Walter Cronkite, the "most trusted man in America," discusses the past and present state of journalism with a group of photography students Wednesday. During his annual visit to ASU, he spoke to several journalism classes.

Cronkite: Education is key

BY CHRIS PASSAMANO
STATE PRESS

With his signature mustache and distinguished, familiar voice, Walter Cronkite has been telling America the way it is for more than 30 years. During on-campus visits Wednesday, he told ASU students how he thinks it is.

Cronkite was in the Valley for Tuesday's Cronkite luncheon and award ceremony honoring ABC executive Roone Arledge.

He said that while higher education in America today is up to par, the lower levels of education are lacking.

"I think higher education seems to be in quite good hands," Cronkite said in an interview. "I think we are doing a great job in this country. Where we have got a major problem in this nation is in lower education and early education. Unless we get a handle on that situation, our democracy itself, I think, is in danger."

He said he feels much of the problem stems from a divide between upper- and lower-income people.

"A great problem is with the underprivileged areas in America — the inner cities, Appalachia rural areas," he said. "Particularly where our young people are not getting an adequate upbringing and education to take their place in a democratic society with any chance of further success, any chance of their contributing to the development of the democracy rather than being dragged upon it. We've got tens upon thousands of young people living in an environment where they have no opportunity to get any help in learning to learn in their early years."

He added that environments where parents can't buy

Mesa's Groscost selected as new House speaker

BY TARA TEICHGRAEBER
STATE PRESS

In an expected and largely unceremonial formality, Rep. Jeff Groscost, R-Mesa, was voted Speaker of the House Wednesday at the 43rd Legislature's second special session.

Groscost was selected as the Republican party nominee Oct. 20 after former speaker Don Aldridge, R-Lake Havasu City, resigned due to health problems.

Calling Groscost a "formidable, knowledgeable and personal legislator," House Majority Leader Lori Daniels, R-Chandler, nominated Groscost for the vote. The young Republican succeeded Phoenix Democratic nominee Art Hamilton with 35 votes.

In his first act as new speaker, Groscost heard general comments from House members before parties divided into caucus to discuss agenda items.

Rep. Tom Horne, R-Phoenix, called for action regarding ASU's decision to fire theater professor Jared Sakren. Horne described the department's decision to fire a professor for teaching classic literature as an "attack on Western intellectual tradition."

Horne read members an excerpt of Sakren's review which stated, "(Sakren) is firmly wedded to the idea of classical training... We must develop a program that features our strengths in play writing and departs from realism."

Horne called that reasoning "appalling."

"Our taxpayer dollars are more likely to be used for 'departures from realism' than training in the classics," he said. "When it reaches a point that people are excluded from a university for (teaching classics)... to quote Shakespeare, 'something stinks in Denmark.'"

Horne described himself as "a lover of classics" and joins colleague Rep. Marilyn Jarrett, R-Mesa, in voicing disdain for ASU's decision.

"I don't know what to do about it, but I would like to start public discussion," Horne said.

Legislative members will spend the remainder of the week in a special session called by Governor Jane Dee Hull to resolve issues relating to elderly care, child protective services and juvenile justice reform.

ASU crime prevention coordinator arrested for burglary

BY BRIAN ANDERSON
STATE PRESS

The ASU police employee responsible for crime prevention planning was arrested on burglary charges after she reportedly broke into Wilson Hall and stole several compact discs and $7 in cash.

Radawna Michelle also is a suspect in a string of on-campus burglaries that occurred in the last month, ASU police Chief Lanny Standridge said.

Standridge said Michelle was arrested late Friday night after she allegedly broke into Wilson Hall, pried open a desk and stole cash and several compact discs from a second-floor office in the College of Public Programs.

There were no signs of forced entry to the building.

Michelle was apprehended after two student community service aides on a routine patrol saw a suspicious person enter the building about 9:45 p.m. and reported it to police dispatch, Standridge said.

At about 11:15 p.m., police watching the area noticed Michelle come out of the building with a backpack and ride off on a bike, Standridge said.

He added that Michelle was arrested in her ASU police headquarters office about 11:45 p.m. after officers discovered several stolen compact discs, a homemade pry bar and a set of keys that open University offices.

"We're all stunned by the charges," Standridge said. "We realize the impact this has on the community, especially when it comes from within a police agency. We feel betrayed."

Michelle was booked into the Maricopa County Jail on one count each of burglary, possession of burglary tools and theft. She was later released on her own recognizance.

Standridge said police are investigating several items taken from Michelle's office and home Saturday morning to determine any link with the string of mid-October burglaries.

He added that Michelle was a suspect in last month's burglaries before Friday night, but was not under surveillance.

"There was a growing suspicion, but not enough to warrant direct questioning," he said.

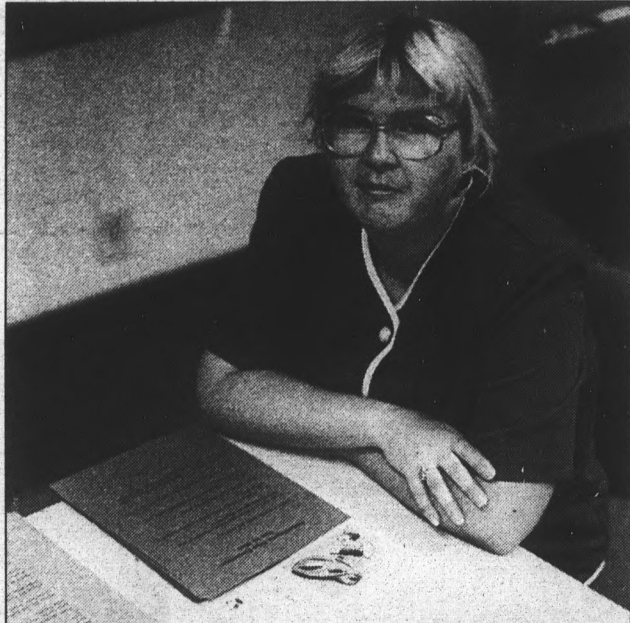

Michelle invoked her Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination and refused to answer investigators' questions, Standridge said.

He said Michelle was allowed to check out University keys because of her position at ASU police.

Although Michelle had turned in her resignation earlier this semester, effective this week, Standridge said he didn't think she burglarized the building out of revenge. He said that "because of the severity of the charges" she was fired.

Michelle, who did not return phone calls Wednesday, has no prior criminal background. She had worked for the police department for seven years, first as a dispatcher and then as the crime prevention coordinator, but was not a sworn police officer.

children things like alphabet blocks, where parents don't read children stories or discuss anything of interest with their kids and where children don't even hear English properly spoken at home adds to the problem.

As far as ASU, Cronkite feels the University has done a great job of preparing students and is pleased with the success of the journalism department bearing his name.

"Well I'm exceedingly proud of that," he said. "I would quarrel with (the statement) that the development of the journalism (department) began with the adoption of my name."

Cronkite attributes the success of the department to former Chairman Dean Bennett and current Chairman Doug Anderson.

"(We're) moving up into the top four, five, or six (journalism) schools in the country. It is a matter of great satisfaction for me."

He also said the school's successes spill over to the students.

"It seems to me that every year I come back, I can't believe that it can get much better," he said. "The kinds of questions that I get in these few classes I get to visit are extraordinarily good. They are questions that would come from people out in the professional world."

Cronkite said he thinks that even though there are concerns about ethics in journalism, he is confident that today's journalists and those in the future will do a good job.

"I think the practice of ethics has slipped, but the ethics are still there," he said. "The journalists out there and even the newest graduates from ASU and elsewhere are acquainted with the ethics."

He said journalists and journalism students know what ethics are; there are no written rules.

"I think that the journalists out there are doing their best to hold on to their ethical concepts. They are indeed trying to educate management to ethics — our hope is that they will succeed in doing so."

For Walter Cronkite this is the way it is and the way things need to be.

"Ethics really basically can not be compromised without being lost."

Q&A with Walter Cronkite:

Q: What are your favorite news services and newspapers?

A: Oh I watch them all. We have more newspapers around then you can wade through. I've got the clicker always in my hand. I'm a channel surfer. I go from one broadcast to another, wherever the news interests me most. When they go into a feature story, I go to another channel and hope I find some more news.

Q: Who does "The Most Trusted Man in America" trust?

A: I trust them all. Every one of the journalists that I know that is worth his or her salt is trustworthy in the sense that they are trying to get the facts. I know none in the front ranks who have a personal agenda.

Q: Is there any single newspaper or news program you prefer over the others?

A: The more news they give me, the more I'm going to like them. I have a great distaste for feature stories. Then the salacious stories go on far too much. The O.J. Simpson story, Princess Di story, even Marv Albert. They are interesting news stories, but not to the degree that they were exploited by the press. Vastly overdone. I wish they would bury Princess Di and let her rest in peace.

Q: What do you think of Marv Albert?

A: There is a joke going around New York that when NBC gave Marv Albert a pink slip, he wore it.

Q: So, do you read the State Press?

A: Oh sure, it's a good paper.

Q: You've said man's landing on the moon was the defining moment in history. What will be the next defining moment?

A: I don't know. My crystal ball is notoriously clouded. I came back from the Soviet Union and confidently predicted that they would never get the atomic bomb and was obviously very wrong about that one.

Council condemns Iraq; but Baghdad stands firm

BY ROBERT H. REID
ASSOCIATED PRESS

UNITED NATIONS — In a unanimous vote, the U.N. Security Council condemned Iraq, imposed a travel ban and warned of "further measures" Wednesday unless Iraq reverses its decision to expel American arms inspectors.

Iraq's deputy prime minister immediately rejected the U.N. demand and U.S. Ambassador Bill Richardson warned "the crisis with Iraq is not over."

"The message has been clear: Iraq must comply or face consequences," Richardson said after the vote. "We are not precluding any option, including the military option."

Russian Ambassador Sergey Lavrov told reporters that the crisis with Iraq was "headed for deadlock. It's very dangerous."

The government of Saddam Hussein, meanwhile, showed no signs of backing down on its vow to kick American inspectors out of Iraq. Iraqi Deputy Prime Minister Tariq Aziz, speaking in New York, declared that his government "refuses this resolution."

"Iraq will continue to defend its legitimate rights by all means," Aziz said. In Baghdad, Iraqi Foreign Minister Mohammed Said al-Sahhaf said the Americans would "definitely" be expelled but gave no timetable.

Iraq had suspended the expulsion order until the 15-member council finished debate. The council refused a request by Aziz to be allowed to present Iraq's case in a special session.

Iraq has turned back inspection teams nine of the last 10 days because they included Americans. With the Security Council's unanimous vote on Wednesday, U.N. officials said a major test would come Thursday if the inspectors try again to enter suspected Iraqi weapons sites.

In Washington, White House spokesman Mike McCurry said any move to boot out Americans "would be a very serious breach of Iraq's obligation to the international community."

The chief weapons inspector, Richard Butler, said he would send out his inspection teams Thursday.

"We will send out our teams in the normal way tomorrow," Butler said. "The teams will include American inspectors. We absolutely reject this discriminatory suggestion that some nationalities are objectionable."

Butler also said American U-2 surveillance flights will go ahead as scheduled.

In Baghdad, 4,000 people marched through the streets of the Iraqi capital Wednesday, chanting anti-American slogans and praising Saddam in the latest in a series of government-orchestrated protests.

"Saddam is our hero and we will never abandon him," said Ali Mahmoud, a 15-year-old protester.

McCurry, the White House spokesman, said the unanimous vote Wednesday reflected determination to get Iraq to comply with the United Nations. "Any sign that they are not ready to comply will be read for what it is ... an act of defiance and an act that requires further measures," he said.

The vote followed two weeks of intensive negotiations after Saddam's government announced Oct. 29 it was kicking out all Americans working for the U.N. Special Commission, which performs weapons inspections and surveillance of Iraq's disarmament efforts.

Those inspectors are trying to verify whether Iraq has complied with orders issued in 1991 at the end of the Persian Gulf War to destroy all long-range missiles and weapons of mass destruction.

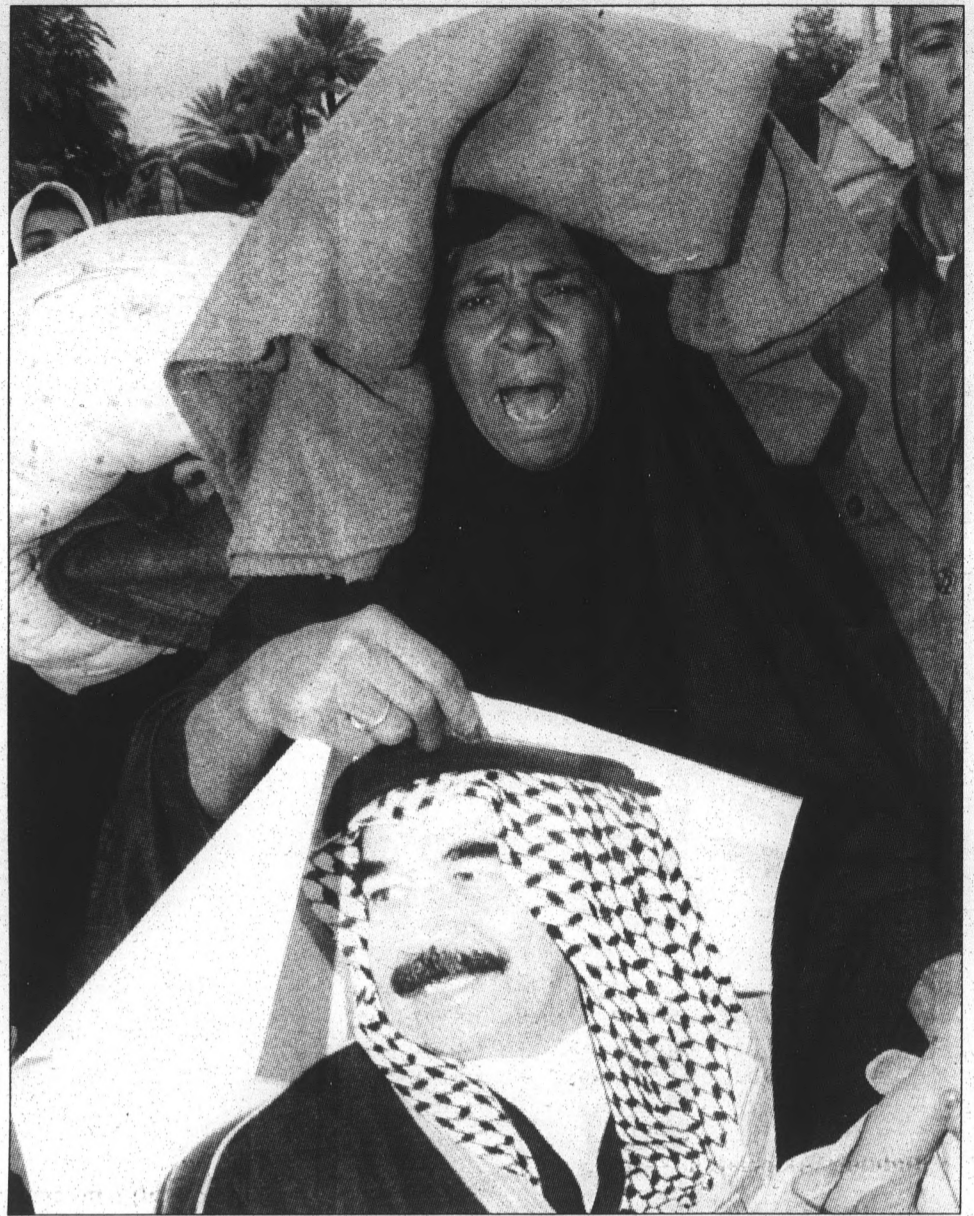

Only then will the council lift crippling economic sanctions imposed in August 1990 when Saddam sent his forces into Kuwait, touching off the Gulf war.

Personal intervention by Secretary of State Madeleine Albright convinced Iraq's sympathizers on the council — Russia, France, Egypt and China — to support the resolution.

Those nations and Kenya agreed to support the latest resolution only after the United States and Britain deleted strong language that hinted at military force.

"We are convinced that any complication with Iraq should be resolved exclusively by political means," Russia's Lavrov told the council.

French Ambassador Alain Dejammet

The United Nations has voted unanimously Wednesday to condemn Iraq's defiance of UN resolutions.

warned against actions which might prompt Iraq to shut down the entire U.N. inspection operation.

"Nothing would be worse than to call into question ... the relations between the United Nations and Iraq," Dejammet said.

"The security of the region is at stake here."

In the end, the resolution expressed the council's "firm intention" to take further unspecified measures if Iraq did not comply. The United States dropped its earlier plan to threaten Iraq with "serious consequences."

Two convicted in Trade Center bombing

BY LARRY NEUMEISTER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Two men were convicted Wednesday of conspiracy in the World Trade Center bombing, including one portrayed by prosecutors as one of history's most sinister terrorists and the architect of the 1993 attack.

The federal court jury answered a prosecutor's plea to make Ramzi Yousef and an accomplice, Eyad Ismoil, pay for plotting to kill a quarter of a million people by toppling two 110-story towers like dominoes across lower Manhattan.

The conspiracy charge carries a maximum sentence of life in prison.

The bombing killed six people, injured more than 1,000 and did considerable damage to the World Trade Center buildings, but they withstood the explosion.

The attack also stole from many Americans a sense of safety from the kind of Middle East terrorism they had only read about before.

Yousef and Ismoil both fled on commercial flights the night of the bombing. A $2 million reward for Yousef helped lead to his capture in Pakistan in 1995, the same year Ismoil was picked up in Jordan.

By then, four Islamic extremists had already been convicted of conspiracy in the case and each sentenced to 240 years in prison by U.S. District Judge Kevin Duffy, who presided over the current trial as well.

Yousef last year represented himself when he was convicted of conspiracy for killing a Japanese man with a bomb he put on a plane in December 1994, and for plotting to kill 4,000 Americans in two days by bombing a dozen airliners over the Far East. He has not yet been sentenced.

Prosecutors called more than 100 witnesses and introduced hundreds of exhibits to prove Yousef came to the United States in 1992 solely to bomb a landmark and scare Americans into shunning Israel.

"These defendants bombed the World Trade Center

Louis Aidala, attorney for World Trade Center bombing suspect Eyad Ismoil, addresses the media in front of the Federal Court Building Wednesday in New York. Ismoil and Ramzi Yousef were convicted Wednesday of conspiracy in the 1993 attack in Manhattan.

because of their own prejudice and their own hatred for Israel, for the United States and for the people of the United States," Assistant U.S. Attorney Lev Dassin said.

"Yousef was a terrorist. He came here to kill and to spread fear among the people of the United States," he said.

Yousef's fingerprints were all over bombing manuals explaining how to construct an explosive from urea-nitrate, the key ingredient authorities said was used to make the 1,200-pound bomb used in the attack.

Great Train Robber avoids extradition

BY MICHAEL ASTOR
ASSOCIATED PRESS

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil — Brazil's Supreme Court on Wednesday turned down a request from Britain to extradite the "great train robber," a fugitive who eluded Scotland Yard for more than three decades.

The court, in the capital of Brasilia, unanimously turned down the request to extradite Ronald Biggs because the 20-year statute of limitations on the crime has expired, a court spokesman said.

The decision is final; under Brazilian law, unanimous Supreme Court opinions cannot be appealed.

"I was confident that this decision would come out in my favor and I'd like to thank Brazilian justice, the Brazilian people and my lawyers," Biggs said in Rio, noting that he had been saving a bottle of champagne for months to celebrate his victory.

In Britain, the Home Office said it was disappointed with the decision, but believed that extradition arrangements with Brazil were now such that the country would no longer be a safe refuge for other British fugitives.

Britain and Brazil ratified an extradition treaty in August, closing a legal loophole that had allowed Biggs to live in Rio de Janeiro as a celebrity figure for the past 27 years.

Biggs, 68, became Britain's best-known fugitive after escaping from Wandsworth Prison in south London in 1965 after serving 15 months of a 30-year sentence for the robbery of the London-to-Glasgow mail train.

Biggs and 16 others made off with $7.3 million in the 1963 holdup. He and 11 others were caught, but five remained on the run. After stops in France — where he had plastic surgery to change his appearance — and Australia, Biggs arrived in Brazil in 1970.

Scotland Yard wanted Biggs to finish serving the 28 years remaining on his sentence for the 1963 robbery, a crime that became known as "the heist of the century."

ASU employee arrest ironic, weakens trust

The ASU community and police force are in shock after Radawna Michelle, a police employee, was arrested Friday night on burglary charges.

Michelle reportedly broke into Wilson Hall, stealing several compact discs and $7 in cash. ASU police have also said she is a suspect in several other on-campus burglaries that took place within the last month.

Although she was not a sworn police officer, Michelle was the crime-prevention coordinator for ASU police. She had served in that position for the past seven years.

Oh, the irony.

What could possibly be the motivation for such a petty crime? Really, it's not as if a few CDs and $7 bucks would make much difference — why go to all the trouble?

Was it the desperate need for music, a beer and some smokes? Was cash a little short before payday? Was it backlash against ASU for hosting the Rolling Stones that same night?

We may never know, but we can take a guess. Perhaps it had something to do with her resignation. That's right; Michelle turned in her resignation earlier this semester, and it was due to go into effect this week. Although ASU police Chief Lanny Standridge doesn't believe this was the reason, it might be the only logical explanation for such a ridiculous, childish stunt.

And what if she was responsible for the other burglaries across campus, including the $6,000 in cash and checks lifted from our own Matthews Center offices during a burglary spree the weekend of Oct. 10-12? The fact that there were no signs of forced entry indicated to police that it might have been an inside job. Michelle's position enabled her to check out University keys, Standridge has said.

Moreover, there was no sign of forced entry into Wilson Hall last Friday.

Coincidence? Perhaps — but we'll leave that decision to the professionals, who did, incidentally, consider her a suspect in last month's burglaries, even before Friday's arrest.

Ultimately, this incident leaves us all feeling a little on edge. Sure, there is corruption in all areas of life, but it's a little scary when it comes from those we are supposed to trust. When an employee whose job is to counsel the ASU community on crime prevention and safety stands is accused of committing those very crimes, what are we to think? Is there anything we can do?

Truth be told, there is nothing we can do. No one, including the ASU police, expected such a betrayal.

Then again, maybe there is one thing we can do: We can continue to have faith that there are honest, trustworthy people in this world.

But let's watch our backs anyway. Trust can no longer be assumed, it must be earned.

Disney bliss worth the hefty price

I have been to the promised land and found the true cost of happiness.

GEOERGE D. ROSE SR.
Columnist

This past weekend we (my family and I) found ourselves in the "happiest place on Earth" — Disneyland — to watch my daughter dance. Granted, no one forced this venture on us. I must confess that we were willing victims. I think we even had fun.

It was on the trip into the Disneyland parking lot that the true cost of this "happiness" started to dawn on me. It began to have impact when we saw the sign asking for $7 just to park the car.

"Seven bucks!" I said. "We just want to use the parking lot for the day, not buy a piece of it!" The attendant appeared sympathetic (I'm sure they taught him how to do this in Disney customer-relations school) and soothed my troubled soul while he took my money.

Parking was a bargain, however, when compared to admission. Of course you need tickets. After all, there isn't much to do in the parking lot. If you want to have fun, you've got to get inside Disneyland. The price for four of us (two adults and two children) to get in was around $125 for the day.

"Sorry, but no discounts, even though your daughter is providing entertainment for our 50,000 guests today," they said.

We paid up and went in; they got us again. Of course, we and almost everybody else milled around like cattle in the "Main Street" area waiting for the rest of the park to officially open.

Once inside, we soon discovered that Disneyland has a season where it works to fix and spruce up the rides. This was it. We saw countless plywood barriers and signs that said, "This ride is closed for seasonal maintenance. We apologize for the inconvenience."

It began to dawn on me that I and 50,000 other poor souls had paid full price for half a park. Now we were a captive audience.

One of the children was thirsty. No problem! No problem, that is, until I had to plunk down $2.50 for a soda that will cost you a buck at the MU. And I thought they were gouging the students! My poor wallet gave up another $10 bill for four drinks.

I started looking around for water fountains. Fortunately, they weren't coin operated. We were careful not to mention this, since we were sure that the Disney folks might find the idea worth looking into. If somebody was happy, it couldn't possibly be any of the park's guests. I know — if people were happy, they were in the front office, the ones who were busy counting all the cash.

We watched our daughter perform and were delighted. We clapped and hooted and took pictures. We waited until it was safe to pick her up.

Finally, we got to stand in lines that were too long to go on rides that were too short. We met The Mouse himself. We shook hands with Winnie the Pooh and Tigger, too. We took pictures and walked around until our feet were sore and the kids' batteries finally ran out. I guess we really did have a good time.

The most important aspect of the day was that we had spent it together. We talked and laughed and held hands. We enjoyed ourselves. True, what you see at Disneyland is fake and overpriced, but what price do you put on memories?

In the end, I had to figure that the money we spent on gas, lodging, meals and park admission was worth it all. The weekend finally helped me put a price on happiness. This price comes close to $500. My question is this: Could we have stayed home and had as much fun? Nah, I don't think so.

'Moment of silence' is merely padding for political agendas

Most people agree that there should be a wall between church and state. A construction of cement and steel would protect the interests of both, but groups like the Christian Coalition seem intent upon poking holes in it. Now they stand next to the wall, smirking, with a wrecking ball cleverly disguised as religious freedom. This implement of wall destruction is also known as a moment of silence in public schools.

SCOTT BENNETT
Columnist

Some believe that students in public schools should observe a moment of silence every morning. It would be a time for prayer or reflection. Sounds fairly unobjectionable, doesn't it? Surfaces may be deceiving, however. To objectively critique the idea, we should ask two vital questions:

- 1) Will a moment of silence benefit students?
- 2) If not, what is its purpose?

According to Dr. Nicholas Appleton, an associate dean in the College of Education, a moment of silence would be useful to students only if given a context. That is, the teacher would have to encourage the students to pray or reflect or prepare for the day. Otherwise, the students would do what students always do when given free time: whisper to each other, sneak looks at their latest crush and eat paste. You know they would, because that is exactly what you did when the teacher left the room. (Well, perhaps not eating paste, but it was a problem for me. Don't laugh — it's a serious compulsion.)

The moment of silence may be useless without a context, but encouraging the students to reflect or pray creates a problem. The teacher has potentially endorsed religion, which has been strictly forbidden by the Supreme Court. Moreover, religious groups would undoubtedly protest if students were subjected to proselytization, especially in public schools where attendance is mandatory.

A moment of silence, therefore, could only occur without direction by the teacher. That lack of direction would render it ineffective. To quote Dr. Appleton, "I don't think it would be a very useful tool, even to encourage reflection."

Critics often claim that religion is forbidden in public schools. That is simply not true. Students may pray in a manner that does not disturb the class, read religious materials, wear clothing with religious messages and even discuss religion with a willing classmate. Therefore, a moment of silence is not needed to fill some spiritual void, as some might claim.

So if a moment of silence would be essentially pointless and take time away from the school day, why do groups like the Christian Coalition advocate it so diligently?

The answer is that the debate is not really about students' interests; it is about fulfilling the ambitions of certain groups.

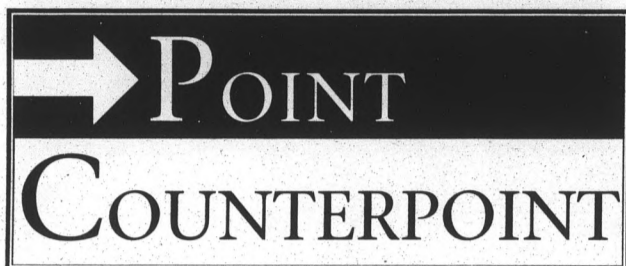

a little silent prayer before the school day. What heartless wretch could deny a little girl her religion? Unfortunately, this kind of emotional argument often overlooks the potential ramifications.

Do we really want public schools teaching religion? That is the real question, one that the Christian Coalition would have no problem answering: "Sure we do, but only if the schools teach our religion."

A moment of silence is a mindless political gesture, and we need to peer through the hazy facts surrounding the issue. Proponents of a moment of silence are more interested in their careers and agendas than with our children's education. We must recognize that and prevent it.

An impenetrable wall between church and state preserves the integrity of both. We cannot forget that in our search for an easy solution.

We should not allow our children, or our country, to be sacrificed on the altar of politics. Scott Bennett is a sophomore studying journalism and can be reached at columnist@asu.edu.

A moment of silence is a political issue, not an educational one.

A moment of silence in schools and the proposed flag-burning amendment are essentially the same: empty political gestures that tug at heartstrings and actually damage society. It is easy for politicians or interested parties to paint a picture of little Suzy, the fifth grader who only wants to say this "no punishment" policy should be scrupulously enforced. Any punishment discovered should be swiftly reversed and disciplinary action taken against any school officials involved.

Many people feel the moment of silence is a step toward religious interference in the public schools. Although many fundamentalists support a moment of silence, that does not mean advocating that this "moment" is somehow encouraging religious coercion. Giving students a few minutes to introspect during their day doesn't appear to qualify as pushing religion down their throats. As a matter of fact, the teachers might appreciate the only few minutes of silent relief they'll have all day. Steve Stein is a senior studying psychology.

should only involve the choice of a "moment of silence" or nothing at all. As mentioned earlier, no particular religious prayers, hymns or anything else besides the "moment" can be allowed. If a student is convinced he or she doesn't want to participate, he or she shouldn't be forced to. This silence should be voluntary, for it loses its very character when it becomes compulsory. Students who decline to participate should in no way be singled out by the school administration or teachers;

'Silence' is appropriate, not limited to religious practice

I support the concept of a "moment of silence" in public schools.

STEVE STEIN
Columnist

One reason is that such a "moment" does not discriminate against kids who are not being raised in a religious home. Even those who are atheists can take part in such silence. They are not being forced to say prayers in any way. For example, they can simply take a moment to plan for the day or to think about a problem they've been putting off. Nothing is imposed on them, unless the mere act of keeping silent is considered an imposition. Silence would appear to be neutral in nature, being neither pro- nor anti-religious.

Secondly, no religion of any kind is being superimposed upon the students. If you're a Christian, Jew, Muslim, member of another organized religion or don't even espouse a religion, it is hard to argue that the simple act of being silent for a few minutes is somehow religious coercion. Nobody is forcing students to do anything. If they want to pray, they can pray. If they want to read, they can read. If they want to fantasize they are somewhere else, they can fantasize they are somewhere else.

In no way is the state encouraging the establishment of religion by simply giving students a few minutes of silence. When the state decides to mandate prayers or other religious expressions, it then crosses that line of demarcation between staying neutral and mandating a state religion.

Furthermore, it could be argued that a moment of silence is liberating. No one can get inside any of those students' heads during silence. They have total free will to think anything they want without being disturbed. I can't think of anything more liberating than having your thoughts to yourself without anybody bothering you or telling you how to think.

As far as whether this "moment" should be mandated, obviously it should not. Each student should be given a choice whether to participate or not. However, that choice

Reader gets no satisfaction in Stones concert coverage

Let me first start off by saying "Boo" to the State Press on the lackluster coverage of Friday's (Nov. 7) Rolling Stones concert. The "greatest rock 'n' roll band of all time" surely deserved more than a couple of photos of Mick Jagger. There are other musicians and players in the band who also make it the spectacle that it is. I can appreciate the photos by Pat Shannahan, but jeeze, did he see the stage show or the second stage in the center of the floor?

There has been so much b.s. lately about the lame ASU football fans being destructive. What about the mellow "good" fans at the concert? As best I could tell, there were only a few instances of violence or destruction, so how about equal press for those who acted responsibly? All this, and I haven't even gotten into the fact that this was probably — no, definitely — one of the largest and greatest events since 1981, when the Stones rolled through Tempe the last time.

In closing, news doesn't have to be bad or depressing to get people to read it. In fact, I would venture to say that most of your readers could use some happy news after the justifiable bashing they have received for their football antics.

You guys blew it, maybe for good, because it seems that the Stones have rolled for the last time. Long live rock 'n' roll!

Bus reroute doesn't fix problem

Ah, Nov. 10. The day I finally felt safe on campus. I can now walk by the bookstore without worrying about the crazy drivers behind the wheel of the FLASH buses. Gimme a break.

The bookstore bus route was canceled after the tragic accident that occurred last month, but are we any better for it? The flow of traffic to the bookstore has not changed, as the cars and motorcycles are still allowed. The bus drivers were the only people behind the wheel that actually had some form of training!

For Joe Average, high-school drivers' education and a 20-minute drive with some DMV jockey is what it took to get his licenses. I would hardly consider that training. But are these untrained people stopped from driving by the bookstore? Nope. But the bus drivers are.

The purpose in changing the bus routes is to help ensure the safety of the students, but making them cross two streets at a busy intersection to get to the closest bus stop seems a little more dangerous than waiting at the bookstore stop. If the ASASU committee wants to help students, they should stick to lowering prices at Burger King and not changing the bus routes to more dangerous locations.

Faculty awarded for outstanding contribution to ASU

By TARA TEICHGRAEBER
STATE PRESS

Three ASU faculty members were named regents professors for their outstanding research and teaching achievements at October's Arizona Board of Regents meeting.

ASU Professors Austen Angell, Caio Pagano and Nancy Felipe Russo were nominated by President Lattie Coor and approved by the Board. Only three percent of tenured and tenured-track faculty receive the award, which results in a $5,000 salary increase and a $5,000 increased operational budget. National or international distinction by their peers is required for nomination.

Angell, a freshman chemistry professor, is internationally recognized for work relating to the physics and chemistry of liquids and glasses, solid state ionic conductors and water. He recently developed an "ionic rubber" that allows for manufacturing of lighter and smaller electronics.

Angell said his interest in chemistry developed in his childhood.

"I bought hydrogen peroxide from the chemist and burned sulfur," he said. "I found that I could then siphon the gas to make sulfuric acid, which can burn metals and all sorts of things. I thought that was very exciting."

Angell, originally from Australia, said that he was only 11 years old when he made that discovery.

Later, Angell attended the University of Melbourne in Australia. He came to the United States in 1956 to assist in research of liquid salts and found his way to ASU in 1989.

It was a fundamental study of liquids in strong and fragile extremes that he feels helped him gain recognition, Angell said.

He has served as opening speaker at 16 international meetings, in addition to giving several keynote speeches at other scholarly events.

Also well recognized internationally is Brazilian pianist Pagano.

Pagano has earned notoriety in his field through lectures and teachings at music festivals worldwide. He has won numerous competitions and premiered pieces written especially for him by various composers, some of which have been recorded.

Pagano, who first learned to read and write so he could understand piano instructional manuals, has also participated in a Yale University symposium.

After coming to the United States in 1984, he joined the ASU faculty two years later. Of his former ASU students, 13 have achieved national and international recognition.

"I have learned almost everything I know about teaching from my students — that is how to be humble to help someone," Pagano said. "I think there is a lot of humility in being willing to teach someone, to explain something so simple, to hold their fingers and place them on the keys."

Pagano said it is the progressive and aggressive nature of ASU that will keep him here.

"I've grown with the area," he said. "I fit very well with the faculty here. This is where I'll stay."

The third new regents professor is noted for advancing the understanding of women's mental health.

Russo, a professor in the psychology department, pioneered an understanding of women's mental-health disorders and women's lack of access to mental-health resources. She has also helped foster an understanding of the link between gender, ethnicity and marital status. Her work on Hispanic women's mental health served as a foundation for later developments in the field of psychology.

Russo teaches undergraduate courses and leads graduate seminars at ASU.

"I was surprised and very honored," she said. "I think the regents professorship honors your department and university as well."

Russo said she became interested in women's mental health while on a subcommittee for former President Jimmy Carter's commission on mental health.

"I became extremely interested in changing how the mental-health field approached women, and trying to promote attention to the fact that gender and ethnicity impact a woman's mental health," she said.

In 1995, Russo received the American Psychological Association's highest award for research of public interest.

Regents professors serve as advisers to President Coor and take on an expanded role as consultants and teachers.

Forensics team wins again; prevails in Colorado event

BY SHARAN K. GILL
STATE PRESS

There is no debating the success of the ASU Forensics Team.

Universities around the nation found that out the hard way when ASU cleaned house at the Colorado College competition Oct. 23-26, placing first for the twelfth year in a row.

"We won that competition hands down," said Clark Olson, director of forensics.

Olson has been the director since 1984, and said ASU places in the top ten nationally every year. Many students are not aware that ASU even has a forensics team, but it is the oldest student activity on campus, he said.

"We are older than the football team and the basketball team," Olson said.

The forensics team is a competitive speaking group composed of debate and individual events. The debate topic this year is Changes in Foreign Policy in Southeast Asia. Each school is given the topic in August, and competition begins the first weekend in October.

Olson said there are few schools that still participate in both the Lincoln-Douglas debate, which is a one-on-one debate, and the policy debate, which is teams of two.

John Kircher, sophomore political science major and a first-year debater, took first place in the Lincoln-Douglas debate at Colorado College.

"Being on the team teaches you good research skills and public-speaking skills," he said. Having a large team is an advantage because students can share research developments, Kircher added.

Olson said he personally recruits high-school students who are still hungry for the activity — more so than recruiting on their prior success.

"College competition is less petty and less political," he said.

Senior broadcasting major Leigh Ann Phillips has been a member of the ASU team for two years and said she has learned skills that she can apply to everyday life.

"I have learned how to think under pressure and speak more confidently," she said.

Phillips said that although ASU ranks in the top ten every year, one look at the team and coaching staff reveals they are definitely the best team in the nation.

"There is no doubt that we are the national champions; we play fair, and we play good," she said.

Burglaries

Standridge denied that the Rolling Stones concert at Sun Devil Stadium on Friday night left the rest of campus open to crime, adding that the minimum of two officers was maintained.

He said this case is being handled the same way as any other.

"There's the old suspicion that police cover up for each other," he said. "That's not the case here at the University. If there's something wrong with the organization, we set to task to correct it."

Professor's career ignited by interest in fire histories

BY GENOA SIBOLD-COHN
STATE PRESS

While most high school students were vacationing during their summer recesses, Stephen Pyne was busy fighting fires.

Pyne, now 48 and an ASU history professor, has made a career out of studying fire.

Starting in high school, Pyne spent 15 summers tackling fires in the Grand Canyon as part of the North Rim Longshots, a volunteer fire crew. He began working on the crew as a Brophy Preparatory School student and continued until 1981, when he left for an academic fellowship in Antarctica.

"It became too difficult for me to raise a family and to move twice a year," he said. "If you're really out in the field, it can also be a fairly punishing job — physically punishing. You get into your thirties, and your body can't take it anymore."

"After I graduated, I realized that I should use the methodologies I had been trained in — history and cultural analysis — and apply them to fire," Pyne said.

He said his studies of fire history go back 420 million years, analyzing human and cultural history. By looking at past events, this shows how people tried to suppress or use fire for landscape, he said.

Pyne said he studies fire from a cultural perspective rather than from an ecological approach, especially since cultural history has taken on new meaning in the last 20 years.

"Most fire studies are focused on natural resources and forestry," he said. "I try to look at fire as a cultural phenomenon and as a way of understanding society."

His latest book, Vestal Fire: An Environmental History, Told Through Fire, of Europe and Europe's Encounter with the World, deals with the human understanding of fire, relating it to past history.

"Most history is for most reasons centered on people," Pyne said, "but I interpret the history of fire in two ways: common sense and how it has manifested or taken itself."

His next book to be published is Dutton's Point: How the Canyon Became Grand. It will cover the cultural history of the Grand Canyon.

"My experience in the Grand Canyon is not just about fire fighting," he said. "It's about the place."

The engineer reportedly followed the man, who now had a broken nose from the beating, and yelled at him while he was attempting to get to a phone in his wheelchair. The bruiser was booked into Tempe City Jail for aggravated assault and disorderly conduct. He was turned over to the Maricopa County Sheriff's Office.
- A 21-year-old student was arrested at The Commons, 1111 E. Apache Blvd., after he allegedly "recklessly exposed his genitals and anus" to another man. He was booked into Tempe City Jail where he was later released on his own recognizance.

Pain tolerable; Kealy expected to start Oregon game

Jeremy Hein/State Press

By ED ODEVEN
STATE PRESS

ASU redshirt freshman quarterback Ryan Kealy is expected to start in Saturday's Homecoming Game versus the Oregon Ducks.

Kealy did not play in the fourth quarter at Cal last Saturday and was replaced by junior Steve Campbell, due to a right shoulder stinger that he sustained earlier in the game.

Kealy experienced numbness in his arm and shoulder, which led ASU head coach Bruce Snyder to bring in Campbell.

Since the pain in his right arm and shoulder has been reduced to a tolerable level, Kealy practiced with the offense's first unit on Tuesday and Wednesday.

"It feels pretty good," he said after Wednesday's practice at the Bill Kajikawa Practice Field. "It's still a little bruised and sore. It shouldn't be any sort of problem. It's just up to the doctors what they want to do."

"I can't do everything quite yet, (but) it's coming along."

As the pain disappears, Kealy prepares for his next big challenge: the Oregon Ducks.

"They're a good team, so we've got to go out there and play hard," he said. "They're coming off a huge win. They're going to have a lot of momentum coming in here and a lot of good stuff going for them. So, we've got to come in here and play tough at Kush Field and take care of business."

FANTASTIC FROSH

The ex-St. Mary's High School standout, who threw a state-record 41 passes as a senior in 1995, set a Sun Devil record last Saturday at Cal's Memorial Stadium.

He shattered Grady Benton's freshman passing record of 1,707 yards, set in 1992. On Kealy's 67-yard touchdown pass to Creig Spann in the second quarter, he broke that total. So far in 1997, Kealy has completed 140 of 257 pass attempts for 1,871 yards and 13 TDs, while tossing just six interceptions.

Redshirt freshman quarterback Ryan Kealy hopes to keep ASU in the Rose Bowl hunt with another stellar performance this week. The No. 15 Sun Devils will face visiting Oregon at 4:30 p.m. Saturday at Sun Devil Stadium.

Win teaches short-handed ASU lesson, accomplishes first goal

By MATT PAULSON
STATE PRESS

One goal down and one lesson learned for the ASU men's basketball team.

The Sun Devils have completed their preseason exactly how interim head coach Don Newman planned — with an undefeated record. Their latest win came Tuesday evening with a 115-103 triumph over visiting Marathon Oil.

"We've just accomplished one goal, which was to finish off 2-0 in exhibition season," Newman said. "Our next goal is the non-conference season, and to head into the Pac-10 (season) a winning program."

Four of the five Sun Devil starters finished with 20 points or more. Co-captain Jeremy Veal was the top scorer with 29 points.

The victory, however, was accomplished with a short-handed squad. Already without the services of guard Reggie Hester, serving a University imposed suspension for the first four games, Newman shrunk his bench even more giving guard Jason Patton the night off. Except for the final minute, only six Sun Devils played in the contest.

Newman said Patton sat out because his work ethic in practice hasn't been up to expectations.

"(There is) a signature that I'm trying to place on ASU basketball," Newman said. "There has to be a certain commitment. I haven't seen that put forward by Jason. Until he does, he's not going to get minutes in Don Newman's program."

Patton said he learned from the experience which was a result of adjusting to a new coach.

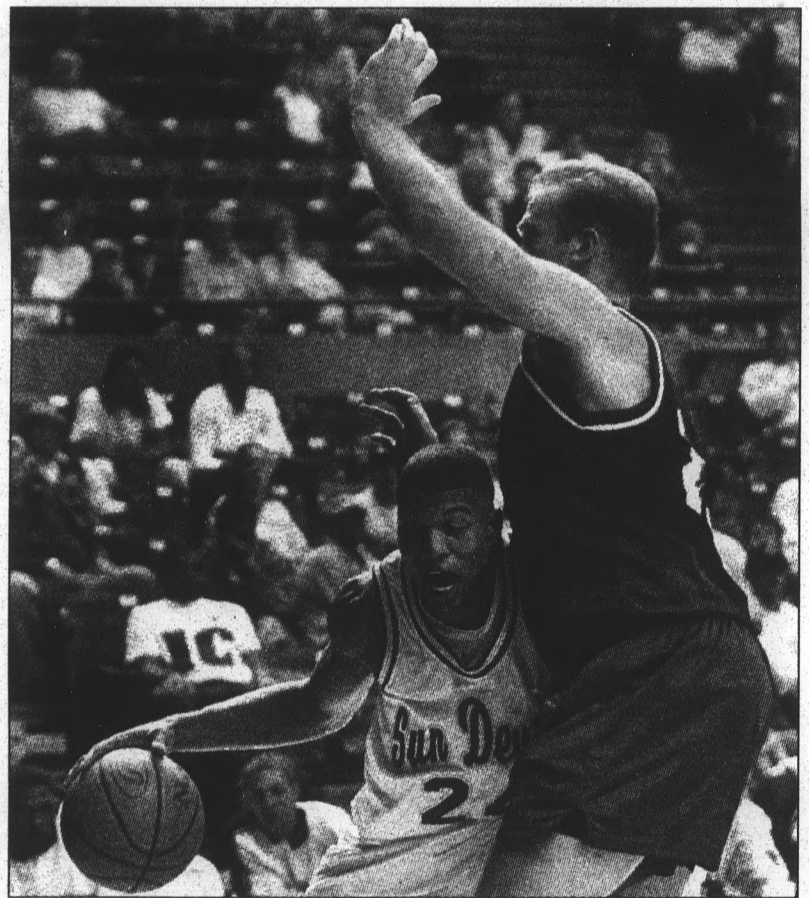

"There's new coaching and a lot of changes," he said. "We talked and now we understand where everyone is coming from. I wasn't putting up the fight and my expectations weren't where they thought they should be."

After a fast-paced first half that saw ASU fall behind by 12 points at one point and trail 55-50 at intermission, the Sun Devils switched game plans and worked on perfecting their set offense. It worked well as ASU clawed back to within one point thanks to a 15-11 run to start the second half.

Veal, who had 21 points after halftime, hit a two foot jumper with 6:43 remaining in the game to put ASU up for good.

Forward Mike Batiste recorded his first double-double of the year with 25 points and 14 rebounds. Bobby Lazor contributed 25 points and Eddie House hit for 20 in his first action of the season. The duo along with Veal all racked up 39 minutes of playing time.

ASU shot 58 percent on the night including 63 percent from beyond the arc.

Local entrepreneurs hope twirl of 'Devil Towels' returns

By ED ODEVEN
STATE PRESS

The 1970s revival continues—football style.

A local entrepreneur hopes to bring back the days when Sun Devil Stadium was a crowded mecca for fanatics waving gold towels.

A.C. Caswell likens the Frank Kush-era tradition to the "Terrible Towel" crowd craze which has existed in Pittsburgh since Terry Bradshaw, Franco Harris and Lynn Swann led the team to four Super Bowl triumphs two decades ago.

There are other cities with similar pastimes: Minnesota Twins' supporters twirling of the "Homer Hankie" in the Metrodome and Green Bay Packer backers donning of "Cheeseheads."

While thinking of other teams' fan involvement, Caswell wondered why Sun Devil fans didn't have something to trigger fan participation like other teams did.

Thus, Caswell and his business partner came up with the idea for "The Devil Towel," with the hope that it will bring back some excitement for the home crowd.

"The idea just popped into our heads," Caswell said.

The duo presented the idea to the Sun Angel Foundation a month ago and it was greeted with unanimous approval. The ASU athletic department was excited about the concept, too.

So Caswell decided to have Sparky's image screened onto gold towels, after receiving approval from ASU trademark licensing coordinator Fernando Morales.

Caswell said the idea was strictly conceived with the fans in mind.

"It's something new and exciting for the fan," he said. And hopefully, it "electrifies the fans."

With homecoming just two days away, Caswell wants now more than ever for fans to showcase their school spirit for the Valley of the Sun.

The towel has been spotted sparsely at the past two home games. However, the goal is to have "74,000 fans grab your towels!" Caswell said.

The towel is available at the ASU Bookstore, Major T's, The College Store and The Cap Co. for $6.95 apiece.

BY THE NUMBERS

Snyder will coach in his 200th game on Saturday, against the school where he began his coaching career, Oregon. Overall, Snyder has posted a 107-87-5 record in 18 seasons as a head coach.

Sophomore tight end Kendrick Bates is second in the Pac-10 among tight ends with 20 receptions for 277 yards and a touchdown.

Senior punter Marcus Williams is seventh nationally in net punting with 41.0 yards per boot.

Senior place kicker Robert Nycz is eighth in the nation with 1.56 field goals per game (14 field goals in nine games).

ASU'S 22-4 mark over the past 26

games is tied for the third-best record in the nation. The Sun Devils are knotted with Virginia Tech, Penn State, Ohio State and North Carolina, with an .846 winning percentage. Tennessee and Florida are second with identical 123-3 records (.885). Nebraska is No. 1 with a 24-2 record (.923), including last season's stunning 19-0 defeat to ASU.

ASU has won 11 of its past 12 Homecoming Games.

Tickets are still available for ASU's final two home games (8,200 remain for Saturday's showdown with Oregon and 2,000 remain for "The Game" with UofA on Nov. 28). Both games will begin at 4:30 p.m. Tickets can be purchased at the ASU ticket office (965-2381) or Dillard's (503-5555).

Washington hands Chicago 4th loss

CHICAGO (AP) — The struggling Chicago Bulls lost their fourth game — something that didn't happen until Dec. 26 last year — as Chris Webber led a second-half surge that carried the Washington Wizards to a 90-83 victory Wednesday night.

Webber scored 8 of his 17 points during a 12-2 second-half run and drew a technical foul against Dennis Rodman that precipitated a game-clinching 5-0 run.

Michael Jordan scored 28 points but was only 10-of-28 from the floor as the two-time defending NBA champion Bulls, coming off an embarrassing 21-point loss at Cleveland, dropped to 4-4.

Chicago won its first 12 games last year and didn't lose its fourth until its 29th game. The previous season, when the Bulls went 72-10 for the best record in league history, they didn't suffer their fourth loss until their 45th game.

But the Bulls clearly aren't the same team, partly because Scottie Pippen is out with a foot injury and partly because Jordan hasn't been able to carry them. Jordan is shooting 38 percent and averaging 24 points, nearly eight below his NBA-record average.

Juwan Howard had 18 points and Rod Strickland 17 for the Wizards, who trailed 67-60 late in the third quarter before rallying to take the lead for good.

Jordan hit one of two free throws with 58.8 seconds left to make it 80-77. But Rodman received a technical foul for shoving Webber — who earlier in the quarter got a technical for pushing Rodman — and the Wizards scored the next five points to put the game away.

It was the first home loss of the season after four wins for the Bulls, who were 39-2 at the United Center in each of the past two seasons.
