Merit-based raise blasted by critics

By DEANNA DARR
STATE PRESS

A stipulation requiring faculty to teach six credit hours a week before becoming eligible for a merit-based raise is drawing harsh criticism from ASU administrators, faculty and the Arizona Board of Regents.

The board is debating how the merit pay raise, which state legislators passed along with the rest of the budget last week, will be distributed.

ABOR spokesman Tony Seese-Bieda said the board did not support the initiative in its current form because it was dictated by the Legislature.

"It was really the board's role," he said, adding that board members feel they should have a chance to discuss the issue before it was passed into law.

Academic Senate President Tom

Callarman said legislators failed to realize that instructors spend far more time working outside of class than in class.

"Legislators have a facade view that faculty just stand in front of classes," Callarman said. "A good student puts more than three hours a week into a three-credit class — a good faculty member puts more than three hours a week into a three credit class as well."

Some faculty members are worried that instructors who deserve merit-pay increases will not receive them under the new regulations, Callarman said.

University administrators echoed Callarman's concerns.

ASU President Lattie Coor said he worked to get the legislation changed before it was passed into law, but now the

Baumgartner reflects on final hours as president

By LIDIA E. KELLY
STATE PRESS

Marc Baumgartner sat comfortably in his swivel chair in the center of a white Associated Students of ASU office. His third-floor kingdom, with windows looking onto the red-bricked College of Business, Tempe homes and trees in a distance, will soon have a new ruler.

"How do I feel about the end of my presidential term?" the 22-year-old Baumgartner asked himself. "I am so involved in the micro level that I forget about the macro level. I do not really have time to be upset, to be sad."

But occasionally, it hits him.

"Sometimes students stop me and ask me about the coming end," he said. "Then I think about it."

He considers his term a success.

"I did everything I wanted to do," said Baumgartner, who graduates in May. "I'm older, wiser. ASASU has given me better experience than any classroom would ever do."

One of Baumgartner's opponents in last year's presidential race, former Graduate College Sen. Daran Wastchak, said Baumgartner has done a great job this year.

"We needed, after the two previous years, a very solid representative," Wastchak said. "I think Marc is a very solid representative of the students."

ASU Provost Milton Glick said Baumgartner was easy to work with.

"He has worked well with the student body, as well as with the administration," Glick said. "He did accomplish his goals — which were very ambitious."

Glick said Baumgartner also did a very good job representing the students at the Arizona Board of Regents, as well as putting together the proposal for publishing teacher evaluations.

The evaluations issue topped Baumgartner's list of his achievements. The program's trial phase is scheduled for fall 1997.

Baumgartner said he is proud he was able to finalize the project before his term expired, despite a slow-moving University bureaucracy.

"I have worked really hard on that for years, and now, when it is done, I am really happy," he said. "ASU does not provide enough information to students about their professors."

But he emphasized the help and involvement of his fellow officers and people associated with ASASU on the project.

"These people really want to have things done," he said. "And I am really grateful for the opportunity of working with them."

He said he'll miss the people — his colleagues and fellow students — the most.

Summer Stuart, executive vice president of ASASU, said Baumgartner has been an incredible co-worker.

"He is very understanding and compassionate," said Stuart, a pre-medicine sophomore. "And I like him a lot. I like him as my colleague, but also as a friend."

Baumgartner said ASU has been an institution that supported his personal visions.

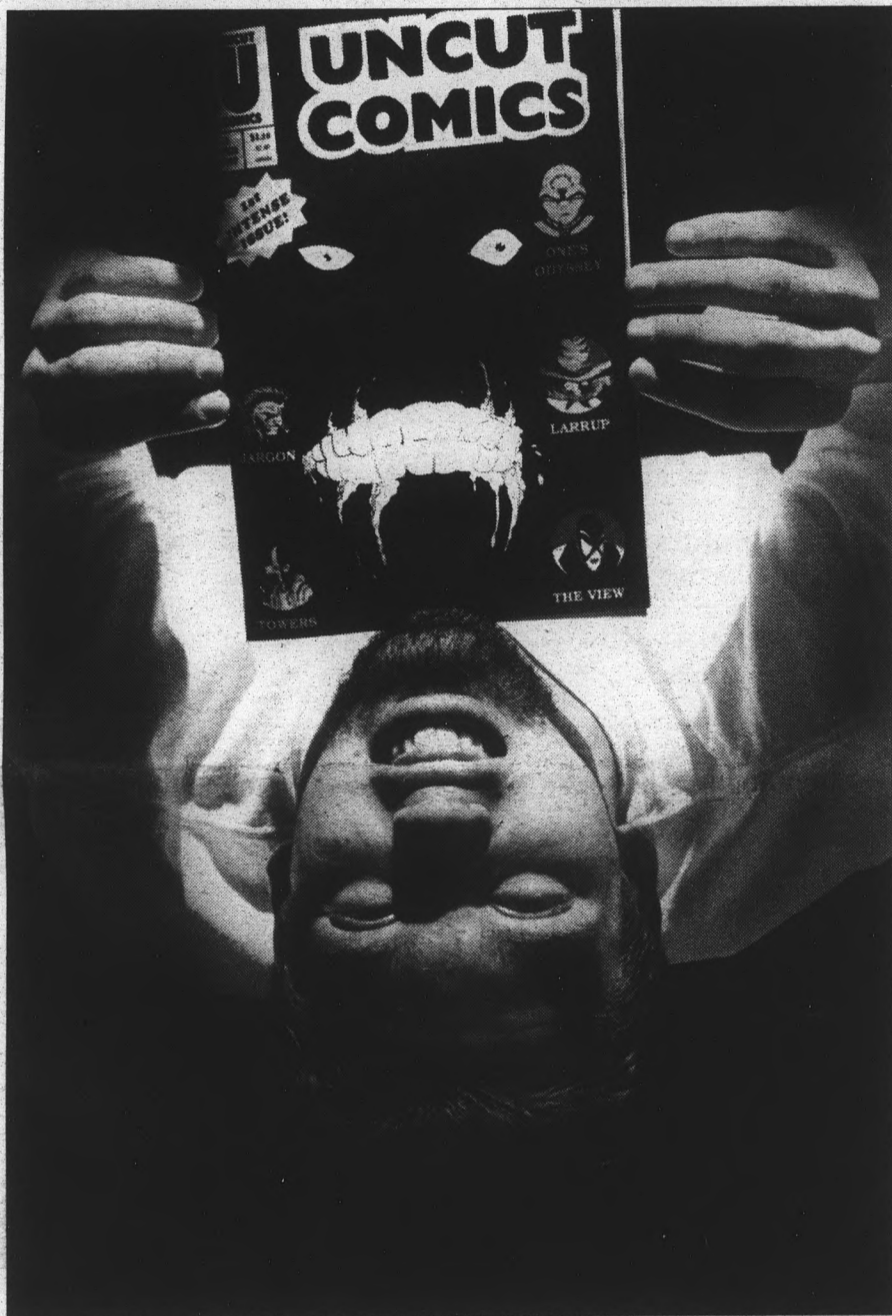

"ASU is the perfect venue to excel to an incredible level," he said. "But a lot depends on the student's self-involvement."

"You can either swim here or sink. If you do not follow your vision, do not get involved, ASU can sink you."

When he graduates, Baumgartner said he may pursue his academic career studying biomedical engineering or he may go into sports marketing.

"But I do not think I will have an office like that, with a view, in the nearest future," he said, giving one of his last looks around the room.

ASU student creates own funny business for artists

By CADONNA PEYTON

Grant Vetter went from drawing rat cartoons in the third grade to being president of his own comic company by the time he reached his freshman year in college.

Vetter, a fine arts major, created Uncut Comics last fall with the help of about 10 ASU students, two alumni and a few other comics illustrators. The first issue hit comic book store shelves a month ago. The second issue was just completed and is expected to be in stores in September.

"It was really started for college students to get some work out in the field so they can get a start on their careers," Vetter said.

Though he has invested thousands of dollars in the business, it is worth it, he said. "Ever since I was in the third grade,

I've been into self publishing," Vetter said, recalling the rat comic he created and copied off for relatives. "It has always been a dream of mine."

When Vetter came to ASU in the fall, he felt there was no outlet for comic illustrators to network and showcase their works. So he started his own student group.

Vetter said at first it was difficult to find faculty support for his idea.

"I went to all the administrators and everybody I could possibly find — right up to the dean of the arts department — but nobody (showed support)," he said.

Not wanting to give up, Vetter posted fliers around campus calling for fellow comics artists. Support poured in.

But his dream was still not complete. Once the artists got together, Vetter University is going to have to find a way to deal with the reality.

The University is trying to find internal ways to make sure that all faculty who deserve pay raises get them, even if they don't meet the new criteria, Coor said.

"Some faculty teach less than six hours at University request," he said. "We don't want to penalize those whose jobs are defined differently."

Coor added that he is urging the Legislature to give ASU administrators the freedom to make sure everyone is rewarded properly.

ASU Provost Milton Glick said the new regulation is not a fair way of awarding the faculty.

The merit-based process needs to be done on a person-by-person basis, he said.

"It's critical to the University that we be in a position that we be able to award all deserving faculty," Glick said.

decided it was time to launch his own company. Uncut Comics was born.

Vetter said his company is an option for students who have hectic school and work schedules and do not have time to draw comics full time.

"We take work as they can do it," he said. "Students come and do some work, finish up a story, take a break and get ahead in their (school) work and come back."

However, not all students who come are able to get their comics published because there is a waiting list, Vetter said.

"I can only produce a 32-page book, so I can only publish about five guys at a time," he said.

Vetter said he plans to keep doing more editions and turn his company into a "money maker."

"I plan to keep it going the whole time I am here and hopefully there will be more students joining," he said. "It's a chance for students to get together, get some feedback, and get some work out."

Stock market has 'bear' on investors' lips

By FARRELL KRAMER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Hugh Johnson, a market pro since Lyndon Johnson was president, decided on Thursday to pull some of the $260 million his firm manages for investors out of the stock market.

That decision was not taken lightly. But the market has been so weak recently that even the most seasoned Wall Street investors are beginning to whisper the unthinkable.

"It's a correction," Johnson says. "Now the question is, is it going to deteriorate into a bear market?"

Important government figures on employment in March, due out Friday, are more critical now than ever. A stronger-than-expected job picture might prompt the Federal Reserve to raise interest rates again, dampening the economy.

If that's so, the 6 1/2-year bull market may be in jeopardy. The trouble, of course, is that no one really knows.

Like many others, Johnson, First Albany Corp.'s chief investment officer, doesn't think a bear has yet come knocking. But bear markets are like quicksand, often hard to recognize until it's too late.

Stocks tend to ebb and flow, but since the fall of 1990 a rising Dow Jones industrial average has been pretty much a constant. Despite two presidential elections, an uncertain economy, military operations from Haiti to Bosnia and political scandal, investors have been consistently rewarded.

The current rise took the Dow from about 2,360 to a high of 7,085.16 on March 11. It has since lost 8.6 percent — almost completely erasing its gains for the year. On Thursday, the index closed at 6,477.35, down 39.66 points.

Last March was the last time the market had a case of the jitters, shortly after a February 1996 jobs report was released that showed real strength. The Dow tumbled 171 points.

The problem then was a concern that the Fed would stop cutting interest rates to stimulate the economy. The concern now is that it will raise them again, after doing so last week for the first time in more than two years.

"This one, I think, is more severe than last March," says Steve Burr, an accountant tending to his portfolio during lunchtime at a Fidelity Investments office in New York.

Burr was buying on the 171-point decline last March, viewing the market as still healthy and the selloff as an opportunity.

This time is different. Burr says he has increased the cash portion of his portfolio and gotten rid of some of the more speculative shares he held in favor of larger, more stable companies.

Worried about a bear market?

"I'm protecting against it," he says, "but I don't think it's going to happen."

One factor in the market's favor: There are no troublesome events like tensions in the Persian Gulf driving up oil prices or big imbalances in the economy, like a spate of corporate bankruptcies. Such things can precede, or trigger, bear markets.

"At this point, I don't see enough of them to say that we're going to have a severe decline in the market or the economy," says A. Michael Lipper, president of Lipper Analytical Services, a research firm.

Lipper, though, thinks there could easily be a market decline of 20 percent to 30 percent, which would rank as a moderate bear market. That would take the Dow down as low as 4,960, where it stood in late 1995.

Needle-ready children tested for hepatitis

By DENISE LEVIN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Many of them giggling and putting up a brave front, youngsters lined up in two states Thursday to protect them against hepatitis from a contaminated, illegal shipment of frozen strawberries.

"Needles don't scare me. I've already taken a lot of shots," said 9-year-old Lucy Kadzhikyan, a fourth-grader at Ramona Elementary in Hollywood.

About 2,000 children in California and Georgia received shots Thursday, and officials in four others states worked to prevent the spread of the disease from tainted berries believed to have been served in school lunches.

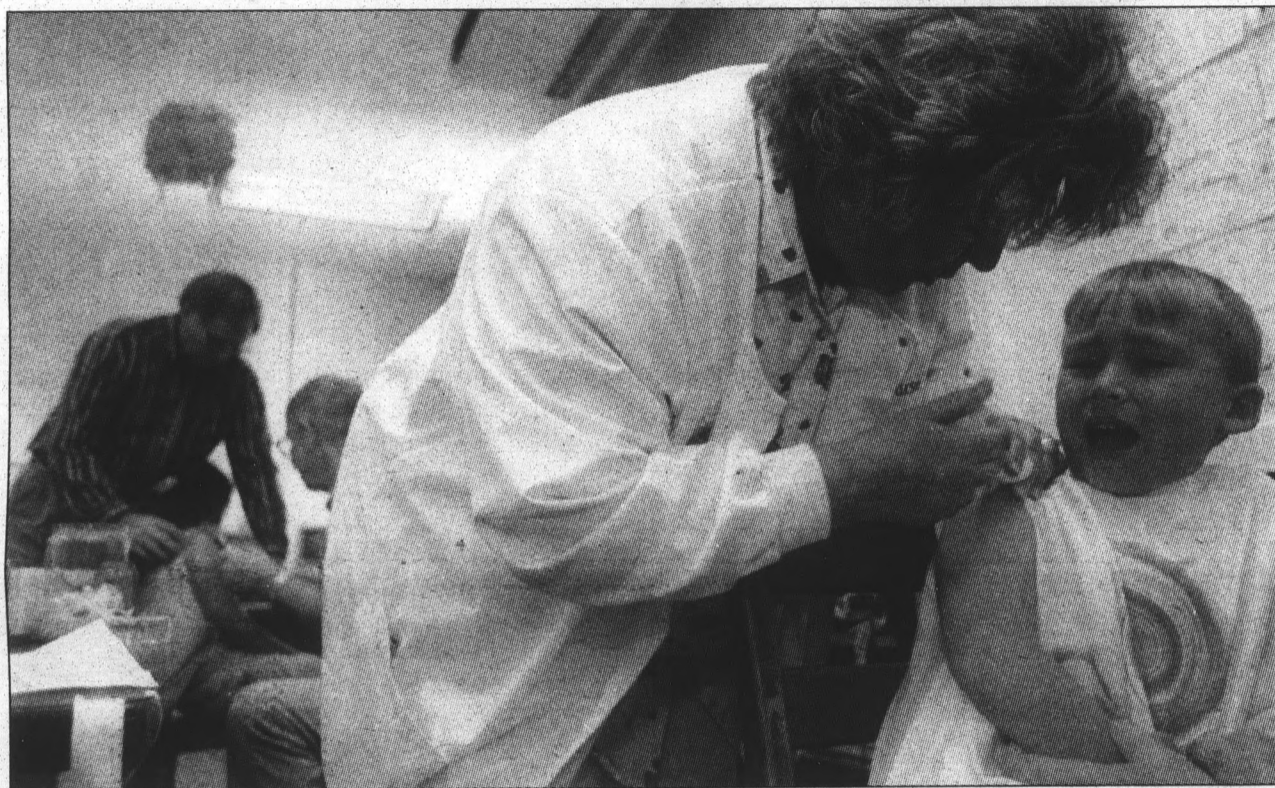

One inner-city Los Angeles school served the suspect dessert cups on Monday after it was left off a list of schools warned last Friday. More than 700 kids and teachers at Mount Vernon Middle School will have to get shots next week.

"A clerical error left Mount Vernon off," district spokesman Brad Sales said. "By the time we contacted the food service manager, the fruit cups had already been served."

So far, the only reported cases of hepatitis attributed to the frozen, sliced strawberries have been in Michigan, with 163 children and adults sickened. Children at schools in Iowa, Arizona and Tennessee may also have eaten the tainted fruit.

Unlike more dangerous forms of the disease, hepatitis A causes a mild liver infection. It is spread through uncooked food. The elderly, people with weak immune systems and the very young are at most risk. Gamma globulin shots ward off the disease.

Federal investigators worked to track the berries, which came from Mexico. The strawberries were distributed by a company that falsely labeled them U.S. fruit to get them accepted by the government's school lunch program. The company could face criminal charges.

Oscar Sosa/Associated Press

Justin Pieper, 6, grimaces as registered nurse Pat Sanders of the Lanier County Health Department in Lanier, Ga., gives him a vaccine for hepatitis A Thursday. Children lined up for inoculations, stores canceled orders for strawberries and pupils worried about eating school lunches after word spread that 2.6 million pounds of frozen strawberries might carry hepatitis A.

"Our requirements are that the product must be domestic and it's got to be certified that it meets all health and safety inspections. And it virtually always is. Once in a while, you have a bad actor," Agriculture Secretary Dan Glickman said Thursday.

Improvements in surveillance, technology, inspections and response are needed, Dr. David Satcher, director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. "We do have to tighten up in every way," Satcher told CNN.

White House spokesman Mike McCurry was asked if President Clinton was disturbed by the response of the Agriculture Department and the Department of Health and Human Services.

"The president is concerned about some of the things that have been reported but acknowledged that both departments took quick steps to respond to public health concerns" and examine how it happened, he said.

Youngsters at three Los Angeles schools administering shots Thursday smiled for the most part, but tears did flow occasionally.

Ten-year-old Mark Segismundo covered his face with his hands, clenched his teeth and flinched slightly when the 1 1/2-inch needle was inserted in his rump.

"It didn't feel that bad!" he said with a smile.

The $18 per-dose inoculations will be paid for by San Diego-based Andrew & Williamson Sales Co., the packing company that distributed the frozen strawberries. Federal officials have recalled 2.6 million pounds of them.

Cannibalism existed in early Southwest, archaeologists say

By MATT CRENSON
ASSOCIATED PRESS

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — One spring around the year 1150, the people of what's now known as Cowboy Wash met a horrible end.

In a jumbled collection of bones, tools and pottery, archaeologists have uncovered grim evidence that attackers slaughtered, butchered and perhaps even cannibalized the long-ago inhabitants of the American Southwest.

The discovery adds to the growing debate over the possibility of cannibalism among the Anasazi Indians, whose spectacular, apartment-like cliff dwellings are now a major tourist attraction.

"We feel very strongly that this is a case of cannibalism. If it's not, we don't know what else it could be that would produce this set of remains," said Brian Billman, part of a team of archaeologists who excavated the site from 1992 to 1996 in the Ute

Mountains of southwestern Colorado.

Inside two of the three small dwellings they unearthed were the bones of at least seven people scattered amid the everyday pottery and tools of 12th century Southwestern life. Cut marks on the bones suggest that the bodies were butchered about the time of death, and darkened areas on some of them suggest cooking as well.

"Certainly people were mutilated, and it seems to be the case that they were eaten," said Patricia Lambert, a Utah State University archaeologist.

Lambert, Billman and archaeologist Banks Leonard presented the results of the Cowboy Wash dig on Thursday in Nashville at the annual meeting of the Society for American Archaeology.

Hopi tribal archaeologist Kurt Dongoske said the evidence from Cowboy Wash and the 30-plus other Southwestern sites where dismembered remains have been found doesn't actually prove that human flesh was consumed.

The bones could be the result of attacks in which people were hacked apart but not eaten, he said. They could also be those of people suspected of witchcraft, who in many cultures are dismembered or otherwise destroyed after death. In colonial New England, for example, suspected witches were burned.

The bones may even have a nonviolent origin, Dongoske suggested. The Anasazi may have left dismembered bodies in abandoned buildings for religious reasons. That wouldn't be too far removed from the practice of displaying holy relics consisting of saints' body parts at medieval cathedrals.

In addition to the bones, there are two stone cutting tools at Cowboy Wash bearing traces of human blood. And preserved human feces were found on the hearth in the middle of one dwelling.

"It seems to me that that's a pretty universal symbol of contempt," said David Wilcox of Arizona State University.

Arizona State University archaeologist Christy Turner, who spent three decades researching cannibalism among the Anasazi, hypothesized that raiders from Mexico, where cannibalism is known to have been practiced, committed the violence at Cowboy Wash and the other sites.

But Billman believes that the violence was more local, perhaps related to a drought that hit the Southwest during the middle and late 12th century.

The pottery at the Cowboy Wash site suggests that its inhabitants may have been immigrants from about 50 miles to the south, and the locals may have resented the newcomers' presence when things got bad, he said.

STATE PRESS Boos & Bravos

BOO — To ASASU for doling out slices of tasteless pizza to attract students over to the normally empty voting booths. Although the motives are honorable, it reeks of the days of Boss Tweed and the political machine of Tamany Hall. Students should vote because they care about the issues that revolve around ASU.

BRAVO — To the student worker who was robbed while slaving away at the Palo Verde Main front desk last Friday. Too many times we hear of situations of citizens trying to play hero to prevent someone else's money from being stolen. One thing's for sure, you wouldn't see any of us attempting to stop a robbery if we were being paid sub-standard wages.

BOO — To the UofA Wildcats for taking home the national college basketball championship after beating Kentucky Monday. A number of Sun Devils jumped on ASU's arch-rival's bandwagon. Students and other Valley sell-outs seem to forget the assinine behavior of Wildcat fans after the Sun Devil football team badly beat their football team last semester.

BRAVO — To the Environmental Protection Agency for bumping up the amount of money split between five universities, including ASU, to study environmental problems around the United States-Mexico border region. With any luck, researchers, scientists and, of course, the rest of us will come up with a solution to the devastating dilemmas caused by pollution.

BOO — To 11 former ASASU candidates for violating campaign finance filing rules. Elections Coordinator Chip Ahlswede said directions are clearly visible at the top of the filing papers, but the candidates still managed to screw it up. We have to wonder how effective the candidates would be in office if they can't even operate their campaigns properly.

BRAVO — To grocery store magnate Eddie Basha for declaring his candidacy for the 1998 state gubernatorial race. Basha, who ran against embattled Gov. Fife Symington in 1994, is a long-time proponent of education and, most importantly, increased funding for education. Besides, he's a helluva lot better than the federally-indicted Symington.

BOO — To ASU for not having a system in place for part-time student workers to air their complaints about University jobs. Once again, student workers take all the abuse while faculty members and the administration rake in all the benefits. Unfortunately, it seems that disgruntled student workers' only option is to file a complaint with the overloaded justice system.

Cycle of ASASU elections more like nat'l elections than we care to admit

It's that time again! We've entered the booths dotting campus and voted for the people whom we think will lead us into the next century — or at least the next school year. Yes, it's time for ASASU elections, once again.

It is easy to dismiss these elections as irrelevant to our lives and a waste of good paper, but I have been thinking about the similarities between these elections here on campus, and the national elections for president that took place last November. Interestingly enough, there are several.

For starters, ASASU elections, much like the national elections, are decided more on style than substance. President Clinton had flashy television commercials which portrayed him as a caring father, family man and dedicated leader of the country. The ASASU election has creative posters scattering the campus and candidates dressing up in their nice clothing, rather than the usual T-shirts and shorts, to sell themselves to the public.

The views of the candidates are not important, compared to the image they present. Who could list off Bob Dole's platform? The image that we received was that of a cranky old man. Similarly, I do not know of one campaign issue that would make a difference to me.

The ASASU election forum was not convenient for me to attend and, like most of the student body, I am voting blind. I voted for who I thought had the best creative style in the posters and, in one case, because I had the candidate in a few of my classes. This is not democracy. I could be voting for the worst candidate, but, like the national election, we are uninformed and blinded by glitz.

Rarely are we given what we are promised. President Clinton and Bob Dole stumbled over each other, trying to outdo one another on the issue of tax cuts. But, when it came time to deliver, I didn't see any more money staying in my pockets thanks to Uncle Sam. Likewise, I was promised a free slice of pizza and a Coke by ASASU for voting.

When it came time to deliver, the woman running the voting station at Neeb Hall didn't give me my certificate that would allow me to get pizza. I had to steal my "I Voted" sticker from the booth. I'm bitter because now I had to pay for my lunch.

What does this election mean for me as a student and a citizen? President Clinton's message appeared very similar to the Republicans' ideals before the last election. It was a choice between moderate liberal and moderate conservative. The two became indistinguishable.

Similarly, each candidate for most of the major offices promises more contact with the students, a more open ASASU and financial reform. This promise, as old as time, has resulted in this year's newsletter from the ASASU Executive Council which, while it is a nice start, is hardly the open, relevant ASASU that I have been waiting for. Each candidate sounds the same, pushing the buttons that we, the electorate, want to hear.

It is the most notorious candidate who gets the press. What event boosted President Clinton to the forefront of the Democratic candidates in 1992? The Gennifer Flowers scandal, which garnered free press for then-Governor Clinton, which he rode all the way to Pennsylvania Avenue. Similarly, the most publicized candidate has been Adrian Fontes.

I know nothing of his platform and know nothing of his background from the media. I only know that allegations were made and that he was penalized by the Elections Commission. Will he win because of this? I do not know, as election results were not available at the time this column was written. For some voters, the name-recognition alone will be enough to win their vote.

There is always an alternative candidate for those who do not want to live within the system. Nationally, it was Ross Perot. Here, it's Ned. 'Nuff said.

ASASU will crown its new officers, and the entire process will start again next spring. In the meantime, we can rest easily, knowing that our elections are not useless, but provide a clear microcosm of the national political scene. Kevin J. Berlat is a junior studying theater education and can be reached at KevinASU@aol.com.

UofA victory raises question of Devil sportsmanship

Loyal Sun Devils would not sport Wildcat gear

Please excuse me if I'm not doing cartwheels after the UofA's surprise national championship Monday.

It's bad enough every time I pick up a newspaper or turn on the TV that I'm reminded of the Wildcats' first-ever national championship, but can I at least walk through the Memorial Union once without seeing another Wildcat T-shirt?

By no means am I putting down UofA's brilliant run in the National Collegiate Athletics Association tournament, but why have a select few on campus caught a curious case of "Wildcat-itis?"

Not that long ago, if you were caught wearing a T-shirt of the rival school, you might get a few ugly looks.

Now, you might get a high-five.

By the way, The College Bookstore on the corner of Rural Road and Lemon Street is proudly displaying on its front door that it is selling UofA National Championship T-shirts.

What gives?

It surely couldn't be all the wonderful support UofA gave us during ASU's Rose Bowl run.

Just ask a few of the unlucky ASU students who were forcibly yanked off UofA's goal posts after ASU's 56-14 win in Tucson last November. The UofA students weren't giving us little pats on the back; they were grabbing ASU fans atop the goal posts from any limb or body part they could get a hold of.

Now that's support.

Somehow, I don't think those same fans who were mocking us "Scum Devils" were cheering our Sun Devils on in the Rose Bowl.

So why the sudden outpour of support for UofA's basketball team?

Sure, they were underdogs and everyone likes to root for the underdog, but they were also our rivals. When did rivals start wearing the opposing school's colors?

Do you think Florida State students were sporting the blue and orange of the Florida Gators the week after the Gators stole the national championship from the Seminoles with a victory in the Sugar Bowl?

I can assure you that no one would have had the guts to wear Florida Gator National Championship T-shirts in Tallahassee.

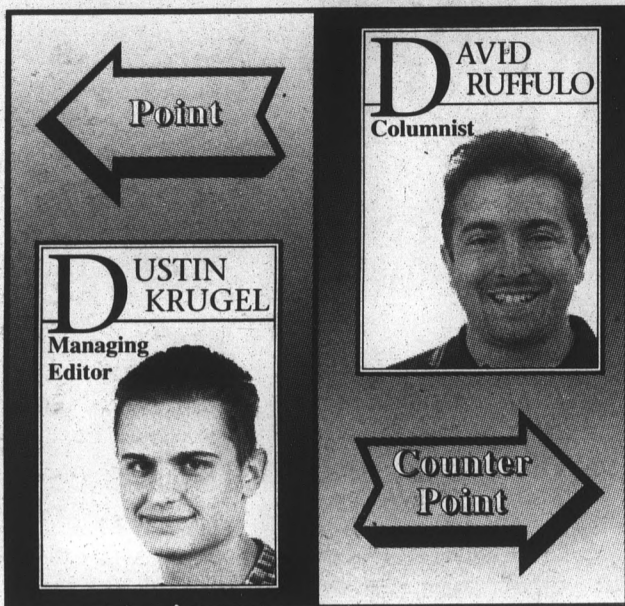

Maybe the rivalry isn't what it used to be, but don't tell that to last year's 11-1 ASU football team. They didn't have to be reminded who they were playing.

"There is no one (game) I have ever played or coached in that has the same feeling about it," said ASU head coach Bruce Snyder last fall. "The intensity, the hatred. There is a lot of hatred involved. For some of the other (rivalries), there is some of that, but not to the same degree. This is really a pretty hostile gathering."

Alas, here's one of the most confusing statements that I've heard lately on campus: "I'm an ASU football fan and UofA basketball fan." Now there is nothing wrong with feeling this way, but you are not a true Sun Devil fan.

I'd hate to see what might happen to those same fickle fans if ASU loses a couple of football games in September. Gonna jump ship? Are you?

Dustin Krugel is a sophomore undecided major and the managing editor of the State Press.

Arch rivals deserve kudos for surprise win

The team from down south has finally done it. The Arizona Wildcats won their first NCAA basketball title. That's the first major collegiate title our state has won. Yes, I know ASU won the College World Series, but baseball isn't considered a major college revenue sport.

Wildcat frenzy has swept the Valley, including the main campus. Everyone is gloating, basking in the reflective glory referring to the title as "our championship" and "we won it all." Of course, the fans didn't win anything, the players on the court did.

Even with all the hoopla about the victory, many ASU fans resent the fact that our arch rivals won a national championship. After all, who would have thought that the young Wildcats, who didn't have a starting senior on the court, would make history by defeating three No. 1 seeds, including seemingly unbeatable Kansas and the defending champion Kentucky?

Everyone, including their own coach, Lute Olson, didn't give the Wildcats much of a chance against Kansas in the "Sweet 16." Olson already made plans to be out of town during March Madness. He was going to Acapulco, lay on the beach, wiggle his toes in the sand and sip piña colodas.

For Coach Olson, this was a win-win situation. If the Wildcats bowed out early — which they have done in three of the past six years — "Acapulco Lute" would be far from the wrath of the media and fans, as they would demand an explanation of why his team choked again. If his team won, he would whine and complain about how his team doesn't get enough respect and shouldn't be treated lightly.

When word leaked out that Olson was planning an exotic excursion during the NCAA tournament, he attempted to save face by saying he was trying to salvage his marriage. Sort of like having a second honeymoon.

And you wonder why fans dislike uptight Olson. He basically has no faith in his team. This gives ASU fans even more of a reason to mock him and his program. But Sun Devil fans need to lighten up a bit and quit complaining about UofA's victory, even though Wildcat fans are wearing their colors on campus and gloating about their hoop title.

Remember, we were doing the same thing last winter when our Sun Devils won the Pac-10 title and went to the Rose Bowl. The only difference is that our football team came up a bit short while the Wildcats basketball team won it all.

No I don't like that team from down south, but I don't hate them either. Well, except for maybe three times during the year, which is the final football game and the two basketball games. I think we need to put our differences aside and congratulate the Wildcats for a tremendous season.

The term "fan" is an abbreviated form of "fanatic." There is nothing wrong with attending the games, wearing your school colors and being enthusiastic about college sports. If the opposing team wins, give them a pat on the back for a job well done. You don't have to stoop down to another level by mocking and ridiculing the program.

Electronic 'grapevine' spreads misinformation like wildfire

In a very short period of time, the Internet has become indispensable to many of us. The available amount of information is just mind-boggling. But what many people forget is that just because something is on the Internet, it is not automatically the gospel truth — virtually anyone can post information on "the net."

Recently, I received e-mail communications from three different mailing lists. Each alleged that designer Tommy Hilfiger made derogatory comments about blacks on Oprah Winfrey's talk-show. The senders of the e-mail called upon recipients to boycott the designer and to pass on the e-mail message to as many people as possible, making it a kind of electronic chain letter. Similar accusations were made about two other fashion designers (I won't mention their names at the risk of spreading more misinformation) in the past couple of years, who also allegedly made the comments on Oprah.

Over the weekend, in response to Internet postings that Tommy Hilfiger said Asians and blacks did not look good in his clothes, he stated: "The facts are simple and incontrovertible ... Tommy Hilfiger did not make the alleged inappropriate racial comments. Whether these rumors are part of a misunderstanding or a deliberate act of malice, they have absolutely no basis in fact."

Recently, an Oprah Winfrey spokesperson stated that two of the fashion designers defamed had never even appeared on the show!

Now I wouldn't know a Hilfiger outfit if I tripped over one. But that doesn't stop me from wondering why three prominent fashion designers have been targeted for such smear campaigns. It seems strange, at first. But then you have to remember that the fashion design business is a cut-throat one. Why make African Americans the brunt of such campaigns?

Well, ever since the civil rights struggles, African Americans individually and collectively through organizations such as National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, church groups, etc. have used boycotts against organizations who have demonstrated that they are not friends of African Americans because of discriminatory practices, etc.

The collective African American buying power in the United States is not insignificant. What better way for a fashion designer to minimize the competition than to start a rumor in African-American communities about another designer's racist leanings? It could happen. This seems particularly plausible when you take into account that Tommy Hilfiger's designs are said to be very popular with the hip-hop crowd.

This is but one example of misinformation on the Internet. The real issue for me is not the fashion design business or even the boycotting power of the African-American community. This scenario could play itself out in many communities and with victims from any walk of life. The real issue is that we need to be extremely wary about what information we accept as valid from the Internet. At the very least, we need to know the credentials of the people who post information and how they obtained that information.

Just as influential as the Internet is the talk-show format. — in particular, the influence of Oprah Winfrey and Rosie O'Donnell. Oprah's mere recommendation of books on her show has caused them to mercurially zoom to The New York Times top ten list.

Just as Rosie's endorsement or panning of products has far-reaching effects: her endorsement of Tickle-Me-Elmo caused a frenzy of Christmas buying. Rosie's panning of Scope ("Just say nope to Scope") in response to Scope placing her on the least kissable list, caused loyal viewers to buy a competitor's product. So it is understandable that with the mere mention of something on Rosie's show or Oprah's show, people accept the rumors as gospel. We need to be more vigilant.

It was also the ethical thing to do. These words are rarely spoken inside a newsroom. You either have them or you don't.

When I was a kid, my grandmother frequently said: "If you can't say something good about a person, say nothing." Maybe we need to go back to that credo. Diane C. Jacobs is a doctoral student in social work and can be reached at dianecjacobs@juno.com.

Pat Luttrell, a 21-year-old ceramics major, said working in clay is relaxing. Luttrell belongs to the Mudheads, a ceramics club on campus. Club members demonstrated their work and raffled off some ceramic pieces Monday and Tuesday on Orange Mall to raise money for supplies.

Above, smashing his work, Luttrell decides the clay is too moist to hold its shape any longer. He said the demonstration was really meant to draw attention to the exhibit. Crowds of people stopped to watch Luttrell shape the clay into pottery.

Student composer to orchestrate free public concert at music theater

By KEVIN CULWELL
STATE PRESS

For Levi Mason, music has always been spiritual. "Musical expression is one of the highest forms of art and really speaks to the soul," said Mason, a senior music composition major. "When I was young, I realized there was something about music that really moved me."

Mason will showcase musical talents tomorrow at 7:30 p.m., at the ASU Music Theater. He is premiering six of his own compositions at a free public concert.

It is very rare for an ASU undergraduate to put such a recital together, said Randall Shinn, professor of the school of music. "In all my years here (19), only two other undergraduates have been able to orchestrate a recital of this magnitude," he said. "This is a very ambitious undergraduate composition recital."

Recitals in general occur two to three times a year. "Not many students achieve the orchestra that he has," said James Demars, associate professor of the school of music.

"(The concert) shows an amazing deal of accomplishment." Mason's music will be performed by a 50-member orchestra, consisting of many students from the ASU Symphony Orchestra, various ASU bands, and a 12-member vocal ensemble.

The music the orchestra will perform is of a "classical genre" and "romantic" in scope, said Mason, who will accompany the ensemble on piano on a few of the pieces.

He will conduct the other pieces as well. "His music is 'solid and well-written,'" Demars said. "I think it's quite a success."

Shinn said the pieces reveal the "great deal of atmosphere" found in some movies.

"I think he could definitely write pieces for films, eventually," he said.

"I'm really looking forward to this event," said Mason, who is set to graduate in May.

He hopes to eventually freelance compositions and do some instructing.

Arts festival livens up Mill Avenue this weekend

By KARA SHIRE
SPECIAL TO THE STATE PRESS

The Tempe Spring Festival of the Arts will hit the streets of Mill Avenue this weekend with music, entertainment and art.

The 20th annual event will be from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. this Friday, Saturday and Sunday on Mill Avenue, in downtown Tempe. Mill Avenue will be closed from University Drive to Third Street, from 9 p.m. Friday through 5 a.m. Monday.

"These festivals have been a focal point in the development of downtown," said Jim McGeorge, spokesman for the City of Tempe. "The event draws a lot of people to downtown. It's a win-win event for Tempe."

The free spring festival is expected to draw more than 225,000 people and will feature 600 arts and crafts exhibitors displaying pottery, paintings, sculpture, jewelry and handmade clothing.

John Lang, director of the Mill Avenue Merchants Association, said the festival is important "to enhance and bring people to downtown who have perhaps never been there before."

The festival also benefits downtown merchants and is expected to generate an economic impact of $7.5 million this weekend, Lang said.

Exhibitors are selected from thousands of artists to sell and display some of the most creative, contemporary and traditional works available. They range from watercolor paintings to wood carvings and everything in between.

Music entertainment will include strolling performers as well as jazz, rock, reggae and country music.

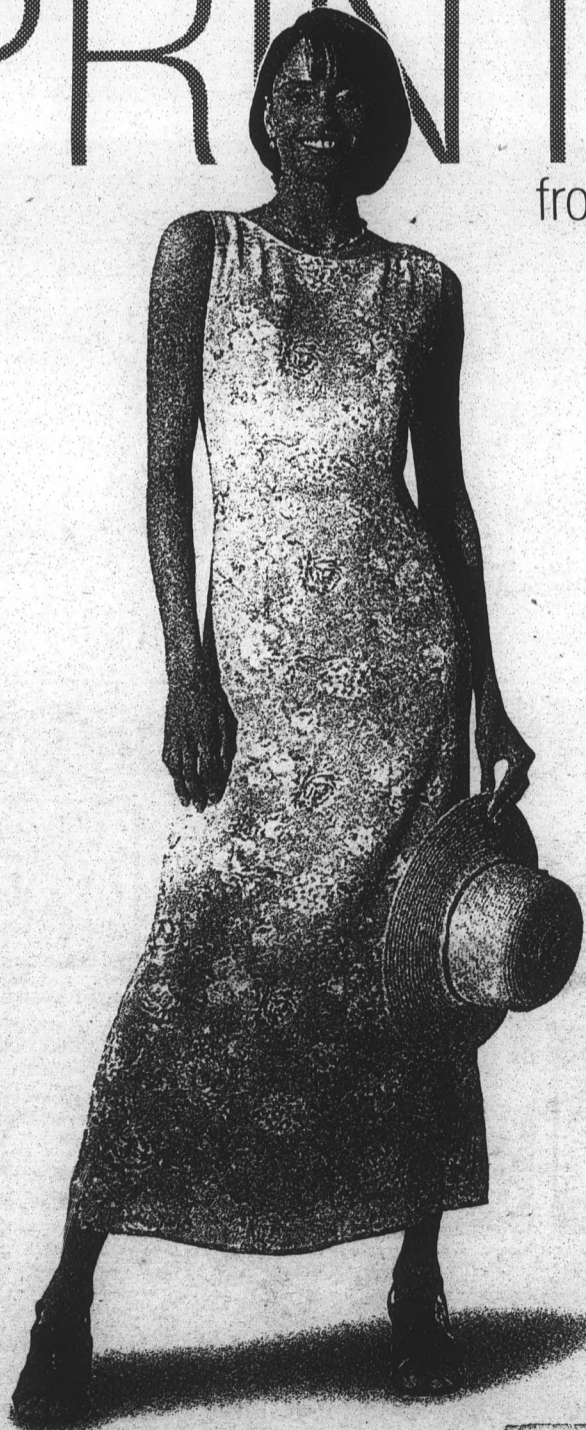

Other entertainment will include: Tribune KidSpace, a hands-on craft activities area for kids of all ages; Ecotopia, which provides an encounter with worldwide environmental concerns; and FitZone, which highlights tips on maintaining a healthy lifestyle. A new exhibit, "Fun in the Sun," will showcase activities that people do in the sun, such as boating and jet-skiing.

Valley Metro Bus Service will be available from various parts of the Metro Phoenix area to Tempe, on Saturday and Sunday, from 5 a.m. to 10 p.m. Flash buses will run between the event and parking Lot 59.

Softball squad ready for move back into top 10

BY JOSH DEFAMIO
STATE PRESS

The 11th-ranked ASU softball team finally gets a chance to move back into the top 10 when it hosts a doubleheader versus No. 5 Washington this Saturday.

ASU (27-7, 5-3 Pac-10) was ranked as high as No. 8 earlier in the year, but has fallen three spots in recent weeks.

The matchups mark the first of 20 consecutive games against Pac-10 opponents. The Pac-10 is the toughest conference, featuring seven of its eight teams ranked in the top 35, including four in the top 15.

"The whole Pac-10 is up in the air," sophomore Carla Fortune said. "UofA has lost a couple of times. We have a good chance of taking the whole thing, I believe."

No. 1 Arizona has lost two of their past five games, both against Pac-10 opponents, after a 30-0 start.

The Huskies feature a lineup balanced with power and speed. Seven players boast averages above .300, led by sophomore Becky Newbry (.391). Senior Sara Pickering leads the team in homeruns (6), RBI (30), doubles (13), and slugging percentage (.692).

The games will also be a match up of the two fastest teams in the Pac-10. ASU and Washington players combine to hold nine of the top 10 places in the conference stolen base list.

"I don't think we're going to pitch differently to them because of their stolen bases," senior pitcher Carrie James said. "When they're on the bases, I'm going to be more aware (of their presence) as they may try a delayed steal or something. And I think the catchers will be ready for that, too."

"I'll be worried about them more," Fortune, the starting catcher, said. "But as a catcher I'm supposed to be ready all the time."

The contests are the first Pac-10 games for Washington (24-6, 0-0) this year. Scheduled contests against Oregon and Oregon State last weekend were washed out due to rain.

The first game will begin at 6 p.m. at Sun Devils Club Stadium.

NOTES

•Junior Raja Woods was very productive during last week's Diamond Devil Classic. The secondbaseman smacked nine hits in 17 at bats (.529), while scoring four runs and knocking in seven more. Woods also knocked a triple and stole six bases. She currently leads the Sun Devils with 22 steals.

•Senior Lisa Dacquisto ranks right behind Woods with 21 stolen bases. Dacquisto is the ASU career leader in stolen bases (98) and hits (266)

•James had a part in four of the five wins last weekend. The pitcher picked up her fifth win on a complete game three-hitter versus Southern Utah. She also saved three contests, bringing her Pac-10 leading total to five.

Senior Lisa Dacquisto takes a cut at an opponent's fastball. Dacquisto will lead off when the No. 11 Sun Devils host No. 5 Washington on Saturday night.

Dan O'Brien leads group of elite tracksters at Classic

BY LORI HARO
STATE PRESS

The 18th annual Sun Angel Classic continues its quest in providing some of the most talented collegiate and world-class track athletes Saturday as the meet features Olympic decathlon champion Dan O'Brien, among many others.

"It's more of a showcase meet than the classic competitive collegiate meet," head coach Greg Kraft said.

The meet will start at 11:30 a.m. with the men's hammer throw kicking off the events. The final event will be the men's 4x400-meter relay scheduled at 6:50 p.m. Teams from USC, UofA, Florida, Iowa, Nebraska, Northern Arizona and others will compete.

Besides Dan O'Brien, other elite athletes expected to show are former NCAA Champions Tim Harden, Anna Sordenberg and Nick Hysong. Lynda Tolbert-Goode, a former ASU assistant coach, will return to defend her 100-meter hurdles title. Olympic gold medalist Inger Miller in the 4x100-meter relay is also expected to compete.

This year's meet honoree will be Uli Williams. Williams was a former ASU sprinter who took gold at the 1964 Olympic Games as a member of the U.S. 4x400-meter relay team.

Last year Mika Laiho set the school record in the hammer throw with a toss of 223-5. Laiho has since surpassed that record, when he threw 227-4 at the Willie Williams Classic March 22.

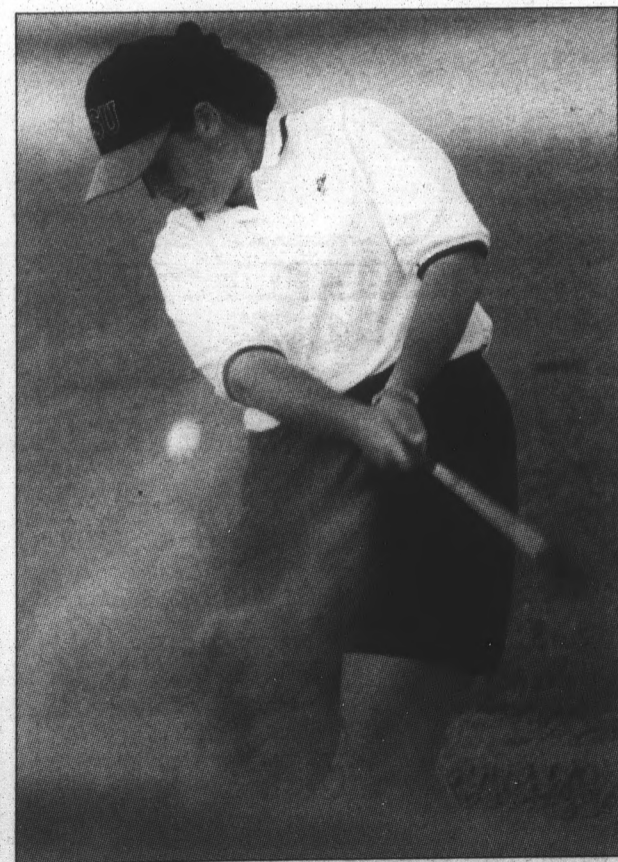

Kraft said that the entire track and field department are really looking forward to this event, as it is traditionally the biggest one of the season. Also this year it should be even better since it will be held on the newly refurbished track.

"It's just one of those big meets where elite athletes come in to see where they are, and I think it is to our advantage to compete against them," hurdler Karen Vigilant said.

This will mark the second meet on the new track and many of the athletes are still trying to get used to it. Vigilant said that there is a large difference between the track they practiced on at Tempe High School, which was hard, and the track at Sun Angel which is incredibly soft. She said that it is very much like an indoor track.

"We're not used to running on our track because it takes some getting used to, but after these meets we'll be better prepared," Vigilant said.

Junior Kellee Booth and the rest of the ASU women's golf team hope to continue their winning ways when they host the PING/ASU Invitational this weekend at the Karsten Golf Course.

ASU hosts PING/ASU

BY MATT PAULSON
STATE PRESS

Coaches at all levels emphasize the importance of winning at home. ASU women's head golf coach Linda Vollstedt seems to have gotten this point across.

In her 16 years as coach at ASU, the Sun Devils have dominated the ASU Invitational, winning nine times. In the tournament's 31-year history, the Sun Devils have won their home tournament on 19 occasions. Currently, ASU is the four-time defending champion.

Individually, an ASU swinger has captured the first-place medal in each of the last three years.

The Sun Devils also hold the record for lowest three-round team total at 859 strokes.

This weekend, ASU, which is ranked No. 3 in the Rolex Collegiate Rankings and No. 1 in the Golf Week/Taylor Made Collegiate Rankings, will try and extend its dominance at the Karsten Golf Course when they host the PING/ASU Invitational.

The tournament runs today through Sunday. Tee times are at 8 a.m. and 10 a.m. today and Saturday and 7:30 a.m. and 9:30 a.m. on Sunday.

Vollstedt said the home field advantage has been beneficial to the Sun Devil's success in the Pac-10 and on a national level. ASU has won Pac-10 titles the past four years and the NCAA National Championship four times in the 1990s.

"It's always nice to win a tournament," Vollstedt said. "Traditionally we've done well at this tournament, and we look forward to having the home crowd. It's nice to have our last tournament of the (regular) season at home because we feel that this is a stepping stone to postseason play."

BOOTH HONORED

Earlier in the week, junior All-American Kellee Booth was named as a Honda Award nominee. The Honda Award is given to the top female collegiate athletes in 11 different NCAA sports. If Booth, ranked No. 6 individually in the nation, claims the prize, she will become the second Sun Devil to obtain such an honor. ASU alum Wendy Ward was a two-time recipient.

Boulez bully Bulls

LANDOVER, Md. (AP) — The Washington Bullets, trying to qualify for the playoffs and a chance to play the Bulls, gave themselves some hope for the future by handing Chicago its 10th loss of the season, 110-102 Thursday night.

The loss ended any chance that Chicago could improve on its record-setting 72-10 record of a year ago. The Bulls now need to win their final nine games to match last season's mark.

Rod Strickland had 26 points and 14 assists and shrugged off a sprained ankle to lead a fourth-quarter charge that carried Washington to its season-high sixth straight victory.

The Bullets moved into a tie with idle Cleveland in the race for the final playoff spot in the Eastern Conference, but Washington has the tiebreaker edge.

If the Bulls win the East and Washington finishes eighth, the teams would meet in the first round of the playoffs. If this was a preview, the Bulls could be in for a battle.

Washington outrebounded Chicago 46-29 and pulled away down the stretch, overcoming 34 points by Michael Jordan and 26 from Scottie Pippen. The Bulls had won eight straight overall and had defeated Washington eight straight times since January 1995.

"Big" Gheorge Muresan finished with 24 points, hitting 11 of 16 shots, and had 13 rebounds.

Baseball squad has much to think about vs. UCLA

By PERCY EDNALINO JR.
STATE PRESS

There are just three things on the minds of the members of the ASU baseball team. One is a 4-3 loss to the Bruins on Feb. 21. The other is a 16-5 loss to UCLA on Feb. 22.

The third is the Bruins' No. 2 ranking in the nation.

So when the team hosts UCLA at 7 tonight at Packard Stadium, the Bruins (28-7-1, 8-4) won't be receiving a warm reception.

"We're not going to treat them like gods or anything," Left fielder Dan McKinley said.

UCLA's 8-7 loss to Pepperdine on Tuesday also gives the Sun Devils reason to believe that the Bruins are not as invulnerable as they'd like to think.

Earlier this season, ASU dropped two of three to the Bruins at Jackie Robinson Stadium. ASU's only win came when the Sun Devils pounded out a 17-12 win during the last game of the series.

"We'd like to win all three of these games and every at-bat is crucial," righthanded pitcher Jeff Cermak said.

And although the Bruins are solid on both offense and defense, Cermak said pitching will play a major role for both teams.

"It's just a matter of who pitches better and plays better defense this weekend," he said. "We've both shown that we can both score a lot of runs, and I think that will be the same case this weekend."

The Bruins have arguably the toughest pitching staff in the Pac-10's Southern Division. Junior Jim Parque (9-0, 2.21 ERA) leads the Six-Pac in strikeouts with 76. Parque also leads the conference with his perfect record. Teammate Tom Jacquez is in second place with a 7-1 record with two complete games.

ASU head coach Pat Murphy said UCLA's strength at pitching allows their offense to stay comfortable during games. Murphy said despite the team's 15 losses, the Sun Devils need to maintain their confidence. Murphy also was quick to point out that 10 of ASU's losses have been to the top teams in the country.

"You can't beat yourself up," Murphy said. "The reason this team isn't confident is because they're playing the top 10 teams week in and week out."

And although the Sun Devils have yet to reach .500 in the Six-Pac, lefthanded pitcher Ryan Mills is in second place in the conference with 75 strikeouts. Mills (3-1, 2.97) said tonight's

Dan McKinley

No. 2 UCLA (28-7-1, 8-4)

TROJAN UPDATE

UCLA is coming off a 8-7 loss to Pepperdine on Tuesday. The Bruins previously swept a three-game series with California on Mar. 27-29 ... Troy Glaus, who is hitting .424 with a team-high 17 home runs, has the Bruins' second-best batting average behind Pete Zamora. Zamora, Sunday's starter, is hitting .464 with 13 home runs and 45 RBI ... Jim Parque, Friday's starter, remains undefeated at 9-0. Parque, who also boasts a 2.21 ERA, leads the Bruins with 76 strikeouts ... Center fielder Eric Valent is hitting .387 with 14 home runs and leads the Bruins with 76 RBI ... Jake Meyer leads the Bruins with four saves. Meyer (2-1, 1.89) has allowed just 12 hits and eight runs in 19 innings of work.

- compiled by Percy Ednalino Jr.

matchup between him and Parque should not be treated as the focal point of the game.

"It really doesn't matter to me who's throwing on the mound against us," Mills said. "I just want to win."

And how. After dropping three games to USC last weekend, the Sun Devils came back big and beat Grand Canyon 26-14 on Tuesday. For Murphy, Tuesday's game was a "frustration releaser."

With a lineup featuring leadoff hitter Mikel Moreno, and No. 3 and 4 batters McKinley and Andrew Beinbrink, the Sun Devils are solid in the lineup. Moreno is hitting .304 with 10 doubles and 42 RBI at the leadoff spot. Beinbrink is hitting at a

.391 pace with a team-high 49 RBI and 54 hits. McKinley leads all ASU hitters with 11 home runs, 68 hits and 15 stolen bases and a .420 average.

But the same strength on offense also applies to the Bruins.

UCLA is led by junior Troy Glaus' conference-leading 17 home runs. Glaus, who is hitting .424 with 52 RBI, also leads the Bruins with 60 runs scored. But the team's highest batting average belongs to pitcher Pete Zamora. Zamora, also a junior, is hitting at a .464 clip with 13 home runs and 45 RBI.

"That's just it," Murphy said. "We've got a good team and our offense is great, it's just that the teams that we've played are great, too. So we've got to get better."

Gymnasts head north to Midwest Regional

Eric Guzowski/State Press

ASU freshman gymnast Amy Shelton twists and turns through the air as teammates Wendy Eillsberry (2) and Carrie Courtney look on. The Sun Devils travel to Salt Lake City Saturday for the NCAA Midwest Regionals.

FROM STAFF REPORTS

The ASU women's gymnastics team heads to Salt Lake City Saturday with two goals in mind — stick the routines and get the score needed to qualify for nationals.

That has been a tall task for the Sun Devils the last two years, as the team has fallen short both times.

To advance to the NCAA Championships, ASU must either win the regional or be one of the seven at-large teams who earn a bid. There are 12 teams in the finals, one from each of five regions and the top seven scores of teams who do not win a region.

Last year ASU missed qualifying by less than a half of a point with its fourth-place score of 194.075.

ASU comes into the Midwest Regionals ranked No. 5 in the country with a regional qualifying score of 196.030.

The score earned the Sun Devils the No. 2 seed at regionals behind No. 1 seed Utah (196.894). Other teams competing for the regional crown in order of seeding are Nebraska (195.927), BYU (195.447), Denver (194.994) and UofA (194.105).

The Sun Devils are coming off a disappointing performance at the Pac-10 Championships where they placed sixth out of seven squads. However, ASU was buoyed by the returns of sophomore Lisa Vincijanovic and junior Kim Keever from injuries, and the stellar performance of junior Carrie Courtney, who scored a career-high of 39.375.

CLUB SPORTS

MEN'S LACROSSE

In its final road contest of the season, the ASU men's lacrosse team will be in Los Angeles Sunday to face the University of Loyola Marymount.

The Sun Devils (5-3) will be trying to stop a two-game losing streak. Game time is noon.

MEN'S VOLLEYBALL

For the second time in three weeks, the ASU men's volleyball team will face conference foes University of Colorado and United States Air Force Academy.

Tonight, the Sun Devils face the UC Buffaloes in Boulder, Colo. Saturday, they will be in Colorado Springs, Colo. to exchange spikes with the USAFA Falcons.

WATER POLO

The ASU water polo club teams will host their 13th annual ASU Desert Duel this weekend at the Mona Plummer Aquatic Center.

The tournament is one of the largest in the country with a total of 25 teams participating. The nation's top 25 teams, No. 1 Olympic Club (Palo Alto, Calif.) and No. 2 San Diego Shores, will compete with 16 other men's teams. Seven teams are included in the women's bracket.

Sun Devil teams compete on Friday evening at 4:30, 6:10, 8:40 and 9:30; Saturday at 8:40 a.m., noon, 12:50 p.m., 3:20 p.m. and 6:40 p.m.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

by Frances Drake

Friday, April 4, 1997

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) Social life picks up in the coming month. You'll be going out more for good times. However, concentrate on necessities when shopping for the home and avoid frivolous expenditures.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) You'll be doing more entertaining at home in the coming weeks. You add to that good impression you made yesterday on bigwigs. Things should be going your way soon.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) It's not a good day to shop for children's clothing, but outings together are favored. Partners will feel especially close to each other. Enjoy recreational interests.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) It's a great day for getting things done around the house, though it's not the time to have company over. You could have mixed feelings about a social engagement on your schedule for evening hours.

LEO (July 23 to Aug. 22) Be practical where career interests are concerned. You could be taking on more than you can handle. Pleasure pursuits are indeed favored, so enjoy yourself!

VIRGO (Aug. 23 to Sept. 22) You'll be wanting to spend some extra time alone with a loved one. A trip will soon be on your agenda. You'll be making headway with a creative or mental interest.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) You're both idealistic and practical, but could have difficulty reconciling these qualities. Things aren't progressing as quickly as you'd like. Curb this impatience.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) Try not to get unduly upset about little things. Concern about a money situation could dampen your enthusiasm for social activities. Avoid risk taking.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) You could meet with romance through the job. However, a co-worker is a bit touchy. Favorable developments in your family life make evening hours somewhat special.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 19) Shopping for the home is favored early in the day. After dark, you'll want to look your best, as you couldn't have a better evening for dates and getting together with friends.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 to Feb. 18) Your positive outlook spurs you to make things happen for you. A splendid career opportunity could come to you. Entertaining at home should be a delight.

PISCES (Feb. 19 to March 20) Behind-the-scenes financial developments are favorable. Charm is your ally in all you do. Good news pertains to publishing, travel and educational interests.

YOU BORN TODAY have a knack for looking at the big picture in one fell swoop. You're inclined to be in dependent and to do your own thing. This can put some people off, but they soon are inspired to follow your lead. In business, you'd be a good adviser, but you feel more at home in an artistic or professional career. Generally, you're a good money-maker.
