep America from "pulling apart."

The Buchanan Doctrine wants not only to keep the poor out but to keep U.S. wealth in. "I'm telling you right now," he says with customary subtlety, "that I will phase out all country-to-country foreign aid within three years and save $60 billion."

Catholic bishops, aware that the United States is last among Western nations in the percentage of GNP that goes to foreign aid, "reject the illusion of isolationism." They back "a reshaped foreign aid program designed to combat poverty with sustainable development and economic opportunities for the poor."

On capital punishment, the bishops say no, Buchanan yes. Unless he has a Saulish conversion, it's unimaginable that Buchanan, vehement in support of state-sanctioned killing, would ever approvingly quote the bishops' teaching: "Our society should reject the death penalty and seek methods of dealing with violent crime that are more consistent with the gospel visions of respect for life and Christ's message of healing love."

About the only issue among the 20 where the Catholic bishops and the Catholic Buchanan are together is abortion. Even in shared opposition, they don't speak in the same tone. Buchanan's is judgmental, the bishops' firm but understanding.

Buchanan is not the first Catholic politician to ignore his bishops. But he had a father — raised, married and buried in the church — who forbade his children to question Catholicism: "If you think that, you can leave my house."

Metaphorically, Pat's been gone for some time.

Latest rape accusation calls for proper, decisive action

Once again, a horrible violation of a human's basic right to control his or her body has been committed. As a society, we have become so desensitized to rape, indeed, any kind of violence against other humans, that the State Press's headline about the alleged rape of two women by three basketball athletes at ASU inspires little to no shock. Hearing about rape or brutality on the news allows us to distance ourselves from the reality of the horror. This time, it hits a little bit closer to home. This time, we can, as an ASU community, show that this is simply not acceptable.

One of the many aspects of this scenario which disgusts me is that three ASU athletes are responsible. As a sport-obsessed culture (recall the Super Bowl hype), we prize our athletes above all else. Athletes in the limelight can do no wrong. Unfortunately, many male athletes abuse this power, assuming a type of superiority that exempts them from responsible behavior. Whatever happened to heroes, let alone role models? I don't think Bruce Jenner was on the Wheaties box because he degraded and raped women. Because so few people seem to be worthy of admiration anymore, we look at our athletes as gods. Maybe it is time to look elsewhere.

In addition, these three basketball players, Thomas Prince, Rico Harris and George "Gee" Gervin, represent ASU in everything they do. Clearly, this is of little or no importance to these boys. Their identity as ASU athletes did not motivate them to represent the University positively. Instead, they felt it gave them sanction to physically and mentally coerce and violate others. These three athletes have been given everything by the University — money, support, prestige and truly, an identity for three people that otherwise may not contribute much positive to this world.

I support collegiate athletics, but I do not support the blatant abuse of this privileged position. It seems that we forget that an institution of higher education is for learning. It is not about sports or any other extracurricular activity. Those are simply the perks that we, as students, have as opportunities. ASU can show that it values its integrity as an academic institution by refusing to allow Prince, Harris and Gervin to play basketball here ever again.

If we can unite as an ASU community to oppose the participation of these three in sport, we take one small step toward recognizing both the true responsibility of the school and that the crime of rape should always lead to punishment. My heart goes out to those two women, and I hope their justice is served.

Survey finds CEO salaries rose 23 percent in 1995

NEW YORK (AP) — Belt-tightening has yet to reach the top U.S. corporate offices, where the average compensation for chief executives jumped 23 percent in 1995 to $4.37 million, a survey found.

The consulting firm Pearl Meyer & Partners queried 35 service and industrial companies with average revenues of $21 billion. It found CEO base salaries at the companies increased to $991,300, a 4 percent jump over the 1994 salary of $950,700.

But salaries made up less than a quarter of the CEO's total earnings. The real windfall came in compensation tied to performance — annual bonuses and stock option grants — which totaled 77 percent of the CEOs' pay.

The average stock option was valued at $1.52 million, a 45 percent increase over 1994's $1.05 million.

The average bonus, which was paid in 1995 for performance in 1994, was $1.22 million, a 39 percent increase over the prior year's bonus of $876,000.

Diane D. Posnak, managing director of Pearl Meyer, would not disclose which companies were included in the survey, saying only they were "Fortune 100 types" that had been surveyed in previous years.

She confirmed, however, that AT&T, which announced earlier this year it was laying off 40,000 workers, was among the companies included in the survey.

Last week, a filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission reported that AT&T Chairman Robert Allen took home a paycheck of $3.3 million, about $512,000 less than in 1994.

His pay cut was due to a $1.6 billion restructuring charge taken by AT&T, which meant Allen did not meet a target for boosting shareholder value.

But Allen received 750,000 stock options, presently worth an estimated $9.7 million, following announcement of the restructuring into three separate companies. The options can be exercised over the next four years only under certain conditions.

The generous CEO salaries at a time when many businesses are handing out pink slips has led GOP presidential contenders to bash big business. Pat Buchanan even urged a "peasant" revolt against the corporate establishment.

On Monday, President Clinton asked an audience at a Detroit fund-raiser how it could be that with the stock market hitting records highs, "big companies are laying people off, downsizing them."

POLICE REPORT

ASU police reported the following incidents Monday:

- Someone broke into Life Science C-Wing and stole unspecified property.
- A student was arrested for alleged disorderly conduct at 606 Alpha Drive.
- Two students were arrested for allegedly being in possession of marijuana.
- Two men and two women were contacted while trespassing in Sun Devil Stadium. The four were advised of trespassing laws and left the area.

Tempe police reported the following incidents Monday:

- A woman was charged with aggravated assault after allegedly striking a police officer. The officer was placing her son under arrest for a probation violation when she struck him, causing the officer to fall to the ground.

- A woman was arrested and charged with aggravated assault after allegedly getting into a fight with her ex-boyfriend. The woman walked into her ex-boyfriend's bedroom, where she saw him in bed with another woman. She grabbed a knife out of the kitchen, and returned to the bedroom, where a brawl ensued. In the fight, the man received a 1 1/2 inch cut.

Palestinian Attorney General Khaled Kidreh said that members of the Hamas military wing, Izzedine al Qassam, were among those arrested and that some weapons were seized.

With the raid in Al Fawar, Israel sent a message to Arafat that it considers itself in charge in most of the West Bank, despite a troop withdrawal from most Palestinian towns.

At about 4 a.m., hundreds of Israeli soldiers surrounded Al Fawar, south of the West Bank town of Hebron. Troops announced a curfew over a loudspeaker, and ordered all men older than 16 to gather in the schoolyard. About 800 men went to the school.

There, soldiers collected identity cards, told the men to sit on the ground, and called them one by one for questioning. Other troops searched homes in the camp. The army said at least 30 wanted men were arrested.

The army commander of the Hebron district, identified only as Col. Gadi, said dozens of suspected militants were arrested in Al Fawar and Hebron, including men who helped the two suicide bombers who attacked Feb. 25.

The colonel said security forces asked Israel's Supreme Court to demolish the homes of the two bombers. Sunday's assailant reportedly lived in Hebron.

Swiss Scientists Discover New Energy Product

Lugano, Switzerland—After 25 years of research Lightning 828 was developed with the help of Swiss Laboratories. After extensive testing with amazing results, Lightning 828 is now available in the United States. Scientists are amazed at Lightning 828's results on improved memory, attitude and athletic performance.

In a double blind cross-over trial on university students in Italy, Lightning 828 was given twice daily for 12 weeks. The results were astonishing. Students obtained higher scores in math, logic and physical education.

This new discovery has been a windfall for working and active people that seem to run short of energy around mid-afternoon and need a little extra lift. Lightning 828 when taken in the morning gives a sustained, balanced form of energy throughout the day.

During an interview in Chicago, a beautician stated, "I used to go home exhausted after being on my feet all day. Now it's just incredible. I go home with extra energy and really enjoy my family more." Lightning 828 is a necessary boost for students, professionals and senior citizens.

Lightning 828 is now available at Pharmacies including: Kmart, Albertsons, Drug Emporium and Osco Drugs.

SOUTH OF THE BORDER DISORDER

Officials: Pack your smarts for Rocky Point fun

BY PATTY KING
SPECIAL TO THE STATE PRESS

During spring break one year, Mary Weil sat in a Rocky Point restaurant as a rowdy group of college students roared by in a truck.

"We were talking about college kids and how they behave and the minute that happened, some kid came by and mooned us," she said.

Weil, a Tempe resident and the author of a Rocky Point travel guide, said students must temper their fun with safe, responsible behavior.

"The college students go down (to Rocky Point) for spring break, and they leave their brains at the border," she said.

Puerto Peñasco, Mexico, or Rocky Point, is a small coastal town 60 miles southwest of the Arizona border. Thousands of Arizona college students flock to the town's beaches each year during spring break.

Weil, who has visited Rocky Point once a month since 1992, said she considers drinking and driving to be the riskiest behavior in which students engage. Students need to realize that if they are injured in an accident, medical help cannot arrive as easily as in the United States, she said.

Jean Herges, manager of regional supervisors for Samaritan AirEvac, a Phoenix air ambulance service, said in U.S. cities such as Phoenix, patients can usually be in an operating room within 15 to 20 minutes of an accident.

However, in cases requiring air transport from Rocky Point, the flight time for one of Samaritan AirEvac's planes is 40 to 60 minutes each way, Herges said.

Additional time can be lost as students try to figure out who to call in an emergency and wait for a local ambulance to transport a patient to a local hospital, said a Puerto Peñasco physician who specializes in emergency medicine. The physician, who preferred not to be named, said a patient also must be stabilized at a hospital prior to being flown to Phoenix. He added that the entire process could take one to two hours.

The doctor also said two or three serious accidents requiring air-evac services occur each year during spring break.

"Usually, they are trauma — people in a coma, people with spinal cord injuries or people with exposed fractures or internal bleeding," he said.

The accidents are often caused by drinking and driving or sports activities such as water-skiing or all-terrain vehicles, he said.

Radawna Michelle, ASU Department of Public Safety crime prevention coordinator, said sexual assault is the biggest danger students face during spring break trips to Rocky Point. The dangers of date rape increase exponentially in situations where large amounts of alcohol are consumed, she said.

Behavior such as moving from party to party in hotels and on the beach or socializing with strangers can be contributing factors, she added.

Women who choose to drink can protect themselves against sexual assault by drinking in moderation, Michelle said. In addition, they need to trust their instincts and remove themselves from uncomfortable situations.

"If that means you're with a group of female friends and they leave you, go with them," she said. "Don't leave yourself alone."

Michelle also said students need to guard against theft. "(People) do things that they wouldn't necessarily do back on campus — leaving money lying around, leaving wallets with credit cards right out on the beach (or) leaving vehicles unlocked, for instance," she said. "People need to keep a close eye on their belongings."

Taking drugs into Mexico can also be detrimental for students, Michelle said.

"The Mexican government takes their law enforcement role very seriously regarding illegal drugs," she said.

Ricardo Hernandez Lecanda, third consul of Mexico at the Mexican Consulate in Phoenix, said the penalty for bringing illegal drugs into Mexico is 10 to 25 years in prison with no parole, according to the Mexican Federal Penal Code. Persons who sell or distribute drugs can receive an additional 10 to 25 years, he said. Illegal drugs include marijuana, cocaine and heroin.

Lecanda added that the laws apply to all of Mexico, although local police in Rocky Point might be more lenient in enforcing them to avoid offending the local tourist trade. However, students traveling in Mexico also risk arrest by the federal police, or federales, who patrol highways and visit towns.

"(To them), you are a potential criminal, and you are going to be treated as the potential criminal you are," he said.

Weil recommends that students also obtain Mexican auto insurance, which they can purchase in the Arizona towns of Ajo and Why or at the border.

"American insurance is of little value in Mexico, especially if you are in an auto accident," she said.

Insurance must be purchased for each day that the person will be in Mexico, she said. Prices are based on the value of the car and can run from $10 to $15 a day.

Weil added that students should prepare themselves well for the trip as well as their stay in Mexico.

"Make sure that your car is going to be in working order and that the oil's checked, and all the fluids are checked," she said. "Make sure, ... before you go, that your belts are all new."

Students should also bring items such as one gallon of drinking water per day per person, tarps or umbrellas for shade, toilet paper, tire pumps, jumper cables and long-sleeved shirts and long pants to protect them from the sun.

"It's a safe place to go if you use your common sense," Weil said.

State Department warns students to be cautious in foreign countries

By JEFF OWENS
STATE PRESS

Unless languishing in a Mexican jail sounds like a fun idea, ASU students should heed warnings by State Department officials about the dangers of being arrested in foreign countries.

The annual spring migration of ASU students to the beaches and bars of Mexico presents plenty of opportunities for trouble.

"That's one of the number one countries where Americans are arrested," said Nyda Budig, State Department Bureau of Consular Affairs public affairs officer.

According to the State Department, more than 2,200 American citizens were arrested abroad in 1995. More than 1,300 of those arrests involved the use or possession of drugs. Many were arrested for violating local laws pertaining to the use of alcohol and the behavior related to it.

"The biggest trouble (for American students in Mexico) is drinking and drunk and disorderly conduct," Budig said. "For college students and their parents, it can be potentially very embarrassing and certainly very expensive."

The State Department also warns that "once an American leaves U.S. soil, U.S. laws and constitutional rights no longer apply. U.S. consular officers can visit jailed Americans to see that they are being fairly and humanely treated, but cannot get them out of jail or intervene in a foreign country's legal system on their behalf."

An American consular officer at the U.S. Embassy in Mexico City said if a student gets in trouble, the Embassy can do little to help.

"If the person is detained, the first thing to do is call the nearest American consular agency," he said. "Then you have to wait and see what the police do. It depends on the offense. Sometimes an apology and a promise to pay fines is enough. But in more severe cases, we can't do anything. The main rule is 'Don't do anything abroad that you wouldn't do in the U.S.'"

The Mexican government has increased efforts in recent years to stop the flow of illegal drugs, which translates into very tough laws from which Americans are not exempt.

The Consular Information Sheet on Mexico states "sentences for possession of drugs in Mexico can be as long as 25 years plus fines." Another warning reads that Americans have been arrested for possessing as little as one-third of an ounce of marijuana.

The State Department warned that students, particularly women, should be especially wary of persons who ask them to carry a package or drive a car across the border. An unwitting courier will still be held responsible for anything in his or her possession.

"To local authorities, ignorance is not an excuse," the warning reads.

The Department advised travelers to become familiar beforehand with the basic laws and customs of destination countries and to not engage in action or behavior that may result in arrest.

The phone number of the U.S. Embassy in Mexico City is (525) 211-0042.

State Department travel information and advisories on many countries can be found on the Internet at <http://travel.state.gov>.

ASU student who slipped unnoticed into coma dies

PHOENIX (AP) — A disabled University student who slipped into a coma and sat slumped in his wheelchair unnoticed for a week by his fellow students has died. Ellis Mather was 21.

Mather, once a star wrestler in his tiny Alaskan hometown before he was disabled in an accident, was found in his dorm room at ASU in November after others finally smelled a persistent odor and sent police to check on him.

He spent more than two months clinging to life in a vegetative state in a Phoenix hospital. He died Feb. 10, said Jeff Byrd, chief executive at the American Transitional Hospital.

Mather's parents, Elsie and James Mather, sat vigil by his bedside and said they received support from many strangers in Arizona and around the nation.

Doctors believe some sort of illness initially weakened Ellis, leaving him to suffer in silence in his wheelchair in his room. Over the course of the week, he apparently experienced a shortage of oxygen to his brain. However, his brain stem wasn't damaged and he showed some brain-wave activity.

Ellis' story prompted discussion at the university about the privacy of disabled students.

Ellis' parents said they were concerned at first when they couldn't reach their son, but held off calling dorm officials because they knew he was sensitive about his independence.

Local bars offer spring break fun within Tempe borders

BY ANDREA M. HEALEY
STATE PRESS

Students who can't afford — or just don't want — to get out of town for spring break will have plenty of opportunities to "eat the worm."

Many local establishments are offering a variety of diversions for students who plan to stay in town, provided they are over the legal drinking age.

Pink E's, 93 E. Southern Ave., is one of many establishments that will have St. Patrick's Day entertainment. On March 15, the bar will sponsor St. Pratt's day with KUPD-FM (97.9) that will include a midget toss with pots of gold given away and 75-cent green draft beer from 11 a.m. to 7 p.m.

Mill Ave. Beer Co., 605 S. Mill Ave., is having drink specials over the entire week of spring break and a March 17 St. Patrick's Day celebration. The celebration, co-sponsored by KUPD, will offer 98-cent beers and specials on corned beef and cabbage. The radio station will also give away concert tickets, compact discs and trips. The bar will give away 98 commemorative T-shirts, according to Rob Wallace, bar manager.

During the week, Mill Ave. Beer Co. will also offer stout-beer night Tuesday, a Wednesday wheat- and fruit-beer night with the M-80's with no cover charge for ladies. Suite No. 3 will perform March 15 and Dead Hot Workshop will perform March 16.

O'Mally's, 1250 E. Apache Blvd., will also have a St. Patrick's Day celebration with a special trolley that will carry patrons from its Glendale location to its Tempe location. There will also be a barbecue, green beer and either a disc jockey or a live band.

For students under 21 who do not find the idea of breaking federal laws with a fake ID appealing, the Electric Ballroom, 1216 E. Apache Blvd., is offering a few 18-and-over and all-ages shows.

On March 10, Tha Dogg Pound will perform in an 18-and-over show. On March 11, Jason Bonham will perform and on March 13, Kicking Harold and Fu Manchu will perform. Both of these nights will be all-ages shows. Tickets can be purchased through TicketMaster.

British gov't vows to keep gays out of armed forces

LONDON (AP) — A ban on gays in the military will remain because of fears that a change in policy would undermine the effectiveness of the armed forces, the government said Monday.

A policy review team appointed by the Ministry of Defense concluded that any relaxation of the ban "is likely to have a detrimental effect on operational effectiveness," Armed Forces Minister Nicholas Soames told the House of Commons.

Four gay people have challenged the policy in court, so far without success. They are seeking to appeal to the House of Lords, the final appeal under British law.

"There would have to be a non-defense reason to change the current policy," Soames said. "Accordingly, we will fight this case every inch of the way if we have to."

The case was brought by former Lt. Commander Duncan Lustig-Prean, 36, ex-Royal Air Force Sgt. Graeme Grady, 32, ex-Royal Air Force nurse Jeanette Smith, 28, and former naval weapons engineer John Beckett, 25.

They have said they will appeal to the European Commission of Human Rights if they do not prevail in British courts.

The policy review team found that only 3 percent of armed forces personnel says they would feel more comfortable if the ban on gays ended.

"People are working in a situation of absolute trust," Defense Secretary Michael Portillo said in a television interview Sunday.

"They're living almost literally on top of each other in very confined situations. They need to know that they can trust one another and this would create such a complication that the armed forces themselves believe that they could not then retain their fighting power, their trust, their morale," Portillo said.

Report: Katharine Hepburn hospitalized for pneumonia

NEW YORK (AP) — Katharine Hepburn was critically ill with pneumonia and at one point expected to die, but has left a hospital and returned to her Connecticut home, the Daily News reported Monday.

The 88-year-old actress' business agent, Eric Hanson, did not return telephone calls for confirmation.

The News quoted unidentified hospital officials as saying Hepburn, who divides her time between New York and Connecticut, was admitted to Lenox Hill Hospital last week under an assumed name. They told the newspaper she was very ill and that her doctors at one point had not expected her to live.

Karen Zipern, a spokeswoman for the hospital, said Monday that no one named Katharine Hepburn had been registered at Lenox Hill and that the hospital would not confirm she had been there.

It was not clear when Hepburn was released. Family members told the News that Hepburn was resting comfortably at home Sunday in Old Saybrook, Conn.

As for whether she was out of danger, a sister-in-law, identified by the paper as Mrs. Robert Hepburn, said: "No, I can't say that. She's working through it."

No one answered the phone at the home on Monday.

A major screen star since the 1930s, Hepburn, who starred in The Philadelphia Story and The African Queen, was nominated for 12 Academy Awards and won four, more than any other star.

Students plan ahead to give themselves break

BY MELODY McDONALD
STATE PRESS

ASU students — next week is spring break. What are you going to do?

Tony Moore is going to Disneyland.

"I just want to get the hell away from here," said Moore, a freshmen undecided major. "It's going to be fun."

P.H. Schouten, whose declared major is "life," is also heading out of state.

"I'm going back to New York, back home," he said. "I'm going to escape the absurdity of Arizona State. It's crazy here."

Andrea Roof, a freshmen psychology major, said she will travel to Philadelphia to live it up with friends at other colleges.

"I'm really not doing anything interesting," she said. "I'm just visiting friends at colleges who are not out for spring break."

Regardless of where they are going and what they are doing, most ASU students said they are just happy to have a break from school.

"I need the break," said Nailah Alsulaim, a junior speech and hearing science major, who will trek around Santa Barbara and drive up to San Francisco to visit a friend.

Anne Coffey, a junior elementary education major, said she will travel to Greensburg, Ky.

"I'm going home to see my parents," she said. "And I'm also going to drive down to Myrtle Beach in South Carolina."

Other students have decided to steer clear of the sun altogether and head for the snow.

"I'm going skiing at Sunrise," said Robert Williams, a junior political science major.

The Snowdevil Ski and Snowboard Club will also spend their break skiing. About 40 members of the club will travel to Mammoth, Calif., for four days, said Dawn Bovasso, a club member. The group paid $335 for lift tickets, lodging and transportation.

"It's a really good deal," Bovasso said.

PEOPLE

LAWRENCEVILLE, Ga. (AP) — William Shatner is sounding more like a country veterinarian than Capt. James T. Kirk of the starship Enterprise.

Shatner appeared at a weekend Star Trek convention but took his remarks far afield from his days at the helm of a faster-than-light spaceship bristling with future technology.

"I have a farm in Kentucky with a lot of horses," the actor told more than 1,200 fans Sunday at Trek O Rama. "And I love to birth the babies."

LONDON (AP) — Money can't buy a reunion tour of the Beatles.

The remaining Beatles said Monday they turned down a $225 million offer for a concert tour of North America, Europe and Japan from a consortium of U.S. and German promoters they did not identify.

"The size of the offer is scandalous. It's ridiculous. From the money point of view, most people would do it," Paul McCartney said. "But, for me, the three of us isn't as exciting as the four of us. The Beatles were always the four of us."

John Lennon was murdered in 1980. McCartney, Ringo Starr and George Harrison reunited last year to record a new Beatles' song, "Free as a Bird," incorporating an old recording by Lennon.

The announcement of the rejected concert tour offer came on the same day they released a second single based on an old Lennon tape, "Real Love."

LOS ANGELES (AP) — David Hasselhoff, Pamela Lee and the rest of the Baywatch cast will be back cavorting on Southern California beaches for another season.

A Feb. 26 office memo from All American Television, the Baywatch production company, had said an eighth season would have to be produced somewhere else because of rising costs. But that threat is ended, said All American's Sid Vinnedge.

The show is "definitely coming back and will be shot in L.A.," Vinnedge said. "We're there, we're moving ahead."

NEW YORK (AP) — The Rev. Al Sharpton says his father had an affair with a stepdaughter that destroyed the family and pushed them into a life of poverty and welfare.

"My mother had to live with the fact that her daughter had stolen her husband," the activist New York City preacher writes in Go and Tell Pharaoh, a book that is being published March 18 by Doubleday.

"That was a great personal trauma for me, and continues to be because it not only meant losing my father ... it also led to real poverty in the family," he writes.

The Daily News quoted sources Monday as saying Sharpton was paid a $250,000 advance for the book, written with Anthony Walton.

According to the book, Sharpton's father, Alfred Sharpton Sr., had an affair with his 18-year-old stepdaughter from his wife's previous marriage, and the two moved out of the family's home and later had a child together.

Sharpton writes that he and his father, who now lives in Florida, are cordial but have never been close.

PARK CITY, Utah (AP) — Margaret Thatcher hasn't forgotten her everyday produce and canned goods.

The former British prime minister who spent childhood days working in her father's grocery in Grantham, England, was taken on a tour Sunday through a Dans Foods store. She is in Salt Lake this week to promote business partnerships as part of the month-long UK-Utah Festival.

She sampled smoked salmon, nibbled a chocolate mint and gave some youngsters a lesson on the origin of the British cheese they offered her.

"She was very nice. She told me I was cute," said Cassi Barker.

Health officials: Take care while having fun in the sun

BY ANDREA M. HEALEY
STATE PRESS

Visions of days spent relaxing in the sun on the beach at Cabo San Lucas, Rocky Point or California beckon as students prepare to party over spring break.

Visions of visits to the dermatologist to have cancerous moles removed usually aren't among those daydreams, however.

Karen Moses, associate director of health and wellness at Student Health, said the sun is the most common cause of skin cancer.

To avoid getting skin cancer, Moses said people should stay out of the sun between 10 a.m. and 3 p.m. or take protective measures to block the sun's harmful rays.

"You should apply lotion with an SPF (sun protection factor) of at least 15, at least 15 to 30 minutes before you go out," she said. "If you're going out in a swimsuit, you should apply about an ounce all over your body. You have to use a lot of it."

Moses added generic, inexpensive brands of sun screen are often as effective as brand names.

When shopping for a sun screen, people should consider how long it takes for them to get a sunburn. If it takes 10 minutes to burn, a sun screen with SPF 15 will protect the skin for 15 times longer, making it 150 minutes before burning occurs.

Chris Newton, Arizona Cancer Registry data projects manager, said the office deals primarily with two types of cancer — basal cell carcinomas and squamous cell carcinomas.

"Those kinds are usually the kind that are reported to doctors," Newton said. "We don't even get the reports because they are caught at an early stage and are highly curable — you go to a dermatologist, and they basically cut it off, and you're done with it."

The second type is melanoma, which is not as common but is important. This type of cancer usually appears like a mole that grows. If melanomas reach a certain skin depth, they become dangerous.

Moses suggested using the ABCD rule when looking for suspicious moles:

- Asymmetric moles: Look for moles with two sides shaped differently.
- Borders: Look for ragged or irregular borders.
- Colors: Look for different colors in the mole.
- Diameter: Look for moles with a diameter of more than 6 millimeters.

A mole with any of these characteristics should be checked, Moses said.

She also cautioned about other ways people can get burned.

"The sun can go through t-shirts and is reflected off of water, so the rays are more intense," she said. "Your part or scalp area burns, and when it peels, it's really gruesome looking, so people need to protect their scalp."

Budget agreement near, legislative leaders say

PHOENIX (AP) — Republican legislative leaders have agreed on the basics of a state budget that calls for $200 million in property tax cuts and spending nearly $170 million more on education, the Senate majority leader said Monday.

The $4.8 billion budget being discussed for the year beginning July 1 would represent a 4.4 percent increase over spending for the current year, said Sen. Tom Patterson, R-Phoenix.

Most of the increase would go to education, Patterson said.

"We are putting resources into education," he said. "Close to three-fourths of all new spending, or $170 million, is earmarked for education."

The tentative budget includes approximately $150 million in new funding for elementary and secondary schools, plus a $13.2 million increase for the university system and $2.9 million for community colleges, Patterson said.

Leaders hope to have all the details in place before the end of the week, and the Legislature will consider the new budget in a special session that could begin as early as this week, Patterson said. The school funding issues will be dealt with at the same time, he said.

Details of the school funding proposal still are being discussed, but it is likely to include $30 million to help equalize capital funding and $20 million to begin the switch to "current year" funding for schools. Currently, schools receive state aid payments based on their enrollments the year before.

Sen. Carol Springer, R-Flagstaff, said there also will be some discussion of increasing what are known as "group B weights," which fund special education programs.

"There are a lot of people who support the 'group B weights,' so those discussions will be part of the current year funding discussions," she said.

Patterson acknowledged the $20 million would not be enough to convert to full current year funding. But he said the idea is to phase in the conversion over a couple of years.

The budget will earmark $200 million for a property tax cut, although the exact form of the cut hasn't been determined, Patterson said. It may involve some form of Springer's proposed 30 percent reduction in the vehicle license tax but won't include any of several income-tax cuts that have been discussed in the Senate, Patterson said.

"We're staying the course on our commitment to the House last year that this will be a property tax cut," Patterson said. "The (vehicle license tax) falls within that and if that's what the members vote for, that's what it will be."

Tennessee reevaluates evolution issue

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — The state where John Scopes was tried and convicted in 1925 for teaching evolution again wants to restrict what students can be told about the origins of man.

Legislation to fire any teacher who presents evolution as fact was on the Tennessee Senate agenda Monday. It was expected to pass despite an attorney general's opinion it violates the constitutional separation of church and state.

Already this year, Tennessee senators have gone on record in favor of displaying the Ten Commandments in churches, schools, businesses and homes for 10 days in May, and against same-sex marriages.

"This is a trilogy that is making this state a comedy," said Sen. Steve Cohen, a Memphis Democrat.

The sponsor of the evolution bill is Sen. Tommy Burks, whose home district is 45 miles northwest of Dayton, site of the 1925 Scopes "Monkey trial." He said he introduced the bill because constituents told him evolution was being taught as fact in Tennessee schools. He won't say where.

The bill seems destined to pass the Senate and then the House without significant help from lobbyists. The conservative Eagle Forum has been the most vocal backer of the bill, which some lawmakers said is hard to oppose.

"You can't explain a no vote in a 15-second sound bite," said Rep. Eugene Davidson, who voted for the bill when it cleared the House Education Committee.

Gov. Don Sundquist, a Republican, has not said what he will do if the bill reaches his desk.

The bill is more lenient than the law under which Scopes, a substitute biology teacher, was convicted of teaching evolution and fined $100.

That law prohibited teaching "any theory that denies the story of the Divine Creation of man as taught in the Bible, and to teach again that man has descended from a lower order of animals."

Burks' bill doesn't ban the teaching of evolution as theory or promote the teaching of Biblical theories, but teachers say no one knows how the law might be interpreted.

"Teachers will be afraid to teach anything about evolution," so students will miss a portion of their basic science curriculum, said Wesley Roberts, an ecology teacher at Nashville's Hillwood High.

The Monkey Trial pitted two legal giants of the age against each other — Clarence Darrow, representing Scopes, and William Jennings Bryan. It also drew scorn: Newspaperman H.L. Mencken, who covered the trial, branded Tennessee a state of yokels.

Scopes' conviction was overturned on a technicality, but the law stayed on the books until it was repealed in 1967. The U.S. Supreme Court struck down a similar Arkansas law a year later.

Hedy Weinberg, executive director of the American Civil Liberties Union, condemned the Tennessee evolution bill as a move by the "radical religious right to continue hammering away at the wall between church and state."

Cohen, the Senate's only Jew and the lone opponent of the Ten Commandments resolution, agreed. He waits outside the Senate chamber while his colleagues begin each session with a prayer, usually to Jesus.

"God is great. Religion is great. It can be a great influence on people's lives," Cohen said. "But government is not, especially when people want government to get involved in religion."

DHS expands anti-tobacco campaign

PHOENIX (AP) — A statewide campaign to curb tobacco use by teens was broadened Monday to include a statewide network of businesses and local agencies that will target pregnant women as well as youths.

The network is the latest step in an anti-smoking campaign by the state Department of Health Services to persuade kids not to smoke. The department launched a $5.5 million media blitz last month and in October awarded a $635,000 advertising contract to the Phoenix Suns.

DHS Director Jack Dillenberg said the statewide network is expected to spend between $7 million and $8 million — or about $2 a year for each Arizonan — for programs in its first year. The money will be drawn from revenues raised by the state's voter-approved retail tax on tobacco products.

"This network will touch every corner of our state and will work in coordination with our $5.5 million media advertising campaign to convince our children to stay away from tobacco, the nation's leading killer," Dillenberg said.

Each network participant will coordinate a series of local anti-tobacco projects targeting young children, teenagers and expectant mothers. Among the projects already planned: merchant education programs, training workshops for school teachers and stop-smoking programs for expectant mothers.

Network participants will vary by county but typically include health departments, schools and social-service agencies.

Marty Eckrem, program coordinator for all projects in Coconino County, said her region will spend much of its efforts on peer counseling and various student-initiated programs.

"The main focus is on preventing students from smoking in the first place," she said.

Dillenberg said each program will have an evaluation component to measure its success but that it will be difficult to determine immediate effects of most of the programs.

"Some of these indicators will take time, because it's a long term process in changing behavior," he said. "But we believe that just by getting the kids involved — the number of exposures to the media campaign, to the message and the local projects, the peer counseling and peer activities — we'll be able to see some short term results."

Dillenberg said he is pleased with how quickly the most recent anti-smoking slogan — "Tobacco, the tumor-causing-teeth-staining-smelling-puking habit" — has gained popularity.

"There are kids around the state who have gotten that down beautifully," he said.

DHS released a survey last week showing that 33.5 percent of all young adults ages 18 to 24 were smokers in 1994, nearly double the 17.1 percent rate posted in 1993 by that age group. The survey also found that the percentage of women smokers was greater than the percentage of men who smoked.

Thousands student financial aid applications stalled

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Education Department has been unable to process 900,000 college financial aid applications, leaving high school seniors wondering how much money they will receive to attend college.

The department on Monday blamed the backlog on a government contractor's computer troubles and work time lost due to bad weather and the partial government shutdown.

The form, called the Free Application for Federal Student Aid, is used to calculate how much a family can contribute to a student's education. Schools use the information to determine eligibility for financial aid and aid packages.

Normally, it takes 14 days for the Department of Education to process the applications, but some forms received in early January still have not been handled, said Elizabeth Hicks, deputy assistant secretary for student financial assistance programs.

"We're hearing a lot of angst from colleges," Hicks said.

At Penn State University, financial aid officers normally would be sending out awards this week, said Anna Griswold, assistant vice provost for student financial aid.

"We're very concerned," she said, explaining that they cannot make decisions for anyone until they have information on most students they plan to accept. "There's reason to believe they will get caught up but I don't know that for a fact. We're pushing it already."

Students and parents, wondering why they haven't received their financial analyses yet, have flooded a question-and-answer phone line, Hicks said. In response, the department has expanded the hours and added more operators.

The department blames the backlog on 21 days of work time lost due to the partial government shutdown and the blizzards that closed offices during a crucial computer testing period.

In addition, the department has a new contractor and is using a new optical imaging system.

Hoping to catch up, contractors have increased production at two processing companies, which are now working around the clock, seven days per week. They also have set up additional work sites.

The department now promises to process by the end of March all applications that were received by March 1. Applications received during March should be processed by April 15, Hicks said.

But she cautioned that the computer problems may not be completely solved and she said it is possible that the government will not have information in time for colleges to make financial aid awards by May 1, the deadline set by most colleges for students to accept admission offers.

Education Secretary Richard Riley plans to send a letter to college presidents, explaining the situation and asking them to consider delaying that deadline, she said.

"Perhaps they could meet us (half way) with the delaying of their deadlines," Hicks said. "If the community works cooperatively with us, we can ensure that ... no individual students and no institutions are harmed."

Some colleges already have the financial data on students they need to make award decisions. Those that subscribe to the College Scholarship Services' program, which charges a fee and gives more detailed information, do not have the same problem as schools that rely solely on the government's free process.

Those schools may not want to relax their deadlines, knowing they can make offers and put themselves at a competitive advantage, said Larry Zaglaniczny of the National Association of Financial Aid Administrators.

"Hopefully there's good will and they will understand," he said. "I expect some will take advantage."

Pastor criticized for plan to hold 'slave auction'

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — After criticism from black leaders and others, a conservative TV evangelist apologized Monday for inviting his parishioners to participate in a "slave auction" to raise money for high school students.

"We certainly did not intend to offend anyone and apologize to anyone offended," said the Rev. John Hagee of Cornerstone Church, a nondenominational church known nationally through Hagee's television ministry. His local congregation numbers more than 5,000.

Hagee, who is white, refused interviews with news reporters but appeared on a KTSA-AM radio talk show to talk about the uproar that began Friday with the publication of a story in his church newsletter.

Hagee wrote that "slavery in America is returning to Cornerstone" on March 31. He explained that each senior at the private Cornerstone High School would be auctioned off in front of the congregation to raise money for a senior class trip.

The students would be expected to work at the home or business of the highest bidder. "Make plans to come and go home with a slave," Hagee wrote.

Over the weekend, black leaders and others criticized the plan.

"I think anyone should be incensed and outraged by it, and especially people of African-American descent should be outraged," said attorney Cornelius Cox, who is black.

"Slavery was one of the worst atrocities ever in this country. Is that something to make fun of? Something to mock?" Cox said.

On the radio program, Hagee said such auctions had been used in school fund-raisers for generations but that he will rename the event a "student auction."

"I believe that name will pass and be politically correct, sterile enough," Hagee said.

Ethel Minor, president of the San Antonio branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, also criticized the plan, and said she had received calls from whites who were upset.

"These are high school seniors," she said. "You don't want anyone to call you a slave."

Cox and Minor said Hagee's appearance on the radio show was a step in the right direction but they wanted him to apologize to a larger newspaper or television audience.

Shoe exchange fits hard-to-fit

PHOENIX (AP) — When his left leg was amputated three years ago because of complications from diabetes, Patrick Hogan's need for shoes changed forever.

No store would sell him just one shoe, so he resigned himself to paying full price for a pair and tossing the left one into the growing pile at the back of his closet.

The retired radio announcer's luck changed when he came across the National Odd Shoe Exchange while thumbing through the phone book.

"This is a gift from heaven," said Hogan, admiring five right-footed dress, casual and athletic shoes, size 13-D, he picked out at the exchange's Phoenix headquarters. "They're all brand new, never been on anyone else's foot."

Since 1943, tens of thousands of people with two different-sized feet — or, like Hogan, only one foot — have looked to the nonprofit National Odd Shoe Exchange.

NOSE's cramped offices overflow with 1 million shoes donated by more than two dozen manufacturers. The organization counts 17,000 members in the United States and Canada, most of whom have mismatched shoe sizes because of disease, injury or birth defects.

Members shop for shoes for free at the organization's headquarters or order by mail, paying only the shipping costs.

NOSE fits the hard-to-fit, from a 2-year-old toddler in Arizona with a club-foot to size 17 athletic shoes for a strapping 13-year-old boy in Ohio.

"We've had people come in and say, 'I don't think you can help me, but I wear an adult size 7 on my right foot and a children's size 1 on my left,'" said exchange director Jeanne Sallman. "They're in tears when they leave with those shoes."

Depending on their age, members pay a one-time registration fee of $15 or $25, plus $10 or $15 a year. The fees are waived for children under 5, adults 75 and older and people who cannot afford to pay.

The shoe exchange also provides names and phone numbers of a member's "mismatch" — an individual who has exactly the opposite shoe size problem. The mismatches share shoe purchases, which means they don't have to buy two different-size pairs of shoes to come up with one wearable pair.

PAIN KILLER.

For fast relief from the nagging ache of taxes, we recommend TIAA-CREF SRAs. SRAs are tax-deferred annuities designed to help build additional assets—money that can help make the difference between living and living well after your working years are over.

Contributions to your SRAs are deducted from your salary on a pretax basis. That lowers your current taxable income, so you start saving on federal and, in most cases, state and local income taxes right away. What's more, any earnings on your SRAs are also tax deferred until you receive them as income. That can make a big difference in how painful your tax bill is every year.

As the nation's largest retirement system, based on assets under management, we offer a wide range of allocation choices—from the TIAA Traditional Annuity, which guarantees principal and interest (backed by the company's claims-paying ability), to TIAA-CREF's diversified variable annuity accounts. And our expenses are very low,* which means more of your money goes toward improving your future financial health.

Frieder responds to allegations against athletes

BY DAMIAN SHAW
STATE PRESS

The three athletes associated with the ASU men's basketball team who allegedly held two women captive and sexually assaulted them last week will not be back with the team if the charges are true, according to Coach Bill Frieder.

"If a felony has been committed then they won't be back," Frieder said Monday night on his weekly radio call-in show on KTAR (620 AM). "If there is a tragedy here, then we need to do the right thing. We can't accept certain things in our program."

Thomas Prince, Rico Harris and George "Gee" Gervin

face several separate charges ranging from unlawful imprisonment, kidnapping and sexual assault to aggravated assault, threatening and intimidation.

The players, who are not eligible to play this year because they did not meet academic requirements, were considered the cornerstone of the Sun Devils' future.

"If these kids don't come back, and right now it seems they won't be, next season's going to look real bad," Frieder said, adding that, "When it's all over, I don't think everything will be dropped."

Frieder's daughter, Laura, is currently a freshman at ASU, a fact that he said makes the allegations especially troublesome. Above and beyond his concern for the future of his basketball team, Frieder said he was most concerned for the families of the individuals involved.

"I feel saddened by the situation," Frieder said. "I feel bad for all the parents involved and I feel embarrassed because it's my basketball program."

Frieder said he checked the backgrounds of the three players before they came to ASU and found that they all had clean records.

"We checked and none of those kids had ever had any kind of record or any kind of anything with the law," Frieder said.

The three players in question have not been practicing with the team and do not travel with the team due to their ineligibility. Frieder said they will no longer be allowed to use the team weight room. They also will not be able to practice at the University Activity Center on their own, as they had previously been allowed, Frieder said.

ASU sophomore 126-pounder Shawn Ford (left) and senior 167-pounder Markus Mollica placed third and first, respectively, at the Pac-10 wrestling championships in Bakersfield, Calif. over the weekend. Both will join five other Sun Devils at the NCAA Championships in Minneapolis on March 21-23.

Seven Sun Devil wrestlers to head to NCAA tourney

BY DAN MILLER
STATE PRESS

The 15th-ranked ASU wrestling team fell short of its goal at the Pac-10 Championships over the weekend, but ASU Coach Lee Roy Smith said that his team will use that disappointment as incentive for the NCAA Championships in two weeks.

"People are going to remember — and the wrestlers will remember — what they did at the NCAAs before they reflect on the conferences," said Smith, who will take seven wrestlers to the NCAA Championships at the Target Center in Minneapolis March 21-23. "Bakersfield had an exceptional tournament. The tournament was determined in the semis. They did a great job of winning the close ones."

ASU, which was the defending champion, finished second with 138.5 points, 16.5 behind host Cal State-Bakersfield Sunday night.

"We didn't accomplish what we went there to do," Smith said. "But we can make up for it at the nationals."

Three of ASU's five finalists won individual Pac-10 titles. Seniors Markus Mollica (167 pounds) and Steve St. John (134) and junior Danny Felix (118) each claimed top honors for the Sun Devils.

Two Sun Devils — sophomores Matt Suter (158) and Casey Strand (190) — took seconds, while sophomores Shawn Ford (126) and Aaron Simpson (177) wrestled back for thirds. Each of the seven automatically qualified for the national tournament because they finished in the top three of their respective weight classes.

Of the 41 Pac-10 wrestlers invited to the NCAA's, 11 are wild-card entries determined by coaches in an extensive selection process immediately after the tournament. ASU heavyweight Danny Faqir, who finished fourth, narrowly missed a wild-card invite, but has been designated as the first alternate in the conference. If one of the 41 wrestlers can't compete, Faqir would get the call, Smith said.

"I thought we might be able to get between six or eight through (to the NCAA's) so we're right in there," said Smith, who took seven wrestlers to the NCAA's last year and placed fourth.

Mollica, a three-time All-America and the defending NCAA champ at 167, defeated Oregon State rival Chad Renner, 13-7, in the final. Renner is one of only

Women's tennis pounds Huskies

BY DAN MILLER
STATE PRESS

After being idle from competition for the last two weeks, ASU women's tennis coach Sheila McInerney described her team as "eager" to battle Washington Monday.

That may not have been a strong enough word.

The Sun Devils surpassed McInerney's expectations and pancaked the Huskies, 9-0, at Whiteman Tennis Center.

"I think they were better than the score indicated," McInerney said of Washington, which failed to win a set against ASU (4-4).

Each time the Huskies threatened, ASU quickly erased their hopes. Sun Devil sophomore All-America Reka Cseresnyes defeated Katheryn Costain, 6-4, 6-1, in a deceptively close match at the No. 1 singles position. Cseresnyes was the last Sun Devil player to finish her match.

"We played really long games. I was the last one off (the court). I was like, 'Oh my gosh, the others must be really playing well.'" Cseresnyes joked. "I really enjoyed playing again today. I think the last two weeks helped everybody."

Cseresnyes said she was able to effectively pass Costain, a serve and volleyer.

"I could go crosscourt or angle down the line. I like

Softball to host game at 'invisible' stadium

BY DAMIAN SHAW
STATE PRESS

Sun Devil Club Stadium. It's the home of the Sun Devil softball team and it's located on campus. The problem is, nobody knows where.

"It's not on campus directories; it's not on campus maps; it's as if we're invisible," said Coach Linda Wells.

Wells said she often fields phone calls from spectators seeking directions to the stadium.

"That's unfortunate because we have a very good team. It's very entertaining; it's family-oriented and it's a lot of things that I think people are looking for in a sporting experience," Wells said.

Fans will get to use a map and compass once again at 5 p.m. today when the Sun Devils (10-6) take on North Carolina (12-3-1). Wells said she isn't sure why the stadium was built behind the football practice field.

"Why would you put a varsity field behind a practice field and behind a band field," Wells asked rhetorically. "And (since) they did do that, why don't they put up signs that would help people find it if they were looking for it."

To get to Sun Devil Club Stadium, fans should turn east on Sixth Street off of Rural Road. Immediately, fans should turn left and head north through the parking lot adjacent to the football practice field. Once heading north, fans should follow the parking lot drive to its end, and then turn right down a narrow road that leads around the football practice field and ends up at the softball stadium.

Wells said the battle to get the stadium on ASU maps is an ongoing one.

"It took me two years to get it on the student hand book map," Wells said. "It's there now, but I'm not sure if it will be there in the future."

Hopefully, North Carolina will be able to find the complex. Designated player Lisa Dacquist said she doesn't know much about the Tar Heels, and she doesn't care.

"We just go out there and play as hard as we can, regardless of who we're playing," Dacquist said. "I think if we play our best we have the talent to beat anyone."

If all else fails, look for the lights.

two men to beat Mollica (30-2) this year.

"He wrestled an exceptional tournament," Smith said of Mollica, who became the first wrestler in conference history to win four consecutive titles. "He looked in post-season form."

Mollica, who is ranked No. 1 in the country and will be the top seed at NCAA's, recorded a pin and a major decision on his way to the finals. He was deadlocked at 4-4 with the fourth-ranked Renner midway through the second period, before scoring on a takedown and three-point near fall to break the match open.

"Markus just pretty much dominated from that point," Smith said, adding that Mollica's flurry opened a cut under Renner's eye.

Ford, a walk-on last year who struggled at times this year, rose to the challenge at Pac-10s. Smith said. After losing his first match to Oregon's John Taylor, he won a 22-8 major decision over Boise St.'s Aaron Swisher, then decisioned Cal Poly-San Luis Obispo's Gail Miller, 6-4, in the consolation semis, setting up a rematch with Taylor for third place.

"The second match I changed my strategy a little," said Ford, who avenged the loss by beating Taylor, 3-2. "I took a different angle in attacking. I did less of the tieups and more from the outside."

Ford, who was ranked third in the conference in the preseason, has only been in competitive wrestling since his sophomore year in high school. He will be making his first appearance at NCAA's.

"It proves that hard work pays off," Ford said. "I want to set an example for other walkons that come to the program. They can make it into the lineup and into the big tournament."

Smith said Ford, who also lost to Taylor on Feb. 9 in dual action, adjusted to his opponent well.

"He was really playing into that guy's hands and he corrected his problems," he said. "He did a good job of following his game plan."

Meanwhile St. John, who spent over half the year recovering from major knee surgery, defeated Oregon State's Oscar Wood, 7-3, in the final for his second career championship. He is 15-3 since returning to competition.

"I think he's paced himself just right," Smith said of the fifth-ranked St. John. "He wasn't ever really in jeopardy of losing a match. He had each of his matches under control."

Felix, ranked seventh in the country, celebrated his 22nd birthday Sunday with a 12-4 major decision over Oregon's Kevin Roberts in the finals. It was his third conference title in as many years.

"He broke the match open with a first-period takedown," Smith said, adding that in the process Roberts rolled his ankle and took over two and half minutes to recover. "It was a very dominating performance."

Suter, who beat Bakersfield's Mickey Ritter in the 1995 Pac-10 finals, lost to Ritter, 2-1, in double-overtime. The eighth-ranked Sun Devil lost the coin flip before the second OT and Ritter scored on an escape.

"It was a very frustrating loss for Matt. He didn't wrestle the match he wanted to wrestle," Smith said. "He's got to just take that frustration and use it as a positive to get ready for the national championship and he's capable of doing that."

Strand, a natural 177-pounder who has been wrestling up all year, lost 8-4 to third-ranked Paschal Duru of Cal Poly-San Luis Obispo in the finals. He will be making his first NCAA appearance.

"He did an excellent job of wrestling with the strategy that is critical to have success at that weight class," Smith said. "He was able to put together a real consistent performance all the way through the tournament."

Simpson lost a tough semifinal match to Bakersfield's Derek Scott, whom he narrowly beat earlier this year. Then he wrestled back to defeat Cal Poly's Mike French by injury default in the consolation final.

"Aaron allowed him to dictate a little more of the match than he normally would but he can gain from that experience," Smith said of Simpson, who will make his second straight NCAA appearance.

Smith added that ASU should benefit from wrestling its conference championship last weekend because the majority of the conference meets are not until this weekend.

to be a little bit under pressure when I have to go for a shot," she said. Cseresnyes, a baseliner, even got in some serve-and-volley work herself.

"I've been working a lot on my volleys the last two weeks," she said. "I think I've improved a little. It's been going pretty well."

ASU sophomore Stephanie Lansdorp overcame a close first set with Paige Stringer to win 7-5, 6-2 at No. 2 singles and freshman Katy Propstra avenged a loss to Kori Sosnowy at the Pac-10 Indoors with a 6-3, 6-3 triumph at the third spot. Then the powerful pair teamed to down Costain and Sosnowy, 8-4, in doubles action.

Freshman Alison Nash made an impressive return to action at the No. 4 slot after missing the last three weeks with a pulled stomach muscle. Nash, who clocked Kari Luna, 7-5, 6-1, said her muscle is 100 percent.

"It felt fine," she said. "I played well today. I was coming to the net a lot more. It's nice to be back."

Nash initially injured the muscle during ASU's first dual of the year against Pacific (Jan. 17).

ASU junior Anna Moll torched southpaw Erica Stoloff, 6-2, 6-1, at No. 5 to continue the onslaught.

"I just mixed it up," Moll explained. "She didn't like the high balls to her backhand. I kind of found her weaknesses and used them to get an advantage."

Sun Devil senior Julie Coppinger made it a clean sweep at the sixth position with a 6-0, 6-4 trouncing of Jennifer Radford. Coppinger, who has been plagued with everything from a pulled muscle in her rear to shin splints and a sore shoulder, said she is finally back at full operating capacity. The turnaround helped her easily adjust to Radford's pesky two-handed forehand and backhand.

"I was just keeping the ball deep," Coppinger revealed. "She really liked those angles. That's not really my game."

McInerney reached into her bag of tricks and whipped out two new doubles pairings Monday. The first-time tag-team of Cseresnyes and Moll dropped Stringer and Karin Costi, 8-2, at second doubles.

"We live together. We go to practice together. At first it looked pretty hard because we were going to play doubles together that's another thing we're going to do together, but it hasn't been a problem," Moll joked. "We haven't had any communication problems. For now, it looks pretty good."

So does the new team of Nash and freshman Torey Pratt, which destroyed Luna and Lindy Irving, 8-3, at No. 3.

"It was interesting because we played so well together for the first time," Nash said.

Added McInerney: "Sometimes you have to make changes to get better."

Tim Hacker/State Press

ASU sophomore No. 2 singles player Stephanie Lansdorp beat UW's Paige Stringer, 7-5, 6-2, Monday during the Sun Devils' 9-0 win at Whiteman Tennis Center.
