Lack of classes jeopardizing ASASU exec's job

BY JENNIFER NETHERBY
STATE PRESS

The Associated Students of ASU Executive Vice President Summer Stuart faces the possibility of impeachment for not following ASASU bylaws.

STUART

According to the registrar's office, Stuart, a sophomore chemistry major, is not enrolled in any classes this semester. ASASU staff must be classified as students to hold their elected positions.

"She was enrolled, but her classes were dropped because her (high school and college) transcripts weren't sent," said ASASU President Marc Baumgartner, who heard about it a week and a half ago.

Stuart could not be reached for comment Monday.

Registration has ended for the semester and students must get overrides to enroll in a class. Baumgartner said Stuart has until Friday to enroll in classes. After that, if she is not enrolled it will go before the Senate for impeachment proceedings.

Education College Sen. Joshua Carr, ASASU's senior senator, would be next in line for the Executive Vice President office if Stuart does not enroll in classes.

"I understand that I would be expected to step into that role and I would be willing to do that, but until that happens, I'm not going to think about it," Carr said.

A high-ranking ASASU staff member, who asked to remain anonymous, said Stuart found out she had been dropped from classes after the first week of school.

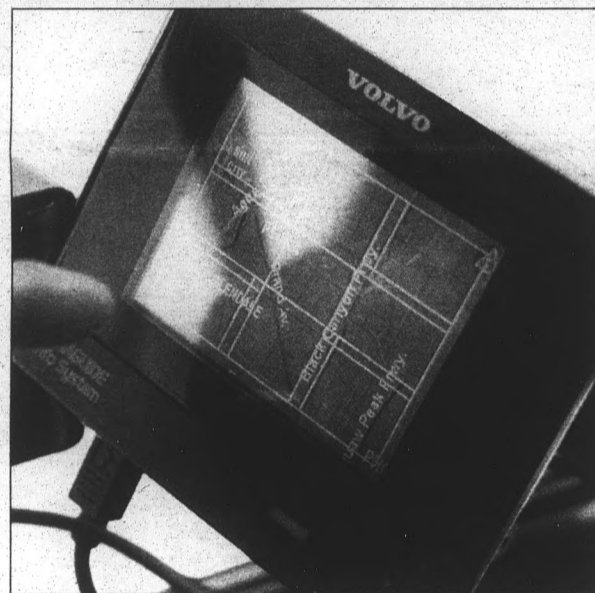

"She has (two override) signatures, she just hasn't turned them in," the source said.

Stuart was elected last April in a runoff election with 1,177 votes out of 2,020. She ran against Jason Alberts, a junior psychology major.

Tempe voters face choices in primary

BY RAY STERN
STATE PRESS

Today is your chance to make a difference. The primary election polls opened at 6 a.m. this morning, and registered voters are making some tough decisions certain to affect the quality of life in the Valley.

Foremost among Tempe voters is Proposition 400, which authorizes the increase of the city's sales tax by 1/2 percent — from 1.2 percent to 1.7 percent — to fund an improved public transportation system.

The tax increase would generate $22 million annually to:

- Purchase more clean-burning buses and neighborhood shuttles
- Boost service hours
- Improve transit connections to other parts of the Valley
- Build new bus pullouts and shaded shelters.

Members of the Committee to Vote "No" on Proposition 400 say the tax increase is excessive and not enough people will use the system to make it cost-efficient.

Larry Crittenden, Maricopa County public information officer, said the choices for Maricopa County's Board of Supervisors are also extremely important. The Board of Supervisors has jurisdiction over county issues, budgets, planning and zoning.

"Anytime you have three of the five positions open it becomes a very serious and important election for everyone," he said.

Tempe voters will be asked to choose between the Republican candidates Fulton Brock, Bob Edens and Pat Brenner for the District One Board of Supervisors race.

Democrats will be few and far between at the ballot boxes today. No Democratic candidates are offered for the District One U.S. Representative race, the Board of Supervisors position, sheriff, county attorney, recorder, school superintendent or treasurer.

Joe Arpaio runs unopposed as sheriff, but County Attorney Rick Romley faces one Republican challenger in the primary, Doug Rhoads, who Arpaio supports.

ASU alumnus Rhoads said Monday that accusations by the Arizona Republic that he was fired from the county attorney's office for misconduct were "lies."

"I was terminated when I let them know I needed knee reconstruction," he said.

Democrats are also fairly invisible for the State Legislature race, where six Republican incumbent state legislators from District 26 and 27 are hoping to keep their jobs for another two years.

Two on-site voting booths will be offered for students today. District 27 voters can use the visitor's information center on Rural Road and Apache Boulevard, and the site for District 26 is at the First Congregational Church at 101 E. Sixth St.

Young Democrats predict Clinton victory in Arizona

LIDIA E. KELLY
SPECIAL TO THE STATE PRESS

Touting a shift in the political climate, the ASU Young Democrats plans to welcome President Bill Clinton's three-hour presidential campaign stop in Arizona.

"Many young people are switching from the Republicans to the Democrats," said Lee Bolin, Young Democrats president. "Young people are disgusted with the policies of the Republicans and they're looking for values that the Democratic Party carry."

Clinton's visit will be at the Sun Dial Recreation Center at 1:30 p.m. Wednesday. It is available to the general public, but seating is limited and on a first-come, first-serve basis. The doors are scheduled to open at 12:30 p.m.

The Young Democrats — in cooperation with the Arizona Coordinated Campaign — has scheduled a media event at 12:30 p.m. today. Students will gather at the University Drive Pedestrian Bridge in order to have a picture taken while carrying a sign welcoming the president.

There is also an open reception scheduled to welcome the president at Luke Air Force Base in Litchfield Park.

Clinton's visit Wednesday to Sun City is part of his Western campaign swing through Colorado, Arizona and California.

Donald Dalglish, adviser for the College Republicans and professor of military science, said he was not aware of any plans to demonstrate College Republicans presence during the presidential visit. Still, he said Clinton's early visit gives the organization some time to prepare a counterattack.

"He thinks he can get Arizona," Dalglish said. "I don't think so."

According to a recent KAET-TV (Channel 8) poll, Dole is trailing Clinton by about eight points. Dalglish said the polls are "highly exaggerated," and the present situation is much more optimistic for the Republican Party.

Michelle Carson, student coordinator of the Arizona Coordinated Campaign, said she thinks Clinton is going to win in Arizona.

"The fact that he's coming to our state early in his campaign proves that he is seriously considering the state as a winning option," she said.

ASU Young Democrats to welcome president

BY JENNIFER NETHERBY
STATE PRESS

ASU Young Democrats will serve as President Bill Clinton's pre-welcoming committee this afternoon at the University Street Bridge outside ASU.

"It'll tie in with his bridge to the 21st century," said Lee Bolin, ASU Young Democrats president.

From 12:30 p.m. to 1:15 p.m. today, the Young Democrats will form a human billboard welcoming the president to the Valley, Bolin said. He added that the purpose of the welcome coming one day before the president's visit is to gain media attention so the president will know he has support at ASU.

Literature about the president's positions on issues and on his record as president will be available. Students can also register to vote at the rally.

Bolin said that among students, the president's chances of winning are "extremely positive," and cited a recent poll that showed Clinton ahead of opponent Bob Dole among college-age voters.

"Dole received a low proportion of the vote in the 18- to 35-year-old category. ASU students know he (Clinton) is on their side for University education, environment, and he is the candidate who will lead us into the (next) century," Bolin said.

Whitewater partner jailed

BY JAMES JEFFERSON
ASSOCIATED PRESS

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — Keeping her word not to cooperate with Whitewater prosecutors, Susan McDougal was led away to jail Monday for contempt of court, denying she was trying to protect President Clinton with her silence.

Clinton's former Whitewater business partner spent 7 1/2 hours in a federal court lockup before she was put in a van in shackles and handcuffs to be taken to the Faulkner County jail, about 30 miles away.

A federal judge cited her for contempt last week for refusing to answer questions about Clinton before a federal grand jury, and gave her until Monday to change her mind. McDougal, 41, could be held for up to 1 1/2 years but could be released immediately if she relents and agrees to testify.

"I'm so angry that they hold themselves out to be so full of integrity, so above reproach," McDougal, speaking outside the federal courthouse, said of Whitewater prosecutors. "They will do anything. There's nothing they won't do" to get the Clintons.

She reiterated that she was refusing to cooperate for her own reasons, and not to cover for the Clintons. Last week, she said she wouldn't testify because she didn't want to subject herself to perjury charges if her story conflicted with that of other prosecution witnesses.

"No one's asked me not to tell this story. It's just that I can't trust them" she said, referring to Whitewater prosecutors.

McDougal also insisted that she had gotten no prompting or assistance from the White House. "If the Clintons have helped me or the White House has helped me, then God help us all because I'm about to go to jail," she said.

McDougal was convicted May 28 of obtaining in 1986 a fraudulent $300,000 loan, some of which went toward the purchase of land for the Whitewater venture. She was sentenced to two years in prison, beginning Sept. 30.

On Wednesday, U.S. District Judge Susan Webber Wright found McDougal in contempt for refusing to answer questions from the Whitewater grand jury.

Kurds capture control of more Iraqi territory

BY BRIAN MURPHY
ASSOCIATED PRESS

DOKAN, Iraq — Kurdish allies of Saddam Hussein captured the last stronghold of their rebel rivals Monday, giving the Iraqi leader control over much of northern Iraq for the first time since the Persian Gulf War.

With Iraqi troops trailing close behind, the Kurdistan Democratic Party claimed control of the city of Sulaymaniyah after the crumbling forces of the Patriotic Union of Kurdistan abandoned their posts, U.N. workers in the city said.

"The PUK had withdrawn and the KDP walked in," said Stafford Clarry, the head of a U.N. guard unit in Sulaymaniyah, Iraqi Kurdistan's second-largest city.

About 50,000 of Sulaymaniyah's 400,000 people fled in advance of the offensive, leaving the city quiet after its fall, Clarry said.

The United States, which launched missile strikes against southern Iraq last week, made clear it has no plans to take sides in the fighting between the Kurdish factions, who have frequently shifted alliances in the course of their conflict.

The missile strikes appeared to discourage Saddam's forces from taking a direct role in the fighting, but it has not slowed the Saddam-allied KDP.

KDP fighters claimed they entered Sulaymaniyah on Monday evening after residents rebelled to force out a rival, Iranian-backed Kurdish faction and its leader, Jalal Talabani.

The city was the last stronghold left in the hands of the PUK forces after they lost Irbil, the area's de facto capital, on Aug. 31 in a KDP offensive backed by the Iraqi army.

The capture of Sulaymaniyah means Saddam effectively yields control over much of northern Iraq for the first time since the U.S.-led forces established a Kurdish "safe haven" after the 1991 Gulf War.

PUK leader Talabani predicted that KDP leader Barzani would come to regret his alliance of convenience with Saddam.

"In aligning with Baghdad, the KDP has mounted a tiger which will destroy us all," the PUK statement said. "Once Saddam controls Kurdistan, he will no longer need his Kurdish ally and will consume the KDP and what remains of the Kurdish people."

Midshipman resigns after concealing knowledge of murder

BY MICHAEL SCHNEIDER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

ANNAPOLIS, Md. — A midshipman left the Naval Academy on Monday for keeping silent after a classmate confided she once helped commit murder.

Jay Guild turned in a letter of resignation Friday and moved off the campus on Monday, said academy spokeswoman Karen Myers.

Guild, 18, had told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram in Texas he was quitting rather than face dismissal for violating the honor code.

Academy spokesman Scott Allen would not say what disciplinary action Guild would have faced if he had remained a midshipman, saying his resignation made the question moot.

Unlike the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, the Naval Academy has no language specifying that a student can be punished for lying, cheating and stealing or tolerating those who do. Instead, it has what it calls an honor concept, a broad principle that a midshipman should "stand for that which is right."

At the same time, however, there is an unwritten code that midshipmen protect one another.

Guild resigned because of classmate Diane Zamora, 18, who was arrested Friday at her Fort Worth home and charged with the murder of Adrienne Jones, a rival for her boyfriend's affections. Allen said the academy was processing the paperwork to oust Zamora.

Zamora's boyfriend, David Graham, is an 18-year-old cadet at the U.S. Air Force Academy in Colorado.

Guild said Zamora first mentioned the killing during plebe summer, the training session for first-year midshipmen that begins in July.

"She just came out and said he (Graham) had cheated on her with this girl and she told him to kill her," Guild told the Texas newspaper.

The subject came up as many as 15 times before police entered the case following tips from other midshipmen, he said.

Guild, of Kankakee, Ill., said he initially stayed silent because he believed Zamora was lying about the December slaying of the 16-year-old, whose body was found near Mansfield, Texas. Later, he felt that exposing her story would have been like "turning in a family member," he said.

"Anybody besides me would have turned her in. And I should have, too," he said.

Police said Graham gave a written statement saying he also participated in the murder of Jones.

According to authorities, the two lured Jones to a rural site, where Graham struck her and Zamora hit the girl in the head with a barbell. Graham later shot her in the head, according to police.

Hurricane Hortense strengthens, threatens Puerto Rico

BY JAMES ANDERSON
ASSOCIATED PRESS

PONCE, Puerto Rico — Islanders boarded up windows and lined up to buy water, then rushed to the beaches Monday to watch the sea, churned by the outer edge of a strengthening Hurricane Hortense.

The National Weather Service hurriedly issued a hurricane warning for Puerto Rico late Monday morning and authorities posted a hurricane watch for the Dominican Republic's south coast.

Hundreds of tourist yachts, sailboats, house boats and government vessels sought shelter in mangrove swamps in bays of southwestern Puerto Rico.

From 100 miles off St. Croix in the U.S. Virgin Islands, waves the height of a house crashed over the 15-foot pier where cruise ships anchor at Frederiksted. Winds howled and gusted near 70 mph, driving sheets of rain that covered roads with 4 feet of water and flooded homes.

Forecasters called Hortense, the eighth storm and third hurricane of the Atlantic season, volatile and dangerous. It comes on the heels of Hurricane Fran, which skirted the Caribbean before slamming into the eastern United States late last week, killing more than two dozen people.

Forecasters said there was a 6 percent chance the coast of Florida could feel the effects of Hurricane Hortense by Thursday morning.

"These storms are crazy. I pray it doesn't veer toward us," Jose Escobar said, perched on a ladder to board up the window of the store where he works in Ponce, a southern Puerto Rican city renowned for its Spanish colonial architecture.

Escobar hurried to finish work so he could go home to wait out the storm with his wife and five children.

At 8 p.m. EDT (5 p.m. Arizona time) Monday, the center of Hortense was about 70 miles south-southeast of Ponce, the National Hurricane Center near Miami said.

Hortense was moving to the northwest at 7 mph and was expected to gain strength. Hurricane-force winds would spread across the south coast of Puerto Rico overnight as the storm neared Puerto Rico, forecasters said.

Hortense grew to hurricane strength Monday and enlarged to a 470-mile-wide mass, with sustained winds near 80 mph in the center and weaker tropical storm-force winds toward the edge.

At the Tropical Si liquor store in Ponce, people stood in long lines to buy water. Rafael Martinez, 42, waited nearly half an hour.

"This is the last thing I have to do. What will be, will be," he said.

Children on bikes raced from point to point to watch the waves, and cruising police patrols stopped to check that no one needed help.

William Torres, 76, wasn't budging. Shirtless in shorts and sandals, he watched the churning surf and said he would stay "until the last minute. Nobody knows what is going to happen.

"Until the sea surges over the rocks, I have no fear."

Valley transit exhausted

It is interesting to note although Tempe prides itself on being an innovative and progressive community, most Third-World countries have a better mass transit system than this city.

That could all change today, if Tempe voters pass Proposition 400, an initiative to increase bus service, provide alternative-fuel buses and improve sidewalks and bicycle access among other things.

In the American West, mass transit is about as popular as an environmentalist at a lumber camp. Belief in rugged individualism (which necessitates owning the biggest, most inefficient gas-guzzler available), lots of wide-open spaces and long distances has traditionally relegated mass-transit to "city folk." But if people pull their heads from the sand, they will quickly realize the Valley has developed into the eighth largest metropolis in the country. Unfortunately, mass-transit hasn't kept up with the growth.

It is also no secret America's appetite for automobiles is killing us. According to figures provided by the Maricopa County Lung Association, more than 1,100 people will die this year alone in Maricopa County due to pollution. Although ozone pollution is decreasing as the weather cools down, it won't be long before the specter of carbon-monoxide pollution rears its ugly head. Programs such as the "don't drive one in five" are admirable, but don't cut to the heart of the problem.

Health concerns aren't the only reason why voters must seriously look at Proposition 400. Downtown Tempe and the surrounding neighborhoods are routinely turned into a traffic quagmire as people from around the Valley pour into Tempe for sporting events, ASU activities and the Mill Avenue nightlife. Finding a parking place in Tempe is tougher than finding true love on Van Buren Road — and just as expensive.

According to 1990 U.S. Census figures, more than 95,000 vehicles were available for the 55,450 occupied housing units in Tempe, or 1.7 cars per household. More than 58,223 Tempe residents, or 74 percent of those on the road, drove alone. More than 50,000 Tempe commuters spent more than 40 minutes each day traveling to and from work. Should it be a surprise when it takes two hours to go one mile during rush-hour traffic on Broadway Road?

Of course, there are always opponents to progress. "It will cost too much," is a fairly standard reply and is usually from the same group who believe too much money is spent on education.

As far as cost goes, Proposition 400 will rely on a one-half of one percent increase in the city sales tax. As long as Tempe continues to be a Valley hot-spot, much of the funds needed for the initiative will be provided by visitors spending their money in downtown Tempe.

As more and more people pour into the Valley and the road system becomes strained even further, the need for a mass transit system will become apparent. The question is, will Tempe voters rise to the future and vote for clean, efficient mass transit, or sink back into the smog the automobile has created?

PRESIDENTIAL EVOLUTION

Lack of charisma dooms Dole

In an effort to try to regain the momentum of his stalled campaign, Republican presidential candidate Bob Dole has held a series of "Listening to America" forums where the candidate can supposedly hear the opinion of genuine citizens in a casual setting.

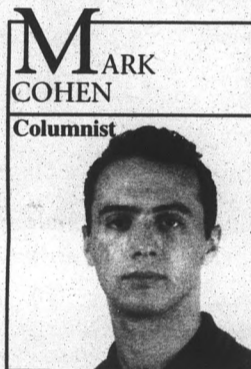

For skeptics, this might appear to be just another cheap publicity gimmick.

This time the skeptics are right. Audiences at these events are less representative of the average inquiring voter and more indicative of soldiers of the conservative right. Of course candidates generally want to speak to audiences sympathetic to their causes, but Dole is acting as if the Republican National Convention hasn't ended.

Recently, during his fifth such forum, Dole received an unusually pointed question concerning student loans. Christiane Vafior, a senior at the University of Pittsburgh, inquired about Dole's support for an end to direct student lending by the federal government.

Bob Dole did not answer. Sen. Rick Santorum of Pennsylvania intervened and defended the Republican record. Vafior tried a follow-up question. Dole again did not answer. The student was then jeered by the audience and quickly left the forum in disgust.

The garbage heap of history is filled with politicians who could not pass muster on straightforward campaign questions. During a 1992 presidential debate, then-President George Bush was stumped when asked by an audience member how the recession had affected him. In this year's Republican primaries, Lamar Alexander could not respond to the price of a simple grocery item.

MARK COHEN
Columnist

If there ever was a time when Bob Dole needed to show he is a man of the people, it is now. Let's start with some simple advice for the Republican contender: you're not in San Diego anymore.

Any man of the people needs to be able to talk freely with all of those he hopes to lead. Supporters claim Dole isn't a man of sound bytes. Be that as it may, every question needs to be answered, every issue needs to be addressed.

Dole may be more comfortable drafting legislation, but his lack of charisma on the campaign stump does not necessarily make him an understated, soft-spoken visionary. If there is some higher spiritual quality present in him, the charm of a swift-talking orator would quickly wear thin.

Dole's bureaucratic past hinders him. He has too much of a record to run on. It is not the age factor holding him back, but Dole has to run a swifter, smarter campaign than any other candidate that has kept him in the Senate in recent years. And his image, his vision and his character must be felt anew through his words — even if those words are not of a Clinton or Reaganesque style.

Who is the man Kansans are proud to call their own? Is he our man for the 21st century or is he just a Congressional bureaucratic navigator? Who is this man? Dole's speeches are just not catching fire on the campaign trail; they have not dimmed Clinton's angelic spotlight one bit.

There is something missing from Dole the presidential candidate. He must somehow add more humanity and compassion to his self-described "plain-spoken" speeches. There should be less of the type of publicity worry that has led to the recent firing of Dole's top television media advisers.

The White House is no place for candidates who won't address the real issues with genuine concern. It is no place for people who can't answer up to the tough questions.

Mark Cohen is a graduate student studying communications.

Modern students confuse business with education

Are today's university students just a bunch of whiny grade grubbers? It certainly seems to be looking that way, at least to Kurt Wiesenfeld, a physics professor at Georgia Tech. He wrote an article for Newsweek, you might have noted that it is being prominently posted on bulletin boards, doors and even in class handouts.

STEVE FORSBERG
Columnist

The thrust of his argument is that modern students, spoiled by a primary school system overflowing with gold stars and A's for effort, are expecting good grades as a matter of course. Rather than work hard to get good grades, or suffer the consequences, students argue and complain and beg for higher ones.

In the grand physics tradition Wiesenfeld is correct in describing the problem, but a mile off in explaining its underlying causes. The fault lies not primarily with the students, but with our society at large and with the university in particular. Students are just doing what they are told to do. Gripping for higher grades is part of the curriculum, albeit the "hidden" curriculum.

The problem is not caused by our primary schools. They are just reflecting an attitude that has permeated modern U.S. society. The values of rampant unfettered capitalism are supplanting the more traditional values that have governed academia. The results may be tragic, but they are understandable to anyone who has studied the interaction of commerce and wider society.

As many of you will learn in Econ 101, the traditional idea of value is considered rather quaint by modern day business leaders. In making business plans you never ask what a product is "worth" (as though it had some intrinsic value), but rather you ask "what can I get for it?" The days of craftsmen who would turn down a high offered price for their product because "it isn't worth that much" are long gone. Instead it is acceptable (indeed, almost obligatory) to take as much as you can get for an item. If it is moral for a used-car salesman to take $5,000 for a car that is only "worth" $3,000 (i.e., it could be bought for that across the street), then why shouldn't it be all right for a student to get an 'A' for a paper that was copied out of an encyclopedia at 3 a.m. on the day it was due? The paper itself has no value other than what the professor will assign to it, in the modern economic sense, so the most effort should not go into creating the paper, but rather into convincing the professor to give it a good grade.

This, as any savvy business student will quickly point out, is just what modern marketing is all about. The idea is to make the most money with the least amount of effort (or the highest grade with the least amount of work). Rather than spend the effort on improving your product, you spend it on making your consumer value the existing product more.

In other words, you could have spent an extra eight hours in the library doing research or you can spend only one hour of whining and complaining in the office, either way the professor will raise your grade. Using the latter method you have received the same return, but with a savings of seven hours of time. This is a glorious example of self-interested capitalism at work.

Likewise, many of the whining techniques that Wiesenfeld laments are simply copies (probably subconsciously) of modern advertising/marketing techniques being researched and developed by his fellow professors. For example, a student can't solve a differential equation but argues that he should get an 'A' because they are really good at solving an integral one. The analogy is the public relations scheme of MegaCorp, which argues that although its plant is poisoning the air, it employs a lot of people. The not-so-subtle idea being forwarded is that failure in one area can be "made up" by excelling in others.

Or take the ads for the Super-Duper Drug Corporation, which basically say that even though they charge nine times the cost for their drugs you shouldn't complain, because their employees are such swell folks.

"Working late again, Anne?"

"Yes, I've got to find a cure for cancer before I go pick up my three adorable children, whom I love, from daycare" (Anne is an attractive scientist — you can tell by the glasses — surrounded by an ethnically diverse group of co-workers).

Or, in terms that any professor can relate to, "You can't give me a C! I've been spending all my time volunteering at the homeless shelter!" (or "raising my family" or "working" or whatever). If it works for our nation's industrial powerhouses, why shouldn't it work for the average university student?

Yes, students are grubbing for grades just like businesses are grubbing for dollars. And isn't it the professors who are so fond of equating the two, constantly reminding students that the only reason to get a degree (never "an education") is so that we can make more money than all those poor, uneducated schmucks?

It's not like this should take anyone at the University by surprise. Thorstein Veblen, in a book written around 1915, predicted much of the current educational mess. He thought it was a "business mentality", more than anything else, that would end higher education as it was known. He was right.

The days of craftsmen who would turn down a high offered price for their product because "it isn't worth that much" are long gone. Instead it is acceptable (indeed, almost obligatory) to take as much as you can get for an item.

Writer defends column content

This will be my fourth semester as a columnist for this paper. There have been rough times and there have been good times but not once was I ever told what I could and could not write about, until now.

TINA HOLDER

For those of you who don't know me or have never read one of my columns, thank your lucky stars. Seriously, most of my columns concern Native American issues. There have been a few that were about other subject matters but for the most part I write about the issues facing Native Americans.

Over the summer I was informed that these issues — these Native American issues — "are not important" and "no one cares" about them or at least the "majority" of people on this campus don't care about them. I was also informed that if I would like to continue to write a weekly column then I would have to stop writing about Native issues and write about things that the ASU population wanted to hear about. If I "insist" on continuing to write about Native issues then I would only be able to write a column about once a month, maybe more if they had space that needed to be filled.

I would like to remind everyone that the "ASU population" also consists of Native Americans. Some of them find the issues that I write about "important." There are even non-Natives who think that some of the things I write about are important. If we waited until the "majority" decided that something was "important" then we would probably still be waiting to hear about blacks and gays having rights and women being able to work outside of the home.

While I will admit that the columns I write do not concern everyone on this campus, they do concern some of us and we do find them important. We all know that while some may agree with us, there will always be those who don't. A columnist is supposed to give people something to think about. Judging from some of the responses I have received, both verbal and written, I have managed to do just that.

Columnists are hired to write opinions and just because the "majority" may not like or agree with the opinion is not a reason to discard it. I think it would be really boring to read an opinion page that had only subjects that we all agreed on. Maybe the "majority" of people on this campus don't like what I write about, maybe they do. I don't really think that they have to like it or even agree with it — it is, after all, simply my opinion.

Let me leave you with this thought, if it is decided that Native issues aren't "important" enough to print, what's next? Women's issues? Gay issues? Black issues? And if this paper can get away with it, why not another paper ... and then another ... and another ....

Bleacher bozos ruin football season

I've been looking forward to the Sun Devil's football season since the last down of the ASU/UofA game last season. I bought season tickets last year and I really enjoyed every game. This year, I thought it would be even better. I thought that the thrill of a sold out crowd and all that support would make the game great. However, I was sorely mistaken.

When my friends and I arrived at our seats, there were people in them already. We told them that they were in our seats twice, showed them our tickets, but none of it did any good. So finally one of us ran down and got a staff member who came up to check everyone's tickets. He looked at ours and said they were valid, and then went to check theirs.

He looked at theirs and told them their tickets were general admission and they were supposed to be two sections down and they'd have to move. The people in our seats only became annoyed, saying they were athletes and they'd always sat here, I guess it didn't matter that we had tickets for that specific section, row and seats. After the staff member left, they didn't move.

And one of the guys with the people in our seats threw a look I believe was intended for me and asked if they wanted him to kick my ass. Kick my ass? Because I wanted to sit in my own seat? We then proceeded to go get security, who told them the same thing the staff member did. Once again they responded they were athletes and that they'd always sat there. The guard left, leaving instructions for them to leave, but once again they didn't. When the first quarter was almost over, three people on the other end of the row left, so the people in our seats moved down just enough so we could stand cramped on the benches (We couldn't see otherwise, thanks to the people standing on benches in front of us).

It was then that Jake Plummer went for a long pass to Keith Poole toward the corner of the end zone and everyone leaned forward to try to see. Except for the people behind me who actually pushed me down, hard, so that they could see better. I jammed my knee and reagravated an existing injury on my side. This wasn't the football season I was hoping for.

I've been looking forward to this for so long, but it looks as if inconsiderate people who either know or should know that they are in the wrong are going to ruin it for me. So in that case, I may as well sell my season tickets. Any takers? We're all Sun Devils, we're all there to cheer on the same team, why can't we treat each other with any amount of respect?

Computers help bus drivers avoid traffic

BY TIMOTHY TAIT
STATE PRESS

New technology is helping the ASU shuttle drivers navigate through traffic more efficiently, compliments of the Arizona Department of Transportation.

The bus drivers can view traffic problems — such as accidents or construction — on a small computer screen with a map of Maricopa County which is updated in "real-time" from ADOT.

The information will also be available to bus riders at informational kiosks along the bus route.

The shuttle buses that run between ASU Main campus and the East and West campuses were outfitted with the experimental traffic management system two weeks ago at no cost to the University. ADOT set up the buses with the new system to test its effectiveness.

The Radio Broadcast Data System utilizes traffic information gathered by ADOT, Skyview Traffic and the Freeway Management System. It is broadcast from radio station KSLX-FM (100.7) to the receivers located in the buses and informational kiosks. ADOT plans on setting up a kiosk on campus at College Avenue and University Drive.

East campus shuttle driver Thurman Pittman said the system has helped him avoid several accidents in the past two weeks, enabling him to deliver his passengers to the East campus quicker than if he had become entangled in the traffic problems.

"This system is great, it really does work. It lets us know of all of the accidents and events," he said. "It really is a great gadget."

Valley Coach General Manager Carol Knowles said ADOT is using the ASU shuttles to test the system for the next six months. After that time, she said, Valley Coach will probably purchase additional units for their other buses. Valley Coach owns and operates the two extended campus shuttle buses, which carry 2,202 students each week.

"We are in business for our passengers. This system is an added aid to serve our passengers," she said. "This system definitely speeds up commute time. The drivers see the problems and are alerted to find another route."

Knowles said she estimated the system would be expanded in the next few years to include passenger cars. The system is being installed into dispatch centers of Valley Metro Busing and Valley taxi services, which have begun to utilize the traffic navigation system.

Pittman said the system will eventually benefit those who drive on their own.

"If you can afford it, put this system into your car," he said. "I love this thing."

ADOT's Freeways Maintenance System is a complex system of road sensors, measuring the amount and speed of traffic, and video cameras to watch for traffic tie-ups. The information is transmitted the FMS headquarters, where it is analyzed and then broadcast for use in the system.

ASU students bring Dole's campaign on-line

BY MELODY McDONALD
STATE PRESS

For two 24-year-old ASU students trying to make a living, pounding computer keys beats pounding the pavement any day.

"Technology is growing so fast. Everyone wants a web site," said Vince Salvato, ASU webmaster and senior computer science major.

Salvato teamed with and junior political science major Rob Kubasko, art director/design director for the ASU web page, last year to build a web page for the Super Bowl XXX Host Committee.

A short time later, the pair — who worked well together — created Iguana Inc. a small Internet design studio.

Soon, they began making web pages for the likes of Tempe Mayor Neil Giuliano. Now they are at the forefront of the Bob Dole campaign, bringing the presidential candidate online.

Even though neither have voted for a Republican candidate in the past, when they competed against other web design firms for the job last year, Dole's public relation personnel were impressed with the demo they created for the campaign.

"We actually heard very good things about them through word of mouth," said Andrew Weinstein, director of media relations for Dole's campaign. "We were really impressed by how cutting edge and interesting it (the web page) was."

Weinstein said Dole and Kemp were also excited by the page.

"He (Dole) got a huge kick out of it," he said. "He got a full tour of the site about three or four weeks ago. He was highly impressed by it."

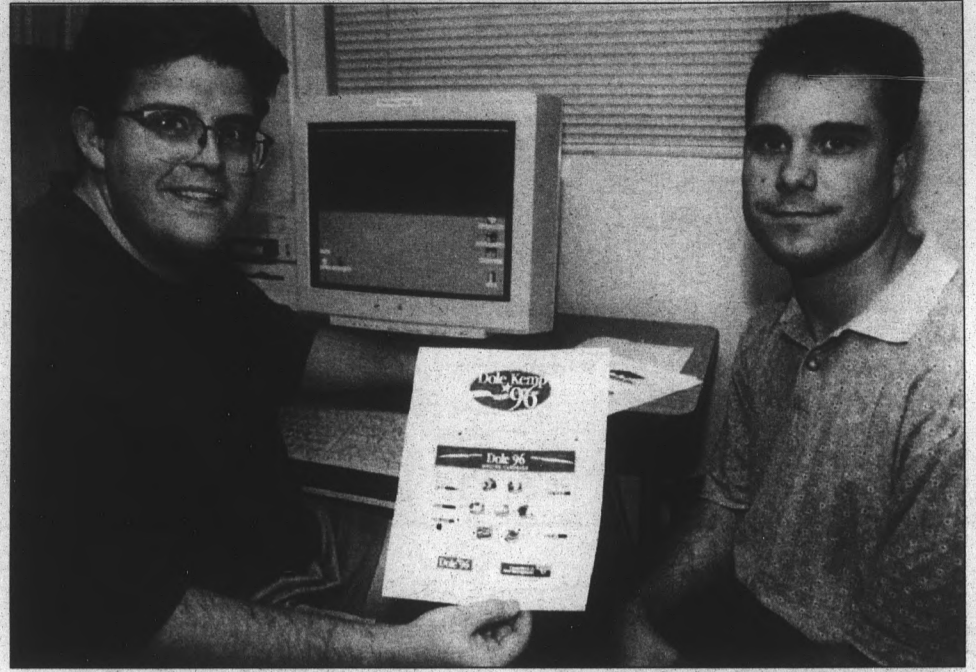

Kubasko said the site — which is the first campaign that has used this medium — is unique because it is designed to be interactive.

"A lot of web sites out there right now are very static," Kubasko said. "One of the unique things about the Dole site is when you first enter it, you can actually customize the experience for yourself."

Kubasko said it's important for people to begin looking at web sites as another medium.

"It's definitely something that is here to stay," he said.

Downtown promotions show ASU spirit

BY DANE D'ANTUONO
STATE PRESS

The Intercollegiate Athletics department at ASU is teaming up with 40 downtown businesses to boost community spirit and promote Sun Devil football.

The Downtown Tempe Community Inc. and ASU are running with the slogan "Downtown is Sun Devil's Town."

The promotion includes ticket giveaways, a two-for-one ticket offer, cheaper parking and merchandise discounts at participating businesses.

Businesses will be showing support by decorating storefront windows with ASU banners, posters and balloons, emphasizing the maroon and gold school colors.

"The promotion is designed to create an ASU atmosphere on game days," said Kevin Sugrue, marketing assistant for Intercollegiate Athletics. "When ASU and opposing football team fans come down, they will know it is Sun Devil country."

"We wanted to create a presence downtown. It is really important to have community support."

Ed Beaudette, owner of Sun Splash Juice Bar, 715 S. Forest Ave., said he "is not participating simply to make money ... it is a great way to show some spirit."

"There are not many ways a business of my size can give back to the community, and this is one of the ways," Beaudette said.

According to Theresa Striegel, marketing director for DTC, this is a first-time joint promotion, and they plan to continue it in years to come.

"We are neighbors, and good neighbors support each other," Striegel said. "The business owners realize that a lot of their customers are students or faculty members, so they want to do what they can to support the University."

Every week at any participating business, a person can register to win two lower-level tickets in section 24 of the stadium for the following ASU home game. A drawing is held for every game.

"You can't put a price on the value of ASU football tickets this year," Striegel said. "Everyone wants them, and downtown Tempe is the place to get them for free."

Also, downtown parking will cost less in the DTC lots than previous seasons.

The usual cost for parking on special event nights is $10, but now parking is $5 for Friday and Saturday nights.

A $3 discount coupon will be distributed to customers which can be used for purchases of $5 or more at participating businesses.

Visitors who park in one of the DTC lots will receive a Sparky coupon good for two football tickets for the price of one. The tickets are for the ASU vs. Boise State football game Saturday, Oct. 5. It is a $15 value.

"It's a good chance for students who don't have a lot of bucks to get psyched about football season and support the University," Striegel said.

Drug chief blasts proposals in two states

TUCSON (AP) — The Clinton administration's drug policy chief Monday denounced ballot propositions to legalize banned drugs in two Western states as "bad medicine, bad science" and the start of a national push.

"This is a cruel hoax wrapped up in some attractive ideas," said Barry McCaffrey, the national drug control policy director. "It is going to be a disaster. It violates federal law, and it sends the wrong message to the young people."

Arizona's Proposition 200 would allow physicians to prescribe LSD, marijuana, heroin and methamphetamines "for ill-defined purposes" in violation of federal law "without any definable medical benefit."

Proposition 215 in California would legalize medical use of marijuana, on the assumption of advocates that it would ease symptoms of cancer and AIDS.

Both initiatives, he said, are part of a national strategy by the National Organization to Reform Marijuana Laws and other pro-legalization use.

McCaffrey, who spoke at Arizona's Ninth Annual Prevention Network Conference, said the proposition comes at a time "when we have a national emergency going on of drug abuse by young people."

Drug abuse has doubled since 1990, and while half as bad as it was 15 years ago, "it will get worse if we don't get organized," he said. "And so right at this time, to have an initiative such as this, it seems to me is a terrible message to the community."

McCaffrey said 77 percent of American children have never used illegal drugs, but the country has lost some ground because it lost its focus on fighting illegal drugs.

The national effort, he said, should concentrate on keeping 10- to 20-year-olds from using tobacco and alcohol. He said such an effort will be a vital foundation to reducing drug use.

McCaffrey and others, including Pima County Sheriff

Clarence Dupnik, said the Arizona proposition was crafted insidiously. For instance, the measure was touted as one that would keep anyone convicted of a violent crime in prison to serve his entire sentence.

However, Proposition 200 also would require court-ordered supervised treatment, rather than prison, for those arrested for drug possession and use — amount not specified.

"It's bad medicine; it's bad science," McCaffrey said. "It would be a disaster for Arizona."

He said a scientific process is necessary to judge which medical agents have potential. "That's where these issues need to be argued out."

California's Proposition 215 is even worse, McCaffrey said, "a complete Cheech and Chong show," a reference to the comedy team that touted use of marijuana.

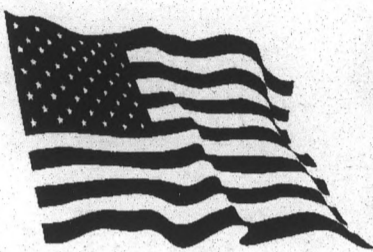

"It will have 12-year-olds smoking dope because someone somewhere once found that it was OK," he said.

Abortion consent law unconstitutional, judge rules

TUCSON (AP) — An Arizona law that requires minors to receive parental or judicial consent before having an abortion is unconstitutional because of vague and confusing language, a federal judge ruled Monday.

U.S. District Judge Alfredo Marquez issued a permanent injunction against the law, which was to have gone into effect July 20. He had issued a temporary restraining order July 16, pending his final decision.

It is undecided if the state will file an appeal, said Christopher Straub of the Pima County Attorney's Office.

"The statute's bypass mechanism doesn't provide a specific time frame for a pregnant minor to get a judicial bypass," Marquez said, referring to the law's provision that would allow a teen to seek written consent from a judge instead of her parents or guardian.

Not all counties are equipped with a court system able to handle the emergency hearings the situation could require, Marquez said.

"I can just see all sorts of problems in these outlying areas" if the county's single judge goes on vacation or is overburdened, Marquez said.

An emergency clause in the law is confusing and contradictory, he ruled. The statute allows for a doctor to perform an emergency abortion if the teen's life is in danger, but the section lacks clarity and guidelines, Marquez said.

The judge chided the state for not correcting wording and concepts that caused him to throw out an earlier version of the consent law in 1989.

The injunction was issued Monday so the state could start the appeals process, although a complete written ruling won't be issued for at least 30 days because of his heavy trial schedule, Marquez said.

Foes of the consent law were pleased with the ruling, said Virginia Yrun of Southern Arizona Planned Parenthood, which filed the lawsuit with its sister chapter in northern Arizona.

"The most important thing is to have young people have access to the medical care they need," Yrun said.

With a consent law, she said "the word gets out on the grapevine that health care providers can't be trusted and they have become the law enforcement arms of the state."

Anti-abortion activists shook their heads as Marquez handed down his ruling in court.

"Smokescreen would be the word I would use to describe what happened," said Joy Douglas of the Tucson and Arizona chapters of Right to Life. "I take issue with his complaints. We have Arizona statute 102, that requires courts to put time limits on things like this, so I take issue with that."

Douglas said Right to Life will seek an appeal. But Straub said they may not be able to do that since the group is not named as a defendant in the case.

ASU rivals UofA for Fiesta Bowl crown

By TARA TEICHGRAEBER
SPECIAL TO THE STATE PRESS

Before they slip into their graduation caps and gowns, one of two ASU seniors may wear a crown.

Allison Alexander, 20, and Kari Strobel, 22, were selected for the 1997 Fiesta Bowl Royalty Court and are contenders for the title of 1997 Fiesta Bowl Queen. Alexander and Strobel will compete against three other court members from UofA.

Alexander, a broadcasting major, and Strobel, a psychology major, were chosen in April from over 100 applicants after an extensive four-week interviewing process. Applicants were judged on scholastic achievement, personality, poise, citizenship and appearance.

"All of these women show a strong commitment to education, a strong commitment to the community, and involvement in extracurricular activities," said Kerry Luginbill, assistant public relations manager for the Fiesta Bowl.

Alexander said that she initially applied for the Fiesta Bowl Royalty to practice her interviewing and public speaking skills.

"With everything you do, there is an opportunity to learn," Alexander said. She is an active member in the Delta Gamma sorority and the Radio/Television News Association, and has volunteered for several organizations.

Strobel, a research assistant in the psychology department, has made the Dean's List and the Dean's Honor List. A member of Psi Chi, a psychology national honor society, she described herself as a magnet to hard work.

"If I'm not completely busy, the day doesn't seem worthwhile," Strobel said. As a member of the Fiesta Bowl Royalty, she said she hopes to be a role model to the community. "It's a huge responsibility, but I'm ready for the challenge."

Both women agreed they won't be disappointed if not crowned as queen.

"As a competitor you always think there is a winner and a loser. It's not that way in this case. I was selected for the court. I've already won," Strobel said.

"I can't say that I don't want to be queen," Alexander said. "But my goal was to be on the royalty court, and that's an accomplishment in itself."

Coronation of the Fiesta Bowl Queen will take place on Sept. 30 at the Wells Fargo Bank Fiesta Bowl Queen's Gala at

Johnson's emotion gives ASU spark on golf course

BY ED ODEVEN
STATE PRESS

Scott Johnson likes to let his emotions show, and when he's on the golf course, those emotions become a catalyst for the team's success.

"I'd say he's the spark plug. He's the most emotional of the guys on the team, which is good for the team sometimes," ASU coach Randy Lein said.

The Sun Devils won the 1996 NCAA Men's Golf Championship in June and Johnson was not afraid to express his feelings.

Johnson said winning the title was "the greatest moment any of us had in golf. The emotion that went into that week was incredible."

Sometimes those emotions get in the way.

When Johnson is struggling he "makes the game tougher than it needs to be," Lein said.

Johnson, a fifth-year senior from Kennewick, Wash., has matured and now has better emotional control.

"Scott, although he's gotten better, still gets too emotional at times," Lein said. "And, you want to be careful because you don't want to take that away and have him not be competitive. We've been working on that and he's much improved. But he is the spark plug of the team. I think he's the guy that gets everyone else fired up."

Johnson's fiery approach is a stark contrast to teammates Brad Cannon and Darren Angel.

"Brad and Darren are very stoic," Lein said. "I mean they could hit three balls in the water (or) they could have a hole in one and they really don't show much emotion. If Scott hit three in the water, he may jump in himself. He's been able to focus that more and make it work to his advantage."

Johnson's love for golf began when he was 9 years old. A family friend triggered this interest.

"Jim Morris is from my hometown and he would come back every summer," Johnson said of the former Scottsdale Community College golf coach.

"When I was 9 we'd go out there (to play golf) and we are as close as brothers.

He got me playing golf without a doubt. He sparked the interest. Obviously my dad played and my brother played, but I didn't like it 'till this guy got a hold of me."

Ex-USC golfer Chris Johnson, Scott's brother, plans to tryout for the pro tour this summer. Scott wants to begin his quest for pro stardom with his brother.

But first, he wants to compete in the U.S. Amateur Open.

"I think the U.S. Amateur is very special," he said. "I can delay turning pro for a few months to compete in the Open."

People think golf is a game of camaraderie, Johnson disagrees.

"Golf is a lonely game," he said.

Fortunately, Johnson has a brother to turn to.

"It will be nice to have Chris around," he said.

During Johnson's five seasons at ASU, Lein has seen vast improvements in his golf game.

He's improved his driving and he's added distance and accuracy, Lein said.

Former Sun Devil golfer Christian Hills, who was an ASU assistant golf coach last season, believes Johnson's mental approach to the game has changed.

"I think what he's improved most is his mental side," Hills said. "He's worked on his swing a lot and made some really good changes. But the main thing is his confidence as a person and a belief in his game is probably the biggest asset he has. Even if he's not playing well he is looking to put up the best possible score. I think his best asset is his mind."

Is Johnson good enough to be a professional golfer?

Lein thinks so.

"He has everything it takes to be successful out there," Lein said. "It's just a matter of getting the scoring down, which means making more putts, because you can only hit so many greens. It comes more to making more of those 10 to 20-foot range putts."

Hills agrees.

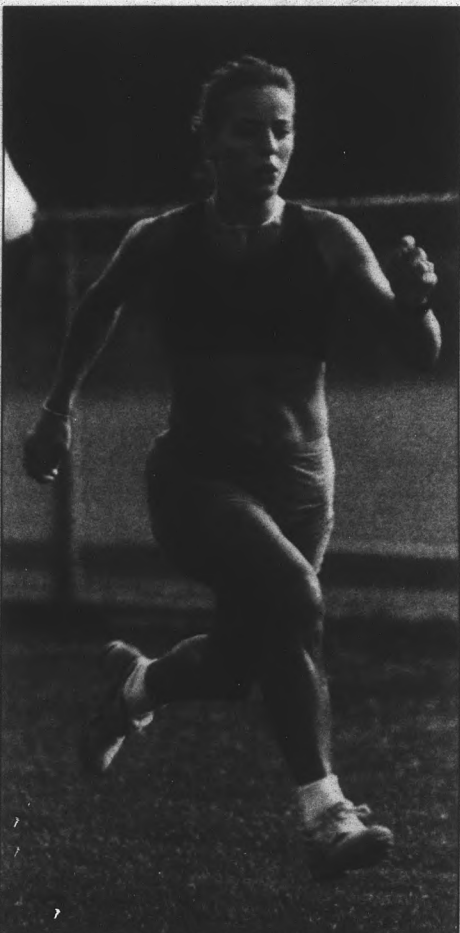

"Scott's very structured in what he does," Hills said. "He knows what he wants to do. He's very determined. He's

Barrett finds success, fun in cross country

Cross country runner Kim Barrett is confident in her and her team's ability this season. Lori Cain/State Press

BY JOSH DEFAMIO
STATE PRESS

For some, running is a way to get away from the world. For others, it is a method used to relieve stress. Still others see running as a painful, tiresome nuisance.

To Kim Barrett, running is just plain fun.

Barrett, a Madison, Wisc. native, cites the 'runner's high' as one of the motivations that helps her to be one of the top runners on the ASU cross country team.

"It (running) is an exhilarating feeling," Barrett said. "Being able to accomplish the things that we accomplish. The workouts that we do, and the runs, and things like that, but also, it just makes you feel good."

Since transferring to ASU from Southern Illinois University three years ago, Barrett has experienced both the good and the bad. On the positive side, her heavy training schedule — she runs five days and mountain bikes one day a week over the summer — has helped her shave precious seconds off of her race time. On the down side, the team has consistently been rather small and uncompetitive.

However, she sees vast improvement in the near future with the hiring of track head coach Greg Kraft and his staff, including cross country coach Walter Drenth.

"I really like Coach Drenth," Barrett said. "He has some good ideas that are new for us. Everything is new, the training and everything. ... He's doing a real good job just easing us into it and keeping it fun at the same time."

In addition, Barrett is optimistic about the addition of four new recruits — two freshmen and two junior transfers — that she feels give ASU a strong five runners for the first time in a long time.

The fact that Barrett is the only returning athlete among the top five has not been lost among her teammates or coaches.

"Lately in practice, she has assumed the role of team captain because she's been here the longest and knows the system best," longtime teammate Ari Rodriguez said. "She tells them where to go to practice, and what to do (to help them run better). She's really stepped up in the team mode, trying to get everyone together."

North Texas coach realistic heading into ASU game

BY DUSTIN KRUGEL
STATE PRESS

North Texas head coach Matt Simon sounds a lot like a coach who is a 32-point underdog going into the Eagles' game Saturday against 18th-ranked ASU at Sun Devil Stadium.

"It will be an unfriendly environment," Simon, who was Washington's running back coach from 1981-1991, said during a teleconference Monday. "I know what it is like in Sun Devil Stadium. I know how close the field is. I've been through the exposures. I've been on the good sides and the bad sides. We can at least get them mentally and emotionally ready to play a great football team. We just want to try to put our best foot forward and be realistic about our expectations."

Simon, who is 10-13 now in his third year with North Texas, said the current Sun Devils (1-0) have the look of a contender.

"I was very impressed with what I saw on television at the Arizona State-Washington game," Simon said. "I can remember times when all the speed was on the Husky side of the field and the Arizona State Sun Devils were doing most of the chasing. It looks like the shoe's on the other foot now."

The Eagles (1-0) are no strangers to playing competitive teams. North Texas moved to Division I-A got one of the best work ethics I've seen. Everything right now is working up to a bigger picture later on (turning pro)."

Johnson, a returning All-American, is confident in his ability.

"I've played pretty good in local tournaments. I was always pretty successful at that level. I never really have thought that I'm not good."

Barrett

Barrett has a special reason for being optimistic about the upcoming season. Although Barrett, whose eligibility runs out after this year, wants to improve her own times, she also has other goals in mind.

"With cross country, we have quite a few more girls here this year," she said. "There are more new recruits that came in, so I'm looking forward to more of a team effort than what we had last year."

Off the track, Barrett graduated last May with a degree in physical science. She returned to ASU this semester as a graduate student with the goal of earning her teaching certificate. She eventually wants to teach Physical Education, as well as coach cross country and track and field.

last year and have already played football powers Kansas, Oklahoma, LSU and Alabama. Not surprisingly, the Eagles walked off the field with their head held down a lot last year, finishing 2-9.

"I think our young men at least understand what it is like to play in a big stadium," Simon said. "What it is like to throw your body around for 60 minutes with the big boys, so to speak. I don't think they will be overwhelmed with the environment."

Simon compared ASU to last year's 9th-ranked Jayhawk team, which whipped UCLA 51-30 in the Jeep Aloha Bowl.

"This is the most impressive football team we've played in my three seasons at North Texas," he said. "We felt like Arizona State could potentially be another Kansas-type football team going into the season. As you know Kansas had a fine year last year. After taking a look at their first game, they are probably better than Kansas and in all likelihood could be a Top-10 football team at the end of the season."

In North Texas' season opener the Eagles struggled but defeated Illinois State, 20-14 on Sept. 7. Eagle quarterbacks Damon West and Jason Mills completed only 8 of 27 passes and threw 3 interceptions. North Texas rushed for 146 yards on 46 carries with tailback Hut Allred rushing for a career-high 113 yards on 18 carries.

"We didn't play very well," Simon said. "We came out and at least set a tone in the ballgame, but we are going to try to be a bit more physical. Probably offensively we did not perform to our expectations. They kept our defense on the field much too long."

Simon blamed last week's struggles on youth and inexperience. The Eagles started a new quarterback, running back and three wide receivers against the Redbirds.

"We are very young and we broke out in a very bad case of diaper rash," Simon said of his offense. "We are still trying to find our niches. It's the first time most of those players have played together."

Top Honors

ASU tailback Michael Martin and place-kicker Robert Nycz were named Hertz Car Rental Pac-10 Players of the Week Monday for offense and special teams, respectively.

Martin, a junior, rushed 20 times for 92 yards and one touchdown in ASU's 45-42 win over Washington last Saturday. Martin led all receivers with five receptions for 74 yards.

Nycz, a junior, kicked the Sun Devils' game-winning field goal from 38 yards out with two seconds remaining in the game.
