Extra credits legislation slated for vote

BY KEVIN CULWELL
STATE PRESS

Legislation that would require out-of-state tuition from in-state university students who take too many hours will be voted on next week in the state House of Representatives.

"It simply means students will not be able to exceed 152 total units and pay in-state tuition," said Damon Pace, state relations director of the Associated Students of ASU.

Graduate and doctoral students who exceed program requirements by more than 20 credit hours will also be forced to pay out-of-state tuition.

"It would certainly encourage students to want to graduate quicker," Pace said. "However, it does have some negative aspects of it, namely that it discourages students who simply wish to learn more or maybe just decided they're not interested in their major anymore."

Christine Thompson, executive director of the Arizona Students' Association, is opposed to the measure.

"There's a mandate in the state constitution that clearly states that the Legislature keep tuition as cheap as possible for students," she said. "This bill definitely does not adhere to that."

The measure would cost $280,000 to implement, Thompson said.

"Students shouldn't have to pay more because they decide they want to change their major," Thompson said. "This bill restricts their options and really isn't that fair."

"It doesn't address the issue of transfers and really should," she added.

ABOR lashes out against community college bill

BY VIVI STENBERG
STATE PRESS

TUCSON — A legislative proposal that will enable community colleges to teach upper division courses was harshly criticized by the Arizona Board of Regents at Thursday's meeting.

The regents voted unanimously to oppose the bill, which was passed by a legislative appropriations committee last week.

"This is bad, bad legislation — we must oppose it," Regent Eddie Basha said.

Basha also called the bill "an assault on higher education in this state," and said it would be a great injustice to Arizona's students.

A committee consisting of Regent Kurt Davis and ABOR staff had recommended the regents support the section that aims to expand a partnership between Yavapai Community College and NAU, but to oppose the part that would change the state statute defining community colleges in general.

Board President John Munger said the funding mechanisms of the bill are "ironic and hypocritical." He called the bill "bad finance and bad policy."

The measure was first introduced to the regents by its sponsor, Sen. Carol Springer, R-Flagstaff, at a January ABOR meeting.

The regents reacted with skepticism then and the sentiments grown to resentment over the last month.

Student Regent Jonathan Schmitt said he was in favor of increased accessibility to students in rural areas, but he suggested that the existing "2+2 model," where students take two years of class at a community college and two at a university, should continue to be used.

Schmitt was backed by the rest of the regents, who agreed that the community college system and the way it already collaborates with the state universities, works well.

"Our students deserve to get their university degrees from the universities," Basha said.

Law school legislation passes Senate committee

BY REBECCA MURRAY
SPECIAL TO THE STATE PRESS

The state Senate Education Committee approved a bill Thursday that would permit ASU's law school to provide a part-time program for students currently in the work force.

The bill is now headed for a vote in the full Senate.

If it passes, the legislation would allow ASU to offer courses after 5:30 p.m. to students who wish to attend law school on a part-time basis. If the bill is approved, students could earn a law degree while working full-time.

Presently, evening classes are limited. For example, no courses at the first-year level are offered during the evening. In addition, the American Bar Association — the organization that accredits programs at law schools across the country — restricts students enrolled in a full-time, three-year program from working more than 20 hours a week. The limitation does not apply to students enrolled in part-time, four-year programs.

Richard Morgan, dean of the College of Law, is concerned that legislation permitting the expansion of the law school is at odds with the University's priorities.

"It is premature to require ASU or UofA to open a part-time program," Morgan said. "There are pros and cons of part-time programs and law school expansion. These need to be thoughtfully considered."

"The University, with the (Arizona) Board of Regents, has established a set of priorities, and does not include a law school expansion. If the Legislature decides the law school should have a part-time program, it could detract from the University's other legislative priorities," he said.

It is too early to determine what sort of financial impact the additional program would have. According to Morgan, the added program would require a significant of resources.

Morgan noted that there is some discontinuity between the Senate bill and statements House Speaker Don Aldridge made in reference to eliminating one of the state's law schools.

Last month, Aldridge suggested that two state law schools were a waste of taxpayer's money and that one should be eliminated. He said with droves of lawyers moving to Arizona from other states, a second school was redundant.

A recent review of the state's two schools concluded that both schools were necessary to serve Arizona's population. Morgan said Arizona ranks 35th in lawyers per capita.

Blake Anderson, government relations coordinator for ASU, said an Arizona Board of Regents study showed that just 1.8 percent of state university graduates last year had more than 160 credit units.

"(The Board) has already addressed the issue," he said. "I don't think this measure is really going to go anywhere."

Pace suggested that students who are not happy with the bill go down to the state Legislature and voice their opinions.

"This bill could have a major effect on students who are currently thinking about changing their major," he said.

Friday night airline strike deadline looms

BY KATIE FAIRBANK
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — American Airlines rejected a compromise offer from its pilots' union as Friday night's holiday-weekend strike deadline approached. The company's chief executive urged President Clinton to intervene to avoid a walkout at the nation's largest airline.

Testifying on Capitol Hill, American President Robert Crandall said Clinton should exercise his emergency powers to prevent pilots from striking at 12:01 a.m. Saturday. Mayors and some members of Congress from areas that would be particularly affected also have asked the president to step in.

Although negotiations were scheduled to continue, both sides were preparing for a walkout. The airline canceled most overseas flights so aircraft would not be stranded, and the board of the Allied Pilots Association planned a teleconference at the strike deadline.

At the White House, the Transportation Department sent Clinton a report projecting the strike would cost up to $200 million each day and could strand up to 40,000 passengers.

The president, who has emergency powers to intervene temporarily, urged both sides to reach an agreement.

"We hope that that analysis of economic damage won't need to be a useful document," said White House spokesman Mike McCurry.

Hopes for a settlement rose early Thursday, when the union offered to have its pilots accept lower pay scales for operating jets on regional routes as long as the company accepted its other demands.

But American's parent company, AMR Corp., says it doesn't want American pilots to fly the new jets that have been proposed for regional routes. AMR wants its American Eagle subsidiary, with lower-paid pilots from another union, to fly the commuter jets.

"In reality, those jets are going to be operated as American Eagle or they are not going to be operated," spokesman Al Comeaux said. "There are costs involved beyond pilot costs. We have to be competitive."

The regional jet issue has been a sticking point in negotiations for some time. Both sides agree the smaller routes are necessary for American to remain competitive, but they don't agree on who should fly the twin-engine jets that have up to 70 seats.

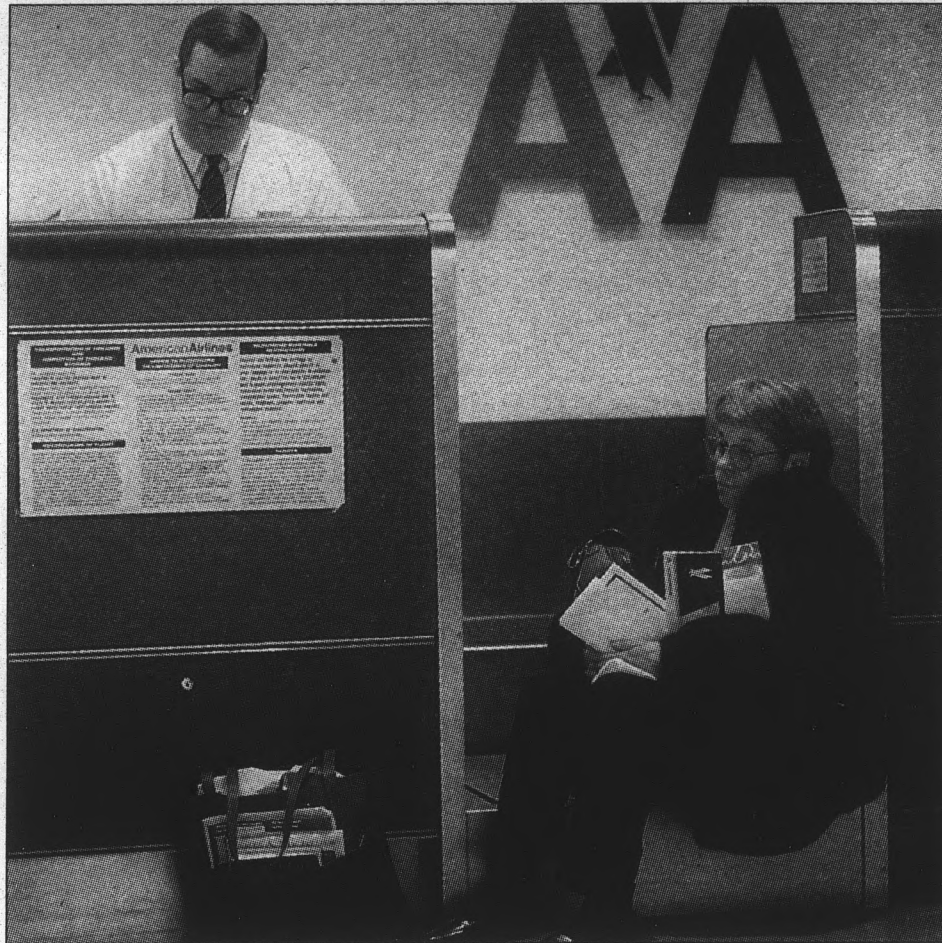

American mechanics, flight attendants and other workers all have higher salary ranges than their counterparts at American Eagle, a conglomerate of four separate small airlines funneling $1 billion in traffic to American Airlines.

The average American Airlines pilot makes $120,000 a year. The average American Eagle pilot less than half as much.

The union wants 3 percent pay increases each August for the next three years and a 2 percent raise on Aug. 31, 2000.

The pilots also want stock options to buy 7.25 million shares at below-market cost and they want to phase out over four years a lower pay and pension scale for newly hired pilots that has been in place since 1983.

The company is offering a 6 percent raise over the life of the contract and options for three million shares of stock.

Middle East peace moves keep Clinton encouraged

BY TERENCE HUNT
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Clinton said Thursday there is "a renewed sense of promise in the Middle East" after last month's Israeli-Palestinian agreement and urged a resumption of Israeli-Syrian negotiations to keep the momentum going.

After three hours of talks with Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, Clinton said he was encouraged "that there are things worth working on" regarding talks with Syria.

Netanyahu, appearing with Clinton at a wrap-up news conference, praised the president as "an exceptional friend of Israel" and said he came out of their meeting with "renewed confidence" about the possibility of progress on Middle East peace.

The prime minister suggested Syria could show its good faith by reining in Hezbollah terrorists in southern Lebanon. He said it was no secret that Syria "has more than a minor influence in Lebanon."

Israel will not withdraw its troops from southern Lebanon because "if we simply walked away ... Hezbollah and other terrorists would simply come to the (border) and attack our towns and villages," Netanyahu said.

It was Clinton's first meeting with Netanyahu since the Israeli leader and Palestinian chief Yasser Arafat ended a dangerous impasse last month by agreeing to, then implementing, Israel's long-delayed pullout from most of Hebron and parts of the West Bank.

As they opened their talks, Clinton said Netanyahu and Arafat made "a terrific effort ... and I'm looking forward to the next steps."

Netanyahu, who took office in June vowing to slow down the transfer of land to Palestinians, replied, "I think we've taken bold steps for peace."

"It's time that we see such steps from our partners as well," the prime minister said.

Clinton opened the news conference by saying that Israel and the Palestinians have come a long way since Arafat and Netanyahu visited the White House in a crisis atmosphere last October after clashes in which 79 people died. "Now there is a renewed sense of promise in the Middle East," Clinton said, referring to the Hebron agreement.

Netanyahu was the first of four Middle East leaders scheduled to meet Clinton in coming weeks. The president also will see Arafat, Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak and Jordan's King Hussein.

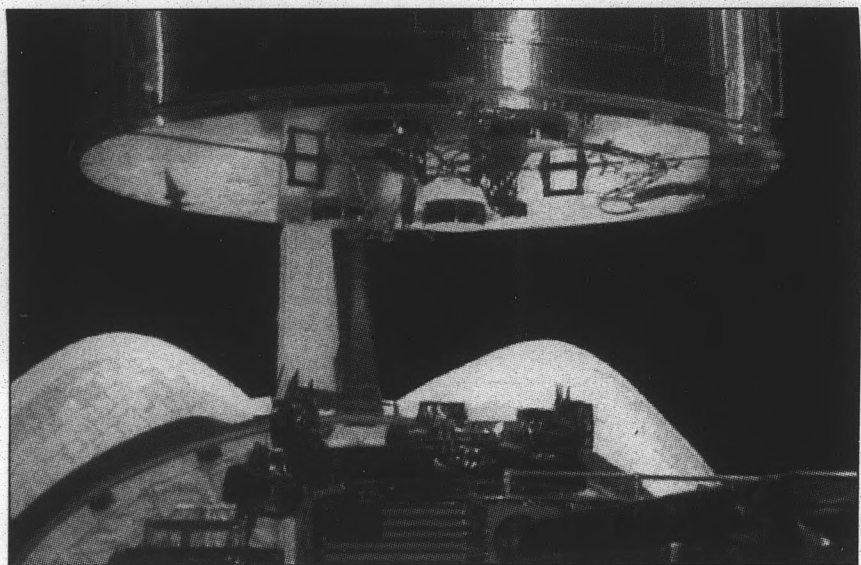

Clinton said he talked with Netanyahu about ways to resume peace talks with Syria. Those discussions were broken off a year ago after Islamic militants carried out suicide bombings in Israel.

Syria is insisting that Israel surrender the Golan Heights, a strategic plateau along their border, as its price for peace. Israel captured the Golan in the 1967 Six-Day War.

Clinton said he was convinced that Netanyahu "has thought through a way consistent with the security of the people of Israel that a comprehensive peace might be achieved." But he said a lot of things have to be resolved.

In the meantime, Clinton refused to pressure Israel to withdraw its forces from southern Lebanon, saying it was imperative that Israel maintain its border security. "Therefore, I have believed that the United States should be somewhat deferential under these circumstances."

Netanyahu was said to have brought to Washington a territorial compromise on the Golan, but there was no public discussion of its details. The United States believes Syrian President Hafez Assad will not sign a peace agreement without getting back all of the plateau.

The Hubble Space Telescope, top, is berthed to the flight support system in space shuttle Discovery Thursday. The crew of Discovery will perform four spacewalks to make repairs and upgrades to the telescope.

Hubble Space Telescope aboard Discovery safely

BY MARCIA DUNN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

SPACE CENTER, Houston — Discovery's astronauts hauled the Hubble Space Telescope aboard the shuttle early Thursday for a 1-billion-mile tuneup that will allow it to peer even deeper into the far reaches of the universe.

Spacewalking astronauts planned to spend four straight nights beginning Thursday installing new science instruments and other up-to-date equipment in NASA's second Hubble service call since 1993.

Like repairmen on Earth, Discovery's seven-man crew kept the customer waiting. The shuttle pulled up a little late alongside the 12-ton, 43-foot observatory. Several more minutes passed before Steven Hawley, operating the shuttle's mechanical arm, latched onto the telescope as the two spacecraft soared 370 miles over Mexico's southwestern coast.

"Seeing that beautiful spacecraft for the first time in three years was like seeing your best friend whom you haven't seen for three years," NASA's chief Hubble scientist, Ed Weiler, said on Earth. "Not only that, but the friend doesn't seem to have aged at all."

The only sign of age appeared to be a gouge in a dish antenna, caused by a micrometeorite. The healthy Hubble was a welcome sight; a badly warped or wobbly telescope would have forced NASA to call off the spacewalks.

Weiler considered the first spacewalk, by Mark Lee and Steven Smith, to be "the Super Bowl" of the series. Their job: to replace 1970s science instruments with start-of-the-art devices.

"If that goes well, I think it will really put Hubble into a position of having world-class scientific capability well into the 21st century," Weiler said.

STATE PRESS Boos & Bravos

BOO — To administrators who are considering raising ticket prices for athletic events. We understand there is a need to maintain our athletics, not only in order to compete with other Universities, but also to attract high-quality athletes. What makes those guys think that an outstanding football season topped off with a run at the Rose Bowl justifies soaking students? It will take more than one superb year to cement the reputation of an entire athletics program to monumental status.

BRAVO — For AIDS Awareness Week. We hope that some of the myths surrounding AIDS, HIV and how it is transmitted have been dispelled. As a disease that is quickly permeating our country, the best method we have to curb it is education. AIDS is such a taboo topic that it is taking over the masses by ignorance and risky behavior. A lot of hard work and coordination went into this event to make it so successful. Anyone have any extra free condoms to spare?

BOO — To APS, Amtrak and Union Pacific Railroad for not making the creation of mass transit a priority. Consumers from all walks of life have been pushing for this baby to come to life, but a commuter train demonstration scheduled for March was pushed back and finally postponed. Come on guys, more and more people flock to the city, no one's moving out, and the congestion and pollution problems keep getting worse. To be fair, anyone else involved in the postponement gets a big fat BOO too.

BRAVO — To officials for recognizing that we need to do something about that darned Life Science Building and other high-rise structures that pose a risk on campus. Officials from various different departments are teaming together to discuss the general safety of buildings at ASU. We hope a feasible solution will be reached soon to prevent other accidents resulting in deaths from happening.

BRAVO — To James McNeil, the 17-year-old Mesa boy who braved climbing a 125-foot electrical tower to ensure his autistic brother's safety. James, an Eagle Scout, climbed after his 10-year-old brother John, despite his fear of heights. He really earned a Badge of Bravery or whatever the Scouts give out for this one.

BOO — To James McDougal, former Whitewater business partner of President Clinton, for first lying about Clinton's involvement in a 1986 meeting, then changing his story. This guy just adds to the stereotype of slimy politicians, but hasn't McDougal ever heard of loyalty?

BRAVO — To the House of Representatives for not passing the term limit amendment that was proposed this week. The provision would limit House members to six 2-year terms and senators to two 6-year terms. The final vote was 69 votes short of the two-thirds majority required to clear the House. A 1996 drive for a term limit amendment also failed. We say why fire the legislators if they are doing a good job? That's what the state elections are for. Duh.

Ethics taught by parents save face

In my estimation, Mom and Pop were pretty savvy about a lot of important things in life. One of those things was ethics or ethical behavior. This can be a fairly complicated issue, but I guess the folks figured out the K.I.S.S. principle (keep it simple, son) early on. All I had to do was hear and heed. It didn't take an ethics oversight committee to understand it was good stuff.

While a lot of my friends' parents were clamoring about "don't do anything I wouldn't do," the message I got was far different. My parents were quick to tell me, "Don't do anything you would be ashamed of if anyone were to find it out."

As a teen, I thought this to be fairly extreme, somewhere out in left field. Their whole point was that I needed to live my life as though everybody was watching me, constantly. They didn't want the things I did being front page news, things I would have to constantly apologize for or things that would be an embarrassment to me. They also said something about how things which are done in secret are shouted from rooftops.

Imagine my actions being made public! "That doesn't happen to people in real life," I told my parents. I guess I was wrong. I now know that they were right.

Another important thing they told me was not to say things I was afraid to have repeated. "Guard your conversation," my parents told me. "Don't say things that you could not say to someone's face."

"Trust us on this one," they said. "People, right or wrong, can and do overhear what you say and they will repeat it." I suppose this includes conversations on cellular phones (sorry, Newt). You always need to tell the truth and speak fairly of others. Imagine having to watch what you say. Scary thought.

Along with speech, we also have to watch our actions. My dad told me once, "Sex is a good thing. Be sure you keep it between you and your wife." I've often thought this to be very good advice. Snubbing this advice could lead to some surprises in life. Surprises like, "I'm sorry but your AIDS test is positive," or "There is a 97.8 percent chance that there is a paternity case based on the genetic testing." Condoms may break, but fidelity is 100 percent effective when applied by both partners. And most importantly, I don't have to try to explain some marital indiscretion to my wife.

A good example of lost ethics I've noticed on our campus on several occasions is students not doing their own work. This one had me reeling during the previous semester.

I watched a student get an attendance slip signed for an extra-credit lab, when those of us who had actually gone to the lab knew this person had not been there.

I also saw another student studying an answer sheet, not a study guide, for a test in, of all things, constitutional law. This person could be an attorney in the future or even scariest, a senator or representative.

Probably the most important bit of ethical direction my parents gave me was, "Admit when you're wrong." Not this mea culpa, that's only half sincere. When you admit to your deeds, you own the good and bad, right or wrong.

There's something to be said for being repentant for what you've done wrong. The American Heritage Dictionary says to repent means a change for the better as a result of remorse for one's sins. It also says that sins are those things which are shameful or wrong. To admit guilt or involvement and then try to minimize damage is not changing for the better. It is a lack of character. Someone once told me the biggest reason people lie is for self-preservation or to save face.

Ethics comes from the Greek word ethos, meaning character. Character is linked to your reputation and how people know you. All they can know about you is what they see you do or not do. They see the result of your choices, ethical or not, everyday. Ethics are not something you can teach in a class or monitor with a committee. It has to be a part of you, of what you are, of what you become.

We have to help each other for it to be so. George D. Rose, Sr., is a junior studying public relations and can be reached at WriteSt907@aol.com.

Arpaio defends questionable policies despite effectiveness

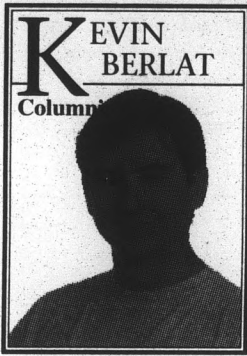

I had the pleasure of attending the Memorial Union Activities Board Opinion Forum last week and seeing one of Arizona's best politicians at work. Unfortunately, he is also in charge of law enforcement for Maricopa County.

Sheriff Joe Arpaio graced the Programming Lounge stage for over an hour talking about his policies and answering questions from the crowd. I came away from the forum with the opinion that while he is a great politician, he is also an irritable and arrogant man who relies more on symbolism and slogans than actual law enforcement.

Sheriff Arpaio started the session by talking about his past, including stints with the Army during the Korean War, the Las Vegas police department ("just in time to arrest Elvis," he joked) and finally retiring from the Bureau of Narcotics and the Drug Enforcement Agency before being elected sheriff of Maricopa County in 1992.

However, once he was elected sheriff, he began to use his position for self-promotion and symbolism rather than the safe and effective detention of prisoners. His answer to deterrence? Making jail so miserable that prisoners wouldn't want to return.

He set up tents "to put more people in jail," but purposefully chose old tents that provided no protection from the chill of a Phoenix winter or the heat of a 116 degree summer. Arpaio seemed to relish his description of where the Tent City is located, "between the dog pound and the dump."

KEVIN BERLAT
Columnist

In addition to these measures, Arpaio sought to save money by eliminating coffee, cigarettes, movies and by limiting cable TV to five channels: Disney, weather, C-Span, Channel 12 city television, and videos of Newt Gingrich's college course (which is just cruel).

While it is hard to argue with these methods, Arpaio also displayed his ignorance of basic health issues by describing the meals for the prisoners. Bologna sandwiches are the meal of the day, but the bologna is so old that it has turned green. Arpaio was proud of the color of the bologna, but when posed with a health-issue question from someone in the audience, he responded with an irritated, "I'm not a butcher. Maybe it's oxidation."

And that was the tone of the day. When Arpaio was trumpeting one of his pet projects, he was calm, cool and very ready to discuss it. However, when a hint of criticism arose, he immediately became very defensive, arrogant, and refused to answer the question, to the point of getting into shouting matches with several audience members. Arpaio attacked the moderator of the session when he attempted to bring up a New Times article about a prisoner injured at the Madison County Jail. Arpaio refused to comment about the story, and called the New Times "garbage," while praising our State Press as "a nice honest paper."

When an audience member asked him why his guards were still using the restraining chair for punishment despite recent deaths and injuries from its use, Arpaio accused her of wanting to coddle prisoners and asked her "Do I take the guns away too?"

Arpaio dismissed the recent disturbance at the Tent City as "one little riot," and when asked if he would face second-degree murder charges for not improving conditions or security, Sheriff Joe dismissed the poor conditions by saying he didn't have the man-power to improve it.

The one audience question that Arpaio enjoyed was mine. I asked if he would enjoy locking up more juveniles with the passage of Proposition 102, which makes juveniles the property of adult court. Joe responded that if you "rape and kill, then you have to do hard time."

Arpaio is even planning to train German Shepherd dogs to patrol the outside Tent City, so he can continue to under-staff his prisons.

Joe Arpaio is a politician, and he makes no bones about it. He believes in his own policies above all else. However, his policies encourage violence against the inmates by taking away their humanity.

Furthermore, the effectiveness of his methods have never been proven. Arpaio admitted that he has only started a study of his efforts, but that "if I fail, I'm not changing anything." Scary words coming from a man who seems undaunted by violence among his inmates and concerned with high public approval.

Valentine's Day is holiday of heartbreak for single guy

As it gets closer to that dreaded day for all single people — whether they be a Professional Single (like myself) or amateurs and just don't happen to have someone right now — we are all a little on edge due to "this crazy little thing called love." Our weak come-back to all of you "taken" people is that it's just a commercial holiday created by the masterminds at Hallmark in order for you to buy their products.

These evil people sit in dark, smoke-filled rooms deep inside the labyrinth known as the Hallmark Crown Center, in the most romantic city in the high plains —

Kansas City, Mo. They see how much fun we single people have hanging out with our friends or going to movies by ourselves. Or they see all the free time they don't have, due to the fact that they are tied down and have to spend most of their time worrying about what their significant other would think. To you evil people at Hallmark and all the other card companies, I feel I speak for all single people by saying, "We're not going down without a fight. You haven't broken us in the past; you're not going to get us this time."

This is our motto — well that, and "I'll probably just rent a movie tonight." But to be honest, we're slipping. Every year we are losing more and more people to your "created" holiday.

Lately I've heard my friends say, "I just want a date for Valentine's; I don't care who it is. I just want to go out." Don't give in to the Dark Side. It is quicker, faster, more desirable, but it is not stronger. Fight the Power! For instance, on Feb. 14, you will find me in a corner of my room with a large blanket over me. That sounds like fun, doesn't it? Well maybe not to you, but in preparation, I will consume mass quantities of grain alcohol and after that I will try to talk to the restless spirit of Jimmy Stewart (he's dead isn't he?) and think of a good holiday like Christmas (Merry Christmas Movie House, Merry Christmas Emporium, Merry Christmas you beautiful Building and Loan).

So this day might be romantic to those of you people currently in a relationship, but to all of us who are not — and there are a hell of a lot more of us than there are of you — it isn't. We've been putting up with all this love crap; it's in the air, on television, and crammed down our throats from the card companies. So we're not in the best mood — in fact, you might say some of us are very close to "snapping" and taking that nice shiny gun we've been polishing all month, going up to our local bell tower and ... well, you know the rest.

Just take it easy on Friday — have your fun with your significant other. But if you happen to be walking across campus, kind of hunch over and walk in a zigzag pattern. So have your fun on Valentine's Day, spend ridiculous amounts of money in an attempt to buy someone's love, and remember, we're out there ... watching ... and waiting.

So this day might be romantic to those of you people currently in a relationship, but to all of us who are not — and there are a hell of a lot more of us than there are of you — it isn't.

DTC's turn to provide funds

Jennifer Netherby notes in her article on Feb. 6, "DTC taking care of business in Tempe," some of the so-called good things of the downtown Tempe community. Here are some costs to the taxpayer that Netherby was not told about by Rod Keeling, the executive director of the DTC, and the city manager Gary Brown.

It costs the taxpayer more than $250,000 annually in additional clean-up expenses to clean the streets and sidewalks daily, even steam-cleaning. Perhaps the DTC members should learn to use a broom and a pooper-scooper. This cost is more than the $250,000 generated in assessments.

Then there is the matter of the $250,000 interest-free loan that was given to the city — when will it be paid back? Who knows? At least $50,000 of the $250,000 in assessments is paid by the city. The city has paid for $500,000 worth of parking meters for which the DTC without risk stands to make $200,000 — such a deal.

The city provides free restrooms.

The city provides millions of dollars in parking variances to the downtown establishments.

And, pray tell, just what increased revenue has the DTC contributed to the city treasury? Why, I doubt whether the downtown generates as much net revenues and repeat net revenues as do the private establishments on the four corners of Southern and Mill. Would you like to compare and publish the results?

Don't forget we provide free bus service for the DTC customers, one-half million dollars in the Fantasy of Lights, and a host of other expenditures for the DTC — all at the expense of the taxpayers.

Simply, to use a phrase from Ross Perot, the only thing the DTC generates is a "giant sucking sound," the sound of tax revenues going right into the DTC. Is it not time for the DTC to deliver? How much more of the "giant sucking sound" do we hear before the DTC stands on its own?

No guarantees for civic students

I am writing in response to your article about the Honors College taking more space. The space they are planning to use, Best A, also houses residents that are not affiliated with the Honors College for many reasons. What the school, specifically Residential Life, doesn't realize is that those people will be out of a home.

Center Complex has been listed as low-cost housing for the three years I have lived and worked here. Now with the addition of many campus communities floors and the removal of Best A as an option, people who need low-cost housing have had their options reduced dramatically. I have lived in Center for three years, two in Best C and one in Best A. I waited those two years to get one of the two single rooms available to males in the complex and now that I have one they, Residential Life and the Honors College, will not let me keep it. This whole situation makes you wonder if Residence Life really cares about residents, or if they just care about GPA listings.

Many of the people who are threatened with losing their homes have done so much for Center Complex, like serving on Hall Council and being an active member of the community, that it seems outrageous they should lose their spots because they just don't want to be a part of the Honors College. So while Residence Life and the Honors College would like the students to believe that this change is really great, the average student who is working his or her way through school is left without low-cost housing. Makes you think.

Assistants' health coverage bill put on hold

By KEVIN CULWELL
STATE PRESS

Teaching and research assistants will have to wait at least another year to receive financial assistance for medical check-ups.

A bill that would have subsidized half the cost of health insurance for assistants was set to be heard in front of the Senate Education Committee Wednesday, but the committee canceled the hearing because ASU's budget has already been submitted to the Legislature for approval.

The plan to pay 50 percent of all general medical bills for the assistants will not be heard until the fall semester, said Andy Ortiz, graduate affairs vice president of the Associated Students of ASU.

Vision and dental benefits were not included in the plan.

Assistants at the three state universities currently receive no health benefits.

There were 2,279 graduate assistants and associates last year, according to payroll records at ASU's Institutional Analysis department.

Ortiz collaborated with Rep. Dan Schottel, R-Tucson, to help put the bill together and get it ready for the meeting. Schottel was to present it to the committee.

"Teacher assistants are undercompensated financially, and they're definitely undercompensated as far as benefits go," Ortiz said. "We were hoping this bill would be a step to eventually having full medical coverage for them."

Schottel was unavailable for comment.

Many universities around the country currently give their teaching and research assistants health coverage. The University of Washington and Washington State University provide vision and dental plans in addition to regular medical benefits.

"We want to keep competitive so that we can get the best graduate students to become teacher assistants," Ortiz said. "If we were able to get this bill passed through the legislature, everybody would win."

NEW YORK (AP) — What scares Stephen King? The best-selling frightmeister said in a CBS 60 Minutes interview that he fears people imitating the horrifying scenarios in his books — particularly a 1977 book titled Rage.
 “If there’s anything that I regret in my career, it’s publishing the novel Rage,” King said in the interview airing Sunday. “Never crossed my mind at the time, but it’s a story about — I mean — I’m even hesitant to speak of it.”
 In the book, written under King’s pseudonym Richard Bachman, a disturbed high school student brings a gun to school, kills his teacher and holds his classmates hostage.
 “Since then, several kids have killed teachers or held classes hostage who apparently had read that book,” King said. “One kid in Lexington, Kentucky, had read the book several times.”

NEW YORK (AP) — Whoopi Goldberg finally got to take home the burned and battered cat she fell in love with last October.
 Goldberg decided to adopt Frankie after she saw a newspaper photograph of the feline after he was rescued from a fire, looking frail, singed and with a broken leg. The cat spent months in a shelter recuperating.
 Frankie is not to be confused with Scarlet, the cat who heroically plucked her five kittens, one by one, from a burning building last year. Those cats were adopted.

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — A woman who accused Charlie Sheen in a lawsuit of knocking her out during an argument is trying to extort money, the actor’s spokesman said.
 “It’s typical the price you pay for being a celebrity in today’s age,” publicist Jeff Ballard said Wednesday.
 Brittany Ashland filed her lawsuit last week claiming Sheen slammed her onto the marble floor of his home, knocked her unconscious and opened a gash on her lip that required stitches.
 The 31-year-old star of Platoon and Wall Street was arrested in December for investigation of assault, but he has not been charged with any crime.

Puppy digs up $13,500 in back yard

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — Good boy!

A Doberman pinscher puppy apparently dug up $13,500 buried in its back yard Wednesday, sending $100 bills drifting through the neighborhood.

"It was like a fable," said Florence Berger, who lives nearby.

Dora Moya, a housekeeper caring for the home, called police after seeing money swirling through the yard. The owners of the house have been in California for two weeks, neighbors said.

Officers found $11,600 in the yard and the rest of the money elsewhere around the neighborhood, some of it with teeth marks.

The police and the FBI are investigating.

"Because it was such a large amount and such large denominations, we were immediately suspicious of its origin," Sgt. Bill Pfeil said.

LAYAWAY

Firm is high-tech success for graduate

By BEN LEATHERMAN
STATE PRESS

Bright flashes of light and golden streaks of energy shoot from the television, heralding the start of Entertainment Tonight. A kid gets sucked into a Pepsi bottle. A beer-craving frog gets dragged down a highway by a Budweiser truck.

All these attention-getting images came from Novocom, the design firm founded by ASU graduate John Ridgway that specializes in seizing control of viewers.

"We like impact," Ridgway said. "People come to us when they want their message delivered with a lot of intensity and when they want it to be remembered."

Novocom's portfolio of right-brain material, which includes spots for everything from Carl's Jr. to MSNBC, will be on display at the Computing Commons' Art Gallery until March 23.

The exhibit shows off cutting-edge spots in a high-tech environment of information and sensory overload. Several large-screen monitors show quick-cut footage of Novocom's library of work as a fast-paced soundtrack blares in the background.

Two projection units also display the same video on the wall, but on a larger scale. For added ambiance, two mock-ups of Novocom workstations were also brought in.

Ridgway was approached by Barbara Eschbach, director of faculty resources for Information Technology, nine months ago. Novocom provided the ad footage and ASU did the set-up.

"I was very pleased with the way it worked out," Ridgway said. After this exhibit finishes, he plans to duplicate the display at other universities around the country, possibly for recruitment purposes.

Ridgway already has picked up some talent from ASU.

John Ridgway, an ASU alumnus and founder of Novocom, a graphic design firm, sits near one of his exhibits. The show will be on display at the Computing Commons' Art Gallery until March 23.

Jim Poulin/State Press

A number of the exhibit's works were created by former Sun Devils.

"A number of them are Emmy-winning designers and directors now," he said. Two ASU students created the current graphics package for Entertainment Tonight, one of Ridgway's first projects.

After getting his photography degree from ASU in 1975, Ridgway worked with a variety of companies ranging from KAET to the New Times before founding Novocom in 1983. At that time, the company was known as GRFX.

One of his first designs was for the fledgling television show Entertainment Tonight. This led him to several Emmys.

Ridgway said he considers Novocom to be the leading special effects shop in the nation and one of the three top graphic design firms worldwide.

He added that some of the best new talent can be found at the college level, where students are both creative and untested. "There are a lot of opportunities (at ASU)," he said. "It's just what you make out of it."

Exxon to appeal $5 billion oil spill judgment

By JIM CLARKE
ASSOCIATED PRESS

ANCHORAGE, Alaska — Exxon Corp. filed papers Thursday signaling its plans to appeal the $5.3 billion judgment it faces for the 1989 Valdez oil spill.

Exxon is asking a federal appeals court to review the standards U.S. District Court Judge H. Russel Holland used to arrive at the $5 billion punitive award.

Exxon also said it objects to instructions Holland gave the jury during the 1994 trial and to the $6.75 billion letter of credit the judge is requiring Exxon to post.

Thousands of Alaska fishermen and natives are in line to collect the punitive judgment, as well as $287 million in compensatory damages. Exxon is also appealing the way Holland calculated some of the compensatory damages.

The Exxon Valdez spilled about 11 million gallons of crude oil into Prince William Sound in March 1989 when the tanker went aground on Bligh Reef.

Exxon has said since it lost the civil trial that it would appeal the matter, so Thursday's announcement came as no surprise.

In a prepared statement, Exxon Chairman Lee R. Raymond called the judgment excessive and unwarranted and says it should be set aside or substantially reduced.

But Brian O'Neill, one of the lead attorneys representing fishermen and other plaintiffs, contended the appeal was part of a long-term Exxon strategy to delay paying the award.

"They sprang frivolous motion after frivolous motion after the jury came in to delay payment, and they'll do the same thing in the appeals court," O'Neill said.

Interest on the award is accumulating at a 5.9 percent annual rate and already has topped $38 million.

O'Neill said he expects the appeals process to last at least 18 months.

SENATE PRESIDENT SASSY, SAVVY, ALWAYS RUNNING

BY MELODY McDONALD
STATE PRESS

The two-minute warning had sounded and Brenda Burns still had about 50 yards to go.

Rushing from the back door of her office, she maneuvered down the hall and into an open elevator. She barreled into the adjacent Arizona State Capitol Building, where she faked a smile and shook a hand before darting into an already-packed room.

With just seconds to spare, she caught her introduction, which was followed by cheers from the crowd of some of Phoenix's most prominent business people.

They had gathered to listen to the new president of the Arizona Senate.

Dressed in ivory-colored slacks and a cropped, navy blue blazer, the petite, black-haired woman from Glendale took a deep breath, lifted her chin and strolled easily to the front of the room.

Waving a neatly manicured hand in small circles, she began to explain issues of tax decreases, clean air and welfare reform to more than 100 members from the Phoenix Chamber of Commerce — who were spending a day at the Legislature. It was only 8:30 a.m., but she was already sprinting toward the goal line.

"I tend to get involved in non-sexy issues, and work them," she said almost passionately as she continued to paint the air with her fire-engine red fingernails. "These are the issues that will make running your business difficult, and they have to be dealt with."

Pleasing the public, dealing with change and running on a tight schedule are clearly Burns' strengths. For the first time that morning, the 46-year-old Republican appeared relaxed and completely in control.

Appearing in control is essential for someone who wrote herself into Arizona history books on Jan. 13 as the first woman president of the state Senate. Four years ago, she was also the first woman majority leader of the state's House of Representatives.

Unlike her male predecessors, who also had to give countless speeches while overseeing the Senate, she is setting the precedent for Arizona women in politics.

"It's pretty consuming," she admitted after she had spoken to the business people. She was sitting tensely in a chair in her enormous office, which looks more like a living room than a workplace. The office, on the second floor of the Senate building at 1700 W. Washington St., is the place where she spends the majority of her time. Plush blue carpet, pastel wallpaper and a neutral-colored couch combined with photos of her husband, three children and grandchild add a warm touch to the sometimes cold nature of politics.

A bronze statue of an eagle rests on a table just behind her. To the left, an Arizona flag emerges from the floor. Elephant figurines lay scattered on the coffee table, shelves and desk.

"My days are very long, and typically, quite late," she said. "But I plan to succeed, and you don't do that by slowing down."

Instead, the woman who describes herself as "goal-oriented, focused and greatly driven by a sense of responsibility and duty" is staying five steps ahead, which in turn, is earning respect of senators who are impressed by her dedication, intelligence and organization.

"The way she conducts herself has raised the professionalism of the state Legislature," said Senate Majority Leader Marc Spitzer, R-North Central Phoenix, who Burns beat out for the Senate's top job.

"Some of the older people may have said she wouldn't be better than a man, but she's proven them wrong — she has absolutely proven them wrong."

Spitzer said her direct, to-the-point manner has discouraged staff from wasting time, and, consequently, progress is being made on a number of issues, including school finance.

Burns cites school finance as the No. 1 issue on the 1997-1998 Senate majority program, saying the method of financing education and school facilities needs to be improved. In addition, the Senate is seeking to deregulate state control of curriculum and operations of local schools.

SHE IMPRESSES BOTH SIDES OF THE AISLE

Her hard work already is paying dividends; Burns is making an impression on Democrats, too.

"I think she is a hard worker, and an ambitious woman," said Assistant Minority Leader Ruth Solomon, D-Tucson. "She seems to be on top of what needs to be done administratively. Staff seems to be on target."

An Army brat, Burns' childhood was spent mostly in Europe. Looking back, she said her dad's occupation as a sergeant major gave her a strong sense of devotion to coun-

Salary Committee seeking classified staff pay increases

BY DEANNA DARR
STATE PRESS

Classified staff at ASU is among the lowest paid in the Valley when compared to workers in similar jobs in the private sector, but a University group is trying to change that.

ASU classified staff is paid an average of 16 percent less than those working comparable jobs outside the University, said Susan Malaga, assistant vice president for Human Resources.

Malaga is heading the Salary Strategy Committee for the Classified Staff Council. The committee has been resurrected after being eliminated two years ago because of an identity crisis. The previous committee only represented classified staff, which included middle-management positions not considered classified staff at the other state universities.

Before the committee could reconvene, a new title for service professionals was created. That way, the Salary Strategy Committee was better prepared to represent all classified staff, said Jacque Gutierrez, president of the CSC.

The committee met for the first time in November to draft a set of goals and principles as a guide to increasing salaries. One such goal is to create an internal value system for the different positions included in classified staff. This would help to guide pay raises to the level of similar positions outside the University, Gutierrez said.

While the staff has received raises the last two years, Gutierrez said if the legislature does not appropriate funds for raises, no one will get one.

Gutierrez said the CSC has actively been communicating concerns to legislators making the final budget decision. Besides a letter writing campaign, alumni have hosted coffee receptions where faculty, staff and students can speak with legislators.

Classified employees hold administrative assistant positions or are service professionals, among others.

According to a CSC survey last semester, an average of 93 percent of 1,458 respondents said the top reason they would leave their job at ASU was for higher pay.

The survey also reported that an average of 11 percent feel they are well compensated for their work.

Of the 3,032 employees designated as classified staff, 900 were deemed eligible for public assistance last year, said Gutierrez.

Malaga said many employees choose to work at ASU because of the benefits package offered to employees. She added that the partial tuition waiver available to employees and their families is another attraction.

"There's a lot of quality-of-life issues," she said. "People who want to make a lot of money don't come to work in the public sector."

try. He served in World War II, Korea and Vietnam.

Her high school days were spent in Newport News, Va., where she attended Warwick High School. She went to Phoenix College, but never received a degree.

In the 1980s, when her three children were adolescents, Burns said she found local politics intriguing and began offering support to candidates. Then in 1986, family, friends and other associates encouraged her to run for a recently-vacated District 17 seat in the House of Representatives.

"The age of my children made me reluctant to run for office," she said. "But I spent a long time talking with family about my role and we decided it would be a good thing."

Burns and her husband, Bruce, an optometrist, raised their three children — Brock, 20; Bradley, 25; and Bresha, 23 — in Glendale, where they have lived for more than 20 years.

"My son Bradley walked door to door with me so many days," she said, grinning. "He was pretty adamant."

After becoming a representative, Burns found herself moving up in rank at almost break-neck speed.

During her four terms in the House of Representatives, she served as a Commerce Committee chair and majority leader. In 1994, she ran for the Senate, where she served as chairwoman for the Professions & Employment Committee as well as the Ethics Committee during her first term. Her peers elected her president of the Senate at the beginning of her second term in January.

Sen. John Kaites, R-Northwest Phoenix, who met Burns when he ran for a seat in the House of Representatives and presently occupies a Senate seat, said she did a "phenomenal" job as majority leader of the House. He added that he has no doubt she'll serve the Senate just as well.

"I think she's remarkable," he said. "In the House, at times, she was doing the duties of the speaker. At times, she was doing the duties of the whips. She's the kind of person who addresses the problem and takes care of it."

Kaites said he was impressed when Burns left the House to become a senator, then stepped into the president's chair in just her second term.

"She ran when she clearly didn't have seniority in her favor, but she was able to get the votes," he said. "She has done a lot with very little. She's someone I've been very proud to serve with."

I think she is a hard worker, and an ambitious woman,

— Ruth Solomon,
Assistant Minority Leader, D-Tucson.

WILL SHE RUN FOR GOVERNOR?

While Burns is certainly dedicated to her job as Senate president, she shilly-shallies around whether she'll try to move up, yet again, and run for governor.

"I spent time assessing, and right now, I'm focused on being Senate president," she said. "I really believe things unfold when they're supposed to unfold. I'll know it when the time is right."

So for now, anyway, she'll spend her days assigning bills to committees, giving speeches and overseeing Senate administration.

With all that seriousness and responsibility comes a little fun, too. That side was exposed when she spoke to the Chamber of Commerce members.

"You know, it's fun getting around the state and meeting people, and of course, it makes you feel good when people recognize you," she said, glancing around a room of people who were still rustling papers and getting settled in their seats.

"A few days ago, I was on an airplane, and — as usual — I was reading and working on the plane," she said. "Toward the end of the flight, I was putting my reading material away, and the lady sitting next to me said, 'We know who you are ... you're in the Senate.'"

"I said, 'yes I am.'"

"She said, 'yes we know, you're Sen. Jan Brewer.'"

The audience chuckled with delight.

Brewer was a senator last session but recently was elected to the County Board of Supervisors.

THERE ARE CRITICS, TOO

People are naturally drawn to Burns' quick wit and disarming charm, but Sen. Chris Cummiskey, D-Central Phoenix, said the public should be wary of her because she will use her power to push her own agenda.

"She has very strong ideas of what things should proceed, and those on the other side of the aisle need to be aware of her," he said. "In the past, there are certain bills that have not received a hearing, and I suspect they won't this session either because of her leadership."

Cummiskey said one such bill is the Lobbyist Reform Act, which he said would eliminate some of the lobbying perks lawmakers enjoy.

In April, Republican Gov. Fife Symington vetoed the bill. It would have eliminated free professional services, including accounting and legal work, and would have banned lawmakers and other officials from accepting free tickets to sporting and entertainment events and free meals worth more than $25.

After the veto, Burns talked to Symington about reviving interest in the bill and has continued to do so on a regular basis. In fact, Burns struck a deal with the governor Thursday securing the passage of the bill. Symington publicly pledged not to veto the measure again if lobbyists are still allowed to provide free services to legislators.

"Today's agreement represents nearly a year of discussions among all of those who were interested in improving and promoting good state government," Burns said.

Sen. Gus Arzberger, D-Wilcox, said he personally doesn't have any complaints.

"For me she's done a good job so far," he said. "As Senate president, sometimes that's all you can do."

Meanwhile, Burns said she is deeply honored to have been entrusted with her position as Senate president, and she aims to prove her critics wrong.

"I am just going to have to work as hard as necessary to produce the best results possible,"

TRADITIONS CONTINUE

The paths of NBA legends George Gervin and Marques Johnson crossed eight years ago in the Land Down Under.

Gervin and Johnson were members of a traveling all-star team that included former Los Angeles Lakers Michael Cooper and Kareem Abdul-Jabbar to Australia in 1989.

The trip also foreshadowed a showdown between their sons on Saturday.

"George and I kind of looked into our crystal balls," Johnson recalled, "and thought it would be kind of neat if our sons followed in our footsteps."

"It's a culmination of a dream, that are paths did cross," said Johnson, who was a three-year starter at UCLA from 1975-77 and also played in the NBA for 10 seasons with the Milwaukee Bucks and Los Angeles Clippers."

Gervin agreed. "It's really fun for us," said Gervin, who played college ball at Eastern Michigan and was a 12-time NBA All-Star.

The sons, Gee Gervin and Kris Johnson, will meet for the second time in their collegiate careers 2:30 p.m. Sunday at the University Activity Center. On Jan. 16, UCLA defeated ASU 79-62 at Pauley Pavilion.

Gee and Kris were only youngsters when they accompanied their fathers to Australia, but the trip was a thrilling experience for the two.

"I was like 'George Gervin, the Iceman,'" Kris said. "I was just all into George, and loving his game, the finger rolls and everything. He taught me how to finger roll. It was pretty nice."

Gee enjoyed watching one of his childhood heroes, Marques, on that trip.

"I loved the way he played with a hard-nosed style," Gee said.

Gee and Kris became good friends on that trip and they've developed respect and admiration for each other.

"Gee's great," Kris said. "I love Gee. He's really tricky. He doesn't know what he's going to do. He might pull up. He might shoot it. He might go around you."

He was like that when he was young, too."

Gee said Kris is a good shooter and a good athlete — "just like his father."

Lofty expectations?

Although Kris and Gee are the sons of basketball icons, neither player feels overwhelming pressure to succeed.

Both agreed their fathers laid-back persona was beneficial.

"I've never felt pressure to do well," said Kris, who is averaging 11.8 points per game this season.

"It's just great because it's not that extra 'Oh, I got to prove this and show that because my Dad's going to be mad' or the extra pressure to uphold the Johnson name. It's never been like that. I think it just relaxes me out there on the court and let me stay focused and go out there and play."

Gee said his father never made him play basketball. He plays because he enjoys it.

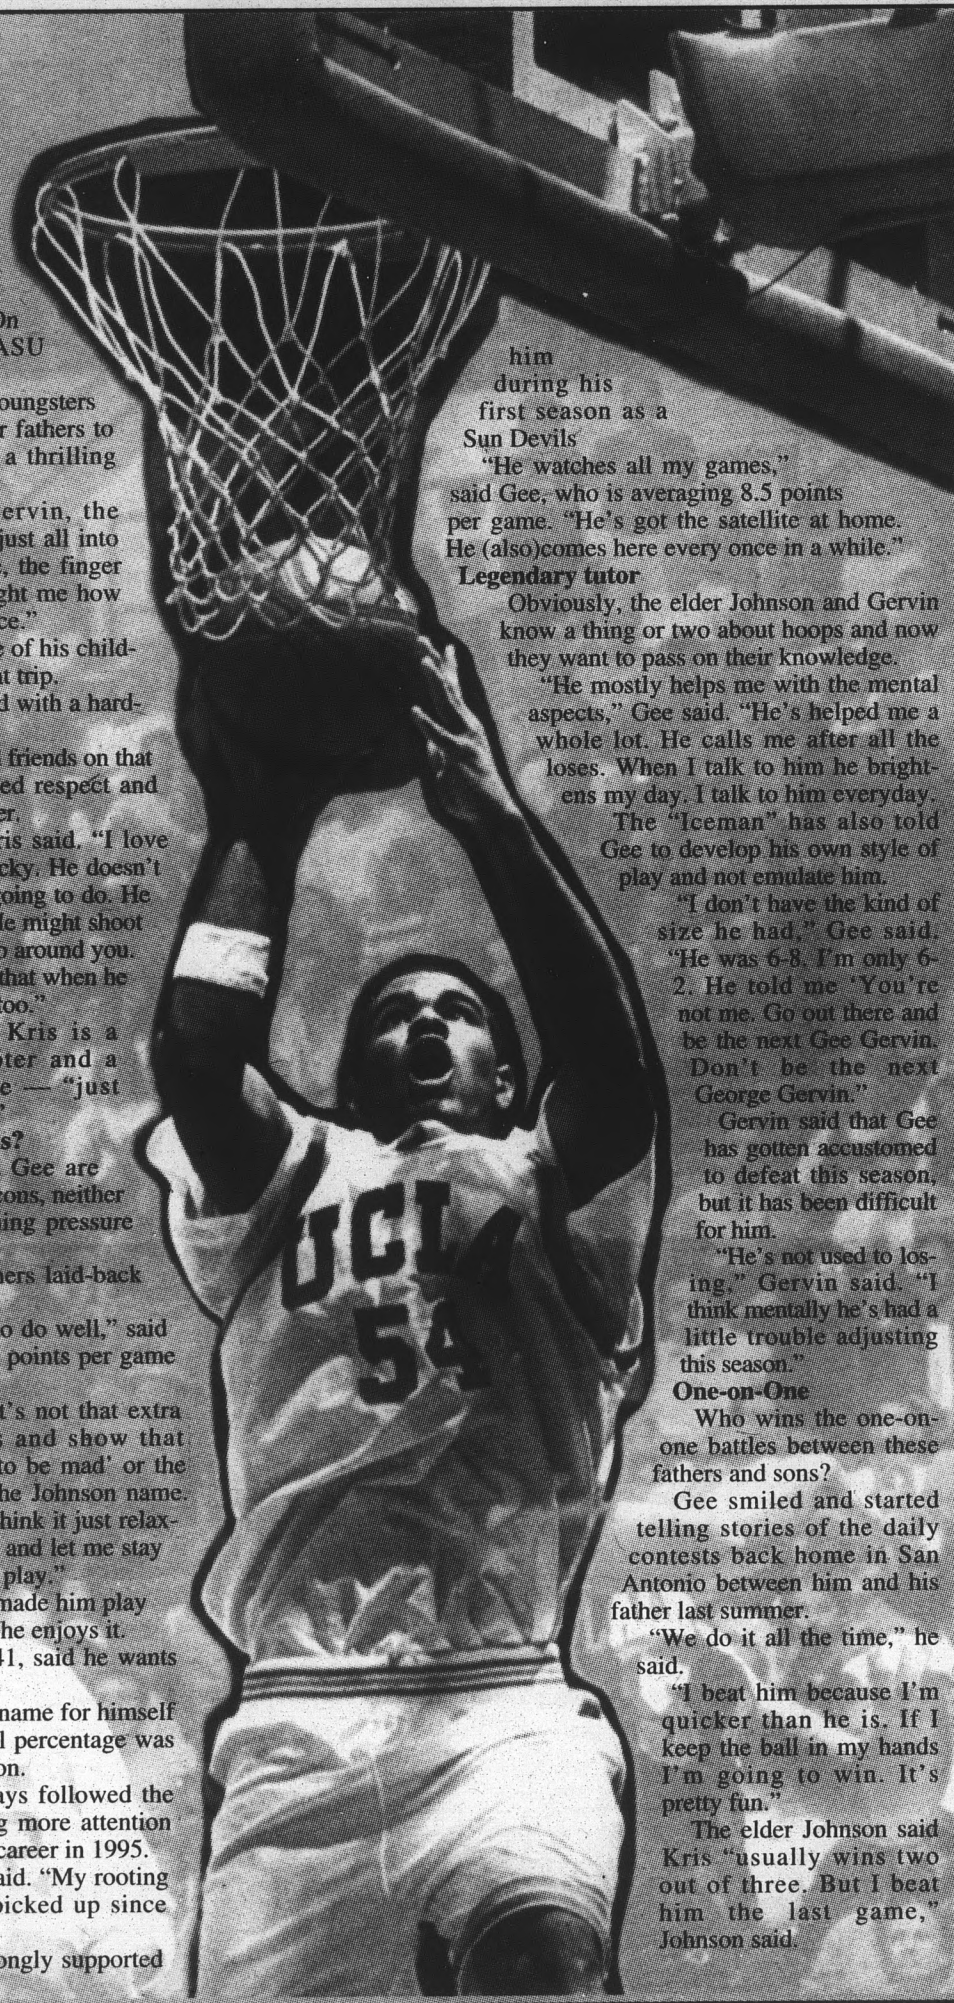

The elder Johnson, now 41, said he wants his son to "be his own man."

Kris has certainly made a name for himself at UCLA. His 56.9 field goal percentage was fourth in the Pac-10 last season.

Johnson said he has always followed the Bruins, but he started paying more attention when Kris began his college career in 1995.

"Yes, it's more fun," he said. "My rooting interest in the school has picked up since he's there."

Gee said his father has strongly supported him during his first season as a Sun Devils

"He watches all my games," said Gee, who is averaging 8.5 points per game. "He's got the satellite at home. He (also) comes here every once in a while."

Legendary tutor

Obviously, the elder Johnson and Gervin know a thing or two about hoops and now they want to pass on their knowledge.

"He mostly helps me with the mental aspects," Gee said. "He's helped me a whole lot. He calls me after all the losses. When I talk to him he brightens my day. I talk to him everyday."

The "Iceman" has also told Gee to develop his own style of play and not emulate him.

"I don't have the kind of size he had," Gee said.

"He was 6-8. I'm only 6-2. He told me 'You're not me. Go out there and be the next Gee Gervin. Don't be the next George Gervin.'"

Gervin said that Gee has gotten accustomed to defeat this season, but it has been difficult for him.

"He's not used to losing," Gervin said. "I think mentally he's had a little trouble adjusting this season."

One-on-One

Who wins the one-on-one battles between these fathers and sons?

Gee smiled and started telling stories of the daily contests back home in San Antonio between him and his father last summer.

"We do it all the time," he said.

"I beat him because I'm quicker than he is. If I keep the ball in my hands I'm going to win. It's pretty fun."

The elder Johnson said Kris "usually wins two out of three. But I beat him the last game," Johnson said.

Boseman sinks Devils' hopes

By Ed Odeven
STATE PRESS

USC's experience outlasted ASU's youth Thursday night 72-66 in a Pac-10 basketball game at the University Activity Center.

With 38 seconds remaining in the game USC had possession of the ball and a 69-66 lead.

Trojan senior Stais Boseman patiently dribbled the ball to eat away at the clock.

That went completely against ASU coach Bill Frieder's timeout plans.

"We told them we had to trap and try to get a foul," he said. "They just didn't carry that out. That can't happen. We had to extend the game at that time and we didn't do it."

But confusion conquered the Sun Devils when Boseman nailed a game-clinching three-pointer with 6.3 seconds to go.

Boseman finished with 16 points. Sun Devil forward Michael Batiste had 13 points and Urit Kelly added 10.

"There was a little confusion out there on the floor," said ASU freshman guard Eddie House, who had a game-high 18 points "A few of us were going for a foul and a few of us were yelling no foul. The coaches wanted us to get a foul. There was just some miscommunication out on the floor."

House said the last-minute defeat was a real downer.

"It's real disappointing because USC is one of the teams at the top of the Pac (10) and you always want to upset somebody when they come into our house," he said.

The Sun Devils trailed 38-34 at the half. House admitted he doesn't know what it will take for the Sun Devils to bounce back.

"If I knew maybe we'd be winning right now," he said. "Maybe it's a lack of experience. We are a really young team. I don't want to make any excuses, but the team we just played started four fifth-year seniors and they can play ball."

The Sun Devils fell to 10-13, 2-9 in the conference. USC (14-7, 9-3) won its fifth straight game.

Soccer inks six

FROM STAFF REPORTS

ASU women's soccer coach Terri Patraw announced the signing of six student athletes to letters of intent to study and play soccer for the next four years.

Included are Valley natives, Arienne Stramiello, a midfielder from Phoenix, and Jessical Bohl, a midfielder out of Glendale. The other four players are midfielder Erin McGinnis (Aurora, Colo.), defender Jaclyn Clark (Rochester Hills, Mich.), forward Karine Inoue (Laguna Hills, Calif.) and midfielder Antoinette Marjanovic (Los Angeles). All six players will enter as freshmen.

Patraw was pleased with the class, stating that it was important to get players for all over the field and not just single areas. Also, she said, the class will improve the speed of the team greatly.

Wrestlers out for vengeance vs. Bulldogs

BY JOSH DEFAMIO
STATE PRESS

Revenge and redemption will be on the minds of the No. 9 ASU wrestling team when it takes the mat tonight at 7.

The Sun Devils, coming off a 28-12 loss to second-ranked Iowa, will try to regroup on the road against 14th-ranked Fresno State. The Bulldogs beat ASU 25-12 in Tempe last season.

"On paper it's almost dead even," coach Lee Roy Smith said. "I consider them a top-ten team, with top-ten capabilities."

Fresno State is led by two ranked seniors at the 134- and 142-pound weight classes.

Yero Washington, ranked third at the 134-pound weight class will wrestle ASU's Joey Heckel. For Heckel, it will be the second of three consecutive matches against the top three wrestlers in his class. Last week, he took on top-ranked Mark Ironside of Iowa, and finishes up his regular season against second-ranked Steven Schmidt of Oklahoma State.

"If (Heckel) can survive these matches, he'll be ready for postseason," Smith said.

Fresno State will send out fifth-ranked Brendan Buckley against Tracy Brown at 142 pounds. It marks Brown's second stint in the lineup. A knee injury sidelined him last week against Cal-Poly and Iowa.

"I'm hoping that I just can get back in to (wrestling)," Brown said. "I'm just going to go out there and wrestle my match, and hopefully I'll come out with a win. I don't care who I'm wrestling."

Of course, ASU also features four ranked wrestlers in Shawn Ford, Matt Suter, Casey Strand and Aaron Simpson, which should make for a very competitive match.

"I expect a really good challenge," Smith said.

This marks ASU's last road dual meet of the season. They return home next Sunday to face top-ranked Oklahoma State before hosting the Pac-10 championships on March 2-3.

Difficult Saluki's squad up next for No. 8 baseball team

BY PERCY EDNALINO JR.
STATE PRESS

They've proven that they can stay in step with the No. 1 and No. 2 teams in the country.

Now the ASU baseball team has to prove it can endure a four-game homestand against two potential NCAA regional teams.

ASU (6-5) hosts Southern Illinois (0-0) at 7 o'clock tonight for the first game of a three-game series. The Sun Devils then host Oklahoma State on Monday for one game. ASU holds a 10-3 edge over Southern Illinois and a slim 7-5 lead over Oklahoma State in the all-time series.

It may seem a little crazy for the Sun Devils to face two difficult teams in the span of four days, yet there's a reason ASU coach Pat Murphy fit these two teams in the schedule — it's a simulation of what the conditions of the regionals are going to be like.

"You can't look ahead and you've got to stay focused game by game," Murphy said. "If you want your team to mature and you want your team to be the best, you have to play this type of schedule. One of the reasons we did this is because the regionals are four straight days and we want to be able to prepare for that type of thing."

And how. Murphy said the Salukis are a good team. Southern Illinois was tabbed in the preseason to place third in its conference behind Southwest Missouri and Wichita State.

"They're a team that finished high in the Missouri Valley Conference behind Wichita State," Murphy said. "This will be a tough weekend, especially because we're coming off playing No. 2 (USC) and we're coming off playing No. 1 (Florida State). It's very easy to have a letdown."

Junior Richey Leon said he doesn't plan on letting that happen against either team. He added that the challenge of playing four straight games is appealing.

"They're both going to be tough teams," Leon said. "Southern Illinois is probably going to be in the tournament at the end of the year and Oklahoma State is a ranked team. We're going to try and prepare as much as we can throughout the week. Yeah, a four-game set might be a little bit tough, but that's what we've got to do."

The Salukis finished last season with an 18-12 conference mark (29-26 overall). Leading the Salukis on offense is first baseman Aaron Jones. Jones hit .380 and notched 63 RBI last season.

Tory Hatten and Dave Piazza lead the Salukis' rotation. Hatten, a senior, led the team with six wins and a 4.80 ERA while Piazza notched a 5-1 mark (4.48 ERA).

Murphy said ASU's performance thus far is not at the level he wants it to be.

"We're a long way away," Murphy said. "You can never get in a rhythm because you're playing the top teams in the country. It's tough to get into a rhythm with a young club."

"We're just scraping and clawing and biting and scratching for everything we can get. We've been very inconsistent and I'm really surprised we've maintained whatever top-10 ranking we have. I'm really shocked by it."

Updated polls were released this week with ASU maintaining its No. 12 ranking in Collegiate Baseball. Baseball America dropped the Sun Devils one spot to No. 8 while Baseball Weekly's coaches poll tabbed ASU at No. 15.

Leon said consistency will be important if the Sun Devils want to do well during the next four games.

"At times, we're going to face adversity in every game, no matter who we're playing," Leon said. "We're going to try everything possible to be consistent throughout this four-game set. Hopefully, hard work throughout the week will show up throughout the weekend."

ASU squads all around country in weekend play

By JOHN SHEEHY
STATE PRESS

The men's tennis team (5-1), riding a four-match winning streak, travels to Southern California this weekend with dates against No. 21 USC and second-ranked UCLA. The Sun Devils, who are ranked 50th in the country according to Rolex, will have their hands full with their Pacific rivals.

This trip will be a definite measuring stick for the Devils, who have yet to face this type of competition.

"Southern California is a tough place to play," head coach Lou Belken said.

Despite being underdogs, the team remains optimistic.

No. 1 singles player Sergio Elias has come out of his slump just in time. He got off to a slow start in '97, but with the help from coaches, and support from his teammates he has managed to find his game again.

"I watched a lot of video with the coaches, and they were a big help to me. I would also like to thank my teammates who showed me such great support while I was in the slump," he said.

Alex Osterrieth has been dominating opponents at the number two position. He is on an incredible winning streak that has now reached 11 matches. During the streak, which dates back to November, he hasn't even dropped a set.

"Alex at No. 2 is money in the bank," teammate Miles Rogers said.

Men's golf in Hawaii

Those poor ASU golfers have to spend another weekend in Hawaii.

The golfers are coming off a strong third place finish at the Mauna Kea Resort Collegiate. They were led by Senior All-American Chris Hannel's seventh place finish at one-over-par. Hannel and the rest of his teammates are now getting ready for the Taylor Made/Big Island Invitational in Kona, Hawaii. Last year, led by Darren Angel's seventh place finish, ASU placed third in this event behind Oklahoma State and Southern Methodist. Angel will be unable to compete this year because of an arm injury which has kept him out of the line-up for some time now.

"I am healthy again, but it is too early to start competing," he said.

Track back in Flagstaff

This Saturday the ASU track and field team heads back to Flagstaff to compete in the NAU Invitational.

Despite the 0-2 record, both the men's and women's teams feel they're doing the best they can in a season full of sanctions and probation.

"I think it's (the season) gone pretty well so far," head coach Greg Kraft said. "Our student athletes are placed in a difficult situation and they've responded really well."

The Sun Devils have produced low numbers in the two meets they've had so far this season. These low numbers are mostly due to their small team. In some events they have no one to compete for them.

"When you're in a competition it really is predicated on balance and depth and right now because of where we are in our program with probation we're really basically at 50 percent of the NCAA funding as far as scholarships are concerned," Kraft said.

Another problem the Devils have faced this season is not having an adequate facility to train in. Sun Angel Stadium is under reconstruction. For now the Devils practice at Tempe High School, but some of the field events are not able to practice there.

"Everyone's disappointed with not being able to train in our own facility," high jumper Fiona Daly said. "Most of the field people can't really do their event, there's no way for me to practice. But for this weekend, I'm ready to jump."

Aside from these problems the team remains positive for Saturday's meet and the rest of the indoor season.

"All the kids are doing well. You have to look at where they were and where they are now. They're all improving," Kraft said. — Lori Haro

Women's Tennis hosts pair

The ASU women's tennis (3-1) team prepares for another duel-win-weekend against UCLA Friday at 1:30 and USC Saturday at noon.

"We've started off strong. We've been really well prepared for our matches," freshman Kerry Giardino said.

This weekend the competition will be tougher as the Devils take on No. 7 UCLA and USC who is ranked 19th in the nation. Last year the Devils were swept by both UCLA and USC.

"It's so far so good. I think we'll have a good feel again after this weekend," head coach Sheila McInerney said. "Both SC and UCLA are good teams, but I think they're both beatable. We'll certainly know a lot more on Saturday night."

According to McInerney UCLA has a young, but talented team this season. They feature freshman at their number two and three seeds.

McInerney said that USC has struggled of late losing to Fresno State and San Diego, two teams that she feels they are probably better than.

"They (USC) realize for them how important this weekend is for them against the Arizona schools," McInerney said.

Some of the Devils know what they're up against for this weekend. Before the beginning of the season the Devils' top player Reka Cseresnyes lost to UCLA's Katy Kocsis in the quarterfinals at the Pac-10 Indoors. Kocsis is ranked sixth in the nation. So far this season Cseresnyes is undefeated in singles.

Also in the Pac-10 Indoors Giardino defeated UCLA's Alyson Gray in the quarterfinals of a singles consolation round and senior Anna Moll beat Pam Trump of USC also in the quarterfinals of the singles consolation.

Softball wins

FROM STAFF REPORTS

It didn't take long for Chris Gill to find her niche on ASU's softball team.

Playing in her first collegiate game, the true freshman from Saugus, Calif., singled, doubled and drove in three runs. She also scored a run and stole a base in ASU's 7-1 victory over Illinois State in the first game of the Coca-Cola Classic.

Senior Lisa Dacquisto went 2 for 3 and scored a run and sophomore Carla Fortune knocked in two runs as ASU won its opening game.

Senior Roxanne Tsosie (1-0) settled down after a shaky first in which she walked two, allowed two hits, and gave up a run to pick up the win. She struck out four and gave up only five hits over six innings.

The Sun Devils continue the tournament tonight with two games. Junior Carrie Breedlove is expected to start against UNLV in the opening game, while senior Carrie James will get the nod in the second game, against Purdue.

They will then play Texas and Santa Barbara on Saturday. The tournament concludes for the Sun Devils when they play UMass on Sunday morning.

Sun Devils look to crash Thunderbirds

BY RANDY JONES
STATE PRESS

A battle-tested Southern Utah squad invades the University Activity Center at 7:30 tonight as the No. 4-ranked Sun Devils' gymnastics team returns home.

The Thunderbirds' (2-5) schedule makers must have been angry with the team as they are coming off a loss to No. 1-ranked Georgia, have already lost to No. 6 Nebraska and has an upcoming meet with No. 2 Utah.

SUU coach Scott Bauman expects ASU (4-1, 3-1 Pac-10) to be just as tough.

"ASU is another incredibly talented team," he said. "They're the real deal. At this kind of meet, we can't worry about what the other team is doing. We just have to go in there and hit our routines."

Sun Devils' coach John Spini said he expects the Thunderbirds to be ready.

"Southern Utah is about a 190 team this year," he said. "I think they lost a few upper classmen this year. They were a lot stronger in some ways in different events last year. (But) I think they will be a good solid team. Scott (Bauman) will put a good team on the floor."

ASU will be hard pressed to up its performances of the past few weeks.

Two weeks ago they set an all-time record score (197.125), while last week they eclipsed the all-time road-score (195.75).

Freshman Amy Shelton said the team will be looking to continue the streak of high-scoring meets. That way they can keep their goal of top seed at the Midwest Regionals alive.

"We are just going to have to look at it as just another competition," she said. "We are going to try and break another record. So we can go into regionals ranked No. 1. We need to just stay confident and hope for the best."

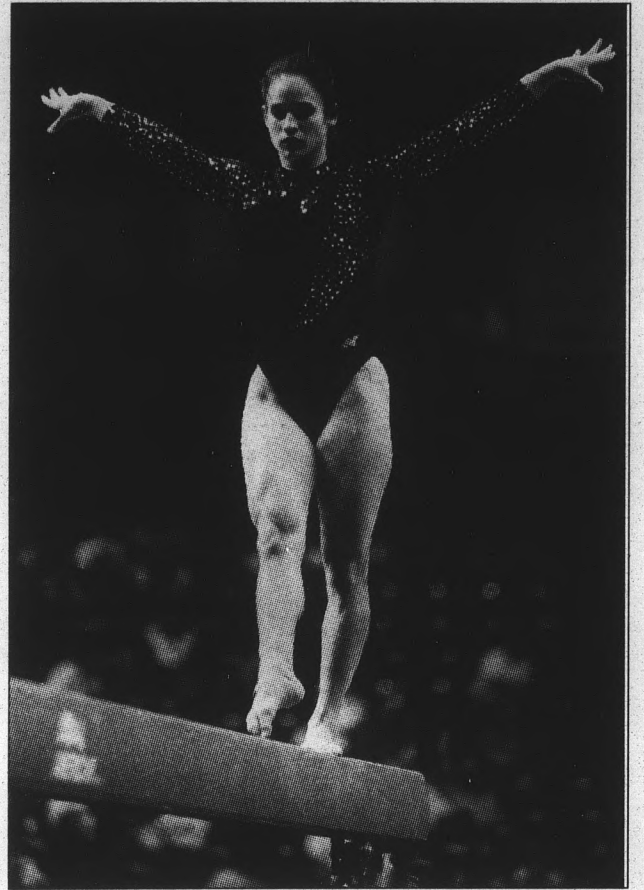

ASU's individual event average scores place them in the elite of gymnastics. They are ranked No. 13 on vault, 8th on uneven bars, 3rd on balance beam and 5th on floor exercise. The team average score of 194.92 places them in fourth.

Particularly impressive is ASU's vault, Bauman said.

"ASU's vault team is equal to (No. 1-ranked) Georgia's," he said. "They have a very strong floor team as well. They've already hit a 197, which basically speaks for itself."

Injury notes:

Junior Kim Keever is still out with a bad ankle, but is practicing on uneven bars. Sophomore Lisa Vincijanovic will sit out at least this week's meet with lingering problems with her injured ankle. Tests were done earlier this week and no break was found. Spini said it is mostly precautionary to insure Vincijanovic does not further injure herself.

Women's basketball team looks for second Pac-10 win

BY PERCY EDNALINO JR.
STATE PRESS

It would be fitting if the ASU women's basketball team ended its six-game losing streak with a win over UCLA, the only team in the Pac-10 it has defeated this season.

Ask ASU forward Molly Tuter, and it also would be fitting if the Sun Devils snapped their skid against the team that started its skid, USC.

One or the other could happen this weekend when the Sun Devils travel to Los Angeles for a weekend series against USC and UCLA. ASU faces USC at 8:30 tonight then plays UCLA on Sunday at 3 p.m.

ASU head coach Charli Turner Thorne said dropping two more games is not an option. ASU is a mere 1-9 in the Pac-10 (7-13 overall) while the Trojans (9-2, 15-5) are in second place in the conference behind Stanford. UCLA (4-7, 10-10) is tied for sixth with Oregon State.

"It's going to be a tough road trip," Turner Thorne said. "USC is playing very well. The thing about the USC game is we did not play well. It's certainly our objective to compete for 40 minutes and just play better."

ASU lost 82-55 to USC on Jan. 18 after pulling out a last-second one-point win over UCLA two days earlier.

Turner Thorne said defense won't be a problem against either team.

Offense — shooting in particular — will be a sore spot

ASU needs to improve upon, however.

"We got good shots (against USC), we just couldn't put them in," Turner Thorne said. "We missed a lot of layups and we missed a lot of open shots. It was just one of those offensive-nightmare nights for us."

Against UCLA, Tuter put in the game-winning three-pointer with less than two seconds to go. ASU had to climb out of a 22-point second-half deficit to beat the Bruins 66-65.

Tuter said she doesn't expect to beat UCLA with another last-point three-point shot.

"I think we're just going to have to work harder," Tuter said. "We just have to ask ourselves 'How bad do we want it?' and get it together."

SUN DEVIL CLUB SPORTS

Ice Hockey

The ASU Ice Devils will be in action for two games this weekend against USC. Both games will be at Veteran's Memorial Coliseum. Saturday's contest begins at 2:30 p.m., with Sunday's game starting at 3 p.m.

Sunday is the final home game of the season, and three senior Ice Devils, Stefan Richardson and brothers Brian and Ross Sternberg, will be honored before the game.

Richardson is a two-time first-team Academic All-American, who is ranked in the top five among all time ASU scoring leaders with 31 goals, 48 assists, and 79 points. He holds team records for games played (100) and most consecutive games played (69).

Brian Sternberg is a transfer from UofA who has played one season for ASU. He is the team's top defenseman.

Ross Steinberg, a goaltender, has a 3-2 record, .910 save percentage and two shutouts this year.

Earlier this week, ASU (16-8-1) earned its second consecutive berth in the American Collegiate Hockey Association National Tournament. The top ten ranked teams make the tournament, and the Ice Devils are currently ranked eighth.

Men's Gymnastics

Today and Saturday, four members of the ASU men's gymnastics team will be in Battle Creek, Mich. for the USA Winter Cup.

Senior Rob Kjar, junior Jon Portillo, freshman Randy Sooter, and sophomore

Peter Wiegung will all be competing in the individual national tournament and vying for an opportunity to try out for the U.S. National Team.

Men's Lacrosse

In their first competition of the season, the ASU men's lacrosse team will be in California this weekend for two games. On Saturday, the Sun Devils will run with the University of San Diego, and on Sunday they will face the University of California at San Diego. Both games start at noon.

The Sun Devils finished 10-1 last season.

Men's Rugby

The ASU men's rugby team will face its stiffest competition of the year on Saturday when they host the defending national champions' University of California Berkeley. The Sun Devils are 2-2 on the young season and have already matched their win total of the last year.

Women's Lacrosse

After playing its first game ever last weekend, the ASU women's lacrosse team has no plans of slowing down. Saturday and Sunday, the team will be in Santa Barbara, Calif., to compete in the Santa Barbara Shootout.

The shootout is a national collegiate tournament and also will feature a few games between national teams from various countries.

The State Press Club Sports Box is compiled by reporter Matt Paulson. He can be reached at 965-2292.
