Residence halls trying to up rates

BY BILL BERTOLINO
STATE PRESS

Student representatives from each residence hall voted 11-to-5 Thursday night to increase room rates on all dorms for the 1997-98 school year.

According to Jennifer Abell, associate director of campus affairs, the rate increase will offset inflation and salary increases due to the federally mandated minimum wage increase.

If passed by the Arizona Board of Regents, the rate increase would likely be 2.94 percent. Residents would see an average yearly increase of about $75 which would take effect next fall. Increases of about 3 percent have been passed the last several years.

During the meeting, many representatives discussed a "wish list" which would be affected by the rate increase.

According to Wendell C. Brierly, senior business operations manager for residential life, there will be about $43,000 left over after the room rate increase. The money will be used for a project list which will cover general costs and wish lists for different residence halls.

Not all residents are happy with the rate increase, including Brian Williams, a 22-year-old architecture student and former vice president for the Center Complex residence halls.

"I'm upset," he said. "I wouldn't say I'm overly upset, but I think a lot could have come from a 'no' vote — they could have set a precedent on how residence life responds to the wants of its residents."

Brainy battle begins today

BY SARA BUSH
STATE PRESS

Some ASU students will fight it out to see who's best this weekend — by using facts, not fists.

ASU's College Bowl academic quiz teams will compete on campus today and Saturday. They will determine which all-star team will advance to the next tournament to compete with other universities.

College Bowl tournaments put two teams of four head-to-head in each round. Teams compete to correctly answer questions on topics ranging from academic subjects to popular culture.

"It's basically competitive Trivial Pursuit with a good diversity of questions," said Joseph Kushner, College Bowl competitor and freshman chemical engineering and chemistry major.

The tournament runs in a round-robin setting, so each team will compete with every other team. The competition will eliminate the group of competitors down to an all-star team to compete in the next tournament.

Kushner said the team has made a good showing at Berkeley University and CalTech this year. It plans to travel to tournaments in Utah, Denver and another at Berkeley this spring.

This weekend's tournament is on campus Friday from 6:30 p.m. to 10 p.m. and Saturday from 8:30 a.m. to 10 a.m. The competition's location has not been announced, but will be available at the Memorial Union.

Deadline here for Rose Bowl tickets

BY JENNIFER NETHERBY
STATE PRESS

Today is the last day for students to apply for Rose Bowl tickets through ASU at $85 each.

The ticket office will be open from 7:30 a.m. until 6:30 p.m. to make it easy for students to apply for tickets, said Marie Carey, ASU athletic ticket manager.

ASU will face Ohio State in the 83rd Rose Bowl at 3 p.m. on Jan. 1.

There are 4,400 tickets available to student season ticket holders and full-time students. If more than 4,400 students apply for the tickets — as they are expected to — there will be a lottery Tuesday to determine who receives the prized game tickets. Ticketholders will be notified with a postcard. Students pay for tickets after the lottery.

The date for students to pick up Rose Bowl tickets was moved to Dec. 29-31 — up from Dec. 28-30 — to better accommodate students.

"We moved them up because students voiced concerns," Carey said.

The ASU ticket office will work with students who have special circumstances regarding ticket pick-up.

Changes in store for Tempe Center area

BY RAY STERN
STATE PRESS

The Tempe Center at Mill Avenue and University Drive celebrates its 40th birthday Saturday, and ASU officials said the fifth decade will bring major changes for the Center.

ASU bought the land in 1983, realizing it would someday be critical real estate as the school continued to expand.

Now, ASU is courting developers to solidify renovation plans expected to take place in the next few years.

Karen Honeycutt, coordinator for University properties, said all retail-space leases in the Center — except for Wells Fargo Bank — expire by June 30, 2000. The new developer will likely handle future lease agreements.

When ASU selects a developer, which may not be for several months, the developer will work with tenants who want to continue doing business in the new and improved Center, Honeycutt said.

"They have been aware all along that the future plan was for development," she said. "I don't think there will be any surprises. They are all really prepared for it."

ASU released a master plan for the 10-acre Center during the summer. The first phase outlines plans to build a 1,500-space underground parking lot at the site, then revamp the Center with a pedestrian-friendly mix of academic facilities and retail shops. The underground parking will be available to both students and the public.

The 158-space visitor parking lot south of Structure 3 will be removed in Phase 2, according to the plan, but the new parking spaces will more than make up for it. Phase 5 — perhaps 20 years away — could see the tearing down of the 509-space Structure 3, Honeycutt said.

Myrtle Avenue will become much shorter under the plan, and will not connect to 10th Street. Instead, the area will become more pedestrian-friendly with the addition of walkways and grassy spots.

"It is a very exciting project, and it does bridge even more of the University into downtown Tempe," said ASU Provost Milton Glick. "We would want it to be a very attractive development. This would be an entryway to the campus. It would be something that 30 years from now people would be very proud of."

Glick said the main goal of the Tempe Center redevelopment would be to provide better facilities, not to provide more money for ASU.

"We want to protect the revenue base, but it won't be a substantial expansion (of retail space)," he said. "But we can't afford to lose money on it."

The Center's retail base generates dollars that go to paying debt service on the bond-money loan ASU bought the land with, Glick added.

Dave Fackler, Tempe redevelopment deputy director, said the site has a strong viability for retail business.

Honeycutt said it is too early to spell out development details like what the new retail shops will be. The idea, she said, is to provide the area with some of the services there now and some new ones.

Most importantly, the site will be perfect for expanding some of the nearby academic facilities.

"ASU will expand fine arts, possibly architecture," Honeycutt said. "There will be ASU offices and services there, and other colleges will have an opportunity to have classes there."

Charles Boles, owner of Ray's ASU Barbershop at the Tempe

Center, said he is optimistic that his shop may be included in the future development, but it will depend on the new lease costs.

"If we are willing to pay the (new) rent price, we should be able to come in here," he said.

Boles said the barbershop was the original Tempe Center tenant, and was there when the Center opened in 1956.

At least 20 dead, 82 hurt in Puerto Rico blast

Police expect to find another 10 bodies

BY MARION LLOYD
ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico — The shops and restaurants were just opening on crowded Camelia Soto Street when an explosion blew apart a six-story building Thursday, turning windows into flying knives and crushing drivers in their cars.

At least 20 people were killed, and more than 80 were hurt. Police expected to find at least 10 more bodies in the mounds of torn steel and concrete that were offices and apartments.

President Clinton declared Puerto Rico a disaster area, a move authorizing federal aid for recovery efforts and federal rescue teams to participate in the search for more victims.

Officials suspected a leak in a pipe carrying cooking gas caused the blast, and said the building's owner had been complaining for weeks of escaping gas. The San Juan Gas Co., however, said it couldn't confirm a gas explosion and said there had been no gas service to the building.

The explosion sent shards of shattered glass into a Roman Catholic parochial school across the street. Some of the 500 students inside the Colegio La Milagrosa — School of the Miraculous — were knocked to the ground, but no one was injured.

Shoppers hunting for bargains in the stores that line the street fled the billowing black cloud of dust and debris in terror.

The 8:35 a.m. explosion in San Juan's congested Rio Piedras district ripped a 50-foot-wide hole in the concrete building, partially collapsing the first four floors and exposing rooms inside.

The bodies of two women were found in a car crushed by debris; searchers extricated a beheaded body from the shattered building. Rescue workers used dogs to look for missing victims.

The dead were laid out on the pavement in front of the Iglesia La Milagrosa Catholic Church, where workers placed sheets over the bodies. Roman Catholic Cardinal Luis Aponte Martinez administered the last rites.

building, was knocked unconscious and taken to the hospital, where she asked for her daughter Lisandra, 24.

"We don't know how she is," Rolon said, tears streaming down her face. "There was this explosion, a lot of screaming, and when I came to, she just wasn't there."

In the hospital waiting room, relatives and friends held hands, prayed together, comforted each other. "Lord, give us strength," one woman prayed.

Dozens of survivors, coated with blood and dust, were whisked away by helicopters to other hospitals, where hundreds of anguished relatives converged. Many had been cut by flying glass.

"It's bloody and horrible. There are smashed up people, body parts," said Pedro Rosario, spokesman at Puerto Rico Medical Center.

At least 20 people were killed and 82 were injured, said police Chief Pedro Toledo. "We expect to find about 10 or 15 more bodies," he said.

Death toll climbs from storm; freeway collapses in Oregon

BY NICHOLAS K. GERANIOS
ASSOCIATED PRESS

SPOKANE, Wash. — Tens of thousands of people shivered without electricity Thursday after a severe, early-season ice storm snapped trees and power lines in the Northwest.

The death toll rose to at least 10 in Washington and Oregon early Thursday as a man and woman perished in their Spokane Valley trailer. A charcoal grill they were using to keep warm ignited a fire.

Seven others have been treated for carbon-monoxide poisoning, and authorities warned people not to improvise heating systems using charcoal.

Near Roseburg, Ore., a rain-weakened section of Interstate 5 collapsed Thursday morning, leaving a 40-foot-deep sinkhole that swallowed one tractor-trailer and damaged another on the state's main north-south freeway.

Both drivers walked away with minor injuries.

"Their number wasn't up," said Roseburg Fire Department division Chief Bob Scott.

A third truck swerved to avoid the chasm and ran over the foot of a motorist who had left his pickup truck to wave down traffic. The man's foot had to be amputated.

The freeway was closed in both directions for hours after the sinkhole dropped part of the northbound lane into the South Umpqua River. Southbound lanes later reopened, and northbound traffic was diverted along U.S. Highway 99.

Authorities said repairs could take a month.

Washington Gov. Mike Lowry declared a state of emergency in Spokane County. Oregon Gov. John Kitzhaber declared emergencies in Lane, Douglas and Coos counties.

In the Spokane and Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, area, 48,000 customers of Washington Water Power Co. remained without electricity as overnight temperatures dipped into the teens.

There were 556 people in seven Red Cross shelters Wednesday night, said Spokane County sheriff's spokesman David Wiyrick.

"I went to the shelter when the temperature in my house dropped to 49 degrees and my little boy got real sick," said a woman who identified herself only as Jennifer. "He went up to the hospital with bronchitis."

More were expected to head for shelters Thursday. The National Weather Service issued a winter weather advisory for Eastern Washington that warned of up to 4 inches of snow and areas of freezing rain.

Utilities rushed to rebuild an electrical system heavily damaged by the ice storm Tuesday night.

"It's like going door-to-door to restore power," said Pat Lynch, a spokesman for Washington Water Power.

Twelve weather-related fires occurred overnight in Spokane, mostly involving chimneys that overheated because of extensive use, officials said.

In Western Washington, only about 4,400 customers remained without power, down from 110,000 on Tuesday.

Holiday travelers face tougher measures, and more in future

BY RANDOLPH E. SCHMID
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — As Americans take to the skies this holiday season, they won't breeze through airports as easily as in the past. Yet, the passenger ID checks, parking restrictions and luggage screening are just the start: Possible measures ahead include X-ray strip searches and small chambers that "sniff" travelers for explosives.

"Security has to address the perceived threat," said Lyle O. Malotky, a Federal Aviation Administration security specialist.

That means officials must weigh both the threat of terrorism and the inconvenience to passengers when deciding which of the possible future measures should become reality.

Attention was riveted on airport security in the weeks after TWA Flight 800 blew up in July, killing 230 people. Politicians and pundits produced opinions, President Clinton and Congress provided money and regulators hatched plans.

Months later, the cause of the disaster is still unresolved and airport security is less on the minds of travelers.

"We're a crisis-oriented society — right after TWA, it spiked up," said Capt. Steve Luckey, chairman of the National Security Committee for the Air Line Pilots Association. "But Americans are conditioned to be forgiving and forgetful in a hurry."

But security still worries airlines, government officials and airport managers who are struggling to find that balance between safety and inconvenience.

In the wings are new imaging technologies, using X-rays or other electromagnetic rays, that could electronically strip-search passengers. The machines could detect such hidden items as guns, drugs and plexiglass knives.

But the machines also see through clothing, displaying an image of the body on a screen, which some people may consider an invasion of privacy. Also uncertain is whether passengers would complain about exposure to X-rays on a regular basis, and how the equipment would be paid for.

Other technologies sniff for drugs and chemicals or use metal detectors, but each has some drawbacks.

One security practice already getting under way is that of conducting criminal background checks on airport personnel, as provided for in a new law this year. The law also authorizes the government to produce computer profiles of passengers to track travel patterns or other indicators that raise suspicion.

Flight lists also will be matched with lists of known terrorists compiled by intelligence and law enforcement agencies. Similar methods have been used in drug interdiction efforts in recent years.

But full use of all those measures is still in the future.

For this traveling season, Mark Hess of the Federal Aviation Administration is urging people who haven't flown recently to give themselves plenty of time, because some things have changed.

For example, passengers need to carry identification with their picture on it. And officials screening luggage are questioning more passengers and opening more bags than in the past, Hess said.

Luggage loaded on all international and some domestic planes is matched with passengers, making sure no bag travels unless its owner is on the same plane. That practice is expected to increase in the future.

STATE PRESS Boos & Bravos

BOO — To the sad little student-teacher ratio at ASU. Our 28-to-1 ratio is depressing when measured next to the national average of 17-to-1. ASU consistently comes out as one of the nation's cheaper universities to attend, but is the reduced price worth a reduced quality of education as well?

BRAVO — To the Associated Students of ASU for trying to make contact with students Wednesday at the Memorial Union Activities Board's opinion forum. Historically, students have been quite apathetic about student government, and some student governments haven't really talked to their constituents. At least ASASU is open to communication.

BOO — To the lack of interest in ASASU's opinion forum. Hardly anyone showed up for the darn thing. Students missed out on the perfect opportunity to grill student government about its activities this year, in particular the Seven Mary Three Homecoming concert that lost more than $42,000.

BRAVO — To the Sun Devils for doing whatever they do in Saturday's football game against the UofA. We'd like them to win, but even if they lose, only one of the teams is going to the Rose Bowl.

And it sure as heck isn't the hairballs, er, Wildcats, from the UofA.

BRAVO — To the Student Alumni Association's vigil to protect the 'A' from the UofA kitties who might want to desecrate it with the hated blue and red colors.

BOO — To the lack of tickets available for the ASU/UofA game. The 4,000 tickets allotted to ASU are long gone. That means we're all either stuck in a crowded bar or forced to pay astronomical sums of money to scalpers or agents.

Although the Sun Devils are definitely going to the Rose Bowl, this game promises to be intense, given the long-standing rivalry. It's a shame not more people can go to heckle the University of Northern Nogales.

BOO — To the flu, which picked out an ASU student as its first officially-reported victim this season. Take care, guys. You have enough to worry about with final exams coming up without getting sick. But if you are unlucky enough to contract the flu, take five packages of Ramen and call us in the morning.

BOO — To Chicago Bull Dennis Rodman for shooting off his mouth without a handwritten invitation. Wednesday, Rodman displayed his usual intelligence by pointing out that the Phoenix Suns are having problems. (Gee, Dennis, you're our hero. We never would have figured that out). In the words of the skanky one, "It's obvious to me they need to get some (expletive) ballplayers that want to play the (expletive) game."

Hey, Rodman, why don't you shut your (expletive) mouth and get a (expletive) life you (expletive) waste of space.

Non-mainstream views deemed 'ignorant' by those who disagree

Democracy, many of our nation's political elites seem to believe, would be a fine system of government if it weren't for all those damn voters. While few people will question the democratic roots of our government in a straightforward manner, there is no end to the people who will shoot it down on the sly.

The average voter, the root of all politics in America, is being constantly maligned for having the audacity to hold views contrary to those of the high and mighty.

This not-so-subtle snobbery, practiced by most of the major players on the political scene, appears to be one of the leading reasons for the cynicism and apathy that surround U.S. politics. If the voters don't think the politicians have a clue, then most of the elected officials (if off the record) couldn't reciprocate the ill will with more fervor. And, naturally, since every problem needs a scapegoat, groups like "the media" get dragged along for the ride.

The roots of the problem lie deep within our culture. The American belief in homogeneity precludes people from holding different views on anything of significance, so an excuse, a "rationale," must be generated to explain why there are fundamental disagreements on important issues. The most common excuse in our current culture is "ignorance," or lack of education. If someone doesn't agree with you, they simply haven't been properly educated.

This reasoning, of course, completely misses the difference between education and indoctrination. Two people, given similar or identical data, do not necessarily have to reach the same conclusions. We like to pretend, however, that this is not the case. We don't have disagreements in our nation because people hold different views; we have them because some portion of the public has not been "properly educated." It is not an accident that the universal answer for every issue tearing apart our society is "education."

No matter who loses an election, it seems to be a race to explain why the people are so ignorant and uneducated. Of course, coming right out and calling the voters stupid (or telling them to "Wake up!") is not a good electioneering tactic. It is better to blame some third party, like the media. If the people don't come to the right conclusions then their teachers must be at fault. If the public, upon hearing "the facts," doesn't fall into line, then they must not have heard the right facts.

So Republicans blame their losses in the House of Representatives on the fact that the American public are fools who were easily scared by Democratic miseducation. The Democrats, on the other hand, blame their inability to take back the House on an ignorant American public that refuses to educate itself as to why they are the better party. The minor parties, to add some spice, are continuously shouting that the apathy and ignorance of the public is what keeps them from playing a major role in the U.S. political scene.

Everyone, it seems, is more than willing to blame the public. Unfortunately, it seems that the public is buying into this. Why bother voting? After all, if the politicians and spin doctors and pundits are correct and elections are almost invariably won by the person who spends the most money and does the best electioneering, then why should I educate myself? And, on a slightly more sinister note, why should our nation's elected leader listen to the voters?

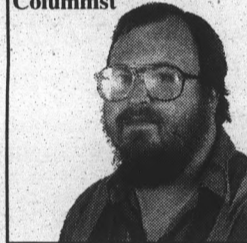

If they really believe what they say, that the public can be purchased and is at any rate ignorant, then they aren't likely to do what the public wishes. It is a self-reinforcing cycle; the less the politicians listen, the less likely the public is to put forth an effort, and so forth, ad nauseam.

If politicians and their parties really wanted to start displaying leadership they would stop the infantile practice of simply whining that an electorate that won't elect them is uneducated and ignorant. It would work wonders for America's wounded sense of civic pride.

Cartoons leave student mirthless

I have a couple of questions about the comics page within the State Press. Are these comics supposed to be funny?! Last time I checked, the word "comic" meant, "characteristic of or having to do with comedy; having a quality of humor; amusing."

The only thing dumber than a half-drawn picture of Ned, is a re-drawn picture of Ned. It is not funny! Furthermore, the only thing I can say about the shallow and superficial "soap opera" adventures of Kingdoms is, "BARF!" I just thank God that you had the wisdom to get rid of Egypt, Egypt when you did! All of these "comics" are an insult to human intelligence.

Here's an idea. Why don't you just trash all of the other comics and just print four Dilberts and two Far Sides each day. The popularity of the State Press will skyrocket, guaranteed!

Football more than just a game, says student involved in soiree

I'm writing in response to the State Press editorial on Wednesday, Nov. 13, entitled "Grow up! It's just a game." I have news for you, it's not just a game.

In this entire country, there are many, many colleges and universities in every state. Of all of these places of higher education, only two are good enough to be able to go to the Rose Bowl. Also, of all of these colleges and universities, I, a lowly freshman from Wisconsin, chose to go to ASU. Now, my choice in higher education is one of the just two institutions playing at the Rose Bowl. That is a huge deal. I think our celebration was mild compared to the hoopla in Wisconsin a few years ago when UW-Madison went to the Rose Bowl.

The entire state went mad Saturday, Nov. 9, and it was accepted because it was all pride in our state and our schools showing through our rowdiness. I was a part of the madness that night, and I was proud of myself for joining in on college life for a few brief moments. I didn't get to go to the game and was devastated to have to watch the game from the TV lounge of Manzy. As the end of the game neared, I volunteered my suite mates to go with me to meet the goalposts on Mill Avenue so I could feel I was some way involved in the entire Rose Bowl excitement.

Upon meeting the goalpost on Mill, I not only got to touch it, but I got to ride it down University and to the MU, and into the MU. The police officers saw me many times and didn't once tell me I was too rowdy, despite the fact that I was topless. They knew it was all in good fun and that the excitement was justified. If the cops weren't deeming me too rowdy, why should the editor of the State Press? What I did was quite extreme and if I don't feel bad or ashamed, I don't think anyone should.

I was so happy to be a part of the hysteria, until the mob began to trash the MU. This is where there should be a line drawn. No one cared when we paraded the pole to the MU or even through the MU, they just didn't want damage or injury. At this point in the evening, a very kind soul picked me up and carried me out of the MU so I would not be blamed or hurt. Thank you to whoever that was. Also, thank you to the kind soul who lent me his shirt after mine was carried off. I still have it if you want it. As far as the cops macing the crowd on Mill, I wasn't there and maybe I should not judge, but it seems a little ridiculous. Let them have their fun. Sooner or later, they would have put the post down.

This type of victory hasn't happened at ASU in 10 years. Perhaps the Nebraska victory celebration was due to the fact that you can see a good thing coming and when you beat No. 1, where are you going? That's right, straight to No. 1. We should all be proud to go to school here and extremely proud of our football team.

Thank you for the Homecoming win and the trip to the Rose Bowl. Congratulations! In closing, I would just like to say that I will be extremely disappointed in our student body if we don't have one heck of a celebration after our Rose Bowl victory New Year's Day. Go ASU!

Catholic church not a malleable social institution

I disagree with the content and implications of the recent State Press editorial lambasting the Catholic Church and its alleged failures to work toward a solution for world hunger. Despite the author's statement that the pope is misguided in his belief that world hunger is the result of a disparity between "rich nations" and "poor nations," the pope's statement does have some truth to it. Has the State Press author forgotten that the U.S. government actually pays its farmers not to grow crops in order to inflate farm prices and stabilize or maintain a certain standard of living for a certain segment of the American population? It doesn't take an economic genius (and indeed, I am not one) to figure out that the world's farms could feed more people than they are if industrialized nations were not so wholeheartedly committed to profits.

The State Press editorial attempts to cast the Catholic Church as outdated and out of touch in its offhand remark about the church finally admitting "evolution may have some actual merit." This remark is both misinformed and blatantly antagonistic toward the Catholic Church. The authors fail to acknowledge the fact that the church never condemned evolutionary theory and that the de-facto acceptance of evolutionary theory has characterized Catholic institutions for decades. As an alumna of a Catholic college, I can attest to the predominance of evolutionary theory in Catholic-taught biology classes.

What is most troubling about the State Press editorial is its implication that a doctrinal change on the part of the Catholic Church would solve the world's hunger woes. What the author fails to grasp is that Catholicism, like any other religion, is fundamentally a belief system. Catholicism is not a malleable social institution subject to the whims of those who disagree with its teachings. For the church to discard its teachings about the sanctity of life (as the State Press editorialist implies if the Catholic Church is ever to "inch its way into the 20th century") is to violate and corrupt this belief system.

Finally, I must point out that the Catholic Church has for decades committed itself to remedying social injustice, including alleviating world hunger. Popes throughout church history, and especially since the late 19th century, have repeatedly stressed the importance of combating economic injustice. The church has worked to remedy economic injustice by actively supporting labor movements, establishing hospitals in areas without services, and most importantly, by establishing schools around the world. Although the author's assertion that birth control and abortion have effectively lowered the birth rates of industrialized nations, he/she fails to account for the effect education played in lowering birth rates. By educating people, especially Third World citizens, about their bodies and about health care, the church is offering people a chance to understand reproductive processes and control them (or not control them) as they see fit.

As I see it, the Catholic Church has worked hard to alleviate world hunger. Certainly it has done more than the State Press.

Columnist one-sided, perspective-free demagogue

Joshua Solovskoy's columns consistently irritate me. I wonder at the State Press for employing such a one-sided, perspective-free demagogue of a columnist.

At least he can usually hide behind ideology, but occasionally he outdoes himself. His Nov. 19 column, "American leaders lack wisdom," is pure stupidity.

In the second paragraph, Solovskoy states, "Wisdom is divinely inspired." Well, if that's the case, then what the hell are we all doing here? If education is not the pursuit of wisdom, then I haven't a clue what the pursuit of wisdom could possibly be. Enlighten me, please, oh Joshua. Is it morality? Religion? Would you turn ASU into a church?

Secondly, Solovskoy complains that our leaders "encourage the pursuit of happiness to those engaged in unnatural behavior." He was referring to the "don't ask, don't tell" policy and the promotion of "the homosexual lifestyle in public education."

Even if homosexual activities were unnatural (which they're not — nature and sexual tastes alike are uncontrollable), why shouldn't we encourage homosexuals' pursuit of happiness? Like most Americans, I have studied the Declaration of Independence; it specifically lists the pursuit of happiness as an unalienable right. To discriminate against a single means to this end, just because the means is personally objectionable, is unfair.

Sexual misconduct column 'excellent' but limiting Bryn Chancellor's column about sexual misconduct was excellent. I would only add that sexual misconduct is so pervasive that Chancellor's qualifiers (such as "this is a country where") are too limiting. Sexual misconduct is not contained within borders. In some parts of the world sexual misconduct is a deeply entrenched part of the culture. It can become extreme and even hideous, e.g., female genital mutilation.

The solution to sexual misconduct depends upon individuals to make individual choices and upon societies to make collective choices. Enlightened choices come only from enlightened people. People in darkness are drawn to the light, so I urge everyone with a candle to keep it burning.

Indian Legal Program director to bolster enrollment, mentoring

BY DEANNA DARR
STATE PRESS

A new curriculum and a visiting professor program are among many of the ideas the new executive director of ASU's Indian Legal Program is bringing to the position.

TSOSIE

Rebecca Tsosie, associate professor in the College of Law, took the helm of the program in October. She fills the newly created executive director position and handles many of the responsibilities of the former director, Siera Russell.

Before coming to the University, Tsosie, a Pascua Yaqui, worked as a practicing attorney. She is in her fourth year of teaching at ASU.

Her goals also include creating more access to the Indian Law collection, mentoring students and encouraging more American Indian students go on to law school.

"It's common for Indian students to doubt they have the ability — it's a pretty intimidating experience," she said.

Cal Seciwa, director of the American Indian Institute, said he welcomes Tsosie's leadership, adding that Tsosie has been very active in the American Indian Academic Counsel and her familiarity with ASU will be a great benefit to the program.

"She's done a tremendous job of representing American Indian faculty at ASU," Seciwa said.

James Riding In, assistant professor in the School of Justice Studies, said that he expects good things from Tsosie and he believes she will work at keeping American Indian student enrollment up, as well as working toward adding more American Indian faculty.

"I expect that she would do an outstanding job," Riding In said.

The Indian Law Program concentrates on recruiting and retaining American Indian students. The program also provides legal services to Indian communities in Arizona and nationwide.

Sunday buses catch 800 riders

BY RAY STERN
STATE PRESS

The new Sunday bus service in Tempe attracted about 800 passengers last weekend, a Tempe official said Thursday.

That was roughly the expected number of riders, said Mary O'Connor, Tempe transportation planning administrator.

"We didn't have a lot of advance notification," she said. "Initially, we are still really capturing our existing riders, but that will change as more people become aware. We're getting tons of calls."

The two busiest routes most busy during the weekdays — on Rural Road and Apache Boulevard — also had the heaviest use last Sunday. The Sunday buses run from 5 a.m. to 10 p.m. on six routes.

"There was a Cardinal's game that day, so people did take it to the game," O'Connor said.

By bringing a can of food for a local charity, riders can ride for free again next Sunday.

Those interested in obtaining a copy of Tempe's new bus book can call 253-5000.

Police responded after receiving two separate calls for the residence. While an officer was speaking to the suspect's roommate, who answered the door, the suspect ran toward the door, yelling, "Get the f--- out of my house," and then attempted to slam the door on the officer. The officer warned the suspect to step back but he continued to push the door closed. The suspect also had an odor of alcohol on him. He was booked into Tempe City Jail.
- A man was arrested for disorderly conduct after picking a fight in the Smitty's parking lot at 3222 S. Mill Ave. The suspect believed another driver drove too closely to his vehicle and approached him. After arguing and swearing at the man, the suspect punched him in the face. He later told police that the other man had shoved him first but police arrested him anyway. Both men had been yelling. He was booked into Tempe City Jail.

The EDGE

PASSING OFFENSE

A couple of months ago this would have been a laugher, but freshman quarterback Keith Smith has given UofA a much-needed spark in its passing attack, not to mention his great speed (544 yards rushing). Jake Plummer has been steady, if not spectacular. Smith lists Plummer as his favorite QB. Last year's thorn in the side for ASU, UofA wide receiver Richard Dice, is out with a knee injury.

RUSHING OFFENSE

Terry Battle needs only 100 rushing yards to become ASU's first 1,000-yard gainer since 1993. Battle has scored 10 rushing touchdowns in his last four games, since becoming a starter. Despite some inconsistency, the Wildcats are ranked fourth in the Pac-10 in rushing with 186.4 yards per game. Their biggest threat may be QB Smith. Freshman Leon Callen rushed for 116 yards last week.

PASS DEFENSE

UofA has a big-play defense, but it has also been known to give up big plays. The Wildcats have 16 interceptions, five of which were returned for touchdowns. The Wildcats have also allowed the highest pass completion percentage (57.7) in the conference. ASU's secondary played great against California, but more big plays are needed.

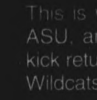

RUN DEFENSE

The key to the game? ASU is allowing opponents only 2.8 yards per rush, while UofA's figure of 3.2 is not so shabby either. ASU must be careful to not let Smith run out of the pocket too often.

SPECIAL TEAMS

This is where UofA usually has an edge over ASU, and this year is no different. Sun Devil kick returner Terry Battle is closing the gap. The Wildcats are solid in every phase.

OVERALL

If you look at history, there's no way you give the edge to ASU. But since I have a short memory, I think ASU will pull this one out. ASU needs to get off to an early start to avoid getting the sold-out Arizona Stadium crowd too fired up about pulling off an upset.

Sun Devils, 'Cats put talk, history behind in annual battle of pride

BY DUSTIN KRUGEL
STATE PRESS

It's hard to fathom, but Jake Plummer still hasn't tasted the thrill of victory over arch-rival UofA.

The senior quarterback has struck out in all three of his attempts to defeat the Wildcats. The last one ending on a field goal by UofA placekicker John Prasuhn. The score UofA 31, ASU 28.

"If I don't win this year, I'm applying for a fifth year," Plummer said. "After the first one (34-20) I told the players I don't want to lose another one. Then I lost the next one (28-27) and after that, I said I didn't want to lose another one. We lost last year, so I'm not going to say I don't want to lose another one because this is my last one. I have to take advantage of it."

Last year's loss was a painful reminder of what could have been. With an Independence Bowl bid waiting and a 28-14 lead with eight minutes left to play, ASU choked and finished with a 6-5 record and no bowl.

"We peed down our pants last year," senior offensive tackle Juan Roque said of the collapse. "We can't do that again this year."

No. 4 ASU will get its opportunity at redemption when it plays UofA at 4:30 p.m. Saturday in front of what will be a sold-out Arizona Stadium.

Unlike last year, no bowl bid is at stake for ASU (10-0, 7-0 Pac-10). The Sun Devils are already bound into playing No. 2 Ohio State in the Rose Bowl on Jan. 1. UofA (5-5, 3-4) however, needs to upset ASU in order to qualify for a bowl bid.

Having already clinched a Rose bowl berth may be a relief to the Sun Devils, but the 1986 ASU team also had a Rose Bowl bid locked up when it lost to UofA 34-17 one decade ago. That was the only loss for the Sun Devils that year.

"It is going to be brought up. I wasn't here at that time. My only history is my history," said ASU head coach Bruce Snyder, who has a 1-3 record at ASU against UofA. "I've had some heartbreakers involved in this game. It seems like odd things happen in this game. It seems like it is always close. It seems like it is always a fourth quarter issue."

Despite his sub-par record against UofA as a Sun Devil, Snyder said he understands the importance of the rivalry.

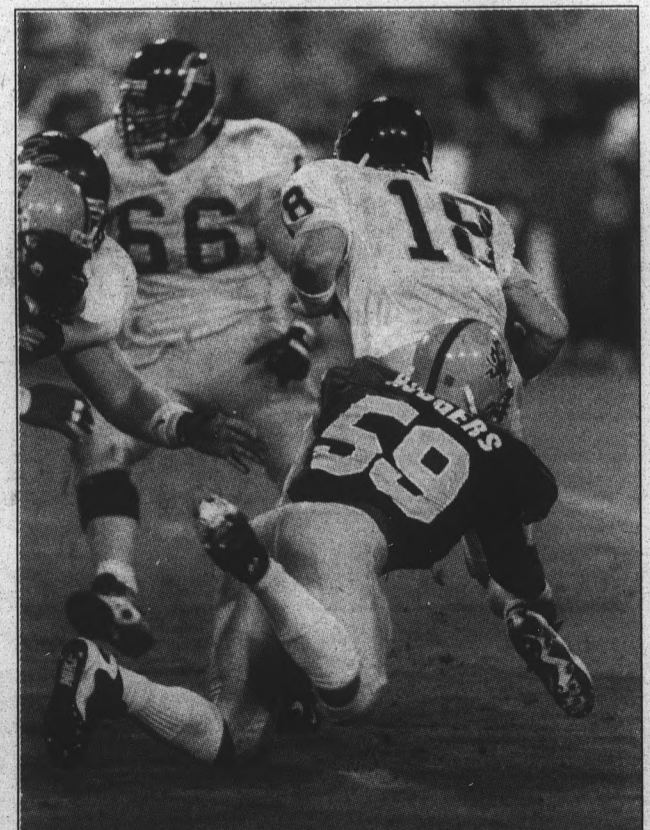

"I understand the gravity of it," he said. "It's been explained to me, by the way, a lot. I really appreciate the intensity of it and the importance of it."

Snyder's only victory against the UofA came in 1992 at Arizona Stadium when ASU eked out a 7-6 win. That is the only ASU victory in Tucson since 1981.

"I could care less," sophomore offensive tackle Grey Ruegamer said about ASU's history in Tucson. "I like going to UofA because of their fans. They are great fans if you are for Arizona. They spit on you, throw things at you. I love it when fans do those kind of things. It gets me

Animosity runs deep in 97-year-old rivalry

By DUSTIN KRUGEL
STATE PRESS

When the schedule makers paired up ASU and UofA in 1899, they probably didn't know what they were getting into.

The 97-year-old rivalry has unfolded into a civil war between two cities — Tucson and Phoenix.

"I don't know how the people down south view it, but I do know how we feel though," said ASU head coach Bruce Snyder, who is only 1-3 in the big game. "I think there is an understanding, it's not just two teams or two universities, it's two communities. Maybe the hatred, or animosity if you will, comes from outside the two football teams from itself."

The hatred doesn't always end when the game ends, either.

The post-game celebration on the field after UofA's 34-17 upset at Arizona Stadium 10 years ago ended with four police officers injured and five people arrested. That victory was the only loss for the '87 ASU Rose Bowl team.

The rivalry may not get the national publicity of the Alabama/Auburn, Michigan/Ohio State and USC/Notre Dame clashes, but Snyder said this game takes on a life of its own.

"There is no other (rivalry game) I have ever played or coached in that has the same feeling about it," he said. "The intensity, the hatred. There is a lot of hatred involved. For some of the other (rivalries), there is some of that, but not to the same degree. This is really a pretty hostile gathering."

Former Sun Devil cornerback (1984-'87) and current All-Pro performer with the New Orleans Saints Eric Allen agreed.

"I don't think a lot of people around the nation know what type of football is played in that game," he said. "It's really mentally and physically one of the

Head to Head

BY RANDY JONES
STATE PRESS

As hot as these two players are, one of the two will leave Arizona Stadium Saturday feeling just a little chilly.

ASU tailback Terry Battle and UofA linebacker Chester Burnett have been burning up the field lately, leading both teams the second half of the season.

Battle, a junior, has rushed for 900 yards and scored 17 touchdowns this season. However, he has only started the past four games, gaining 619 of his yards and scoring 11 times in that period.

The second-leading tackler in the Pac-10 with 112 tackles, Burnett has been outstanding in the past six games. Wildcat coach Dick Tomey was especially impressed with Burnett in UofA's 35-17 thrashing of UCLA last Saturday.

"Chester's done some real good things," he said. "I think he was disappointed with the two-week showing (consecutive losses to Cal 56-55 and Oregon 49-31). He really turned it up against UCLA."

Burnett racked up 12 tackles, two sacks and forced a fumble, which led to a Wildcat touchdown the next play.

He said his performance is directly related to mindset.

"It's new confidence. That's basically all it is," Burnett said. "I've got a lot more confidence in myself and what the coaches tell me to do. I've just been doing things really well."

Battle himself knows he is in "the zone."

"I'm real comfortable right now. The whole team is comfortable," he said. "Personally, I saw a back from Oregon (Saladin McCullough) go for 223 (yards). So they better hope to contain me because I'm hot right now."

Burnett said he thinks the Wildcat defense is up to the challenge.

"We want to come out and establish ourselves (on defense) against the run. Yes we do," he said. "We can't worry about what he (Battle) is trying to do. As long as we do what we set out to do, things will work out for us."

The importance of the ASU/UofA rivalry is not lost on either player.

ASU being 10-0 and UofA 5-5 won't be a factor, Burnett said.

"(A win) would be real big," Burnett said. "We really don't look at it as an upset though. It's just us versus them. UofA/ASU. None of that stuff really matters to us. I could care less personally what their record is."

Battle, who has seen two of ASU's three-straight losses to the Wildcats, doesn't see the Sun Devils making it four in a row.

"The thought of a loss does not enter my mind," he said. "I told ESPN that we will not lose this game. (A win) would be a great feeling. I have a personal rivalry with them as well as the team rivalry. ... Right now they're (UofA) saying I'm not going to get 1,000 yards until the bowl game. I don't know who said it, (but) it would great to do it there."

The No. 4 Sun Devils' run for the national championship and the Wildcats qualifying for a possible bowl bid doesn't matter to either — only Saturday's match up does.

"I've heard talk about that (UofA going to a bowl) in the press, but that really doesn't come into play at all," Burnett said. "If we lose this game, it doesn't matter anyway, right? Our concentration is only on this one game."

Battle agreed.

"It would be real nice to accomplish those things," he said. "But the real important thing now is getting the victory and staying undefeated."

hyped up."

Snyder said ASU hasn't been tested by an opposing crowd as hostile as UofA's crowd this season.

"I'm encouraging as many Sun Devils of going down as we can," he said. "We need to offset that (home-field advantage) as much as we can. The best thing you can do on the road, when it's a loud stadium, is to quiet the crowd. You don't give them much to cheer about."

Unlike year's past, trash talking between the two team's has been kept at a minimum this week. After last Saturday's UofA/UCLA game, Wildcat players (inside linebacker Chester Burnett and outside linebacker Armon Williams) said that they had heard ASU was going to run up the score in this week's game.

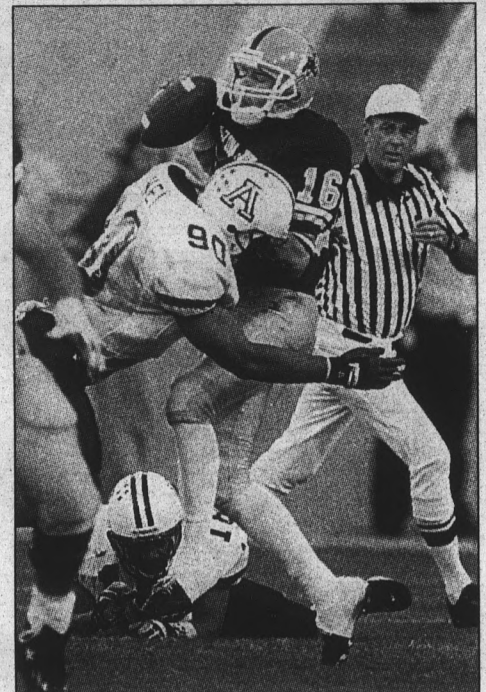

"I hope they know they are not going to come in here and blow us out, I guess like they are thinking," said Burnett, a junior. "That's ASU for you. Every time they get a chance to embarrass you, they are going to. That's just the Sun Devils for you."

Roque had a different view.

"We've never said anything. That's something they are fabricating," he said. "No one on this team has done any trash talking. We can not forget why we are successful and that's because we have a blue-collar mentality. We approach every game the same way. We don't trash talk to any team. When a team starts to trash talk, it's because they are scared. We are not going to trash talk and there is no need to."

It's no secret that there is no love lost between the two schools, but Roque said that won't matter when it comes time to play.

"We can say we hate them all we want, but if we go down and embarrass ourselves, so what if we hate them," he said. "It's not going to be about who is more talented, it's going to be about who wants it more."

Snyder was named as one of six finalists for the Paul "Bear" Bryant College Coach of the Year Award on Thursday.

toughest games I've ever played in, including some of the games in the pros. The emotions are so high. You are playing against guys you see in the offseason."

Allen said Tucson is so anti-ASU, because it has nothing else to do but cheer on the local team.

"Down in Tucson, it's like a town from nowhere. No one really goes down there except for football," he said. "So it's kind of a big city (versus) little city mentality when we play. We were the team that had all the athletes and stars. They were the kind of team just trying to fight out of their backyard and they had a lot of success against us."

Indeed, UofA has a 11-2-1 record against ASU since 1982, including a nine-game Sun Devil winless stretch from 1982-'90. The Wildcats record during that time, 8-0-1, became known as the 'Cats' nine lives.' Overall, the Wildcats own a 40-28-1 lifetime edge over the Sun Devils.

"I want to be a part of that, those seasons, those consecutive wins," said UofA redshirt freshman quarterback Keith Smith. "You throw the records away. We are both 0-0 right now. That's how you have to treat this game."

That's the way the fans treat it too, Smith said.

"It's not your normal high school rivalry," he said. "It's ASU. People spit on you and when you go play up there (at Sun Devil Stadium), they yell at you. They literally hate you. That's the way they treat us. It's crazy."

UofA junior cornerback Kelly Malveaux said he and his life-long bud, ASU sophomore cornerback Lamont Morgan, put aside their friendship when they play.

"Lamont Morgan is like my brother," he said. "We grew up together and played Pop Warner together all our lives. It just so happened that I came to UofA and he came to ASU. But on the field, we may say, 'Hi,' but that's it. After the game we'll hug each other. During the game there is straight animosity toward each other, almost to the point of hatred. There are no friends on the gridiron in a rival game."

No one, actually knows when the ASU/UofA rivalry actually turned into a Tucson/Phoenix thing, but ASU senior offensive tackle Juan Roque has inside information on when it may have turned ugly.

"This is probably the most political (rivalry) I have seen," he said. "Didn't it start with the insane asylum or something? It started 40 some years ago when (Phoenix) tried to move the state hospital down there and they didn't want it. (Tucson) brought it here and that started the hatred between both of the cities and now it has evolved into the game."

Sun Devils hope to net Dolphins in season opener

Junior forward Urit Kelly and his Sun Devil teammates host Jacksonville at 7 tonight at the UAC in both teams' season opener.

BY RANDY JONES
STATE PRESS

"Friday is going to be a tough game."

Continuing to press that his team is young and undersized, ASU men's basketball coach Bill Frieder said he expects to be repeating those words often during the course of the 1996-97 season.

The Jacksonville Dolphins wade into the University Activity Center tonight to take on the Sun Devils in the season opener for both squads. Tip-off is set for 7 p.m.

Frieder said the game is a good opener for the Sun Devils.

"They have good athletes, a big man inside and a good point guard," he said. "(Jacksonville) has some good experience returning and they can score. ... They scored 111 points in an exhibition. Putting 111 points on the board is very impressive."

Leading the Dolphins (15-13, 10-8 in Sun Belt in 1995-96) are two juniors — point guard John Knox and forward Micah Ross.

Last season, Knox averaged 11.6 points and 2.5 assists per game, while Ross chipped in 8 ppg and 5.6 rebounds.

The team also features sophomore Aaron Fox (9.5 ppg), who is current Boston Celtic Rick Fox's brother, and 6-foot-11 senior center Josh Krieger.

Frieder said the Dolphins' high-octane offense and pressure defense could create either problems or opportunities for the Sun Devils.

"They shoot (the ball) quick, which can lead to a good basketball game, depending on how well we rebound," he said. "Maybe it will provide some opportunities for us (to fast break). I am concerned about their defense, because they will come out and pressure (us) a lot more than Marathon did (Monday night)."

Shooting will be, as always, the key to a Sun Devil victory.

Frieder said the team must get better contributions from guards sophomore Gee

Gervin, junior Ahlon Lewis and freshman Eddie House. The trio combined for 3 of 23 shooting for seven points against Marathon.

His Airness

Frieder interviewed Michael Jordan this week for his weekly television show, while the Chicago Bulls superstar was in town to beat the woeful Suns.

The two guests Frieder has had thus far — Jordan and Sun Devil quarterback Jake Plummer — have a combined won-loss record of 22-0. (ASU 10-0, Bulls 12-0).

The show will air Dec. 15 on Channel 3.

No respect

ASU is nowhere to be found in most pre-season polls. Only The Sporting News (No. 117) and the Saragin Power Poll (No. 85) list the Sun Devils. Both polls ranked all 307 teams.

In Pac-10 predictions, ASU was picked last by The Sporting News, Basketball Times and Athlon, ninth by Street & Smith's and the Pac-10 media and seventh by Playboy.

100???

Frieder is 4-3 in season openers at ASU, however he is 6-1 in home openers. The Sun Devils have scored over 100 points in their past three openers, beating Texas Southern 103-77 in 1995, Texas A&M 103-73 in 1994 and BYU 106-95 in '93.

Coach's decision

The Sun Devils played zone defense for all but one second of Monday night's game, and Frieder wishes he could get that second back.

After ASU held Marathon defensively three consecutive times and were about to do so again, a pause in the action allowed Frieder to change schemes.

"They (Marathon) called time out with seven seconds left (on the shot clock)," he said. "I switched to man to man. It was a coaching move. That was really a bright move by me. We play 100 seconds of good defense and I give them a lay up in one second. Won't do that (tonight)."

ASU swimmers look to rebound in home opener

BY JOSH DEFAMIO
STATE PRESS

After a difficult weekend which included losses to three ranked opponents, the 23rd-ranked ASU women's swimming and diving team hopes to redeem itself at its home pool.

They will play host to BYU and Colorado State at 3 p.m. on Friday and 1 p.m. on Saturday at the Mona Plummer Aquatic Center.

"BYU and Colorado State are two of the best teams in the WAC," Head Coach Tim Hill said. "BYU beat us last year. They're very strong in the diving and they have a good distance swimmer, a good flyer, a lot of good people. Colorado State has good balance."

Friday's meet will be held in double-dual style, with each team competing against the other two, while Saturday's meet will feature a three-team individual format. The unique set-up gives Hill an opportunity to explore other options for some of his swimmers.

"Because certain people are strong in certain events, they have been swimming in the same event a lot," Hill

Opening game finally here for women's hoops

BY PERCY EDNALINO JR.
STATE PRESS

Ask anyone on the ASU women's basketball team and they'll tell you.

They're edgy.

They're anxious.

And they're tired of scrimmaging against each other.

But when the team opens its regular season against Evansville at 1 p.m. on Sunday at the University Activity Center, ASU might as well be staring at a mirror.

Sunday's matchup will be the first time the two teams will have met and both teams feature new head coaches with similar styles.

With a 1-1 split in exhibition games, ASU senior Molly Tuter said the team is excited to play a team that can affect the Sun Devils' win/loss record.

"We've been working since August, running and doing conditioning," Tuter said. "Now it's the first time we can actually get together on the floor and it counts when we're done."

ASU head coach Charli Turner Thorne agreed and said that not having any game films of Evansville to study from will pose a problem for her team.

"We really don't know a lot about Evansville," Turner Thorne said. "We know they have a new coach who has been very successful, so we're anticipating a very well-coached, hard-working team."

Sound familiar? It should. Turner Thorne is in her first year at ASU after spending the last three seasons as the head coach for NAU. Evansville's Kathi Bennett also is in her first year as the Aces' head coach.

"There are some definite similarities between our programs," Turner Thorne said.

Turner Thorne added that the matchup is an important one for ASU's confidence. The team will next compete Thursday against No. 4-ranked Alabama in a tournament in San Juan, Puerto Rico.

However, Turner Thorne said the team isn't looking past Evansville.

"I certainly hope that we come out with a lot more intensity and a lot more fired up than we did in the exhibition games," Turner Thorne said. "In the exhibition games, we were still learning our game warm-ups and focusing on what drills we were doing. Now, this is everything. There's no take-overs and everything counts."

Freshman guard Kristine Sand and the rest of the ASU women's basketball team host Evansville at 1 p.m. on Sunday at the UAC.

Tuter said the team has shown significant improvement over the two exhibitions. She added that the team will need to effectively apply pressure on defense and stay aggressive on offense if it hopes to beat Evansville.

ASU forward Marci Stilson agreed and added that the team is concentrating mainly on the defense.

"That's what's going to help us get a winning season," Stilson said.

Sun Devil wrestlers start season

FROM STAFF REPORTS

The ASU Wrestling Team will get its season underway on Saturday in California.

The Sun Devils will travel to Fullerton to participate in the California Open, which is scheduled to last all day.

ASU has its first dual meet of the season on Nov. 30, at home against the BYU Cougars.

Team Captains

Juniors Aaron Simpson and Shawn Ford have been selected as captains for the upcoming year. Both wrestlers joined the team as walk-ons.

Seven Devils Honored

Seven of ASU's starting wrestlers have been ranked in the first Pac-10 individual rankings poll. Four of the wrestlers, Simpson (177), junior Matt Suter (158), sophomore Casey Strand (167) and senior Danny Faqir (190), were ranked No. 1 in the conference. Ford (126) is ranked third, while two new faces, senior Joey Heckel (134) and redshirt freshman Michael Kawamura (118), were ranked fourth. Heckel is a transfer from Oklahoma.

Swimming

said. "The Saturday meet will allow some people to swim in maybe their third or fourth events. Events that they normally don't get to swim."

The meet comes one week after the team suffered painful setbacks at the hands of No. 9 UCLA and No. 7-Florida on Saturday and No. 4 USC on Sunday. Hill notes that the experience from those meets in Los Angeles will help with the strategy for upcoming meets.

"Those meets were really a lot closer than the score indicated," Hill said. "We really could have easily beaten all of those teams. It wasn't a lack of effort, we just made some errors and some relay mistakes. We didn't do anything major, but a little bit here and a little bit there really makes a difference."

The swimmers themselves are not only interested about getting back on the winning track, but also on doing it in front of the home crowd.

"We lost to one of the teams (BYU) by something like eight points last season," freshman Carolyn Adel said. "We want to turn it around this year. I'm excited about swimming at home, because I am a freshman and this will be my first home meet."

This will be the last action the Sun Devils will see until after Thanksgiving. They are scheduled to compete in the Speedo Cup Classic, to be held in Long Beach, Calif., on Dec. 6-8.
