Acid spill causes art building evacuation

Accident mopped up, students allowed back

BY SHARON CORLEY
 SPECIAL TO THE STATE PRESS

The Art Building was evacuated after one gallon of diluted nitric acid was spilled on the fourth floor 5:30 p.m. Thursday.

Several photography students reported the spill occurred when a female art student bumped into a jar of the diluted acid in an etching lab. Later, the same student went into the room and found the leak.

She crossed the hall to a room of photo students to ask where to call in an emergency, said David Merrill, a senior photography major.

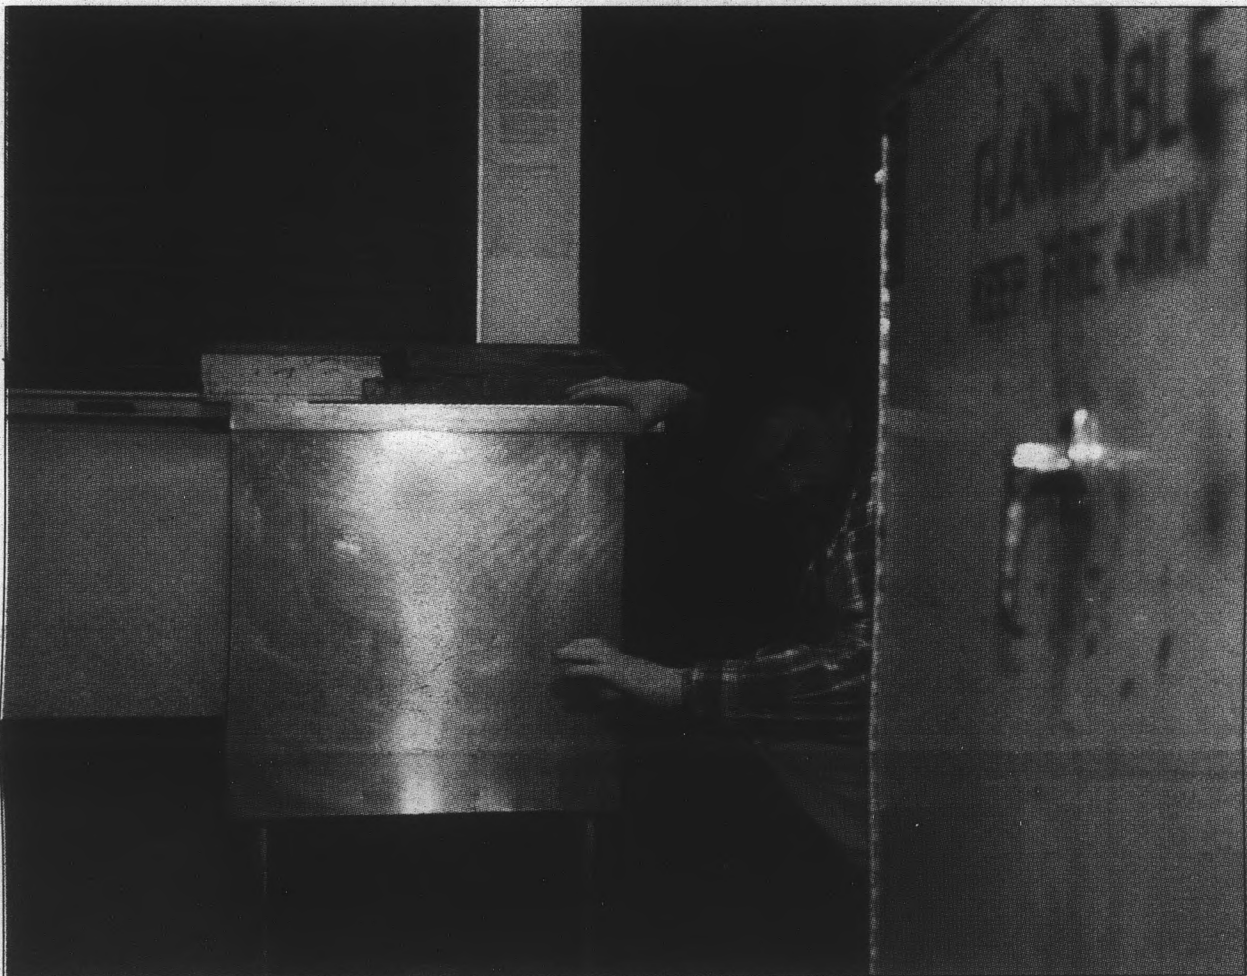

"After she came and said that, the whole building was evacuated in like five minutes," said Kim Adams, also a senior photography major.

The building remained evacuated for about one hour while the Tempe fire department assessed the situation. Television news helicopters hovered over the area as small crowds milled about.

As soon as firefighters turned the matter over to Bob Gomez, ASU director of risk management, students were allowed back into the building, but a sign was hung on the door of the room stating it was "closed until further notice."

The fourth-floor room contained bottles of diluted nitric acid because it is used in the etching process the lab was designed for.

"It (the spill) is no big deal," said Battalion Chief Tom Abbott.

ASU student loan default rate under national average

BY JENNIFER NETHERBY
 STATE PRESS

ASU is following national trends toward low student loan default rates, with about 94 percent of students repaying school loans.

The national average for default rates is at an all time low of 10.7 percent since the government began recording the rates in 1988, according to a recent report released by the U.S. Department of Education. At 6.1 percent, ASU's rate falls slightly below the national average of 6.8 percent for public institutions.

Financial Assistance Director Kate Dillon said ASU's default rate has wavered between 5.7 percent and 6.2 percent since 1988.

"It speaks well to the University's student population," Dillon said.

The national default rate average has reached as high as 22.4 percent in 1990 down to 10.7 percent in 1994.

Dillon said the default rate is calculated by dividing the number of students who default over a two-year period by the number of students who go into repayment in a one-year period.

The Education Department can bar institutions with a 40 percent default rate in one year from federal student aid programs. Institutions with a default rate above 25 percent for a three-year period can also be barred.

Dillon attributes the decline in default rates to more repayment options as well as greater information on student loans for borrowers.

Since 1988, students have been able to choose between a graduated payment plan, consolidation of loans, and deferment. Students are also required to complete entrance and exit loan interviews, which review rights and responsibilities of borrowers.

"Students are very well aware they have a loan," Dillon said.

She said the majority of defaults result from people who don't have the money to repay the loans, rather than not knowing where or when to pay.

Dillon also said the public is more educated about credit and borrowing than in the past.

ASASU Internet voting hits technical difficulties

BY KEVIN CULWELL
 STATE PRESS

Plans to allow students to vote on the Internet in the upcoming Associated Students of ASU election have hit a snag because of computing problems.

ASASU passed the bill two weeks ago, but didn't foresee the problems in developing a computer program that could implement the voting process on the Internet.

"We knew all along that the program was going to be iffy," said Darrel Huish, director of applications and consulting information technology. "We're most likely not going to be able to pull this project together with the slower web-development software that we're currently using."

Activities Vice President Kolby Granville introduced the bill early in his term.

"There's a possibility that it won't happen this semester," Granville said. "There's probably not enough time for the technicians to get it done before (ASASU) elections."

"I think in (Granville's) enthusiasm for the project, he didn't look at the whole picture," Huish said. "It's going to be very tough."

The fundamental problem with the program is that it requires a more advanced system than the University has.

"We don't even want to start on the project until everything is rock solid," Huish said. "It's much wiser to be conservative."

Technical problems aren't the only thing that's holding Internet voting back, said ASASU President Marc Baumgartner.

"The University and ASASU have different priorities," he said. "Right now this is a top priority for us."

Christine Wilkinson, vice president of Student Affairs, said she believes on-line voting is a great project, but other projects will have to come first.

"The priorities lie with what is thought to be best for the general student population," she said. "Projects like grades on-line and registration take a higher priority."

Granville said the program most likely will debut next year.

"(Internet voting) does have its flaws," Baumgartner said. "It'll create misrepresentation because you'll get a bunch of voters who are voting just to vote and because it's so easy. ASASU could be misrepresented because of it."

Baumgartner originally said he supported the idea of Internet voting.

TODAY

Campus clubs and organizations may submit written entries to the State Press in the basement of the Matthews Center. Requests will not be taken over the phone or via fax.

Deadline for requests is noon the day before publication and entries will not be accepted more than three working days before publication. Only one entry per organization per day is permitted.

Entries must contain the full name of the club or organization, a description of the event, date, time and the full address of the location. All requests are subject to editing for content, space and clarity. Incomplete or illegible entries will be discarded.

The Today Section is a daily calendar of events printed as a service to the ASU community. Requests are accepted on a first-come, first-served basis and are printed as space permits.

Modern technology may revive MLK trial

By WOODY BAIRD
ASSOCIATED PRESS

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — Modern technology might prove once and for all if James Earl Ray's rifle killed Martin Luther King Jr., a judge said Thursday in a decision that keeps alive Ray's quest for a new trial.

The decision by Judge Joe Brown must now be reviewed by a state appeals court before he can rule on whether to allow the tests on the rifle and the bullet taken from King's body.

Ray, who pleaded guilty to King's 1968 slaying, reversed himself almost immediately and has been requesting a trial ever since. He asked for the rifle tests in an attempt to take back his guilty plea and go to trial — a move supported in court by the widow of the slain civil rights leader.

"Even if no new light is shed on the facts concerning my husband's assassination, at least we and the nation can have the satisfaction of knowing that justice has run its course in this tragedy," Coretta Scott King told the judge.

Ray, who is serving a 99-year prison sentence, is 68 and suffering from serious liver disease, which his lawyers describe as terminal.

Mrs. King said her family has declined over the years to get involved in efforts to get a trial for Ray but his failing health requires that now.

"If Mr. Ray is denied a trial," she said, "our family and indeed the entire nation will also be denied the due process of law that is the birthright of every citizen."

Ray contends that his rifle, identified for almost 30 years as the murder weapon, was not the one that killed King.

To rule on Ray's request, Brown had to first decide if today's technology for such tests is better than it was in the late 1960s and 1970s when the rifle was last examined.

"All I'm trying to say is there appears to be scientific methodology that has a reasonable likelihood or is capable, let's put it that way, of resolving this issue," Brown said.

Brown approved Ray's request for new tests on the rifle in 1994 but was overturned by the appeals court. Because of that, any decisions he makes on Ray's petition must be looked at by the higher court. Brown did not know when the appeals court would review his decision.

Conspiracy theorists have argued for years that Ray, a bungling, petty criminal, could not have pulled off the assassination alone. And their theories, some of which include allegations of government wrongdoing, often note that authorities have never proven that Ray's gun was the murder weapon.

Ray contends the .30-06 Remington rifle found at the murder scene with his fingerprints on it was put there by murder conspirators trying to frame him.

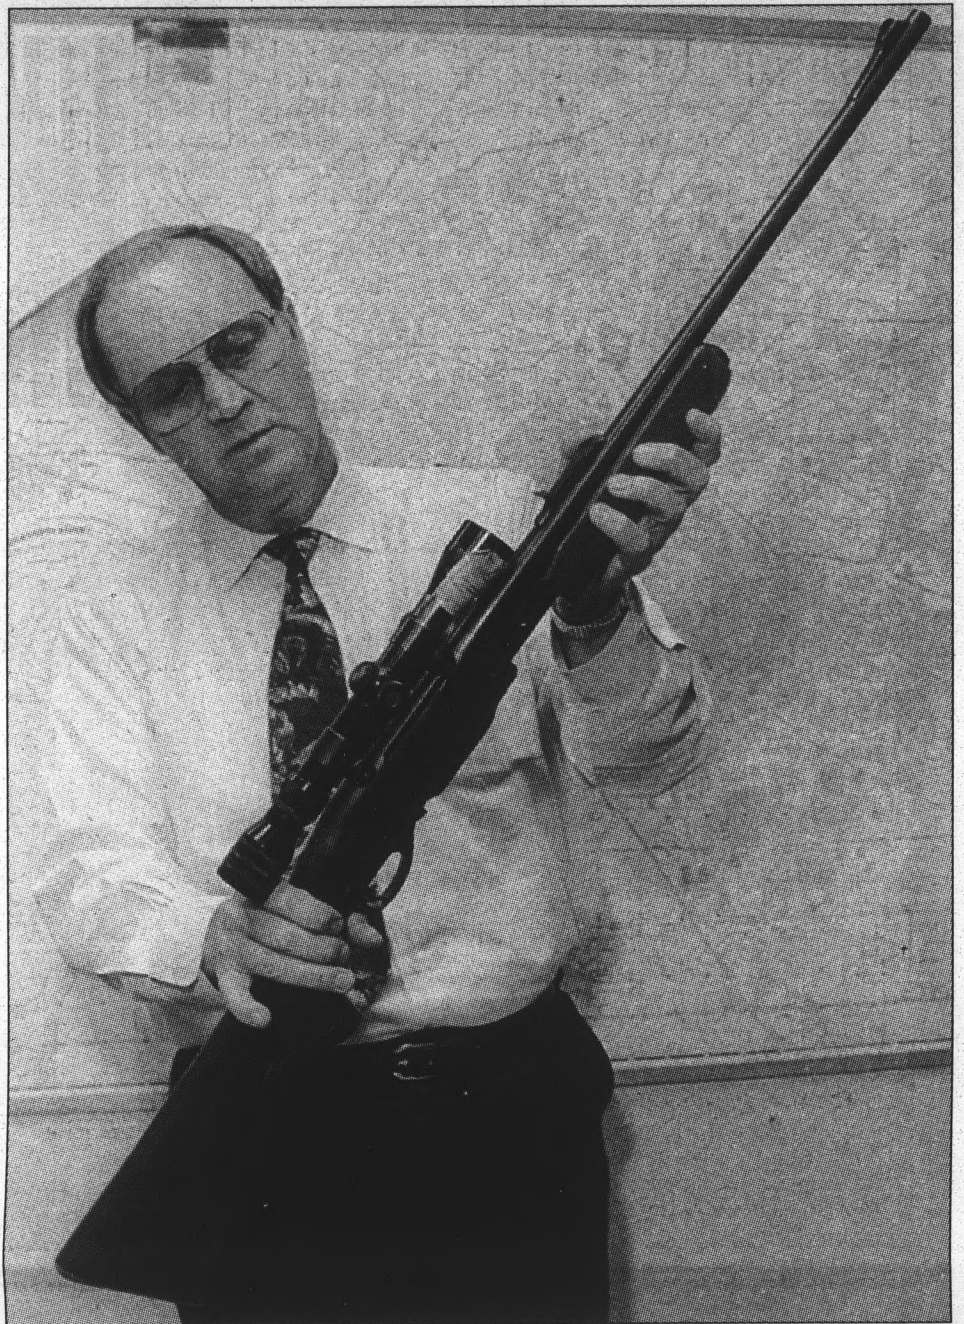

Ray said he bought the rifle in Alabama and brought it to Memphis on instructions from a shadowy gun runner he knew only as Raoul. Authorities have never established Raoul existed.

The FBI and the U.S. House Select Committee on Assassinations tested the rifle in the 1970s but could not establish beyond a scientific doubt that it was the murder weapon.

Their tests showed, however, that King was killed by the same kind of gun.

Robert Hathaway, a firearms specialist from Vernon, Conn., told Brown that a modern piece of equipment called a scanning electron microscope might be able to prove if Ray's rifle fired the fatal shot.

Two other specialists called by Ray's lawyer, William Pepper, gave similar testimony.

John L. Focht/Associated Press

The Remington 30.06 rifle thought to have killed Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., is shown by then Criminal Court property clerk Ben Holley in this 1992 photo. The rifle has remained in the court clerk's evidence room. James Earl Ray's lawyers are seeking permission to have the gun retested to try to prove it did not kill King.

Escaping terrorists, Air Force settles into Saudi desert

By CHARLES J. HANLEY
ASSOCIATED PRESS

PRINCE SULTAN AIR BASE, Saudi Arabia — The U.S. Air Force is hunkering down behind 64 miles of 8-foot fence, tons of barbed wire and a long stretch of scorpion-and-snake desert to escape the threat of terrorism in Saudi Arabia.

Eight months after 19 of their comrades were killed in the bombing of high-rise apartments in eastern Saudi Arabia, more than 4,000 Air Force men and women are settled into a gritty, dusty city of 700 dun-colored tents where security may be tighter than at any military base in the world.

Even the latrines get "security" handling. Sewage tank trucks from outside are not allowed to penetrate the base perimeter, so on-base tankers must empty the latrines and transfer their contents to civilian trucks miles away at the fence.

Incoming fuel and water are handled the same way because of the fear of truck bombs, tying up dozens of trucks and scores of Air Force security police who escort them.

"We don't do anything for convenience or efficiency," base commander Brig. Gen. Daniel M. Dick said.

In fact, despite the cable TV and the Burger King trailer, the base operation could hardly be more inconvenient.

Airmen are assigned for short, three-month tours of hardship duty, depriving Dick of anything but a tiny cadre of experienced "Prince Sultan hands." And then, about 10 percent of his personnel are dedicated full-time to security, a force multiplied by fake defense positions, dummy patrol vehicles and a platoon of bomb-sniffing dogs.

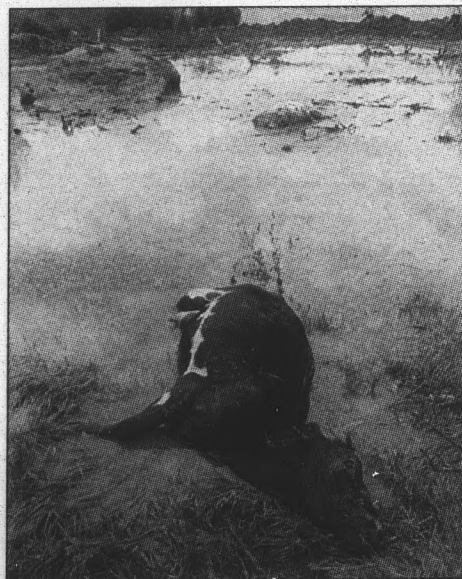

The cocoon is reassuring to many.

"I'm concerned, but more for my family than for myself. I see the security that's here, but they don't," said Staff Sgt. John McCarthy, 27, of Elmira, N.Y.

McCarthy, on his fourth Saudi tour, thinks about terrorism every day. He was injured in last June's blast at the Khobar Towers high rise.

"It was hard to explain to my 6-year-old boy why I was going back. All he knows is that 'Daddy is going to Saudi again,'" McCarthy said.

The June bombing, evidently bent on driving the U.S. military from Saudi Arabia, remains unsolved. Within two months, the Air Force was mounting a 45-day emergency move in which 78 aircraft and 25,000 tons of equipment were consolidated here from two air bases — at Dhahran, near Khobar, and at the Saudi Capital, Riyadh.

A dead cow lies in the water and mud near Tamburco, some 300 miles southeast of Lima, Wednesday. As many as 300 people are feared dead from a mudslide that buried two villages in the Peruvian Andes Tuesday morning.

Mudslide survivors not likely to be found

By ANITA SNOW
ASSOCIATED PRESS

LIMA, Peru — Rain slowed the grisly task of pulling cadavers from mud and rocks Thursday and hope dwindled of finding more survivors of an Andean mudslide that killed as many as 300 villagers.

Rescue workers in rubber boots braved downpours to continue the search, and there were fears large numbers of bodies could provoke epidemics. Government workers vaccinated villagers against tetanus and other diseases.

Victims' arms and legs could be seen sticking out of the sea of mud that covered entire villages.

On Tuesday, the side of a hill saturated by rain let loose and roared down onto two sleeping mountain villages in the district of Tamburco, southeast of the capital, Lima. People, homes, livestock and crops were swept away.

Miriam Monzon Carrion, a nurse, said many people were crushed beneath the weight of their homes. Only two houses remained standing in the village of Ccocha (pronounced HOH-cha), she said.

Many families, trapped on high ground surrounded by the impassible muck, were forced to spend the night outside, wet and cold.

"The families are desperate to find the bodies," Roman Catholic priest Tomas Garcia said in a radio interview from the disaster zone. The chances of finding any more survivors were slim.

Villagers in Tamburco prepared a collective funeral Mass on Thursday for the 41 victims whose bodies have been recovered thus far by rescue workers using picks, shovels, and crowbars.

President Alberto Fujimori, inspecting the disaster site Wednesday, said 250 to 300 people were buried in the mud.

Survivors awaited the arrival of much-needed food and medicine. A Chilean air force plane arrived in Peru Thursday with a shipment of tents, clothing, cots, bedding, disposable diapers and drinking water.

During his visit to the disaster zone, Fujimori placed a boy's slack body in a coffin. The president, known for his steely demeanor, was clearly moved by the tragedy.

"I have just seen 3-year-old children with their bodies limp," he said. "Two villages have almost completely vanished."

About 250 people were evacuated because of the threat of more mudslides and up to 600 may be moved to safer areas, Health Minister Marino Costa Bauer said.

Tamburco also was the scene of a mudslide Sunday that killed five people and left 40 families homeless.

Heavy rain in the highlands from December through March frequently cause flooding and landslides.

STATE PRESS Boos & Bravos

BOO — To the English Department for failing to realize that increasing the number of classes offered in the Electronic Classroom Program also calls for increase in equipment. All totaled, 42 classes have logged on to the system — up from 11 a year ago. If ASU officials talk about the institution in terms technological superiority, they better start putting their money where their mouths are.

BOO — To the Arizona Department of Education and the FBI for failing to discover the prior arrest of a former ASU student and current Gilbert high school teacher accused of having sex with a 15-year-old boy. Even though Kenneth Graham pleaded guilty to a lesser charge of disorderly conduct when he was originally charged with public sexual indecency, a bit more investigating could have been conducted. We can only hope that some department cleans up their act.

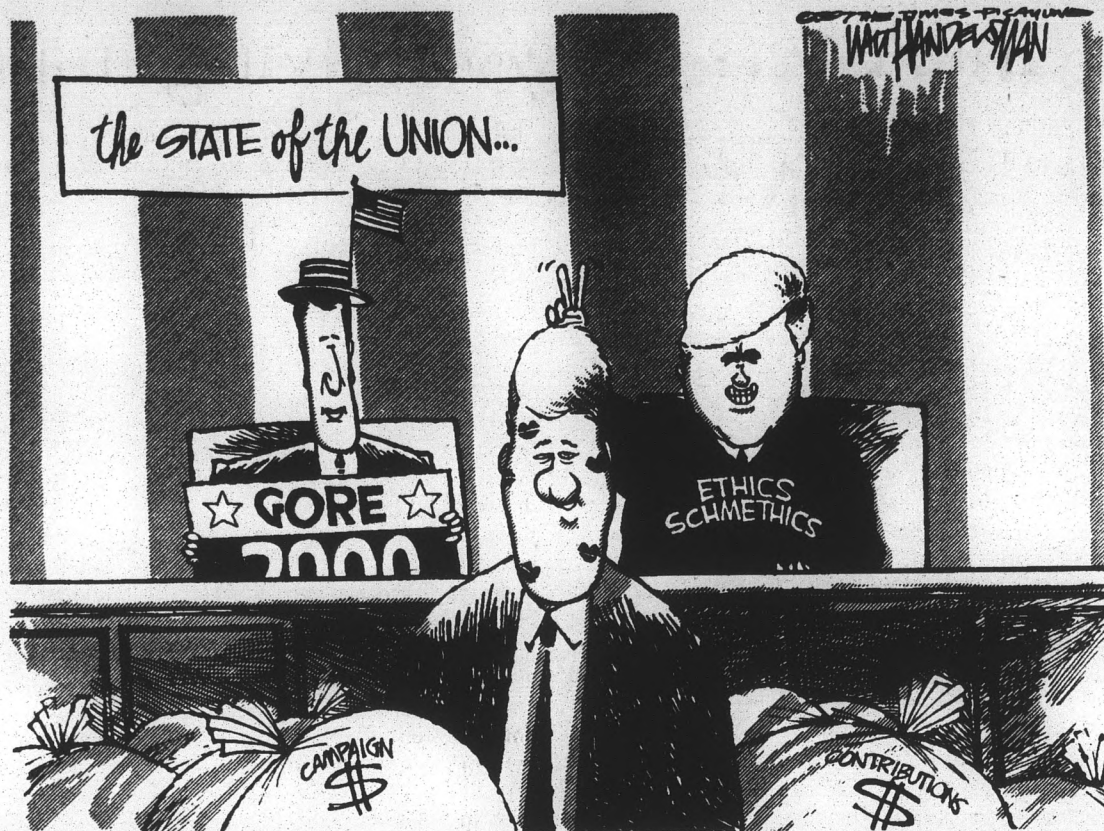

BRAVO — To the Greek system for continuing their antics and, of course, their bad reputation by throwing binge-drinking parties for undergrads. Well, it may not be that serious, but there are a few hefty problems in the Greek Alcohol Risk Reduction Panel that need major overhauls.

BOO — To the Federal Aviation Administration and the City of Tempe for planning to drain the Wetlands Wildlife Habitat just east of Sky Harbor Airport. Apparently, FAA regulations mandate that bird habitats be located at least 10,000 feet from the end of a runway. Tempe's riparian area is about 2,000 feet away. Soon we won't have any of those darn birds fouling up our air.

BOO — To the resurrection of the lost and blinded soul of none other than mall preacher Brother Jed Smock and company. After months of peaceful sounds of wind whistling through trees, we have been inundated with the thundering voice of a blubbery buffoon. It is unfortunate that the hundred or so people that taunt Smock on Hayden Lawn don't have better things to do (and vice versa).

BRAVO — To the Forget U.S. News Coalition for lambasting the U.S. News and World Report annual college rating guide. Members of FUNC argue that overall ratings are simply not an accurate measurement of what a particular school has to offer potential students. Future students should take the ratings with a grain of salt and ultimately make their decision on colleges from personal experience and information provided by the school.

BOO — To the Downtown Tempe Community for erecting a whole bunch of red and blue metered-parking signs around town. UofA color arguments aside — they're just damn ugly. And the fact that there are signs every nine yards — one for each parking space — just makes it that much more repulsive. First it was the dog ban on Mill Avenue and now this.

Hockey makes for fun night of rivalry

It's time to take it personally — the rivalry between ASU and UofA, that is. As we all know there is bitter, intense rivalry between the two schools. When our sports teams compete, the seats sell out and fan support for both teams is at its high.

RACHEL GORDON
Columnist

Whether it is your first time or you are a life-long hockey fan, be sure to check out the games in Tucson this weekend. It's a cheap evening full of entertainment, maybe more than you would get at an action movie, even. The games are definitely more interactive than going to the movies. It's a great evening with friends or for a date; come on men and women sporting hockey jerseys, many of you can back me up on this one, I know it.

I was amazed when I attended an ice hockey game between the two schools just before the semester break. I couldn't believe how the UofA fans outnumbered the ASU fans. There is traditionally a poor showing of Sun Devils at the Tucson games and the Wildcats feed on that.

My friend and I were in extremely hostile territory, the only ASU fans in our entire section. Looking around the arena, I realized that there were very few ASU supporters there. If you think for a moment that the UofA fans missed this fact, you are sorely mistaken. They admitted to thriving on the consistent support given by their fans. The Ice Cat fans wave maroon and gold pennants with "ASU SUCKS" written on them. They chant, tease and torment the few Ice Devil fans who dare enter the Tucson Convention Center, located in the heart of Ice Cat Country.

The UofA fans proudly display their Ice Cat team jerseys, sweatshirts and T-shirts, mocking anyone who dares to wear Sun Devil gear. I am not speaking of just a few overzealous college students, but of an entire arena. I was amazed by the little boy, no older than my own second grade cousin, who came up to me and shouted "ASU sucks!" This child could have been no more than 7 years old and he definitely had hockey fever.

This extreme attitude shows on the ice as well as the stands. The game was absolutely the most fun hockey game I have ever seen. It was hockey how hockey is meant to be played.

This game is by far the most entertaining match-up of the season. If you have never seen a college hockey game, this one is a must. Long-time hockey supporters as well as first time spectators will certainly get into the feeling of it. Although I do have Canadian blood flowing through my veins, it is not required to enjoy this sporting event.

The fights on ice are encouraged by everyone in the stands; they have even been known to pour over and erupt off the ice. There are players ejected from the game for fighting, I've even seen one of our guys jump onto the bench where the remaining Ice Cats were waiting to go on ice; he started fighting the team. It was great!

The friend I attended the game with is a native Valley resident. Generally very quiet, reserved, even shy, she was fighting with the guys sitting in our section, yelling and screaming with the best of them.

So make some time on Friday or Saturday evening, if for nothing more than the joy of seeing absolute surprise on the faces of the UofA fans who thrive on the fact that ASU fans do not show up for the games. Together we can put them in their place — we have at other sporting events this season. Game time is 7:30 p.m.

The last times the two met, ASU won at home, but the last Tucson game was won by UofA. Let's make sure we return with a vengeance. These are the final two games before the national finals next month.

So rest up your voices, make some obnoxious posters to respond to theirs — typically "ASU sucks pucks" and "Goalie, you suck;" wear the maroon and gold, and we can jointly take Tucson by storm. The Ice Cats will be baffled by what hit them; here, we call that Sun Devil — or I should say Ice Devil — pride.

It will most certainly be a weekend to remember, full of action, both on and off the ice. Don't miss out on this one. We have to trash our reputation as fans who do not support our hockey team. See you in Tucson.

TV hucksters got you raving mad? Keep it to yourself

When we hear about hate crimes, they usually involve attacks on places of worship, burning crosses on lawns, threats painted on minority-owned homes or garages and that sort of thing.

But is it possible to commit a hate crime against a TV commercial? Apparently so, much to the regret of a Chicago mope named Frank.

Frank's story begins late one night when he got home from his night job driving a cab. He has a day job, too, but he moonlights to make ends meet.

Everyone else was sleeping, and he was tired and tense, so he watched TV and had a few drinks to wind down.

As any insomniac knows, the commercials on late-night TV differ from those in prime time. So Frank found himself listening to a lawyer telling of the benefits of filing for bankruptcy.

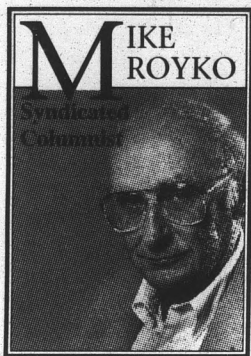

Frank, 52, found himself getting angry because he and his wife had been through bankruptcy and thought it was a devastating experience.

The TV lawyer gave his phone number for those who wanted to call and retain his services.

And Frank did something really stupid. He dialed the number, was connected to an answering machine and drunkenly ranted about why he thinks the lawyer's commercial message stinks.

He also gave his name, which serious hate-crime perpetrators seldom do.

I'm not going to repeat precisely what Frank said because if I did, it would cause even the slightest sympathy for him to evaporate. Take my word that it was disgusting, obscene, abusive, anti-Semitic and stupid.

MIKE ROYKO
Syndicated Columnist

Had he said these things to someone's face, chances are he would have been knocked flat on his back. But there's something about a telephone or a computer modem that brings out the worst woolly caterpillars in a person's brain.

When he finished the barrage of insults, he gave his phone number in case Melvin Kaplan, the lawyer, wanted to call him back.

Then he hung up and flopped into bed for a few hours sleep before getting on with life's pains.

A few days later, the cops came to his Northwest Side house, but Frank wasn't home. Later, he got a call from a cop asking him to stop by the Jefferson Park station to clear up some "paperwork."

It sounded harmless enough, so Frank went. He was arrested, questioned about the call — which he admitted making — and cuffed, spending the night in jail before being bonded out.

He was charged with a felony, committing a hate crime.

When his court date came, Frank still didn't think it was a big deal because he hadn't threatened the lawyer, only insulted him. So he went to court believing it was a preliminary hearing and he would be granted a continuance to get a lawyer.

A mistake. According to Frank, everyone — the judge, the prosecutor and a court-appointed lawyer — seemed in a rush to get the case done. So, Frank says, his court-appointed lawyer urged him to accept a deal and plead guilty to a felony, which he did.

The deal, it turns out, wasn't much of a deal, but Frank says he didn't know it. He wasn't jailed, but he was ordered to perform 200 hours of community service. And, of course, the guilty plea made him a convicted felon.

All that for a dumb, alcohol-laced, insulting phone message.

But the hate-crime law was written to please every conceivable minority. It can even be applied to a boozy phone call from someone who didn't like a TV commercial.

Having read a transcript of Frank's phone remarks, it occurs to me that I've missed a chance to have thousands of people charged with hate crimes for offensive calls they've made to me, my assistant or my voice-mail machine.

And Frank's legal troubles aren't over. The worst may be down the road. The Illinois hate-crime law says that hate victims can file civil suits. The law says: "The court may award actual damages, including damages for emotional distress or punitive damages. A judgment may include attorneys' fees and costs."

Not long ago, there was another knock on Frank's door. This time it was a process server from the sheriff's office. He gave Frank a legal document and a piece of friendly advice: "You'd better protect your house."

Frank had been sued by the lawyer. Nothing complicated. The suit says that Frank "left an anti-Semitic, harassing telephone message ... that said actions constituted a hate crime ... and a civil cause of action exists under subsection [c] thereof."

It asks for damages for Kaplan's emotional distress, punitive damages and attorney's fees.

I've done some superficial research, and this could be the first hate crime in Illinois directed at a TV commercial.

Also, it seems harsh to brand a man a felon for remarks he made to an office voice-mail machine. And, after he pleads guilty, to punish him further with a civil lawsuit.

I tried to reach Kaplan to ask how his emotional distress was going, but his office said he is out of town and wouldn't return calls.

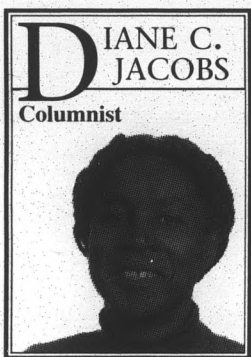

Think about it: a felonious hate crime for insulting a lawyer in a late-night TV commercial.

What's next in our hypersensitive society? Hate crimes for yelling at a Bears quarterback or a Cubs pitcher?

Transit system's unreliability continues to be joke in Valley

To be honest, I was forewarned. When I was deciding on a university to do my doctoral studies, I did see somewhere in the fine print that public transportation in the Phoenix area is poor, that use of a bicycle or a car was encouraged. But after narrowing my choice down to three universities, I was particularly attracted to the ASU program, as well as to the opportunity to leave the snow, ice and sleet of wintertime behind. Besides, I thought, how bad could the transit system be in a city the size of Phoenix and its surroundings? Sometimes we block and after a few stops, the driver asks the passengers if anyone knows where Elliot Street is: "This is my first day on the job, and I know I'm supposed to turn there."

You know you have a rinky-dink transit system when the driver runs out of transfers, pulls over to the side of the road and writes you a handwritten note which sends the second driver into hysterics.

You know you have a rinky-dink transit system when your driver discreetly tells the dispatcher, "You might want to send a replacement bus." The dispatcher insists on details, asking whether it's safe for the driver to continue on the run — all this conducted with transfixed passengers listening! The driver details a shopping list of problems, including faulty brakes, until concluding that he thinks he could make it a little further! There is a sudden scramble to get off the bus.

When I talk to my friends at home about this, they refuse to believe it, insisting I'm getting into fiction. But all of the above actually happened. And I still can't believe a town with a university the size of ASU has such a disgraceful public transportation system.

It's not that we can't do better. We have to have the will to do better. To paraphrase an expression, we get the transit system we deserve. Tempe constituents voted with their feet in November, in favor of a slight tax increase to improve the bus system and shortly afterwards, there was slight improvement in the service. Let's hope that it doesn't stop there, that the mantle is picked up by the entire metropolitan Phoenix area and we have a transit system to be proud of, preferably before I'm out of here.

My first indication came at a doctoral orientation session when I realized that I had a compulsory evening class which ended a half-hour after my bus stopped running. This was last August when there was no weekend bus service. Thankfully, classmates "adopted" me and took turns driving me home. Since then, of course, most of the lines I use run until 10 p.m.

and on the weekend. But the transit system still leaves a lot to be desired.

You know that you have a rinky-dink transit system when the bus schedule is a guideline only, not something to set your watch to.

You know you have a rinky-dink transit system when you get on the 81 South bus,

More to Greek life than partying

If you insist on once again attacking the Greek system and our lack of "control," I would appreciate it if you would get your facts straight (Feb. 18, page 1).

GARRP which stands for the Greek Alcohol Risk Reduction Panel, not program, is made up of representatives from all of the Interfraternity Councils and National Pan Hellenic Sororities. Its purpose is to educate the Greek system on ASU alcohol policies and to help chapters uphold effective risk management programs.

The panel was founded in 1986 — not last year, as printed in the article. If you had done any research at all you would have found that ASU won the National Greek Risk Management award last spring, beating out 900 other schools west of the Mississippi. Hey, don't bother contacting the GARRP advisers, co-chairs or house representatives who sit in meetings every week discussing issues on how we can make our Greek system better. I'm sure that Showtime Services Inc. and Arizona Elite Security Services have much better ideas of what is happening within our system.

And why doesn't the State Press ever report all the positive things that the Greek system is doing? On Monday evening, Delta Gamma sorority co-sponsored an outstanding program, "Friendship in the Age of Aids," which had an overwhelming turn-out of over 700 people. By the end of this semester, thorough philanthropic events, fraternities and sororities will donate thousands of dollars to national and local charities.

But for some reason we cannot get our school newspaper to support us. If you are so desperate for a front page article on underage drinking, take a field trip to Manzanita.

Rail service being considered

Your article on the front page of the State Press, Feb. 12, concerning commuter train service was interesting, but it contained several errors. It has not been 15 years, but less than one year since the residents of Tempe "heard the roar of passenger trains." Tempe was deleted from the Amtrak system in 1996.

During the great floods of the Salt River, the Mill Avenue bridge was not "wiped out," but rather withstood both the force of the rushing waters and a huge increase in vehicular traffic. The State of Arizona funded a temporary commuter rail service from the burden on the Mill Avenue bridge.

As a member of the Tempe

Transportation Commission, I wish to assure you of the commission's interest in commuter rail service. At the present time, a major investment study is being undertaken to determine the costs associated with the option of passenger rail service between downtown Phoenix through the airport to the eastern edge of Tempe.

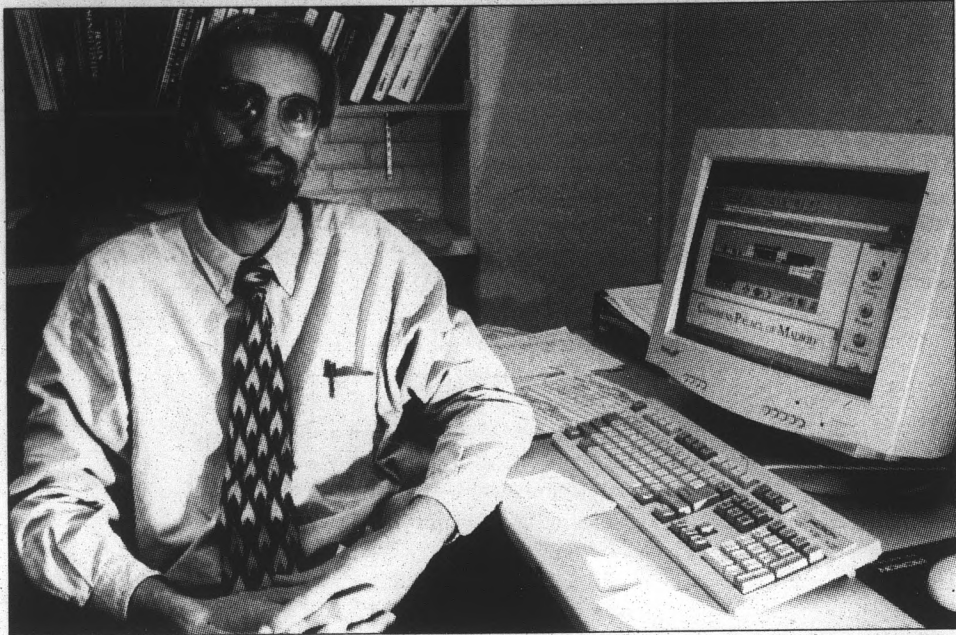

Your editorial on page four about streetcars is timely. As the residents of our metropolitan region realize the benefits of moving not vehicles, but people, I feel certain that enthusiasm for rail passenger service will grow.

Virtual reality program donated to educate talented ASU kids

Pat Shannahan/State Press

Dr. Barry Grant, the director for the Center for Academic Precocity, said that VRT, a virtual reality design program, will be used to teach students how to design high-tech applications on the Internet.

BY BEN LEATHERMAN
STATE PRESS

Some of ASU's youngest students will be playing with high-tech toys since the Center for Academic Precocity received copies of a cutting-edge computer program this week.

Two copies of VRT, a virtual reality design application, were given to the center by Superscape, a California software firm, for use by academically talented and creative students at the center. A pair of graduate students also received two days' training to learn about the program.

VRT retails for $3,995 and allows users to create a "virtual world" within a graphical environment in real time and give it whatever appearance or interaction desired.

Barry Grant, director of CAP, said the PC-based VRT will be used in conjunction with several classes that teach students how to design high-tech applications on the Internet, such as virtual-reality or 3-D web pages.

The center offers accelerated instruction in a variety of subjects to academically talented children. The kids spend time at ASU after school and on weekends in the head-start program, which costs more than $400 per class.

Youngsters are not the only ones who will use the technology, however. Grant said it will be available to graduate students enrolled in certain courses in the College of Education.

Other students may get to use it sometime in the future, but he said "it is too soon to decide that."

"Not only is this good for our students, it would draw grad students in who'll want to work with it," he said. "It'll help us make really cool Web pages and it's possibly the beginning of our on-line courses...A virtual school."

Glenn Smith, a doctoral student in education, said he saw a demonstration of VRT at an open house last year and thought it would be useful in the computer-design courses he teaches at CAP.

He contacted Superscape and expressed his interest in the program. The company offered not only copies of the software, but a three-day training session for himself and George Smith, who teaches a graduate-level imaging class in the education department. CAP paid for the travel expenses involved in getting them to San Jose.

"It was an absolutely intensive 12 hours of hands-on training," said George Smith, who said he plans to use it in his classes.

Glenn Smith said VRT is more advanced than many other virtual reality programs available and has other uses, like game design. He said he also might analyze cognitive response to the program and use the results in his research on spatial relationships.

Grant said VRT is being used in Europe and he believed CAP is one of the first groups in the U.S. to utilize the program. Superscape will be monitoring their progress during the next year and watching how the kids do.

"If we create really innovative things, then we will get more copies of the program," Grant said.

POLICE REPORT

ASU police reported the following incidents Thursday:

- A female employee reported that she has been receiving harassing e-mail messages at the computer lab in Irish Hall.
- A male student reported that someone criminally damaged his vehicle while it was parked in Structure 4.
- A male employee reported that someone entered his vehicle and removed various items while it was parked at the Tempe Center.
- A female student reported that someone removed her wallet and its contents from the Student Services Building.
- A female student reported that someone removed her bicycle from the Art Building, where it was locked up.
- A male non-affiliate, was arrested, cited and released at 401 E. Apache Blvd. for vehicle burglary, criminal damage and an outstanding warrant.

Tempe police reported the following incidents Thursday:

- A 20-year-old male was arrested on charges of criminal trespass and possession of a vapor releasing substance. Police said the man, was looking into a person's bedroom window at 400 W. Baseline Road.
- A 51-year-old man was arrested on charges of shoplifting after he stuck two bottles of liquor down his pants and passed a cash register without paying.
- A 22-year-old man was arrested on charges of criminal speed, giving false information to a police officer and possession of stolen property. Police said when they pulled the man over for driving 67 mph in a 45 mph zone he claimed he and was speeding because his girlfriend was having a baby. However, police discovered that the suspect's driver's license was false and was issued by the state of New Jersey. The man said he found the driver's license about a year ago and was just holding it.

MITEN PÄÄSEN...NOKIA?

That's Finnish for "How do I get to...NOKIA?" But you don't have to go to Finland, where our company is based, to enjoy great career opportunities. Our impressive R&D center in beautiful San Diego, California has helped establish our leadership in next generation cellular technology in areas ranging from digital communications systems and equipment used in fixed and radio telephone networks, to wireless personal communication (PCS) products. And our location is just as attractive as our opportunities. With a flourishing, high tech community, an average year-round temperature of 70 degrees, and a casual lifestyle that centers around every outdoor activity imaginable, "How do I get to San Diego?" is the question asked second most frequently.

Ask it yourself when you see us at the Westech Career Expo (Booth #322) on Wed., 2/26 and Thu., 2/27, Phoenix Civic Plaza, 3rd and Jefferson, 11am - 2pm and 4pm - 8pm. We'll be recruiting for the following entry-level positions:

DSP ENGINEER

You should have an MSEE or equivalent degree with strong academic experience in real time design of digital speech signal processing on a fixed point DSP platform. Positions available within speech processing, algorithm, and software. Code: 417-97

FIELD TEST ENGINEER

You should have an MSEE and strong academic experience in C language software and circuit troubleshooting; familiarity with latest communications and field test equipment, Unix, PCs, GPIB and HPVEE. Knowledge of communications radio testing preferred. Code: 412-97

We may also have entry-level positions available in the areas of RF, antenna research, software and hardware engineering.

If you're unable to see us at Westech, please submit your resume, referencing code of position for which you're qualified, to: NOKIA Mobile Phones R&D, Dept. CONNECTING PEOPLE

Visiting preachers draw a rowdy crowd of ASU students

BY ROWE EDGELL
STATE PRESS

Jeers from the crowd of 50 people were directed toward a humbly dressed woman on Hayden Lawn. Two small daughters dangled at her feet, three more hung in the background resting in the shade with their father, Brother Jed.

The woman is Sister Cindy and her family of preachers have been visiting the ASU campus each year for over two decades, delivering the "gospel of God upon the heathen," and warning of the impending danger of hell college students face.

But Jed and Cindy were not always "free of sin."

"I was once a disco queen," Sister Cindy said. She said she was influenced by this "demonic" music until she met her husband in 1978. They dated for four-and-a-half years before marrying.

Brother Jed's special topic of interest is fraternities, which his wife said are full of sinners.

"Let me tell you a story," he said to a group of students. "I was once in a fraternity."

The crowd was in an uproar. There were shouts of "ooohhhh" and "you bad boy."

Brother Jed, whose real name is George Smock, spoke of his days in the Delta Epsilon Fraternity at Indiana State University and of a fraternity house where "the dark room" did not have anything to do with photography.

"Sinners, fornicators and hell-bound" boys is how Jed addresses the ASU crowd.

"They are all damned," he said of them.

Now, the couple tours the country from Florida to California preaching at college campuses. They said they have visited 700 colleges and universities in every state but Alaska.

"We have been doing this for almost 25 years," said Sister Cindy.

Their goal is to be at college campuses every day, weather permitting.

"We are here to warn the wicked to flee from the wrath to come, into the arms of Jesus," Jed said.

The members of the crowd were active participants in the event. They yelled comments, asked questions and demanded answers and justification to what they were being told.

"Didn't I see you on Jerry Springer," yelled one student, referring to the day-time talk show host.

Sister Cindy ignored him and continued to read from John 13.

"You people who do not believe in Jesus are condemned," she said. "I have a duty to warn the wicked."

A young woman from the crowd raised her hand. "The Bible says we have no right to judge others, what gives you the right?" she asked.

Sister Cindy didn't answer. Instead, she responded to another question shouted from across the lawn. Within minutes she was pounded with shouts, comments and even more questions. She became flustered.

She yelled to her husband, "Are we ready to go yet?"

Jed replied, "In a few more minutes."

"I'll be leaving you soon so you can all go to hell," she told the crowd.

"I already live in hell; I live in Manzanita," yelled one student, in reference to the campus dorm.

"Students think we are too harsh and too judgmental," Sister Cindy said. "Typically, I talk about sin and students don't like to hear about it. We make them think for themselves and then the choice is theirs. We don't expect them to fall on their knees, maybe just read the Bible."

ASASU hopefuls to announce candidacy at symposium

BY KEVIN CULWELL
STATE PRESS

Let the race begin.

Candidates in the April 1 Associated Students of ASU elections will make their candidacy known today at a mandatory symposium.

The meeting will be held at 5 p.m. in the Programming Lounge, located on the lower level of the Memorial Union.

Those candidates who can't attend will have to watch the symposium on video tape.

"I'm looking forward to the elections this year," said ASASU President Marc Baumgartner. "I've heard that a lot of people are planning on running this year.

"I would like to think it's because people have seen what good ASASU can do, as opposed to last year when a lot of people ran because of all the negative things that happened," he said.

Baumgartner is referring to last year's ASASU President Chris Weber, who was arrested twice, for indecent behavior at Palo Verde West dormitory and a fraternity bar brawl. Weber was recalled in a special election.

Eleven people ran for the presidency alone last year.

The symposium is the first of a two-part session, and will deal mainly with policies, procedures and campaign guidelines.

Candidates will also be given a petition form with which to collect signatures. To become "official" candidates, a minimum of 750 signatures must be gathered in two weeks.

The second session will consist of the current executive members of ASASU giving a one-hour forum on each of their individual positions to the candidates.

"Many times students will run for a position without knowing what they're running for," Baumgartner said. "The forums will tell the candidates the ins and outs of every position."

Campaigning begins March 24 and runs until election day.

Move for consolidating, unifying school districts advances in Senate

By PAUL DAVENPORT
ASSOCIATED PRESS

PHOENIX—A push to dramatically reduce the number of school districts in Arizona drew bipartisan support as the state Senate Education Committee approved two measures today.

The committee voted 6-to-1 for two measures (SB1300, SCR1013), which would reduce the current number of districts to 90 from 226. They also would require that all districts include kindergarten through 12th grade.

The sponsor, Sen. Tom Patterson, R-Phoenix, said consolidating districts would save on administrative costs as well as equalize tax bases to reduce inequities among districts.

The proposals were amended by the committee to increase the number of desired districts to 90 from 60 and to require that all districts be unified. Arizona now has 88 unified districts, 116 elementary districts and 18 high school districts.

The measures call for asking the state's voters to approve creating a commission to draft a consolidation plan. That plan would be submitted to the Legislature but would become law automatically if lawmakers do not act on it.

The proposals now are ready for consideration by the full Senate but senators agreed to negotiate some provisions for possible amendment before that.

Passengers save plane with coffee, urine

OGDEN, Utah (AP) — Three men used coffee, soda and their own urine to land their single-engine plane after its hydraulic fluid leaked out.

Pilot John Strahan and two golfing friends were bound for Mesquite, Nev., for a golf tournament on Feb. 6 when, a half-hour out of Ogden, he noticed the plane had lost its hydraulic fluid. He turned back toward the airport.

Two fire trucks and an ambulance waited as Strahan, unable to lower his front landing gear or to retract the back gear, circled the airport, trying to use up fuel. Eventually, he would have had to land the plane on its belly.

A mechanic in the control tower, though, told the men to find the hydraulic fluid reservoir and dump in any liquid they could find.

"He said 'coffee, Coke, blood, pee, whatever,'" fire Capt. Dan Harmon recalled.

Strahan said he put coffee and soda in. When that failed to do the trick, the men passed around a cup. Sure enough, the landing gear went into place.

After the plane landed, the men leaped out and kissed the ground.

Teachers' pay kept up with inflation in 1996

WASHINGTON (AP) — Teachers earned an average salary of $37,685 in 1995-1996, keeping slightly ahead of overall inflation, a national teachers' union said Thursday.

The salary was 3 percent higher than in 1994-1995, while inflation was 2.7 percent, the National Education Association said. Despite the average increase, salaries fell in North Carolina by 1.2 percent and in Hawaii by 7 percent.

Salaries fell in Hawaii because of an early retirement program that reduced the number of older, more highly paid teachers. The report did not explain the drop in North Carolina salaries.

Salaries rose 5.1 percent over the decade, after accounting for inflation, the report said. However, pay rose faster than inflation in 34 states over that period but fell in 16 states and the District of Columbia when adjusted for inflation.

New Mexico officials acting to move prisoners to Arizona

By BARRY MASSEY
ASSOCIATED PRESS

SANTA FE, N.M. — Gov. Gary Johnson suspended a federal decree governing New Mexico prison conditions and prepared Thursday to move several hundred inmates to Arizona after penitentiary officials said they uncovered an escape tunnel and plans for a possible riot.

"Inside the prison, when the gangs start getting together, of course they have a common goal. In this case I believe it was to create an incident in order for other people to escape," said Tim LeMaster, warden of the Penitentiary of New Mexico.

At a news conference, LeMaster and other prison officials announced the discovery of a tunnel and what they described as a potentially dangerous situation because of overcrowding at the prison south of Santa Fe. The penitentiary was the site of a riot in 1980 in which more than 30 inmates were killed.

Alarmed by a rise in inmate violence and the discovery of the tunnel, state officials notified U.S. District Judge John Conway on Wednesday that they were temporarily suspending a court-supervised consent decree, which governs living conditions in New Mexico prisons.

The action will allow the state to move 256 prisoners to the Central Arizona Correctional Facility in Florence, Ariz.

The filing with Conway said transfers would begin within the next five days, and prisoners would remain in Arizona for up to a year.

Administration officials, who have been warning about dangerous prison crowding for months, also asked the state Board of Finance for emergency money to pay for moving and housing the inmates in Arizona.

The governor had asked the Legislature last month to provide money to move inmates to out-of-state prisons to help relieve overcrowding and for a financing plan to build two prisons in New Mexico.

The 1997 Legislature still hasn't approved any prison spending measures.

LeMaster, in an affidavit filed in federal court, said inmates told him about plans for a prison gang riot to take place this week.

Officials responded by locking down the penitentiary early Wednesday. Inmates remained in their cells with privileges suspended Thursday.

John Shanks, director of adult prisons for the Corrections Department, told reporters that authorities found a tunnel — 30 to 35 feet long, 3 feet high and 3 feet wide — in the basement of the main prison near a laundry.

Authorities said state police were investigating. They did not know who built the tunnel.

Women's basketball squad finally wins again, 88-74

BY PERCY EDNALINO JR.
STATE PRESS

For once, ASU women's basketball coach Charli Turner Thorne was glad to talk to reporters after a game.

She had every reason to celebrate as the Sun Devils (8-15, 2-11 Pac-10) snapped an eight-game losing streak with an 88-74 win against Oregon State (11-12, 5-9) Thursday night at the University Activity Center.

The win was ASU's first over the Beavers since 1993. The Sun Devils' last conference win was a 66-65 Jan. 16 victory over UCLA.

"I have been waiting," Turner Thorne said. "It's going to all come together one night. Obviously we had games in the preseason where it all came together offensively and defensively."

ASU ended the game with a 55.2 shooting percentage. Oregon State had not allowed an opponent to shoot over 50 percent this season.

Forward Molly Tuter said shooting well, especially in the second half, helped ASU maintain its lead.

"Our focus was there a lot more than it has been in the past," Tuter said. "The first five minutes (of the second half) were a really key point in the game. Everybody picked it up. We knew that the second half was our weak point, and we needed to step up if we wanted to win."

But for a moment, it seemed as if the Sun Devils were going to revert back to their old ways. At 68-49, Oregon State closed the Sun Devils' lead to 18 points with the help of center Kris Walsh. Walsh led Oregon State to a 9-0 run. ASU then broke away and kept the Beavers at bay.

Turner Thorne also said that the team really didn't do anything extraordinary to earn the win.

"We didn't do anything superhuman," Turner Thorne said. "We just played defense a little bit more consistently and we took our time and created a little bit more transition offense, which we needed. We really executed well in the half-court."

Tuter finished the night with 16 points, three steals and three rebounds. Point guard Kalene Carl chipped in 13 points and five assists.

The Beavers were led by an 22-point, five rebound effort from forward Monica Watts.

Center Kris Walsh added 21 points.

ASU scored 54 points in the half, the most points the Sun Devils have ever scored in a single half and also shot a remarkable 62.5 percent from the field in the first half.

Oregon State Center Tina Lelas fell into foul trouble early in the game by picking up four fouls in the first half. Lelas also was called for a technical foul with 1:39 remaining in the first half.

Tuter said Lelas' early departure helped the Sun Devils keep their momentum.

Note
The ASU men's basketball team lost Thursday night to Oregon State 71-67 in Beaverton, Ore., despite the return of forward Quincy Brewer. The senior had been out since Dec. 20 with a dislocated thumb. He scored 18 points along with a team-high six assists.

Positive Sun Devil softball team hosts nine-team tourney

BY JOSH DEFAMIO
STATE PRESS

Last weekend's Coca Cola Classic Tournament gave the No. 25 ASU softball team a chance to find out what they were made of.

This weekend, they see if they made any key discoveries when they host the three-day ASU Classic beginning Friday.

The general consensus among the team is that they found out a lot about themselves during last week's tournament.

"I'm glad the new people did well," senior All-American Lisa Dacquisto said. "Raja (Woods) did extraordinary, especially at second batter as well as I could do it, she did a great job of moving me over, and if I didn't get on, she moved me over extremely well. I think all the new comers are doing extremely well."

Despite the success, not everything was perfect about the Sun Devils' last tournament. Both of their losses came in the final inning, causing some concern.

"I think the concern is to get more than one ahead before you face the last inning," head coach Linda Wells said. "We need to learn that at any time, someone can put one out and if someone is on base, that's two runs. So we need to get a cushion and I think we have the offense that can do that for us."

Senior Roxanne Tsosie, who will start against No. 6 Iowa on Saturday, has simpler goals in mind.

"I want a shutout," she said. "And I want to do well, not let them hit it."

On a more positive note, Wells feels she has found a strong front four to open up her lineup.

"I feel like we were pretty stable one through four," Wells said. "And we stayed stable one through four. I feel pretty confident with Lisa (Dacquisto), Raja (Woods), Chris Gill and Tammy Lohman."

Wells' confidence is well placed. Dacquisto is leading the Pac-10 with a .560 batting average, and has scored eight runs in six games. Woods is a perfect seven for seven in stolen bases and is hitting at a .450 clip. Gill has walked seven times, while striking out only once. Lohman, in the clean-up spot, has Sun Devils' first baseman Tammy Lohmann, waiting to make a catch and her teammates will compete in the nine-team ASU Classic this weekend. All games will be at Sun Devil Club Stadium.

No. 8 ASU baseball faces yet another top-ranked foe

BY PERCY EDNALINO JR.
STATE PRESS.

The schedule doesn't get any easier for the No. 8-ranked ASU baseball team.

First they took on No. 1 Florida State in the Seminoles' home field. Then, there was a road trip to No. 3 USC. On Monday, the Sun Devils lost to No. 21 Oklahoma State.

Now, the team squares off with No. 2-ranked UCLA for the first of a three-game series at 6 tonight in Los Angeles.

With such a demanding start, don't these guys want a breather?

"No," ASU stopper Ryan Bradley said. "If you want to be the best, you have to play the best all the time. That's how I feel about it. I think we play better when we play better teams. You want to go out there and play the best just to see how good you are."

Teammate Mikel Moreno agreed.

"They're a really good team," Moreno said. "They're playing really well right now. Hopefully, we can go in there and break their momentum."

And how. The Bruins won the season-series 4-2 between the two teams last year. And with a 13-1 record (0-0 Pac-10), they're on a hot streak while the Sun Devils (9-6, 1-2) are still looking for a solid third-game starter to step up.

The Bruins are coming off a 17-7 shellacking of UC Santa Barbara, while ASU enters the matchup having lost 9-3 to Oklahoma State.

Bradley said he knows he won't be the most popular Sun Devil in Westwood. But that's not going to stop the junior righthander from pitching his hard-nosed style of baseball.

"It's going to be fun," Bradley said. "I'm used to it now, so it's not really going to be anything new. I know they're going to be all over me, but I'll take it in stride. Actually, I kind of like it."

Last season, however, UCLA fans didn't have much reason to like Bradley.

When both teams met at Packard Stadium on Mar. 30, a Bradley pitch plunked Glaus in the head. Bradley, who boasts a fastball that has been clocked in the low 90s, was ejected when the umpires ruled the beaming intentional.

Three weeks later, at UCLA's Jackie Robinson Stadium, Glaus again was beamed by Bradley, this time in the back. Umpires ruled the pitch unintentional and let the 6-foot-4 Sun Devil continue.

That's when things took an ugly turn. Adams decided to retaliate and as a message to the Sun Devils and to ASU coach Pat Murphy, he told starting pitcher Peter Zamora to hit leadoff hitter Moreno in the back with the first pitch of the next day's game.

Adams and Zamora were ejected with the NCAA handing Zamora a four-game suspension. Adams received a one-game suspension.

That one-game suspension didn't sit well with Adams, who admitted ordering the beaming and felt the coach's penalty should equal that of the player's.

Adams then suspended himself for four games as a message to the NCAA.

"The player is not four times guiltier than the coach," Adams said in January's issue of Baseball America. "If anything, the coach is four times guiltier than the player. Throwing at batters will never cease until you punish the coach. That's how you stop it."

The Bruins coach said he now wants to put the incident behind him. Adams said he recently talked to his players about last season's incident and doesn't anticipate any problems with the Sun Devils this weekend.

"That's history," Adams said. "Pat (Murphy) and the rest of the coaches at the Six-Pac meeting, we met and we addressed that issue and pretty much took care of it."

ASU's pitching staff — Ryan Mills in particular — really impresses Adams.

"I wasn't able to see Ryan Mills last year because he was hurt so early in the season," Adams said. "But everything I heard about him is good. I don't care if you're playing a little league team, if you strikeout 17 guys, that's a lot of strikeouts in one game."

"I think ASU's pitching is right there with everybody else's. I have a great deal of respect for them."

And Bradley said he has a lot of respect for the Bruins' Glaus and pitcher Jim Parque. Glaus is hitting at a .426 clip with 22 RBI and seven home runs. Parque has a 4-0 record (2.15 ERA) with 33 strikeouts. Both were members of last summer's bronze medal-winning Olympic baseball team in Atlanta.

Wrestlers ready for ultimate challenge in No. 1 Cowboys

BY JOSH DEFAMIO
STATE PRESS

If the Sun Devil wrestling team wanted a challenge going into the Pac-10 championships, they'll get none bigger than the one they face Sunday.

SIMPSON

No. 9 ASU (13-4) will take on top-ranked Oklahoma State (17-0) at noon at the University Activity Center.

OSU features an imposing lineup stocked with nationally-ranked wrestlers at nine of the 10 positions, including top-ranked wrestlers — Eric Guerrero at 126 pounds and Mark Branch at 167 pounds.

Even its lone unranked wrestler, heavy-weight Ben Lee, gives opponents some cause for concern.

"Ben has not sprung up in the rankings, but he has been a very consistent wrestler for us," OSU's coach John Smith said of the former walk-on. "He has given a lot of people hope for this team that walk-on and would like to one day make the team."

Despite all this, and despite a 42-0 defeat at the Reno duals earlier in the season, the Sun Devils remain confident they can pull off the upset.

Smith winning in overtime — one of only four losses for Simpson this season.

Of those, only one has come by more than one point.

Another key match will be at 167 pounds, where ASU's Casey Strand will take his 31-2 record against OSU's Branch. Branch, a senior, is ranked first in the nation and has won one national championship and placed second twice in his three years at OSU.

Two other wrestlers, 126 pounder Shawn Ford and 158 pounder Matt Suter, also hold national rankings for the Sun Devils.

ASU's Lee Roy Smith is also confident in his team, which has risen from unranked status to one of the nation's elite and posted 13 dual wins this season — the most since 1989-90, when Bobby Douglas coached the squad.

STRAND

"They're really pulling together as a team right now," Smith said. "And focusing on getting better. For an unranked team to have 13 wins against our schedule, and to be ranked at number nine at this time, I think it's a credit to our wrestlers, our assistant coaches, and our administration."

The match comes less than a week before ASU hosts the 1997 Pac-10 Championships. ASU placed second last year, behind Cal State-Bakersfield.

Gymnastics team ends home slate with Senior Night

Lone senior gymnast Bridget Sandman (left) will be honored before ASU's last home meet of the season versus Pac-10 rival California 7:30 tonight at the University Activity Center. Erik Guzowski/State Press

BY RANDY JONES
STATE PRESS

Tonight's meet at 7:30 versus the California Golden Bears is one of mixed emotions for two members of ASU women's gymnastics.

For senior Bridget Sandman it represents her last opportunity to compete in front of the UAC crowd.

Assistant coach Kristen Smyth must compete against the school where she was named "Female Gymnast of the Decade."

"I'm feeling excitement and sadness," Sandman said. "More excitement because I'm ready to move on to another stage, but I also feel sadness for leaving the girls. That's a major part."

Head coach John Spini said the last home meet is always a tough thing.

"Whenever you lose a senior that's been with you four years it's a very emotional time," he said. "You want to always make it special for them. It's the last home meet, the last time she'll get to compete in front of the home crowd. So I think it's important for her to feel special."

In her career as a Sun Devil, Sandman has competed in three events — beam, vault and bars. However, bars is where her talents are most utilized.

"She could probably vault for us too, but I'm really cautious of that," Spini said. "Because I really don't want to lose a bar worker. She means a lot to that bars team."

On bars Sandman has scored a career-high 9.85 three meets in a row.

"I wouldn't say I've peaked yet," Sandman said of her performances before the Stanford meet, "but I've definitely progressed. Even from this time last year."

With "Senior Night" comes with it the added attention of being the lone senior and having the spotlight thrust on her. However, Sandman said she will use it to her advantage.

"Oh, I'll be psyched up even more for it. It's the last one. We want to show the crowd a good performance," she said.

Watching from the side will be Smyth. She said it may be a struggle to keep her eyes on the right team.

"I'm real excited to see (my old) team," she said. "It'll be nostalgic. It's going to be hard for me not to peek over at (Cal). I'll just have to wait and see them on the video tape."

But, this night will belong to Sandman, Spini said.

Her leadership and experience have helped the team, and will continue to the remainder of the season. Sandman is the only Sun Devil to have traveled to nationals as part of a team. Only junior Meagan Wright, who went as an individual all-arounder the past two seasons, knows what the experience is like.

Sandman said she hopes her experience will be useful to the squad later, maybe with advice on handling the pressure.

"(We've talked) a little with regards to the rules and regulations at nationals," she said. "The little stuff that you can get knocked in eight runs and scored seven more.

ASU will begin their tournament tonight at five against No. 21 Notre Dame. Senior Carrie Breedlove will get the nod at pitcher. At seven, ASU will send Kathy Ponce to pitch against Indiana.

Tsosis will start Saturday afternoon's game, but Wells is unsure who will take the mound in Sunday's finale against New Mexico State.

The tournament consists of teams from nine schools, including Toledo, Wisconsin, Auburn, and Michigan State.

Notes

Despite the 4-2 record, ASU has dominated its opponents.

The Sun Devils have outscored (46-27), outthrew (59-40), out-stolen (15-3), and outbatted (.328-.237) their opponents over the six game series.

The pitchers have also dominated, compiling an ERA (3.80) a full two runs better than their opponents (5.80).

Indoor track winding down

By LORI HARO
STATE PRESS

By doing well this weekend at the Mountain Pacific Sports Federation Championships in Reno, Nev., the ASU track and field team hopes to conclude its indoor season with qualifiers for the USA Championships.

Head coach Greg Kraft feels that the team has constantly improved from meet to meet. He hopes to use this meet as a way to measure how they'll do in the outdoor season.

"We're still taking it one competition at a time," Kraft said. "We're trying to learn and improve at every competition. It gives us a chance to look at conference foes and see how we stack up and measure against them."

Other schools competing this weekend from the Pac-10 are UofA, Washington, Washington State, Oregon, Stanford, and California. Some teams from the Big West Conference will also attend.

Last year the Sun Devils finished ninth in the men's standings and seventh in the women's. This year Kraft expects the women's 400-meter relay team to do well. The team of Joronda White, Karen Vigilant, Dawnnell Linder, and Avia Morgan will compete only in that event.

"This weekend I hope to run a lot faster so we can go to the USA Championships in Atlanta," Vigilant said.

Kraft also thinks that Jeremy Staat should be tough competition in the shot put event and that Fiona Daly will continue to do well in the high jump.

In the past two competitions, Daly has won the high jump event with leaps of 5 feet, 8 inches.

The distance runners are running better than ever, Kraft said, but that the altitude difference may be a factor.

"As a team we're still trying to build a foundation and I'm looking forward to use this weekend as a stepping stone to the outdoor season," distance runner Matt Repak said.

Suns hire Johnson as assistant

PHOENIX (AP) — Frank Johnson, a former reserve guard who helped Phoenix reach the NBA Finals in 1993, was hired Thursday by the Suns as an assistant coach.

Johnson, 38, joins current assistants Paul Silas and Donn Nelson under head coach Danny Ainge.

"I think he's a good fit for our staff," Ainge said. "As a player, he had a great work ethic and competitiveness. I think he will be a good example and work well with our younger players."

Johnson, an 11th-round draft pick of Washington in 1981, played seven seasons for the Bullets. He also played one season with Houston before heading to Italy from 1989-92.

In 147 games with Phoenix from 1992-94, Johnson averaged 4.5 points and 2.3 assists. He retired in 1994 and has worked as a spokesman in the Suns' community relations department.

deductions for, the ones you really don't want.

"Otherwise we really haven't talked about just nationals itself. (But) more about the progression up to nationals. I think as we get closer to it we will talk about it a whole lot more."

That time may come on Sunday at the Master's Classic in Lincoln, Neb. The No. 5 Sun Devils will get a taste of things to come with a quad meet on only one day's rest, much like the hectic three days of competition during nationals, to be held April 17-19.

Spini was cautious when describing how the Sun Devils will prepare for the second meet.

"We are going to take our time and see where we are when we get over there," he said. "How sore we are. Who is hurt, who is not. We'll probably try to figure out a game plan Sunday morning. Then we can figure out what weapons we can use."

Sandman said she thinks this weekend will be a good experience for what the team will face at nationals.

"I think we will handle it pretty well," she said. "It will be difficult with our energy and pushing through. I think Stanford was a good meet in preparing for traveling and competing on the same day. To help prepare everyone for the body aches and the tired aspect... I think this is definitely a good determining factor for nationals."

Asked what one thing would make her Sun Devil career complete, Sandman laughed.

"Actually there are two things," she said. "Number one, a Pac-10 Championship ring. And number two, winning nationals and the Super 6 (there)."

Men's tennis hosts two

FROM STAFF REPORTS

The ASU men's tennis team will be back in action this weekend. They host Southern Methodist University on Saturday and San Diego State on Sunday, at the friendly confines of the Whiteman Tennis Center, where they have not lost a match all season. Both matches begin at 1 p.m.

The Sun Devils (5-2 overall record) look to rebound from last weekend's disappointing conference losses to No. 21 USC and second-ranked UCLA. The score of both matches was 5-2. Sergio Elias was the bright spot of the trip. Elias and doubles partner Ed Carter defeated UCLA's No. 1 doubles team of Kevin Kim and Eric Lin 8-4. Kim and Lin are the second-ranked doubles team in the region. Against USC, at the No. 1 spot, Elias beat George Bastl 6-4, 1-6, 6-4.

Sophomore Tim Hammond also had a good weekend. He won the No. 5 singles match against USC and UCLA. Hammond is now on a seven-match winning streak. Despite winning his singles matches, Hammond and doubles partner Casey Was couldn't get it done in doubles. The formerly undefeated tandem finally lost a match, thus expiring Was' guarantee of "not losing a match all season."

The probable starting lineup for this weekend will be Elias, Alex Osterrieth, Amir Ran, Carter, Hammond, and Carey Bjorkman.

Bonds becomes highest paid

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. (AP) — Barry Bonds agreed Thursday to a $22.9 million, two-year contract extension with the San Francisco Giants, a deal that gives him baseball's highest average salary at $11.45 million.

Bonds, due $8.25 million this season and $8.5 million next year under a $43.75 million, six-year deal signed as a free agent in December 1992, will get $9.7 million in 1999 and $10.7 million in 2000. The Giants have a $10.3 million option for 2001 and must pay a $2.5 million buyout if they don't exercise it.

The three-time NL MVP had the highest average salary until Nov. 19, when free agent Albert Belle agreed to a $55 million, five-year contract with the Chicago White Sox.

The Giants are scheduled to move into a new ballpark in downtown San Francisco in April 2000 and want Bonds to be the nucleus of a team that is going through a major rebuilding plan.

The contract extension came at the end of a tempestuous few weeks in which Bonds accused the Giants of lying to him by promising to make him the highest-paid player in baseball, and then apologized for his remarks.

Bonds also implied in recent weeks he might want a trade because he was not loved in his hometown, but he arrived at training camp Monday saying he wanted to finish his career in San Francisco.

SUN DEVIL CLUB SPORTS

Ice Hockey

The No. 8 ASU Ice Devils will play their final regular season games of the season this weekend when they travel to Tucson to take on the No. 2 UofA Icecats tonight and Saturday. Both games start at 7:30 p.m.

The Ice Devils (18-8-1) have already wrapped up a spot in the American Collegiate Hockey Association National Tournament, which will be held March 4-8 in Ann Arbor, Mich. The Ice Devils are guaranteed at least a No. 8 seed. Ten teams participate in the tournament.

This weekend's action won't effect the seedings, but senior Stefan Richardson said the games are still important because of the in-state rivalry.

"The games will be a good tune up for nationals," Richardson said. "It's a pride thing."

Men's Lacrosse

The ASU men's lacrosse team will be on its home turf for the first time this season when they host Stanford at 1 p.m. on Saturday and San Diego State at noon on Sunday. Both games will be played on the ASU band field.

The Sun Devils are 2-0 on the young season.

Women's Lacrosse

The Sun Devil women's lacrosse team will add another chapter to the fierce ASU-UofA sports rivalry this weekend when they travel to Tucson for a 2 p.m. game on Sunday. This game will mark the first ever meeting between women's lacrosse teams from the two schools.

ASU will be looking for its second victory of the season.

Men's Volleyball

The ASU men's volleyball team will be in action for the third time this year when they face the University of California Santa Barbara in Santa Barbara tonight and then travel to East Lansing, Mich. to participate in the Michigan State Invitational.

The Sun Devils were previously unranked but notched the No. 10 spot in this week's rankings after defeating then-No. 8 Utah Valley last weekend.

Water Polo

The ASU men's and women's water polo teams will participate in a seven-team tournament hosted by the Phoenix Swim Masters on Sunday. The tournament will last from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. and games will be played at the Phoenix Swim Club (38th St. just north of Camelback).

Both Sun Devils teams are still looking for people interested in joining the team. Call Chris Lawrence at 784-2905 for more information.
