Surveyor arrives safely at Red Planet

This is an artist's concept of the Mars Global Surveyor in the process of "aerobraking" about 235 miles above the Martian surface. The $250 million Surveyor is scheduled to begin orbiting Mars Thursday to map the Red Planet in detail to select future landing sites.

After 10 months in space, the Mars Global Surveyor entered orbit Thursday at 7 p.m. with the help of ASU scientists.

"They are truly space communication pioneers," said ASU President Lattie Coor of the scientists. "This is truly a team effort."

An estimated 150 students, faculty and Motorola employees attended a reception at the Mauer Building to witness Surveyor's arrival at the Red Planet. The reception was themed with Mars candy bars.

Surveyor took off Nov. 7, 1996 from the Kennedy Space Center in Florida.

As the craft entered the planet's orbit, the main engine ignited and burned for 22 minutes. During this time, communication with NASA was temporarily cut off as planned. Communication was reestablished as Surveyor returned from behind Mars, indicating admission into orbit.

Jim Rice, an ASU doctorate student in geography, said

Steve Ruff, Mars Global Surveyor staff member, explains how the spacecraft entered the orbit of Mars. Many members of the ASU community watched the successful beginnings of the mission Thursday night.

Surveyor will perform an elliptical, or oval, orbit.

"Over the next few months it will be aerobraking, or closing in on its orbit around Mars," Rice said.

One of the five instruments on board the Surveyor is the thermal emission spectrometer (TES), an instrument that will map the minerals of Mars and monitor changes in both weather and the Martian polar ice caps. The TES investigation is led by ASU geologist Philip Christensen.

"It's going to begin collecting data Saturday night that will help people at the Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena, California to begin ground-breaking procedures," said Dennis Durband of the ASU News Bureau.

Beginning in March, scientists will begin to receive mapping information through the TES.

Despite the failure of the Mars Observer four years ago, the Surveyor team was optimistic about the success of the spacecraft.

"(The public) saw us lose the Mars Observer," said Dr. Ken Edgett, director of the Arizona Mars K-12 Education Program. "To go into orbit after all this time is indescrib-

Fraternity houses fired up over sprinkler requirement

BY GENOA SIBOLD-COHN

Despite ruinous fires in recent years at fraternity houses on Alpha Drive, the ASU-owned properties still lack adequate fire safety systems.

None of the nine houses on Alpha Drive have the required automated fire sprinkler systems throughout the facility and both the state fire marshal and campus fraternities demand something be done.

A mandate from State Fire Marshal Duane Peil, addressed to ASU in July 1996, called for the installation of fire sprinkler systems in fraternity houses on Alpha Drive before August 1998.

Fraternity members contacted said they were not aware of the fire marshal's mandate.

"As far as I know, there's been no mention of when and whether they have to be installed," said Ryan Nelson, Sigma Alpha Epsilon president.

In 1991, a fire caused $200,000 damage to the Phi Sigma Kappa fraternity and in May a blaze at Pi Kappa Alpha forced members to move out just before finals week.

The exact cost for adding the sprinklers is not known. However, ASU spent $87,000 to update the Theta Chi house this summer.

Bob Francis, Greek Life executive director, said ASU paid for the installation fire

Class credits proposed for student government volunteers

BY KARA SHIRE
STATE PRESS

A new internship program proposed by the Associated Students of ASU will give students class credit for working in student government.

"The goal was to get students involved in a meaningful way with Associated Students," ASASU President Andy Ortiz said. "What we're shooting for is to have students work 15 weeks where they could put in their time with Associated Students and in return they could earn three credits."

The program originated from the office of the ASASU president and would require students to work a minimum of 20 hours per week. At the end of the 15-week program, each student would be required to submit a paper describing the department for which they worked.

"This is going to put the pressure on us to keep things going — to keep us active," Ortiz said. "That's good. One of the problems with Associated Students is in the spring we start to coast a little. I don't mind scrutinizing, but I want us to be doing our best and I want our interns to be giving 110 percent."

Support for the proposal is being sought from various University departments.

"I think it's a great opportunity for students to learn something other than just listening to someone talk," said Thomas Keating, political science internship coordinator. "Often what they learn the most about is themselves (and what they like doing."

James Spiers, the internship coordinator for the marketing department, said he doesn't like the idea of the internship being unpaid.

"I don't push the unpaid," he said. "If they're bringing something to the table they should get paid. Slave labor went out a long time ago. It's a good idea though and if a student agrees to it I have no problem with it."

Ortiz said the program is still in its beginning phase.

"This is a trial balloon that we're flying up there," he said. "In order to get something like this done we have to get it out there. It may not be perfect. It may need revisions but we're starting from where we're at."

ASU Geologist Doug Howard said the TES is the same type used on the failed Mars Observer in 1993, but the spacecraft itself is a new model.

"The actual spacecraft is different because it is no longer based on a weather satellite system," Howard said. "This time it's a completely new design and it carries less of a payload."

Howard added that the new spacecraft is lighter and more cost effective.

The Surveyor team will begin receiving data at about 4 p.m. Saturday.

"I would very much like to congratulate the ASU team," said Durrell W. Hillis, senior vice president and general manager of Motorola's space and systems technology group. "This team has demonstrated their capability and talent in their fourth visit to Mars."

protection in all five fraternity houses on Adelphi Drive — including Theta Chi — because those leases differ from Alpha Drive property leases.

Who should pay for installations on Alpha Drive remains to be decided.

"There is a dispute between the fraternities and the University as to who is responsible," said Chris Ward, president of Pi Kappa Alpha House Corporation and a fraternity block organization, Alpha Drive Association.

Ward added that many fraternity members of Alpha Drive chapters believe it is the University's responsibility as the landlord to finance sprinkler installation.

But ASU officials say fraternities must foot the bill.

"The lease indicates that the House Corporation who leased the property is responsible for all improvements to the building," said Jim Gibbs, ASU fire marshal.

Wording in the 1962 lease agreements state "the lessee shall observe and comply with all applicable laws and ordinances ... now in effect or which may be enacted."

Jennus Burton, ASU associate vice president of Administrative Services, said the lease agreement holds fraternities responsible for sprinkler installation.

As changes in the law develop, fraternities must keep the building current with codes, according to the lease.

Jim Geil, deputy state fire marshal, said the code requiring automated fire sprinklers was enacted nearly 10 years ago.

Ward agreed that in past cases, the University claimed provisions within the leasing agreement hold fraternities responsible for maintenance and safety standards.

"Unlike the state relationship between landlord and tenant, (the University views) a tenancy of 40 years as an owner," Ward said, referring to the 1962 lease signed by the nine fraternities on Alpha Drive.

Although the structures are inspected annually for fire safety compliance, inspections cannot guarantee safety in a building without sprinklers.

Geil said fraternity members could be more careful about common hazards such as extension cords and storage of combustible liquids.

"You know how boys are," he said. "We've found things like lint piled up in the laundry room and clothes fallen behind the dryer. Boys don't think of picking up those things."

He added that combustible materials, such as accumulated lint, can fuel a fire.

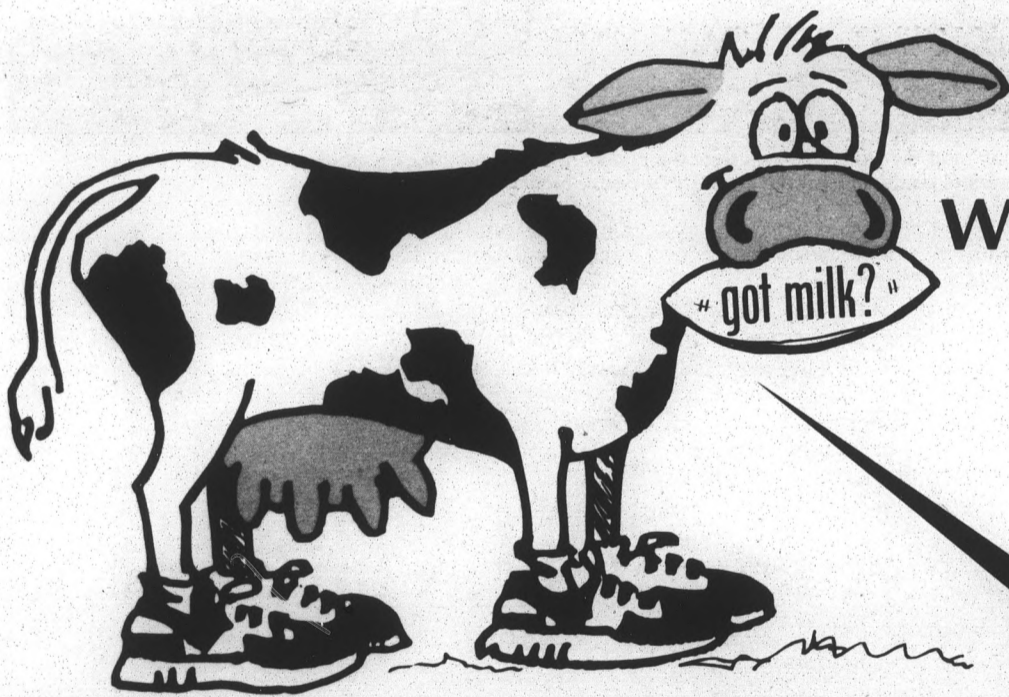

Besides the mandate from the state fire marshal, May's fire at the Pi Kappa Alpha house prompted ASU to review sprinkler installation.

Because of the fire, ASU will install a sprinkler system at the Pi Kappa Alpha House. Installation funding will come from an ASU fire insurance policy on the property, said Francis.

Installation could cost as much as $350,000, Francis said.

Geil said he does not care who pays the bill — it "needs to be done."

"It's a public building," he said. "It needs to be safe and protected."

Indian flag draped over Mother Teresa's body

BY DONNA BRYSON
ASSOCIATED PRESS

CALCUTTA, India — Generals draped the Indian flag over the body of Mother Teresa today, beginning a state tribute to the nun who turned her good works in Calcutta's slums into a worldwide charity.

About 100 nuns of Mother Teresa's Missionaries of Charity, wearing the order's blue and white saris, murmured a prayer while the soldiers gathered for the five-minute ceremony in St. Thomas Church.

Six generals marched in carrying the saffron, white and green flag, turned smartly, and raised the banner over their heads. They lowered it neatly, leaving Mother Teresa's feet and face exposed. Three officers then took up positions behind the body in a vigil that will continue until Mother Teresa's body is taken for her state funeral on Saturday.

"She belongs to the country now," said Dr. Patricia Aubunel, Mother Teresa's physician, who flew in from California last night to attend the services.

After the brief ceremony that lasted five minutes, the nuns sang a hymn in Bengali, the melody soothing as a lullaby: "Our lady I praise you, I thank you."

The Nobel peace laureate died Friday at 87.

The nun's body, which had appeared swollen and discolored in recent days, was so lifelike during today's tribute she appeared to be sleeping. Her face was a normal color and appeared touched up with make-up.

The honor guard at the ceremony included 15 Nepalese Gurkhas and military police wearing red headgear, who stood guard at the church doors.

In view of India's decision to give her a state funeral, a tribute usually reserved for heads of government, Pope John Paul II will send a high-ranking cleric to conduct her funeral Mass, said Calcutta Archbishop Henry D'Souza. Cardinal Angelo Sodano, the Vatican secretary of state, will lead the papal delegation.

India's foreign ministry said 23 countries will be represented at the funeral. First lady Hillary Rodham Clinton will lead the U.S. delegation.

Thousands of people lined up to file past her body today as the monsoon rains eased slightly. Church hours were extended Wednesday to accommodate the huge crowds still waiting to get in at the 8 p.m. closing time.

On Saturday, the nun's body will be borne on a military gun carriage from St. Thomas Church to an indoor stadium for the funeral, then to the Missionaries of Charity complex for burial.

D'Souza has defended the decision to bury Mother Teresa at her mission headquarters instead of a place more accessible to the public, saying the nuns of her order wanted her close to them. He also noted Christian graves have occasionally been desecrated in largely Hindu and Muslim Calcutta.

Lawyer accuses former cop of lying about Steve Biko's murder

BY PAT REBER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

PORT ELIZABETH, South Africa — A former policeman was accused of lying about the circumstances of Steve Biko's 1977 death during cross-examination today at an amnesty hearing for the killers of one of South Africa's most popular black leaders.

Biko died of brain injuries several days after being beaten by police while being interrogated. Five former policemen are seeking amnesty, claiming Biko hit his head on a wall during a scuffle.

Harold Snyman, a police major at the time, has been grilled since the opening Wednesday of one of the most high-profile cases yet to be handled by the Truth and Reconciliation Commission, set up to investigate apartheid-era crimes by all sides.

"You have not told the truth," George Bizos, a prominent attorney hired by Biko's family to oppose amnesty, told Snyman today. "If you want us to believe this was a scuffle, you must give us details, or we will think you cooked the facts."

Sitting rigidly on the edge of his chair, hands in lap, and speaking so softly he had to be told to speak up, the thin, bespectacled Snyman, 69, was particularly grilled about how the scuffle started.

Snyman has testified the fatal interrogation session with a sleep-deprived, naked Biko turned confrontational as Biko tried to sit on a stool.

"Was your impression that (Biko) was a proud man and your self-respect would have been insulted if he had sat on a chair?" Bizos asked.

"He was a high-profile leader of black-consciousness organization and by sitting down he maintained his own status," Snyman answered.

Snyman repeatedly told Bizos that Biko was not allowed to sit during the interrogation because "it was necessary to detain and interrogate people to prevent the overthrow of the state order."

The answer came so often that Bizos turned and grinned to a delighted and nearly all-black audience in Centenary Hall in New Brighton, a black township outside Port Elizabeth.

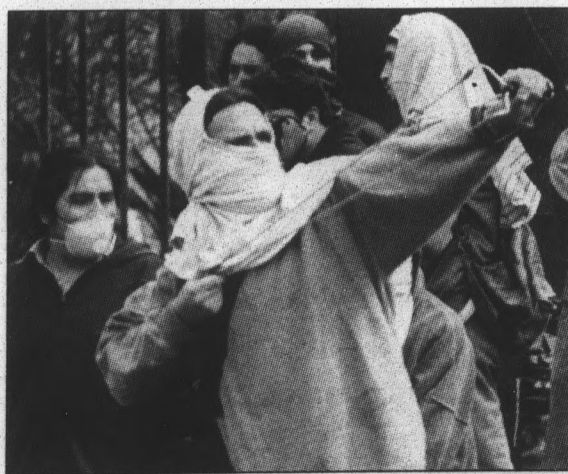

The crowd dwindled from Wednesday's 2,000 to about 500 for the second day of the hearings.

Snyman was commander over four other policemen also seeking amnesty for the killing of Biko, 30, who preached that blacks should be proud of their culture and take control of their country. He was portrayed by actor Denzel Washington in the 1987 movie, Cry Freedom.

Snyman admitted Wednesday that police covered up the circumstances of the killing, originally claiming it occurred on Sept. 7, 1977, instead of the day before to hide the delay in calling a doctor.

Biko died on Sept. 12, 1977, after being driven in the back of a police pickup truck 720 miles from Port Elizabeth to Pretoria.

Federal drug agents apologize to couple for mistaken marijuana trafficking raid

LEE, Mass. (AP) — A federal drug agent publicly apologized Thursday for raiding the home of a local building inspector on the mistaken suspicion he was a marijuana trafficker. A spokesman for the couple said, however, they were awaiting a personal apology and intended to press forward with complaints.

"This is the all-American family. If it could happen to them, it could happen to anybody," said state Rep. Chris Hodgkins, a relative who acted as their spokesman Thursday.

"They are law-abiding citizens, and I'm very, very sorry this happened," said George Festa, the agent in charge of the federal Drug Enforcement Administration's operations in New England.

Daniel Keenan, who serves as building inspector in Lee and neighboring Stockbridge, said he was reading the newspaper in his front yard on Sept. 5, with his son playing nearby, when six state and federal officers drove up in separate cars. The agents told him they had reason to believe that 300 pounds of marijuana had been in his garage.

Keenan said the agents didn't have a search warrant, but he signed a consent form allowing the house and garage to be searched.

They were told that if they refused, they would be put in handcuffs, a search warrant would be issued, and their belongings would be tossed into the middle of their rooms, Hodgkins said. The agents claimed to have video showing a drug delivery to the house.

As neighbors and the couple's three young children gathered to watch, the agents used a drug-sniffing dog to search the house and garage. After a fruitless two-hour search, they left. But the agents said they might return for further interrogation.

Festa said an internal investigation was under way to determine just how the Keenans came to be targeted. He said he was sending a regional supervisor to talk to the family and also planned to make a personal visit to apologize.

OPINION

STATE PRESS Boos & Bravos

BOO — To Kevin White, ASU's athletic director, for letting the media's portrayal of Coach Bill Frieder's basketball team sway him to negotiate a proposal for Frieder's exit. While at least a dozen of Frieder's players have given the media plenty to write about, the off-court antics of the players aren't Frieder's responsibility. The next coach will undoubtedly have many of the same problems.

BRAVO — To Jane Dee Hull, the new governor of Arizona, for her pro-education stance. Hull announced Wednesday that one of her highest priorities was to focus on the much-needed reform-of school funding. If the courts stand by their decision that Assistance to Build Classrooms plan is truly insufficient, Hull wants to have an alternative. This seems much more sensible than simply berating the court system for doing its job. The winds of change are indeed a'blowing.

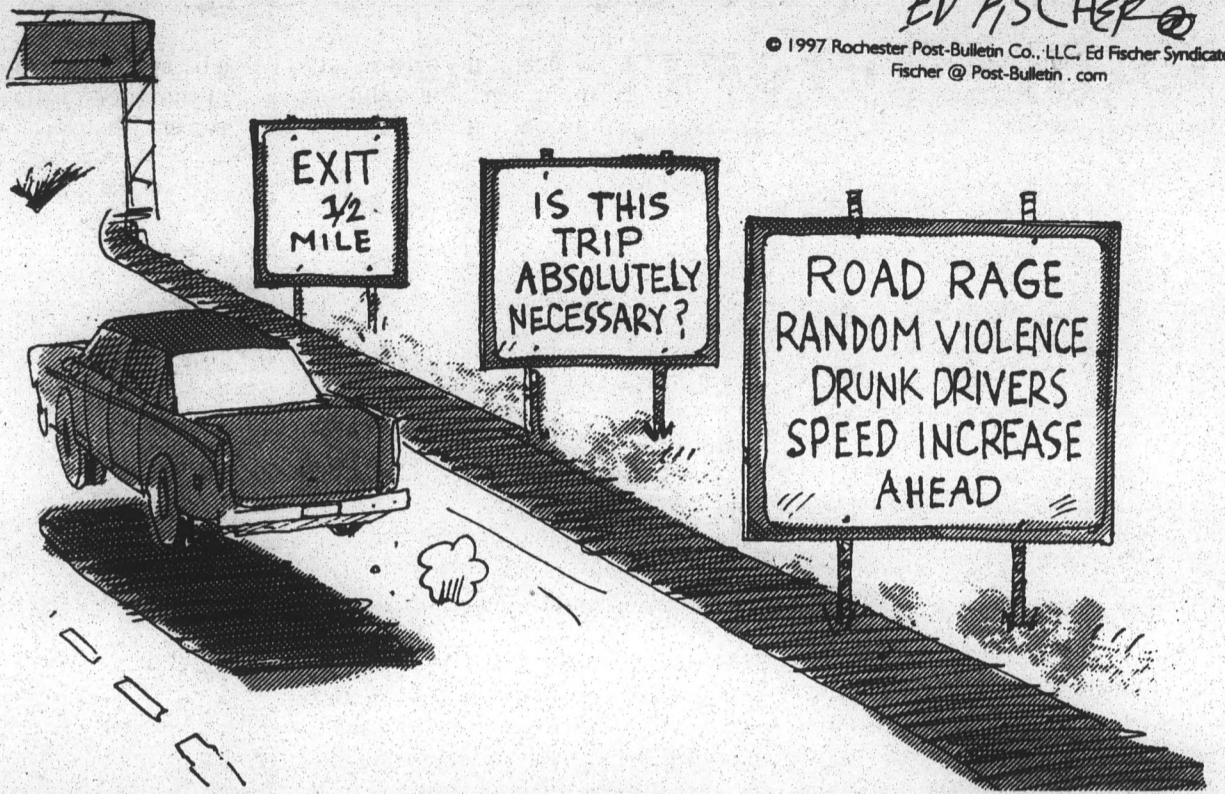

BRAVO — To Ubiquity, the group fighting to get medical and dental benefits to the domestic partners of ASU's gay and lesbian employees. State law supposedly prevents dispensing such benefits, but state law on this issue is based on outdated ideas of moral superiority. We'd love to give another bravo someday to the people who eventually get this law changed.

BOO — To the transit election results in Phoenix and Scottsdale. Though the plan to widen the subsidization of the Valley's bus riders wasn't perfect, it was a plan. The opponents of the half-cent sales tax talked about alternatives, but actually offered none. Though some votes are still being tallied in the Phoenix election, it looks like history is repeating itself. Voters have turned down transit plan after transit plan, for one reason or another. Someday we're going to be very, very sorry for our short-sightedness. Air pollution is getting worse, but the other important issue here is traffic congestion. We're expected to add another million-and-a-half people by the year 2020. Can you say total gridlock?

BOO — To Congressman Matt Salmon. The State Press sent a letter to our representative last week asking how he intended to vote on a bill giving the public more access to police reports. His staff responded promptly. We were told that Salmon only had time to respond to constituents in his home state. Maybe if he spent our money on staff members who took more than 10 seconds to actually read letters, they would figure out what the "A" in ASU stands for.

BOO — To New Times, for ripping off our "Adiós Fife" headline for the paper's cover this week. Though imitation is the sincerest form of flattery, we and others forced through four semesters of Spanish were embarrassed to see the accent mark over the "o" in "adiós" missing. Another thing: what's up with writing a story about John Dougherty? Sure, he did a bang-up job on the Symington trail and yes, Fife's conviction was a vindication for Dougherty's incessant railing over a sitting governor, but a column on the paper's own reporter? Don't break your arm patting yourselves on the back, guys.

BOO — If we give a boo to New Times for a typo, it's only fair that we give one to ourselves for misspelling "professor" in a headline in Wednesday's paper. Big ouch.

The new market of removing tatoos

As a public service to frustrated ASU students who have yet to find a niche in the high-tech job market, I would like to bring to your attention a growth field of the future. Everyone knows that computer science is the fastest track to a prosperous career in tomorrow's job market. There is hope, however, for the computer illiterate, the Hyundais of the Information Super-whatcha-ma-hooz-it.

A DAM SCHIFFER
Columnist

Audiology would seem to be a natural choice for a growth field, given the remarkable efficiency at which our generation is destroying its collective hearing with personal stereos, car stereos, hi-fi home audio-visual systems and concerts. My focus, however, is on a field that is likely to be overlooked by today's technophiles, but will, nevertheless, provide steady employment to entrepreneurs who recognize the growth potential of tattoo removal.

That's right — tattoo removal. In case you haven't noticed, over the last five years the number of Americans acquiring permanent skin ornaments has increased dramatically. In fact, it seems eminently reasonable to call it a full-blown "trend." I put that word in quotes because it is likely to invite two counter arguments from the tattooed masses: 1) It is not a trend; it has always been around and 2) Even if it is a trend, my own decision to get a tattoo was not motivated by trendy considerations, but rather by [fill in your own reason here].

I intend to prove both arguments wrong by simple mathematics. First, although tattoos have always been popular in certain segments of society as well as in certain countries, it is easily demonstrable that the number of Americans getting tattoos in recent years has skyrocketed.

For the sake of arguing with round numbers, I will estimate that 10 percent of Americans had tattoos 10 years ago, and 30 percent have them today. Though I do not have the exact figures, it is important to understand that the number has definitely increased; this point is not controversial. Just like body piercing two years ago, flannel five years ago and parachute pants 15 years ago, people who otherwise would not partake in an activity are doing so because it is "cool." By my rough estimate, two-thirds of all recent tattoo acquisitions were by virtue of its trendiness.

At this point, many of my inked comrades will argue that, while some of our peers must be simply following a trend, they personally chose their tattoo irrespective of what everyone else is doing. Mathematically, this "someone else was being trendy, but not me" argument has its limits. For every three recent tattoo-parlor customers who tell you that they did not do it to be trendy, roughly two of them are lying or are self-deluded. I know this assertion will be unpopular, but it is easily verifiable with elementary school math.

The importance of the trendy nature of tattoos should now be evident. Just as no one today would be caught dead in parachute pants and trendy youth are ditching their body piercings faster than they ditched their flannels three years ago, tattoos will inevitably be relegated to the fashion doghouse. Whether it happens next year or in 10 years is open to debate. If fashion history has taught us anything, it is that there is no such thing as a permanent trend. Even fedoras went out of style after John Kennedy's hatless escapades.

My guess is that tattoos will maintain their chic for a while, as tattooed fashion gurus have a vested interest in maintaining the prestige of their permanent body alterations. As new fashion leaders replace the old ones, however, the inevitable tide of fashion fluctuation will relegate body art to the "out" status of such former fashion staples as leg warmers and carving messages in flat-tops. Fashion-conscious individuals whose worst fear in life is to be dressed in last year's garb will fall all over each other to undo their most permanent of fashion choices.

Count me in as an investor in the tattoo-removal industry. Adam Schiffer is a graduate student in political science.

Mother Teresa deserved better tribute from media

Amongst the growing carpet of flowers outside Kensington Palace, the frenzied blaming of paparazzi and the collective anguish of thousands of people, we have lost much more than a princess. An old, frail, 87-year-old woman died in Calcutta five days later, largely ignored by the international press. While supposedly reporting Mother Teresa's death, a special on NBC proclaimed across a picture of Princess Diana with Mother Teresa, "Touched by an Angel." Several newspapers used a similar strategy and treated Mother's death as an appendage to the Di story in a grossly disrespectful and unfair manner. Surely, a woman who had devoted her whole life to the cause of the downtrodden and the "poorest of the poor" deserved a place of her own in the eyes of the media.

Guest Columnist

What criteria motivate the media to create images of certain public figures and elevate them to a mythical status? Princess Diana is being called "the queen of hearts," the photographers in the Paris car chase have been labeled "the Paris seven" and stores in London are ringing in the cash register with sales of Diana mementos. It could be argued that the greater news value of Diana's death versus Mother Teresa's exists because of the very tragic nature of the car accident that killed Diana. But this explanation seems too simplistic to hold ground. The media, and subsequently, the masses, loved Diana because she stood for the underlying values on which our society places immense significance — she was young, rich, glamorous, royal and wronged.

Mother Teresa, on the other hand, shunned the attention of the press and in her simple, white cotton sari worked ceaselessly for the cause of humanity. Born Agnes Gonxha Bojaxhiu in Skopje (then in Albania) on Aug. 26, 1910, the youngest of three children, she realized her "calling" early in life. Inspired by Yugoslav missionaries serving in East India, she took the veil and entered the Loreto Order, engaged in educating the poor. She reached the shores of Calcutta in 1929 and from then on, her commitment to the cause never allowed her to look back. She was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize in 1979, and in a heart-warming gesture, she requested the celebration banquet be canceled and the money saved to be donated to charity.

My memories of Mother Teresa trace back to the first time I walked into the Missionaries of Charity home in Bombay as a 15-year-old. The smell of disinfectant and boiling lentils hung to the row of beds in the children's ward. Morning was a busy time and the nuns on duty directed us to start helping with feeding and cleaning. I was hesitant, not quite knowing what to do as I stood awkwardly among the clamor. Abandoned and homeless babies were crying in the cots and as I lifted a little girl into my arms, it struck me how easy it was to give. It was this very principle which Mother embodied; she took her religious name from St. Therese of Lisieux, a French nun who spoke of the "little way."

Many years later, as a reporter for the Bombay Times in India, I found myself covering an art exhibit dedicated to an ailing Mother Teresa. The mood at the gallery was somber, yet hopeful. "Most of the paintings capture the essence of Mother, her radiance and her gentleness. She has the kindest eyes," commented a college student, obviously moved by what she saw.

Like all public figures, Mother Teresa's image was not untainted. She was criticized for her meetings with certain world leaders and businessmen, such as the Duvaliers of Haiti and the press baron Robert Maxwell. Her anti-abortion stand also provoked severe criticism.

A painting that appealed to most people at the art exhibit portrayed a long, bamboo-lined path being traversed by the figure of Mother Teresa. An artist suggested that it spoke of Mother's endless journey: "She appears tired, as if she's heading home."

In ignoring Mother Teresa's journey, the world press has done a disservice to a humble, affectionate and selfless human being.

Press article casts fraternity in 'bad light'

The Fraternity of Phi Gamma Delta would like to express our opinion on what was perceived to be a "front-page newsworthy issue" by the State Press and Tim Baxter. Mr. Baxter's article on Phi Gamma Delta in the Sept. 10 issue of the State Press contains some serious inaccuracies and half-truths that we would like addressed. Considering their obtuse relationship to the zoning variance, we cannot help but believe that Mr. Baxter's article was merely a pretext for fraternity bashing.

First, despite Mr. Baxter's implications, none of the criminal calls at 1040 Apache during Phi Gamma Delta's occupancy involved the fraternity's members. All have involved burglaries or vandalism by unknown suspects who caused damage to the house and the disappearance of some of its contents. The Fraternity has fully complied with all zoning restrictions placed on their activities by the city and continues to do so. That is why the owner of the Super 8 Motel refers to us as "good neighbors." Indeed, the manager of the Tempe Bowl reversed her position and spoke in favor of the variance in front of the Board of Regulation.

Second, the party of Sept. 5 did not go past 1 a.m. We note that this fabrication is the only statement in the article not attributed to someone. This is not just a coincidence. In fact, the party was conducted with members of GAARP (sic) and IFC present and in full compliance with both University and city of Tempe regulations, a fact partially substantiated by Sgt. Dyas of the Tempe Police Department.

Third, what do hazing and other incidents from over ten years ago have to do with a zoning variance? Nothing, except to provide an avenue for Mr. Baxter to engage in yellow journalism. In truth, the Fraternity, at the request of its own members, expelled brothers involved in hazing and other inappropriate activities in 1986-7. These members then took their revenge by filing a complaint with the University and in Superior Court. How ironic that Mr. Baxter should use only half of the story to show the Fraternity in a bad light. We cannot help but believe that there is a hidden agenda here.

The Fraternity has lifted itself from the ashes and has demonstrated true character. The Fraternity fully complies with all fraternal, municipal and University regulations and has a completely non-hazing pledge program. Each year the chapter donates hundreds of man hours to local charities in the spirit of volunteerism. We also maintain a GPA almost 20 percent higher than the men's all-campus average. Yet all we get from our student publication is slanted coverage like this. We'd say it was disappointing, but we've come to expect it. It's a shame that an issue like this made it to the State Press. There had to have been a more-newsworthy event that happened on Tuesday or in the past week that all students could learn from.

NFL: No room for 'compromise'

This is in response to Will Collins' expression in the Sept. 11 State Press, entitled "Tagliabue, spare a goal post or two." I just want to know if it is really necessary for nearly 40,000-plus fans to rush an NFL football field and tear down goal posts and rip holes in the field. What joy does that bring to you? I work at Sun Devil Stadium and I find it absolutely ridiculous that you people feel it necessary to destroy someone else's property. We work very hard to provide a stadium where you, as fans, can come to enjoy a football game. We work extremely hard to keep the field looking as great as it does. And you, as an ungrateful Cardinals fan, take this for granted and destroy their home.

Let's use an analogy. Let's say that you are hosting a party at your house. At the end of the night, some people decide that they want to start putting holes in your floor because they want to save it as a memento. What if they start tearing down the banister on your stairs and smash the pictures on your walls. Would you be very happy? Would you want those people to come back to your house? And you have the nerve, in your article, to ask the NFL to "compromise" with you to destroy property, because you want to have fun? How would you feel if those who just destroyed your home said to you, "Oh come on Will, we just want to have fun. 'Compromise.'" Think about this for a second.

Granted, I am very happy that the Cardinals beat the Cowboys. But there is absolutely no reason whatsoever to act as childish and disrespectful as those Cardinal fans did on Sunday.

Lastly, do you even think of those innocent people who were injured in your so-called "gala" on Sunday? A security guard, who was just doing his job in trying to stop your ludicrous, mad rush for the goal post was badly injured. Oh, but wait, I forgot, you got the goal posts, forget about everyone else. I forgot how selfish this world has become. I guess there is no respect or common sense in this world anymore, and it is embarrassing for me to say that I am a part of this human race.

Will stated in his article that the NFL has become the enemy of the Cardinal fans. He asks the NFL to make fans a compromise to go on the field to celebrate a victory. If your enemy, as you say, is the NFL, then by God, stay home! Please do not come back because there will never be any conditions or compromises set, whereby you and your childlike followers will be handed a chance to go on the field.

POLICE REPORT

The ASU police reported the following incidents on Thursday:

- A man not associated with ASU was arrested at Normal and Lemon streets for an outstanding warrant. He was turned over to the Tempe Police.
- A student was arrested and booked for trespassing, underage drinking and unlawful use of a license at Manzanita Hall.
- A student reported that someone removed his bike from the Student Recreation Complex where it was locked up.
- A woman not associated with ASU was arrested, cited and released for underage possession of alcohol at Palo Verde East.
- A woman not associated with ASU was arrested, cited and released for driving on a suspended license at University Drive and Priest Road.
- A student was arrested and released for possession of marijuana at 1100 S. Forest Ave. He was referred to the dean of Student Life.
- Three students reported that someone removed some stuff from their room at Sonora Center.
- A green Huffy mountain bike was impounded for safe-keeping from the Physical Sciences H-wing.
- A man not associated with ASU was arrested for drinking and driving at 1000 S. Rural Road.

The Tempe Police reported the following incidents Thursday:

- A 24-year-old man was contacted while standing in the middle of the 2000 block of east Apache Boulevard. For some reason, the man gave police the go-ahead to search his pack, leading to the discovery of a "large quantity of marijuana." He was transported and booked into Tempe City Jail for possessing marijuana for sale.
- A 37-year-old man was stopped after he was riding his bike at night without a light (the fact that he had a small flashlight in his pocket did not deter police). While searching the man, police found a small bag of a white, powdery substance believed to be methamphetamines. Additionally, a records check turned up an outstanding warrant from the Tempe City Jail. Both he and his bike were impounded. He was later released after paying some fines. A drug charge is pending a Department of Public Safety analysis of the white, powdery substance.
- A 28-year-old man was arrested for drinking in public after an officer saw the man chugging some beer out of a 44-ounce bottle of King Cobra (the report did not indicate whether the man got four free ounces with the purchase of 40). He was also arrested on one count of domestic violence after he allegedly punched and choked his girlfriend at his house, 1026 E. Spence Ave. Police reported that as he was being transported to the Tempe City Jail, he "flipped off" people in the car next to the cruiser at University Drive and Rural Road. "yelled profanities" at the "citizens of Tempe," and generally made a big ruckus, causing a traffic delay. He was charged with disorderly conduct and booked into Tempe City Jail. He was held to see a magistrate.

Real Stories From the State Press Police Scanner:

- At around 11 a.m. Monday, a man reportedly had to fight off an attacking dog with a shovel. The dispatcher did not say if the man was a postal worker or what the condition of the dog was.
- Also on Monday, at around 4:30 p.m., a hiker called police to report that a man was walking down a hiking trail in nothing more than a pair of hiking boots and a pink Speedo.
- At around 1:30 p.m. on Tuesday, a man in Phoenix was reportedly throwing his briefcase in the street and running between cars to fetch it. Talk about a rough day at the office.

Tempe firefighters first in nation to earn accreditation

By BRIAN ANDERSON
STATE PRESS

The Tempe Fire Department climbed to one of the higher rungs on the ladder of the fire-fighting profession Thursday night after becoming the first department in the country to be accredited.

At a City Council ceremony, representatives from the Commission on Fire Accreditation International honored the city's fire department with its first accreditation award since the group began entertaining applications in December, 1996.

Mayor Neil Giuliano also presented Fire Chief Cliff Jones with a plaque from Fire Chief Magazine for Career

Fire Chief of the Year.

"I'm very proud of Cliff," Giuliano said. "It is very, very worthy recognition of his professionalism, his commitment to the community and his performance as a fire chief."

In a humble response to being named Fire Chief of the Year, Jones shifted recognition to the people of the department.

"It feels real good. I'm very pleased with the award," he said. "The award is somewhat like accreditation in that there is a lot more than just me involved. It's all of the members of the department."

Jones said the department had to meet 250 criteria and conduct a self-assessment to be accredited. After meeting those requirements, a three-member team from the Commission examined fire operations over a three-day period.

Among other things, criteria for accreditation are:

- Meet response-time standards.
- Respond well to the needs of the community.
- Meet fire-investigation standards.
- Meet fire-station standards.
- Meet personnel-training standards.

Jones said the department was one of the first to apply for accreditation and the first to be given the honor.

"This is a very good fire department," Jones said. "For the most part, the things that are looked at ... Tempe was already in concert with. We've been preparing this for some time."

Student Web site offers unique place to buy, sell or trade

By STACY MAN
STATE PRESS

The theme behind the trading-post Web site created by two ASU seniors, is "One man's junk is another man's treasure."

Jason Moretensen and Rob Draughon, both computer information system majors, created the College Junk Trunk in an attempt to buy and sell their textbooks somewhere other than the bookstore.

"We were tired of getting $10 for a textbook we paid $60 for," Draughon said. "The Junk Trunk is a way to get around that."

Aside from textbooks sales, other school-related ads such as calculators for sale or roommates wanted can be placed. If an ad is placed, it will stay online until the owner requests it be removed.

Although there is a personal ad section, Draughon said the category is not very popular.

Also unpopular is distasteful language within the ads. The user-friendly program has a built-in filter to ensure decency.

If curse words or selected parts of an anatomy are included in an ad, a warning will appear and the ad will be reviewed.

"We've been able to keep a lot of the garbage out with the filter," Draughon said.

In addition to placing ads, the Junk Trunk will notify a shopper of new postings. A search can be developed so that if a student is looking for a specific item, an automated personal e-mail will be sent when the item comes on-line.

"If you are looking for a TI-85 (calculator), the system will send you an e-mail if the ad is placed," Draughon said.

It takes about five minutes to post an ad on Junk Trunk, at www.junktrunk.com.

"I have personally sold a pair of Rollerblades," Draughon said. "So I know it works."

'Road rage' phenomenon prompts shooting of Scottsdale motorist

SCOTTSDALE (AP) — After an angry exchange in traffic, one motorist shot another in the chest, police said.

Cameron M. Harmann was shot about 6:20 a.m. Wednesday, police said. He was in serious condition as of Wednesday night at Scottsdale Memorial Hospital-North.

Harmann's assailant, who remained at large, was driving when Harmann cut him off in traffic on his way to work, police spokesman Sgt. Mike Anderson said.

Harmann apparently was driving his Dodge pickup when he turned in front of the other pickup, a green late-model Toyota or Mazda with a green camper shell. Another man was riding in the pickup.

The driver of the green pickup apparently became enraged and followed Harmann to Desert Canyon Door & Supply on the Scottsdale Airpark, police said.

When Harmann got out of his truck, he met another employee, Albert Kohnke, in front of the building. Harmann told Kohnke about his exchange with the man in the green pickup, prompting Kohnke to point to a similar pickup parked on the side of the road in front of the building, police said.

Harmann saw that it was the same pickup he encountered on the road and walked to the driver and the passenger, who were standing outside the truck, police said.

Harmann and the driver got into a heated argument, yelling at each other and pointing at each other's chests, Kohnke told police.

The passenger, meanwhile, appeared "very scared" as the argument escalated, police said.

The driver pulled out a handgun and fired a single shot at Harmann before hopping back in his truck and driving off, police said.

Harmann stumbled back to his truck to drive himself to the hospital, but Kohnke intervened and drove Harmann to the emergency room, police said.

New reports on Army sex harassment 'not a pretty picture'

By SUSANNE M. SCHAFER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Sexual harassment exists "throughout the Army, crossing gender, rank and racial lines," the service said today, faulting leaders who ignored problems and allowed such behavior to become commonplace.

In a searing indictment of itself, the Army has released its largest-ever study of sexual harassment. The 10-month review was sparked by the last November's allegations of widespread sexual misconduct at the U.S. Army Ordnance Center in Aberdeen, Md.

It was made public by Army Secretary Togo West and Gen. Dennis Reimer, the Army chief of staff.

At a Pentagon news conference, West sought to draw a distinction between sexual harassment, which he said "continues to be a problem" throughout the service, and the sexual abuses — rapes and assaults — that were found at Aberdeen.

"What happened at Aberdeen was an aberration," insisted West.

White House Press Secretary Mike McCurry said that President Clinton believes the actions being taken by the Army will help prevent future sexual misconduct. He said the president "views with concern all allegations of sexual abuse and sexual misconduct."

The two-volume study was accompanied by an Army inspector general's report on the Army's training program, and a separate "action plan" aimed at fixing many of the problems turned up by a senior review panel. It calls among other things to require a week of training for recruits on ethics and moral values.

"Inappropriate behaviors are commonplace ... further, soldiers seem to accept such behaviors as a normal part of Army life," the study added.

It noted that sexual discrimination "is more common through the Army than is sexual harassment," and that the Army's attempts to educate its trainees and leaders on the issues are such a failure that many individuals have little understanding of them, as well as how to report or combat them.

The report also found that the victims of sexual assault are given little assistance. Also, men believe that Army standards are inequitable and that women are made to perform to less demanding standards.

"It clearly is not a pretty picture," commented Rep. Jane Harman, D-Calif., a member of the House National Security Committee. "I commend the Army for taking a hard, comprehensive look at how soldiers behave towards each other."

As a result, the service's rank and file "uniformly do not have trust and confidence in their leaders," the study says.

The survey revealed that:

- 78 percent of the women and 76 percent of the men interviewed had experienced "crude or offensive behavior" during the past year.

- 72 percent of the women and 63 percent of the men had experienced "sexist behavior" and that 47 percent of the women and 30 percent of the men received "unwanted sexual attention."

- 15 percent of the women and 8 percent of the men and experienced "sexual coercion" and that 7 percent of the women and 6 percent of the men experience "sexual assault."

While one two-star general and a number of mid-level officers have been reprimanded for the problems at Aberdeen, top Army leaders were not expected to identify the disciplined officers by name.

Maj. Gen. Robert Shadley, the former commander of the Aberdeen training base, has been sent a letter of reprimand and plans to contest it, said a Pentagon official, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Overall, the panel cites the Army's cutbacks and its leaders focus on combat units, rather than its support and training units, as part of what has caused the problems.

Harman, the congresswoman, said she hoped the steps undertaken by the service may change the Army and alleviate "the serious breakdowns" in human relationships within the service.

As part of its plan, the Army said pledged to put a new focus on training, revamping screening of potential drill sergeants, and add more chaplains to the ranks as well as add the additional week of training. A three-star general will be put in charge of overseeing training matters at the Army's Training and Doctrine Command, located at Fort Monroe, Va.

And a former drill sergeant is expected to fill a new slot in the Army's personnel department to focus on drill sergeants and the crucial role they play.

The service is also expected to assign 100 new lieutenants to advanced training units to give company commanders more time to spend with troops, and to put additional chaplains at bases to advise young soldiers.

CPS fires employee for sex with client

PHOENIX (AP) — A state Child Protective Service caseworker has been fired for having sex with a woman after he was assigned to investigate whether her child should stay in foster care.

After Mary Sue McArthur had sex with caseworker Frederic David Cohen of Phoenix, she got her little girl back. Cohen, a seven-year CPS employee, was placed on leave March 10, pending an investigation, and was fired June 18.

For three months, Cohen controlled when and for how long McArthur would see her daughter. He was assigned to recommend whether McArthur's daughter should stay with her.

"I thought, 'I have to do whatever this guy wants me to do,'" said McArthur, who told investigators she had sex with Cohen on several occasions late last year.

McArthur, 39, filed a lawsuit Aug. 29 in U.S. District Court in Phoenix, charging that Cohen used his position to solicit sex. On the same day, however, CPS took her daughter again.

McArthur's next court hearing is Friday. She still does not know where her daughter is.

"As a professional social worker, as someone who deals with families and children, any sexual contact is unethical," said Mary Ault, an administrator of Children, Youth and Family Services for the Department of Economic Security, which oversees CPS.

Cohen's phone number is unlisted and he could not be reached for comment. But in a statement to CPS officials, Cohen said he "would like to make it known that poor discretion was exercised" and that he "is extremely remorseful."

CPS officials cannot talk about McArthur's case because of confidentiality laws, although they have asked the court to make the file public. Ault said that what has happened since Cohen left the case has nothing to do with what happened between McArthur and him.

A sign warns of possible radioactive contamination where a nuclear test was done in the 1960s at the Nevada Test Site in Mercury, Nev. Traces of plutonium have been found in the water south of where the testing was done.

Plutonium-tainted water raises waste site concerns

By ROBERT MACY
ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAS VEGAS — Plutonium found in a water well a mile from the site of a 1969 nuclear weapons test has prompted new debate over storing the nation's radioactive waste at a proposed repository north of here.

"I believe this is another nail in the coffin of the Yucca Mountain project," Sen. Richard Bryan, D-Nev., said Thursday.

Bryan and Sen. Harry Reid responded after two chemists with the nation's nuclear weapons laboratories reported traces of plutonium in a well south of the site of an underground test code-named Benham, conducted Dec. 19, 1969.

Plutonium, a key element in nuclear weapons, is said to be the most toxic substance known.

Nevada officials are fighting the proposed repository, 100 miles north of Las Vegas, where radioactive waste from the nation's nuclear power plants and some military waste would be stored.

A major concern has been that the waste, which would remain at dangerous levels for 10,000 years, could eventually seep into water tables around the remote desert site.

Chemists Annie Kersting of Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory in California and Joe Thompson of Los Alamos, N.M. National Laboratory, said the plutonium was detected in a monitoring well on the Nevada Test Site, 65 miles north of here. They presented their findings to the American Chemical Society convention here on Wednesday.

"This is the first time we've seen plutonium transported in ground water," Kersting said.

After their presentation, they said the fact that plutonium was carried through ground water attached to very small mineral particles does not mean plans for Yucca Mountain should be halted.

"I don't know if it has any particular significance," Thompson said. "The material was deposited as a result of nuclear tests without engineered barriers" like those proposed for Yucca Mountain.

Reid, D-Nev., disagreed, saying the report strengthens the argument that the repository "poses a grave risk of environmental contamination."

"When you're talking about something like plutonium, which is as dangerous a substance as you can find on the planet, migrating through groundwater, you're talking about the potential for an environmental disaster," Bryan said.

Bryan questioned whether any barriers could be devised to prevent plutonium from leaking into the groundwater. Plutonium from a single nuclear test had moved nearly a mile in 20 years, Bryan said, while Yucca Mountain is meant to hold 77,000 tons of nuclear waste for up to 10,000 years.

Erik Olds, an Energy Department spokesman with the Yucca Mountain project, said the barriers would be both natural and manmade, with waste buried in "robust containers" deep in the mountain.

To date, the DOE has spent $2.5 billion studying the suitability of Yucca Mountain.

The agency is scheduled to provide a viability report to Congress next year, with a final recommendation expected in 2001 if the DOE finds the site suitable.

The Nuclear Regulatory Commission has final say on the suitability of the site, and that decision could take two or three years after the license application is submitted. With construction to follow, Olds said it would be 2010 at the earliest before waste could be put in place at the site.

AIDS no longer top killer of adults

By TARA MEYER
 ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — AIDS has lost its place as the No. 1 killer of the nation's young and middle-age adults, bolstering the government's optimism that the deadly epidemic is slowing down.

The disease is now the second leading cause of death for people between 25 and 44, driven by a 26 percent drop overall in the rate of AIDS deaths between 1995 and 1996, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention said Thursday.

Accidents, such as falls and car crashes, are the leading cause of death for the group that accounts for more than half the nation's workforce. Cancer is No. 3, the CDC said.

The drop, included in the CDC's 1996 report on births and deaths, adds to encouraging earlier reports. Last year, the actual number of AIDS deaths declined for the first time since the epidemic began in 1981.

"It's reassuring," said Dr. John Ward, the CDC's chief of AIDS surveillance. "You like to have multiple studies saying the same thing before you begin to consider what you're seeing is indeed the truth."

The AIDS death rate in 1996 fell to 11.6 deaths per 100,000 people, down 26 percent from a rate of 15.6 the previous year, the CDC said. For adults between 25 and 44, the rate fell to 27.2 deaths from a rate of 36.9 in 1995.

In 1994, when AIDS took over the top spot, the rate was 36.7 in that age group.

Ward tempered the news by noting that thousands of people are still living with AIDS and taking drugs that take a huge toll on the body.

Among the other gains in public health that the CDC report also chronicled was the drop in the teen birth rate. It fell 12 percent in 1996 to 54.7 births per 1,000 women ages 15 to 19, down from a rate of 62.1 births per 1,000 in 1991. The rate dropped 14 percent among girls between 10 and 14.

The CDC reported earlier this year that fewer teens are having sex and that condom use is increasing.

"You have a whole stew pot of unconnected reasons," said Sarah Brown, director of the National Campaign to Prevent Teen Pregnancy. "We have a re-energized advocacy community, the media, conservative leaders are talking about this. There seems to be a growing movement to protect young women."

The CDC said the infant mortality rate reached a record low of 7.2 deaths per 1,000 live births in 1996. And it said 82 percent of pregnant women sought prenatal care in their first trimester, up slightly from 81 percent in 1995.

- Among other findings:
- Life expectancy in the United States reached 76.1 years in 1996, up slightly from 75.8 years in 1995.
 - The nation's homicide rate dropped 11 percent to 8.4 homicides per 100,000 people in 1996, down from 9.4 in 1995.

The CDC's report was based on information from birth and death certificates filed in each state.

College student collides with bus, dies

HOLLAND, Mich. (AP) — A college freshman who last month rode 420 miles to school on a bicycle was fatally injured in a bicycle accident.

Ben Buckhout, 18, of St. Paul, Minn., was taking part in a Hope College physical education class when his bike struck a city bus Wednesday. Witnesses told police he was trying to stop when the bicycle slid under the rear wheels of the small bus, which was leaving a bus station. He died in a Grand Rapids hospital.

"This incomprehensible loss has left us numb," Hope College President John Jacobson said.

Buckhout and his father, Don, spent six days in August riding from St. Paul to Hope College in Holland, 30 miles west of Grand Rapids. "It was a good time for us to spend together before we have to say goodbye to him for several months," Don Buckhout said when they arrived Aug. 21.

A memorial service was scheduled for Friday at Hope's campus chapel.

WEST POINT, N.Y. (AP) — Chalk up another honor for Walter Cronkite.

The journalist will receive the U.S. Military Academy's Thayer Award, which is presented annually to an outstanding citizen whose service and accomplishments exemplify the academy motto, "Duty, Honor, Country."

Cronkite, a CBS newsmen for 47 years, is scheduled to receive the award Sept. 23.

He came to be considered "the most trusted man in America" during his 19 years as anchorman of the "CBS Evening News," and his success did not end after leaving the anchor's chair in 1981. He covered CBS Reports' "Children of Apartheid" in 1987, winning an Emmy as well as the Overseas Press Club Edward R. Murrow Award for outstanding documentary.

Past recipients of the Thayer Award include Dwight Eisenhower, Bob Hope, Billy Graham, Clare Boothe Luce, Ronald Reagan, George Shultz, Cyrus Vance, George Bush, Douglas MacArthur and Barbara Jordan.

The Thayer Award is named in honor of Col. Sylvanus Thayer, who served as superintendent of the military academy from 1817 to 1833.

NEW YORK (AP) — Dan Aykroyd doesn't want to compete with all the cooing over the Buchman baby.

ABC says it is switching Aykroyd's comedy "Soul Man" to 8:30 p.m. on Tuesdays for the first month of the television season. It was scheduled for 8 p.m., directly competing with NBC's "Mad About You."

"We're giving this pivotal series the luxury to recapture its audience without intense premiere competition," ABC Entertainment President Jamie Tarses said.

Lost in the shuffle, at least for a month, is the new comedy "Over the Top." The show, starring Tim Curry and Annie Potts, will begin airing at 8:30 p.m. on Oct. 21. The month's delay may not be a good sign for its longevity, but Tarses said the extra promotional time will give the series a better chance to succeed.

ABC will air episodes of "Drew Carey" or "Home Improvement" in the 8 p.m. time slot for four Tuesdays.

MEDINA, Wash. (AP) — Seven years after construction began, Microsoft chairman Bill Gates and his family finally will settle into their new 40,000-square-foot waterfront home.

Microsoft spokesman John Pinette said Thursday that Gates, his wife, Melinda, and their 1-year-old daughter, Jennifer Katherine, are moving into the house this week. The mansion on Lake Washington, just east of Seattle, reportedly has cost Gates more than $50 million.

"Construction is going to continue on the house in some areas that aren't completely finished, and we expect that to be all done by the end of the year," Pinette said.

Workers still are installing some of the high-tech equipment Gates talked about in his book The Road Ahead, Pinette said. For example, residents can wear "pins" that signal their location within the house, so heating, lighting and other comforts are automatically set to their tastes.

Among other things, the partially underground mansion features a 60-foot pool, a sauna, a 1,700-square-foot guest house, a trampoline room, a 20-seat theater, an arcade, a 24-screen video wall, a sport court, two spas and a reception hall for 100 people.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Michael Douglas' hand and foot prints joined those of his father's in the courtyard of Mann's Chinese Theatre in Hollywood.

"I'm very touched to think that Michael's footprints will be alongside of mine," Kirk Douglas said at a ceremony

Wednesday. "I think his footprints should be much bigger than mine."

Actors Jack Nicholson, star of One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest, co-produced by Michael Douglas, and Karl Malden, who starred opposite Douglas in the 1970s TV series, "The Streets of San Francisco," also were present.

Family members, including brothers Joel, Peter and Eric, and mother Diana, cheered Douglas, who won a best actor Oscar in 1988 for his role in Wall Street.

"It's a very special moment, Dad. And the truth is that you set the standard, and I'm so proud of being able to share this with you," Douglas said.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Dolly Parton's voice will have a prominent role in an upcoming holiday animated tale, a project that tugs at the singer's heart.

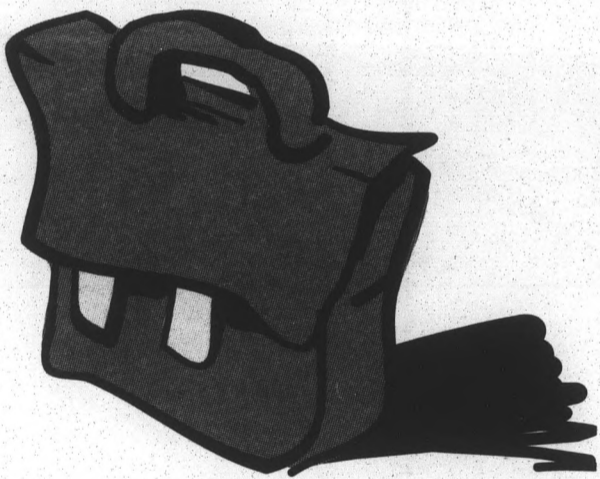

Annabelle's Wish, based on the farm legend about a lovable calf born on Christmas Eve and through a selfless wish brings holiday magic to a little boy, benefits the Make-A-Wish Foundation.

"I was brought up in a poor mountain family of 12 children. Needless to say, we didn't have money to purchase expensive gifts," said Miss Parton, who sings "Something Bigger Than Me" and "Silent Night" in the movie.

"The one thing we did always have for Christmas, and year round, was plenty of love. We knew we would always make it with love because we also had faith that God was looking out for us," she said. "I have always believed in something bigger than me. That's why the song by that title is so very special to me."

Annabelle's Wish, which will be broadcast on Fox Nov. 30, will be released on home video Oct. 21. The soundtrack released on that date also features the voices of Randy Travis, Alison Krauss, Beth Nielsen Chapman and Kevin Sharp.

MR. RODGERS' NEW NEIGHBORHOOD

Ex-Sun Devil rush end Derrick Rodgers has made quite an early impression in his rookie season with the Miami Dolphins.

Ex-ASU player impressive during rookie NFL season

BY ED ODEVEN
STATE PRESS

DAVIE, Fla. — Former ASU football star Derrick Rodgers knows a challenge when he sees one.

Facing the two-time defending NCAA champion Nebraska Cornhuskers was a major test.

Moving from rush end in college to a weak-side/pass rush linebacker in the NFL was the next big hurdle he crossed.

Now, Rodgers and the Miami Dolphins must go to famed Lambeau Field in Green Bay to play the reigning Super Bowl champs.

This is "a chance for the Dolphins to prove to themselves that we're not a flash-in-the-pan type team," Rodgers said following Thursday's practice at the Dolphins' training complex at Nova Southeastern University.

This is a chance to prove "that we can compete against the rest of the league. When you go up against top-notch competition, you want to perform your best. It's a very good exposure for the Dolphins," and for Rodgers.

Of course, he has shined in the spotlight before. During the Sun Devils' shocking 19-0 thrashing of Nebraska last September, Rodgers collected three key sacks and pestered Husker quarterback all night.

Since Rodgers, who amassed a team-high 12 sacks for the 1996 Pac-10 champs, joined the Dolphins, he has brought his blue-collar work ethic with him.

"I approach each game the same way, regardless of who we are playing or what the situation is," he said. "I'm going to make sure I get in there (film room) and get a lot of film work done. You have to find some way to get an edge over them, because everybody in the league is pretty much on the same level."

Which is why Rodgers gives 110 percent — on and off the field.

"When he came to practice, it is for work and work only," ASU head coach Bruce Snyder said.

Last season's consensus Pac-10 and National Coach of the Year also pointed out that Rodgers' "old age" has been an advantage for him.

"Well, in my opinion, there's obviously a break-off point here, but two men: one being older and one being younger; the older man tends to win just about everything," he said. "He's really mature and stable. His maturity has really helped him."

How so?

The 25-year-old rookie spent four years in the Air Force after graduating from high school. It was during this time that Rodgers learned to roll with the punches.

"I'm used to change," he said. "I just adjust with it."

This simple outlook has made him one of Miami coach Jimmy Johnson's favorite rookies.

"He has the ability to be a special player," he told the Palm Beach Post during preseason training camp.

"(New York Jets rookie James) Farrior, he's a good football player. Right now though, I'd take Rodgers over any linebacker in the draft."

Maybe J. J. is on to something.

Rodgers has been, to say the least, a one-man wrecking crew. After two games, Rodgers is Miami's co-leader in total tackles (18) and sacks (one for -11 yards) and he leads the team with two pass deflections.

Although he was somewhat overlooked in the draft (a third-round selection) Snyder feels Rodgers is right at home in Miami's system.

Washington seeks revenge for both '96 Cardinals debacles

BY JOSH DEFAMIO
STATE PRESS

The main character's gone.

So's the director. And the goat.

Even the stage has changed, but memories remain for the Arizona Cardinals (1-1) as the team prepares for a rematch of one of the most memorable games in NFL history with the Washington Redskins (1-1).

"You always talk about seeing a game like that on TV, hearing about it," middle linebacker Eric Hill said. "But being a part of it, and being there and watch it happen before your eyes, that was one of the wildest things I've ever witnessed. People still talk about that game."

The game, which the Cardinals won 37-34 in overtime, saw Arizona rally from a 14-point deficit behind 522 passing yards from the since-released Boomer Esiason. Both teams traded overtime misses before Kevin Butler connected on a 32-yard field goal with 33 seconds remaining in overtime.

The impact of that game is still felt today. The Cardinal's offensive coordinator, Jim Fassel, has since moved on to become head coach of the New York Giants. And the Redskins defensive coordinator, Ron Lynn, who oversaw one of the worst defensive performances in league history, has since been replaced.

More importantly, however, the loss sent the Redskins reeling, and the team which had been 7-2 at the time ended up missing the playoffs.

"That was the beginning of their demise," Hill said. "They were on a roll, after that loss, they just fell in to the tank."

Of course, the Cardinal's big win — coupled with Arizona's 27-26 win at Sun Devil Stadium last December — leaves head coach Vince Tobin concerned that the Redskins will be out for revenge come Sunday.

"They've got enough motivation of their own," Tobin said. "Of course, the game up there at Washington was really a heartbreaker to them. I think it ruined their season. I'm sure their looking to pay back the Cardinals."

While the Redskins desire for revenge ranks high on the Cardinals' list of worries, the team must also battle another enemy. Themselves.

Sun Devil volleyball team gets first test

BY LORI HARO
STATE PRESS

The ASU volleyball team plans to disprove the saying "Bad things happen in threes", as they head to Santa Barbara to play in the University of California-Santa Barbara (UCSB) Judy Bellomo Classic, in an attempt to win their third tournament in a row.

Last weekend the Sun Devils (7-0) swept all of their matches at the Ladyjack Invitational in Texas. The weekend before, ASU opened their season with a Phoenix Airport Hilton/Sun Devil Challenge tournament win.

However, the Judy Bellomo Classic will put ASU to the true test, as the team faces its toughest competition yet.

The teams the Sun Devils will face at the Classic include UCSB that is ranked No. 7 in the nation and No. 15 Loyola Marymount University (LMU). The University of South Florida and Portland State will also play in the tournament.

ASU begins action today as they take on LMU at 10:30 a.m. and South Florida at 7 p.m. Saturday the team faces Portland State at 10:30 a.m. and UCSB at 7 p.m.

ASU has already faced Portland State this season, when defeated them in the Phoenix Airport Hilton/Sun Devil Challenge. The Sun Devils beat Portland State in four games, 15-7, 15-8, 14-16, 15-11. Senior outside hitter Terri Cox had 22 kills and 18 digs and junior outside hitter Jen Lucero had 14 kills and 14 digs in the match.

"They're (Portland State) a scrappy team and they know what to expect from us now," Cox said.

While, ASU has not faced South Florida, they did beat Central Florida last weekend and Central Florida beat South Florida in a three game to two match this season.

The rest of the teams should be considerably more competitive.

"The competition will be a lot tougher," sophomore opposite Jamie Peck said. "We feel confident, but we have our work cut out for us."

ASU is not nationally ranked, but if they do well in this tournament, especially if they beat UCSB and LMU, it would be possible that they could be ranked within the top-25.

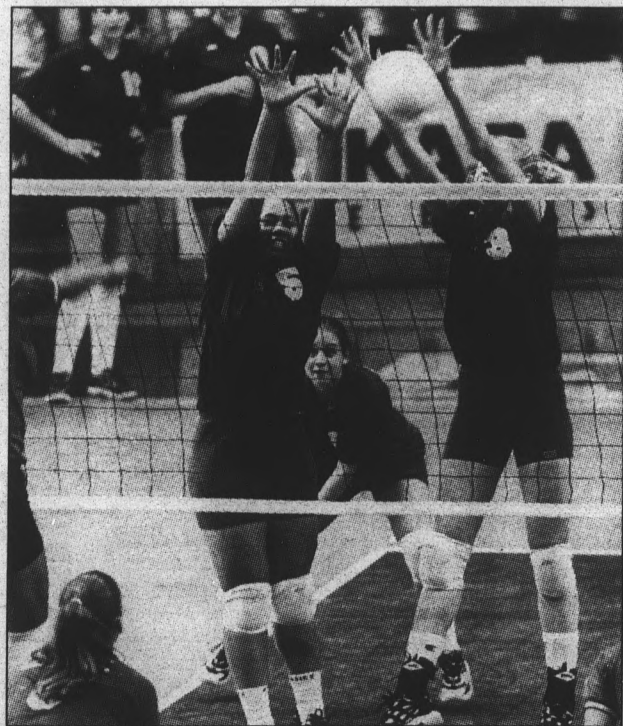

Ranked or not, ASU head coach Patti Snyder-Park has said before that being ranked is not what concerns her. She just wants the team to play at Pac-10 caliber.

"How we play against these teams will be a good indication of how well we'll play in the Pac-10 this season," senior middle blocker Kirstin Mattson said.

The team will not face any Pac-10 foes until Sept. 19, but as of Sept. 7 Lucero was second in the Pac-10 for digs per game with 3.95, Mattson is fourth in blocks with 1.61 bpg, Cox is fifth in kills with 4.42 kpg and freshman Michelle Mortensen is third in service aces with 0.60 per game.

For now though, the team will focus on this final tournament and try to finish strong before heading into their Pac-10 season.

"This (the tournament) is to see if we can hang with the big time," Cox said. "We'll just play our game. We just need to play on our side and not let the other team get to us."

Senior Kirstin Mattson (3), sophomore Jolynn Faatulu (5) and the rest of the Sun Devil volleyball squad will get their first test of the season when they travel to California.

Utah teams next for soccer

BY RANDY JONES
STATE PRESS

The ASU women's soccer team travels to Utah today trying to keep its perfect season intact.

The Sun Devils (3-0) take on Utah today at 4 p. m. and Utah State at noon on Sunday.

Head coach Terri Patraw said she expects the second-year ASU club to be the better team in both games, even though Utah is in its fourth season of competition.

The Utes are currently 1-4, coming off a loss to the Aggies (1-2).

Patraw said Utah's record is surprising, and that the loss to Utah State shows they are not very far along, even though the Utes outshot the Aggies 29 to 11. The Aggies lost to NAU, who the Sun Devils destroyed 5-1 in an exhibition game.

"Utah was supposed to be a strong team coming in, but if you look at their record," she said. "I'm surprised at the record of Utah to this point. (But) they are a more veteran program than us."

Patraw said they are not too concerned with any individuals on either team, but singled out Utah forward Stacy Burke as the best of both teams.

"They are going to play a 3-4-3," Patraw said. "Our understanding is that Utah plays real direct. But we are so strong and physical that I don't think that will phase us. Meaning we are usually first to every ball and that's what has been successful for us against the Colorado's and the Arizona's."

Patraw is happy that the team is coming down a bit in altitude this week. After playing Colorado and Wyoming, Salt Lake City should be a breeze she said.

"Is anything higher than Laramie Wyoming?" she joked. "That was high."

Heading into the two games ASU is completely healthy, and the only concern the coaches have is what to do with defender Jaclyn Clark, the hero of last Friday's win over UofA.

"The only question mark we have right now is what we are going to do with Jaclyn Clark," Patraw said. "Whether to move her up again. She will play some forward, but we'll probably start her in the back."

Cross country hits beach

BY LORI HARO
STATE PRESS

The ASU cross country team is lucky enough to open its season with a race at the beach. Unfortunately, several competitive teams will be right along side them at the California Irvine Invitational on Saturday.

The women's team will start their 5,000-meter race at 9 a.m. and the men will follow with their 8,000-meter race at 9:45 a.m. The race will take place at Central Park East at Huntington Beach.

The teams scheduled to compete include men's and women's teams from University of California-Irvine, Cal State Fullerton, Cal Poly San Luis Obispo, New Mexico State, NAU, Cal State Northridge, Azusa Pacific University, Cal State Los Angeles, and Concordia University. Arkansas, UCLA, USC and San Diego State will send their women's teams only.

"This will be a pretty competitive opening competition," head coach Walt Drenth said.

Last year both NAU and the Arkansas women's team were in the top-20 teams in the nation. Drenth recognizes that these teams, as well as UCLA, traditionally have great runners.

"But in our sport, a lot of teams can have good individuals. The ones (teams) with consistent individuals are the ones you see in the top-20," Drenth said.

Drenth said that as for ASU's team, the practices have been going well and the team should be prepared for the rolling hills of the Central Park course.

"Things have been going pretty well at practice and we're all really excited," sophomore Mary Duerbeck said.

As of yet, Drenth said that no one on the team has had the opportunity to really extend themselves or come out on their own, as the team has been practicing together so much. But with their wealth of newcomers and the return of seniors Matt Repak, Ari Rodriguez and Andy Carusetta, who red-shirted last season, Drenth expects the team to do well.

ASU's cross country team has 22 newcomers and only one is not a freshman.

The Sun Devils next event will be Sept. 27 when they head back to California to participate in the Stanford Invitational.

likes speed," Snyder said. "He likes hustle. He likes people who love football. That describes Derrick Rodgers. That's exactly Derrick Rodgers."

Former Pac-10 foe and current Dolphin receiver Brian Manning agreed that Rodgers was a great addition to the Miami roster.

"He has a great attitude, a winning attitude," Manning, a former Stanford Cardinal, said. "He's just a real enthusiastic player. He was one of those players you are going to see everywhere. You are going to see him flying around."

In short, Manning praised Rodgers' ability to wreak havoc on enemy field generals.

"His best skill would have to be his pass rush," Manning said. "He just moves around so much. He is so elusive."

Rodgers echoes that point of view.

"I'm usually all over the place chasing people down," he said. The 6-foot-1, 225-pounder especially enjoys chasing down people Johnson is watching.

"Coach Johnson is a great coach," Rodgers said. "You look at his history and you know that he's a proven winner. That's the type of person, the type of team you want to be on. I really do have a lot of confidence in Coach Johnson and the staff that if we do everything under the scheme of the offense and defense, we can become a very good team."

So far, so good for the 2-0 Dolphins. With 14 games left in his rookie season, Rodgers will continue to follow ASU's "One At A Time" creed, but he will also remember his college roots when he laces up his spikes Sunday in Tittletown.

"It's a pretty stadium, with a lot of grass on the field,"

Rodgers said jokingly, before speaking about the zealous Cheeseheads.

"I like that. It really excites me to see fans getting into the game," he said. "It brings me back to that college atmosphere. It's hard to find that (in the NFL) nowadays."

It's also hard to find many 25-year old-rookies, but Rodgers plans to make his debut season a productive one.

"People say I'm old, but watch out," he said. "I've only played the game for three years. Guys who have played since high school have a good six years on me, pounding their bodies. I feel pretty good. I've got a lot of room to grow."

What he also has is a desire to be one of the best. "I want to go to the Pro Bowl," said the man whose adoring fans declared Sun Devil Stadium "Mr. Rodgers' Neighborhood." Interestingly enough, no one is arguing with him.

KGME reports Rick Majerus negotiating for basketball job

BY MEL REISNER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

PHOENIX — Arizona State officially began looking for a new basketball coach Thursday, continuing a process that began long before coach Bill Frieder accepted a buy-out offer.

"We've looked at four or five people in terms of just identifying prospects," athletic director Kevin White said. "It's kind of a typical thing where you always have a short-handed flow, maybe a handful of people that may make sense in the event you have a vacancy."

White left Thursday afternoon for Saturday's football game against Miami, and could not immediately be reached for comment on a report that he had offered the job to Utah coach Rick Majerus.

"Am I interested? I don't think so," Majerus said when contacted in Dublin, Ireland, where he and some Utah players are winding up a European tour. "Will I talk to them? Yeah, I'll talk to anybody."

"You want to know how important it is to me? I'm packing right now to send gifts and some stuff back to Salt Lake, and then I'm going to bed. If it was important, I'd get on it."

KGME Radio of Phoenix, citing two sources it didn't name, said Majerus accepted the job for 1998 but wanted an interim coach to handle the Sun Devils this season. The station said White refused, and the situation was still in negotiation.

White obtained permission in advance of Frieder's departure Wednesday to talk to Majerus, who has been courted by two NBA teams and several major-college programs after taking the Utes to five NCAA tournament appearances in eight years.

Majerus is due to make about $600,000 this year, about 30 percent more than Frieder's annual salary-and-benefits package.

Other head coaches who might be available include Kelvin Sampson of Oklahoma, who previously coached in the Pac-10 at Washington State, Rob Evans of Mississippi, Mike Brey of Delaware or Perry Clark of Tulane, where White was athletic director for five years.

The candidacies of Kansas assistant Matt Doherty and former Phoenix Suns coach Paul Westphal might be hampered by their limited college experience.

Practice begins next month, and White said if a big-name coach is brought in, he should be in place within 10 days.

One week after posting one of the biggest wins in the team's desert existence, the Cardinals must contend with the possibility of a huge letdown.

"Being a professional football player, you can't get too happy in the good times," fullback Larry Centers said. "And you can't get too sad in the bad times. You just have to try to stay on an even keel. And just take it like it comes."

"When you have a real emotional high, you've got to really protect against having a lull," quarterback Kent Graham said. "We've talked about it, and we realize that, and we're just trying to make sure it doesn't happen."

NOTES

•The Cardinals have won seven of the last eight meetings against the Redskins, including both contests last year. Even so, the Redskins are still favored to win Sunday's game by more than a touchdown.

"We're used to being underdogs," Hill said. "To me, it really doesn't matter. Sometimes, maybe it's good for us to be underdogs. You don't want to be too cocky before you prove yourselves."

•The game marks the first ever regular season contest at Jack Kent Cooke Stadium. The stadium, named after the late owner of the Redskins, replaces RFK Stadium, where the Redskins had played for more than 30 years.

"The stadium, and all that stuff, is great," Graham said. "But we control a lot of the stuff that happens on the field. That's what counts."

The seating capacity of the stadium is 80,116. The stadium seats greater than 20,000 more fans than RFK.

•The Cardinals four rushing touchdowns total one half of what the team scored last year, and one more than the team totaled in 1995. Even so, the Cardinals are averaging only 2.56 yards per carry.
