Crime in Tempe down, but not out

BY KENNES BOLIG
 STATE PRESS

Tempe's crime rate is down, but don't expect Tempe police to throw a parade any time soon.

The city experienced a 5 percent drop in serious crimes this year according to the Tempe crime index for January through August. Tempe police received 9,122 serious crime reports between January and August of this year, 453 fewer than the same period in 1995.

Although police consider any drop in crime beneficial, the decrease is not significant when compared to the overall crime rate, said Sgt. Toby Dyas, Tempe police public information officer.

"It's not a big change when you look at the big picture," he said.

The city's crime rate had swelled steadily over the years, jumping 28 percent between 1992 and 1995.

The Tempe crime index evaluates the eight most serious crimes: murder, rape, robbery, assault, burglary, larceny, auto theft and arson. The department updates the index each month, comparing the previous year's numbers within comparable time spans.

Tempe Chief of Police Ron Burns said it is common for the rates to fluctuate, and Dyas said the 1996 numbers can still grow.

"The true picture will be at the end of the year," Dyas said.

So far, six of the eight crimes included in the index are down, with murder and rape experiencing the two largest drops — 63 percent and 19 percent respectively.

Ditching utility lines costing developers

Tempe City Council to hear report at tonight's meeting

BY RAY STERN
 STATE PRESS

Since 1989, Tempe engineers have been sweeping away the clutter of overhead utility lines like old cobwebs in an attic.

But Tempe city Councilwoman Linda Spears said Wednesday she is concerned that the cost of the beautification project may unduly burden new development.

"To me ... it makes the city look great, but what's it going to do from a development standpoint?" Spears said. "(On) Apache Boulevard, if redevelopment funds have to go to underground power lines, we're not going to have any money to do anything else with."

Under an ordinance passed seven years ago, no new above-ground utility lines can be put up in Tempe, and all the existing cable, phone and 12,000-volt power lines must be placed underground.

The city has funded much of the undergrounding on major streets with a $10 million Salt River Project aesthetics fund and capital improvement funds. But $2 million came from the owners of developing properties.

Spears said the city puts a lien on new properties with above-ground utility lines, and when the land is developed, the cost of the undergrounding is made the property owner's responsibility. In some cases, an owner can get the undergrounding paid for with a city deferment fund.

"Some people do object," said Tempe City Engineer Lee Quaas. "We do have a process where they (property owners) figure what the cost would be to convert it and then we compare it to the total project's cost to see if it's disproportionate."

At tonight's council meeting, Quaas will present a report on undergrounding utility lines that details the individual project costs for some private developers, and which developers have received deferments.

For example, Tombstone Brewery at Scottsdale Road and the Loop 202 received a $20,776 deferment to underground the utility lines for its $300,000 facility.

Optometrist John Chrisagis was recently charged about $6,500 to bury lines near his new office at Rural Road and Broadmor Drive.

"It does make it look better here, but it has been a pain in the ass," he said.

Chrisagis said he believes a city facilitator for the projects would make things go easier for developers.

Workers have buried about 22 miles of utility lines since 1989, and expect the remaining 15 or so miles of main street utility lines to be underground within another seven years, Quaas said. At that point, overhead lines on residential streets will start to be buried.

By 2009, Quaas said that except for the giant 69,000- and 230,000-volt transmission towers, he expects virtually all of the above-ground utility lines to be gone.

"It's mainly a matter of aesthetics," he said. "We had some pretty cluttered locations that we cleaned up nicely. This really does help a lot."

Quaas added that many of the Apache Boulevard power lines have already come down, but there are still a few sites to be developed.

"The big cost has already been taken care of by the city on Apache," he said.

Although not the largest drop, auto theft underwent the most significant decrease — 14 percent — falling from 1,496 reported thefts to 1,277, Dyas said.

Dyas attributed the change to Tempe police's increased effort to fight auto theft after Arizona reported having the highest auto theft rate in the country last year.

The national auto theft average is 605 thefts per 100,000 people. Tempe's rate is 1,602 per 100,000 and Arizona's rate is 14,000 per 100,000, said Sgt. Scott Bartlowe, Tempe police crime prevention officer.

In addition, Tempe's auto theft rate rose 81 percent between 1992 and 1995, experiencing a significant jump every year.

Tempe police responded by conducting a series of auto theft prevention programs which may have contributed to the first drop in auto theft in four years, Bartlowe said. He added that car owners should take three preventative steps to combat auto theft: lock the doors, do not leave the keys in the car and keep valuables out of view.

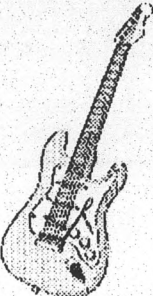

If car owners follows these steps, the chance of auto theft drops to one in 1,000 from one in 30, Bartlowe said.

Netanyahu, Arafat unable to find solutions but agree to new talks

BY TERENCE HUNT
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Marathon negotiations between Israeli and Palestinian leaders failed to resolve bitter differences that exploded in Mideast violence and jeopardized the fragile peace process. But the two sides agreed to press ahead with nonstop talks beginning Sunday.

Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu said the summit that ended Wednesday "cemented the principle that the path to peace is through negotiations and not through violence." He added, "The children of Israel are safer tonight."

At the close of the White House-sponsored negotiations, President Clinton said, "We have not made as much progress as I wish we had." He said he was not certain the Mideast crisis was over but expressed confidence that violence would subside.

"Please, please give us a chance to make this thing work in the days ahead," Clinton implored Palestinians and Israelis. He said he was sending Dennis Ross, the senior U.S. mediator, to Sunday's peace negotiations at Erez, a border crossing between Israel and Gaza.

The top priority will be Hebron, the West Bank town where Israel has refused to fulfill a promise to move its troops from Arab neighborhoods into Jewish settlements by March.

Netanyahu, talking to reporters at his hotel, said that if lower-level negotiators don't resolve the Hebron dispute, "Arafat and I will sit down until we solve it. We agreed to do that."

Netanyahu and Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat sat stone-faced, side by side in the East Room with Jordan's King Hussein at the wrapup of the talks. By prearrangement, they declined an opportunity to talk there.

Leaving the White House, Netanyahu vigorously shook Arafat's hand, clasping it with both hands for several seconds. Clinton beamed. Arafat saluted Clinton before stepping into his car. The president returned the gesture.

Later, Nabil Shaath, a top aide to Arafat, said the summit's failure was Israel's fault. "There is no agreement about anything. President Clinton did his best to put the peace process back on track, but the Israelis wouldn't let him," Shaath said.

Five weeks before U.S. elections, the inconclusive summit brought Republican charges that Clinton had risked the prestige of his office and came up empty-handed.

Netanyahu, at a news conference, staunchly defended the president. "What did you want him to do? Did you want him to do nothing?"

"There are very tough problems ahead," Secretary of State Warren Christopher said.

Rival troops mass in N. Afghanistan, U.N. tries to help

BY ANWAR FARUQUI
ASSOCIATED PRESS

KABUL, Afghanistan — The rebel fighters who control most of Afghanistan clambered over the mountains north of Kabul on Wednesday, tightening their siege on the lone valley still in the hands of former government soldiers.

Several hundred refugees anticipating more fighting were seen heading south toward Kabul, lugging bags of clothes and leading young children. They said the two sides were squared off about three miles apart.

Meanwhile, a U.N. envoy tried desperately to prevent separate outbreaks of fighting in a nearby part of the country. Norbert Holl met with northern warlord Rashid Dostum at his headquarters in Mazar-e-Sharif.

Dostum's army of ethnic Uzbeks and Tajiks, which controls most or all of seven northern provinces, is the only force standing in the way of complete Taliban control of Afghanistan. The warlord has reportedly sent 40,000 troops to bolster his front line.

So far, Dostum has taken a neutral position between the government troops and Islamic rebels.

There was no word late Wednesday on the progress of Holl's shuttle diplomacy. After meeting with Dostum, he flew to Kabul to meet the Taliban rebels, who captured the capital last week.

The Taliban militia, made up of seminary students and clerics who want to impose their version of strict Islamic law on Afghanistan, have routed most of the smaller armies that have been fighting for years.

In taking the capital Friday, the rebels overran fighters loyal to Ahmed Shah Massood, who had been shoring up the regime of President Burhanuddin Rabbani.

The remnants of Massood's army are now trapped in the Panjshir Valley, about 150 northwest of Kabul. His soldiers have dynamited the entrance to the valley and reportedly laid dozens of land mines in the area.

But Wednesday, bearded Taliban soldiers with Kalashnikovs and rocket launchers slung over their shoulders hiked through the foothills of the Hindu Kush mountains aiming for the Panjshir Valley. They vowed to chase Massood out of Afghanistan or capture him and put him on trial as a war criminal.

Most Taliban fighters belong to Afghanistan's majority Pashtuns, and the possibility of a bloody ethnic war with Dostum looms if the two sides fail to reach an agreement at the negotiation table.

Hedging their bets, both have expressed a willingness to negotiate while still preparing for battle.

"We have no plans to fight Dostum if he surrenders; but if he doesn't, we are ready," said Sher Khan, a Taliban fighter at the front line, 90 miles north of Kabul.

"We are prepared for war if Taliban forces move to our positions," said Fateh Khan, a spokesman for Dostum in the Pakistani capital of Islamabad.

70 people feared dead after plane crashes in the Pacific Ocean

BY ERIC LYMAN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

ANCON, Peru — "What's happening? What altitude am I at? Why is my ground crash alarm on? Am I over land or sea?"

Capt. Erick Schreiber's voice was calm but his situation was desperate. His Boeing 757, carrying 70 people through night and fog, was lost. His navigational systems failing, he appealed for a guide plane to show him the way back to the airport, according to authorities who recounted the last frantic minutes of Aeroperu Flight 602.

Then, crash alarms sounding in the cockpit, Schreiber told the control tower to prepare a rescue.

Then, silence.

When day broke Wednesday, all that could be seen of the plane was a field of seats and other debris floating amid a fuel slick in the Pacific Ocean. A Peruvian reporter said the wreckage was scattered over a one-mile radius 40 miles off the coast.

By midafternoon, rescuers had recovered seven bodies, but had found no sign of survivors among the 70 people on board — nine crew members and 61 passengers, including four Americans.

The Americans aboard were Galen Canutsen, Samsina Niis Lindeen, Dennis Trial and Kenneth Vaisman Lichtman, the airline said. No hometowns were given.

The pilot's appeal came only five minutes after the plane's 12:42 a.m. takeoff. Flight 602 was bound from Lima, the Peruvian capital, to Santiago, the capital of Peru's southern neighbor, Chile.

"I don't have any instruments," Schreiber said, according to Transportation Minister Elsa Carrera, who heard a tape of his conversation with the control tower in Lima.

"What's happening? What altitude am I at? Why is my ground crash alarm on? Am I over land or sea?"

"You're over sea," the tower reported.

Schreiber calmly asked for a plane to guide him back to the airport. Just before 1:10 a.m., Schreiber advised the tower to prepare for a rescue.

Then the tower lost contact with the aircraft.

Carrera said Schreiber never lost his composure during his 28-minute conversation with the tower.

"The pilot's calmness, his serenity was incredible," she said.

Searchers found parts of the Boeing 757's fuselage about 40 miles off shore, west of Ancon, said Adm. Jaime Monge, head of navy rescue operations. Ancon is 30 miles north of Lima.

The search for survivors was centered on a 50-mile stretch of the Peruvian coast in an area reaching 50 miles off shore, navy Capt. Gonzalo Jaurigui said.

As rescuers searched through the thick fog, anxious family members and friends awaited word. Some were ushered into a private room by Aeroperu employees as they arrived at the Lima airport.

"We're just hoping they're still alive. We're praying they're still alive," said a man who said he had relatives on the plane. Police led him away from reporters before he could identify himself.

Only 11 of the passengers were Peruvians. Of the remaining victims, there were 30 Chileans, two British, two Italians, a New Zealander, a Spaniard and 10 people from other Latin American countries.

Latest crime stats raise questions

The latest crime figures are in and it appears the Tempe police are making modest, but important gains in combating certain illegal activities.

That's a promising sign in this world where everyone seems to want to kill everyone else for one reason or another.

Maybe this whole idea of community-based policing is the solution. It does make sense to put the cops back on the streets to get to know people before they haul some of them off to the pokey. Anyway you slice it, the police seem to be doing something right.

That's not to say, however, that everybody should be happy as clams because the crime rate dropped five tiny percentage points. Heck, according to Sgt. Toby Dyas, public information officer for the Tempe police, the cops themselves are taking these numbers with a grain of salt. That's also a good sign.

It's nice to see that our civic guardians are not gaining a false sense of security because of these numbers. It's nice to see the men and women in blue — or tan — still on the streets, still fighting crime, because a lot of crime continues to haunt this town.

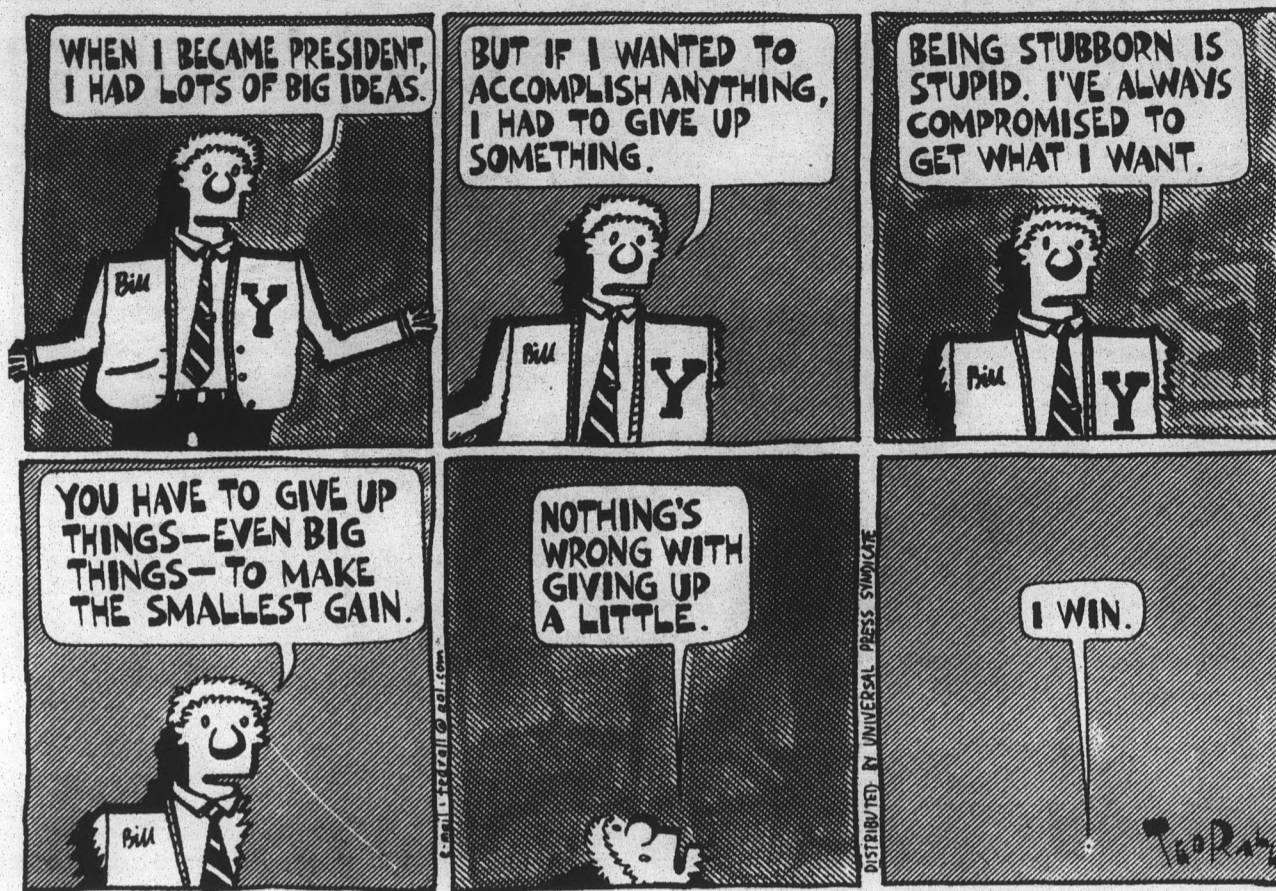

Nothing exemplifies that point more than the actual numbers. Between January and August of 1995, there were 9,575 serious crimes that were reported. During that same range this year, a mere 9,122 serious crimes were called in. Simple math shows a whopping reduction of 453 murders, rapes, robberies, assaults, burglaries, larcenies, auto thefts and arsons. When everything is all said and done, though, that's not that big of a decrease.

The great citizens of this town, and some folks from the surrounding areas, continue to slaughter each other while stealing their stuff in the process. It goes without saying that one murder or rape is one too many.

Until we as a society can come up with a real-life solution, we will have to hide in our homes, buy more guns to protect ourselves and kill more people along the way. The inhabitants of this country must not solely rely on the police and their statistics. We must participate in community watch programs that encourage neighborhood involvement. Or, if anything, get to know your neighbors and communicate with them on a regular basis. Until that happens, we must seek out any kind of encouragement that seems to come down the pike.

Even though the Tempe police are not wildly tooting their own horns about the 5 percent tentative decrease in serious crimes, we can be pleased to know that at least something is happening. It's not that much, but it's still something. That something means that somewhere in all of those numbers, with the increases or decreases, there lies a solution. Somebody is doing something right, but that something is being overlooked.

The day may come when we find a solution to this societal hodgepodge of killings, robberies and rapes. Until that happens, we must remember the words of that old guy on Hill Street Blues who said: "Hey, let's be careful out there."

Polls do disservice to democracy

America is a poll-crazy nation. We are subjected to polls on various mindless topics daily. This election year brings about an even greater dose of statistics on what the public thinks about candidates and propositions.

These opinion polls are meaningless because they don't have any ground to stand on. They do little to change our country except give the public a chance to voice their fact-void beliefs. They are unreliable and unrepresentative of the population.

Proof that polls are bogus can be shown when looking at the presidential race. Last week, Bob Dole was only behind in the polls by less than 10 percent. Yesterday he fell behind by over 20 percent. The change over a matter of days is bewildering. Analysts suggest the fluctuation was derived from the anti-Clinton advertisements the Dole campaign was running. Americans shifted back when the Clinton campaign team countered the attacks. The real reason is those sampled in the polls are apparently imbeciles.

These polls show that Americans are influenced by 30 seconds of propaganda. After seeing Bob Dole criticize Clinton's comment about how he would have inhaled if he had the opportunity, citizens moved to the right. Then after Dole went to Florida for vacation and Clinton made an effort to bring peace in the Middle East, Americans were back on the side of the president.

The people sampled in the polls cannot be representative of the population. If they are, then we are a doomed society for being so easily manipulated. Those giving their opinions are the ones who have extra time on their hands to take part in a poll. Hard-working Americans who vote regularly do not have time to interrupt their busy schedule to take part in a meaningless poll.

The public does not always express how it truly feels. Americans say things to pollsters just to sound more intelligent than they really are. Those polled could say they want Clinton as president because they don't want to admit they like Dole, which seems to be taboo.

The opinions of Americans should not matter because not all Americans are educated on the issues and candidates. Many only hear current events in Jay Leno's opening monologue. If any opinion should be heard it should be from people who are knowledgeable about the issues. Experts should be the ones voicing their opinions and then Americans should react after hearing the various viewpoints.

Current polls are used by citizens to compare their thoughts with those of other voters. The result is group thought coinciding. People discover the majority of Americans are steering one way and the rest follow.

Politicians also feed off polls. They react to them so they are seen more favorably by the public. Someone running for office won't take a stance on their own because they are whores to the public. Polls continue to generate this selling-out.

The greatest argument against polls is that they do not matter.

The only time public opinion matters is in the ballot box. Whether the people care about feeding homeless people, hate Gov. Symington or want to end animal testing means absolutely nothing. The only thing of importance is acting on their beliefs. As we all can see there are still people living on the streets, Symington is still governor and animals are still being used in experiments.

A poll taken by ABC News on Monday revealed that six out of 10 registered voters were satisfied with the presidential choices. Another poll from USA Today void of relevance states 60 percent want the option to invest Social Security taxes. Because we can't do anything now to change the presidential candidate and nothing will occur about what we do with Social Security taxes, the polls are worthless.

We are much better off not having to go with the consensus of what the nation thinks. Polls are just lip service. By eliminating them, we would be doing away with America's new pastime of whining without action.

State passes shallow law

It was a law worthy of Arizona legislators, but surprisingly it was California which became the first state in America requiring chemical castration as a "treatment" of repeat child molesters last month.

California Republicans triumphed as the bill made its way through the state senate with strong support from both parties and was signed by Gov. Pete Wilson on September 17.

Looking into what this new law will do with sex offenders (and victims of such) you may want to know what the heck they were thinking of over in the sunshine state. The idea is that by injecting men with a hormone-suppressing drug (Depo-Provera) weekly, their sex drive will be reduced and Californians can feel better about the oh, say 16,000 child molesters residing in the state prisons.

I guess that's what you call desperate measures.

The new law is yet another sad example of the short-term thinking that reigns among voter-luring politicians. The author of the new law, Bill Hoge, R-Pasadena, proudly pointed to European countries which have used the drug on child molesters with great success. Figures from these countries show a decline in the repeat offender rate from almost 100 percent to just two percent after the introduction of Depo-Provera. Hoge could tell his listeners. But what he "forgot" to mention was that the very same countries also offered counseling as an additional way to treat sex offenders.

Studies have shown that the FDA-approved drug can be helpful in the treatment of one class of offenders known as paraphiliacs. Paraphiliacs are (for those of you without Webster's Dictionary of Sexual Preferences) persons compelled to commit sex crimes in order to realize a specific sexual fantasy involving non-human objects, the suffering of oneself or one's partner, or children and other non-consenting partners. It is likely that many of California's child molesters fall under this category, but it is also very likely that many don't.

Unfortunately, the new law that at least half a dozen states are eager to adopt, does not distinguish between different classes of sex offenders. Ironically, California — the state of "one person, one shrink" — does not offer any type of counseling or psychotherapy for the persons who commit offenses not out of a sexual urge, but out of psychologically underlying reasons. The injection does not deal with the motivations or reasons for the sex crimes; it only relieves the offender from his compulsive fantasy.

Some opponents of the law, such as the American Civil Liberties Union, accuse the new measures of being unconstitutional and a violation of prisoners' civil liberties.

Tough.

I oppose the chemical castration law strongly, but it is not exactly out of the concern for the child molester's sentiments.

The problem is politicians in California embrace this law for the wrong reasons. To voters it may sound like their state government really has put an effort into "getting even" with these outcasts of society. Being castrated is exactly what these people deserve, right?

Well, despite the graphic labeling as "chemical castration," the injection of Depo-Provera would not result in the impotence of a man, but merely an "erotic apathy." Any idea where such a feeling might lead to in a violent and abusive person? As one sex researcher put it, "This drug will not give people a conscience."

Not surprisingly, politicians will be politicians and therefore believe passing shallow laws like this one is their God-given duty. Tragically for California, sex offenders will probably still be sex offenders — chemical castration or not. Vivi Stenberg is a junior studying journalism.

Jeans come at high price

Take another look at those jeans in your closet. Do you know under what conditions they were made?

Sweatshops were thought to be a closed chapter of American history. But in the 1990s, the robber barons have made a comeback, greedier than ever.

Case in point is the Guess fashion label. Those high-priced Guess fashions sold in trendy boutiques and upscale department stores are sewn under conditions of misery, right here in the United States. Approximately 3,000 Guess workers toil in a number of contracting shops in Los Angeles. Many earn less than the minimum wage. Most do "piecework," getting paid only for what they sew. Some sew Guess clothes all day in sweatshops, then sew Guess clothes late into the night in their homes (even though industrial homework operations are illegal under U.S. law). Many workers don't get paid overtime. And they don't get health insurance, sick days, paid vacations or holidays. Falsified time records and under-the-table cash payments are common.

Guess' garment workers must struggle for the barest survival. The majority are women from Mexico and Central America and almost all have families to support. A minimum wage worker, working full-time and year-round makes $8,840, which is about half the poverty line, defined as $15,600 for a family of four.

Meanwhile, the owners of Guess — Maurice, Paul and Armand Marciano — lead lives of luxury. Their salaries, bonuses and share of profits together came to one-quarter of a billion dollars over the last three years. They own mansions in Beverly Hills, mountain chalets, private jets and yachts. Maurice Marciano makes the equivalent of $13,000 per hour — more in one hour than a Guess garment worker makes in an entire year.

These super-profits come from a double exploitation — of the workers who make the jeans for sub-poverty wages and of the young consumers who are tricked by clever advertising into paying outrageous prices for them. Jeans which cost $5 or less to make are sold to the Guess market — primarily young women — at $75 a pair.

Guess is listed on the "Trend Setter List" of the U.S. Department of Labor. Supposedly, Guess is an example of progressive apparel firms who monitor their contractors to verify that they abide by the law. In fact, there is a fundamental contradiction between Guess' self-policing and its obscene greed for profits.

Workers who report violations are fired. Company inspectors receive kickbacks from the contractors to look the other way. Guess has no motive to find out what is happening in its factories. As long as appearances are maintained and the profits keep rolling in, why should anything be changed?

The garment workers union, UNITE (Union of Needletrades, Industrial, and Textiles Employees), is fighting to change these conditions. A class-action lawsuit has been filed on behalf of Guess workers and a nationwide boycott of Guess products launched.

UNITE wants Guess to take responsibility for the conditions under which its products are made and to stop fighting the unionization of its contractors. Ultimately, only by uniting and forming unions can garment workers stop sweatshop exploitation. Nationwide, pro-worker coalitions like Jobs With Justice and Students Stopping Sweatshops are supporting the Guess workers' struggle for dignity and decent working conditions. ## Professor has different take on South Korean events

Trevor Fields' Sept. 25 letter, "American eye needed for S. Korean events," should come as a surprise to many discerning State Press readers. In his commentary on the Sept. 23 Associated Press story, "South Korean soldiers shoot two Northern spies," Fields unwittingly betrayed his unfamiliarity with the recent developments in South Korea.

Equally noticeable was his unfounded bias in dismissing the AP story as inaccurate. Most shocking to me was Fields' claim that South Korea's government rules on "fear" and truth is the first thing to be suppressed by the Korean government. In many respects, Field's statements are factually incorrect and logically flawed.

First, is Fields justifiable in doubting the accuracy of the AP story? He asserts that "the lack of a full name and the fact that South Korea and North Korea are mortal enemies leads me to feel that the whole story is not coming out." Fields takes issue with the byline of the AP story. He insinuates that AP writer Young-Joon Ahn, in using his initials for his byline, i.e., Y.J. Ahn, was not as forthright as he should be as a journalist and thus his story was questionable. Fields' way of interpreting the byline of the AP story was rather peculiar.

Research shows that "bylines ... tell readers more about authors or news sources than about a news story itself." I'm wondering whether Fields would have reacted to South Korea stories published in the New York Times in a similar way if the stories had been filed by NYT Seoul correspondent Nicholas D. Kristof with his initials? Also, I am curious whether he reads A.M. Rosenthal's syndicated columns with more skepticism than those of Anthony Lewis because Rosenthal does not use his full name for his byline.

Second, does Fields make a convincing case in stating that stories from South Korea are suspicious when they involve the never-ending tension between North and South Korea because they are enemies? Again, Fields' assessment of the AP story is off-base. It is always possible that stories like Ahn's AP article will be manipulated in one way or another, depending on how and where the information is gathered. Nevertheless, few stories can be perfectly objective. More often than not, the widely assumed objectivity of news is more of an elusive goal of journalists than an everyday reality. But this does not necessarily mean that all the stories on countries in conflict are nothing but propagandistic information from each country. If Fields' logic ever prevails, numerous stories filed by American correspondents on the Soviet Union during the Cold War era for AP and other major news organizations should have been dismissed offhand as misinformation.

Fields also questions Ahn's AP article because he does not consider it a "whole story." If Fields' "whole story" argument relates to what he perceives to be a lack of balance in the AP article, I should emphasize that Ahn and other AP correspondents in Seoul are not in a most enviable position to ensure fairness and balance in their news reporting. They are rarely allowed access to news sources in North Korea. The North Korean government has barred nearly all foreign journalists and news agencies for years.

And finally, does South Korea represent a politics of fear and lies, as Fields maintains? There is no question that Fields' knowledge of the current body politic of South Korea is surprisingly limited. Since July 1987, South Koreans have made giant strides in adopting the rule of law as the modus operandi of their political process. It is widely accepted that South Korea is a quickly maturing democracy, where freedom of speech and the press is vigorously exercised by Koreans with little restraint.

Few South Koreans are living in fear of arrest and torture for criticizing their government. As International Press Institute President David Laventhal stated in 1995: "The Korean press has played an important and courageous role throughout this century in moving first toward restoring self-rule and then toward achieving democracy. ... The press is livelier and more open than it has ever been before."

Models lit-up in ASU radar chamber

BY JEFF OWENS
STATE PRESS

The ASU ElectroMagnetic Anechoic Chamber is even bigger and more blue than Marge Simpson's hairdo.

The 2,200 square foot research facility, lined with blue radar-absorbing or "anechoic" foam spikes, is one of the largest university-based chambers in the United States, said Craig Birtcher, associate research specialist.

"The facility is for measuring the radiation characteristics of antennas," Birtcher said.

To put it in layman's terms, it's how things — like airplanes, helicopters, satellites, ships and ground vehicles — look to radar, he added.

Birtcher said effective radar measurements require that targets be hit with a "planar" or very flat wave. In atmospheric aircraft testing, this requires a great distance between the radar source and target, because spherical radar waves must travel quite far to "light up" the target with a suitable planar wave.

Such tests are often subject to uncontrollable variables such as climate, he said, or the government may be reluctant to conduct lengthy and extensive outdoor testing of highly classified aircraft.

"The obvious solution to this is to come indoors," Birtcher said.

That's what the chamber is for: it enables large target models to be hit with deliberately-shaped radar waves under consistently controlled test conditions.

The dimly-lit chamber, 51 feet long, 26 feet wide and 18 feet high, does not have the long distances normally used for testing. To compensate, radar waves are bounced off a large, serrated parabolic mirror.

The walls, ceiling and floor are covered with thousands of the foam spikes, which allow almost completely distortion-free readings from target models.

"It's a very modern, state-of-the-art facility," said Constantine Balanis, Regents professor and director in the telecommunications research center. "It is very useful in both the military and commercial industry."

Birtcher said while such research has considerable military stealth-technology applications, and some funding does come from the U.S. Department of Defense, the chamber houses no secrets.

"As a university, we don't do any classified work," he said.

Balanis said one of the biggest research projects at the facility is the Advanced Helicopter Electromagnetics Program. It is a joint effort between ASU, the Department of Defense, NASA and industries such as Boeing, McDonnell Douglas Corp. and Rockwell International. The program's goal is the development of highly advanced antenna design and data analysis for advanced helicopter applications.

"We are using our facility extensively for this particular project," he said.

ASU tuition rising, but not as fast as national trend

By SARA BUSH
STATE PRESS

Tuition may be rising at ASU, but not as fast as at most other colleges.

College tuition nationwide increased by about 5 percent this year, according to the College Board, a national organization that develops and administers scholastic tests.

But the Arizona Board of Regents is struggling to keep the annual increase of in-state tuition low. Tuition at Arizona universities for residents increased this year to $2,009 from last year's cost of $1,950 — an increase of about 3 percent.

According to Mary McKeown, associate executive director of financial affairs for the Board of Regents, only five other state universities charge less tuition than Arizona universities.

"A significant number of factors are considered when the Board of Regents determines tuition," McKeown said. "The Board of Regents tries very hard to keep tuition as low as they can."

These factors can include the cost of tuition and fees in other states, the cost of attendance — including living expenses, the overall cost of providing education and the amount of financial aid available, she said.

When the Board of Regents increases tuition for universities, the money is not earmarked for a specific purpose, Provost Milton Glick said. He added that rising tuition reflects social and economic trends.

"The cost of doing business is going up," he said. "The other reason has to do with a shift of the (financial) burden from state to individual. There is a shift in the public mood from viewing education as a public concern."

Louise Gacioch, spokesperson for Maricopa Community Colleges, said that tuition increases at universities could be leading many students to enroll in community colleges.

"It's an expensive world," said Gacioch. "Wherever someone can save money, they will."

According to Gacioch, up to 62 percent of ASU juniors have attended at least one class at a community college in Maricopa County during their college careers.

Teen's threat to blow up White House gets attention

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Angry that her letters to the president got no response, 17-year-old Stephanie Honore wrote again, threatening to blow up the White House. That got some attention real fast.

Secret Service agents showed up at Stephanie's door Tuesday to ask about the letter, in which she also wished President Clinton were dead and directed an obscurity to him.

But no criminal intent was found, and no charges will be filed, said Paul Magalski, Secret Service agent in charge in Columbus. Threatening the president carries up to five years in prison.

The letter was Stephanie's fifth to the president. She said she was frustrated Clinton hadn't responded to her previous letters expressing concern about AIDS, education, animal rights and the environment.

Each letter became increasingly hostile, and the last one, sent a few weeks ago, included the line: "I wished I had a bomb to blow up the White House."

The teen-ager said she will continue her letter-writing on social issues but will tone down the language.

DPS building gets face lift and 12,000 more feet

BY KENNES BOLIG
STATE PRESS

The ASU Department of Public Safety is moving out — but it couldn't be happier. A.W. Arcaro Construction began setting up shop Wednesday while ASU DPS, currently stationed in the crumbling remnants of what was once the Campus Inn, anticipates an additional 9,000 square feet of office space.

"This project has been long awaited," said ASU Chief of Police Lanny Standridge.

The $1.86 million in renovations was approved by the Arizona Board of Regents in March and will provide a total of 12,000 square feet of additional space, including a new building plus additions to the current facility. The project should be completed in nine months.

Standridge said the University initiated the move when maintenance costs for the motel — which suffers from chronic leaky roofs — skyrocketed.

"The building has exceeded by a considerable margin the maintenance costs for the University," he said. "They are way above the average costs for buildings at ASU."

DPS renovations officially began in 1991 when the department received an additional facility, allowing it to move out of the worst part of the termite-infested inn, Standridge said. However, many services are still crammed into what remains of the motel, he said.

"(The new building) will certainly provide us the necessary room to function with more efficiency," he said. "It will also be a much better quality of space than we have had in many years."

Although some DPS departments have relocated because of the construction, all services will continue as normal, Standridge said.

Diane Morton, ASU DPS program coordinator, said the department is anticipating the renovations despite the inconvenience the move has caused.

"It was very hectic while personnel that was affected by the move were packing," she said. "It was a little difficult but everybody did it with a smile."

Morton added that the new space will be a welcome addition.

Tim Hacker/State Press

An ASU DPS model shows an addition onto its current facility, where a total of 12,000 feet will be added. The project is scheduled to be completed in June 1997.

"Overall, it's the best thing that's ever happened to the DPS," she said. "New office space is good for morale — it gives you an up, especially when you're stuck in the Campus Inn."

Committee investigating ROTC

By JENNIFER NETHERBY
STATE PRESS

The Associated Students of ASU is marching forward with an investigative committee that will determine if ROTC is following the ASU non-discrimination policy toward homosexuals.

The committee's main mission will be to find out if the Air Force ROTC policy supersedes ASU policies, said Andy Ortiz, committee chairman and graduate student affairs vice president. Currently, the ROTC follows the Department of Defense's "don't ask, don't tell" policy.

"We're dealing with two different laws," Ortiz said.

With the "don't ask, don't tell" policy, the military does not ask about sexual preference, and service members don't tell. Members can be discharged if the military finds out they are homosexual. ASU follows a policy that does not discriminate against homosexuals.

The committee was formed last week after a student senator introduced a bill charging that ROTC was not following the ASU non-discrimination policy. The bill asked that ASASU petition the University to force ROTC to follow the ASU policy.

An Air Force ROTC student, who is not representing the Air Force, will be on the committee, as well as two college senators, one who is also a member of the Campus Environment Team. The Army ROTC will not participate in the committee because they said a student would not be qualified to represent them, Ortiz said.

The committee will work with the ASU Administration and the Department of Defense to determine which policy takes precedence, Ortiz said.

POLICE REPORT

ASU police reported the following incidents Wednesday:

- A male affiliated with ASU reported that someone damaged a power line at the Central Plant.
- A female affiliated with ASU reported that someone removed her day planner and money from the Memorial Union.
- A male affiliated with ASU reported that someone removed his bicycle from Life Sciences E-wing, where it was secured with a lock.
- A male affiliated with ASU reported that someone removed his bicycle from Hayden Library, where it was secured with a lock.
- A female affiliated with ASU reported that someone removed her bicycle from the Architecture Building, where it was secured with a lock.

- A male affiliated with ASU reported that someone removed his bicycle from the Student Recreational Complex, where it was secured with a lock.
- A female affiliated with ASU reported that she lost two keys belonging to ASU.
- A male affiliated with ASU reported that someone damaged his vehicle in Parking Structure 5.

Tempe police reported the following incidents Wednesday:

- A man was arrested after he pulled his van up behind a woman's car while driving down Rio Salado Parkway and began bumping into her vehicle. The two stopped at a red light at Rural Road, and the woman got out of her car to get the man's insurance and license plate number. The man began yelling at the woman, saying, "You think you're so tough that you can say anything to a man." He then began to push the woman's car into the intersection, causing other cars to swerve in order to avoid colliding with the car. The man was booked into Tempe City Jail.

• A man was arrested for theft at Roosevelt and Fifth streets after investigations revealed he concealed a stolen pager in the front pocket of his pants. Another suspect had grabbed the pager and handed it to the man. Police also discovered the man had a felony warrant for his arrest.

Former Los Angeles Police Department detective Mark Fuhrman, center, whose alleged racist past sparked outrage and helped acquit O.J. Simpson, sits in a Los Angeles courtroom Wednesday during his no contest plea for perjury during the trial.

Fuhrman pleads no contest to perjury at Simpson trial

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Exactly a year after a jury voted to acquit O.J. Simpson, Mark Fuhrman pleaded no contest to perjury Wednesday for denying at Simpson's trial that he had used the word "nigger" in the past decade. He was given three years' probation and fined $200.

The former detective, dressed in a dark suit, only answered quietly with, "Yes, your honor," "Yes" and "Yes, sir," when questioned if he understood the plea bargain. He could have gotten up to four years in prison.

It was Fuhrman who found one of the most critical pieces of evidence — the bloody glove beside a guest house on Simpson's estate.

Fuhrman was charged with lying on March 15, 1995, when he agreed under cross-examination from F. Lee Bailey, "that he had not addressed any black person as a 'nigger' or spoken about black people as 'niggers' in the last 10 years."

Superior Court Judge John Ouder Kirk accepted Fuhrman's plea, calling the deal "appropriate and fair."

Fuhrman, 44, retired after Simpson was acquitted and now works as an apprentice electrician in rural Idaho, where he will be allowed to serve his probation.

Clinton orders review of gas poisoning in Gulf

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Pentagon remains baffled that no soldiers appear to have died from sarin gas poisoning at the end of the Persian Gulf War despite evidence indicating thousands may have been exposed, a senior defense official said Wednesday.

"The primary known symptom is death," the official told reporters, speaking on condition he not be named. "This is really lethal stuff." But he added, "We don't have any examples at this time of anybody dying from exposure."

The Clinton administration, sharply criticized for its handling of the Persian Gulf War syndrome issue, has ordered a sweeping Pentagon re-evaluation of the matter even as the CIA completes work on a detailed wind current study that could show how many troops may have been exposed.

In a separate initiative, Defense Secretary William Perry is considering a program to inoculate all 1.5 million active-duty service members against the germ warfare agent anthrax.

At the center of the nerve gas controversy is the March 1991 demolition by U.S. Army troops of Iraqi rocket shells the military now knows contained sarin nerve gas. As much as two tons of sarin may have gone up in the demolition of weapons in an open pit and a bunker called Khamiseyah.

"Khamiseyah, in our judgement, is a watershed in this search for an understanding of Persian Gulf veterans' illnesses," said the senior official. "Khamiseyah is the first event where we now can place American troops in the known presence of chemical agents."

Despite persistent reports of unexplained ailments among Gulf War veterans, the Pentagon has said repeatedly it has found no evidence of a "Persian Gulf War syndrome" and no medical evidence of gas poisoning.

Only last June did defense officials realize from Army reports as well as United Nations weapons inspections that what was intended as a routine postwar demolition of conventional weapons may have let loose a lethal gas cloud. As the CIA studies' wind and weather patterns prevailing the day of the demolition, officials fear the number potentially exposed could reach 100,000.

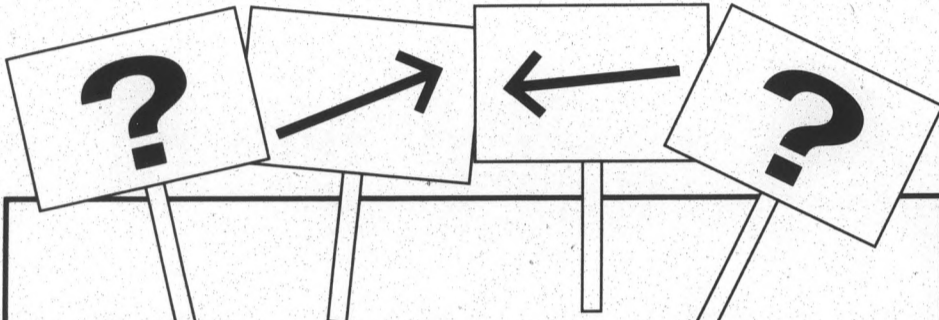

The official said that while Iraq clearly marked its mustard gas munitions, nerve gas agents were indistinguishable from conventional weapons. The Iraqis kept track of them through a separate handling procedure.

"U.S. troops were blowing up a lot of ammunition at the end of the war," the senior official said. "They thought it was all conventional."

Veterans groups, and some lawmakers, have been sharply critical of how the Pentagon handled the medical complaints of Gulf War veterans. The new disclosure that soldiers might have been exposed to chemical weapons residue has only heightened that criticism.

The re-evaluation of Pentagon actions surrounding Gulf War syndrome was ordered by Deputy Defense Secretary John White, the Pentagon's No. 2 official, with an eye toward trying to shore up the Pentagon's credibility among some critics.

White ordered: $5 million in defense research funding to study low-level chemical agent exposure, an outside review of the Pentagon's extensive medical survey of thousands of Gulf War veterans, an intelligence review to learn more about what was known about Iraqi chemical weapons and whether the inadvertent demolition could have been avoided, and an Army review of the actual demolition incident.

MAJOR: CHEMICAL ENGINEERING
THURSDAY, OCTOBER 24, 1996

This position entails on-the-job training in the area of soybean crushing or corn wet milling, so there's no question it can be a hot, dirty job. It's similar to the position of a foreman or front line supervisor, and it generally leads to a career in plant management.

Training lasts 8-9 months, and in that time, you will schedule work for employees, set production schedules, develop cost-saving measures, and much more. You'll frequently be called on to use your technical background to solve problems. This position is a good blend of supervision, management, and engineering.

Freshman Steiner reminds 1st-year coach of herself

Midfielder Trisha Steiner has quickly impressed Coach Terri Patraw with her strength and ability this season. Going into last Sunday's game, Steiner was the only Sun Devil to never have come out of a game.

BY RANDY JONES
STATE PRESS

When women's soccer coach Terri Patraw saw Trisha Steiner for the first time she couldn't help but think she was seeing a younger version of herself.

"We are very similar players," Patraw said. "We're both attacking midfielders. Short, quick and skillful. I knew Trisha would be a strong player for us. And she's actually been stronger than I anticipated."

This is indeed a compliment for the freshman. Patraw was a midfielder at the University of Wisconsin from 1987 to 1990. As a Badger, Patraw netted 20 goals and was a Central Region All-American and a Big Ten All-Academic selection.

Steiner lettered three years at Mater Dei High School in Anaheim Hills, Calif., and also played club soccer for the CHSA Double Trouble and the Southern California Blues. She was named first-team All-League and was second-team California Interscholastic Federation all three years. In 1994 she was named County Offensive Player of the Year and was the most valuable player of the National Cup Final.

Going into last Sunday's match with San Diego State University, Steiner was the only Sun Devil to not come out of a game. That changed when Steiner and an Aztec player decided to introduce foreheads to each other.

"I thought about that — never leaving a game — while I was laying on the ground," Steiner said. "It was disappointing. It was something I thought was pretty cool."

After losing their versatile Steiner, the Sun Devils lost focus and their hold on the game. SDSU beat the Sun Devils 6-0.

"I was like 'Is she going to be OK?'" teammate Kerri Kulak said. "A lot of what happened to us, happened after she got hurt."

In fact the Aztecs scored three goals in the first 15 minutes after Steiner was taken to the hospital.

Though the cut was severe, it required 30 stitches and Patraw said she thought it looked like "a hole in her head," Steiner has not lost her sense of humor.

During practice on Tuesday, Steiner and fellow wounded Sun Devil Erin Reinke (out the year with a concussion), were kicking the ball around and joked with team trainer Heather Mattocks.

Grabbing the ball, Steiner yelled to Mattocks, "Hey, Heather. Wanna watch us play some head tennis!"

When she does get back on the field, which could be as early as this weekend's trip to New Mexico, Steiner said she is eager to keep the improving team moving in the right direction.

"Our stats don't show it, especially losing 6-0, but we are getting better," she said. "We have so many more chances. We're playing much more solid and more like a team."

Steiner sees ASU becoming a power in Pac-10 soccer in the near future.

"If we stay together for four years, with other (recruits), we'd better be one of the best teams," she said. "If not I'll be really disappointed."

When asked about a potential match-up with women's soccer dynasty North Carolina, winners of 12 of the last 14 NCAA championships, Steiner said she thinks that given time, the Sun Devils would love the opportunity.

"I'm not saying we could beat them," she said. "(But) if in my senior year we get the chance to play them, I'd like to think we could hang with them. They'll be together four years just like us. So why shouldn't we be competitive?"

It's a tall task, especially for a program in its infancy. But if anyone is willing to take on such a challenge, Steiner's the one, said Patraw.

"She's got a very strong work ethic," she said. "Trisha is such a tough competitor. If she told me to get my butt in gear, I'd listen."

Golf gets preview of site for NCAAs

BY ED ODEVEN
STATE PRESS

The No. 3 ASU women's golf team heads to Ohio this weekend for a "preview" of the national championship.

The Sun Devils will participate in the Rolex Women's Fall Preview Friday through Sunday at Ohio State's Scarlet Golf Course in Columbus — the site of this season's NCAA championships May 21-24.

This 21-team field boasts several of the top golf schools in the country, including defending national champion No. 1 UofA and No. 2-ranked San Jose State.

"We'd really like to win this event," Sun Devil coach Linda Vollstedt said. "We want to go out and make a statement, since the national championship is here. We'd really like to win the tournament."

Vollstedt said UofA, San Jose State and UCLA will be the teams to beat.

"I would have to bet those would be the top teams," she said.

Arch rival UofA is expected to provide stiff competition for the Sun Devils, especially after the Wildcats' impressive win at the season-opening Dick McGuire Invitational two weeks ago in Albuquerque. The Wildcats won the tourney by 19 strokes over runner-up San Jose State.

Other schools participating in the tournament include: Duke, Florida, Furman, Georgia, Indiana, Louisiana State, North Carolina, Ohio State, Oregon, South Carolina, South Florida, Southern Methodist,

Men's tennis to see 1st action in invite

BY JOSH DEFAMIO
STATE PRESS

With its top player out, and the start of the regular season still a full semester off, this weekend's ASU/Thunderbird Collegiate Invitational may not seem too important to the ASU men's tennis team.

However, many players on the team see this as a chance to find out how good they really are.

"We don't start our regular season until the spring," freshman Ed Carter said. "We're a young team this year, so (the tournament) gives the freshmen a chance to experience what college tennis is. It will give us an opportunity to try some of the stuff we've been working on in practice."

Carter is one of five ASU freshmen expected to participate in the tournament.

Only two non-freshmen will play in the tournament, sophomores Casey Was and Hiroshi Nagashima. Neither Was nor Nagashima participated in last year's tournament. Senior Sergio Elias, the team's top player, will sit out due to an injured shoulder.

Head Coach Lou Belken hopes the tournament, which features many outstanding players, will be a learning experience.

"We're extremely young, probably the youngest team I've had in 14 years," Belken said. "This is the first tournament for most of these guys, obviously. This year's field will be outstanding and we hope to continue to get this type of field in the future."

ASU will compete against players from NAU, UofA, the University of Minnesota, the University of Mississippi, Mississippi State, the University of Texas, the University of Utah and California.

Although it hosts the tournament, ASU does not want to rely on the home field advantage.

With senior Sergio Elias out with a shoulder injury, the ASU men's tennis team will have five freshmen and two sophomores competing this weekend when it hosts the ASU/Thunderbird Collegiate Invitational.

"(The heat) is going to be an advantage to us," Nagashima said. "However, I don't think we should think about it too much. We should just go out there and play tennis."

This is the second year ASU has hosted this tournament. Last season, ASU graduate Oscar Busted, now a professional player for Chile, took first place.

The tournament will be held at Whiteman Tennis Center, near Packard Stadium. Friday's and Saturday's matches will begin at 9 a.m. and Sunday's finals will get underway at 10 a.m.

MLB PLAYOFF ROUNDUP

Atlanta beats L.A. in 10th inning of pitching duel

Atlanta's Mark Wohlers delivers a pitch in the 10th inning of the Braves' playoff game against the Los Angeles Dodgers Wednesday at Dodger Stadium in Los Angeles. Atlanta won the game 2-1.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — John Smoltz took care of the Los Angeles Dodgers for the first nine innings Wednesday. His catcher finished them off in the 10th.

Smoltz, who led the majors in wins and strikeouts this season, allowed only four hits and Javy Lopez homered off Antonio Osuna to start the 10th as the pitching-rich Atlanta Braves beat the slumping Dodgers 2-1 in the opener of their NL playoff series.

As expected, the matchup between the teams with the top two staffs in baseball was a pitching duel. There were just nine hits in the entire game, four by Atlanta.

Smoltz, 24-8 this year, retired his final 13 batters in a dominating performance. He struck out seven, walked two and threw strikes on his last 17 pitches. He improved to 6-1 lifetime in postseason play.

Mark Wohlers, who had a club-record 39 saves, worked around a one-out single by Greg Gagne to preserve the victory for the defending World Series champions.

Ramon Martinez matched Smoltz for eight innings, giving up just three hits. But his bullpen did not do the job as the Dodgers lost their fifth straight game, a streak that cost them the NL West title and left them as the wild card team.

Lopez worked the count full before fouling off three pitches. He then hit a drive far over the fence in right-center field.

Four-time Cy Young Award winner Greg Maddux (15-11) — whose streak will likely be stopped by Smoltz — will pitch for the NL East champion Braves in Game 2 on Thursday night against Ismael Valdes (15-7).

Martinez left after the eighth, having thrown 131 pitches. With his last pitch, he retired Mark Lemke on a grounder with a runner at third.

Martinez struck out six and walked three. The Dodgers tied it in the fifth on a leadoff double by Gagne and a two-out double by slumping rookie Todd Hollandsworth, who finished the regular season with just two hits in his final 23 at-bats.

Hollandsworth was 0-for-2 with a strikeout before slicing his hit just inside the third-base bag on the first pitch from Smoltz.

The run snapped a 21-inning scoreless streak for the Dodgers, who hadn't scored since the third inning Saturday in the next-

Baltimore takes care of Indians in 7-4 win

BALTIMORE (AP) — First, the Baltimore Orioles used a display of raw power to beat the Cleveland Indians. Then they took advantage of a throwing error on a controversial play.

Now the Orioles need to come up with just one more win, regardless of technique, in order to eliminate the defending AL champions.

Cal Ripken scored the tiebreaking run on a disputed play in the eighth inning, and the Orioles defeated Cleveland 7-4 Wednesday for a 2-0 lead in their best-of-5 playoff series.

Baltimore moved within one win of becoming the first wild-card team to advance while pushing the Indians to the brink of elimination. Game 3 will be Friday in Cleveland.

"Anything can happen, but I like our chances at this point," Baltimore manager Davey Johnson said.

"We were looking for a split but now we're up 2-0. We're in a good situation," said Baltimore second baseman Roberto Alomar, who has been surrounded by controversy since spitting in the face of umpire John Hirschbeck last Friday.

A few hours after the game, Alomar dropped his appeal of a five-game suspension. A hearing had been scheduled for Thursday.

In this game, though, another Alomar was the center of attention in a play involving an umpire.

Brady Anderson homered for the second straight day, helping the Orioles take a 4-0 lead. Albert Belle homered as the Indians rallied, tying it with a run in the eighth.

Then Baltimore bounced back in the bottom of the eighth.

Bobby Bonilla drew a leadoff walk from Eric Plunk and Cal Ripken, in his first playoff series in 13 years, hit a ground-rule double. Eddie Murray was given an intentional

Palmer's miscue gives N.Y. 5-4 victory

NEW YORK (AP) — Dean Palmer, who left the bases loaded in the top of the 12th, threw wildly past first base in the bottom of the inning Wednesday night, giving the New York Yankees a 5-4 win over the Texas Rangers to even their AL playoff series at 1-all.

Derek Jeter opened the 12th with a single off loser Mike Stanton, who then walked Tim Lincecum on a full count. Mike Henneman relieved, and Charlie Hayes bunted the first pitch toward Palmer at third base.

Palmer fielded the ball cleanly, but skipped his throw to first past second baseman Mark McLemore, covering on the play. Jeter paused briefly at third before sprinting home when he saw the ball bounce away.

"It was one of those games where the first team to make a mistake was going to lose," Jeter said.

Juan Gonzalez, who hit a three-run homer in the playoff opener, hit another three-run homer and a solo shot, giving Texas an early 4-1 lead. Cecil Fielder helped rally the Yankees with a home run and a tying single in the eighth.

The best-of-5 series shifts to Texas. Jimmy Key will start Game 3 for the Yankees against Darren Oliver on Friday night.

"If we had lost, we'd have had to go to Texas and win three in a row, and that's too tough," Jeter said. "It's still going to be a struggle, but we like our chances."

The odds are in the Rangers' favor with the remainder of the series to be played at The Ballpark in Arlington. Texas has owned New York at home, winning 13 of the last 16 games there, including five of six this season.

The win snapped a four-game postseason losing streak for the Yankees, whose last playoff victory was a thrilling, 7-5 win in 15 innings over Seattle last October.

Texas led the majors in fielding this season. In the playoff opener Tuesday night, Palmer made a diving, backhanded stop that helped prevent New York from breaking loose in the first inning.

Palmer had his chance to put the Rangers ahead in the 12th.

New York Yankees' Cecil Fielder (right) is congratulated by third base coach Willie Randolph after Fielder hit a solo home run in the fourth inning of Wednesday's playoff game against the Texas Rangers.

Kenny Rogers, scheduled to start Game 4 for the Yankees, made his first relief appearance in three years and walked Will Clark, loading the bases with two outs. After Brian Boehringer relieved, Palmer flied out to right.

Boehringer wound up the winning pitcher.

Trailing 4-3, the Yankees tied it in the eighth off Jeff Russell.

Bernie Williams singled and hustled into second when Tino Martinez flied out to deep left. Fielder, whose homer had brought the Yankees within 4-2 in the fourth, lined a single to right and, as Williams slid home with the tying run, many of the Yankees bolted from their dugout to greet him.

last game of the season — a 4-2 loss to the San Diego Padres.

The Dodgers were beaten 2-0 in 11 innings by the Padres on Sunday with the NL West title at stake. Los Angeles has scored only six runs during their five-game skid, and just once in its last 27 innings.

Atlanta took a 1-0 lead in the fourth when Marquis Grissom singled, stole second, went to third on a groundout and scored on a sacrifice fly by Fred McGriff.

The Dodgers put runners on first and third with two outs in the second when Lopez committed a throwing error, but Smoltz fanned Gagne to end the threat.

A two-out single by slumping Mike Piazza, who went 4-of-23 to end the regular season, put runners on first and third for the Dodgers in the third. But again Smoltz, who used 62 pitches in the first three innings, pitched out of trouble, retiring Eric Karros on a foul pop.

Ryan Klesko walked and stole second with one out in the seventh, but Martinez retired Lopez on a grounder to third and struck out Jermaine Dye to end the inning.

Notes: A crowd of 47,428 — well below a sellout — attended the game. ... Martinez was starting against the Braves for the first time in 1996. He appeared in relief against Atlanta during an 18-inning 5-3 win by the Braves on Aug. 3, pitching four innings and being tagged with the loss. It was his only relief appearance of the year and one of four relief stints in his nine-year big league career. ... Piazza had a tough time throwing out runners trying to steal during the season, getting just 26 of 183.

walk to load the bases.

Paul Assenmacher relieved, and B.J. Surhoff hit a tapper back to the mound. Assenmacher threw home for a forceout, but — with Surhoff running on the wrong side of the baseline — the throw from catcher Sandy Alomar, Roberto's brother, bounced off the glove of first baseman Jeff Kent.

"He definitely blocked my view," Sandy Alomar said. "I was trying to aim the ball but couldn't see Jeff clearly. Either (Surhoff) was running close to the grass or inside the line."

The wild throw allowed Ripken to score for a 5-4 lead, and brought Indians manager Mike Hargrove out of the dugout to discuss the play with plate umpire Greg Kosc.

"Obviously Sandy did not make a good throw, but our contention was he had to alter his throw because Surhoff was running inside the line," Hargrove said. "In the umpire's judgment, they said that it didn't have anything to do with the way the play turned out."

Replays cleared showed Surhoff to the left side of the baseline as he approached the bag.

First base umpire Tim Tschida said, "The fact that the baserunner is inside the line doesn't in and of itself constitute interference. His being inside the line has to prevent whoever is covering the bag from catching the ball. In our judgment, it was simply an errant throw."

Once play resumed, Anderson hit a sacrifice fly and Roberto Alomar added an RBI single.

The loss left the Indians in the position of trying to become only the fourth big league team to rally from an 0-2 deficit in five-game playoff series. Cleveland led the majors with 99 wins this season.
