Black unity week strives for equality

BY ALLY ASHER
STATE PRESS

In an effort to promote unity and equality among black students on campus, the first Black Orientation Week will be launched today on Hayden Lawn.

"It's important that I help raise the membership and participation of the Black students on campus," said Vince Nicholes, chair of the Black African Coalition.

The event was organized by the Black African Coalition to inform students of the campus resources available that help spread diversity, minority advancement and discrimination prevention.

Numerous information tables representing various clubs and campus organizations will be on display until the end of the week to encourage students to explore programs offered at ASU.

Nicholes said he started Black Orientation Week because he wants black students to unite, become more involved with campus activities and reach the ongoing goal of equality.

"At this point in time, with what's going on with race relations on campus, it's important for us to come together to make the type of progress we want," he said. "In the Black community, there is always room for improvement as far as unity is concerned. Once the goal of unity is reached, our goal is for equality."

More than forty organizations were invited to represent their programs, ranging from the NAACP college chapter, to Students Seeking Action to Reach Success.

Karen Carson, president of ASU's NAACP chapter, said these programs allow the opportunity to recruit new students and help increase black student participation.

"It lets the African American student body know we're here to voice our concerns about racism and discrimination," she said. "We need young people to be active in the African American organizations on campus to suppress discrimination for all students."

In addition to the information tables, the coalition will be showing Drop Squad in the Memorial Union Cinema on Thursday night and will also be hosting a day of relaxation in front of the MU on Friday. Nicholes said he hopes the activities will inspire more black students to get involved with the coalition.

"It's almost written in our constitution as our goal to increase the retention, participation and positive sense of the black students on campus with the ASU community," he said. "That's my position at the Black African Coalition."

At this point in time, with what's going on with race relations on campus, it's important for us to come together to make the type of progress we want.

African Coalition.

Coor: 50 percent enrollment increase likely soon

BY KRISTEN HATCHER
STATE PRESS

Although the rate of incoming students at ASU has remained constant for several years, the University will soon have to plan for a potential 50 percent enrollment increase.

"The number of high school graduates in the state of Arizona has remained constant for the last five years at 32,000," said ASU President Lattie Coor at a Faculty Assembly Breakfast Tuesday. "The period of that lull is over."

"We had a breathing space for the last six years," he told the 200-member audience. "That has given us the opportunity to perfect our plans."

nity to perfect our plans."

The number of Arizona high school graduates significantly impacts enrollment rates at state universities. That number will climb to 36,000 in the next few years eventually reaching 40,000 and then it will boom to 50,000 within five years, Coor said.

The projected number of student enrollment is much higher than what the University handles right now. Coor said ASU main campus enrollment is capped at 39,000 for regular day-time students. "We'll be at that cap with next year's class," he said.

"We've talked about a student body of 75,000," said Coor. The enrollment for ASU's three branch campuses is already at 50,000.

ASU hasn't dealt with growth for several years and Coor urged the faculty to consider the implications of such an increase in enrollment.

"It's time for us to turn back to that issue and reckon with it," Coor said. "Where and how can we best serve students and the idea of the University as a whole?"

Coor did not offer immediate solutions to the growth problem, but presented it as a task to the audience.

"We should consider all the options," Coor said. "Growth has returned. It's not evil, but we must shape it."

Parking structure problems bother staff, students

BY BECKY BEVINS
STATE PRESS

Parking at ASU has become even more troublesome for some because of a broken gate arm in Parking Structure 3 and faculty, staff and students who paid $105 for parking passes are finding their spaces taken by unauthorized parkers.

All of the parking gates on campus went down in September due to a lightning strike during a storm. They have all been repaired except for Structure 3, Lot 26 and Orange Street facilities. It is a particularly difficult situation in Structure 3 because it is the smallest garage and has a huge demand, said Marilyn Hunsaker, supervisor of field operations for Parking and Transit Services.

"The gates are all computer generated data lines that are throughout the tunnel system underneath the campus," she said. "We have had the wires necessary to repair the gates on order for several months."

However, Parking and Transit Services is taking measures to protect the precious parking spaces.

"We have six enforcement officers that patrol the area and cite vehicles that are illegally parked there," Hunsaker said.

One employee of ASU, who did not wish to give her name, said she is outraged at the shortage.

"I waited for three years on a waiting list to get a parking decal for Structure 3 and when I did, I waited from 4:00 a.m. to 7:00 a.m. in line before I got it, and now I want to be able to park there," she said.

Hunsaker said paying for a permit does not ensure a covered parking space.

"The decal does not mean that everyone will get covered parking, only convenient parking," she added.

Even convenient parking is hard to come by for some.

Parking

"(Parking and Transit Services) tell us that we should park on the roof, but by lunch time there aren't any spaces there," said the ASU employee.

Norm Ginsburg, an ASU journalism professor, said he is also upset with the parking problems in Structure 3. He said he was unable to find a handicapped spot and was cited for parking in a non-handicapped spot.

"I am going to make a big deal about this: I should be able to find a parking place," Ginsburg said. "It's stupid that they would give me a ticket when I have a decal."

Hunsaker said the problems should be resolved soon.

"We are hopeful and confident that the problem will be resolved within the next couple of weeks. The repairs are very complicated and require extensive work in the tunnel system," Hunsaker said. "I pay to park in the lots too, I know what a big problem it is."

Arizona Republic editor resigns

PHOENIX (AP) — The managing editor of The Arizona Republic has resigned after he was quoted making disparaging comments about employees laid off when the Phoenix Gazette closed last year.

The Columbia Journalism Review quoted Steven Knickmeyer as saying most of the laid-off staffers were "fat, lazy, incompetent and slow."

He was responding to claims by his former reporters that the the most aggressive news staffers had been laid off by the papers' parent company, Phoenix Newspapers Inc.

In a staff memo announcing Knickmeyer's departure Monday, Executive Editor Pam Johnson said his statement did not accurately reflect the selection process used when the company closed the Gazette and let 60 staffers go.

"The Republic disavows the statement he made in the article," Johnson said. "The decisions we made a year ago were difficult in view of the abilities and contributions those staff members had made to The Republic."

Johnson also is vice president-news for Phoenix Newspapers. The Republic publishes in the morning; the Gazette was an afternoon paper.

The newspaper's deputy managing editors, Jeff Dozbaba and John D'Anna, will run daily operations until a new managing editor is named, Johnson said.

She also praised Knickmeyer's past contributions to the newspaper, including the Saving Arizona's Children project that called attention to the needs of children throughout the state. He joined the Republic in 1992 as an assistant city editor.

Knickmeyer did not return a message left Monday on his telephone answering machine.

Social Security, Iraq highlighted in Clinton speech

By TERENCE HUNT
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Shaken by scandal, President Clinton sought to reassert his leadership in a crucial State of the Union address Tuesday night, urging Congress to "save Social Security first" before cutting taxes or increasing spending.

With the end of big budget deficits, Clinton said "every penny of any surplus" should be devoted to shoring up Social Security, which faces bankruptcy next century as baby boomers retire. Republicans are eyeing the surpluses for tax cuts.

Replying to Clinton, Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott said the best thing Washington can do is "cut the tax burdens on the American family."

Amid fresh tensions with Saddam Hussein, Clinton issued a veiled threat of force against Iraq: "You cannot defy the will of the world. ... You have used weapons of mass destruction before. We are determined to deny you the capacity to use them again."

In a subtle reference to Clinton's personal troubles, Lott said the Congress would back the president against Iraq "despite any current controversy."

In his annual report to the nation, Clinton said America is enjoying good times enhanced by the lowest unemployment and inflation in decades. He urged Congress to raise the minimum wage — now $5.15 an hour — but did not specify how much. "We can afford to take one simple, sensible step to help millions of workers struggling to provide for their families."

Clinton challenged Congress to join in a bipartisan search for a fix for Social Security. With the prospect of the first balanced budget in 30 years, Clinton said the question is what should be done with the projected surpluses.

"I have a simple four-word answer: save Social Security first," the president said. "Tonight I propose we reserve 100 percent of the surplus ... until we have taken all the measures necessary to strengthen the Social Security system for the 21st century."

To promote a Social Security solution, the administration will arrange three or four regional conferences to discuss the problems. Clinton will host a White House conference in December. He said he would convene the leaders of Congress next January to craft a bipartisan agreement.

Clinton also challenged Congress to pass national tobacco legislation, but its fate is uncertain. He urged raising the price of cigarettes by $1.50 a pack to deter teen smoking, and said tobacco companies should be slapped with penalties "if they continue marketing to kids."

The administration is counting on passage of a tobacco deal for $65 billion over five years to pay for social spending.

doubling to 2 million the number of kids eligible for childcare subsidies.

He proposed $7.3 billion to hire 100,000 teachers, with a goal of reducing class sizes in grades one to three. He also urged tax credits to pay interest on nearly $22 billion in bonds to build and renovate public schools.

With the economy booming and the government collecting more tax revenues, Clinton boasted that he would submit a balanced budget for 1999, three years earlier than required in his deal with Congress. "And if we hold fast to fiscal discipline, we may balance the budget this year, four years ahead of schedule," the president said.

He urged passage of consumer health care protections, guaranteeing the right to appeal when services are denied. He renewed his call for expanded authority to negotiate foreign trade deals; Democrats balked at the request last year.

Clinton urged $6 billion in tax cuts and research and development to encourage environmental improvements.

With Asia undergoing a financial crisis, Clinton requested $18 billion to replenish the International Monetary Fund. He also asked for more than $1 billion to pay the U.S. debt to the United Nations. Failure to pay U.N. bills undermines U.S. leadership during the standoff with Iraq, he said.

The president called for Senate ratification of treaties to expand NATO and to impose a comprehensive test ban on nuclear explosions. He urged strengthening a biological weapons convention "with a new international inspection system to detect and deter cheating."

The embattled president did not mention the furor over allegations he had sex with a young intern, Monica Lewinsky, and urged her to lie about it. He has denied the charges.

Japanese finance chief resigns over alleged bank bribes

Finance Minister Hiroshi Mitsuzuka appears during a news conference in Tokyo on Tuesday. Mitsuzuka said he will resign over a bribery scandal that has led to the arrests of two senior bureaucrats under his supervision.

By JOSEPH COLEMAN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOKYO — Jolted by the arrests of two senior officials on bribery charges, Japan's finance chief announced Tuesday that he will step down. Those arrested were allegedly entertained lavishly by banks in return for tip-offs about the ministry's "surprise" inspections.

The accusations hit at the heart of mounting criticism of the Finance Ministry: that lax government oversight shares the blame for the decay of Japan's debt-saddled financial institutions.

Finance Minister Hiroshi Mitsuzuka had come under intense pressure to resign after prosecutors raided his ministry Monday and opposition lawmakers vowed to block critical budget legislation until he quit.

"I deeply apologize for this disgrace," Mitsuzuka said at a news conference. "I'm resigning because I intensely feel my responsibility as a manager."

Prime Minister Ryutaro Hashimoto formally accepted Mitsuzuka's resignation Wednesday. Though Mitsuzuka has not been directly implicated in the scandal, Japanese leaders often resign to take responsibility for the mistakes of those below them.

The scandal centers on allegations that Finance Ministry officials accepted pricey dinners, golf outings and other entertainment bribes from banks in exchange for alerting them about inspections.

News reports say officials were entertained extravagantly in restaurants featuring scantily clad waitresses. Dinners were said to cost about $250 per person; tips often ran an additional $80 per waitress.

The ministry — Japan's most powerful agency — examines banks to judge their financial health and root out wrongdoing. The inspections are supposed to be a surprise so banks don't have time to conceal evidence or hide losses.

While the scandal is a blow to Hashimoto's government, Mitsuzuka's departure cleared the way for Parliament to pass budget legislation, including a $15.9 billion tax cut, and measures to strengthen Japan's financial system.

The resignation of a staunch defender of Hashimoto's tight fiscal policy could also open the door for more stimulative spending to spur the sluggish economy.

The investigation of the Finance Ministry is part of a wider probe into chummy relations between government officials and the businesses they regulate.

On Monday, Tokyo prosecutors converged on the Finance Ministry, searched for evidence and arrested two top bureaucrats in the inspections division.

Koichi Miyagawa, 52, and Toshimi Taniuchi, 48, were arrested for allegedly telling banks in advance about inspections in exchange for $40,000 in wining and dining over four years.

The arrests followed a similar move last week, when a former Finance Ministry bureaucrat working for Japan's national highway corporation was arrested on charges of accepting entertainment in return for favors.

No bank officials have yet been charged in the latest case but prosecutors searched the offices of Dai-Ichi Kangyo Bank, Sanwa Bank, Asahi Bank and Hokkaido Takushoku Bank on Tuesday afternoon.

Mitsuzuka's announcement that he would resign came hours after he vowed to weed out corruption in his ministry and work to regain public confidence.

EDITORIAL

Clinton talks good game with speech

In the State of the Union address last night, Clinton made use of his oratory skills in an attempt to paint a rather bright picture of the nation. Though Congress seemed to like what he had to say, it remains to be seen whether or not he succeeded in detracting from the state of his union. Let's face it — Clinton is probably the laughingstock of the whole world right now.

Even when the hullabaloo has died down, even if he's able to stay in office for the next three years, what kind of man is running our country? Clinton will never fully redeem himself or remove the blight cast on his name, even if he is truly innocent of the allegations leveled against him.

Not for the first time ever, there's a bit of shame associated with being an American. The fault is not just with Clinton. He's a reflection of the United States, yes, but he's also a reflection of our screwed-up sense of politics. We elected him. What does that say about us?

Had the American voting public deemed character slightly more relevant than the ability to wiggle one's ears, we might not be in the current situation. For some time now, we've blithely accepted the likely fact of Clinton's philandering. The real issue at stake in the "intern affair" is not whether Clinton had sex with Monica Lewinsky.

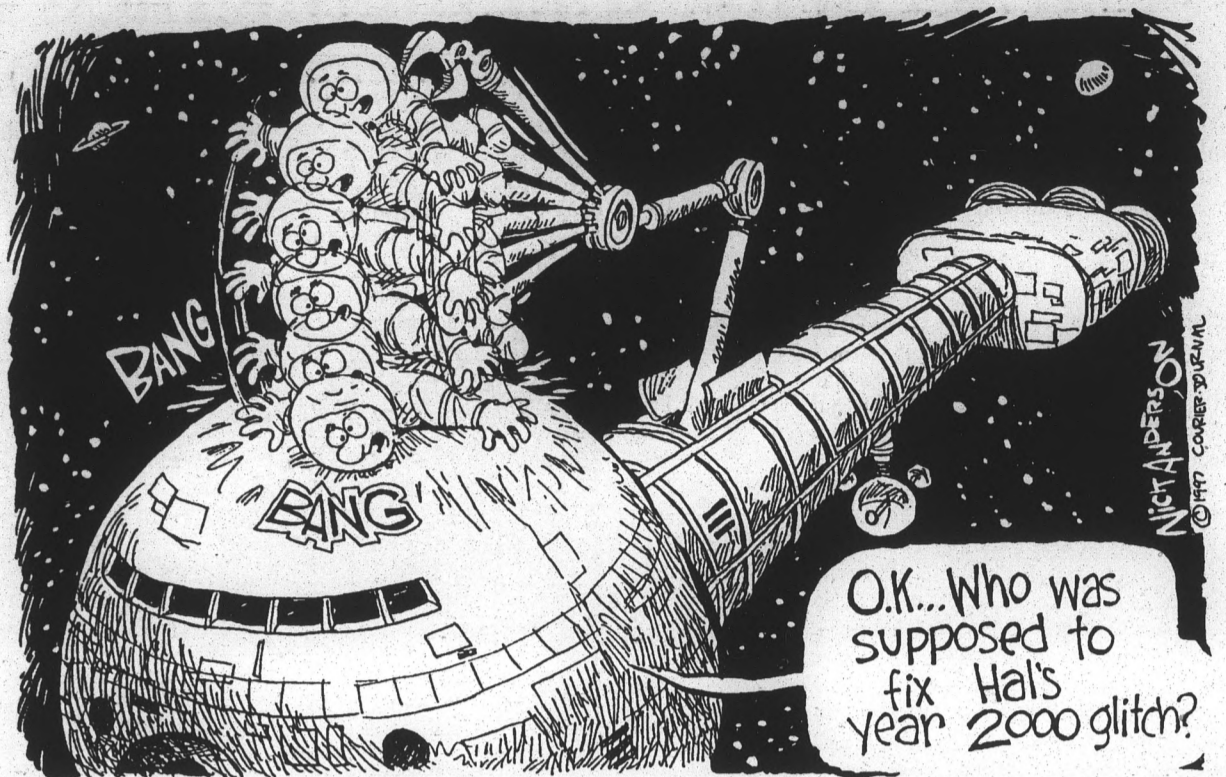

No, what really gets everyone concerned is that Clinton might have told Lewinsky to lie about the affair under oath. Unfaithfulness to your wife is one thing, but deception, abuse of power — those are completely different issues. Or are they?

It's one thing to compartmentalize your life, but ethics aren't quite so easy to separate. Besides, when you get down to it, the allegations against Clinton are all about the issue of honesty. Either he has it or he doesn't.

If you're as cynical as we are at the State Press, you'd say that an honest politician is an oxymoron. The nature of the election process practically forces a candidate to be dishonest. Maybe that's because we're not entirely sure what it is that we want out of them anyway.

On the one hand, a politician is supposed to represent the views and opinions of his or her constituents. On the other hand, we don't want him or her to be a brainless mouthpiece of the masses — we expect an elected official to be an able thinker in his or her own right. A good politician is probably a mix of both. Until we decide what the exact proportions should be, we'll probably take the easy road and keep using the economy as our measuring stick.

Character. When the chips are down it matters, but at election time, we hope it won't have to. And that's a reflection on our own character. Clinton may remind us how well our economy is doing and how supposedly great our relations with other nations are (excluding Iraq), but how great are things really? Are you "proud to be an American" these days?

Gas-guzzler resurgence increases thirst for oil

Almost daily during the last semester, we saw a full-page advertisement in the State Press by a popular automobile manufacturer. It proclaimed: "To hell with down-sizing," pointing out that the new model would be larger than ever.

This seems to be the national trend. The re-emergence of the "gas-guzzlers" brings to mind the fuel that powers them, the same fuel that is polluting our air. Also, an important factor to consider is that we must import the bulk of this fuel.

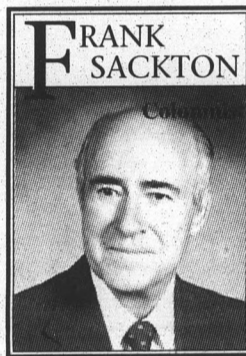

Ambassador W. Nathaniel Howell, who spent several months trapped inside the U.S. Embassy in Kuwait City when Iraq invaded, gave some insightful views of Saddam, the Middle East and oil when he visited ASU in 1991. He said although Saddam is a tyrant, he is no madman. He runs Iraq with an iron fist, and he is in control.

The ambassador viewed petroleum as a powerful weapon that can be used for good or evil. He believes strongly that if Saddam had not been stopped in Kuwait, he would have gone on to take Saudi Arabia and eventually the other states in the Middle East.

Howell put this view in strong terms, explaining that all the other states in that part of the world would have drawn the obvious conclusion that when Saddam came knocking at their door, they better find an accommodation.

The question remaining is what is the United States doing to achieve energy self-sufficiency, so that we are not dependent on foreign oil and the turbulent Middle East? The answer — not much. Today, we import over 50 percent of all the crude oil and finished products we use. The Middle East provides about 18 percent of our total needs. We import more than before or after the energy crisis of the 1970s. At that time, our country vowed that never again would we be held hostage by foreign energy interests such as the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC).

Plans were made in Washington to pursue a host of actions leading to a strong internal energy position.

With federal subsidies in hand, work began on coal liquefaction and gasification. Additional coal and nuclear plants for electric generation were also contemplated. None of this has come to pass, since the projects were considered too costly or difficult to accomplish. One by one, the federal subsidies dried up and the pilot programs were dropped.

Congress did look for ways to cut reliance on imported oil. This was no easy task because transportation accounts for about 66 percent of the petroleum consumed in the United States. The big user is the personal automobile. We have about 140 million automobiles on the road today, adding about 50,000 each year.

Action in Congress is not encouraging. The Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee rejected a proposal by Senator Richard Bryan, of Nevada, to require the automobile industry to raise the average car mileage from 27.5 miles per gallon, established in 1996, to 40 miles per gallon by 2001. When Senator Bennett Johnston of Louisiana, the chairman of the committee, offered a compromise of 34 miles per gallon, it was defeated by a vote of 13-7.

Some weak and delaying actions were left in the bill. The Transportation Department would set future mileage standards "after a feasibility study." Also, a plan would be developed to increase domestic energy production to include drilling for oil in an Alaskan wildlife refuge. The Sierra Club labeled the bill a devastating assault on the environment.

Energy analysts worry that short-term cheap oil is lulling the public into a false sense of security. The war in the Persian Gulf should have acted as a public warning that this is a world market and we had better be prepared.

Similar to previous energy crises, nothing will be done to establish energy self-sufficiency. When the next crisis comes along, we will again think about the problem. In the meantime, we will continue to import about 8 million barrels of foreign crude oil and finished product daily and hope that disaster does not strike.

Graphic story wrong

On Monday morning, when I received the State Press, I was enraged by the article about my friend Stephen LeBlanc. I played intramural softball and worked with him last year. I can only imagine the disgust of his close friends who were reading this article while I was. The writers, Becky Bevins and Timothy Tait, seem to be ignorant to the fact that Steve was a real person and had people who cared for him deeply. Their graphic depiction of the events that took place Friday morning was completely unprofessional; I can't believe the editor let this story get printed. Phrases such as, "His arms and legs...hung like ropes," or "...blood gushing out of his nose," were totally tasteless.

Stephen was a good guy, and it is unfortunate that he had an accident that took his life. I would just like Bevins and Tait to know that the graphic nature of this story was inexcusable, and I highly doubt that they would write a story similar to this about someone they knew personally.

Story dehumanizing

I am writing in response to Becky Bevins' Jan. 26th article on the death of Stephen LeBlanc. Stephen was a fellow nursing student in my classes, and his death has taken a tremendous toll on his classmates. His fellow students have grown quite close to him, and his death was shocking. Coming to class on Monday, many students did not realize what had happened on Friday. Reading this article was the first many of us had.

This article was extremely graphic and attempted to dehumanize a person that we were extremely close to. Your writer chose to sensationalize his death and in the process traumatized those who knew him. Bevins started out the article describing the accident as a "commuter's nightmare." What about his family and friends' nightmare? What about his girlfriend's nightmare? For those of us who knew and loved Stephen, this was a horrible way to learn of his death. Stephen was a terrific person and all of us have wonderful memories of him. Wouldn't it have been more beneficial to have written about the incredible person ASU lost than the graphic and disturbing details of his death?

Commuter solution

Just a few thoughts in regards to your "daily gas-guzzling commute to ASU." There is, in fact, a feasible alternative for many students in your position. The idea that the only practical means of travel here in the Valley is to drive your own vehicle is ingrained in anyone who lives here for long. When a newcomer asks about public transportation, the standard answer from the natives is along the lines of "Forget it. Basically, there isn't any." Which not only contributes to putting more vehicles out on the overcrowded roads and adds still more pollutants to the air we all share, but it's also untrue.

I can testify that there is, contrary to popular wisdom, a reasonable (if not ideal) metro bus system already in existence. I gave up the long, expensive and aggravating drive from Glendale to ASU four years ago, and started using it. Instead of a 45-minute drive that is basically wasted time and is topped off with having to deal with the hassle and expense of parking at ASU, I have a bus trip (the "Yellow" line) that takes 15 minutes longer, and I can use the time to do the course reading I should have done the night before. And instead of Lot 59, I get dropped off at ASU's front door.

As lifelong drivers, we reject the "inconvenience" of checking the bus schedule, adjusting our own schedules and getting to a bus stop. And we're usually blind to the inconvenience (and much greater risk) of spending all that time behind the wheel of our own vehicle, paying for all that gas and maintenance, parking at the destination and dealing with road rage. Not to mention, the little problem of worsening some of the worst air pollution in the country.

Incidentally, students "out west" and northwest should check out the "Red" or the "Yellow" line — they run every half hour and drop you off right on the edge of campus. Unfortunately, the good people of the west Valley haven't YET seen fit to fund them to run on weekends. But a good way to motivate that is to increase riders on the existing system. And that's where you come in.

More work, fewer scandals

If you've opened a newspaper or turned to the television news lately, you've heard all of the sordid stories of William Jefferson Clinton's sexual hijinks.

GREGOR MCGAVIN
Columnist

This coverage has it all. Sex, intrigue, deception — you name it. That's why it's part of every front page and TV news promo. According to media pundits, it takes such coverage to raise the public's interest in goings-on in the nation's capitol. But I am not convinced.

I think the sexual scandal surrounding President Clinton is just another example of partisan antagonism. I think it's another situation from which the side with the upper hand is anticipating a major score and looking to deflect a major loss.

There is, however, one clear loser in all of this — you and me.

Remember when the Democrats raked House Speaker Newt Gingrich over the coals for alleged financial indiscretions? He wound up having to pay a fine, but the $300,000 he had to kick in pales in comparison to the actual cost of the investigation. Who paid that? You guessed it — you and me.

The same thing happened with the Whitewater investigation. Big charges and negligible outcome, other than the huge bill stuck to the public for the efforts of the special prosecution. And, undaunted by the initial defeat, Kenneth Starr has been given the go-ahead by his Republican backers to find whatever he can on the president.

This brings to mind last year's allegations of improper fundraising activities on the part of the president and vice president. Apparently, this alleged activity was scandalous, although it wouldn't have been if the two had made the phone calls from a pay-phone across the street. The sin the GOP accused the two of committing was using their offices in furtherance of their party or personal goals. So how about the Republican Party's giving free reign to Ken Starr to find whatever he can on the commander-in-chief? Could this not also be viewed as partisan politics being funded by taxpayers?

The point is that the politicians involved in such smear campaigns obviously care nothing about cost when they don't have to foot the bill. Such tactics divert the public's attention away from the fact that they're not actually doing anything.

Such partisan attacks are not limited to the Republican Party. The Democrats are big fans of the smear campaign. I consider the drive by Arizona Democrats to impeach Gov. Symington no more supportable than the Republican drive to oust Clinton. Both would have been better handled after the parties involved had left office. This would have limited costs to taxpayers.

The media, of course, has been all too willing to play along. Whereas for politics, such scandals and investigations are at a limited cost, for the media, they are big money makers. And again, there are numerous side benefits. Such "stories" free television and print journalists from the need to pursue anything serious that might require work. These are ready-made stories, set for plastering across the front page, including the number one ingredient — sex.

After all, why should we expect political coverage to differ from that given to celebrities? After the recent death of comic Chris Farley, the next day's headlines told not of loss and tragedy, but of the role of drugs in Farley's death. Follow-ups dug deeper into his personal life, dredging up other sordid tidbits that may have contributed to his untimely demise. This man was not famous for his personal life, but for his comic abilities.

I'm not saying that every detail in the Clinton sex scandal is trivial. Suborning perjury, for example, is quite a serious charge. I just think that the political climate that has generated the charges against Clinton needs to be looked at closely. If Clinton had not been the victim of partisan harassment, the current scandal would never have arisen. Kenneth Starr would never have been allowed to hound him and he would never have been forced to answer Paula Jones' dubious claims. We would never have had to worry whether or not he was lying.

The thing is, the public is being doubly cheated here. Firstly, the party faithful on either side are using our tax dollars to wage war on each other. Secondly, and perhaps more insidiously, the media is legitimizing their actions.

If you're one of the many who think that there are only two possible political ideologies, such political time-wasting is probably fine. The adversarial style of government undoubtedly suits you fine.

If, on the other hand, you'd actually like to get your money's worth out of your elected officials, whatever their party affiliation, and some worthwhile coverage from your local media outlets, don't let this sensationalistic garbage get you down.

Get in touch with your local and national representatives. Let them know you expect some work out of them other than attacking the opposition. If you let them know your vote depends on it, you might get some action. Remember, you pay their salaries.

And as far as the media is concerned, don't take the seemingly unbreakable fixation on the prurient for granted, either. Call them, write them, tell them you're sick of it. And most importantly, let them know that you're not going to read, watch or listen to such garbage. Let's start the boycott.

Time wasted on preacher hassling better spent on good deeds

Mall preachers are great, aren't they?

Especially for all us liberal college students. We have had enough education to realize that the Bible has flaws, and going to church every Sunday doesn't necessarily make someone a good person. That's partly why so many mall preachers don't hold an audience very long. At least that's what I thought.

I came out of class on Tuesday to find a large group of people gathered on Hayden lawn. Naturally inquisitive, I felt compelled to see what the fuss was about. A mall preacher was telling his story. No big deal. I've seen that before. But I stopped anyway, mainly because of the performance. This performance didn't involve the preacher. The performance involved the audience. I arrived just in time to see a student (I assume) run up to the preacher, hold up what looked like Hustler, and have his picture taken. I also was privileged to hear one student say "suck my —."

ROSIE MCSWEENEY
Columnist

This display of disrespect made me wonder why students stopped. Did they have nothing better to do than make fun of someone who believes that preaching is needed? I kept walking, not quite sure what to think about what I had just witnessed.

As I walked past the Memorial Union, I saw the bloodmobile truck with no crowd around it. What a sad comment on our priorities. Some people would rather sit and make fun of a mall preacher instead of potentially saving a life.

The funny thing is this: a mall preacher will most likely, in spite of every stupid thing that he saw today, only see a greater need for his presence on college campuses. Meanwhile, some father or mother or child is in desperate need for blood. Perhaps instead of wasting energy trying to change the mind of a mall preacher, we should put our energies into more important things, like saving lives.

ASU financial aid director resigns

By CADONNA PEYTON
STATE PRESS

In a joint effort between Arizona universities and community colleges, the process of transferring credits from one to the other will be made easier. And one of ASU's own will be a key player in it all.

Kate Dillon Hogan, director of financial aid, has tendered in her resignation and will move to a new position located at the office of the Arizona Board of Regents.

Hogan's new title will be articulation facilitator, and her job will be to assist students in transferring from community colleges to universities without losing credits. Articulation is the word that higher education officials use to describe the process of transferring course credits from the community college to university level.

"Higher education is my career," she said. "I see this as a minor change, not a major change."

Hogan, who has been at financial aid for five years, said her new job is not much different from her old one. Her main purpose in both positions is to serve students.

The position was first discussed by an articulation task force in a legislative session in 1996, said Tony Seese-Bieda, assistant executive director for public affairs for ABOR.

The task force made two recommendations. One recommendation was to look for ways to revise new transfer degrees so classes can be transferred as a block rather than individually.

Some of the blocks of classes have already been implemented, Seese-Bieda said. There will be more blocks added each semester. Seese-Bieda added that he hopes the process will be complete within two years.

The second recommendation included additional support functions for students going from community colleges to the universities. Included in this recommendation was Hogan's new position, which will be jointly funded by the universities and community colleges.

There are times when students transfer from a community college and later find out that many of their classes do not transfer in a particular program, Hogan said.

"We will put together a computer system that will support this so students will know which classes would apply to that degree," she added.

Hogan said she is leaving a "great job with a wonderful, supportive staff," but she could not pass up the opportunity to work

Jeremy Weiss/State Press
After being the Director of Student Financial Services for five years, Kate Dillon Hogan is retiring from the office. She will become the Articulation Facilitator for the Arizona Board of Regents in March with students on more of an academic level. She will leave the Financial Aid Office March 15 and begin her new job March 16.

There is one important thing Hogan said she is sure students want to know.

"The transition (of jobs) is designed to take place over the next few months," she said. "So we won't have any delays in the financial aid process for '98-99."

Health Center warns that flu season isn't over yet

BY CHRIS KAHN
STATE PRESS

The first Arizona case of Influenza B this year was diagnosed last week, prompting the Student Health Center to warn that the winter flu season is not over, despite warm temperatures.

Catching the flu is something that students at ASU should be particularly concerned with, said Pat Cox, senior nurse at Student Health.

"They could spread really badly in this college community because people live in close proximity," Cox said.

New strains of Influenza A, originating as far away as Australia, also continue to infect Arizonans.

Influenza A and B, commonly called the flu, usually cause sore throats, aches, fevers and coughing among people who carry it.

Although Influenza A can be treated up to two days after infection, the only protection from Influenza B is to get a flu shot, said Cox.

The Student Health Center has been administering flu shots all winter and will continue to give them for $10 until next month.

Appointments can be made by calling Student Health at 965-3349.

Event celebrates women athletes

BY DAVID WOODFILL
STATE PRESS

ASU Intercollegiate Athletics is holding a free women's sports clinic beginning Thursday.

The week-long event is being held to celebrate National Girls and Women in Sports Week, and will be targeting underprivileged girls and boys, ages 7 through 17.

The purpose of Women in Sports Week is to give people an opportunity to see girls and women competing, said Sandy Hatfield-Clubb, assistant athletic director for stadium and administrative services.

Hatfield-Clubb said she hopes the event will also discourage some of the stereotypes that might be associated with girls and women participating in sports.

Other sponsors of the event are Arizona Public Service, Wings of Gold, American Humanics and Women's Leadership Through Sports.

One of the week's highlights will include a student athlete panel that will feature athletes such as Molly Tuter, Dawnnell Linder and Raja Wood, who will answer questions and sign autographs.

Officials are also planning on having WNBA star Kim Hampton come and speak to an audience.

For more information on the clinic, call 727-Girl.

POLICE REPORT

The ASU police reported the following incidents on Monday:

- A man not associated with ASU was arrested, cited and released for assault at Sun Devil Stadium. The subject was booked into Madison Street Jail for an outstanding warrant from DPS for failing to appear for bad checks.
- Police recovered a vehicle (AZ/FNB492) reported stolen by an adult female. The vehicle was recovered at Area 63 in good condition. The registered owner was notified.
- A student reported that someone removed his bicycle from Noble Science Library, where it was secured with a lock.
- A woman not associated with ASU was arrested for driving under the influence of alcohol at 1020 E. Apache Blvd.

The Tempe police reported the following incident on Monday:

- A 31-year-old man was arrested for shoplifting at Circuit City, 1270 W. Elliot Road, after he stole several CDs. He left the store and employees chased him through the parking lot. They tackled him twice in attempts to detain him. The suspect threw the CDs at an employee from Tip Top Nursery, who was also trying to detain him. The suspect bit an employee's arm and another employee scraped his arm in the struggle. The suspect was booked into Tempe City Jail for assault and shoplifting. While booking the suspect, police did a criminal history, which revealed multiple AKAs that resulted in five warrants, three from Tempe, one from Chandler and one from Phoenix. The suspect admitted to the name on the Chandler warrant, but a photo identified yet another name. In total, the check revealed 13 AKAs for the suspect.

Today's photo radar locations are:

- Rural Road, between University Drive and Curry Road
- McClintock Drive, between Broadway Road and Southern Avenue
- University Drive, between Hardy Drive and Priest Drive

Man uses sleepwalking as defense in murder of wife

PHOENIX (AP) — Scott Louis Falater says he was sleepwalking when he stabbed his wife 44 times and drowned her in the swimming pool.

The defense may seem too bizarre to be true, at least in any context but a made-for-TV movie, but juries elsewhere have freed accused murderers making similar claims. Falater hopes a jury will do the same thing for him during his trial scheduled for March.

Until the January 1997 night his wife was killed, it appeared Falater and his wife Yamila had a good marriage. Longtime friends, neighbors and their children said the Mormon couple was quiet and never fought.

They were active in their church and were preparing to retire early.

Scott Falater is an inventor with a well-paying, though stressful, job as a product manager for Motorola, and Yamila Falater worked as an aide in a preschool.

The Falaters' children told police nothing unusual happened the night of the murder. They went to bed between 9 p.m. and 9:30 p.m.

About an hour later, two neighbors heard noises and went outside to investigate. They reported hearing a woman screaming "Please, please don't."

One neighbor looked over a wall into the Falaters' back yard and saw Yamila Falater lying on her side, her arms and legs moving. She rolled over and stopped moving, police reports say.

The neighbor then saw Falater walking around the house before coming outside and staring at his wife for about a minute.

He went back inside and emerged a short time later wearing gloves, police reports say. He dragged his wife to the pool and held her head under water.

The neighbors called 911.

When police arrived and questioned Falater about blood on his neck and arm, a cut on his finger and small scratches on his forearm, he had no explanation.

Richard Bootzin, a sleep-disorders expert at the University of Arizona, said violence during sleep is extremely rare, but there are documented cases of people who have walked out of upper-story windows, thrown their children out windows and driven cars while sleeping.

"There are examples of people who have slashed out at someone or thought they were being attacked while asleep," Bootzin said. "It's not really sleep. It's some kind of a state in which you are not fully in control of what is going on and you don't remember what's going on."

However, some facts in the case may work against Falater's sleepwalking defense.

He put gloves on before killing his wife, and police records show that afterward he bandaged a cut on his finger.

Police also say they found evidence of Falater's attempt to cover up his crime. Bloody clothes, a knife and an athletic mouthpiece were found in the family van.

Neighbors told police they heard Yamila Falater screaming for 20 to 30 minutes before she died.

Falater said he was awakened after police arrived by a lot of "noise, screaming and people talking." He later insisted to detectives he could not remember "doing it."

Miller cans 'angel' commercials

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — Miller Brewing Co. has pulled a television commercial of beer-swilling angels, a month after a New Jersey minister called the ad anything but heavenly.

Rev. Edward B. Smart Jr. said the ad was blasphemous by mocking faith and implying angels were alcoholics and that there was beer in heaven.

"They have come to see things our way," Smart said Tuesday.

In a letter dated Friday, an official for Milwaukee-based Miller said the ad wouldn't run again, "because Miller is sensitive to the concerns of our communities."

Miller said response to the commercial, which ran nationally from October through December, had been overwhelmingly positive, but that some people besides Smart had complained.

Last month, Smart presented a petition with 3,000 signatures opposed to the commercial and won a Newark City Council resolution condemning the ad.

The ad showed three young men in white suits and wings dancing to hip-hop music and chugging Miller Lite.

Japanese finance chief resigns in bank-bribe allegation scandal

By JOSEPH COLEMAN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOKYO — Jolted by the arrests of two senior officials on bribery charges, Japan's finance chief announced Tuesday that he will step down. Those arrested were allegedly entertained lavishly by banks in return for tip-offs about the ministry's "surprise" inspections.

The accusations hit at the heart of mounting criticism of the Finance Ministry: that lax government oversight shares the blame for the decay of Japan's debt-saddled financial institutions.

Finance Minister Hiroshi Mitsuzuka had come under intense pressure to resign after prosecutors raided his ministry Monday and opposition lawmakers vowed to block critical budget legislation until he quit.

"I deeply apologize for this disgrace," Mitsuzuka said at a news conference. "I'm resigning because I intensely feel my responsibility as a manager."

Prime Minister Ryutaro Hashimoto formally accepted Mitsuzuka's resignation Wednesday. Though Mitsuzuka has not been directly implicated in the scandal, Japanese leaders often resign to take responsibility for the mistakes of those below them.

The scandal centers on allegations that Finance Ministry officials accepted pricey dinners, golf outings and other entertainment bribes from banks in exchange for alerting them about inspections.

News reports say officials were entertained extravagantly in restaurants featuring scantily clad waitresses. Dinners were said to cost about $250 per person; tips often ran an additional $80 per waitress.

The ministry — Japan's most powerful agency — examines banks to judge their financial health and root out wrongdoing. The inspections are supposed to be a surprise so banks don't have time to conceal evidence or hide losses.

While the scandal is a blow to Hashimoto's government, Mitsuzuka's departure cleared the way for Parliament to pass budget legislation, including a $15.9 billion tax cut, and measures to strengthen Japan's financial system.

The resignation of a staunch defender of Hashimoto's tight fiscal policy could also open the door for more stimulative spending to spur the sluggish economy.

The investigation of the Finance Ministry is part of a wider probe into chummy relations between government officials and the businesses they regulate.

On Monday, Tokyo prosecutors converged on the Finance Ministry, searched for evidence and arrested two top bureaucrats in the inspections division.

Koichi Miyagawa, 52, and Toshimi Taniuchi, 48, were arrested for allegedly telling banks in advance about inspections in exchange for $40,000 in wining and dining over four years.

The arrests followed a similar move last week, when a former Finance Ministry bureaucrat working for Japan's national highway corporation was arrested on charges of accepting entertainment in return for favors.

No bank officials have yet been charged in the latest case but prosecutors searched the offices of Dai-Ichi Kangyo Bank, Sanwa Bank, Asahi Bank and Hokkaido Takushoku Bank on Tuesday afternoon.

An opposition group had called for Mitsuzuka's resignation and boycotted a legislative committee meeting on the government budget and fiscal reform. The group's absence Tuesday brought debate on bills there to a halt.

Mitsuzuka's announcement that he would resign came hours after he vowed to weed out corruption in his ministry and work to regain public confidence.

"In order to make sure that this type of thing doesn't happen again, we will push through Finance Ministry reforms," he said earlier Tuesday.

Poet laureate Ted Hughes wins Britain's richest literary award

LONDON (AP) — Poet laureate Ted Hughes won the $33,000 Whitbread Book of the Year award Tuesday — Britain's richest literary prize — with his collection Tales of Ovid.

The reclusive Hughes, 67, who recently broke a 35-year silence about his troubled marriage to the American poet Sylvia Plath with a searing new book of poems, was ill and did not attend the awards ceremony.

The prize was collected on his behalf by TV presenter Melvyn Bragg.

Tales of Ovid beat Jim Crace's novel Quarantine, a biography of Victor Hugo by Graham Rob and The Ventriloquist's

Tale, debut novel of Pauline Melville.

The nine judges said they were not influenced by the huge publicity given to Hughes' latest collection, Birthday Letters.

"I don't think these were judges that would be swayed by this month's thing," said panel chairman, Professor Jeremy Treglown from the University of Warwick.

He said Tales of Ovid, Hughes' reworking of Ovid's Metamorphosis, was a work of "greatness and sublimity."

"We felt that it was a stupendous achievement to be able to bring back this first-century author whose stories are so deeply embedded in our culture," Treglown said.

The troubled Plath gassed herself in her oven on Feb. 11, 1963, months after Hughes left her for another woman. She was 30.

Some Plath fans have called Hughes a murderer and his name has been repeatedly hacked off of Plath's gravestone in Yorkshire, northern England.

But Birthday Letters, 88 poems about the couple's six-year marriage, makes it clear Hughes loved his wife.

Hughes, who has been poet laureate since 1984, has refused to be interviewed about the poems, which span 25 years from the late '60s.

Study: Gene mutation that slows AIDS in adults also helps newborns

BY BRENDA C. COLEMAN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — A gene mutation that slows the progression of AIDS in adults also helps newborns infected with HIV fend off serious illnesses associated with the disease, a study found.

The mutation, which occurs on a gene called CCR5, is believed to be absent in blacks and Asians but present in 10 percent to 15 percent of whites.

"There is a significant delay in the appearance of clinical and biological symptoms," said Dr. Micheline Misrahi, a professor of biochemistry and molecular biology in Paris at the Institut National de la Sante et de la Recherche Medicale.

In the study, HIV-infected newborns with the mutation stayed illness-free much longer than infants who lacked the mutation, the researchers reported in Wednesday's Journal of the American Medical Association.

By age 8, only 11 percent of HIV-infected babies with the mutation had suffered serious AIDS-related maladies, such as severe bacterial illnesses, compared with 49 percent of babies who lacked the mutation.

The finding could someday help scientists develop new drugs to prevent or kill HIV infection in newborns, the researchers said.

Such a treatment would help all races because it would give them the biological advantage now afforded only by the gene mutation, a U.S. scientist said.

In the United States, about 500 babies of HIV-infected mothers are born with the virus each year. In developing countries, the rate is more than 300,000 a year and increasing.

Sun Devils prepare for 'business' trip in Hawaii

By LORI HARO
STATE PRESS

It may seem like an early spring break vacation, but when the ASU baseball team leaves today to the islands to take on the University of Hawaii-Hilo, the Sun Devils will be all business.

"It's a treat for the kids, but at the same time we're there to play baseball," ASU head coach Pat Murphy said.

ASU goes to Hawaii with a 3-0 record after sweeping last weekend's Louisville Slugger Classic. The Sun Devils meet Hawaii-Hilo for the second time ever in a five-game series beginning Thursday and lasting through Sunday.

The Sun Devils hold a 1-0 lead in the all-time series with the Vulcans.

ASU plays against the Vulcans Thursday and Friday at Wong Stadium at 6 p.m. The two squads will play a doubleheader Saturday at Vulcan Stadium beginning at 1 p.m. The Sun Devils wrap up their trip at Kona Field at 1 p.m.

"We're not really concerned with who we play," right fielder Mikel Moreno said. "As long as we play our game for all nine innings, we'll win every game."

Last season the Vulcans went 17-30-1 playing a schedule that included Pac-10 teams from UofA, USC, Washington and Washington State as well as Pepperdine and San Diego State University.

Hawaii-Hilo enters the series with a 1-7 record. The Vulcan's only win was against Sonoma State University.

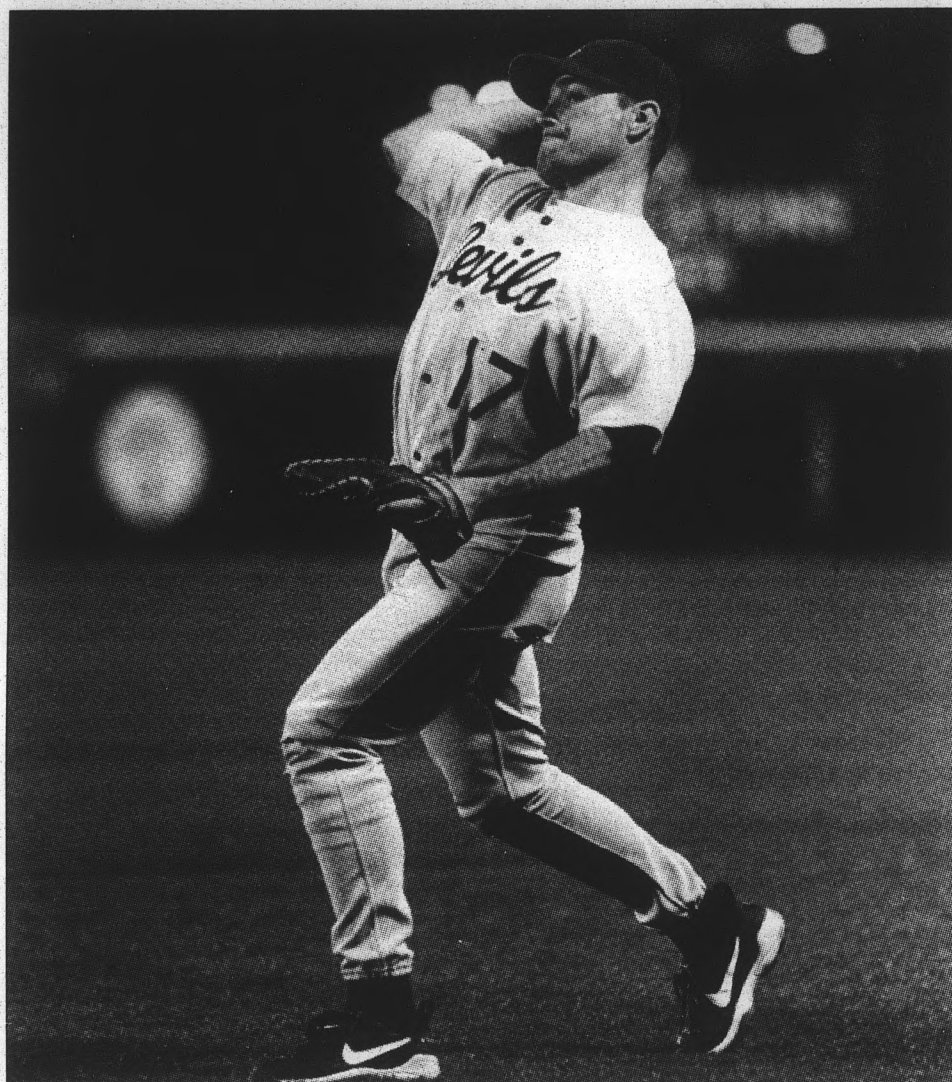

However, Murphy knows that this team will not be a pushover and expects this week's games to be more of a challenge to the team than last weekend's were.

"We thought we'd be challenged a lot better in our tournament, but I think the road trip will really help us come together as a team," Murphy said. "Hawaii-Hilo is a tough place to play. There is a lot of adversity there. There won't be any fans there to support us which is a big boost for us. The fields are different and it's just being on the road. We're the visiting team so there will be a lot of adversity."

Hawaii-Hilo lost a total of 13 players and only return five starters from last seasons' team. Among those returning are infielder Tony Jackson and outfielder Adam Cancellieri. Last season Jackson hit .299, with 44 hits and 24 RBI. Cancellieri hit .293 with 49 hits and 20 RBI.

The depth of the Vulcan's team lies with its pitching staff as three returning seniors, Mike Komorous (1-2, 6.87 ERA), Russell Ricafort (2-2, 4.25 ERA) and Justin Morales (1-0, 5.81 ERA) make their way back to the mound. Also returning is left-hander Thomas Ford. Last season Ford was 2-5, played in 12 games, had the second-best ERA on the team at 2.39 and the most strikeouts with 58.

Newman says injuries only problem

By Matt Paulson
State Press

Worried about numerous aspects of his team's play only six days ago, ASU interim head coach Don Newman announced at Tuesday's weekly press conference that his troubles have been reduced to one item.

"My biggest concern is health," Newman said in reference to seniors Ahlon Lewis (bruised right shoulder) and Urit Kelly (shin splints) suffering from minor ailments.

"It's very interesting to put together a practice plan at this time of year to keep these guys healthy and still get work done."

So interesting in fact that Newman has even hit the court a few times to combat the problem of the Sun Devils' limited numbers.

Ironically, though, the injury bug has now sidelined the coach as well.

"I got out there and practiced with them the other day and I twisted my ankle. So that showed me my career was over," Newman said.

While Lewis, who has had a bad shoulder since before the Jan. 22 contest with Oregon State, has been able to play through his injury, Kelly has been resigned to riding a bike and shooting free throws during practice for nearly two weeks now.

Still, Newman said practice since Sunday has been some of the best he's seen all season.

"(This week) I saw some of the most beautiful basketball I've seen all year — including in games," he said. "On a couple of plays, I don't know if the Suns could have stopped us."

Right on track

With the Sun Devils down to the final third of the season, Newman said his team is almost exactly where he hoped they would be when he first took over the program in September.

"We're sitting here with 13 wins and 11 opportunities to go," Newman said. "If you look at this whole season and how it's unfolded at this point, I can honestly say maybe we're a game short of where we should be and I don't know how many teams are sitting here around the nation saying that now."

"The only thing that I've felt we've let go is the Oregon State game."

Looking back, however, he added that maybe it was a positive loss.

"I think it was a bit of a jolt (but) I think we needed it," Newman said. "If you have to take a loss by Oregon State at home (and) if you can learn a lesson like we have as quickly as we did, then it's going to be worth it down the road."

ASU beat Oregon 67-51 in their next game.

All in the numbers

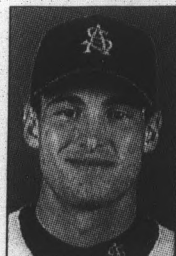

At 13-7 overall and tied for fifth at 3-4 in the Pac-10, advancing to postseason play is a strong possibility. Knowing this, Newman has now mapped out a specific way for the Sun Devils to get there.

"After the (Oregon) game I put on the board, 13 and seven and below it I put seven slash 11," Newman said meaning seven wins in 11 games. "The visual I was trying to send was that I think 20 (wins) is a magic number for any team around the country."

"What that represents is a winning season, (even) at 16. Then to me anything from 16, 17 to 18, you're probably looking at qualifying for the NIT. Anything over that you have a serious argument to go even farther," he added alluding to the NCAA Tournament.

"We're not far away and we can't be afraid to look at it. We have to set out goals now so we can go and attain them. I'm going to put that in front of these guys as much as I can for the next month and two weeks."

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL

Veal, a senior shooting guard, scored 20 points in ASU's 67-51 Saturday win over Oregon and in the process became the first Sun Devil and only the eighth Pac-10 player to compile 1,700 points and 350 assists. It was the 10th time this season he recorded 20 or more points in a game.

Please cut the 'Cheese' fake fans

First and foremost, I would like to give a happy hooray and a hardy hell yeah for the Denver Broncos' 31-24 victory over the Green Bay Packers.

Now before anybody jumps the gun and rounds up the bandwagon, some explanation is in order.

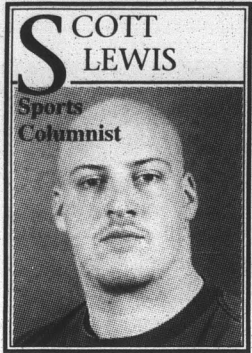

It's not that their Super Bowl win was personally gratifying — I'm a New York Jets fan, and besides the fact that it was nice to see the AFC win the big one after 13 years of futility, I could care less that Denver finally broke its personal Super Bowl winless streak of four games.

It's not that I'm so happy that John Elway got his elusive ring and finally broke the curse of the 1983 quarterback draft class — Yeah, he is a class act and one of the best quarterbacks ever, but I didn't see any bleeding hearts or crying eyes when Jets quarterback Ken O'Brien, another member of the '83 QB club, retired without even sniffing a Super Bowl.

It's not even that the Broncos, thanks to another memorable Elway game-winning drive, put the coup de grace on inarguably one of the best Super Bowl battles of all-time — and no less of a source than NBC football analyst and former Cincinnati Bengals head coach Sam Wyche called Super Bowl XXXII the greatest Super Bowl ever.

In fact, my reason for a hooray and a hell yeah has absolutely nothing to do with football or the team formerly known as the "Orange Crush."

You see, I'm just happy that Green Bay lost because, at least until next season, I don't have to see all those fake Packers fans sporting their Brett Favre or Reggie White jerseys. And I don't have to look at those "die-hard" fans wear their stupid pieces of foam cheese on their heads.

SCOTT LEWIS
Sports Columnist

And I don't have to listen to any more mid-western misfits, or mid-western misfit wannabe's for all you fake Packers fans from different geographical areas, yell "Packers rule!" every time Green Bay makes a first down.

Now if you think I'm just a jealous New Yorker who is mad because the Jets have never even beaten a Super Bowl-winning team during the regular season, you're wrong. I'm mad about that and all, but that isn't the fuel for this fire.

If you think my two weeks of rooming with two morons from Milwaukee, Bill and Pat, has had an adverse effect on my view of Green Bay fans, well you're probably right.

During the first two weeks of the season I had to endure these self-proclaimed "huge Packers fans" yelling about how great Favre was (and he is the man) and how great White was (and he's the man too) and how great Antonio Freeman was and how they should never have let Desmond Howard go, but when I started wondering whether Dorsey Levens or Travis Jervey would be able to replace the injured Edgar Bennett at running back, these two fountains of football information would reply "Dorsey who?" or "Travis what?"

After I moved out of their dirty, sweaty hotbox they call a house, the second following a Green Bay win they would call my new house and yell "Packers!"

Idiots I tell you.

To all you life-long Packers fans or to the good people who call Wisconsin home (I haven't met too many of you folk but I'm sure you're good people), this column isn't directed at

Women's b-ball inks new recruits

FROM STAFF REPORTS

ASU women's basketball coach Charli Turner Thorne announced on Tuesday the signing of three recruits to begin playing next fall.

A pair of 6-foot-2 forwards, Leah Combs and Theresa Jantzen and 5-7 shooting guard Arbatisha Kitchen make up the incoming class. In addition, new players next season will include Division I transfers Natalie Tucker (Texas A&M) and Aubrey McFadyen (Colorado State). Each will have three years of eligibility beginning in 1998-99.

"All three of our signees have the potential to come in and make an impact right away on a very talented team," Turner Thorne said. "I think that says it all ... Natalie and Aubrey are our dynamic duo. They will accelerate the direction of the program dramatically."

Combs averaged 16.5 points, 8.3 rebounds and 1.8 blocks for Esperanza High School in Yorba Linda, Calif., as a junior.

"Leah will bloom under our care," Turner Thorne said, "to become one spectacular Sun Devil. Smart, hard-working and incredibly quick for her size. Leah is perfect for our system."

Jantzen, from Medicine Hat, Alberta, Canada, scored 27.7 points a game last season, while shooting 66.9 percent.

"If two years ago when I first saw Theresa play, someone would have told me I would get to coach her, I would have left the game beaming," Turner Thorne said.

Kitchen, a native of Newark, N.J., was named MVP of the Coast Conference as a freshman at San Jose (Calif.) City College in 1996-97.

"Kitch is as court savvy as they come," Turner Thorne said. "She will make passes that will make Magic Johnson take notice. One-on-one, she'll be extremely hard to stop."

Rice cakes Suns in Charlotte win

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Glen Rice scored 13 of Charlotte's final 26 points and wound up with 42 to help the Hornets to a 120-113 double-overtime victory over the Phoenix Suns on Tuesday night.

Rice, named an Eastern Conference All-Star earlier in the day, was held to seven points in the first half on 2-for-8 field-goal shooting. He made 13 of 21 the rest of the way as the Hornets won for the fourth time in five games.

Anthony Mason added 20 points, 13 rebounds and six assists for Charlotte, and Matt Geiger had 10 points and 13 rebounds.

The Suns, who one night earlier had opened an 11-day, seven-game East Coast swing with a victory in Atlanta, were outscored by Charlotte 14-7 in the second extra period.

Phoenix got a season-high 30 points from Antonio McDyess, but he fouled out with 1:44 left in regulation. Rex Chapman added 20 points and Steve Nash had 18.

Rice scored 10 of Charlotte's 12 points in the first extra period, when there were five lead changes and four ties.

Mason scored the first three points of the second overtime session, giving the Hornets their biggest lead of the game to that point.

Charlotte pushed its lead to six points twice before Rice's free throw with five seconds remaining accounted for the final margin.

McDyess, who got into foul trouble Monday night and scored just two points in the Suns' victory in Atlanta, played 40 minutes before fouling out. He hit 14 of 20 field-goal attempts and added 12 rebounds and five blocks.

their pitching staff has been somewhat of a concern, but left-hander Phill Lowery feels differently.

"People don't think we have a lot of depth, but we really do," Lowery said. "Everyone on the pitching staff is very capable about going out there and getting people out."

For this series the probable pitching rotation for the Sun Devils will be Lowery in Thursday's game, Ryan Mills in Friday's game and either Jay Gehrke or C.J. Call in the third and fourth starting spots. Murphy said he did not yet know who would start the fifth game, but freshmen Chad Pennington and Drew Friedberg are possibilities.

Sophomore Kevin Tillman will not make the first away trip. Tillman has been out all season with a hamstring injury.

you. This column refers to all those "hard-core" Dallas Cowboys fans that came out of the woodwork five years ago. This column refers to all those people who don't give a damn about football but still give you a dirty look when you tell them you're not a Green Bay fan.

And alas, this column refers to the drunken fool that former State Press sports scribe Josh Defamio ran into inside the bathroom of the Thirsty Beaver, a notorious Green Bay football fan hangout, during the Super Bowl. After sucking back a few well-placed brewski's, Defamio, a fantastic writer and a hell of a guy, went into the men's room and spotted this highly-inebriated fellow, all decked out in green and yellow, at the urinal.

"Everything he was wearing was Packers," Defamio said. "Packers' hat, Packers' shirt, Packers' pants, Packers' everything. He was even wearing Packers' underwear!"

Which begs only one question. Why was Defamio looking at his underwear? But that's another column in itself, sorry to digress.

To conclude, I wonder if all the Green Bay "fans" who call themselves "cheeseheads" realize how apt their nickname is. You really are the cheesiest fans in sports.

Weekly Beer Trivia
It was the accepted practice in Babylonia 4,000 years ago that for a month after the wedding, the bride's father would supply his son-in-law with all the mead he could drink. Mead is a honey beer, and because their calendar was lunar-based, this period was called the "honey month" - or what we know today as the "honeymoon."

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

by Frances Drake

Wednesday, January 28, 1998

ARIES (March 21 to April 19)
Pay no heed to another's negativity. You're on the right track regarding your career interests. Be more positive about your social prospects and you meet with chances for fun.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20)
You could be overly cautious, but luck is with you regarding investments and career. Go ahead on a planned domestic project. A work concern can get you down, but you'll snap out of it in time for some fun.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20)
Once you overcome self-doubt, you're on your way to career gains. Take the initiative. Others give you encouragement.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22)
If you hurt a family member's feelings, make amends. A shopping trip leads to new possessions for the home. Lack of funds shouldn't keep you from having a good time, especially when you're with people you care about.

LEO (July 23 to Aug. 22)
Although a friend seems unsympathetic about your financial situation, you'll find new ways to increase income and further ambitions. Be less suspicious of others' motives.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 to Sept. 22)
You're concerned about hurting another's feelings, but this time it's all right to act in your own behalf. Throw off career concerns and enjoy the day's chances for good fellowship with others.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22)
You're right to concentrate on your career, but save a few moments for a loved one. Ingenuity leads to financial gain. You'll need tact with an admirer you don't fancy.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21)
Questions of intimacy require sensitivity. An unexpected work assignment comes your way. Make decisions regarding joint expenditures.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21)
Trying to figure out what a roman tic interest really means intrigues you, but don't let it interfere with job efficiency. Concentrate! Undercurrents affect family ties.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 19)
After all these years, testing a family member seems inappropriate. Give to others without attaching any strings. Doing something new and exciting together is favored!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 to Feb. 18)
A friend plays cute and hard to get. Are you sure you want to be led on this way? You'll come up with new ways to increase income.

PISCES (Feb. 19 to March 20)
Although behind-the-scenes work on your career is favored, clandestine involvements in your personal life are not. Go by the rules. A business meeting has romantic overtones, but the potential is there for a sticky relationship.

YOU BORN TODAY, like many of your sign, are a progressive thinker with a pioneering spirit. Despite your apparent sociability, there's a part of you that you keep to yourself. In the midst of merriment, you're a bit aloof. Although you'll succeed in business, you're often drawn to less material matters. In fact, you prefer to be creative over just making money for money's sake. The educational field often appeals to you as well.
