ASU reveals $300 million fund-raiser

BY CHRIS PASSAMANO
STATE PRESS

In an announcement complete with Sparky, cheerleaders and many University officials, ASU president Lattie Coor will reveal today at 9:30 on Hayden Lawn the school's most ambitious fund-raising campaign ever — the $300 million "Campaign for Leadership."

The ASU Campaign for Leadership started in July 1995 with Knight Foundation donations. The campaign set up a chair position for the foundation in the Walter Cronkite School of Journalism.

The campaign has been in a silent phase until today's announcement, said Judy Knudson, associate vice president of institutional advancement. As of today, the University has raised $120,414,000, the largest single donation being the $11 million donation made by Motorola two weeks ago. The goal is to raise the remaining $179,586,000 within the next three years.

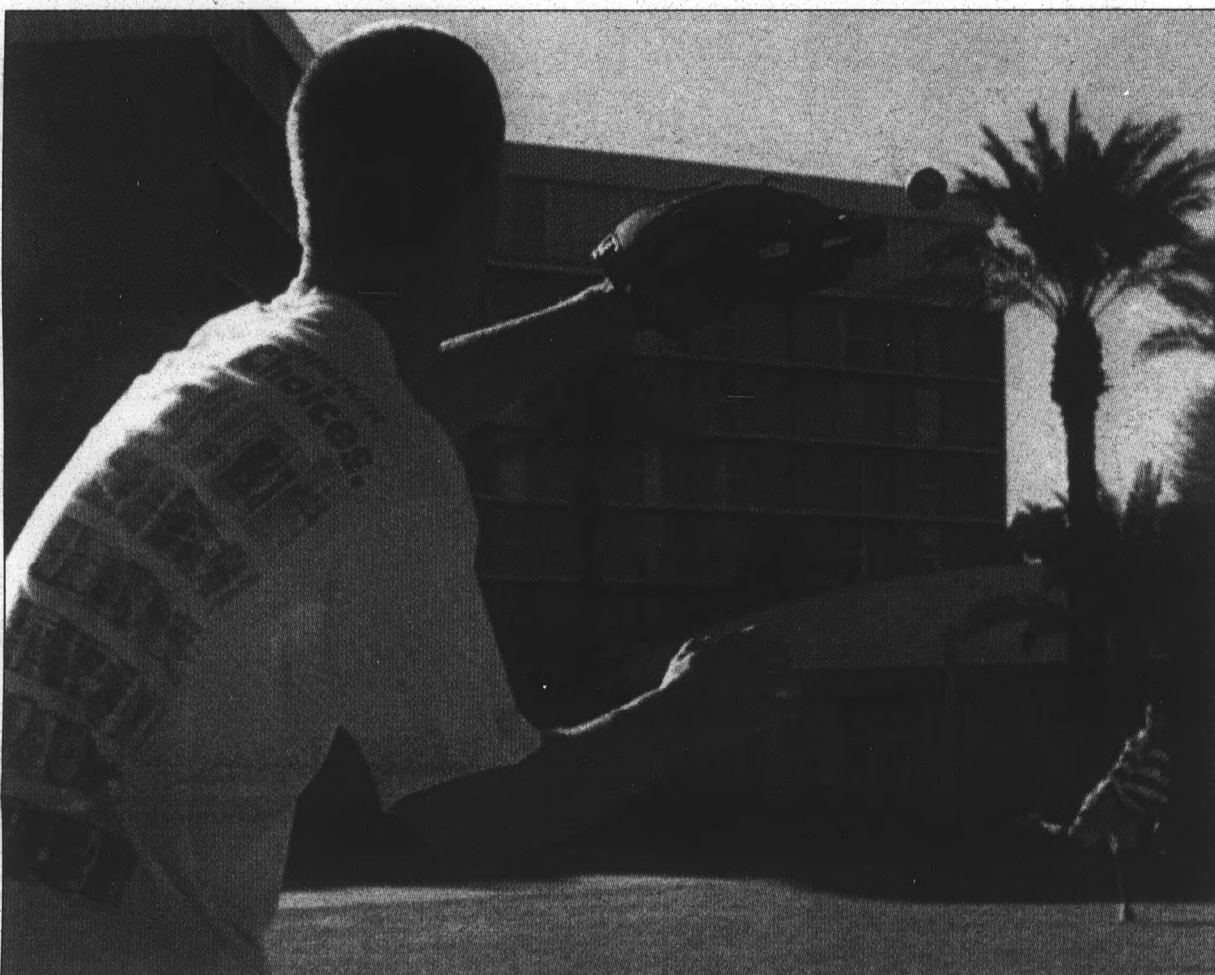

"The hope is to have the remainder of the funds at the beginning of the new millennium," Knudson said. "We are talking about a five year campaign, so our hope is to have it done early in the new century."

The Campaign for Leadership is broken down into three different structures— Great Teachers, Great Students, and Great Communities.

The Great Students part of the campaign will receive $75 million. This will triple the University's endowment for undergraduate scholarships and graduate fellowships from $15 million to $45 million. It will make ASU competitive with other Pac-10 universities. These

State funds will continue despite Campaign, officials say

BY TARA TEICHGRAEBER
STATE PRESS

With nearly $120 million already collected through the Campaign for Leadership, ASU officials are giddy with success and hopeful it will continue as they request state funding for the 1999 fiscal year.

At last month's Arizona Board of Regents meeting, ASU requested $270 million in state appropriations for fiscal year '99. Those involved in funding decisions say they are not concerned that ASU's Campaign for Leadership will hinder legislators from fulfilling the budget request.

"(Fundraising is one of the things) universities do and I think that's looked upon very well by state legislators," said Regent Judy Gignac, ABOR treasurer. "(Legislators) don't look upon it, if they're educated, as a substitute for general funds."

Regent Kurt Davis agreed that the Campaign for Leadership will likely improve state legislators' views of ASU and chances of getting state money.

"I believe the Legislature and governor's office expect that we have an aggressive posture in raising non-government funding,

"When you show that the business community of the state sees the positive products of the University, that gives confidence to the public sector to continue their investment," he said

Vice-Chair of the House Appropriations committee Rep. Laura Knaperek, R-Tempe, said she was unfamiliar with details of ASU's fund-raising campaign, but didn't believe it would impede legislators' willingness to fund university budget requests. Knaperek also sits on the Joint Legislative Budget Committee.

"I wouldn't imagine that we'd say we wouldn't give (ASU) money for (the costs of supporting) new students," Knaperek said. "It's our obligation as a state to fund the universities."

Sen. Gary Richardson, R-Tempe, agreed. Richardson is a member of the Senate Appropriations Committee and like, Knaperek, sits on the JLBC.

Knaperek warned, however, that if the University was "double-dipping" from the community by asking both the state and private supporters to fund the same projects, ASU might find less support from legislators.

University officials have been vague about exactly how private donations would be dispersed and spent.

"I can see people saying if (ASU) can get this much money, why should we give them more," Knaperek said. "Trust me, if we don't need to fund something, we won't. We don't go over and above what we need to do."

Legislators granted the state's universities just 41.5 percent of requested funding for the

Condoms sold in campus vending machines recalled by company

BY STACY MANN

Students looking to get lucky this weekend may catch a bad break.

Condoms sold to students from campus vending machines were part of the 57 million recalled by Ansell Personal Products Tuesday.

Student Health Services emptied the vending machines of triple packs of Prime brand condoms yesterday morning after the Food and Drug Administration announced the condoms might deteriorate before their expiration date.

Ansell Products became aware of the problem after they received complaints from consumers about the condoms breaking.

"My understanding is that they only had eight reported problems," said David Bower, Health Educator of Student Health Services. "They pulled all 57 million as a precaution."

Karen Moses, assistant director of Health Education and Wellness, said she is not sure how many recalled condoms were sold to students.

The recalled condoms were in bathroom vending machines in Cholla, Sonora, Sahuaro, Manzanita, Palo Verde Main, Palo Verde East, Palo Verde West and Mariposa residence halls. The restrooms in Student Health Services and the SRC were also dispensing the recalled rubbers.

Bower said students should not use the Prime Spermicidally Lubricated condoms purchased in three-packs from those vending machines. The single vending machines packs of condoms were not recalled.

Student Health Services will exchange the recalled condoms as long as students return them in the original packaging.

Varieties of LifeStyles, Prime and Contempo condoms were recalled by Ansell but the company assured all 57 million condoms were not defective. Prime is the only recalled brand sold on campus.

For more information about exchanges or recalled brands, call David Bower at 965-1132 or Joan Lopez at 965-4721. All concerns about Ansell Products should be directed to (800) 883-3434.

TODAY

Campus clubs and organizations may submit written entries to the State Press in the basement of the Matthews Center. Requests will not be taken over the phone or via fax.

Deadline for requests is noon the day before publication and entries will not be accepted more than three working days before publication. Only one entry per organization per day is permitted.

Entries must contain the full name of the club or organization, a description of the event, date, time and the full address of the location. All requests are subject to editing for content, space and clarity. Incomplete or illegible entries will be discarded.

The Today Section is a daily calendar of events printed as a service to the ASU community. Requests are accepted on a first-come, first-served basis and are printed as space permits.

endowments will strengthen and help create new scholarships, including National Merit Scholarships, Leadership Scholarships and Presidential scholarships.

The Great Communities portion of the plan will inherit the largest part of the campaign. With $150 million, ASU will look to support initiatives to improve public education in Arizona, and add to the University's strength in biomedicine. Additional money will be used to help deal with problems that face Arizona neighborhoods.

The Great Teacher segment of the campaign would receive the remaining $75 million. With this money, the University will be able to provide more support for visiting professor programs. This would also include the creation of at least 50 endowed faculty positions.

The endowed positions will allow the University to have a source of income for many years to come, said Coor. He added that the creation of these endowed positions is one of the long-term investments of the campaign.

"An endowment constitutes a fund where the principle will never be spent,"

Coor said. "We invest the funds and from that we will only take from it an amount that allows it to keep growing with the cost of living."

The salaries for the chairs of the new positions as well as other funds needed by the chairs will come from the interest earned off the invested money, Coor said.

This is the second capital campaign the University has launched. The first came in 1983, when the University set out to raise $75 million. The campaign ran until 1988 and ended up raising $100 million. This time Coor said he is confident he will be able to triple that amount in the same amount of time.

"As we contemplate the future, I felt that we had to go higher and farther than ever before," Coor said. "It's a reach, a stretch, but I am confident that we will be able to reach our goals. We are in the most intensive part (of the fund raising) over the next three years. I hope that we will be able to keep at the same level pace (of donations), and by the year 2000 we will have reached our goal."

Funds

1997 fiscal year and 50 percent of requested dollars for '98. Legislators have not yet met to determine how much will be given to state universities for the 1999 fiscal year.

Judy Knudson, associate vice president of institutional advancement, said because state dollars can only fund so much, solicitation from other sources was necessary.

"In order to build on the excellence Dr. (Lattie) Coor and everyone at the University wants, to truly live up to the expectations of the community, we need more resources," Knudson said. "State funding is not sufficient."

She added that the Campaign for Leadership was not "a comment on the kind of support" ASU has received from the state.

"We've been very pleased with legislative support in the last few years, but it's not an endless resource. This campaign builds on state appropriations."

Nelson Mandela arrives in Libya, meets Gadhafi

BY SALAH NASRAWI
ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAIRO, Egypt — As shouts of "Mandela! Mandela!" rose from thousands of Libyans, Nelson Mandela and Moammar Gadhafi punched their fists into the air Wednesday during a raucous reception for the South African president in the Libyan capital of Tripoli.

Since U.N. sanctions imposed on Libya in 1992 ban flights in or out of the North African country, Mandela flew to neighboring Tunisia on Wednesday and then proceeded by motorcade across the border to Libya on a trip U.S. officials had hoped he would not make.

Libyan television, in a broadcast monitored in Cairo, showed the two leaders with fists raised high before they listened to each country's anthem.

It also showed the Libyan leader escorting Mandela to the ruins of his house at a former military camp. U.S. warplanes bombed Gadhafi's house in 1986 after Washington accused Libya of being involved in an attack on a Berlin disco that killed two U.S. soldiers.

Libyans, most of them in traditional white gowns and red caps, gathered at the site and shouted: "Mandela, our hope for Africa."

At a late-night dinner for Mandela, Gadhafi described the South African leader as "a saint," the television reported.

"Mandela is not only South African but he is also a symbol for the peoples of the entire world," Gadhafi said.

An announcer on Libyan television declared that Mandela's visit was "an expression of solidarity with Libya against the conspiracy it is facing," a reference to the U.N. sanctions.

The sanctions, which include a ban on arms sales, were imposed to force Libya to hand over two men suspected of bombing a Pan Am jetliner over Lockerbie, Scotland, in 1988, killing 270 people.

Appeals court says psychiatric tests on Kaczynski can proceed

BY JOHN HOWARD
ASSOCIATED PRESS

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — Siding with prosecutors, a federal appeals court ruled Wednesday that government psychiatrists have the right to examine Unabomber defendant Theodore Kaczynski.

The 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals dismissed without comment an appeal by Kaczynski's lawyers, who contended the prosecution's proposed psychiatric testing violated the defendant's constitutional protections against self-incrimination.

The decision by the San Francisco-based appeals court allows the psychiatric testing to begin Saturday.

Kaczynski, 55, has pleaded innocent to charges that he used bombs to kill two people in Sacramento and injure two others.

He faces the death penalty if convicted. His trial is scheduled to begin Nov. 12.

He has been charged separately in New Jersey with the 1994 bombing death of an advertising executive; he has also pleaded innocent to those charges.

Lead prosecutor Robert Cleary said the government wanted its own doctors to examine Kaczynski to meet a potential mental-defect defense.

According to earlier court documents, defense lawyers may claim Kaczynski suffers from paranoid schizophrenia, a disorder associated with delusional feelings of being persecuted or plotted against.

U.S. District Judge Garland Burrell Jr. ruled Sept. 19 that the government could examine Kaczynski.

White House turns over panel documents on controversial Utah national monument

BY H. JOSEF HEBERT
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The White House, complying with a subpoena, turned over to a congressional committee Wednesday nearly two dozen documents related to the decision last year to declare 1.7 million acres in Utah a federally protected monument.

Rep. Don Young, R-Alaska, accused the administration of "trying to hide documents" related to the controversial decision to create the Grand Staircase-Escalante National Monument in Utah's picturesque canyonland.

Kathleen McGinty, head of the president's Council on Environmental Quality, has denied the administration was trying to hide anything and had told Young the committee could examine the documents at "whatever time and place is convenient and for however long is necessary."

Such an offer, said Young, chairman of the House Resources Committee, precluded the "in-depth analysis and multiple uses required by the committee."

The committee served the White House with a subpoena on Oct. 10 for the documents, which it said in a press release it received Wednesday.

"I'm glad to see that the White House finally realized that the committee and Congress have a right to oversee how the laws are executed," Young said in the statement.

A Resources subcommittee chaired by Rep. James Hansen, R-Utah, for months has had a running battle with the Council on Environmental Quality over documents related to the monument decision.

Lawsuit alleges pregnancy caused dismissal at New Yorker

BY LARRY NEUMEISTER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — A former publisher of The New Yorker filed a lawsuit Wednesday alleging that her boss at the literary magazine punished and eventually fired her because she was pregnant.

Diane Silberstein, 41, said in her federal lawsuit that the magazine's president, Thomas Florio, slashed her $340,000 salary nearly in half after she told him last November she was pregnant.

"Florio spoke ... repeatedly about how she was underestimating the difficulty of balancing the responsibilities of a second child and a publisher's position and implied that it would be impossible for her to balance her work duties with the increased demands of two children," the lawsuit said.

A few days after Ms. Silberstein announced her pregnancy, Florio told her "changes had to be made" and that she could either accept a new structure or accept a severance package, the lawsuit said.

Her job senior vice president and publisher was then divided between herself, a man and another woman who was not pregnant, the lawsuit said.

Ms. Silberstein accepted the new role but learned through a trade publication seven weeks later that she was being fired.

The lawsuit names Florio, the magazine and its corporate owner Advance Magazine Publishers, Inc.

"My response is shock," Florio said in a telephone interview after he was served with the lawsuit Wednesday. "This complaint is completely without merit. The New Yorker clearly doesn't discriminate against pregnancy or any other prohibited basis and we'll address it in an appropriate forum. I really can't say more than that right now."

SWAT team terrorizes more innocent people

Once again, innocent people are subjected to the terrorist actions of a state-funded agency.

On Friday, Pima County SWAT team members burst into the Tucson home of Ramona and Margarita Estrada at 1:33 a.m., jolting awake the couple, their five children, a nephew and two friends. Spouting tear gas and wielding big guns, the SWAT team ordered the family to the ground and then out the front door in their pajamas. The adults were handcuffed for 10 to 15 minutes, until the team determined there was a problem.

These were innocent people.

The SWAT team, working on behalf of the Metropolitan Area Narcotics Trafficking Interdiction Squad (MANTIS), raided the house under the assumption that a drug suspect they were tracking still lived there. Team members had, in fact, staked out the house earlier that night to make sure it was the right place.

Hmmm ... maybe they should work on their detective skills a little more.

It seems officials somehow received outdated information which they then used to get the search warrant. The drug suspect did live in the house at one point, but left sometime this summer. The Estradas have been in the house for three months now.

Three months? How could the police not catch that one? If this suspect was so important, so dangerous as to necessitate entering the house with tear gas and guns-a-blazing, we would think they could keep better track of him.

What makes this whole situation more disgusting is that once the SWAT team realized its mistake, the team just took off, according to Ramona Estrada. No apology, no explanation.

Of course, officials claim a Spanish-speaking officer apologized for the raid, and Sheriff's Office representatives have officially apologized for their mistake, mentioning that this is only the third incident of this kind in five years, out of the hundreds of raids they perform each year.

Gee, that's all? We certainly all feel better now.

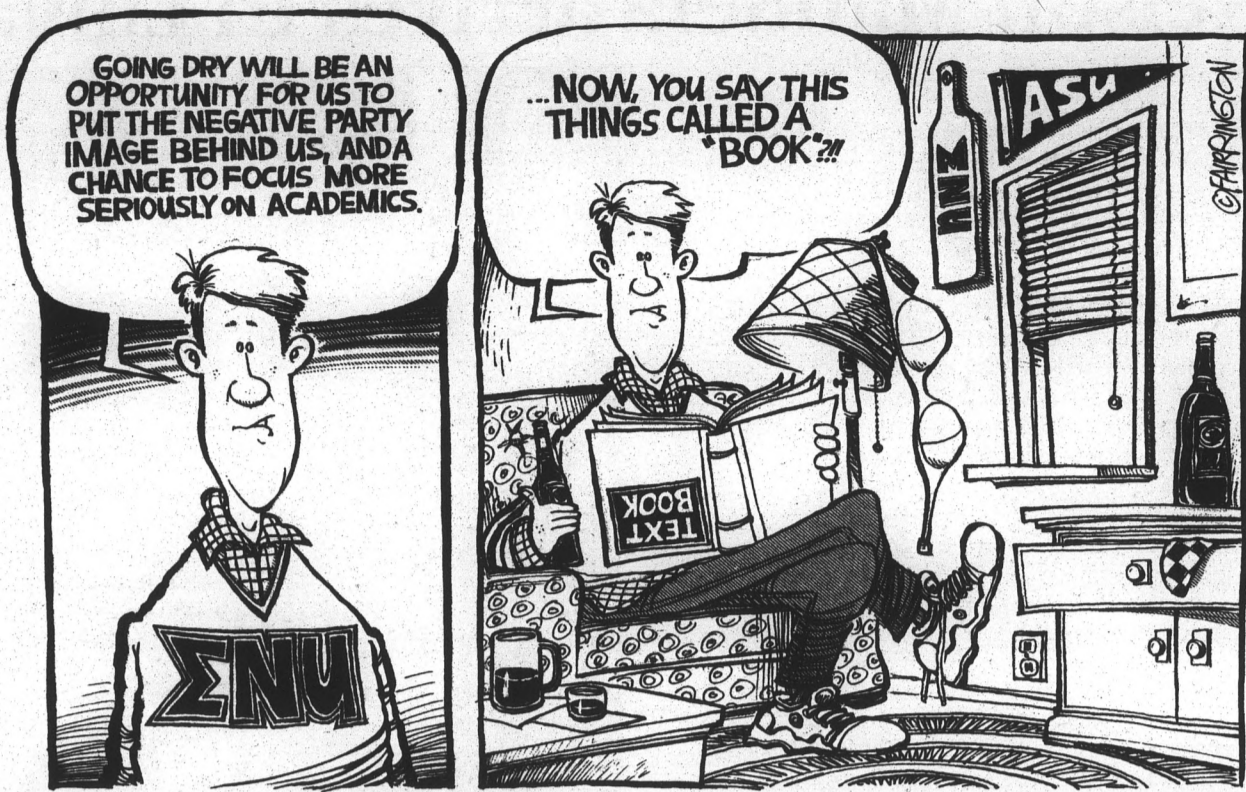

Besides — can an apology really smooth over the rough treatment and embarrassment the family endured?

It looks like the Pima County Sheriff's Office and MANTIS could be up against another civil lawsuit — the last incident like this one ended in a $125,000 settlement. The family hasn't said whether they're going to file charges, but in our opinion, they would be foolish not to.

Lawyers have said the agency and its officials can be held legally liable for civil rights violations, and Pima County Supervisor Sharon Bronson said the Sheriff's Office and MANTIS's procedures may need to be re-evaluated.

We couldn't agree more — these groups need a wake-up call.

State officials had better start doing what they're paid to do — serve and protect, not terrorize and traumatize.

Arrest of ex-ASU basketball star raises doubts as to where program's headed

This weekend a former ASU basketball player, Marcell Capers, was arrested at Sky Harbor airport on charges of possession and transportation of narcotics. For those of you who do not remember Capers, he was No. 10 on the Sweet Sixteen team under then-coach Bill Frieder.

This is just the most recent case in a number of incidents we have seen surrounding ASU basketball in the last four or five years, whether it be alleged sexual assault, drug trafficking, point shaving or stealing CD players in the dorms. It's getting old, and not only that, the basketball team and its players' actions have become an embarrassment to everyone associated with Arizona State University.

The most recent example — the drug trafficking charges — has left me to think: What is next? What is the next scandal or scandals to come out of the ASU basketball program? Are the players going to broker the sale of nuclear weapons from a former Soviet republic to a Middle Eastern country? That may be a little exaggeration, but it is what we have come to expect from the players. I, for one, do not think we should put up with it anymore.

Look at our football program, for example. Yes, it has had some difficulties with its player/bouncer relations, but for the most part, it has been very clean. Bruce Snyder has shown that a clean program can be run with "good kids" and still be able to win.

So why can't we have the same thing in our basketball program? I think we can. When the athletic department goes out and looks for a new basketball coach at the end of the season (and trust me, they will be looking for a new coach at the end of the season), it will not be enough to get a coach who has proven he can win. The department must also get a coach who can run a clean program with "good kids" and can still graduate them.

But while the athletic department is out looking for a good coach to rebuild the program, we will have to sit through a season that will be worse than last year's season. This will be pretty difficult to do, due to the fact that we were in the Pac-10 cellar last year. We will have to sit through repeated loss after loss with only the hope that it will all be turned around soon.

However, I think there could be a good side to our upcoming rebuilding seasons. There will be more walk-ons joining the team, and when they get to play, it will be something the fans can really enjoy — a chance to see nontraditional student athletes lace it up and play against the big boys.

That sounds a lot more exciting than watching some guy who stole someone's CD player the night before the game.

College students have knack for attracting solicitation

I am a college student and I am the hunted!

CHAD TWITTY
Columnist

I receive more mail from credit card companies than I do from my own family. I get more phone calls from telemarketers than I get from friends. I will probably have more knocks on my front door from sales people tonight than trick-or-treaters on Halloween.

I don't understand why college students are so attractive to businesses. I didn't think the majority of college students were well-to-do. I know what my checkbook says at the end of each month. It says: "Don't be stupid and enjoy the Ramen!" My wife tells me the same thing.

Simply put, there's no chance that I am ever going to get another credit card, buy credit card insurance, or buy some new miracle cleanser! Don't come knocking. I'll call you if I'm interested. Yet the mail keeps flowing, the phone keeps ringing and the door keeps pounding!

And just when I think I've escaped my predators for a few hours, I go to campus and happen to walk by the MU. I enjoy complete strangers trying to act like my best friends as much as the next person, but it gets tedious. Walking past the MU can be the longest 30 seconds of a lifetime.

To those groups — salespeople and organizations — that wait patiently and peacefully for people to approach them, I applaud and thank you. To those stalkers that feel the need to be rejected one more time, I am your man!

I come to college to get an education, better myself and ensure a better future for my family. Then, when I actually have money, I'll go shopping.

I don't come to campus to sign petitions, buy, enlist or look for a church. I just want to walk to class in peace. This past summer session, the same guy invited me to church on three different occasions without remembering me, and summer session is only a month long!

Even the blood bank buses, the supposed "good guys," can be ruthless. I see the huge writing on the sides of the bus — I know why they are there. However, some days I just don't feel like being stuck with needles and having my blood sucked right before class.

And sometimes I don't like to decide my political stance on a proposal in 20 seconds and sign a petition for or against it. Sometimes, I just want to walk to class with only my thoughts to disrupt me.

This is the land of freedom and opportunity, not of stalking and harassment. This is a college campus, not a flea market. I hate wondering, every time a stranger approaches me with a friendly smile, "What are they selling or what do they want?"

I yearn for a better day, a day when someone doesn't try to sell me something. But until then, I am a college student and I am the hunted!

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

E-MAIL THE EDITOR: JUZ1MO@IMAP1.ASU.EDU

'Homeless' column about misguided teens, not downtrodden

This letter is in response to the column written by Brian Policoff in the Wednesday (Oct. 22) edition of the State Press.

We were led to believe from its title that the article was going to be about homeless people. However, it didn't take long for us to realize that this was nothing more than a pity party for the delinquent youths that taint Mill Avenue.

We do not know Mr. Policoff's background. We do not know where he is from or what he has been exposed to. But we can plainly see, in his request for our sympathy, that his image of a homeless person is more than inaccurate. We were both born and raised in Detroit, and can tell you that a homeless person is not a 16-year-old girl with her whole life ahead of her.

If sympathy should be given, it should not go to Mr. Policoff's friend on the other side of the tracks, but rather to the Vietnam vet. with no legs, family or friends, who can be seen begging for spare change every Saturday night on Woodward Avenue in Detroit.

To say that the vagrants on Mill deserve the title "homeless" is an outrage. These kids are 16-year-old runaways who chose the lives they are leading. The guy in Detroit or the bums in downtown Phoenix didn't choose to end up the way they did. War, divorce, unemployment, mental illness or whatever the problem may be, put these people in the state they are now in — not rebellion against mommy and daddy.

Frankly, when we see these people, they frighten us. Every student reading this letter knows exactly what we are talking about. These kids aren't little Mr. and Ms. Innocent, thrown to the wolves by unloving parents. On any given day, patrons of Mill Avenue are subject to this gross misrepresentation of the youth of America. We are ashamed to think that we are clumped into the same generation as these misguided teens.

We both come from single parent homes. We have both had our share of the hard life. The obstacles we had to overcome to get to the Valley of the Sun are comparable to those of the youth on Mill. We pay for our own education. We take 15 credit hours a semester and work 20 hours a week. We pay our own bills and buy our own food. We do so not because we were told to, but because we chose to. We took on these responsibilities and never once ran away from our problems. The money we earn is hard-earned, and it makes us sick to have our peers to beg us for it.

Wake up kids, this is not the 60s anymore. Get off your couches in the desert and start thinking about your futures while you still can.

Details deal low blows to rape victim

I was shocked and sickened to read the article published on Oct. 21 entitled "Police report details cruelty of Sept. 15 sexual assault." I cannot believe the level that the State Press has stooped to in order to gain interest in the paper.

The graphic and intricate detail contained within the "news story" appearing on the front page compelled me to write this letter. This type of tabloid journalism should not be splashed over the front page masquerading as a news story. In fact it shouldn't have been printed in the first place. It serves no purpose, but to shock and disgust readers into reading a rehashed account of a perverse and horrid attack.

I happen to know the victim of this crime and I find it even more disturbing that the State Press would "hurt" her even more by putting this kind of trash in the newspaper for all to read. After reading this article my opinion is that the State Press is no better than the National Enquirer.

Rape tales open eyes, raise awareness

Although some students may feel that the details included in the article about the Sept. 15 rape were too graphic to be printed, I feel that the details make female students think more seriously when it comes to protecting themselves from being raped.

Since rapes have been occurring so frequently lately at ASU and at other surrounding campuses, many students have become numb to the subject. When hearing about another rape mentioned on the news for a brief moment, I personally don't think much of it and I never think it could happen to me.

After reading the article printed on Oct. 21, I began to identify with the victim as a girl just like me rather than as a statistic, and it brought the possibility of rape much more closer to home, making me that much more cautious. I feel the article will make students not take this subject so lightly in the future.

Cartoon tries to tackle sensitive issue of rape; readers missed the point

As a bit of a rebuttal to the articles written in the Oct. 20 State Press by Keri Edulmuth and Aida Urbalejo, I feel that truly something has been missed.

Toward the first article titled "Cartoon is 'rude,' rape isn't funny," I think you have sorely missed the point. I do not believe for one instant (nor does anyone, save perhaps the rapist) that there is any humor whatsoever in rape. You are absolutely right — there is nothing to joke about in the subject of rape; it truly is one of the most horrible and upsetting things that can happen to someone. However, no one is drawing humor to the rapes, nor rapes in general.

Quite the reverse, in fact. The cartoon is stating that rape is a huge issue here at ASU. It portrays the theory that a "Rape Defense Guide" is more useful than a diploma; ergo that from a University's perspective, rape issues are more important (at least more of a focus) than education itself. Quite obviously, no one believes this; hence the humor to think that someone would go to this extreme.

If you or someone you know has been raped, beaten or anything remotely comparable, I can wholeheartedly sympathize. I as well can empathize to some extent; I was beaten when I was in the ninth grade, quite literally within inches of my life, by some second-year senior "sportos," merely because I had long hair. I think that rape is a far more intrusive and obviously personal event which I condone on no level.

I entirely believe, as well, that the cartoonist finds not one ounce of humor in the subject of rape. It is apparent to me that "Fairrington" is merely using his talents in order to try, in the manner which is his media, to touch the public. Sometimes it is best to reach people in a lighter manner, one which comes not instead of, but in addition to and following, the direct coverage of such a horrific event.

The cartoonist is not being insensitive. In fact, perhaps the opposite is true. He is not being sensitive in the sense that he is comforting the victim personally, but he is keeping the issue on the minds of the public and not letting it fade away.

Finally, I think that you need to realize that not all cartoons are like "Ziggy," "Garfield" or "Peanuts." It seems these are the kind of cartoons that you must tend to lean toward as you deem the "Fairrington" cartoon "lacking humor, quite rude and unneeded in a college newspaper."

You continue on to request that the artist "Try and draw funny cartoons." Well, perhaps you should turn to the comics page; you might find something a bit more to your liking. This is a political cartoon and therefore deals with political issues and current issues, and does so with an edge of humor, however small that may be.

It is good that "Fairrington" has managed to raise your eyebrows, but maybe it would be good to look at the whole picture and what his purpose is in drawing the cartoon.

I find no more humor in rape than you do. I can, however, see when an artist is trying to reach the public from a different angle.

Keep up the good work, Fairrington.

ASASU allocates added allowance amid angry altercations

By KARA SHIRE
STATE PRESS

With personal attacks and cheap shots mixed in, the Associated Students of ASU Senate managed to appropriate its entire $19,000-plus budget increase Tuesday.

The executive offices received more than $6,000 to breathe life into their dwindling operations budgets.

The graduate student affairs vice president's office was given $1,750. The additional $750 above the $1,000 given to other executive offices was awarded by the senate because the GSAVP office had to create an operations budget.

But the money was not appropriated without a fight.

Autumn Ness, ASASU activities vice president, was the most vocal opponent to the amended bill that transferred the additional $750 into the GSAVP account.

"All that I'm saying is, give the thousand, and if it's spent wisely and if it runs out, then come back and ask for more," Ness said at Tuesday's senate meeting. "I think it's very dangerous to put more money in an account that is just sitting there doing nothing."

Tony Knowles, ASASU graduate student affairs vice president, said he wanted the money because the other offices began the year with a $750 operations budget which his office didn't have.

"You have to have faith in the executive officers," Knowles said. "I disagree wholeheartedly with Vice President Ness when she said she's nervous (about giving my office the money)."

The battle continued when Sen. Craig Reid brought up Ness' request last summer for an additional $6,000 to be transferred into the concert budget and this fall's failed concert series.

Senate president Joshua Carr ended the attacks with a request to stop the use of extraneous information.

Knowles and Reid got revenge when it came time to approve the bill transferring $1,000 into Ness' office, and they were given the opportunity to grill her over the merits of the transfer.

Without any argument, the president, vice-president and campus affairs offices were each given additional funds.

The left-over $13,750 was transferred to public relations, elections and contingency accounts.

Garden offers training, therapy for disabled, students

BY ED BAKER
SPECIAL TO THE STATE PRESS

The frame of the tunnel has been constructed, but it's difficult to say when the walls and ceiling will be completed.

They're being built by Mother Nature.

The tunnel is one of the centerpieces in Grandpa Charlie's Garden at The Centers for Habilitation(TCH), 215 W. Lodge Drive, in Tempe. Vines will eventually grow over the sides and top of the frame to create walls.

The garden, which opened Tuesday, is named after Charlie Sweet. He and his wife volunteered for the center before he passed away three years ago. When he died, his wife, Jeanne, donated $5,000 to the center and asked that a bench be placed in his memory.

The request for the bench turned into the idea of the garden, said Amanda Place, garden fund-raiser.

The purpose of the garden is to provide horticulture therapy for people with disabilities.

"What we're doing is providing job training for (disabled) individuals. We're preparing them for employment," said Lynn Hughes, vocational manager at TCH.

TCH has already signed a contract to sell its fresh vegetables and herbs to P.F. Chang Restaurants.

The garden contains raised flower beds, for people in wheelchairs, vertical plant sites for people who can't bend over, a healing garden, an herb garden and a greenhouse.

All pathways and walkways through the garden are accessible for wheelchairs.

TCH, a non-profit organization, has two centers in Tempe. One works with adults over 21 and the other works with children, often from birth, thus the term habilitation instead of rehabilitation. Patients often stay with TCH permanently, Place said.

The 125 patients at the Tempe adult branch, referred to as "consumers" by TCH, will work at least once a week in the garden, growing various vegetables and flowers. Others will work in conjunction with students from ASU in the herb garden.

All consumers will be paid by TCH for their work.

"You should see their faces when they get their paycheck," Place said. "Sometimes they just hold it up in the air and show it to you. They're just so proud that they've earned money for themselves."

TCH has also set up a partnership with the Tempe Union High School District.

"We anticipate having about 10 to 15 individuals from the high schools. They'll spend about half the day here and the other half at school learning their regular curriculum," Hughes said. "This will help students make the transition from high school to the world of work."

Place said TCH has been in contact with several country clubs and other "green industries" — landscapers, golf courses and nurseries, to see if they would be willing to hire graduates of the program.

"Most of them have been positive. They've said they're willing to hire if the people are qualified," Place said.

Several major donors have made the garden possible, Place said.

Wells Fargo donated $50,000, and TCH Board Member Warren Mills gave $43,000 for the construction of the greenhouse. The greenhouse was named the Charlie Mills Greenhouse, in honor of Mills' father. The cost of the entire garden was $360,000.

The garden will be opened to the public and can be rented for business or social functions.

Proposed transit center to ease congestion, connections

BY SHARAN K. GILL
STATE PRESS

The City of Tempe Transit Division is proposing a $6 million transit center on Fifth Street and Forest Avenue to house connections for buses, bikes and a future lightrail.

Mary O'Connor, transit manager, said the idea of a transit center was proposed in 1990 because of the congestion at the current transit connection center on College Street.

"We started out with about a dozen sites to look at and decided that we need to accommodate the existing conditions downtown first," she said.

Located on the parking lot in between the Tempe police station and the ASU stadium, the new building will include a parking structure, transit offices and ground floor retail, said Betsy Moll, transit planner.

"The first step is for the council to approve the location study," Moll said. "There are still technical, traffic and noise studies that are being done and there is an archeological study to make sure there won't be any impacts on the city."

After the plans are approved it will take another 2 1/2 years for the center to be completed, Moll said.

Along with the downtown center, another (center) is also proposed for south Tempe, but the location is open to suggestions from the public, she added.

The half cent transit tax passed by Tempe voters in September 1996 is funding the centers and additional bus stops.

O'Connor said they are also looking into a possible day-care facility for the center.

"Often the reason that people can't use public transportation is because they have daycare drop-offs, this would solve that problem."

The location will be up for approval at the Nov. 6 city council meeting

"We have been waiting to be able to site a transit center and wants to thoroughly read the proposal and confer with other council members before I say this is the best location," said Tempe Mayor Neil Giuliano.

Tempe acquires 44 new buses; 12 of those to replace FLASH

BY TIM BAXTER
STATE PRESS

Tempe's half-cent transit tax — passed last September — is beginning to pay off with the recent purchase of 44 new buses.

The city is currently buying 12 35-foot buses at a cost of $3.3 million. Last December, an order was made for 17 40-foot buses, and 15 30-foot buses were ordered in March.

The different sizes are needed for different services. The larger sizes are for the longest routes, while the small buses are used primarily for residential areas.

Total cost of the bus buy is $12,349,000 million. Tempe's share of the cost is approximately $7,652,000, with the rest coming from federal funds. Tempe's share may decrease if more federal grants become available, Tempe Assistant Transit Manager Carlos DeLeon said.

The new 35-foot buses will replace the FLASH buses serving ASU. Currently the FLASH buses are on loan from the city of Phoenix.

Tempe contracts officer Ron Hughes said the new buses take natural gas and will hold approximately 28 passengers and two wheelchairs. He added that the city may buy more buses next year.

DeLeon said the city was also investigating ways of making buses safer in heavy bike and pedestrian traffic. The city is considering buying devices that push people out and away from the wheels before they are run over.

DeLeon said that the cost of the devices is not "substantial when you're talking about $290,000 per bus," but the city had not finished investigating the manufacturer's claims.

"It may claim to (work) but not live up to its claim," he said. "We'll explore every option to make the buses safer."

ASASU appoints 3 new justices

By KARA SHIRE
STATE PRESS

After less than an hour of discussion, the Associated Students of ASU Senate approved the appointment of three Supreme Court justices Tuesday.

Wade Swanson, Sonia Krainz and Joseph Emig, all three graduate students in the law college, will join Jess Walsh and Scott Weiss to complete the ASASU Supreme Court.

The three justices were chosen from a pool of 27 applicants. Each justice will serve a two-year term enforcing the ASASU bylaws and constitution.

"I see it as a great opportunity to give something back to the University," Swanson said. "We owe something back to the community, and we have some abilities as law students that maybe some undergraduates don't."

Emig said he felt relief and appreciation at being approved for the justice position.

"I'm really eager to serve the University," Emig said. "Let me contribute to the University, and I'll (learn) a lot from it. There's really a mutuality of benefit here."

Greg German, chair of the selection committee, said the nominations were made as quickly and efficiently as possible, despite a missed deadline.

"The supreme court selection committee, under a strong deadline which was the bylaws, took effective and immediate action in selecting the three candidates," German said.

The committee's nominations were two weeks behind the deadline set by the ASASU bylaws, but German said he is pleased with the end result.

"I'm satisfied the students were not cheated and the students will be happy with the choices," German said.

Sen. J.D. Wallace, another member of the six-person justice selection committee, expressed concerns earlier this week with one of the committee nominees, but said he is content with the appointments.

"I think that they're all level-headed people," Wallace said. "I went against (Emig) because I hadn't recommended him. That doesn't mean he's not qualified. I think these are all OK people."

- A student reported that someone criminally damaged his vehicle while parked in Structure 4.

- A woman not associated with ASU was arrested, cited and released for underage possession of alcohol at 601 E. Apache Blvd.

The Tempe police reported the following incidents on Wednesday:

- A 32-year-old man was arrested at 632 E. Taylor St. after he allegedly hit a traffic enforcement officer in the face with a parking ticket the meter maid gave him 15 minutes earlier. He was booked into Tempe City Jail for misdemeanor assault and released on his own recognizance.
- A 21-year-old delivery driver was arrested at the Tempe police station after a man identified him as the guy who hit him on the arm on Aug. 27 near Scottsdale Road and the Red Mountain Freeway with an aluminum baseball bat. The victim sustained a broken arm and the slugger was booked into the Tempe City Jail for aggravated assault — a class three felony. He was released pending charges.
- A man was arrested in the 5500 block of south Waverly Way after he led state Department of Public Safety and Tempe police officers on a chase. DPS was apparently pursuing a man on a gray motorcycle on Interstate 10 when the man veered into Tempe. Tempe police joined the pursuit, chasing the man into the 1000 block of east Driftwood where the man ditched the bike. He then jumped into a lake, swam to the other side and continued fleeing on foot. A Phoenix police helicopter was called in, along with K-9 units. Additionally, residents of The Lakes neighborhood allowed police to use their boats to look for the swimming suspect. Dogs located the man a short time later behind some shrubbery. He was arrested and turned over to DPS.

Johnson gains more support with Basha's race withdrawal

By PAUL DAVENPORT
ASSOCIATED PRESS

PHOENIX — Paul Johnson picked up new support on Wednesday following Eddie Basha's decision not to run for governor. But some Democratic activists awaited word on other possible candidates.

Basha, who cited family considerations for his decision, had locked up support from scores of Democratic office-holders and other party leaders statewide.

But with his withdrawal, those activists were put in play. Some adopted a wait-and-see attitude while others were ready to stake out new positions.

"Paul Johnson is our candidate. There's no question about that now," Pima County Democratic Chairman Jonathan Kress said from Tucson, a Democratic bastion in statewide elections. "He's our man. We're going to get behind him."

Similarly, state Sen. Ruth Solomon, D-Tucson, said she would "like to see the party get behind Paul at this time. I think he would be a good standard-bearer for our party."

Names of other potential candidates mentioned include former Phoenix Mayor Terry Goddard, who lost a 1991 runoff to Republican Fife Symington and the 1994 primary to Basha, and U.S. Attorney Janet Napolitano.

Close associates said Napolitano was considering whether to run and would decide within a week whether to remain as U.S. attorney. In that post, she is barred from partisan activities.

Napolitano said Wednesday she had received numerous phone calls asking her to enter the race but said she had to limit her responses — "it's an honor to be asked and thank you for calling."

Goddard said after Basha's decision that he was reconsidering his previous disinclination to run but that he would not decide right away.

That's OK even though Johnson has been waging an energetic campaign across the state, said some Democratic leaders.

The September primary "is a long way off," said Martin Bacall, a top-ranking state party official who serves on the Democratic National Committee. "It's premature to foreclose any options."

David Shearer, Democratic chairman for Yuma County, said Basha's big footprint may have scared off some potential candidates.

Pima County SWAT team raids right house, wrong family

BY ARTHUR H. ROTSTEIN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

TUCSON (AP) — Commanders have apologized for a SWAT team's arrest of the wrong family during a nighttime raid. But some civil rights advocates say that isn't enough.

Pima County SWAT deputies, operating on behalf of agents with the Metropolitan Area Narcotics Trafficking Interdiction Squad, swept into a northwest home early Friday, horrifying its tenants, Ramona and Margarita Estrada and their family.

MANTIS commander Capt. Kermit Miller and Sheriff's Capt. George Heaney said Tuesday they're sorry for the hour of terror and any subsequent nightmares or emotional scars.

"It's not our intent to terrorize anybody," said Heaney, responsible for the sheriff's SWAT operations. He estimated that the county and Tucson Police SWAT teams execute several hundred such raids a year.

"In the last five years, this has been the third time that this type of situation has happened," he said.

Some lawyers say they believe the agency and its officials are legally liable for violations of civil rights through actions that they equate to terrorism.

And Pima County Supervisor Sharon Bronson said it may be time to re-examine the procedures followed by the Sheriff's Office and the Metropolitan Area Narcotics Trafficking Interdiction Squad to make sure that citizens' constitutional rights are protected.

"In this case we had the right house and the SWAT team hit, but the wrong people lived there, and our information was bad," Miller said.

"We're trying to figure out how to prevent that from happening again."

The Estradas and their five children, a nephew and two friends were jarred awake at 1:33 a.m. Friday, choking from tear gas, ordered at gunpoint to the floor, then outside in their underwear or pajamas. The adults were handcuffed with plastic restraints for 10 to 15 minutes.

Information from the second of two earlier raids Thursday night led officers to believe that the third home was that of a drug suspect.

It turned out that the man had moved during the summer.

The Estradas have rented the home for three months.

"Cops have seen enough of these warrants. They understand what it must be like for people who are totally innocent," Miller said. "To have people burst in on you with guns, it's got to be scary, it's got to be frightening. It's not a pleasant experience."

"They treated us really badly — really rough," Ramon Estrada told The Arizona Daily Star. "They didn't say they were sorry — didn't apologize — just picked up and left."

And his 13-year-old daughter Adriana said, "If they could have said, 'I'm sorry. We apologize. It was a mistake,' we could have understood."

But Miller said a Spanish-speaking officer told the Estradas after the raid that the officers and agencies regretted the mistake. He said he hoped to meet with the family himself to reiterate that.

Sheriff Clarence Dupnik was out of town and unavailable for comment, his secretary said.

Heaney said team officers had driven past the house earlier with MANTIS detectives to double-check the address.

Heaney said his officers left after about 10 to 15 minutes and probably did not know it was not the right house until the next day.

"This is a very unfortunate situation when a completely innocent family is subjected to that," he said.

Tucson attorney Michael Bloom represented another family with whom the county settled a lawsuit for about $125,000 after county SWAT deputies raided them in July 1995 — going to the wrong home.

Bloom said it appears that officials provided outdated information in applying for a search warrant last week. He believes the agencies would be liable for federal civil rights violations.

So do Tucson attorneys Jesus Romo-Vejar and Michael Piccarreta.

Such raids amount to "typical acts of terrorism" found in third-world countries, Romo-Vejar said.

Added Piccarreta: "It could be a violation of federal law. It's clearly a civil law matter. These things should never happen."

Recipes for illegal drug 'Cat' making inroads through Internet

IRVINE, Calif. (AP) — A 16-year-old girl arrested on suspicion of making the illegal stimulant methcathinone told investigators she found a recipe for the drug on the Internet.

The girl, whose name was withheld due to her age, was living with her uncle and was arrested after he smelled a peculiar odor in the house and couldn't get an adequate explanation from her.

The girl had the supplies for a sophisticated manufacturing lab and recipes for other drugs, police Lt. Tom Hume said Tuesday. He said she already had thrown away at least two failed batches of "cat," as the drug is known, before she was arrested Friday.

The girl told detectives after her arrest that she had been trying to "cook" the drug using instructions she found on the Internet.

At least 25 Internet sites are devoted to the drug, including how to make it, enhance its high and reduce the costs of certain ingredients.

Methcathinone, similar to methamphetamine, first appeared in Michigan six years ago and has been popular in the Midwest, though rarely seen in California.

But officials said they fear seeing more. The easy-to-get ingredients — which include over-the-counter decongestants and chemicals like drain and concrete cleaners — make manufacturing methcathinone appealing.

"They can do it cheap and sell it for $100 a gram," said Special Agent Gary Hudson, a supervisor for the state's Bureau of Narcotics. "But they do it at a risk. It's extremely dangerous to fool around with."

Microsoft not likely to cower at fines

BY GEORGE TIBBITS
ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEATTLE — It's been called the Evil Empire, and likened to a breed of Star Trek aliens who consume everything in their path.

Now the Justice Department is calling Microsoft Corp. a bully in the browser wars, accusing it of trying to monopolize the way we surf the Internet.

Microsoft's years of business practices that test the legal limits and its long refusal to cower to the antitrust cops have few experts thinking the latest threat will bring the company to its knees.

Even the government's attempt to fine Microsoft $1 million a day would hardly sting a company that last year made $4 billion every day — including Saturdays, Sundays and Christmas.

"Microsoft has been called every bad name in the book," says Jim Balderston, an analyst with Zona Research Inc. in Redwood City, Calif. "They're pretty thick-skinned."

The Justice Department on Monday accused Microsoft of using its dominant Windows operating software, which runs 80 percent of personal computers, to shut out potential customers of rival Netscape's Internet browser. The government said Microsoft requires PC makers that install Windows 95 on their products to sell it with Microsoft's browser, Internet Explorer.

Moreover, Microsoft is accused of threatening PC manufacturers who sought to alter its Explorer browser with terminating their licenses for Windows.

The department's antitrust division asked a federal judge to hold Microsoft in contempt of a 1995 court order barring the Redmond, Wash.-based company from anti-competitive licensing. The department wants a judge to fine the company $1 million a day if it is found in contempt and continues the practice.

Microsoft says it is only giving customers what they want, did nothing illegal and is confident it can win any court challenge.

In past run-ins with government, Microsoft softened some tactics that got it in trouble, but for the most part it continued its aggressive grab for rivals' business.

For example, Microsoft now thinks twice about big outright acquisitions after authorities in 1995 zapped its proposed merger with Intuit, the maker of Quicken, a deal that would have helped it lock up the market for personal finance software.

But Microsoft — despite the 1995 court order — continued over the next two years to strike deals with nearly every major PC maker to make its Internet Explorer easier for Web surfers to use than Netscape's Navigator.

"Their business culture is not likely to turn on a dime just because of this suit," says Hadley Reynolds, director of research at Delphi Consulting Group in Boston.

Still, that aggressive strategy could backfire, says Jesse Berst, editorial director for ZDNet AnchorDesk, an online news magazine.

By taking a "haughty, self-righteous air," Berst says, Microsoft is sacrificing goodwill and giving free positive publicity to its competitors.

"I think that this stonewalling tactic of theirs is a foolish business decision and it comes out of pride and arrogance, not really thinking through what is really going to be best for your business," Berst says.

Though Bill Gates' extraordinary success — and $38 billion fortune — might cause some sour grapes, many rivals contend his company plays too close to the line of what's permissible in business.

Microsoft's early history was characterized by squabbles with IBM, Apple, Novell and other rivals. In the early 1990s, the government accused it of shutting out competitors through its licensing practices, which led to the consent decree in 1995.

Earlier this year, the Justice Department began looking into Microsoft's investments in Apple as well as VDONet Corp., Progressive Networks Inc. and VXtreme Inc. The three smaller companies are players in the fledgling market for technology that enables people to watch live images from Web sites.

What really will cost Microsoft — much more than $1 million a day — "is the uncertainty and delay it puts in their plans for getting the next generation of software out of the box," says Luke Froeb, assistant professor at Vanderbilt University's Owen Graduate School of Management.

Study: Some changes made on military sex harassment

BY SUSANNE M. SCHAFER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The latest study on women in the military said today that females at bases in Alaska and the Pacific still face discrimination and progress has been spotty.

The report, issued by the Defense Advisory Committee on Women in the Services, said some progress has been made in ending sex harassment and abuse. But a lot depends upon the attitudes of base and unit commanders.

"In all services and countries visited, negative climates were described at some installations," the report said. "Gender discrimination and sexual harassment were still identified by personnel in WESTPAC (the western Pacific)."

The report found heightened concern over "morale, readiness, utilization of women and support services for women and families" compared with two years ago. Committee members met with 2,400 military men and women at installations in bases in Alaska, Japan, Korea, Guam.

Their report praised commanders at the Navy base in Yokosuka, Japan, for realistic approaches to combating bias and sex harassment.

One ship, the USS Curtis Wilbur, was praised for boosting morale for junior enlisted personnel in ways "envied by sailors on other ships."

The report comes one day after a Rand Corp. study said most enlisted men and women in the military favor training together and women should be allowed to serve in ground combat units.

"Gender integration is perceived to have a relatively small effect on readiness, cohesion and morale in the units we studied," the report stated. "Both men and women contended that women perform about as well as men."

Defense Secretary William Cohen said he was pleased by the Rand report. "More needs to be done to improve career opportunities for women in the military. We can and will do more. America's sons and daughters deserve no less," he said.

The Rand study, conducted over a three-month period in the past year, found that 80 percent of women and half the men support allowing women in ground combat units.

But 25 percent of women and 39 percent of men favored training separately. Only the Marine Corps segregates men and women in basic training.

The issues of same-sex training and women in the military have come under increased scrutiny in Congress in recent months, particularly in the wake of the Army's numerous sexual harassment cases and courts-martial.

From 1992 to 1994, Congress and civilian military leaders took a number of steps to open a broad range of positions in the military to women. Since 1992, women have been allowed to fly combat aircraft, for example.

A total of 259,199 positions were opened up, but Pentagon officials said they could not say exactly how many of those jobs had been taken by women.

Clinton plans to stop foreign assault weapons

By SONYA ROSS
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Clinton plans to suspend new permits to foreign gun makers in hopes of blocking assault weapons that were modified to skirt a federal ban, the White House said Wednesday.

The National Rifle Association immediately decried the plan as an effort to "ban self-loading firearms in general."

"What is next to be banned? The Benelli semiautomatic shotgun like the one the president used for duck hunting?" said Wayne LaPierre, NRA executive vice president.

Officials said Clinton is expected to sign a two-part directive that would suspend pending and future applications to import modified assault weapons. The directive also would examine the criteria used to allow import of nonsporting weapons and adjust that criteria as necessary.

"We now are seeing manufacturers who are able, in a sense, to clone assault weapons and slip underneath the standards," said White House spokesman Mike McCurry. "The president has a big concern about that."

The president's directive would affect about 30 weapons, said senior adviser Rahm Emanuel.

The White House's moves came after 30 Democratic senators, led by Sen. Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., wrote Clinton last month asking that he temporarily suspend imports of all semiautomatic weapons to block an Israeli manufacturer's export of thousands of modified military-style assault weapons for commercial sale.

The guns, known as the Uzi American and the Galil Sporter, were modified so that they do not violate a 1994 assault weapons ban, the senators said. They noted that the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms has said the guns remain capable of firing rapid rounds of ammunition, but were approved for import because they were not found to violate the 1994 ban.

"They have become the weapon of choice for grievance killers, gangs and those who use them against police," Feinstein wrote. "They are designed to kill large numbers in close combat, and as such have no place on the streets of a civilized society."

The NRA, however, said gun control, not crime, was the real motivating factor behind Clinton's directive. It noted FBI statistics showing rifles of all types were involved in only 3 percent of homicides nationwide.

"More people are murdered each year by fists and feet than by a so-called assault weapon," LaPierre said. "This is a massive effort by the Clinton administration to begin the process of banning full ownership of firearms by the American public."

The Uzi and Galil both are made by Israel Military Industries, a government-owned manufacturer.

Under Clinton's plan, ATF would study the various ways that about 30 foreign-made modified assault rifles are being used. Feinstein asked Clinton to halt import of all assault weapons immediately, pending the outcome of the study, and also appealed to Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu to "personally intervene" to halt the export.

Save trees. Recycle! Just imagine the good you'll be doing just by cutting this newspaper out of the recycle bin. Why, if you get a whole lot of people to do this, we can save a lot of trees. And we can save a lot of money, too. So please, don't be an environmentalist. You can be a really good person. If you do, you don't want to be responsible for leaving hundreds of poor little animals lost, alone, and homeless, do you? Then save a tree and recycle. Thank you. :)

BACKUP'S BIG BREAK

Pat Shannahan/State Press

Junior tailback Marlon Farlow (4), shown slicing his way through traffic against USC two weeks ago, has bolstered the Sun Devils' running game with 98-yard and 129-yard performances the past two weeks.

Starters' injury allows tailback Marlon Farlow to show off skills

BY ED ODEVEN
STATE PRESS

ASU's unknown running back is no longer unknown. Reserve tailback Marlon Farlow was given a golden opportunity to receive playing time in the past two games. And he has made the most of that opportunity.

With USC trailing 28-7 after three quarters and with sophomore tailback J.R. Redmond sidelined due to a strained right hip, Farlow entered the game. He finished with 11 carries for 98 yards, including a 63-yard outburst downfield.

Not bad for one quarter, eh?

The junior political science major topped that performance one week later.

With Redmond still sidelined, Farlow moved up to No. 2 on the Sun Devils' depth chart behind senior starter Michael Martin for last Saturday's game at Stanford. He rushed 13 times for a career-high 129 yards. Farlow's high-light reel of the game came on a galloping 60-yard TD that gave ASU a 31-7 lead en route to a 31-14 victory over the host Cardinal.

Farlow's previous career-high was 125 yards versus Boise State last season.

ASU head coach Bruce Snyder was impressed with Farlow's outstanding effort.

"He's very good. He did a nice job running," Snyder said.

Farlow likened his emotional high during the past two weeks to being on Cloud Nine.

"I was (there)," the 1994 graduate of Eisenhower High

No. 10 Ice Devils look to rebound tonight against Billikens

BY MATT PAULSON
STATE PRESS

After a "frustrating" road trip to Colorado, the ASU Ice Devils return home tonight for a face off with the Saint Louis Billikens. Game time is 8:45 at the Oceanside Ice Arena.

While what a Billiken is remains a mystery to most, the No. 10 Ice Devils said they are more concerned with finding out what type of a team Saint Louis is.

"We don't know what to expect, but we're going to take it like they're a quality team," junior defenseman Gordon Hester said. "Mainly we're focusing on what we need to do."

Fellow defenseman Mike Bradstock said a friend from Saint Louis gave him a little insight.

"They've got good defense, but other than that, they're just an average team," the senior said.

ASU has no scouting report on the Billikens because they are a Division II team while the Ice Devils are Division I. Also, the two squads did not meet last year.

Last Saturday, the Ice Devils (1-2) were in the process of evening their overall record at 2-2 against the Colorado Buffaloes when the game was canceled in the second period. ASU had built a 2-0 lead but when a large crater in the ice was found, officials called the contest.

The previous evening, ASU had trouble finding the ice rink and arrived only 10 minutes before the start of the game. The Buffaloes won 5-2.

Additionally, ASU was without head coach Gene Hammett, who stayed behind for health reasons.

"It was frustrating," goalie Greg Powers said. "I played the worst game of my career."

Despite the forgettable weekend, Bradstock said the team is in a good mood.

"We've been through a lot of adversity

At Pac-10 halfway point, ASU defensive unit earns high marks

BY ED ODEVEN
STATE PRESS

Midway through the 1997 Pac-10 season, the ASU football team has exceeded many expectations.

This was supposed to be a "rebuilding year," according to many gridiron experts.

Defensively, there has been no rebuilding. In fact, ASU's dominant defense may arguably be a better overall unit than last year's.

Need proof?

Currently, the 23rd-ranked Sun Devils (5-2 overall, 3-1 Pac-10) are No. 1 in the conference. They are yielding just 13.1 points per game (11th-lowest total nationally), 94.3 yards passing per game (seventh nationally and tops in the conference) and their total defense is allowing just 304.1 yards per game (22nd nationally).

This has all been done, despite losing key standouts like Derek Smith, Derrick Rodgers and Scott Von der Ahe to the NFL.

With a bye week on our heels, now's as good a time as any to evaluate how the defense has done so far.

DEFENSIVE LINE

Budding star Jeremy Staat, a 6-foot-6, 288-pound right tackle from Bakersfield, Calif., has emerged as the dominant player on the line. He leads the team with 4.5 sacks (fourth in the Pac-10), and is fourth on the team in tackles with 37, including 10 for a loss.

"Staat is a main factor in the league," Snyder said. "I bet when people watch us they say 'Ooh, they got a 300-pounder that can really move.'"

That's exactly what Staat has done — move and disrupt the flow of the game.

Staat's starting linemates, Vince Amey, Albrey Battle and Hamilton Mee have been solid and physical, particularly in stopping the run, which is evident by opponents inability to consistently run against ASU.

Staat and Battle have become a solid one-two punch.

"Staat is so physical and strong and Albrey is kind of like a snake," Snyder said. "He kind of slithers and bounces off of people. They are a real nice combination."

The line needs to improve its pass rushing, especially four-man quarterback pressure. Losing Rodgers was a big deal, but not as big a deal as some people thought.

LINEBACKERS

Senior outside linebacker Pat Tillman, the heart and soul of the defense, leads the squad with 54 tackles and three interceptions. He is the defense's MVP so far, and deservedly so. In critical situations, Tillman has made critical plays. He intercepted two passes in ASU's road win at Oregon State, and he was the defensive star Saturday posting 11 tackles, one caused fumble and one INT at Stanford.

Senior inside linebacker Paul "The Reynolds Wrap" Reynolds is second with 51 tackles. He has more than adequately replaced Von der Ahe. And Reynolds' veteran leadership has been a welcome addition to the starting lineup.

Outside linebackers Larry Johnson and Stephen Trejo have split starting duties and have both made big plays.

"The linebackers' group, led by Tillman, has been very consistent," Snyder said. "The others have shown a lot more improvement because they had a lot further to go."

Koreans conquer ASU wrestlers in freestyle exhibition

By SCOTT LEWIS
STATE PRESS

In the Sun Devil's exhibition season-opener, the Korean University National Team defeated the ASU wrestling team 15-14 in a freestyle dual meet on Wednesday night in the Physical Education East building.

The Sun Devils, who just began practicing freestyle techniques on Wednesday, dropped the first four matches of the night to the Koreans, including 1995 All-American Danny Felix's 4-0 loss to Kim Sung Sil. But sparked by Tracy Brown's 4-0 victory over Ku Yong Pan, ASU rallied from a 12-2 deficit to win four out of the last five matches. However, heavyweight Joe Micela, who won by decision in the final match, was unable to score the pin or technical fall needed for the team victory.

"It was a little different," Micela said. "My freestyle background is not as advanced as a lot of the guys on the team. I knew going into the match he was a 213-pounder, so I knew I would have a lot of weight on him, and that he wasn't one of their top guys, so I wasn't really worried about him at all.

"It would have been nice to get the pin or technical fall that we needed for the win, but it just didn't turn out that way."

The scoring and weight classes for the meet, which is a prelude to this weekend's Sunkist Kids/International Open at the University Activity Center, were done according to international rules. The wrestlers for the Korean team were college-age students who were ranked either number one or two in their country.

"This is an excellent opportunity for our guys to wrestle against world-level competion," said ASU head coach Lee Roy Smith. "We're not quite in that league yet from an overall standpoint, but we've got some individuals that have enough of the international-style experience under their belt where they were able to have success."

In addition to Brown and Micela, Sun Devil victories were posted by returning All-Americans Matt Suter and Aaron Simpson. Suter and Simpson, along with Casey Strand, who did not compete, possess the most freestyle wrestling experience on the team. Suter's 4-0 victory over Aum Chang Jun was a dominating exhibition in freestyle expertise. Despite being hampered with a pinched nerve in his neck, he came out and went after Jun. Suter got the takedown and followed up by turning him right away, earning points. Suter spent the duration of the match punishing Jun.

"I knew the guy was pretty tough, being that all they're doing is wrestling freestyle all year round," Suter said. "We only wrestle freestyle a couple of tournaments out of the year. So I knew I had to go out there and wrestle hard.

"I kind of broke him a little bit too — he got real tired. Any time you break a guy like that and you get a decent lead on a good guy and he just quits and doesn't even try to come back . . . you have to be pretty happy with that."

190-pounder Jake Harman, who wrestled at the international weight of 97kg, dropped a close decision to Kim Hung-Yong, 3-2. According to Harman, the difference in the match, as well as a lot of the other matches, was the contrast in ASU's collegiate-style compared to the Korean's freestyle.

"The caliber of this tournament and this

Hwang Hwan-Woong of the Korean University National Team struggles to get ASU wrestler Michael Kawamura onto his back. Hwan-Woong won the bout, 14-6. Paul Besing/State Press weekend is world-level," Harman said. "This is a tournament that they peak for. They pay a lot of money to come here. Even though we lost, I still think we set the pace of the matches. There's some work to be done definitely on our feet, but I still think we dominated the matches as far as collegiate style."

For Smith and the rest of the coaches, the exhibition against the Koreans was the match-experience they needed to gear up for the season.

"I thought all of our guys competed very well," Smith said. "And although we put them in a disadvantage in terms of matching them up in this style at this time of the year, I was very proud of them. We are concentrating on our collegiate season and the collegiate style of wrestling, which is quite a contrast. It takes years to develop the skills and strategies to be successful in freestyle.

"At this point, every opportunity to compete right now is a chance for the staff and the wrestlers to assess and reinforce what it is they need to work on."

already so guys are pretty optimistic," Bradstock said.

Powers said it is imperative that the Ice Devils come away with a victory.

"We're anxious to get going and get a win," Powers said. "We've had no luck so far. We need a decisive win so we can back on track."

Hester concurred.

"We're looking for a win in this game because we're not quite where we want to be," he said. "The big thing will be not to panic. We tend to panic in our own zone because we're still getting used to each other."

WHERE THE PUCK BOUNCES

- Bradstock leads ASU with five points (two goals and three assists).

- The Ice Devils started out slow last season as well. They were 2-2-1 before going a perfect 7-0 in November.

- A Billiken is a bullet-headed creature with pixie ears, grinning mouth and rotund belly. In 1908, the Billiken Company of Chicago manufactured dolls in this image. A few years later, the Saint Louis football team was tagged with the nickname Bender's Billikens after head coach John Bender. Presumably, a connection was made between the Billiken and Bender's physique. It is said that Billikens are associated with good luck.

Action continues for women's tennis

FROM STAFF REPORTS

The ASU women's tennis team completed qualifying rounds of the Riviera All-American Tennis Tournament Wednesday.

In Tuesday's matches, senior Stephanie Lansdorp beat William & Mary's Michelle O in the first round 6-1, 6-3 before falling to Zsophia Czapo of Pepperdine 6-4, 6-3 in the second.

Junior Katy Propstra and sophomore Kerry Giardino both lost in the first round. Propstra dropped her match to Duke's Kristin Sanderson 7-5, 6-2. Giardino lost to Vanderbilt's Kim Schiff 6-1, 6-3. Propstra and Giardino competed in the qualifying singles back draw where Propstra fell to Sandra Noetzel of Nebraska 6-2, 6-2. Giardino lost to William & Mary's Johanna Jones 6-1, 6-0.

In doubles action Tuesday, senior Reka Cseresnyes and junior Alison Nash were the only Sun Devils to compete. Cseresnyes and Nash beat Brewer and Crha from Mississippi in the first round 6-7, 7-5, 6-1. Cseresnyes and Nash also won in the second round, beating Wake Forest's Harris and Kaiwai 6-7, 6-3, 6-1, before falling to Lucey and Zimpfer of Wisconsin 6-0, 6-3.

In Wednesday's matches there were no wins in the qualifying singles matches. Lansdorp took her match to three sets before dropping to Northwestern's Katherine Nasser 6-4, 2-6, 6-1. Nash fell to O in straight sets 6-2, 6-2 and freshman Faye DeVera lost to Marisa Velasco of Notre Dame 6-3, 6-1.

In the first round of the qualifying singles back draw Nash beat Mara Colaizzi of Loyola Marymount 6-2, 6-1. Lansdorp lost to Cal's Anita Kurimay 6-4, 6-2 and DeVera lost to Ivy Wang of Harvard 7-6, 7-6.

Wednesday's qualifying doubles brought a win for Cseresnyes and Nash in the first round who beat Hiete and Aydin of Wake Forest 6-1, 6-4. The doubles team of freshman Celena McCoury and Nash lost in the first round in three sets to Duke's Webb and Sanderson 7-5, 2-6, 6-4.

The tournament's main draw begins today. Cseresnyes is seeded in the singles matches, while Lansdorp and Propstra are seeded in doubles. The All-American concludes Sunday.

Farlow

School in Rialto, Calif., said. "It was exciting being out there. I had a lot of fun this past Saturday."

However, Farlow was quick to give credit where credit is due.

"I just thank God. Without him, I don't think I would have been able to have the opportunity that I had to do so well," Farlow said.

Divine intervention wasn't the only assistance Farlow received while serving as the ballcarrier at Stanford Stadium.

"The line blocked well, and (full-back) Jeff Paulk blocked well," he said. "Everything just went right."

Which has not been the case all season for Farlow.

Snyder felt Farlow was too anxious during the first half of the season, and his high-strung antics were not comforting.

"Marlon Farlow, early in the season, was wound tight and he had very little prospect of getting into the game," Snyder said. "And he was still wound tight. I said, 'Man, I don't want to give him the ball if you're that tight.'"

As the season progressed the Sun Devils matured, and Farlow calmed down.

"In the last two or three games, we've really worked on individually preparing on how you prepare yourself mentally in the locker room, how you take the field, how are you on the sideline," Snyder said. "He's starting to understand how to get himself ready to play. I feel real comfortable with him now. He didn't yell, scream, or jump."

But he did give an explanation for his recent success.

"I worked real hard in the off-season," Farlow said. "I knew it was going to be competition at the running back spot with Michael Martin and J.R. Redmond. I wanted to be prepared and be ready to compete with them."

"You have to go that extra mile and work hard on your own," said Farlow, who appeared in nine games during his freshman season (1994) before redshirting in 1995.

That effort has helped Farlow become a better all-around player.

"He picked up the blitz. When he had to run a complimentary route ... he did a nice job (remembering the routes). When he first got here he fumbled too much," Snyder said. "He's solved all those problems. He's become much more consistent in the passing game."

And he's now averaging a whopping 8.27 yards per carry this season (40 rushes for 331 yards).

When Redmond is healthy enough to play again — he is expected to suit up for the Washington State game next week — the Sun Devils will once again have three productive tailbacks in the mix.

Which is a problem any team would be delighted to have.

SECONDARY

This is clearly the defense's strength.

Senior starters Jason Simmons and Damien Richardson spearhead this unit's efficiency and leadership.

Richardson, a strong safety, is No. 3 on the team with 45 tackles. Simmons, a cornerback and the team's top cover man, has routinely covered the team's best receiver and helped him to minimal yards (just ask USC's R. Jay Soward).

Sophomore cornerback Courtney Jackson and junior free safety Mitchell Freedman are tremendously talented defenders. Sophomore reserve cornerback J'Juan Cherry has also been a valuable player. He started for Simmons at OSU and halted the Beavers' last-minute drive with a spectacular interception.

"I think the secondary has proven to be if not the best secondary in the conference, right at the top of the conference," Snyder said. "All across the board the veterans, the backups ... That's been a great group."

OVERALL

While the offense has struggled at times, this dynamic defense has kept the team in major bowl contention. That's a tremendous accomplishment in itself.

Sandy the Snowman puts chill on Marlins, ties Series

BY RONALD BLUM
ASSOCIATED PRESS

CLEVELAND— Sandy Alomar has shown he can bat and throw and catch. He sings, too.

Getting three hits, driving in three runs, calling the game and blocking pitches in the dirt wasn't enough.

He just about broke into a chorus of "Frosty the Snowman" after Cleveland beat Florida 10-3 Wednesday night and tied the World Series at two games apiece.

What did he think when he saw the white flurries during batting practice?

"Let it snow, let it snow, let it ..." he sang in the interview room, laughing at the sound of his voice.

"Yesterday our bodies were getting acclimated to the weather," he said. "You go from 85-degree weather to 30-degree weather, obviously your body's not going to function the same way it functioned the day before. Today was colder than yesterday and I felt better than yesterday because my body's adjusted to it."

After the Indians lost the opener, Alomar was the star in Game 2 with a two-run homer and a key throw to third that stopped Florida from a potential go-ahead rally.

Following Cleveland's ugly loss in Game 3, Alomar came up big again, ensuring the Indians a return trip to Florida this weekend.

His RBI double in the first put Cleveland ahead 3-0, and his single past second base made it 4-0 in the third.

He singled again in the fourth, and picked up another RBI in the sixth when he beat Bobby Bonilla's throw on a grounder to third, avoiding an inning-ending double play.

"You have to be strong mentally," he said, explaining how a catcher could perform this well in the harsh conditions. "I come early to the ballpark, prepare myself, jump in the Jacuzzi if I have to, ice myself if I have to. The game is at 8, 8:15, but I'm here in the ballpark 2:15, 2:30 to prepare for the game. Every single day, your body takes a lot of wear and tear."

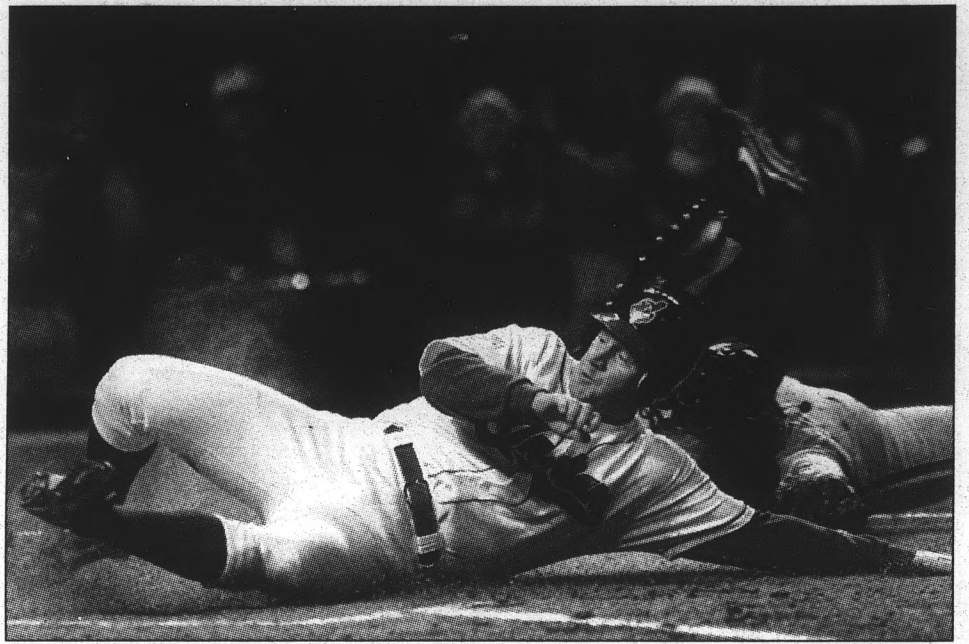

Alomar rocked, and so did Cleveland. It's that simple. He's become that inspirational to his teammates.

"I've been injured, I've been down. It's really taken a toll on my knees," Alomar said. "But I have come back."

It didn't matter that it was 38 degrees with snow flurries. Alomar kept crouching and blocking pitches in the dirt, keeping rookie Jaret Wright calm as the Marlins crept back within three runs.

"Ball one and ball two are getting me crazy," Alomar said after watching two nights of his pitchers repeatedly falling behind in the count.

"I've never seen anything like this," he said. "A lot of tired arms. It's very difficult to pitch this time (of year), particularly in Cleveland Indians third baseman Matt Williams safely slides home on Sandy Alomar's first inning single in Game 4 of the World Series Wednesday.

this weather. You have to do the best you can, but it's hard to call the game when you're behind 3-1, 2-1. But you have to do the best you can and make those guys swing the bat early."

At every key point of Cleveland's season,

Alomar has taken a star turn: the All-Star game homer, the Game 4 homer against the Yankees in the divisional playoff, the single that won Game 4 against Baltimore in the ALCS and now the two great games in the Series.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

by Frances Drake

Thursday, October 23, 1997

ARIES (March 21 to April 19)
You're likely to be uncertain of a friend's true intentions. Is it simply friendship or is there more to it? Tread carefully where interests of the heart are concerned.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20)
Your heart often reaches out to those in need, but be careful that your latest charity is not just another way to part you and your hard earned money.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20)
Either you or a close tie is not being candid. It's not necessarily a deception. One of you could be uncertain about how you really feel about a romantic involvement.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22)
Don't be talked into going against your common sense. You could be easily duped in money matters. Whether it's a sob story or a scheme, be on guard.

LEO (July 23 to Aug. 22)
You'll probably feel inspired by the muse, but you shouldn't take every one into your confidence. Good ideas are sometimes stolen. Watch out for being gullible.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 to Sept. 22)
You're uncharacteristically indecisive enough without others pulling you in opposing directions. It looks like you'll have to take a stand for your own peace of mind.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22)
You're impressionable in romance and may not be seeing others clearly. Enjoy the low light and the soft music, but keep your wits about you.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21)
You could be right in your feeling that someone is taking advantage of your good nature at work. If so, put the brakes on this sort of activity. Future problems are avoided by taking action.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21)
Trying to fathom another's motives can leave you even more confused. Not all is clear where romantic feelings are involved. Pleasure pursuits, though, are favored.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 19)
You'll be satisfied with your progress with a work project, but you could find it difficult to say no to another's request. Be careful about financial interests. Monetary matters aren't favored.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 to Feb. 18)
Even though others are polite, they may not be sincere. You can count on a partner, but in other relationships you're really not getting the complete story.

PISCES (Feb. 19 to March 20)
Although some progress will be made, you have a hard time juggling home interests with career requirements. Some feel imposed upon. A social outing promises fun after dark.

YOU BORN TODAY have a lot of creative ability and are drawn to art, literature and music. However, you have an unfortunate tendency to be a bit scatterbrained and impractical. Some even view you as being a bit dizzy and find it difficult to understand some of your actions. Once you develop a pragmatic side, you are more successful. Later in life, you are apt to change careers.
