Third-place finisher Wastchak to oppose Baumgartner for presidency

BY TIM BAXTER
STATE PRESS

All the lollipops in the world couldn't keep Gaylord-Eric Crovetto in the runoff election for Associated Students of ASU president.

Crovetto, known for handing out suckers as part of his campaign effort, was knocked out of the race Wednesday because of complaints that he defaced signs belonging to another candidate, Jared Platt.

Following a hearing Tuesday night, the elections commission found Crovetto guilty of violating ASASU bylaws. The commission assessed 20 penalty points, which resulted in forfeiture of the election. Daran Wastchak will replace Crovetto in the runoff.

"The commission does not believe Mr. Crovetto's actions were malicious in any way, shape or form, and found Mr. Crovetto to be honest, sincere and forthright in his testimony," the hearing results state. "Ultimately, however, if Mr. Crovetto felt that Mr. Platt's sign was in error, he had alternatives available to him other than correcting the sign himself."

Crovetto said he felt the ruling was unfair.

"I'm going to take it to the (ASASU) Supreme Court," he said. "If I denied it from the first, they would have never had a case against me. Honesty is something they do not value, obviously."

Elections Coordinator Alex Shivers said it was unfortunate because Crovetto had run a strong campaign.

"It's one of those things — if you don't follow the rules, you get kicked out of the election," he said. "It's really unfortunate. It's just sad to see the voters' choice go down like that."

"It's not really unexpected," he added. "I think I would have been a little surprised if they had found a way to keep him in."

Wastchak said he was excited at the opportunity to continue his campaign.

"It's good news for me and good news for everyone, hopefully," he said. "I'm going to be getting in contact with my campaign team and getting things ready."

Marc Baumgartner, the other candidate in the runoff, said he was not concerned who his opponent was.

"I'm not running a campaign against anyone else. I'm running a campaign for the students," he said.

Political science class to hold ASU versions of party conventions

BY MELODY McDONALD
STATE PRESS

When political science professor Richard Herrera decided to teach his POS 332 class about American political parties, he spared no expense.

Herrera asked for and received a $3,200 grant from the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences so his class could host the 1996 mock national Democratic and Republican conventions on campus — a miniature, slightly altered version of the actual events.

The grant was used to hire another teaching assistant and pay for banners, buttons, placards, balloons, photocopies and refreshments. It will enable Herrera's class to see first-hand the work that goes into nominating a candidate for the presidency.

"The goal of the class is to combine the academic side of the study of political parties, which students would always get when they take (the American Political Parties class), with a real-life experience of politics and party politics," Herrera said.

The mock Democratic National Party Convention will be held in the Maroon Gym at the Student Recreation Complex from 12:30 to 4:30 today and from 12:30 p.m. to 3:30 p.m. Friday. The Mock Republican National Party Convention will be held April 18 and 19 at the same times.

University: 'Miss ASU' title trademark infringement

BY ANDREA M. HEALEY
STATE PRESS

ASU graduate Bill Toon learned the hard way about trademark infringement laws this week.

Toon, the Miss Arizona pageant's state executive director, said when the name for the non-ASU sponsored "Miss ASU" pageant was chosen, he did not realize using the University name may cause legal issues.

"Honestly, I did not ask permission, and in retrospect I should have," said Toon, who planned the April 29 pageant.

Fernando Morales, ASU trademark licensing coordinator, said although Toon used the University name without permission, ASU will probably not take any legal action.

"University policy has been to educate people," he said. "We give them about three strikes — we don't like to pull out the big stick right away. We've never had to take anybody to court."

According to Toon, even though he offered to change the name of the pageant, Morales said he can continue using the ASU name.

"He told me that at this point in time, I could continue to use it (the name), but I had to have a disclaimer stating that it is not sponsored by ASU," he said.

Toon said his goal in having the pageant geared toward ASU was to recruit students who would benefit from the scholarship prizes that were awarded.

"We felt that there's a lot of talented young women at ASU that could succeed in our pageant system," he said. "(We) thought they could use scholarship dollars."

He added that the pageant program has not been extended to NAU or UofA, but he intends to in the future.

In addition to winning scholarship money, the grand-prize winner will go on to compete in the Miss Arizona pageant.

Honestly, I did not ask permission, and in retrospect I should have.

Conventions

Students and faculty can watch as political science students for the Democratic and Republican parties debate affirmative action, abortion, national economy and foreign policy with respect to the Bosnia peacekeeping mission. After the debates, 100 students from Herrera's POS 110 American Government class will vote on the planks, acting as mock delegates for 11 states.

By the end of today the platform plank and nominee will be decided, Herrera said.

Students will play the roles of Democrats Bill Clinton and Bill Bradley — the convention alternative to the incumbent President — and Republicans Bob Dole, Pat Buchanan, Phil Gramm, Steve Forbes and Colin Powell.

Sam Coppersmith, Arizona Democratic party chairman and former U.S. congressman, will be on hand Friday to deliver the convention keynote address for the Democratic Party at 1 p.m. John Rhodes Sr., former House minority leader, will deliver the address for the Republican Party on April 19.

Rhodes, who will speak about national issues, said mock conventions are beneficial to students.

"The idea is great," Rhodes said. "I'm sure it will be well done and the people that participate will have a fantastic idea of what a national convention is all about."

Laura Boyd, chairwoman of the mock Republican Party, said a lot of time and effort has been put into the class and the convention. She added that the hands-on experience is a better teacher than textbook lectures.

"I can't even tell you the hours we've put into this," she said. "I think it's pretty true to life."

Eric Rhea, "chairman" for the Democratic Party, agreed. He said the mock party conventions have been a fantastic learning experience.

"Everyone has a role," Rhea said. "I think when you're just reading a book, you're not as involved or interested."

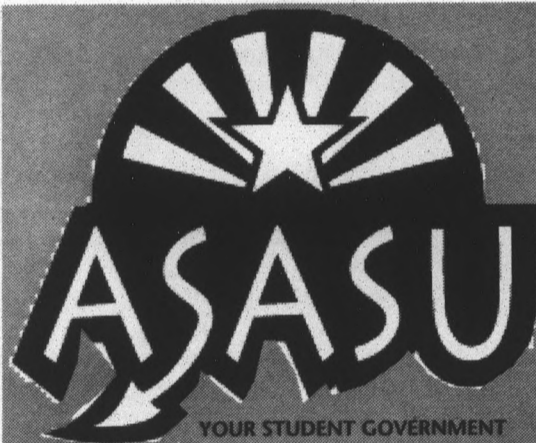

Herrera said the conventions will be the "closest thing you can get" to the actual events.

"The students have worked very hard putting this together in such a short time," Herrera said. "People that come and watch this are going to be more than impressed by the students."

Hundreds flee new violence in Monrovia

MONROVIA, Liberia (AP) — The stench of rotting bodies filled the air Wednesday as bands of armed thugs roamed the streets of Monrovia looting homes and shops and smashing cars and windows.

Hundreds of people lined up outside the U.S. Embassy in hopes of joining 270 Americans and other foreigners evacuated to neighboring Sierra Leone amid the worst unrest in Monrovia in three years.

"I didn't feel like there was anything more I could do at the present time in Liberia," Tanya Bernath, a 29-year-old New Yorker who works for the international relief agency Lutheran World Service, said after she was flown two hours to safety by U.S. helicopters.

"Everybody was trapped," Ms. Bernath said from Freetown, Sierra Leone's capital. She was waiting to continue on to Dakar, Senegal, where a large international airport provides many flights to the United States and Europe.

Navy Cmdr. Bob Anderson, a spokesman for the U.S. European Command who is in Freetown, said about half of those evacuated late Tuesday and Wednesday were Americans. An Egyptian official said only one-fourth of the evacuees were Americans.

About 470 Americans live in Liberia, mostly in Monrovia, including 48 employed at the U.S. Embassy. American officials say nobody has been ordered to leave but a team of 18 Navy SEAL commandos was flown to Passengers disembark from a transport helicopter at Lungi Airport in Freetown, Sierra Leone after being evacuated by U.S. soldiers from Monrovia, Liberia Wednesday as part of Operation Assured Response. Soldiers began evacuating Americans and other foreign nationals from Liberia after five days of heavy fighting between rival factions in the West African nation.

Liberia to reinforce security at the U.S. Embassy.

The Pentagon also dispatched two warplanes to Sierra Leone to stand by in case of trouble. But Liberia's only international airport has been destroyed, the control tower bombed, and U.N.-donated helicopters and a commercial jet lie gutted on the tarmac.

The U.N. envoy to Liberia, Anthony Nyakyi, said a cease-fire was reached between government troops and rebels who have been holding hundreds of Liberians, Lebanese and other foreign civilians hostage at a military base in the capital.

Frank Akinola, a spokesman for the 12,000-member African peacekeeping force in the country, said some of their troops were released Wednesday along with some civilians. But he said the cease-fire was holding only in western parts of the city.

War story: Refugees return after detention in Serbia

CHECKPOINT CHARLIE, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — By the busload they came, across America's Checkpoint Charlie, back home into the arms of their loved ones.

For 211 Muslim men, most of them soldiers, the war ended Wednesday when they crossed into Bosnian government territory at this checkpoint after being held for eight months in detention camps in Serbia.

But the reunion was marred at the last minute when officials in Serbia took away 13 Muslim men as they boarded the buses, drawing an angry protest from the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees.

The refugee convoy was the first since the Dayton peace accord to pass through Bosnian Serb territory. It was also seen as an important step towards resettling Bosnians in their hometowns, which official say is a necessary condition for peace to take hold in the region.

Five buses rolled about 75 miles from Serbia through the Serb half of Bosnia and to this checkpoint in the neutral zone, watched over by 25 American soldiers. They arrived in Muslim-controlled towns just before noon.

Two American helicopters secured the way for the refugees, flying over mountains and valleys dotted with roofless homes destroyed in the war.

Less than a mile from Checkpoint Charlie, named for the Charlie platoon that operates it, the big buses were unable to pass over a narrow wooden bridge.

The refugees got off, walked over the bridge and boarded other buses on the other side that took them to the town of Kalesija and, for some, long-overdue reunions with their families.

Sakib Rizvic, a 41-year-old soldier from Srebrenica, embraced his wife, Suhra, 30, whom he hadn't seen for four years. She wept. They kissed.

"I never, no single night, fell asleep without praying for him," Suhra said. "I wish all women who do not know where their husbands are will experience such happiness as I experienced today."

Like Sakib, many of the men are soldiers from Zepa and Srebrenica, towns under U.N. protection that fell to the Bosnian Serbs last July and have come to symbolize the brutality of the Bosnian War. More than 7,000 Srebrenica men are still missing and believed massacred.

The men who returned Wednesday said they fled to Serbia despite the country's support for the Bosnian Serbs because it was their only chance to survive.

They were detained for the last eight months in two camps in Sljivovica and Mitrovo Polje, small towns near Serbia's border with Bosnia. Because they were held in Serbia, they were considered refugees, not war prisoners.

The refugees arrived wearing new sneakers and jeans and carrying small bags of food and mineral water provided by the U.N. refugee agency. They appeared stunned and grim, but showed no outward signs of beatings some said they had endured.

Some said they had been mistreated during the first month of their detention, but that conditions improved after visits from the International Red Cross.

Growing pains: Parliament clashes

RAMALLAH, West Bank (AP) — Yasser Arafat banged his fist on the table, exasperated by criticism from Palestinian legislators.

"I will make you pay for this," Arafat threatened one legislator during a turbulent parliament session Wednesday.

At one point, Arafat ordered a cameraman from Palestinian TV to stop filming. The cameraman complied, but the criticism didn't stop.

The session demonstrated that the 88-member parliament, chosen Jan. 20 in the Palestinians' first general elections, may turn out to be more than just a rubber stamp for Arafat, the undisputed leader of the Palestinians for more than a generation.

For the first time, Arafat has to contend with Palestinians who do not depend on his patronage but have their own power base in districts in the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

Arafat can, for now, rely on a solid majority of loyalists from his Fatah movement in the council. But charismatic critics have begun to make their voices heard.

During Wednesday's meeting in the West Bank town of Ramallah, Arafat berated opposition legislators for accusing Palestinian authorities of torturing supporters of the Islamic militant group Hamas in Palestinian jails.

Arafat took out a document he said contained a detailed plan by Hamas to topple his government. Before starting to read, he ordered the Palestinian TV crew to switch off the cameras.

"Why? Let them hear us," said Abdel Jawad Saleh, a former Fatah leader with strong popular backing in the Ramallah area.

"I decide who will hear me," Arafat shouted back, and the cameras were turned off.

Citing Hamas plans to attack security installations, Arafat told the council: "This is a declaration of war. ... It's a confrontation. Confrontation. Confrontation. Confrontation." He raised his voice to a scream, and threatened to lift the immunity of the four legislators who made the torture allegations.

Despite Arafat's outbursts, legislators seemed unperturbed.

Facing Arafat in rows of chairs in a classroom-like formation, many raised their voices to be heard over Arafat's interruptions.

"Do you mind? I haven't finished," legislator Sheikh Wajih Yaghi sharply told Arafat at one point.

Even Speaker Ahmed Qureia, an Arafat confidant, gently reprimanded the boss. "We must remember that Abu Ammar is just another member here," Qureia said, using Arafat's old nom de guerre.

Deputy referred to immigrants with ethnic slur

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A law enforcement officer was captured on audio tape using an ethnic slur to refer to illegal immigrants fleeing from deputies.

Television news helicopters broadcast images across the nation of Riverside County sheriff's deputies Tracy Watson and Kurt Franklin clubbing two illegal immigrants after a high-speed freeway chase April 1. They were suspended with pay while investigations are conducted.

California Highway Patrol Officer Marco DeGennaro, a third officer on the scene who was not involved in the beatings, turned on his tape recorder during the melee.

It picked up someone saying: "A bunch of wetbacks, huh?" Another voice responds: "Yeah, all of 'em."

Many officers carry tape recorders to help them while filing reports or to protect themselves against charges of misconduct, authorities said.

The CHP was examining the tape, officials told newspapers.

Highway Patrol Chief Edward W. Gomez, who commands the Los Angeles-area region of the agency, said Tuesday that authorities were trying to find out who uttered the slur.

STATE PRESS Editorial For the children

The future of Arizona is once again on the line in the state Legislature.

And, once again, many legislators are demonstrating that they care not one whit about Arizona's next generation.

One proposal to amend the already-approved budget would completely eliminate annual inspections of day-care centers and cut back on the budget and staff of the day-care licensing department.

The other measure would change the definition of child abuse, and would expunge charges of abuse from a center's file within 60 days.

One of the key backers of the cuts is Rep. Bob Burns, R-Glendale. Strangely enough, his wife owns a day-care center.

House Speaker Mark Killian, R-Mesa, has claimed that parents should take more responsibility in monitoring the centers. Government, he says, is being used as a crutch in this case.

Disgusting.

Since when is safeguarding the welfare of our children a "crutch?"

Killian's desire for more parental responsibility is admirable. But, along the same lines, perhaps consumers should stop using such organizations as the FDA and the Health Department as a "crutch" when shopping for food.

That's right. Let's stop inspecting meat and restaurants. Let the consumer do that himself.

And if they get salmonella or botulism, too bad. They should have been more vigilant.

Individual responsibility is important. But the government must still play a role.

Children are indeed the most helpless of Arizona's population. Arizona must make sure that they are protected.

Suppose that parents don't have the time to do this legwork. Should a child suffer sexual, physical or mental abuse as a result? Should a child endure unhealthy conditions daily?

We wouldn't be this concerned about this issue if everything was OK within the day-care system. But it's not.

Stories of abuse run rampant. Everyone has heard stories of children falling victim to both physical and sexual abuse within the confines of a center where they should be safe.

Although these stories are exceptions, not the rule, only annual inspections can ensure children's safety.

And what about the problem of lead-based paint? Lead has been shown to cause serious developmental problems in young children.

Only regular inspections can make sure that children are never exposed to this harmful substance.

And there is yet another concern that legislators aren't addressing. If parents are supposed to do their own policing, how can they adequately do so if records of abuse allegations are wiped after 60 days?

How can parents make an adequate decision if this information isn't available?

For many parents, day care isn't an option. It is a necessity. Their children, literally, have no place else to go.

These children are Arizona's very future.

Arizona should be protecting them to the best of its ability.

More to abortion than physical procedure

The unborn of America have been in danger for quite a long time now. Ever since the ruling of Roe vs. Wade in 1972, the women of America have had the solemn right to terminate a pregnancy. A right that I believe we should respect.

But now a new method of abortion has just arrived in the country. A method that would allow abortion to be non-surgical. A method that is being touted as the future in reproductive technology. A way to make abortion safer, more private and less expensive.

But it has prompted me to ask: How easy should it be to have an abortion?

I have known many young women who have undergone abortion procedures. It was not a good experience for any of them. It was terrifying emotionally, physically and spiritually. These young women were lucky enough to have counseling and supportive family and friends to help them through it. Without such attention, I am sure that a few of them would have had a much harder time dealing with their choice.

If the makers of RU-486 have their way, abortion would be as easy as walking into your bathroom and swallowing a pill. They are asking for no clinical method of distribution, and are calling for no new research into the mental effects of such a procedure.

I'm not sure that is such a good thing.

I am pro-choice. I support and respect a woman's right to dictate her own life. I know many young women who chose to abort, and I have supported their decisions. I just can't allow myself to support any abortion that is as easy as swallowing a pill without any medical attention.

Abortion is not an easy choice. It shouldn't be.

A woman needs counseling from trained professionals, both before and after the procedure. She needs to understand the depth of the decision she is making. She needs support from something more than the directions on the side of a pill bottle.

Today, an early abortion costs around $300. If these medications get approval from the FDA, they would cost about $10. For $10, a young girl could wipe all her troubles away. For $10, we could lose the chance to make sure she is emotionally prepared for the termination of her pregnancy. I am all for making clinical abortions less expensive, but I want women to understand the true costs.

If these pills get approval by the FDA, there needs to be strict regulation on their distribution. Studies have proven that they are only effective during the first six to eight weeks of pregnancy. If we allow them to be widely available, many women will ignore such directions and swallow the pill anyway.

These pills have proven to be both safe and effective in Europe, but only in the presence of doctor and clinic regulation. In America it should be no different.

A woman who is considering abortion needs to talk to her health-care provider before she makes such a life-changing decision. If she still decides that an abortion is the right choice she should be able to swallow that pill, in an environment that can care for her afterward.

If women are allowed to terminate pregnancy without the knowledge of their family, friends and doctors, we could be taking a huge gamble. We would be allowing our teen-age daughters to terminate their pregnancies in their bedrooms, without having to consider the meaning of human life.

I fully support the women of America to choose in their best interests, but I don't think that the baby should be ignored. That fetus had the right to have its side spoken for, whether it is by the doctor, counselor or the protestors outside.

Women need to take responsibility for their lives, but maybe we should start doing it before we are in an abortion clinic.

I know they make a pill for preventing that.

Fear more in beef than mad cows

Restoring "consumer confidence" in the safety of eating body parts of cattle is the pitched goal of the British government, now that its once unquestioning population of flesh-eaters has been frightened off by mad cow disease.

The effort is shared by the keepers of the beef culture in the United States. Meat industry officials have been as aggressive as the bulls of Pamplona in telling America's steak and hamburger lovers to keep chomping away: The carcasses are safe, healthy and every bit as real food for real people as James Garner said they were, before he had a real fine heart-bypass operation.

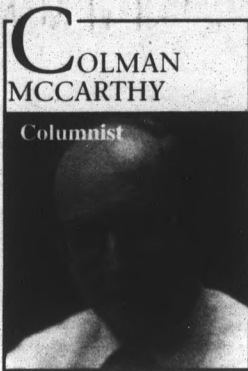

Without doubt, the panic about mad cow disease, which causes small holes in the brains of cattle, is an overreaction. In the absence of hard medical proof that the eating of cattle diseased with bovine spongiform encephalopathy causes a similar nerve disorder in humans, all that's been presented are announcements that a suspected link may exist.

This tenuousness has created a scare far out of proportion to the available scientific evidence. It contrasts starkly with the mountainous amount of credible information on the health care costs of meat sold and bought in every U.S. supermarket. Heart disease, cancer, hypertension, diabetes, obesity and foodborne illnesses are among the medical blights directly associated with flesh-eating.

The American Heart Association puts the cost of heart disease in 1996 at $66.4 billion, which includes spending for hospital and home nursing care, drugs, physicians and lost output. More than 13 million Americans suffer coronary heart disease. More than 500,000 people die annually from heart attacks.

If mad cow disease can cause an international panic and political heartburn in the British Parliament because 10 Brits may possibly have contracted a rare nerve disorder from tainted beef, it should follow that the heavens themselves would be shaken by humanity's outcry over the proven deadliness of meat that's available everywhere.

In America, why isn't this happening? John McDougall,

COLMAN MCCARTHY
Columnist

the California physician and writer, has a theory. "We've come to accept cardiovascular disease as a natural consequence of living," he writes in The McDougall Program for a Healthy Heart, a reliable owner's manual for the heart published last month by Dutton.

McDougall is a rational voice of medical sanity sounding amid the self-serving cacophony heard from the sellers and advertisers of animal foods.

"When I recommend a mostly vegetarian diet," he writes, "I'm not asking people to do something bizarre, or out of the ordinary. All I'm asking is that we go back to doing what people have been doing for a million years or so. From the standpoint of long human experience, the American diet is the anomaly. It is the first time large numbers of humans have consumed so much animal foods, fat, refined foods and artificial ingredients. ... The failure of the American medical profession to encourage people to adopt the traditional human diet — the low-fat vegetarian diet — as the primary therapy for heart disease contributes to the 1.25 million preventable heart attacks" annually.

Not all doctors have been herded into conformity by the economic and propagandistic might of the meat and cattle industry. The Physicians Committee for Responsible Medicine, a Washington nonprofit, has created a newspaper ad with a drawing of a man and a cow arm in-arm and with holes in their heads. "The way some people eat meat," the copy read, "we wonder if cows aren't the only ones with holes in their heads." Two more lines cite the diseases associated with meat.

The committee sought to place the ad — at a cost of $1,000 — in The Des Moines Register. The newspaper's publisher said no, stating that "the ad did not meet The Register's standards for accuracy and fairness." In cow country, apparently, no dissent — no beefing about beef — is to be tolerated in the free press. Industry ads can run ad nauseam touting nauseous meat, but a well-established fact or two that might offend cattle barons? Never.

On March 30, The Register ran a news story about the publisher's rejection. In the headline, it labeled the physician's committee an "anti-meat group." That was wrong-headed, too. The doctors aren't anti-meat, they're pro-health.

Without doubt, the panic about mad cow disease, which causes small holes in the brains of cattle, is an overreaction. In the absence of hard medical proof that the eating of cattle diseased with bovine spongiform encephalopathy causes a similar nerve disorder in humans, all that's been presented are announcements that a suspected link may exist.

No justice in American law

I would like to state my opinion and express some disapproval of President Clinton's decision concerning the national border incident, where two foreigners were beaten by federal officials. This incident has been covered heavily by the media this past week and rightfully so, because it deals with the American justice system. I feel the American justice system has fell flat on its face over the last 15 to 20 years.

Recently President Clinton has granted the two people beaten in the border incident a six-month stay in the United States. This will create time for the two people to create lawsuits against the American government. I see this as a direct slap in the face to our justice system. Was it not the duty of the border patrol officials to stop the illegal immigrants, who crossed the checkpoint at high speeds putting other people's lives in danger?

The truck that the foreigners were located in was traveling at speeds surpassing 80 mph, and they were throwing metal debris at the law-enforcement officials trying to arrest them. This truck also put other drivers on the road at a serious risk of injury, as it swiped two cars trying to escape from law-enforcement officials.

After one views the full tape of the incident, it is clear that the right action was taken by the federal officials. The beatings of the two foreigners did not last longer than 15 seconds, and neither were taken to a hospital afterward. The federal officials' adrenaline had to have been pumping after being put on this hour-long chase. What would you had done in this situation, in trying to subdue the suspects?

It would have been a different story if this incident had taken place in Mexico. There would not have been any helicopters to tape the incident. You would not have heard from the people who drove through the checkpoint again, as they would probably have been shot.

Why would President Clinton grant a six-month stay to these criminals who had no respect for the law? The conditions that these foreigners are living in is no excuse for putting the lives of others that were traveling on that highway at stake. After seeing the O.J. Simpson trial, the Rodney King case, the Menendez brothers' trial and now this, it is safe to say that there is no justice in America.

No similarity between Israel, Nazi Germany

This is in response to the column "Israelis preach Palestinian genocide," by Steve Forsberg.

As a Jewish-American and a strong supporter of Israel, I am appalled at the suggestion that links the Israeli government policies to that of Nazi Germany.

The stories used to paint a horrid picture of hatred are the minority opinion in Israel right now. Immediately after the death of Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, the peace process of which he was a big part was supported by a large majority of Israelis. Since the terrorist attacks, the support of this peace process had declined, but still continues to be popularly supported by the Israeli people. I would hope you would no longer use the opinion of the minority to speak for the majority.

It has been the policy of the Israeli government to destroy homes of terrorists as a "sign" to those that if others wish to terrorize the county the same will happen to them. If you visit Israel, and drive through some Palestinian villages, you will be able to see parts of these homes left after being bombed or raided. The facts are that the suicide bomber lived there, his house was destroyed, end of story.

The Israeli government should not be responsible for the fact that this particular suicide bomber didn't tell his parents. Just as the United States is not responsible if I don't tell my parents I committed a crime, they will still raid my parents' home, regardless.

As a history major, Forsberg should realize that after World War II and the United Nations partition of Israel became a reality, the original plan gave the Arab people most of the land and a very small portion of the land to the Jews.

The Jewish leaders at the time were reluctant to agree to the U.N. resolution but cited that working together with their Arab neighbors would be a better option, so they agreed to it. However, the Arab leaders refused to do the same and immediately started a conflict which ended with the Arabs losing most of the land promised to them.

So, to blame the Israeli government for the Palestinian problems is just an excuse to place blame where it really belongs — on those Arab leaders unable to compromise.

Also as a history major, Forsberg should realize that the Krystallnacht was part of Hitler's scheme from the beginning of his plan to eliminate the Jewish people and the current actions by the Israeli government are not a "scheduled" attempt to get rid of Palestinians. They are reactions to the latest terrorist bombing, nothing more. Comparing the two is nothing short of incompetence.

As an American, Forsberg, there are some policies by this country that you are not proud of. As a supporter of Israel, there are some policies that I tend not to agree with, such as the current closure of the borders. I believe that if there is to be true peace in the Middle East, the Palestinians and Israelis must learn to trust one another.

But that will take time. To label the Israeli government a parallel to that of Nazi Germany is ludicrous and I hope you think twice before exhuming Hitler's "laughter" and mock the memory of the six million killed in the Holocaust.

Display of affection distasteful

My heartfelt congratulations to Franc DeFosse and Alison Wright, who were pictured on the front page of the State Press on Tuesday. DeFosse's method of communicating his marriage proposal by painting the "A" was innovative and certainly newsworthy.

I must object, however, to the State Press's decision to publish a picture of the above-mentioned couple kissing in public. While I have nothing against heterosexuality in general, I (and many others) find it personally distasteful. While I abhor discrimination of any sort, I simply cannot condone such a brazen display of affection in full public view. This couple has no business flaunting their sexual orientation in public, and the State Press has no business encouraging them to do so.

Tempe voters stick with incumbents

By KELLY WENDEL
STATE PRESS

Tempe voters stuck with the tried and true, re-electing three incumbent councilmen and the mayor during Tuesday's primary election.

Councilmen Dennis Cahill, Joe Lewis and Joe Spracale will return for another four-year term on the council, while Mayor Neil Giuliano, who ran unopposed, returns to a two-year term as the City's chief executive.

The election was something of a rarity in that for the first time since 1980, all elected candidates received the required majority of 50 percent plus one vote. Typically, only one or two candidates receive a majority, necessitating a runoff election.

"I was really surprised that it didn't go into a runoff," said Lewis, who retained his seat as councilman. "You never know how you are going to do in the primary election because there is no polling.

"I didn't know until the end if I had won or not. It was tense. Waiting for the (voting) returns always is."

Lewis barely squeaked by former councilman and Tempe lawyer Leonard Copple. Lewis bested Copple by less than 4 percent.

Copple said the defeat surprised him.

"I really did not expect to lose in the primary and have three incumbents elected in the primary," he said. "I didn't enter the race to lose, and thought I had the support."

Mayor Giuliano received 80 percent of the vote; Cahill, 65 percent; Spracale, 58 percent; and Lewis, 55 percent. Copple came in fourth with 51 percent, Peter Graves received 21 percent and Donald Ready brought up the rear with just less than 10 percent.

"I guess the people can't complain about anything (the city council is) doing if the people re-elect the incumbents," Ready said.

Tempe voters still have the general election May 14 in which they will decide whether to unify Tempe's school system into one district for kindergarten through 12th grade. Tempe's school system currently consists of three separate districts.

Ailing Sun Devils ink 2 basketball recruits

BY DUSTIN KRUGEL
STATE PRESS

ASU landed its second recruit of the spring signing period, which began on Wednesday, by nabbing forward Urit Kelly out of St. Gregory's College in Shawnee, Okla.

"He signed this morning," St. Gregory's Coach Kelly Bass said Wednesday. "He's such a great athlete. He scores. He can play both the (small forward) and (power forward) position. He can post up and he has a nice stroke."

ASU has only six returning scholarship players from the 1995-96 squad which went 11-16. During the fall signing period, ASU signed 6-foot-9 Ryan McDermott, a forward from Alamogordo, N.M.

The 6-foot-6, 205-pound Kelly was a two-time All-Conference selection in the bi-state Div. I Region. Kelly averaged 19.3 points, 9.9 rebounds and shot 57 percent his sophomore year. The Sun Devils also signed Eddie House, a 6-foot-1 point guard from Hayward High School in Oakland, Calif. House, who averaged 27 points his senior year, revealed last month he had an oral commitment with ASU. House signed his letter of intent at 3 p.m. Wednesday.

"I felt real comfortable with the coaching staff and I wanted the opportunity to play as a freshman," House said of his decision to play at ASU. "It's hard to beat."

House said his final decision was between ASU and Iowa.

"It boiled down to the conferences," he said. "I believe the Pac-10 is one of the premiere conferences, although the Big 10 is too. I also wanted to stay close to home."

Kelly also considered playing at San Diego State, George Washington, South Alabama and Western Illinois. The spring signing period ends on May 15.

"I just think he's a perfect fit because of the way ASU plays," Bass said. "I think he's suited to that up-tempo game that ASU has."

Kelly, who is from Nassau, Bahamas, is friends with current Sun Devil junior forward Rodger Farrington. Farrington, is from Freeport, Bahamas and played at Eastern Oklahoma State Junior College in Wilburton.

"They know each other. (Kelly's) been a pleasure to coach. He's a yes-sir, no-sir kind of guy," Bass said.

ASU Coach Bill Frieder is prohibited by the NCAA from talking about any recruits until after the spring signing period ends.

No longer timid, ASU gymnast Wright now asserting her might

BY RANDY JONES
STATE PRESS

Quiet. Soft-spoken. Shy.

All of these words were used to describe gymnast Meagan Wright upon her arrival at ASU in January 1995.

Oh, how things have changed.

The sophomore, still only 18 years old, has undergone quite a transformation during her three semesters as a Sun Devil.

"Meagan has opened up so much," teammate Katie Freeland said. "She was very shy when she first got here — not talking very much at all. But now she's a character. There's really no other way to describe her."

Wright herself does not agree with the shy label people have tried to attach to her.

"I don't think I'm (shy) at all," she laughed. "I can be quiet, but I've changed a lot. Now that I've gotten to know people, I've loosened up a lot."

From tossing a football around before a meet to playing practical jokes on those around her, Wright no longer is the timid youngster she was last season, after arriving from Mesa's Westwood High School a semester early.

If anyone should notice Wright's metamorphosis it's Coach John Spini. Spini's wife, Lisa, was Wright's coach from the time she was 6 years old with the local gymnastics club, the Arizona Twisters.

"Seeing her all these years, Meagan has opened up to the point where she is very comfortable with where she is at, as a person and as a gymnast," Spini said.

Ask teammates and friends and each has a story of shenanigans instigated by Wright.

Spini recalled with a smirk, the many practical jokes Wright enjoys playing on teammates.

"One time she took a Velcro strip and put it in Michele Naia's hair," he said. "It took her 20 minutes to get it off. And then Michele came out and did it back to Meagan."

And then there is the airport incident.

Waiting to fly home from the Pac-10 Championships three weeks ago, the entire team came upon a group of Mexicans singing, dancing and playing music.

"There were several people singing and one guy playing a guitar," Freeland explained. "Meagan said 'I want to go over there,' and we all thought she was joking. But then I turned around and there she was, dancing and shaking with all of them."

While the changes in her everyday persona are obvious, the "new" Meagan Wright has not lost one bit of the competitive edge which made her a Pac-10 All-Conference first-team selection as a freshman.

All she has done this season is improve her average scores in three of four events — the vault (9.808), floor (9.731) and beam (9.631). Wright also set an all-time ASU record with a score of 39.475 in the all-around at the Sun Devil Classic on Feb. 16.

These stats are even more amazing when you consider Wright injured her neck and back in practice and was obviously in pain during the team's last two meets.

"If I could rate the pain she was in from a one to a 10, I'd have given it an eight," Spini said.

"We got her through, no, she got us through those meets, and we are all very happy that she is so tough," he added.

Assistant coach Kyle Jenne said Wright will be

Molina shines in win over T-Birds

BY RON MATEJKO
STATE PRESS

It shouldn't be this easy.

The No. 21 ASU baseball team (25-15, 7-11) embarrassed Southern Utah for the second consecutive game, with a 10-1 victory Wednesday night in front of a season-low 1,029 fans at Packard Stadium.

Junior pitcher Gabe Molina (3-1) got the victory in his first career start.

Molina threw six innings of scoreless ball, allowing just one hit, with four walks and a career-high 10 strikeouts.

"He was real good tonight," ASU Coach Pat Murphy said of Molina. "I told him if he pitched well tonight he would start Sunday (against California)."

The only hit of the game for the Thunderbirds was a two-out single to rightfield by Danny Schoonover in the sixth inning.

Justin Thomas (1-2) took the loss for Southern Utah, giving up nine runs in four innings.

Freshman Andrew Beinbrink hit his second home run of the season, a solo shot in the fifth.

Senior first baseman Robbie Kent sat out the game to rest a sore right hamstring. It marks the first game he has missed as a Sun Devil breaking a string of 94 consecutive starts.

ASU faces Cal next in a three-game series starting at 7 p.m. Friday at Packard Stadium.

Rosey expectations for ASU football

BY DUSTIN KRUGEL
STATE PRESS

In 1986 the ASU football team ran away with the Pac-10 title and a Rose Bowl victory. Ten years later, the 1996 version has visions of breaking the has-been label that is synonymous with ASU football.

"I think we have a chance to be ranked fairly high going into next season, which is interesting when you look at a year ago at this time or even a little bit later, we were picked dead last," ASU Head Coach Bruce Snyder said Wednesday at the Spring Football Media Day. "One year later, with basically the same players, we might be ranked in the top third of the conference."

Snyder said after injuries, player defections and mediocre records, ASU should be ready to assume the label of a contender. ASU has not been to bowl since the 1987 Freedom Bowl.

"We are experts on the adversity portion of this and I would like to kick it over," he said. "At the first exposure to (high expectations) everybody kind of gets a high, you start to tingle a little bit. This just might make it easier for us. There is a lot of glory involved in this whole thing. When the reality of this thing sets in, it can be a difficult thing to handle and it takes maturity and focus."

Junior offensive guard Kyle Murphy said the possibility of cracking the preseason Top 25 doesn't faze him or the team.

"We really don't look at that because we really haven't proven anything," he said.

ASU returns 47 lettermen in 1996, its highest total since 1992, including 18 starters.

"I think the veterans understand how hard it is to win in this league," said Snyder, who has a 21-23 overall record in four years at ASU. "We understand the margin for winning and losing can be very small."

Murphy said ASU can afford no more than two losses if it wants to play in Pasadena, Calif.

"You can't afford for many mistakes going into the season," he said. "If you don't go into a game prepared and lose, that could be the difference."

Snyder said the Sun Devils will get tested early this season even though the first five games are at home.

"We jump right into the fire with Washington (Sept. 7) in a conference

Women's tennis team sends Rebels running, 5-1

BY BRIAN A. ANDERSON
STATE PRESS

The ASU women's tennis team took full advantage of a mid-season tune-up match as it cruised to an easy 5-1 victory over UNLV Wednesday at the Whiteman Tennis Center.

The Runnin' Rebels (8-12) are ranked in the top 50 but did not present too much of a challenge to the No. 29-ranked Sun Devils (9-8). This was best illustrated by junior Anna Moll's, 6-2, 6-0, victory that lasted only 45 minutes.

"I'm happy with the way we won because we killed them (UNLV)," Moll said. "They are not a bad team, so it is nice to play well against a good team."

Moll just keeps winning and improved on her team-best 19-7 record.

"Anna continues to win easily which takes the pressure off the rest of the team," Coach Sheila McInerney said.

The coaches from both teams agreed to skip playing the doubles due to illnesses that plagued UNLV. ASU freshman Katy Propstra, who is part of the No. 18 ranked doubles team with Stephanie Lansdorp, was not too disturbed with the cancellation.

"We have a couple matches coming up so we weren't too disappointed," said Propstra referring to matches versus Stanford and California.

McInerney was glad to get the win over the Runnin' Rebels as Sun Devils improved to 9-1 over non-conference foes.

"UNLV is a good team and has a good coach, so this was a good non-conference win," she said.

ASU's No. 1 singles player Reka Cseresnyes suffered another tough defeat at the hands of No. 8 ranked Marianne Vallin of UNLV, 6-7, 7-5, 6-1.

"Reka has been competing well but just has to get over the hump," McInerney said. "She is playing at a much higher level but so are her opponents, and it is hard to put the matches away."

The team returns to action Friday at the Whiteman Tennis Center when they take on California.

game," he said. "Huge game in terms of making a run at the Roses. It's going to come down to a play or two and we had a heck of a game with them last year (Washington won 23-20). A play or two went in their favor."

Snyder said he expects improvements on both sides of the ball, including putting more points on the scoreboard.

"I would like to increase our point production on offense," he said. "I think we averaged just under 30 points per game last year, I would like to jack that thing up to 35-36 points per game offensively on an average."

Senior quarterback Jake Plummer said he doesn't want any repeats of last year's 31-0 whipping by USC.

"We are going to put points on the board," the four-year starter said. "It's not a worry of mine. We just have to make sure we do it every game and not have any downfalls."

ASU's defense is expected to improve on last year's problems, despite returning nine starters from last year's unit which yielded a whopping 427 yards per game.

"On defense I think that is where we have to make the most progress," Snyder said. "Our defense understands that, our defensive coaches understand that. We need to improve our performance 10 to 15 percent. If we can do that, I think things are really rolling for us."

Notes

"Playboy had asked if he was going to pose nude and he declined," Snyder joked. "Which I think is good judgment."

The football field at Sun Devil Stadium will officially be named Frank Kush Field on Sept. 21 against two-time defending national champion Nebraska.

Snyder announced one equipment change. ASU helmets will now have maroon facemasks instead of white facemasks.

Wright

mentally ready and back at full strength for the upcoming NCAA Midwest Regionals in Salt Lake City.

"She never lets things get to her," Jenne said. "She is always dominating the event — taking charge when she needs to. After a fall, she gets even more focused, channeling her aggression into the next event or meet."

Do not be surprised to see an angry Wright taking the floor. The team's poor performance at last year's regionals in Nebraska is a sore spot for the gymnast.

"I hate to lose," Wright said. "It makes me really mad when we lose, and I do much better when I get mad. Last year makes me want to work that much harder to not let that happen again."

Teammate Gina Holleran hopes for an "angry" Wright to show up in Utah.

"It gets her all pumped up," Holleran said. "Last year is going to make her all the more mad to make it happen this year."
