Asian American program approved

By ALLY ASHER
 STATE PRESS

After nine years of struggle and hard work, the Asian Pacific American Studies Program Proposal has finally been approved for ASU students and faculty.

The program is being offered through the College of Public Programs and its curriculum is scheduled to be implemented next fall.

"Asian Americans have had a long history in Arizona and many other Southwest regions," said Kathleen Wong(Lau), an intercultural communication graduate assistant. "There has been a lack of literature, archives and information that can now be accessible to people. It's really a very meaningful program."

 intercultural communication graduate student

Before the proposal was approved, ASU and UofA were the only Pac-10 universities that did not have an Asian American studies program.

Wong(Lau) has been working with a University committee and the community for a few years to try to get the proposal approved. She said the program will focus on educating students about the Asian Pacific American experience in the United States from an academic perspective.

The program will offer courses in the fall, including Asian Pacific American studies, literature and media relations, which are geared toward all students, Wong(Lau) said. There will eventually be a certificate offered in the program, she added.

"Right now we're working on getting the program's basics established like implementing courses and recruiting faculty,"

Student Health fights flu with cold care packs

By MONICA J. AGUIRRE

Free cold care kits filled with Robitussin DM, Halls, Advil and other feel-better aids will be distributed by Student Health to students next week.

"Clearly, colds and flus can affect the academic success of the students at Arizona State University and we want to do what we can at Student Health to prevent that from happening" said Tom Jacobsen, associate director of student health.

The packets will be distributed in the residential halls. Students living off-campus can pick up a kit at Student Health Center with a coupon that will run in next week's State Press.

The cold care kits contain packets of Advil, Kleenex, Halls, Sudatrin, instant soup, herbal tea, two disposable thermometers and a small vial of Robitussin, along with a cold and flu pamphlet.

"We want to be more than a place that takes care of people when they're sick," Jacobsen said. "We want to be proactive."

The cold and flu plague is like academic mortality, Jacobsen said. Nearly 80 percent of the student body suffers from these sicknesses during the winter season, he added. Coughs and sniffles can cause students to miss class and even in some cases contribute to lower grades.

"It's not the cancers and it's not the AIDS that are going to affect most of our students, it's the common cold and flu," said Dr. Dale Bowen, director of student health.

As a preventative measure, Bowen recommended students get a flu shot along with a cold care kit. He said there are more than 200 different viruses that compile a simple illness. The most common viruses are passed from hand to

Education issues high on ABOR list of priorities

By KAREN YAMADA
 STATE PRESS

The big state machine is moving, but slowly, as Arizona legislators grapple with a myriad of higher education issues.

To date, 28 bills have been introduced and are making their way through the 100-day legislative process.

The issue drawing the most emotion from the Arizona Board of Regents at its January meeting was a proposed community college exception.

Known as Expand Access Statewide to Education, the proposal seeks to grant an exception to the two-year academic program restriction on community colleges by allowing them to offer baccalaureate degrees.

The proposal, sponsored by Sen. Carol Springer, R-Prescott, and Rep. James Caruthers, R-Yuma, states that "an exception could be sought after a community college has determined that a public or private university chooses not to offer the program."

Regent John Munger said, "I think this is a vague, self-serving concept, which will cost the taxpayers money for 'credentialing' community college institutions. It is a geopolitical boondoggle."

In particular, legislators will have to decide whether students throughout Arizona would be best served in the manner proposed and who would be responsible for setting strategic direction, policy and programs.

"The Higher Education Study Committee has been hearing viewpoints from the regents, universities and community colleges since December," said Tony Seese-Bieda, spokesman for ABOR. "A final recommendation from the committee is expected Thursday."

Other bills in action or being discussed include:

- A bill that would require public computers provided by public entities to be equipped with software that prevents minors from gaining access to explicit sexual materials. Blake Anderson, an ASU government relations analyst said, "The bill failed in the House Government Operations Committee Wednesday morning. The University is happy because it had opposed the bill as it would have limited the access of students and professors who use computers for research."

- A bill to ban smoking in university buildings. "I put forth the bill because an ASU employee in my district, Tim Bruder, has been pushing Wong(Lau) said. "We're still in the beginning process of finalizing the program."

Carl Yoshioka, chair of the Recreation Management and Tourism Department and a committee member, attributed the slow process of implementing the program to many different circumstances, among them, a lack of University funds and bad timing.

"We've been trying for so long," Yoshioka said. "There has recently been anti-Asian crimes which brought focus to the program. It was time."

Yoshioka also said that the community was very persuasive and that the success of the program will depend on student interest and participation.

Randy Nakagawa, president of the Asian Students Coalition, does not foresee a lack of student interest but urges students to enroll in the classes.

"Asian Americans are finally being recognized," he said. "We want all races to get involved because many people still don't understand the Asian culture."

mouth and eye contact.

"I can't stress enough the importance of washing your hands," Bowen said.

More than a dozen students volunteered to help assemble the 3,000 packages.

"This is students helping other students," Jacobsen said.

Student Health began assembling cold kits and charging students the base cost a few years ago. The kits were popular, so the staff decided to petition neighboring stores and businesses for donations to eliminate the cost to the students. Some items were donated and others were purchased at cost.

The health care professionals also want to stress that many helpful drugs can be purchased at the Student Health Pharmacy at a relatively inexpensive price.

"We have all these medications right here at Student Health that they can buy over the counter and they're about half the cost than if you went to a local drug store," Jacobsen said.

for it for a long time," Rep. Lori Daniels, R-Chandler/Ahwatukee, the bill's sponsor, said Tuesday. The bill bans smoking from all state-owned or -leased University buildings with the exception of residential facilities. A related Senate bill would ban smoking within 50 ft. of building entrances.

• A bill that would make it a felony to contact a student athlete in violation of NCAA rules or to act as an athlete agent. Sponsored by

Rep. Richard Kyle, R-Chandler/Ahwatukee, the bill would require athlete agents to notify ABOR when considering an agreement with an athlete whose college eligibility has not expired and again upon entering into a contract. It would also ban an agent from compensating an athlete, or in engaging in any activities that would jeopardize the athlete's eligibility to play intercollegiate sports, before a contract is signed.

Prosecutors question Panetta, seek Secret Service help

BY JOHN SOLOMON
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Aggressively pressing for evidence of an alleged presidential affair and coverup, prosecutors sought Secret Service agents' testimony, questioned President Clinton's former chief of staff and tried to clinch a deal for Monica Lewinsky's cooperation.

In a whirlwind day, investigators crossed the country Wednesday to pick up possible evidence in a safety deposit box in Oregon while opening negotiations deep inside the Treasury Department.

Officials told The Associated Press that Whitewater prosecutor Kenneth Starr's office and Treasury officials were discussing how to gain testimony from Secret Service agents about whether they saw anything while protecting Clinton that would support allegations that he had an affair with Ms. Lewinsky.

The two sides were trying to work through Treasury concerns that forcing agents to breach their customary code of silence might jeopardize the effectiveness of his security detail, the officials said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Former chief of staff Leon Panetta spent most of the day at the federal courthouse and said he had been "largely detailing the operations of the White House and the physical setting of the White House."

He said he was unaware of "any improper relationship, sexual or otherwise," involving Clinton, and he added, "My fervent prayer is that for the sake of the president and the sake of this nation that this matter is resolved soon."

With Clinton keeping mum about the crisis, an anxious White House awaited word of whether prosecutors would provide Ms. Lewinsky immunity in exchange for her testimony before a grand jury.

Attorney William Ginsburg, who represents the former intern, said prosecutors have been in regular contact as they try to clarify various points in his client's formal offer earlier this week to testify.

"There is regular give and take," Ginsburg said in an interview with the AP. "We are clarifying points (in the offer) as they come up. And they have kept us pretty much in the loop. There's an open line of communication."

Asked if he was growing more hopeful, Ginsburg said: "In negotiations, it is not a matter of optimism, it is a matter of patience."

Ms. Lewinsky swore in an affidavit earlier this month in the Paula Jones sexual harassment case that she did not have an affair with Clinton. But prosecutors have custody of secretly recorded conversations in which Ms. Lewinsky tells a friend she did have an affair and was asked by Clinton and presidential friend Vernon Jordan to deny it.

Among the charges prosecutors must weigh is whether Ms. Lewinsky and the president committed perjury and whether she, Clinton and Jordan conspired to suborn perjury and obstruct the investigation.

Ginsburg said prosecutors are likely to ask Ms. Lewinsky to submit to "various forensic procedures, including polygraph examinations" if a deal is struck.

Panetta testified for hours before a grand jury assisting Starr's investigation at the U.S. Courthouse in Washington.

While there, he was served with a subpoena by Mrs. Jones' lawyers to testify in the sexual harassment case.

Ms. Lewinsky started her unpaid White House internship by working in Panetta's office. He has said in the past week that he never knew Ms. Lewinsky but that he recognized her photo when he saw it in the newspaper.

Hillary Rodham Clinton, meanwhile, made clear her husband plans to keep quiet about the details of his relationship with the young woman while he tries to weather the crisis.

"You won't hear any more from my husband, because they have to abide by the rules that they operate under when they have these investigations," she said.

In fact, Clinton is not under any gag rule preventing him from talking about

Iraqi official: U.S. creating a crisis to back potential attack

BY LEON BARKHO
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Iraq's foreign minister accused the United States Wednesday of fabricating a crisis as a pretext to attack Iraq, and joined with France to criticize recent comments by the chief U.N. weapons inspector.

Foreign Minister Mohammed Saeed al-Sahhaf excoriated Richard Butler, the chief U.N. weapons inspector, for telling The New York Times that Iraq's biological weapons program could "blow away Tel Aviv."

"Those statements and interviews emphasized again that Mr. Butler is not a neutral expert," al-Sahhaf said. "He is biased and blindly committing mistakes, deadly mistakes."

Al-Sahhaf said Iraq had asked U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan to "punish" Butler for his remarks.

The Iraqi foreign minister spoke at a news conference shortly after an envoy dispatched by Russian President Boris Yeltsin met with Iraqi President Saddam Hussein in Baghdad to try to defuse the crisis over U.N. weapons inspections.

Al-Sahhaf said the envoy, Viktor Posuvalyuk, handed Saddam a letter from Yeltsin. He did not disclose details but said "the letter deals with the current tense situation created by the American military threats against Iraq."

The official Iraqi News Agency said Saddam thanked Yeltsin for efforts toward finding a solution "in a manner achieving justice in applying U.N. Security Council resolutions and meeting Iraq's legitimate demands."

Posuvalyuk arrived Tuesday to try to find a political solution to the crisis sparked by Iraq's refusal to grant U.N. weapons inspectors access to self-styled "sensitive sites" such as presidential compounds. He left late Wednesday for Jordan.

The inspectors repeatedly have said they suspect that Iraq is hiding material from its banned weapons programs at the sites. Iraq has said it will never allow the inspectors to enter those locations.

The United States has threatened a military attack to force Iraq to comply with U.N. resolutions, and several American officials are to begin trips this week to consult with American allies about a strike.

U.N. inspectors must certify that Iraq has destroyed its weapons of mass destruction before punishing trade sanctions imposed after Iraq's 1990 invasion of Kuwait can be lifted.

In Washington, Secretary of State Madeleine Albright said the United States would attack Iraq alone if diplomacy failed to reverse Iraq's defiance of U.N. weapons inspectors.

"I am not going anywhere to seek support," she said. "I am going to explain our position."

She added, however, that the "diplomatic string" has not yet run out. Albright was to fly to Europe and then the Persian Gulf for consultations.

In his news conference, al-Sahhaf alluded to the sex scandal surrounding President Clinton, saying Washington was "trying to cover their miserable situation inside by diverting attention to a fabricated crisis."

Al-Sahhaf said Iraq was cooperating fully with the U.N. Security Council. He noted that Iraq has asked that discussion of the sensitive sites be put off until after international teams evaluate the work of the U.N. inspectors to date.

INA/Associated Press

Iraqi President Saddam Hussein, right, sits in the Presidential Palace Wednesday, Jan. 28, 1998 during a meeting with the Russian delegation who delivered a written letter by Russian President Boris Yeltsin. The Iraqi News Agency did not disclose its contents but said it focused on Russia's efforts to find a way out of the standoff in accordance with an agreement the two countries reached last November. INA said Saddam thanked Yeltsin for efforts toward finding a solution "in a manner achieving justice in applying U.N. Security Council resolutions and meeting Iraq's legitimate demands."

Ex-governor still has broker's license

Think former Gov. Fife Symington's days of real estate wheeling-and-dealing are as dead as his political career?

Think again.

It seems Symington, though convicted of financial fraud four months ago, still holds his real estate brokers license.

Wait — it gets better.

Not only does he still have his license, but it seems he has been doing some deals on the side while awaiting his sentencing, which will take place Monday.

Very interesting.

Charles Downs, a state Real Estate Department spokesman, told the Associated Press that broker licenses are not usually investigated or revoked unless complaints are filed. Because there have been no complaints issued, Symington has retained his license.

Furthermore, according to Downs, the agency could act on its own, but it only does so under extenuating circumstances.

Apparently, felony convictions aren't such a big deal in the real estate business.

"Nobody has demonstrated that the public has been harmed by the ex-governor," Downs told the Associated Press.

Someone give this guy a clue — or a lie-detector test.

At last count, Symington created false financial statements in order to gain loans, forcing the lenders to absorb in excess of $23 million; he also defaulted on the $10 million loaned to him from union pension funds. There's more, but we think you get the point.

It's true that Symington's broker license is not directly related to his convictions, but it's fair to say the retirees who are now losing their pensions because of his actions have been "harmed."

Moreover, state law requires that brokers be of "good moral character" and gives the department the power to discipline any broker who engages in "fraud or dishonest dealings" or who is convicted of a felony, the Associated Press reported.

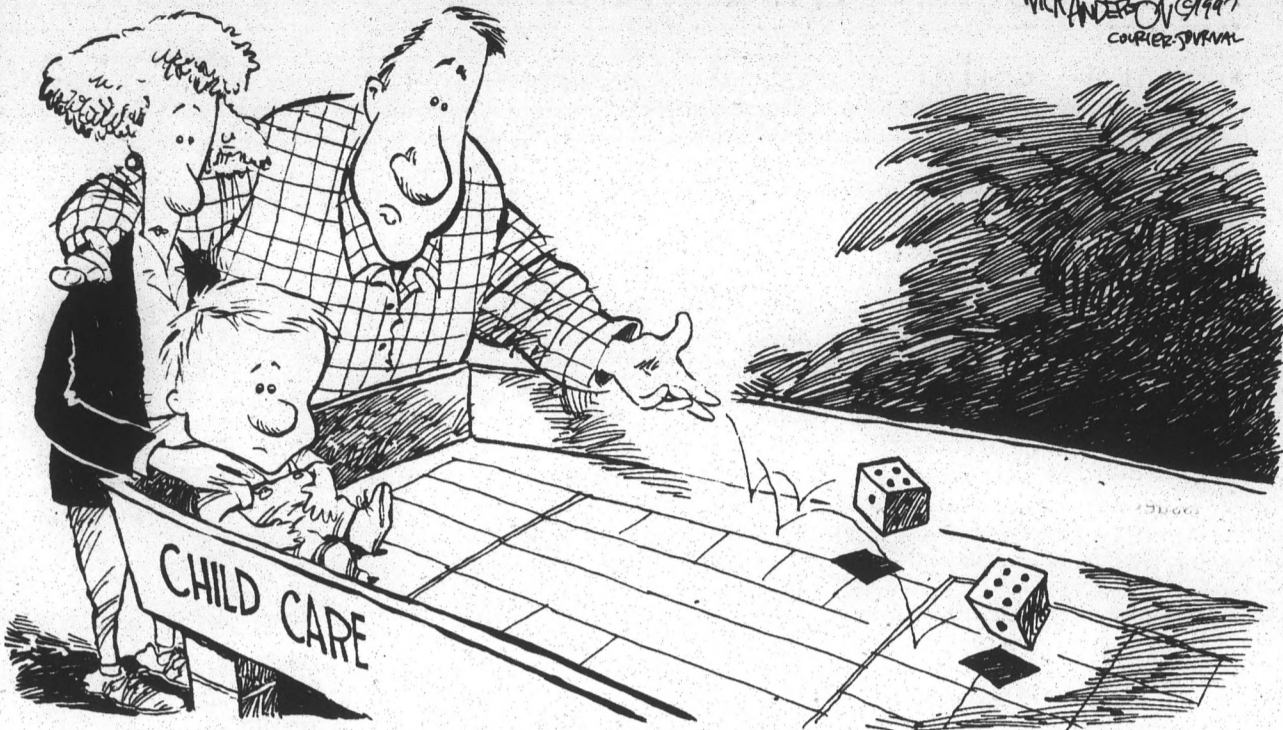

If the shoe fits ...

Downs went on to say that an investigation was underway, but the department plans to wait for the sentencing before taking any further action.

Sure it was underway — the second Down finished the interview, perhaps.

But even if the department decides to revoke Symington's license, he can appeal it, and under appeal, his license would be automatically reinstated.

Regardless of whether or not the Real Estate Department pursues this issue, two things remain clear: One, anyone who lets Symington work a deal for them, let alone make change for them at McDonald's, is setting themselves up; and two: once Symington is in jail, he won't have much use for his license anyway.

Pop culture is taking over our tongues

At the end of the Tostito Bowl Festival on New Year's Eve, I walked with my friend, discussing Mike Myers' satiric Austin Powers movie. Eerily, at that same moment, I heard two drunken party-goers scream "Yah, Baby!" That line, along with Powers' other famous quote, "Do I make you horny, baby?" are starting to infuse young American vocabulary in much the same way the movies of the '80s influenced fashion statements. A few nights later, at a movie screening, I heard the same line from Austin Powers repeated.

ANGELA YEAGER
Columnist

It seems pop culture is with us wherever we go these days. You can't go to school, to work or to social events without hearing someone or something spewing the latest line from movies, television and music.

While Austin Powers is the most recent example, audiences have been reciting famous lines since Clark Gable muttered those famous words, "Frankly, my dear, I don't give a damn." However, in the past few years, it seems like it has become more common. From Pulp Fiction to Swingers, young adults are using the vocabulary of pop culture in new ways. Movies are studied so as to get every hip phrase and every cool move into memory. This phenomena can be seen easily by looking at the same crowds of people who visit the Valley Art Theater for their zillionth viewing of Swingers. They have even started dressing like the characters.

While the actors who make these films are off to bigger and better things by the time we even see it, fans will be pursuing the movies for years to come for missed moments.

Film isn't the only medium of pop culture to be infused into our lives, though. Television and music can be just as addicting. Seinfeld must be the number one culprit for making up lines we can't resist repeating.

Anyone who has seen the "not that there's anything wrong with that" episode knows what I mean. In that show, Jerry and George are suspected of being homosexual. They adamantly deny it, all the while adding, "not that there's anything wrong with that!"

A friend of mine (also addicted to Seinfeld re-runs) virtually waited for people to sneeze just so she could say, "You are so good looking!" For those who missed that classic episode, Elaine suggested that telling people they are good looking instead of God bless you would make them feel better.

Music, too, becomes ingrained in our speech patterns. Just a few years back, everyone was saying, "Ya down with OPP? Yeah, you know me!" Who knows if half of them knew what the song meant, but it was the cool thing to do. A current example might be "Where It's At" by Beck. I've heard that line repeated in various forms, the strangest one as a slogan for Fox 10 News.

I am as guilty as the next guy of regurgitating pop culture. As a movie and music reviewer for a West Valley paper, I am probably more at fault. I remember seeing the screening of Men in Black a few weeks before it came out and afterwards asking my friends and family, "Did you flashy-thing me?" I love the line, but of course at the time, no one knew what the heck I was talking about.

I could go on and on with examples, but you get the picture. There is not anything really wrong with this kind of intrusion, but you have to be careful. I was having a fight with someone once when something popped out of my mouth that didn't sound right. Later, I realized I had just quoted from the movie Singles and not even known it. I couldn't even argue originally. Since it is my job to know this kind of stuff, I don't feel too bad. Just watch out the next time you walk out on someone; don't yell "Hasta La Vista, Baby!"

Women need to unite

As I am watching President Clinton make his state of the union address, I am struck by the outlandish show of support he is given at every turn. Each point is followed by applause and often a standing ovation. These distinguished participants are getting quite a workout! President Clinton then chooses to recognize Mrs. Clinton as one of the foremost authorities on child care, the camera moves in closer to our First Lady, and I cannot help notice how uncomfortable she looks. The various and sundry members of our government insist on giving her a standing ovation; she finally rises and motions for the people to please stop.

Mrs. Clinton, I for one agree with you, it is time for people to stop the empty applause and to recognize several issues that come to mind with the "State of the Presidency." First, I will admit that I care whether or not my president is a moral person; however, I feel some of the blame lies with the women involved in these alleged affairs with the President.

The road to achievement for women is still under construction all over the world. I want to see women challenge themselves to be supportive and to help all of their colleagues and neighbors flourish. This commitment to success and support should not be limited to one gender; however, women should make certain that other women are not hindered by their actions. The traditions and history that will become unique to women are being forged now. Women's history is slowly being pieced together, but we are living history. Our predecessors are severely under documented, but we are not! Jennifer Flowers, Monica Lewinsky and other countless unnamed alleged lovers, think of what message you are recording for future historians about women!

As we approach the millennium, many people fear the world will end. When faced with this question, I respond with, "How can that be, when women have had the right to vote in this country for such a short time?" I hold out hope that history will speak of an emerging voice of human values. A voice that has echoes from women's history we have yet to discover. In the words of the folk singer Dar Williams, "I will not be afraid of women."

Life, not lesson, valued

This is in response to the article on January 26 titled, "Motorcyclist Dies after Collision with Minivan." Stephen LeBlanc's life should not be summed up as a warning against the dangers of riding motorcycles. ASU and the world suffered a great loss last Friday. He was a remarkable person. He was the kind of guy everyone liked. He always had a smile on his face. He was always there for you when you needed him. Steve was more than another motorcycle statistic. He was my friend.

Preacher's puppets

In response to Rosie McSweeney's article on January 28th about mall preachers: Rosie, I believe that your article could have used some more thoughts. So, I will give my two cents worth. What is more important: saving a life or saving a soul? I am not sure I am qualified to make that decision; however, if I did make a choice, I would feel guilty for neglecting the other. I choose to save both. Rosie, did you donate blood that day or did you choose not to save a life and a soul?

As far as my thoughts on the mall preachers, well, it depends on their behavior. I have seen the entire spectrum of preacher behaviors from obnoxious to pleasant. It is true that the more obnoxious the behavior the larger the crowd; thus, more people to hear the "word" and have their souls saved. Not much for style points, but rake them in, right? On the other hand, the good preachers that receive disrespect from the audience and continue unscathed are showing the strength of their belief, which is very admirable.

So, who is the puppet in this fight for souls? I believe that the audience is, because they are reacting to the behavior of the preacher and his/her message, consequently a larger audience. As it is, the entire drama might seem entertaining, but the audience is being pulled in the direction chosen by the preacher. If you do not want to be a puppet, ask your questions in a quieter atmosphere. If you do not want that, then the questions you have are not that important, and you are only doing it for entertainment value.

Why does the audience choose to be drawn in by the preacher and by the crowd rather than donate blood? Well, I do not know. However, I am sure there are as many different answers to that question as there are people. Remember, a person's character is defined by his/her actions. I choose not to be a puppet; how about you?

Are college students sexually responsible?

FREE EMERGENCY CONTRACEPTION.

Grabs your attention, doesn't it. Even though it was floating in a sea of classifieds on the back page of the State Press, it grabbed mine. Perhaps for the wrong reason, though — certainly not the reason the Family Planning Institute intended.

The "After Morning" pill (which is the Institute's first selling point) is yet another brilliant solution from a society that is further pushing the limits of responsibility. The value placed on new life is diminishing right before our very eyes. Isn't it exciting?

Let's examine marketing this product. First, companies need to find a target population. What groups are known for acting without thinking? Students. Makes me proud to be a part of their target population. Talk about putting faith in America's future.

Maybe they've hit the nail on the head. Most college students are irresponsible. They drink way too much, hook up with people they normally wouldn't sit next to in class and "have fun." The Family Planning Institute is sitting on a gold mine. What else could help students give in to their already irresponsible inclinations? Perhaps free emergency money, but that idea is already taken — bank machines. How about free emergency parents or better yet, free emergency friends.

I'm not sure which is more disturbing to me. The fact that I read an ad that assumes that college students do not have the ability to be smart and protect themselves from a variety of consequences resulting from sex, or the fact that obviously the Family Planning Institute has reason to believe that the college student population will take advantage of their services.

Ironically, on Tuesday, the State Press reported that condom vending machines are back and better than ever. Will prevention be the choice of college students? Or will we give the "Morning After" pill a reason to be marketed to us?

Indifferent attitudes, selfishness contribute to AIDS fire

I shamefully admit it had been some time since I had pondered the complexities surrounding AIDS.

It was not that I didn't care, but simply that I had gotten busy and preoccupied with other things. My day-to-day encounters with AIDS and the people who had suffered at its merciless hand had become rare. Somehow, it seemed AIDS had become less real than the other elements in my life. It wasn't intentional, but somewhere along the line it had occurred. I grew numb.

Numb to the people whose lives were at stake because of an incurable disease. Numb to the urgency with which we must move toward stopping such an epidemic from continuing to spread and endure.

But Saturday, my apathy was struck with a bolt of reality. His name was Jerrime Day. His life touched mine. No, I didn't get to meet this fellow 20-year-old face-to-face. I never got to ask him when he first fell in love, who he always wanted to grow up to be like or what it was like for him to endure the humidity in Orlando where he lived and worked.

There are many things I probably will never have the chance to ask him or know about him. What I do know of Jerrime made me think critically about what's at the heart of the AIDS crisis right now.

We have a duty to each other to reciprocate hope and support, but we have been unwilling to do our part.

For some time now, either out of ignorance, apathy, fear or just plain self-absorption, I have been silently indifferent to the gravity of AIDS. Jerrime, who knowingly is HIV positive and sexually active, shares this quiet indifference. I have been unwilling to suggest that which would be most effective because it would be most offensive. And Jerrime has been unwilling to voluntarily do it because it would cost great personal sacrifice. Our reasons for silence contrast, but we are at fault in underestimating the true loss such indifference incurs.

I admit that it is far easier to see what someone else should do differently. It's easy to ask another to sacrifice for my benefit, rather than to return the favor.

But I believe our silences must be broken if there is to be any progress toward stopping AIDS, any true exchange of hope and support.

Last Wednesday, a judge ordered Jerrime to have future sex partners sign a consent form, acknowledging their awareness that he is HIV positive. This demand was imposed as part of a two-year probation for having sex with a woman without telling her about the virus.

Frankly, to think that Jerrime is still sexually active while fully knowing that he is contributing to the further spread of AIDS was alarming. I was glad that the court was attempting to protect others by demanding that Jerrime be open and honest. But silently, I was appalled to think that it was legally and publicly acceptable for Jerrime to continue being sexually active. Yet, I could see how extremely difficult and controversial it would be to boldly ask Jerrime to act otherwise. Such a clear-cut answer in reason did not fit so comfortably with my heart or my hormones.

What would it be like to have someone tell me I should never have sex? How incredibly lonely and alienated I would feel to know I must tell anyone who gets close to me that I have a contagious, deadly virus. How would I handle their reactions?

As heart-wrenching and real as his justifications may be, a more demanding one exists — the well-being and future of collective humanity.

While this higher calling is clearly justified, it seems cruel and heartless. It goes against our protected reverence for honoring individual rights. How could we be so hypocritical as to selfishly ask AIDS victims to act more selfless? Such complexities cloud our confidence in discerning what is the right thing to do. So we settle for comfortably continuing to turn all our attention back to the undeniably noble, yet uncertain hope in waiting for a cure. However, in resting in the efforts of medical research alone, we wait passively. So then what is our role?

Here is where people like me must have the courage to take on the far more difficult task of maintaining compassionate support for people like Jerrime, while breaking the polite silence to pursue those means which are truly effective. We must ask those with the AIDS virus to actively help protect others from following their fatal steps.

Victims like Jerrime who have continued to be sexually active with the virus must begin to think and act more selflessly. They must care enough about those they love that they will do everything in their power to protect — not endanger — others.

There is no question that the scale of sacrifice is unevenly tipped. The kind of selflessness required is more than most people would dare ask. Yet it is in this that we find the only true hope of quenching this horrific epidemic until the day a cure is found.

Students to present research

BY CHRIS KAHN
STATE PRESS

Ricardo Bien-Willner hurried past glass tubes teeming with fruit-fly larvae to turn down the Queensryche that blared from the radio. It's not often that reporters visit the place where he's spent 50 hours a week for the past three years.

Biology experiments take time. They're "kind of like cooking recipes," said Bien-Willner, a biomedical engineering senior. "At the end of the day, you expect a result, but there is always a chance that things will go wrong."

Undergraduates like Bien-Willner make contributions to science every day, and the Biology Education Program's Research Poster Symposium this Friday in the Life Science Center will give about 50 of them a chance to break from their research and present their findings.

The symposium will include experiments from departments across campus, ranging from anthropology to chemical engineering. Most of the projects presented at the symposium operate within the Biology Research Experience for Undergraduates Program (BREU), which has been functioning for the past five years to help students understand what working as a scientist, physician or engineer will be like through real experiences.

"The whole goal is to change how we teach science," said Heather Cate, the undergraduate program manager for the Department of Biology. "Not only involve them in undergraduate research, but to redesign our classes."

Because of BREU, biology classes now provide a larger focus on learning through experimentation, and faculty members have been retrained to emphasize critical-thinking techniques in their instruction.

"Without this, our undergraduates have little opportunity to do real research, and this has opened up the doors to so many of them," said Winifred Doane, Bien-Willner's project adviser and professor of biology.

The hours might be long and strenuous at times, but determination pays off. After years of studying new experimental techniques, changing methodologies and just plain frustration, Bien-Willner had a breakthrough. He identified a gene that affects sexual behavior in male fruit flies.

Until a few decades ago, genes were not even thought to influence behavior, Doane said, but this is a key discovery in a project that plans to show how DNA not only codes for physical characteristics like height and hair color, but for an individual's behavior as well.

Conducting independent research projects benefits students on a personal level as well.

"It's helping me decide more specifically what I want to do after graduation," said Jennie Rambo, a senior who will be presenting a poster on how forest fires affect plant diversity.

Congressman to speak at symposium

BY CHRIS KAHN
STATE PRESS

The first research physicist in Congress and chief sponsor of two anti-cloning bills, U.S. Representative Vernon J. Ehlers, R-Mich., will visit ASU Friday.

The congressman will be the keynote speaker at the Undergraduate Biology Education Program's Research Poster Symposium, at 3 p.m., in Life Sciences Room A191. He will also address students, faculty and staff at a special colloquium for the physics department at 4:30 p.m. in Physical Sciences Room F173. Both talks are open to the public.

Ehlers, the vice chairman of the House Science Committee, has been promoting legislation that would prohibit the use of federal funds for research on cloning humans.

"I personally believe that cloning of humans is unethical, immoral and something that should not be done," Ehlers said. Although opposed to human cloning, Ehlers said he is supportive of cloning plants, animals, cells and tissues for scientific purposes.

Questions about Ehler's visit can be referred to Heather Cate, program manager for the department of biology, at 965-5580.

ASU engineering students enter NASA design contest

BY BECKY BEVINS
STATE PRESS

A group of ASU's best and brightest engineers are reaching for the stars with a little help from NASA.

Dave Holmes, a mechanical engineering senior, will lead a group of 10 ASU engineering students in an April moon-buggy design competition.

"You can't imagine the satisfaction of building something and seeing it work," said Holmes. "It is the experience of a lifetime."

The NASA Space Grant is funding the project.

Holmes said his team is busy preparing for the NASA experience.

"Now that we have the design, we will travel to the Marshall Space Center in Huntsville, Ala. and race in competition with other schools," Holmes said. "If we win, our buggy will be displayed at the Space Center, and we will be allowed to watch a launch of the Space Shuttle."

The student-run team had a lot of help. "It's like having the best shop class with the coolest people in town," said Craig Haglin, a representative of Isuzu, who has volunteered his time and his backyard to the project.

Students volunteered long hours creating their vehicle.

"I would estimate that we have spent 360-plus hours developing this design," Holmes said. "There are just so many things that we have had to consider, since the obstacle course is much like the moon's surface."

"We couldn't have done it without Craig; he has given us so many ideas and techniques that have gotten us through. We have added a Honda transmission and a lawn tractor differential to help us out," Holmes said.

"This project is really about these students working together in the spirit of learning rather than in competition," said Helen Reed, the moon-buggy project's faculty advisor. "The amount of dedication that these students have shown is really remarkable and rewarding for everyone involved."

Scientists have discovered that living in cramped spaces may cause serious side effects, ranging from slightly paranoid to dangerously psychotic behavior.

In a recent experiment, lab rats were forced to live in small dorm-room like containers for several semesters, only coming out to eat in crowded rat cafeterias or share a bathroom with dozens of other rodents.

The majority of rats suffered from an acute case of irritability, while several showed signs of aggressive behavior, often snapping at

Experts have coined "over-cramping syndrome," or OCS. However, Dr. Schtinkenmeir also adds that "people have been subjected to worse conditions in the past, like the '70s for instance."

POLICE REPORT

ASU Police reported the following incidents Tuesday:

- A man was contacted at Ocotillo Hall, where he had become ill. Subject was transported to a local hospital.
- A man reported that someone unlawfully entered his vehicle and took a Qualcomm cellular phone.
- An employee reported that someone removed an editing controller from the Psychology Building.
- Various bike parts were impounded for safekeeping by ASU Police.
- An employee reported that she lost one key belonging to the University.
- A man was arrested on an outstanding warrant from the ASU Police Department. Subject was able to post bond and was released.

- A brown wallet for safekeeping turned in to the ASU Police Department. It was found by a telephone outside of the Stauffer Building.
- A black purse for safekeeping that was turned in as found property. The purse was found inside a classroom at the Classroom Office Building.
- A student and an adult male were involved in a bicycle and vehicle accident resulting in minor injuries at 31 E. Ninth St.
- A man reported that someone removed his bicycle from the bike racks on the north side of the Memorial Union, where it was secured with a lock.
- A student reported that someone removed his bicycle from the bike racks near Best Hall, where it was secured with a lock.
- A man was arrested, cited and released for criminal speeding at 1000 E. Rio Salado Parkway.

• A man was arrested, cited and released for possession of marijuana, possession of drug paraphernalia and driving on a suspended license at the 200 block of East University. The man was turned over to the Phoenix Police due to an outstanding warrant from the Phoenix City court. Also arrested at the same location was a woman. She was arrested for possession of dangerous drugs and was booked into Madison Street Jail for an outstanding fugitive-of-justice warrant from Chico, Calif.

• A man was arrested for possession of marijuana and unlawful use of a license on the south side of the Subway in Tempe Center. The man was booked into Madison Street Jail.

Oprah attorney clashes with expert on stand

By Mark Babineck
Associated Press

AMARILLO, Texas — A government expert's long-winded answers on the witness stand demonstrate why most of his comments about the safety of American beef were edited out of an Oprah Winfrey program, a lawyer for Winfrey suggested Wednesday.

In a $10.3 million beef-defamation suit against Winfrey, Texas cattlemen claim the program caused beef prices to fall to 10-year lows within a week. And they claim most pro-beef comments by William Hueston, a former Agriculture Department official, were purposefully edited out of the April 16, 1996 show.

But defense attorney Charles Babcock suggested Hueston's answers on the show — and in court — were long and hesitant and had to be edited because they were redundant.

"Isn't it a fact Oprah got the same kind of non-responsive answers that I'm getting out of you today?" Babcock asked.

As he's done with previous plaintiffs' witnesses, Babcock grew irritated when Hueston attempted to duck seemingly simple questions. Hueston often forced Babcock to use just the right phrasing before he'd answer.

Hueston asked whether he was required to give a yes-or-no reply. Babcock said he was, but Hueston again drew the attorney's ire with another roundabout response.

Hueston worked for the USDA in Washington when he appeared on the show to discuss whether mad cow disease was a threat to U.S. cattle.

During the show, a food-safety activist said the feeding of ground-up cattle parts back to cattle in this country could spread the human version of mad cow disease in the United States. Winfrey responded by swearing off hamburgers.

California nurses walk out at 54 facilities

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Registered nurses started a two-day strike Wednesday against 54 Kaiser Permanente medical facilities after contract talks broke down.

It was their fourth walkout since their contract expired last January.

Supervisors of Alameda and Contra Costa counties declared states of emergency because clinics and hospitals were filled to capacity, and San Francisco health officials ordered city hospitals to take critical-care patients even if they're full.

More than six hours of talks were held during the night in efforts to avert the strike by about 7,500 members of the California Nurses Association, who work at hospitals and clinics throughout Northern California.

The main point of contention is staffing; union officials claim Kaiser's cost-cutting tactics have hurt the quality of patient care.

Kaiser has offered a 2 percent a year raise for six years in the San Francisco Bay area and 2 percent a year to all Northern California nurses based on performance.

The Kaiser health maintenance organization serves one of every three Northern Californians with health insurance.

Six-pack to go: New Mexico may restrict drive-up liquor stores

By DOUG JOHNSON
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BERNALILLO, N.M. — When 5 p.m. rolls around and Art Jaramillo locks the front door to his liquor store, business at his neon-lit, drive-up window around the side swells.

His regular customers like the convenience, especially those who might be turned away under the glare of the store's inside lights for looking too tipsy.

"When I'm drunk, I want to go home, not to convenience stores where there are lights and people can smell me," said George, a customer who gave only his first name. "So I go to the drive-up because it's close to my house and I won't get hassled."

With the nation's highest rate of alcohol-related traffic deaths, New Mexico is slowing down to take another look at the state's 235 drive-up windows.

A bipartisan group of lawmakers has introduced a proposal in the Legislature to let New Mexico communities vote individually on whether to ban drive-up alcohol sales, something that has been around for decades.

Supporters say the measure could reduce drunken driving and the number of teen-agers buying alcohol illegally.

The Legislature tried to pass a similar bill during each of the past three years, but Attorney General Tom Udall said the prospects are very good this year.

"Part of the reason I say that is, the evidence is increasing that the drive-up windows contribute significantly to our alcohol problems in New Mexico," Udall said. "While we have that support we should strike while the iron is hot and get it done. We could end up waiting around for years going for an outright ban."

Despite lowering the blood-alcohol limit to 0.08 percent five years ago, New Mexico still leads the nation in per-capita alcohol-related traffic deaths. It had 11.79 deaths per 100,000 people in 1996 — 19 percent higher than the next-highest state, Mississippi.

Mississippi is not among the two dozen states that have drive-up liquor sales. And experts do not blame drive-up liquor windows alone for New Mexico's drunken-driving problem. They say a high alcoholism rate and a cultural custom of drinking and driving also contribute.

Also, the problem is compounded by long distances between towns, an alcohol ban on Indian reservations that forces many people to hit the road for a drink, and the fact that drunken driving wasn't even a felony in New Mexico until 1993.

While the Legislature debates the fate of drive-up liquor sales, store owners say they are tired of being blamed for the state's drunken-driving problem.

"We can't be responsible for all of the problems on the highways," said Dennis Salazar, owner of Saints & Sinners Liquors in Espanola. Salazar said 95 percent of his business is done through the window, and shutting it would put him out of business.

Joey Di Gregorio, president of three supermarkets in Gallup, said no liquor sellers went out of business after McKinley County banned drive-up sales in 1991.

McKinley County is the only locality authorized by law to hold such an election. The Legislature gave it the right because of its history of alcohol-related auto wrecks and people passing out drunk and dying of exposure.

READY RESERVE

With ASU hurting at guard, junior Tom provides spark

BY RANDY JONES
STATE PRESS

Michelle Tom has been here before. When adversity struck the ASU women's basketball team, the junior has answered the call and stepped into the starting rotation.

And what did the 5-foot-8 point guard do when given the chance?

Well, the first time, she hit two three-pointers in the last 10 seconds of ASU's 77-76 win over the then-undefeated and No. 7-ranked Washington Huskies.

One of those shots was a buzzer-beater which was one of CNN/SI's Plays of the Day for Jan. 8.

Not bad for someone who was not eligible to play only three weeks earlier.

The second time came against Oregon on Saturday.

Tom chipped in nine points and five assists, but this time, a battered Sun Devil squad was no match for the healthy Duck attack, losing 100-61.

Tonight, ASU will hope the third time is the charm, as the sharp-shooter from Winslow will get her third career start, and the challenge is steep — No. 9 Stanford, bullies of the Pac-10.

Tip-off is scheduled for 7:00 p.m. at the University Activity Center. COX Sports (Channel 22) will broadcast the game.

But Tom is not intimidated by the odds against the injury-depleted Sun Devils pulling off the upset.

"Ever since I was a little kid it's always been Stanford (at the top)," she said. "I think this is one year where it would be great to knock them off, especially at home. Our biggest thing that we focus on is our defense."

"Playing against a top-ranked team that's what we need to do because we know we can't outscore them. We don't have that. We have to use our defense to force turnovers, that's what gives us more possession of the ball, that's what we need."

"Keeping the ball away from the post players of the Cardinal, and defending them tight when they do get the ball, will be key," head coach Charlie Turner Thorne said.

The starting three of forwards — Vanessa Nygaard, Olympia Scott and center Heather Owen average 43.1 points and 19.5 rebounds per game. Add forward Kristin Folkl to the mix and the post is contributing over 60 points and almost 30 rebounds each contest.

Folkl has been a key to the Cardinal's recent resurgence. The mighty Stanford squad started the season at 2-4, but has been 8-1 since her return from leading the Stanford volleyball team to its second straight national championship.

"Kristin is a gifted athlete and we are excited that she decided to play basketball again," Stanford coach Tara VanDerveer said. "Kristin adds to the depth and the versatility of our forward position."

That depth is an obstacle which could spell doom for the Sun Devils.

But, dealing with adversity has become commonplace for Tom. Her college career has experienced as many up-and-downs as a minor league baseball player in New York Yankees' general manager George Steinbrenner's dog house.

Heavily recruited in high school, Tom tore the anterior cruciate ligament in her right knee during her junior season. The Division I offers dried up soon after.

Tom came back strong, winning player-of-the-year honors her senior year, but as she described it — "I wasn't where I needed to be to play Division I."

So off to Division II Grand Canyon University she trekked.

After one season of not much action, Tom felt the itch for another shot at Division I.

To do so, exposure was needed, so Tom played a season at Phoenix College. There she picked up where her high school days left off.

Tom was named 1996 Division II Player-of-the-Year, averaging 19 points, six assists and 8.6 rebounds a game.

Next up for Tom was Central Florida.

After meeting and getting to like CF head coach Jerry Richardson, Tom felt she had found a new home.

However, Richardson died from injuries suffered in a car wreck just weeks before the season began, leaving Tom alone.

"He was really the only person I knew there," she said. "So I came back home ... and things have worked out really well."

Turner Thorne, who recruited Tom while head coach at NAU, said she knew Tom could score, but she has been pleased with the way her defense has come along.

"Shelly's strengths are really her ability to be a scoring point guard. She has good court vision. She sees the open pass, and if you try to overplay her and take away the pass she'll hit the open three," Turner Thorne said. "I think her defense started off as sort of a weak area and has become solid. ... As a result of her hard work."

The coach added that because of the rash of injuries lately, including the loss of freshman Ebony Edwards (ACL), one-game losses of seniors Rameeka Lowe and Stephanie Freeman and the indefinite loss of Rechelle Lang, Tom's excellent defensive play has been a blessing.

"She has really had to pick up a huge defensive role," Turner Thorne said. "As other people have gotten hurt, she is the one filling in for all those guys."

And Tom is more than happy to do it. Getting a chance to play big-time college basketball was always something she strived for — and now has achieved.

Thinking back on her time spent on ASU's bench during the first half of the semester, she said this is what she wanted.

"I've felt frustrated ever since I left junior college. That was the hardest thing just waiting to play. Sitting on the bench I remember being in awe of the Pac-10 players."

"It's just a dream come true."

BUZZER BEATERS:

•The Sun Devils have lost 10 straight to the Cardinal. The last ASU victory came in 1992, with a 77-65 victory at the University Activity Center.

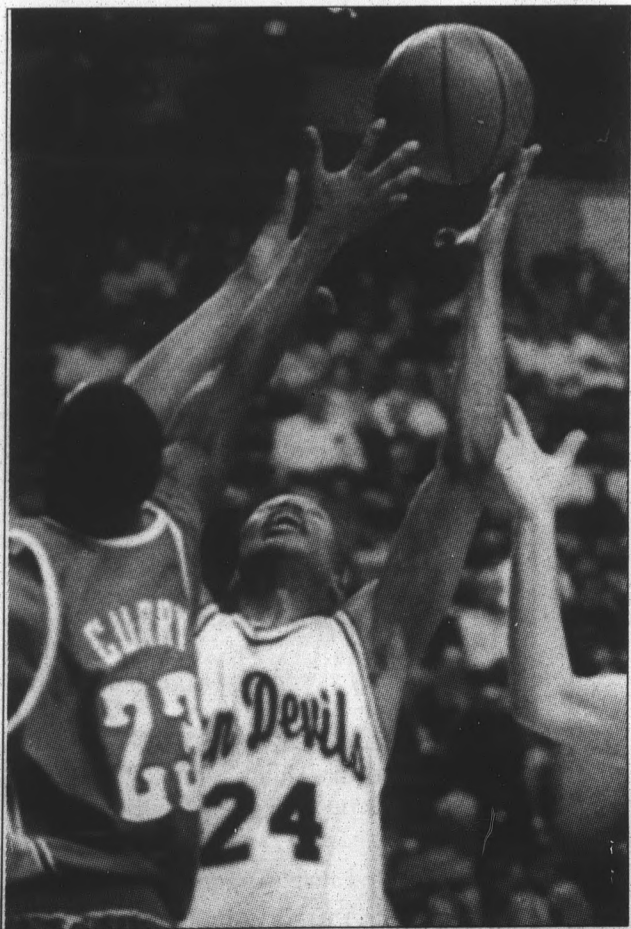

•ASU has already equaled its Pac-10 win total from last season (3) and needs only two more wins to tie its overall total (9) from last season.

•Senior guard Stephanie Freeman moved to No. 3 all-time in career steals against Oregon on Saturday with 199 thefts.

•Stanford has been ranked in the Associated Press poll every week since the beginning of the 1987-88 season.

Forward Mike Batiste (24), seen here battling for a rebound in a game earlier this season, will be counted on heavily for his post play tonight when the Sun Devils play a bigger Cal team in Oakland at 8:30.

ASU battles Cal for fifth place in Pac

BY MATT PAULSON
STATE PRESS

While an opportunity to upset a top-five team and re-establish itself as "the story of the year" in college basketball awaits the ASU men's team on Saturday, an even more important contest will confront the Sun Devils tonight.

With sole possession of fifth place in the Pac-10 being claimed by the winner, ASU (13-7, 3-4 Pac-10) will be in Oakland for an 8:30 p.m. tilt with the Cal Golden Bears (7-8, 3-4).

KTAR 620 AM will broadcast the game from the New Arena.

The Sun Devils will face No. 4 Stanford (18-0, 7-0) Saturday at 4 p.m. on Fox Sports Net.

ASU interim head coach Don Newman said his team must win on the road if it intends to play more than just the 11 games remaining on its schedule.

"It's going to be critical for us to win some games we should win and maybe a few we shouldn't win," Newman said. "Everything we need to do is not going to happen at home. We have an opportunity to steal some on the road and that's what we need to do."

Although some of the matchups could get ugly for ASU, the biggest concern Newman said he had in this game is his team's play in the final minutes.

"I've been adamant about that," Newman said. "There's going to be a point in that game where you feel you can go at the jugular and put teams away. I'm worried now about how I can get this team to the second half and the last five minutes with an opportunity to win."

"In terms of matching up, I'm going into this game knowing (guard Thomas) Kilgore, (forward Michael) Gill and (guard Geno) Carlisle in that lineup are taking Cal's program to another level. That's on the parameter and we matchup well there with (guard Jeremy) Veal, (guard Ahlon) Lewis and (guard/forward Jason) Patton.

"Now we can't go in and let (center Kenyon) Jones and (forward Sean) Marks have career games against us."

If Cal goes big on ASU, its front line of Jones (6-10), Marks (6-foot-11) and Fansisco Elson (7-0) could put ASU in a severe bind down low. The Sun Devils' tallest answer would consist of a Urit Kelly (6-6), Mike Batiste (6-8) and Bobby Lazor (6-9).

Lewis, though, said smart defense should allow ASU to overcome any size problems.

"We're just looking forward to letting our defense win for us," Lewis said. "We're not too concerned about putting up (big) numbers on the board like we were in the past. We're going to focus on our defense and let that dictate the game for us."

While injuries were a concern to Newman earlier in the week, it appears the team is now much healthier. Forward Urit Kelly, who has suffered from shin splints for the past month and a half, was involved in all practice drills Wednesday.

It was the first time in nearly two weeks that he has done more than ride a bike and shoot free throws.

Still, though, Lewis' bruised right shoulder continues to be a factor.

"It's just getting my arm above my head and following through on my shot that is causing the problem," Lewis said. "I'm just playing through it. I've played with pain before so I'm really not too worried about it. I just don't want to get caught with a blind side."

Frosh brings high-caliber tennis to No. 8 Sun Devils

By LORI HARO
STATE PRESS

The ASU women's tennis team lost an experienced player this semester when junior Torey Pratt left the team, leaving head coach Sheila McInerney to face the season with a small squad of seven.

However, McInerney didn't have to go looking for another player to take Pratt's spot and didn't plan to. Instead freshman Karin Palme came looking for her.

"The situation is that we had Torey Pratt leaving at semester (break), and we were short a person," McInerney said. "To get somebody in at all is fortunate, and to get somebody as good as Karin, we were lucky."

McInerney had actually heard of Palme this past summer when a former UCLA player faxed her some information on Palme. Then Palme sent more information to McInerney including all of her results from tournaments she had played in.

McInerney made the decision to have Palme on the team, even before ever seeing her play.

"To be honest I never saw Karin play, how amazing is that," McInerney said. "She sent me all her results and they were good. She played the No. 1 kid from Cal and beat her. She played a lot of people I was familiar with, and if she didn't beat them, the matches were really close. So we had a feeling of what caliber she was at."

Palme also visited Pepperdine and the UofA. Both schools offered her a scholarship, and even though ASU did not have a scholarship to offer, she decided to become a Sun Devil.

"Pepperdine is so nice, like Club Med," the 20-year-old said. "I picked here though, mostly because I liked the coach, and the climate and the Pac-10. I wanted to play tough matches."

Palme isn't the typical freshman player as she brings a lot of experience to ASU's team, with some top-notch performances behind her.

Jeremy Hein/State Press

Although she is only a freshman, Karin Palme, who joined the women's tennis team this semester, brings much needed experience to the nation's No. 8 squad.

Palme has competed in the junior tournaments of Wimbledon, the U.S. Open and French Open. Palme has also played in the Pan American Games in Argentina and Mexico's Federation Cup.

Palme began playing tennis at the age of 10 and began playing in local tournaments when she was 13.

"I just loved it from the first time," Palme said. "I've had my coach from Mexico since I was 13, he's been teaching me until now and he's really close."

Palme started playing in national tournaments soon after and was No. 1 in the 16-year-old and then No. 1 again in the 18-year-old and under divisions in Mexico.

"This summer I played pro tournaments and I had a world ranking," said Palme, who was born in Mexico City but grew up in Guadalajara, Mexico. "In November I think I was No. 360 in singles and No. 270 in doubles, but I don't know what it is now since I haven't played in any pro tournaments."

Palme cites winning the Pan American Games and an 18-and-under tournament, a $10,000 competition in Mexico City, as the highlights of her tennis career as of yet. (However, as an amateur she wasn't eligible for the cash prize.) Still she is looking forward to playing college tennis, especially for ASU.

And ASU is glad to have her.

"She's doing awesome," teammate Katy Propstra said. "She's just a great player and she's fit in quite well, it seems like she's been here all year."

ASU opened their season last weekend beating both Pepperdine University and Northwestern University. Palme won both of her singles matches beating Pepperdine's Angela Lawrence 7-5, 6-1 at the No. 3 spot in the lineup, and Northwestern's Shannon Duffy 7-6 (5), 6-3 at the No. 2 spot in the lineup.

Palme also won her doubles match against Pepperdine's Nadine Rastetter and Yael Tobi 8-1 with teammate Reka Cseresnyes.

"I'm concentrating on the team tournaments and to do good for ASU," Palme said. "My goals are to be good on the team, to play my best and to give 100 percent in everything."

With an attitude like that, it is no wonder why McInerney is so optimistic about her.

"She's got a good attitude, she's really spunky and she's got a lot of moxie about her," McInerney said. "She's going to make our team better, there is no question about that."
