Student's rape 1st case of semester

BY CADONNA PEYTON
STATE PRESS

A 19-year-old freshman student was raped in her residence hall Sunday morning by an acquaintance she saw at a party earlier that evening, said Police Chief Lanny Standridge.

The rape occurred around 4:30 a.m. at Palo Verde West after a party near campus.

After the party, the victim and her friends went back to her room and watched TV, Standridge said. Her friends left and the suspect remained.

"Apparently she fell asleep and when she awoke, she was being assaulted," Standridge said, adding that both the victim and the suspect had been drinking.

After the assault she went to see some friends who contacted the police.

The victim was taken to Tempe Saint Luke's Hospital where she was examined and released.

"A female detective interviewed and talked with her at the hospital and another detective is working with her to identify the suspect," Standridge said.

She did not know the suspect's last name and police do not know if he is affiliated with the university, Standridge added.

Standridge said police are hoping to identify the individual soon, however no formal complaint has been made.

"The victim is still trying to decide whether to aid in prosecution," he said.

This is the first rape reported since the semester officially started on Jan. 20. Two ASU students reported being raped last semester.

Lectures highlight religious diversity

BY TIMOTHY TAIT
STATE PRESS

Some wear cloth draped over their faces or small caps on the back of their head. Others are gone from class on seemingly insignificant days while some students refuse to eat certain foods during the year.

On a campus as diverse as ASU, religious differences are obvious. Different clothes, mannerisms and customs can make some religions stand out and can lead to misunderstandings and jokes by those who don't understand the differences.

"Religion seems to be one of those things that divides people the most," said Autumn Ness, Associated Students of ASU activities vice president. "There is little tolerance of other beliefs or customs. It's better on campus, because most people are more educated, but there is still a division of understanding."

ASASU, Student Life and the International Student Office are sponsoring a series of lectures to expose students to the diversity found in the religions of the world and on campus. The first talk, "How the World Worships," will be presented 3:30 p.m. Thursday in the Memorial Union Pima Room. Law Professor David Kader will discuss "How the World Worships" with information on religions of the world and the U.S. Constitution.

"It's more of a series to get people to understand more about the diversity of religions and how different people take their spirituality," Ness said. "There is a lot of misconception and stereotypes because people seldom understand different religious beliefs."

Within a decade, Americans will be in frequent contact with non-Christian religions, according to current U.S. Census reports. Data from December estimates that the United States is home to 800,000 Hindus, compared to 70,000 in 1977, and as many Muslims as Presbyterians.

Research released in a recent issue of the Chronicle of Higher Education says students on college campuses nationwide are more interested in learning about religion and spirituality.

Religion seems to be one of those things that divides people the most.

— Autumn Ness,

activities vice president

"That article seems to point to the fact that students want to know more about religion and spirituality. That seems to be a trend with students," said Suzanne Steadman, executive director of the International Student Office. "Students are interested in examining their own faiths. We wanted to provide a program that would benefit students in their personal development."

The series of lectures on religious history, practice and policy grew from a program developed for international students on understanding Native American spiritualism, Steadman said.

"International students were especially interested in the religious customs of the Native Americans," Steadman said. "We took a look at they way they think and how they interact with their world. We are not giving away any of the secrets of their religious beliefs, just how they view the world around them and their spiritual connection to the earth."

David Damrel, lecturer in the Department of Religious Studies, will speak

Debate brings students closer to city's candidates

BY MONICA J. AGUIRRE
STATE PRESS

Tempe mayoral and city council candidates will be coming to ASU Wednesday to debate issues concerning students.

"It will be good to see students involved in elections," said Erik Noland, assistant public relations director for the Associated Students of ASU. "They can feel like their vote will make a difference."

Mayor Neil Giuliano and his competitor Jay Mansperger, both former ASU students, will debate at 8 p.m. in the Arizona Room of the Memorial Union.

Current city council members, Linda Spears, Carol Smith and Ben Arredondo will debate challengers Fritz Tuffli, Hugh Hallman, Len Copple, Rich Bank and Richard Erdmann.

The debate, which is sponsored by ASASU and the Memorial Union Activities Board, will open with four set questions for the candidates to state their platform. The audience will then be able to ask questions.

"Tempe is where we all live right now," said Eddie Ableser, city affairs coordinator for ASASU. "There's a lot of issues we've got to raise."

The rental housing code is another issue affecting ASU students.

"Tempe is the only city in Arizona that charges a tax on your rent," said Kurt Hesse, MUAB Vice President. "There are a lot of people worked up about that."

The Rio Salado project, another major issue, was introduced by students from the ASU School of Architecture 26 years ago and has been adopted by the city of Tempe. The city intends to construct hotels and shops along the dry Salt River near Priest Road and the 202 freeway.

Students are interested in where the money is coming from and what exactly is going to be there, Hesse said.

"Whether you're a voter or not, everyone that goes to ASU has a large interest about what's going on around Tempe," Hesse said.

TODAY

Campus clubs and organizations may submit written entries to the State Press in the basement of the Matthews Center. Requests will not be taken over the phone or via fax.

Deadline for requests is noon the day before publication and entries will not be accepted more than three working days before publication. Only one entry per organization per day is permitted.

Entries must contain the full name of the club or organization, a description of the event, date, time and the full address of the location. All requests are subject to editing for content, space and clarity. Incomplete or illegible entries will be discarded.

The Today Section is a daily calendar of events printed as a service to the ASU community. Requests are accepted on a first-come, first-served basis and are printed as space permits.

Shooter at wedding kills one, wounds four others

PHOENIX (AP) — A quiet backyard wedding reception was shattered by a gunman who burst through a gate and opened fire, killing a bridesmaid and wounding four other people.

Dora Flores, 19, died after being taken off life support Sunday night at Maricopa Medical Center, police said.

She was shot in the head by the intruder, who fled the scene in a car after spraying the yard with bullets about 10 p.m. Saturday.

Sgt. Mike Torres, a spokesman for Phoenix police, said a motive for the shootings was not immediately clear and authorities had no immediate suspects.

But family members told Tribune Newspapers that they fear the shootings were in retaliation for the 1996 shooting deaths of a man, his wife and his 20-year-old daughter.

According to court records, the groom's brother is in jail awaiting trial on charges in the case.

Wounded Saturday were Jessie Chavez, 25, and Seferino Castenada, 74, both relatives of the groom, and Dolores Montoya, 29, and Sofia Rodriguez, 14, both relatives of the bride.

All were treated for their injuries and released except for Chavez, who was listed in good condition today at Good Samaritan Medical Center.

Flores was a bridesmaid for her 24-year-old cousin, Gregory Rodriguez, who married Melissa Flores, 24.

The reception was at the south Phoenix home of Rodriguez's brother, Anthony.

Family members said partygoers had spent the past two or three hours drinking lightly, dancing to Spanish music and hip hop, when they heard close to a dozen shots.

When the firing stopped, Dora Flores was lying face-down on the ground.

"I rolled over and saw her forehead," said Melissa Rodriguez, Dora Flores' sister. "I couldn't believe it. I gave her CPR. I just wanted her to breathe. I wanted her to get up."

Dora Flores left behind two children — a 2-year-old boy and an 8-month-old girl. She had just taken a test for her high school equivalency diploma and was working at an electronics parts company.

Congress, American resistance rises against air

By DAVID BRISCOE
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Opposition to bombing Iraq is gaining ground as Congress struggles over how far it should go in supporting military action. Catholics and Protestants, former military and intelligence officers, longtime anti-war groups and Arab Americans say air attacks would do little more than kill Iraqis.

Opponents are scattered across the political spectrum. Some insist the bombing wouldn't go far enough, including conservative Republicans on Capitol Hill who believe the ultimate goal should be to remove Saddam Hussein from power.

Others fear a U.S. attack would go too far, killing thousands of innocent Iraqi civilians, destroying Mideast peace efforts, and bypassing Congress in making war on another nation — all to punish the Iraqi president.

Rep. Lee Hamilton, D-Ind., one of the capital's most respected foreign affairs voices, said he backs Clinton's Iraqi policy but doesn't think force would diminish the threat of Iraq's weapons or its ability to threaten its neighbors.

"The administration, I think, has a very heavy responsibility now to articulate with very great precision what our purposes are in Iraq," Hamilton told Secretary of State Madeleine Albright, who trooped to Capitol Hill nearly every day last week to talk about Iraq.

To bolster support, President Clinton plans a speech Tuesday at the Pentagon to make the case for why the United States may launch air strikes on suspected chemical, biological and nuclear weapons making sites in Iraq, which Saddam has ruled off limits to U.N. inspectors. His foreign policy team, including Albright, Defense Secretary William Cohen and National Security Adviser Sandy Berger, will hold town hall meetings this week in Ohio and Tennessee.

The one thing bombing opponents and proponents have in common with Clinton is abhorrence of Saddam, who had agreed after the 1991 Persian Gulf War to allow U.N. inspections to ensure he didn't rebuild his nonconventional war machine.

Those feelings initially translated into strong congressional support for Clinton. But support wavered last week, with Republicans and Democrats raising questions about what an airstrike could accomplish and at what cost. A supportive resolution was put off until Congress returns from a break next week.

A few members of Congress strongly oppose Clinton's Iraq policy.

Conservative Rep. Ron Paul, R-Texas, last week introduced emergency legislation to stop Clinton from using force in the Gulf.

"There is absolutely no moral or constitutional reason to go to war with Iraq at this time," said Paul, a former Air Force flight surgeon.

A liberal, Rep. Cynthia McKinney, D-Ga., also balked, saying, "How many people are we going to kill this time just because we don't want to set a precedent for having a country dictate ... who can do an inspection?"

And Sen. Bob Smith, R-N.H., who is trying to build support for a 2000 presidential campaign, said Monday in Iowa that Clinton has lost "moral authority" to order military action. Citing the president's strong denials of an alleged affair with a White House intern, Smith said: "If he can't tell me the truth about this, is he telling the truth about Iraq?"

Beyond the capital, opposition also is growing.

All seven active U.S. Roman Catholic cardinals cautioned in a letter to Clinton that bombings could be impossible to justify. About one-fifth of the National Catholic Conference of Bishops already had signed on to a campaign to end U.S.-led sanctions against Iraq.

On Monday, the executive board of the National Council of the Churches of Christ, meeting in New York, approved a letter to Clinton urging the president to seek a diplomatic solution. The board includes more than 40 representatives of 32 mainstream Protestant and Orthodox Christian denominations.

Two former CIA directors who served under Clinton joined a different sort of opposition chorus, advocating more than airstrikes.

"The problem with Iraq will not be solved by an air campaign," former CIA Director John Deutch said. His predecessor, James Woolsey, criticized Clinton's "flaccid responses" and advocated a combination of bombs, support for Iraqi opposition groups and imposition of a countrywide no-fly zone over Iraq.

Sam Hussein of the American-Arab Anti-Discrimination Committee criticized the news media for holding Clinton up to intense scrutiny on the allegations of a sexual relationship with former White House intern Monica Lewinsky while "rationales for the Iraq policy go unchallenged."

He said Arab Americans are baffled by the kind of diplomacy Clinton is conducting and the disregard for Iraqi casualties.

"Comply or die — that's not diplomacy," Hussein said. "This isn't Wag the Dog. The blood will be real," he added.

Plane plows Taipei neighborhood; 205 reported dead

By CHRISTOPHER BODEEN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

TAIPEI, Taiwan — A China Airlines jet trying to land in fog crashed in a country neighborhood Monday, knocking the roofs off houses before skidding into a rice paddy and exploding in flames. Authorities said all 196 aboard and nine people on the ground were killed.

Firefighters went house to house in the blackened neighborhood, putting out the flames licking doors and windows and searching for survivors. Searchlights illuminated a life raft from the Airbus A-300, wrapped around a broken tree stump. Seats from the plane were scattered in the dirt, one with a body trapped beneath it.

China Airlines said the dead among the 182 passengers and 14 crew members included the governor of Taiwan's Central Bank and other key financial officials; many Taiwanese families returning from vacations in Bali; and four Americans. Victims on the ground included a 2-month-old baby.

Witnesses said the airliner hit hundreds of yards short of the runway at Chiang Kai-shek airport, 25 miles west of Taipei. It tore through the second floors of homes strung along a highway before sliding to a stop in flames.

"I heard a blast, and was scared to death. Parts of the house started to fall down," said Chen Ah-mei, who had to crawl out of the ruins of her home on her hands and knees. She and her husband were being treated at a hospital.

"It happened so fast — noise and fire," said an elderly farmer who ran to the scene as soon as he saw the flames. He identified himself only as Chen.

The fiery impact scattered charred bodies and body parts along the road and throughout the sparsely populated area, home to fish farms, small factories and warehouses. The smell of jet fuel and burning rubber lingered hours after the crash. Only the tail of the broken, burned jet was recognizable.

Authorities sealed off the neighborhood, leaving families of passengers to congregate at hospitals and the airport. Relatives broke into tears and fell into one another's arms as the extent of the disaster hit them; one woman collapsed to the floor.

"They all went to Bali on a trip — and they are all dead," said a woman whose four children were on the flight.

Tsai Twei, director of the Civil Aeronautics Administration, resigned to take moral responsibility for the crash, which was the worst in the airport's history. It came after Taiwan's flagship carrier embarked on an extensive safety campaign in the wake of a 1994 crash in Japan that claimed 264 lives.

Airport officials said two flight data recorders were recovered and were being analyzed to help determine the cause of the accident.

The twin-engine Airbus went down as it attempted to land on a second approach at 8:09 p.m. local time at the airport's northern runway, Taipei-based China Airlines said.

Heavy fog was reported around the airport throughout the afternoon and evening, and a light rain was falling at the time of the crash.

The plane had been asked to make the second approach due to poor visibility, said Hamilton Liu, a China Airlines spokesman. Earlier, the Civil Aeronautics Administration had said the visibility was reported to be adequate.

Vice Transportation Minister Chen Shih-chi said the pilot's overall line of descent was too low, but it was not clear why.

Safety derived from numbers, not whistles

ASASU, ASU Police and student safety advocates are working together to reform the as-yet unsuccessful Community Based Policing Program. The goal of the program is to create a community-wide initiative to improve campus security issues.

A noble cause — sounds good so far.

After their first meeting Thursday, the group came up with a new program idea, their first effort in reviving campus accountability and ending apathy.

And the program is ... drum roll, please ...

The Whistle Program.

Yes, the ASU community can heave a sigh of relief and sleep easier at night knowing that our student government and police force are hard at work, coming up with innovative and original ways to fight campus crime and increase safety.

The clue phone is ringing — please answer it.

The Whistle Program would work like this: as many people as possible would be given a whistle, which is only to be used in the event of witnessing, or being victim to, a crime. Understanding the correlation between hearing a whistle and knowing a crime is being committed, ASU community members will therefore contact DPS, and community accountability will be created.

Yeah, right.

The potential for this program to backfire is infinite. How likely is it that people will never blow the whistles given to them unless they are in danger? How likely is it that people, upon hearing a whistle, will seek out and help?

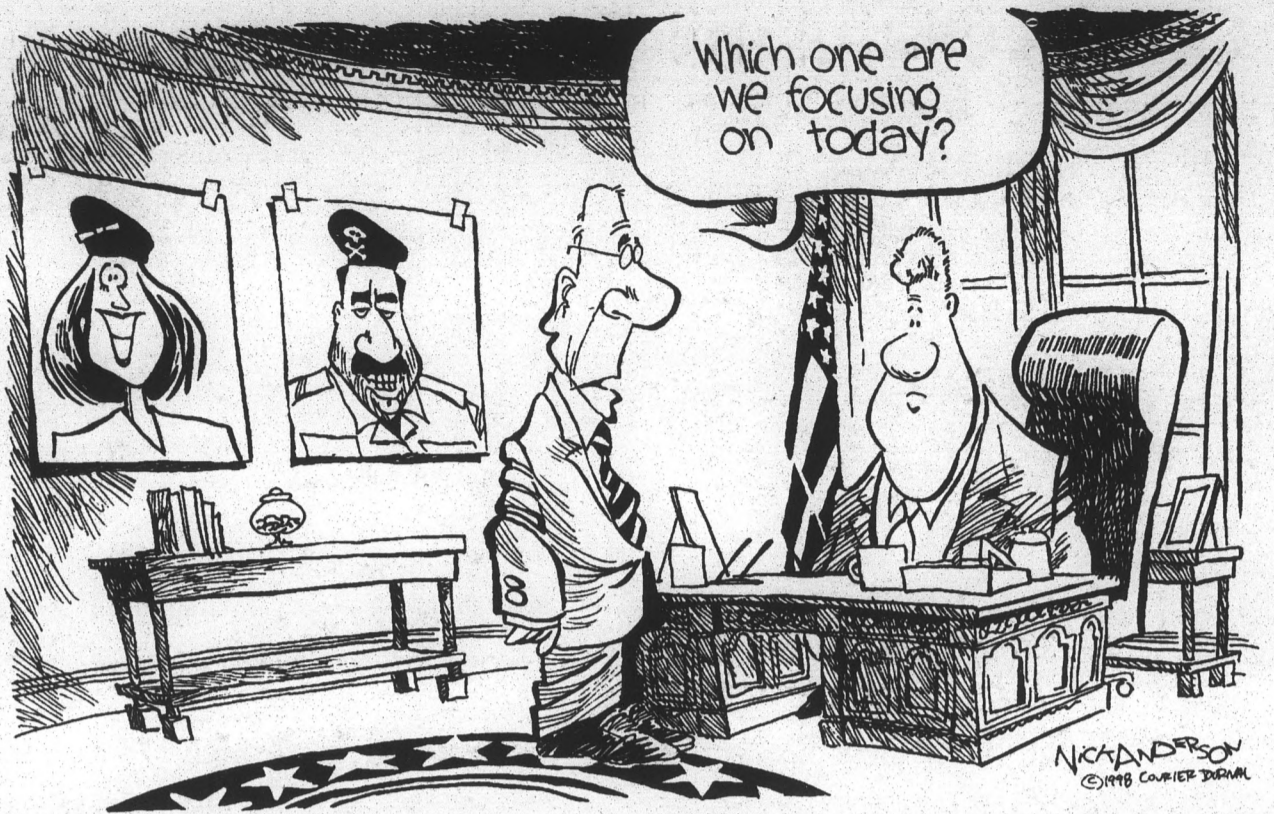

It's likely this program will create apathy equal to the apathy felt upon hearing a blaring car alarm — someone could be committing a crime, but it's more than likely a false alarm, so it's more of a nuisance than a warning sign.

Furthermore, in order to implement this program, $1,000 would be needed from both the Residence Hall Association and ASASU. That money could see much better uses than purchasing whistles.

For the record, we do appreciate the efforts of the committee in trying to improve security and community on campus. However, it does seem that this Whistle Program is a red herring, a way of appearing to do something, while still avoiding the problem.

In order to increase campus awareness and security, there needs to be a sense of community. To build community, people need to feel they have commonalities that bind them together. On this campus, there is such an emphasis made on diversity and pride within individual groups, be it ethnic, religious, gender, and so on, that the big picture suffers. Maybe what we need is a renewed focus on the ASU community as a whole.

It is great to appreciate our differences, but we need to remember the one thing we have in common: we are Sun Devils. Rebuild Sun Devil Pride, and maybe the ASU community will take care of our own.

Affirmative-action programs still needed

In my realm of very limited experiences as a white, middle-class woman, I don't think I have ever been discriminated against on the basis of sex. Because of these experiences, it has always, until very recently, been difficult for me to understand the need for affirmative-action programs. It had never occurred to me that my experiences may not be universal or even, perhaps, short-lived.

MEGHAN GAYNOR
Guest Columnist

Affirmative-action programs have been around since the mid-1960s, and although they have helped women and minorities break into the work force, it is imperative to understand that discrimination still occurs. From the time we (women and minorities) graduate college and enter the job market, something very disturbing will happen. We will be paid less money for equal work and be under-represented in positions of power and authority.

Recently, the Affirmative Action Bill (which, ironically, proposes to ban affirmative-action programs from state institutions) has passed into the full senate. It is upsetting the bill has made it this far. If affirmative-action programs are no longer necessary, if discrimination is a problem of the past, why do women and minorities continue to make less money and work under the authority of white men?

On ASU's campus alone the percent of female employees is 49.3 percent, and yet only 30.7 percent of the faculty are women. The percent of female minorities is extremely low, representing only 9 percent of the total campus work force. At the full professor level, only 10.3 percent of women have salaries above $75,000, whereas 23.4 percent of the men do. At the associate-professor level, 21.3 percent of the women have salaries above $50,000, as opposed to 40.6 percent of the men. At the assistant-professor level, 58.9 percent of the women have salaries below the $40,000 level, whereas it's only 38.3 percent for men.

The affects of discrimination are not limited to this campus alone; the firm rip of inequality is felt throughout the country. While women and minorities make up 57 percent of the Fortune 2,000 work force, they hold only 5 percent of the senior-management jobs. Women are only 8.6 percent of engineers and 23 percent of practicing attorneys. Women and minorities comprise 66 percent of the U.S. population, and yet are only 35 percent of physicians, 20 percent of tenured professors, and 6 percent of school superintendents.

Women are now more than half of the population, and the number of minorities continue to grow. It is crucial that we be represented in the work force; homogeneity is detrimental to everyone. For example, many women feel uncomfortable being physically examined by male doctors. People deserve options. Without affirmative-action programs, there could easily be none.

Affirmative action is often confused with quotas. Quotas are illegal. Affirmative action is giving qualified people, who otherwise might be discouraged, an opportunity to succeed. It acknowledges that not everyone has been given the same opportunities in life, that not everyone has been able to attend good schools and be acknowledged in their classrooms. Affirmative action isn't waiting around to see if discrimination will occur — it's taking action to make sure it doesn't.

For the many who have never felt the sting of discrimination, it is difficult to understand why affirmative-action programs are necessary. But if you are a woman or a minority or both, chances are, by the time you graduate from college, you will begin to feel the affects of inequality. Until women and minorities are represented properly in the work force and earn equal pay for equal work, affirmative-action programs continue to be indispensable.

Imagination thrives

In reply to Wednesday's letter, "Festival celebrates dark period," it is a shame some people are so closed-minded and seem to have lost that magic spark called "imagination." Being interested in the Arizona Renaissance Festival for many years and finally working there this year, I have seen smiles of wonder from two-year-olds to 80-year-olds. When you observe the joy these patrons feel, it is one of the most satisfying feelings of accomplishment possible. Participants don't just work there for money, or free food or even the gatherings of campers after the gates close. Many of us work there because we enjoy letting people see another world that otherwise is lost to them. Haven't you ever wondered, even if it was years ago, if any of those fairy tales just might have been true? Do you remember what imagination feels like? Every single person on this earth needs some way to escape once in a while — be it reading a book, taking a vacation, drawing, what have you. The Arizona Renaissance Festival provides a temporary relief from our world of skyscrapers, business suits, and smog for patrons and participants alike. So, if you decide to go, feel free to point out this or that which you think is fake or think is missing. But do everyone else a favor and do it quietly. There is no need to disturb those around you who still wonder about King Arthur and dragons — those who still have a spark of imagination to brighten their lives.

AIMS test prepares

After reading the opposing views of columnists Michelle Craig and Amber Knuth, on the Arizona Student Achievement Program's exit test (AIMS) to measure high school student's mathematic, reading and writing skills, I am in strong agreement with Ms. Knuth. It is truly a shame that high school seniors are thrust out into the harsh realities of college, and then the competitive and often unfair job market in the United States. Why on earth would we give these children one more hardship? Ms. Craig's column would have you believe that these children are "prawns in the game" that are forced to take a "racist" test that "violates a person's civil rights" with the point of forcing "persons of Hispanic descent out of our state." Wow! That's quite a claim. The truth is, however, the test is only administered in English. Similarly, when most of these same students interview for a job, ask for directions or try to read a menu in a restaurant, they will be forced to know English. The test only assures that these children are educated early on. The test assures that if there is a problem with the English language, then the educators have caught the problem before it's too late. Hopefully, the states that fall behind Arizona in their foresight won't send too many children into the world unprepared before they realize how important English is.

Fan support key

This is in response to Scott Lewis's article concerning Coach Don Newman and Athletic Director Kevin White. I went to the ASU - UofA game this past Saturday, and I saw what I think Kevin White wants to see. I saw thousands of screaming Sun Devil basketball fans.

There is no doubt that Don Newman is doing a great job coaching this year's basketball team, and I think if he gets the head coaching job after this year, he will continue to do an outstanding job. He is doing everything he can, and this team is doing everything within their power to show their support for Coach Newman. However, as fans we've got a long way to go — except for those ten guys I see in the front row with the players' names on their shirts every game. I think what Kevin White wants to see is fan support every game. Calling yourself ASU fans when you just go to the Arizona game — that's like going to church on Christmas and Easter and calling yourself Christian.

Fan support goes much farther than just that, too. It helps recruiting, it helps television exposure and it brings money into our athletic and academic programs. Something I think would make Kevin White very happy.

Now there are two home games left this year. This team deserves an NCI bid, and one of the criteria the selection committee looks at is fan support. If you don't have a ticket, buy one, or if you have a ticket and do not plan on attending, give your ticket to someone who will. The players and Coach Newman deserve your support.

— the military variety — courtesy of your federal government.

Everyone's got their part to play. Saddam Hussein gets to be the evil villain, plotting global destruction. The United States gets to be the world's protector, bravely standing up to the Middle-Eastern bully.

You've been cast, too. There are a couple of parts you can play, but they've already been assigned. Most of us will play flag-waving good guys. It's an easy part, really. All that's called for is unquestioning acceptance of the justification for this war.

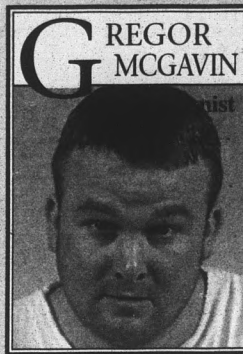

The other part is a choice one, though — that of the soldier or sailor who gets to actually take part in the conflict. These lucky few get a chance to do their duty, maybe even become a hero, if they're lucky enough to get killed. Both are speaking parts, just as long as the dialogue doesn't involve too many questions. Like, exactly why do we need to revisit the Gulf?

See, the story gets a little vague here. Evidently, Hussein is thought to have a stockpile of "weapons of mass destruction." His refusal to let U.N. weapons inspectors check wherever they want is seen as proof.

Granted, the prospect of Hussein being armed to the teeth with this weaponry is disturbing. But only a few of our allies support another U.S. invasion. Why? And why is it okay for the United States to blow off the combined objections of the rest of the U.N. member nations when we blast others for going against the grain similarly?

You know, the United States has the same sort of weapons. So do others — some are our allies, some aren't. But it's been decided that Iraq shouldn't have them. Fair enough, but why are we isolated in our zeal to pick up where we left off in 1991?

And more importantly, why now? The timing seems a bit funny. Why has the United States only now become outraged at Saddam's stalling? Could this urgency be anything to do with the scandals surrounding the commander-in-chief? I think so. After all, what better way to divert public attention away from your doorstep than to start bombing someone else's? At least in the Gulf War, we knew what our troops were fighting over — oil prices. That mightn't be the best reason to go to war, but it's a bit better than fighting over opinion polls.

Don't forget, we were buddy-buddy with Hussein back when he was at war with Iran, when that country topped our list of enemies. Former President George Bush could tell you about Saddam — he's the one who cultivated him as a friend of the United States. And what was the main reason for our hatred of Iran? Why, the Ayatollah Khomeini's popularly supported ousting of the Shah. But never mind the fact that the Shah had his people on the brink of starvation; he was our little CIA puppet, so his enemies became ours.

Now, things have changed. Hussein is once again going to experience the American penchant for "rockets" red glare and bombs bursting in air." Here we come to another reason many say we should invade Iraq: to oust Hussein and install a more reasonable government, one more agreeable to U.S. foreign policy. Maybe one with a leader like the Shah. We could make this policy for all our dealings with Third-World and emerging nations worldwide. Oh, sorry — we already tried that. Remember Iran, Cuba, Nicaragua?

The point is, people die in wars, just as they die in "police actions" and "covert operations" and every other euphemism the military, CIA and other agencies use for needless conflict. People die on both sides — some in fighting, some in accidents — most regrettably. If we have to go to war, we should go and do what we have to. That does not include setting up pet governments, and it does not negate the need for a bonafide reason.

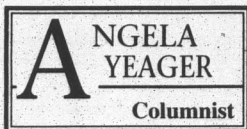

According to retired CIA-man John Stockwell, the United States has been involved in countless military actions in the past 20 years that the American public knows nothing about. All took place in emerging nations, and in almost all, the United States was the aggressor. That's right, we started it.

I'm not saying that the military is full of nothing but ne'er-do-wells. Not even close. I'm saying that the governmental and military powers-that-be have a long tradition of not telling the American public or even the members of the armed forces — the ones who get to go kill and be killed — why the United States is engaged in conflict. A long tradition of omitting, denying and lying.

Americans should support the troops, wherever they are. They should also support withdrawing the troops whenever there's no reason for them, or better yet, not sending them on unjustifiable missions. We should demand concrete reasons for going to war. Delivering the world from a serious threat is one. Distracting our attention from scandals at home is not. Gregor McGavin is a junior studying journalism.

AIDS Awareness Week merits more enthusiasm than was received

Last week was AIDS Awareness Week. If this comes as a surprise to you, don't worry. It seems to have passed by thousands of other students at ASU as well.

ANGELA YEAGER
Columnist

While there were numerous activities that were supposed to be held last week in an effort to get the word out on the deadly disease currently plaguing millions of people around the world, the support and publicity for these events was less than earth shattering.

I attended the opening ceremonies for AIDS week where Dr. Austin Jones spoke, and students shared their poetry and thoughts on the epidemic. Fifteen to 20 people showed up out of a university the size of a small city. A friend went to see the special presentation of the movie And the Band Played On. The film chronicles the beginnings of HIV and AIDS. She was the only one in her row.

I saw the flyer that announced the events for the week. Valentine condom greetings were supposed to be given out outside the Memorial Union from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. every day. I walked past the MU several times last week and didn't see anyone handing out the valentines. There was also supposed to be an AIDS maze that students could walk through on Hayden lawn. It might have been there, but I never saw it.

The point is, why even have these activities if the large portion of the student body can't find them? I actively looked for the Valentine condom packages, but what about those students who didn't? Some may argue that it is students' responsibility to educate themselves and find their own damn condoms, and this is true to a point. However, the entire point of AIDS Awareness Week is to get the word out and make people aware of the dangers. They may already know it, but many need constant reminders.

You would think that the students of a university as large as ASU would be enthusiastically behind AIDS Awareness Week. After all, younger people and women are the fastest-growing group of people becoming infected (according to the Center for Disease Control). You would think the University would be doing everything in its power to not only educate its students, but get them tested so the disease doesn't spread. Yet, as Jones pointed out, there is no specific testing site on campus, and there are no statistics on the number infected at ASU. So we have movie and speaker events attended by very few and invisible condoms to make up for this.

According to Jones, most universities the size of ASU have 200-400 HIV infected students. This means that there are likely about 200 students right now who do not know they are infected and are possibly engaging in risky activity. Or there are those who know but refuse to acknowledge it because of the lack of any kind of support group among their peers. Either way, it makes for a deadly combination. Maybe next year, if enough people have died, more support will be shown for a cause that will eventually affect us all.

'Baywatch' episode to feature 2 ASU students

BY BECKY BEVINS
STATE PRESS

Dust off that bathing suit, bust out the oil; Baywatch is coming to ASU.

There will be contests and giveaways today with the main event being the Baywatch Search Runway Competition. A panel of judges will award one male and one female the grand prize, which is an appearance on Baywatch.

The judges will be looking for "men and women who embody a healthy mind and body with a love of the environment, the discipline to stay in good physical condition and a sheer determination to succeed in all things," Greg Bonann, Baywatch executive producer, said.

Baywatch chose ASU for several reasons, said Paul Falzone, producer of the show's search.

"We wanted to be in a top 25 market" he said. ASU has a high student population and it is a lot of fun."

The extravaganza begins at noon at the Student Recreation Complex in the West Field Area.

POLICE REPORT

The ASU police reported the following incidents Monday:

- A student reported that she was sexually assaulted at Palo Verde West.
- An employee reported that someone broke the window in a door at Physical Science D-wing.
- A student reported that she was the victim of an attempted robbery at Area 51 west.

• A woman not associated with ASU was arrested, cited and released for driving on a suspended license at 1000 E. University Drive.

• A student reported that someone removed his wallet and its contents from 714 Alpha Drive.

• An abandoned 1987 Chevy Cavalier was towed by Arizona Towing at Sixth Street and Rural Road.

The Tempe police reported the following incidents Monday:

- A 30-year-old man was arrested pending drug charges. The subject was contacted in the front passenger seat of a vehicle after he was seen leaving a suspected drug house. When he was approached, he made a movement reaching under his seat. All the occupants were removed from the vehicle and the driver consented to a search. A bag with a white rock-like substance believed to be crack cocaine was found under the front passenger seat. The subject admitted that it was crack and said that it was his. He also had a glass pipe in his back pocket. He was booked in Tempe City Jail. The charges are pending scientific analysis:

Judge endorses use of neutral experts in scientific cases

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
ASSOCIATED PRESS

PHILADELPHIA — Supreme Court Justice Stephen Breyer cautiously endorsed a movement among judges on Monday to appoint neutral experts to help them sort through contentious scientific evidence.

Breyer spoke before a meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science and said he welcomed the organization's offer to help federal judges find experts.

A few judges, daunted by cases hinging on highly technical scientific issues and sometimes clouded by dubious expert testimony, have named independent experts to help separate solid evidence from junk.

Breyer cited several recent instances in which judges have named experts to be scientific advisors in cases involving emerging areas of medicine and technology.

He applauded an AAAS pilot project that will encourage more of this by helping judges find neutral experts. However, in a news conference after his speech, he cautioned against making too much of his comments.

He said his point "has to be viewed as a nudge toward a few more on occasions that might call for it. That isn't a cure-all, and it can't be used widely."

The AAAS program will begin as soon as the organization finishes securing a foundation grant to pay for it. It will run for five years.

Deborah Runkle, a senior program associate who will run the project, said she expects it will be used in between 12 and 20 cases.

"Judges will probably use this in cases that are out of the ordinary, where they don't think the normal means of getting scientific expertise is helpful," she said.

Runkle said the program will find experts by contacting scientific organizations and universities, searching computer databases and tapping into "the old-boy network."

"This has not been attempted in any systematic, sustained way," Runkle said. "We will be flexible."

Judges have struggled with how to decide what information to let into cases involving scientific disputes — and what to throw out — since the Supreme Court's so-called Daubert decision in 1993. That ruling gave judges wider latitude in sorting through evidence of varying scientific validity.

As Breyer put it Monday, judges have a legal responsibility to act as gatekeepers, "not to resolve the scientific matter but to keep unsound, unhelpful, unreliable information away from the jury."

Breyer noted that the Supreme Court has long relied on "amicus curiae" briefs, which allow professional organizations and others to offer written opinions and facts about scientific controversies before the court.

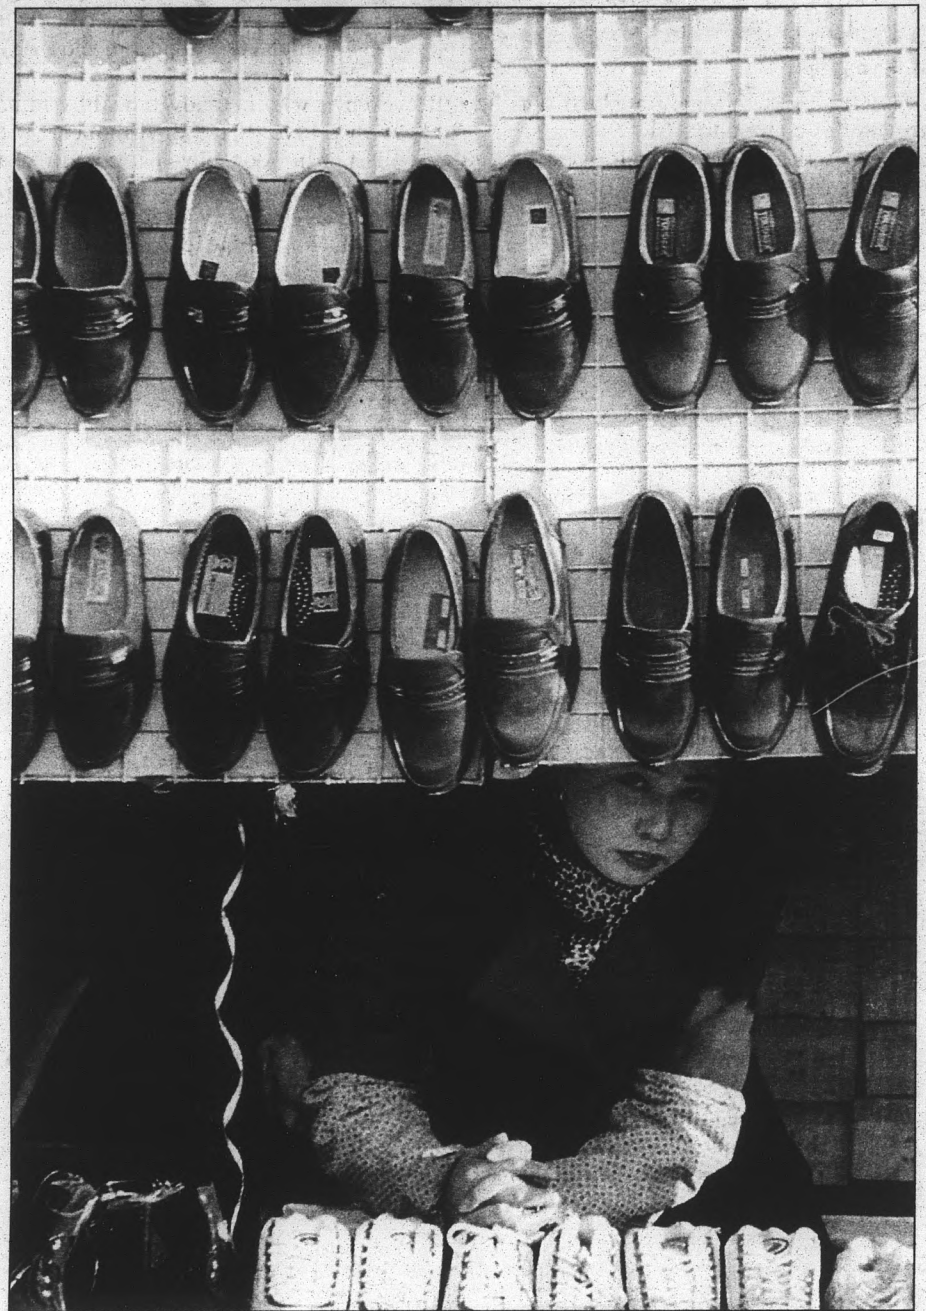

He said the court received 60 of these briefs last year from organizations of doctors, psychologists, nurses, hospice workers and handicapped people before deciding that the Constitution does not give terminally ill patients the right to doctors' help in committing suicide.

He said that appointing more-neutral experts to advise judges is just one more possible way to help judges decide what scientific evidence is worth listening to.

He noted that a federal judge in Massachusetts named a Harvard Medical School professor to be the court's "technical advisor" in a highly complex patent case involving genetic engineering. Another judge in Michigan named a medical-school doctor to testify as an expert witness for the court in a case involving partial-birth abortions.

"There might be more cases that call for this, but not necessarily a lot," Breyer said.

Husband, wife may have faked ancestry as part of alleged elaborate fraud scam

By DOMINIC PERELLA
ASSOCIATED PRESS

RICHMOND, Va. — Richmond seemed the perfect place for a man with the imposing title of Baron Otto von Bressensdorf.

The old Confederate capital fancied itself a center of culture and class, where pomp and pedigree count for something.

The city's elite quickly took to von Bressensdorf and his wife, Elena, when they arrived from Los Angeles in 1993 and brought along Lyons Capital Inc., the investment house he started in Los Angeles in the early 1980s.

The couple bought an old mansion and stuffed it with $500,000 worth of antiques, and joined the local symphony, ballet and arts scene. Visitors raved about their European manners, their 14-year-old son Michael's fluency in Spanish and Mandarin Chinese, their museum-quality paintings.

It was all supported by fraud on a grand scale, the FBI contends.

On Jan. 21, federal and state authorities showed up at the von Bressensdorfs' door with a 209-count indictment.

The couple are accused of faking just about everything about Lyons Capital in order to scam millions of dollars from small-time entrepreneurs. If convicted of the charges of wire fraud and money laundering, they could spend the rest of their lives in prison — he is 70 and she's 50.

"The allegations ... are essentially that much of his life has been a fraud," Andrew McBride, assistant U.S. attorney, wrote in court documents.

According to investigators, Lyons Capital attracted entrepreneurs seeking capital to start or expand business ventures. All the applicants had to do was pay Lyons a finder's fee, usually $10,000 to $30,000, bringing Lyons about $1 million annually, according to court documents.

"During this time, not a single client received any financing through Lyons Capital despite the fact that Lyons Capital represented that it had a 70-percent success rate in obtaining financing for its clients," FBI agent Erwin Jack wrote in an affidavit.

Some ventures, like the Amherst, Va., golf course planned by Nancy Ann Schmitt, went bankrupt after giving the baron most of their capital and seeing no return. She and her partners lost $15,000.

"You trust people to do what they say they'll do, and when they don't, it's a real kick in the teeth," Schmitt said.

The von Bressensdorfs pleaded innocent, then spent three weeks in jail before friends posted their $50,000 bail.

Trial is set for May 18. "We're going to be able to show that the government's case is anything but an open-and-shut case," their lawyer, Jay J. Levit, said Sunday.

Advanced-fee scams aren't unusual, state regulators say. What makes the Lyons case stand out, they say, is the alleged scam's brazen flair.

The von Bressensdorf home was furnished with medieval artifacts, museum-quality furniture and a Portuguese ceramic fountain in the shower. Their cars included a 1964 Rolls-Royce and an '86 Jaguar.

Company literature says the von Bressensdorf title was awarded by the king of Bavaria. It also describes a family banking history dating back 200 years and says a cousin was awarded France's highest honor for blocking Nazi plans to burn Paris.

However, prosecutors say they can't confirm that von Bressensdorf is a baron or even that he is who he says he is. They also can't figure out his wife's rightful citizenship: She has a U.S. passport, but the Immigration and Naturalization Service lists her as a Russian citizen named Lena Chemiak.

And then there's their legal history.

"I've been running this business 49 years, and we've never had a complaint. Never a suit," the baron told the Richmond Times-Dispatch in 1994.

In fact, Lyons was sued several times before coming to Richmond, and private investigator James Armistead found dozens of complaints against the company dating to the early 1980s.

"We were totally convinced," said Damien Carboneau, an Indiana plane mechanic who paid von Bressensdorf $20,000 in 1994 to find financing for his aviation company.

"They would call and tell me they had an investor who was interested, and then they would call back and say he backed out," Carboneau said.

"I'm just hoping I'll get some of my money back. Maybe I'll get a piece of that Rolls-Royce."

Group calls TV news coverage 'harmful'

By ROBERT WELLER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

DENVER — A media watchdog group will ask the Federal Communications Commission to force four TV stations in the Denver market to curb sex and violence in their news as a condition of license renewal.

Since the FCC no longer requires TV stations to meet any criteria in how to handle news, such as the previous fairness and equal-time doctrines, the group is attacking the stations as threats to the public safety.

"We're asking the FCC to protect us. What these stations are broadcasting is harmful," said Paul Klite, executive director of the Rocky Mountain Media Watch.

The four commercial VHF stations are KUSA, the NBC affiliate; KCNC, CBS; KMGH, ABC; and KWGN, an independent. Klite's group monitored news broadcasts on the four stations from 1994 through 1997 and came up with a "mayhem index," the percentage of news about crime, disasters, war and terrorism in each news show.

On KWGN, 45 percent of the news monitored concerned violence, according to the report. KUSA had 47 percent, KCNC had 54 percent and KMGH had 55 percent.

The report also criticized the stations for providing limited coverage on important local issues, including elections, the environment, education, arts, poverty, children and AIDS.

The group said it will file a challenge with the FCC on Tuesday, asking it to deny new licenses for the stations unless they limit violence and sex in their news programs.

Klite and other media critics regard the license challenges as a national test case.

"It's a very historic thing. Nobody has ever done this before: go after all the major stations in a town. It could give the FCC a chance to send a message to the broadcasters," said Danny Schechter, who wrote The More You Watch, The Less You Know.

Jack MacKenzie, news director of KCNC, questioned how Klite's group classified stories. For example, he said, would the Monica Lewinsky investigation be a sex story even though it involves allegations of perjury by President Clinton?

"We have a lot of people who give us advice on how to cover the news. And we take a lot of it seriously. We do have a public license, and we do have to take it seriously," MacKenzie said.

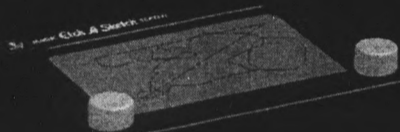

The other stations had no immediate comment when contacted by The Associated Press.

A study of eight major markets by the University of Miami, including New York City, found twice as much crime news as political news on local TV and 15 times more crime news than education news.

Schechter and Klite dispute claims that playing down crime and other sensational stories would be virtual suicide. They cite KVUE, an ABC affiliate, in Austin, Texas, which held onto to its No. 1 ranking after abandoning the tabloid format.

MacKenzie said his station has its own process of determining how much coverage to give crime stories that includes "whether the story is representative of the community or just another event that kind of just happens. We absolutely run all our stories through a filter."

He said the success his station has makes it possible to give up valuable advertising to run non-stop coverage of disasters like Denver's October 1997 blizzard.

Linguist tries to save endangered languages

BY BRIGITTE GREENBERG
ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW HAVEN, Conn. — Deep in interior Alaska, there are only three households where Kuskokwim is still spoken. Just two people in their 70s keep the Klamath language alive in Oregon. In northern Australia, about 10 native speakers keep Jingulu alive.

These are among the world's most endangered languages, tongues that have fallen victim to social and economic pressures that demand people learn more common languages such as English.

Linguists predict half of the approximately 6,000 languages spoken today will be extinct within the next century, and say at least 100 are down to one native speaker.

At Yale University, a modest effort is being made to counter the trend with a fund that helps researchers study and resurrect dying languages, often by compiling dictionaries.

The Endangered Language Fund, set up four years ago by linguist Douglas H. Whalen, is financing its first projects this year. Ten projects, including efforts to preserve Kuskokwim, Klamath and Jingulu, will each get $1,000.

"A lot of communities have been forced in various ways to start abandoning their language. I think people often don't realize that there's cultural value in their language until it's too late," Whalen said.

In some cases, languages can be threatened by governmental force, said Whalen.

"In the United States, for example, the native American languages are the ones that were here first, and for centuries there were deliberate attempts to get those languages to stop being used," he said.

More often, languages die because of the influence of more common languages such as Chinese, English or Swahili, a process aided by modern communications technology and easy transportation.

Even with relatively few speakers, a language may survive if it is spoken as the main form of communication within an isolated community.

Conversely, however, a language with thousands of speakers may be endangered if all of its speakers are more than 50 years old and it isn't used by the younger generation.

That is what has happened to the Tohono O'odham language, an Indian tongue spoken by roughly 12,000 people in southern Arizona and northern Mexico.

While the eldest generation still speaks Tohono O'odham, many of their children refused to teach it to the next generation, deferring to English because they faced discrimination when they spoke their native language in government schools, Ofelia Zepeda, a grant recipient, said.

"Across the country, you have a generation of native speakers who were not allowed to speak their languages or who were punished for speaking them," said Zepeda, an associate professor of linguistics at the University of Arizona.

Zepeda will use the grant money to help produce a comprehensive dictionary of Tohono O'odham.

The value of a community's language can only be determined by the people themselves, said Kenneth Hale, professor of linguistics at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

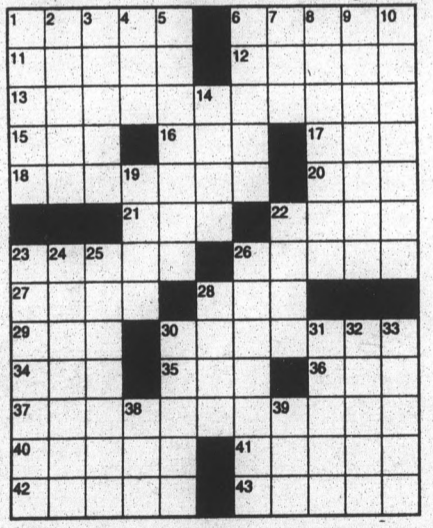

"If members of the community recognize or have come to see the beauty and strength and complexity and value of their linguistic heritage, then they have a perfect right and in fact, a very strong moral right to maintain it," Hale said.

"When you lose a language, it's like dropping a bomb on a museum."

Sky Harbor ranked sixth, Detroit's airport last in survey

ROMULUS, Mich. (AP) — Detroit Metropolitan Airport ranks last and Tampa, Fla.'s airport is best among the nation's 36 top airports, according to a passenger survey.

In four of eight categories — speed of baggage delivery, ease of reaching gates, available ground transportation and ease of following signs — Metro Airport earned the lowest scores of any airport in the survey of about 90,000 passengers.

In the remaining categories — cleanliness, quality of restaurants, attractiveness and closeness of parking — the 68-year-old airport rated near the bottom.

The private survey by Los Angeles-based Plog Research Inc. was commissioned by the 36 big airports. Passengers were surveyed in the first six months of last year and the study was completed late last year, but airport officials refused to release the findings. It was obtained last week by The Detroit News, which published a story Monday.

Airport and airline officials acknowledge there are problems at Detroit, but say most of them cited in the survey have been fixed.

"It's not the Ritz-Carlton of airports, but we're trying to make Metro work," Northwest Airlines spokesman Jim Faulkner said. The airline has 70 percent of the airport's traffic.

The results came as no surprise to some passengers.

"It's just too far to walk between flights," said John Sebastian, a Grand Rapids businessman who regularly uses Metro Airport. "At 5 o'clock, this place is a mob scene."

Others disagreed.

"Metro's not bad for the amount of travel it gets," said Dean VanNatter, a Lansing business consultant and frequent traveler. "It's nothing like Atlanta, but it's not bad."

From best to worse, here's how the airports were ranked:

1. Tampa, Fla.; 2. Pittsburgh; 3. Charlotte, N.C.; 4. Nashville, Tenn.; 5. Denver; 6. Phoenix; 7. Las Vegas; 8. Salt Lake City; 9. Atlanta; 10. Baltimore; 11. Honolulu; 12. Seattle; 13. Kansas City; 14. Minneapolis-St. Paul; 15. Oakland, Calif.; 16. Memphis, Tenn.; 17. Houston; 18. Raleigh-Durham, N.C.; 19. Windsor Locks, Conn.; 20. Chicago, O'Hare; 21. San Francisco; 22. Sacramento, Calif.; 23. St. Louis; 24. Washington, D.C., Dulles; 25. Dallas-Fort Worth; 26. Newark, N.J.; 27. Miami; 28. Portland, Ore.; 29. Los Angeles; 30. Philadelphia; 31. New York City, LaGuardia; 32. Chicago, Midway; 33. Washington, D.C., Washington National; 34. Boston, Logan; 35. New York City, John F. Kennedy; 36. Detroit.

PEOPLE

VERBIER, Switzerland (AP) — Sarah Ferguson chipped a shoulder bone after she fell while skiing, her office said Monday.

The 38-year-old duchess was coming down a slope Sunday behind her 7-year-old daughter, Eugenie, when she fell awkwardly, picked herself up and made it down herself.

She went to see a doctor. The injury isn't serious and she won't cut her vacation short.

"The duchess is in considerable pain but is expected to stay on in Verbier," her office said in a statement.

With Ferguson were Eugenie and 9-year-old friend, Beatrice, Italian aristocrat Count Gaddo della Gherardesca and a former boyfriend, motor-racing millionaire Paddy McNally. Her ex, Prince Andrew, will visit as planned on his 38th birthday Thursday.

SYDNEY, Australia (AP) — Elle Macpherson gave birth to a boy over the weekend in New York, a newspaper said.

The baby, born in a Manhattan hospital, was named Arpad Flynn Busson after his father and weighed in at 7 pounds, the Daily Telegraph said. His parents will call him

Flynn.

Mother and baby were doing well, the newspaper said. The model retreated Monday with her husband and newborn to a hotel suite where they have been staying for two weeks.

LONDON (AP) — The British government promised Monday to keep fighting Iran's death sentence against Salman Rushdie.

"Iran should be in no doubt that this issue is an obstacle to better relations with the United Kingdom," Foreign Secretary Robin Cook told reporters after a meeting with the author. "It is appalling that the threat to his life remains after all this time."

Rushdie has been in hiding since 1989, when the late Iranian leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini declared that he had blasphemed Islam in The Satanic Verses.

Britain will mobilize support in the 15-nation European Union, Cook said.

Iran renewed the fatwa Friday and the bounty on Rushdie's head stands at $2.5 million.

Rushdie, who has been more visible in recent months, called the death threat "a colossal pressure," adding, "It is a very unpleasant thing that someone is offering money for my death."

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Michael Jackson plans a fund-raising concert here later this year to help starving North Korean children.

Tentatively called "We Are The World 2," the concert will be held Oct. 10 at the Olympic Stadium and broadcast live in 120 countries, an aide to President-elect Kim Dae-jung said Monday.

"Mr. Jackson is enthusiastically pursuing the project. He has been and will be contacting some 50 other celebrities and world leaders for participation," said the aide, Choi Kyu-sun.

Those being invited include Luciano Pavarotti, Whitney Houston, Celine Dion, Boys II Men, Elizabeth Taylor, Michael Jordan and Tiger Woods, Choi said.

For taped messages and appeals to be aired during the concert, Jackson is in contact with such luminaries as Pope John Paul II and South African President Nelson Mandela, Choi said.

"Mr. Jackson's side has been in contact with North Korea. But we can't say whether or not the hope will come true," Choi said.

NEW YORK (AP) — Getting to Carnegie Hall wasn't the problem for the Minnesota Orchestra.

Soloist Kathleen Battle was in the middle of a piece from Verdi's opera Attila on Sunday when the lights dimmed by half, then dimmed again until the stage was almost completely dark.

She kept singing, and three accompanying musicians kept playing. Music director Eiji Oue said afterward that if Battle had stopped, he would have followed her lead.

"But we all have that piece memorized. It's like walking to your kitchen in the dark," he said.

Harp player Kathy Kienzle said her eyes eventually adjusted to the dark.

"I think there was a little light from the audience. I was really playing by ear and what I remember," she said.

Apparently someone backstage had backed into a computerized lightboard, cutting power until the system could be reset.

Sun Devils chip way to 9th in Waikoloa, Hawaii

Brad Lang/State Press

By CARLO MERCALDO
STATE PRESS

The ASU men's golf team placed ninth this past weekend at the Taylor Made/Waikoloa Intercollegiate at Kings Beach Golf Course in Waikoloa, Hawaii.

The Sun Devils overall score of (294-290-291) 875 was 19-strokes off the pace of top finisher UNLV. Also placing ahead of ASU were Pac-10 foes Oregon State and Oregon, both tied for sixth with scores of 874.

UofA, which was ranked No. 1 in the nation entering the tournament, and who had placed second in a tournament they hosted two weeks ago, placed 18th with a stroke total of 895.

ASU's top individual performer was junior Greg Padilla, who finished tied for 11th place with a 1-under-par 215 (72-70-73).

"I was pretty happy with the way I played overall," Padilla said. "I did have a couple mishaps coming home on my last round though, getting a couple of bogey's, and as a team I know we can do a lot better."

Junior Darren Angel shot a 2-over-par 218 (72-73-73) to finish in a tie for 23rd in the event. Sun Devil freshman Jeff Quinney, who entered the Hawaii tournament ranked 41st nationally, shot a 4-over-par 220 (75-72-73).

Sophomore Tim Mickelson (75-76-72) and junior Brad Cannon (75-75-77) had stroke totals of 223 and 227, respectively, to round out the Sun Devil showing.

While the Sun Devils were not disappointed with their efforts in Hawaii, it is evident that they are aware they did not play to their potential.

"We are not too worried about getting the wins right now," Padilla said. "We want to be playing our best golf when it counts at the end of the season, during the Pac-10 Championships (in April) and the NCAA Championships (in May)."

The inability to make key putts when it counted may have been a factor in the higher scores for ASU, who placed third in the UofA hosted Ping/Arizona Invitational in Tucson two weeks ago.

"In Hawaii, the greens are made of Bermuda grass," Padilla said. "That is a completely different type of grass than almost everybody on our team is use to playing, so that may have played a factor in a lot of our missed putts."

ASU does not return to action until the Golf Digest Invitational in Las Vegas on March 12-15.

Lee is early arrival at camp

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Rookie first baseman Travis Lee was such a surprise arrival at the Arizona Diamondbacks' spring training complex Monday that a security guard wouldn't let him in.

Lee came to his first major league training camp three days before the position players' first scheduled workout.

He was admitted only after a fan outside the parking lot asked for an autograph.

"I'm a little nervous. I didn't think I was going to get this way. But looking at the names above the lockers — Matt Williams, Jay Bell, Andy Benes — just looking at those names, my gosh, it's crazy," Lee said. "It's hard to realize I'm here."

Lee, 22, is considered the favorite to win the expansion Diamondbacks' first base job after hitting 32 homers and driving in 109 runs with two minor league teams last season.

"It is not his job to lose," manager Buck Showalter said. "We don't have a first baseman. We've never had a first baseman. With his work habits, I know Travis is going to be as good as he is capable of being. It's very comforting. We'll find out how good he is capable of being. Our job is to help make the transition easier."

Meanwhile, outfielders Karim Garcia and David Hulse threw for the first time in camp, testing surgically repaired left shoulders.

Garcia, who underwent arthroscopic surgery while with Los Angeles last summer, said he was at about 80 percent and said he should be 100 percent in about two weeks.

Hulse, who played with Texas and Milwaukee, missed the 1997 season after sustaining an injury during a collision on a play at the plate in the last month of the 1996 season.

RED HOT SUN DEVILS

Bloomquist, a left fielder, went 6-10 with two doubles, one stolen base, three RBI and four runs scored over the weekend in the Sun Devils' three-game series with Washington State. The sophomore from Port Orchard, Wash. helped lead ASU to two wins in homestand.

Woods was the main offensive force behind ASU's 4-0 record at this weekend's Coca-Cola Softball Tournament in Phoenix. The senior outfielder cracked nine base hits in 19 at-bats including a solo home run, his first as a Sun Devil, against UNLV. ASU defeated the Rebels, Cal State Fullerton, Ohio State, Alabama and Detroit Mercy.

Sanchez, an All-American, captured first place in the 100 meter freestyle and 100 butterfly and was third in the 200 freestyle Saturday in a dual with UofA. Rodman misses second practice

CHICAGO (AP) — Dennis Rodman was a no-show for a second straight practice Monday, the third time in less than a month the renegade rebounder has missed a workout with the Chicago Bulls.

The indiscretions have led to a spot on the bench for the start of Sunday's game and a fine.

"We're not going to wrestle and tussle with this because it's not something major. It's not anything that's causing us to lose," Bulls coach Phil Jackson said Monday at the team's suburban Deerfield practice complex.

"It's not something that is going to cause disruption. What we want is a team that goes into the playoffs in full health, and we can still accomplish that."

Jackson said Rodman was healthy, but the coach wouldn't reveal his latest excuse for missing practice.

When Rodman didn't show Monday, the Bulls called and found him at home. Rodman's reasoning for being AWOL was not sufficient and he will be fined an undisclosed amount, Jackson said.

The coach said he had not decided whether Rodman would play Tuesday night against the Indiana Pacers, a showdown for the best record in the East.

"That depends on how Dennis responds," Jackson said.

Rodman, recently sporting a leopard-spot hairdo to go with his various body piercings and tattoos, missed a Sunday morning shootaround and then didn't start as the Bulls beat the Detroit Pistons 99-90 later that afternoon.

Rodman told Jackson he lost the keys to his pickup truck and didn't have a way to get to Sunday's practice.

Jackson sent Rodman home before a game in New Jersey on Jan. 23 when the six-time rebounding champion missed the morning shootaround after being out late the night before.

Jackson said he didn't know if Rodman's absence Monday was related to Sunday's incident. Rodman played just 21 minutes against the Pistons, going scoreless with eight rebounds.

He had been averaging 15.2 rebounds a game in 35 minutes.

"I always say if you're not going to play, no sense me coming to the game," Rodman said as he left the United Center on Sunday.

Rodman has been mostly on his best behavior this season with an incentive-laden contract heavy on number of games played. Last season he was suspended 14 games, 11 for kicking a court-side cameraman.

Jackson said Rodman's latest troubles would not disrupt the Bulls, who have had a turmoil-filled season that may be their last together.

Earlier, Scottie Pippen said he wanted to be traded and would never play for the Bulls again. He's since softened his stance, but last week said he didn't expect to be back in Chicago.

There has also been a clamor over whether Jackson and Michael Jordan will be back next season.

During Rodman's more than two years with the Bulls, Jackson has often treated him like a wayward son.

Sprewell hearing ends with 7 1/2 hours of closing arguments

NEW YORK (AP) — Latrell Sprewell's arbitration hearing concluded Monday with 7 1/2 hours of closing arguments, most of which focused on the player's grievance against the NBA for suspending him for one year.

Arbitrator John Feerick can issue his decision at any time within the next 30 days. Sprewell is hoping to be readmitted to the NBA immediately.

"On behalf on the players association and our 400 players, I think everyone is pleased that the hearing is behind us and that Latrell has finally had an opportunity to a fair hearing before a neutral arbitrator," union director Billy Hunter said. "We look forward to receiving a decision and to Latrell resuming his career as soon as possible."

Union attorney Jeffrey Kessler spent almost three hours making his closing argument at the Manhattan law firm of Skadden, Arps, Slate, Meagher & Flom.

Attorney Frank Rothman, representing the NBA, took about two hours to state his case. Attorney Robert Shiblehuth of the Golden State Warriors finished in about 20 minutes.

The union and the league then gave rebuttal arguments for about 45 minutes apiece before the hearing adjourned.

Sprewell was in attendance, as he has been for all nine days of the hearing, and more than a dozen attorneys were there.

"We remain hopeful," said his agent, Arn Tellem.

Feerick has given no indication of how long he will take to issue a ruling. Before the hearing began, he turned down a motion for an expedited decision.

A total of 21 witnesses testified over four days in Portland, Ore., during the final week of January and four more days in New York during the first week of February.

The transcript from the hearing runs almost 3,000 pages. Given the time Feerick will need to review the it, no decision is expected for at least a few days.

Sprewell has already missed 35 games, making his suspension the longest in NBA history.

He has filed two grievances, one against the Warriors for terminating the remaining three years of his four-year, $32 million contract, the other against the league for imposing a one-year suspension after Sprewell attacked coach P.J. Carlesimo at practice Dec. 1.

According to a person familiar with Sprewell's argument, his attorneys made a case that he was the first player to be penalized by both the league and the team for a serious transgression. His side also argued that the collective bargaining agreement clearly states that a penalty in a case like this may be issued by either a team or the league, but not both.

Sprewell's side also argued that the one-year suspension was too harsh compared with previous penalties issued by the league. They also brought up cases of player-coach clashes in other sports in which penalties were issued by either the team or the league, but not both.

The NBA argued that the penalty was not excessive, given the nature of the attack. The league's security department interviewed 23 witnesses in two days and determined that Sprewell got into a fight with Carlesimo at practice and choked the coach, then returned some 20 minutes later and punched him.

Jazz, Magic trade centers

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Greg Foster and Chris Morris left the court moments before the Utah Jazz tipped off Monday night, and Foster said they had been traded to Orlando for Rony Seikaly.

In Atlanta, Seikaly was held out of the lineup as the Magic played the Hawks.

Jazz officials said no deal could be confirmed until after the game. Seikaly's agent said he had not yet heard of a finalized deal.

Foster and Morris dressed and warmed up for the game, and Foster was listed in Utah's starting lineup.

But at 6:55 p.m. MST, Foster returned to the locker room, dressed and rushed angrily from the building.

"Yeah, it's me, me and Chris," Foster snapped at reporters.

Morris left the court a few moments later.

Rookie William Cunningham, a rookie from Temple playing on a 10-day contract, started at center for Utah against Charlotte.

Seikaly had been the subject of trade rumors recently. Philadelphia, New Jersey, Boston and New York were among the teams to express interest.

Xavier upends No. 24 Colonials

CINCINNATI (AP) — Gary Lumpkin scored a career-high 31 points as Xavier rallied from a 10-point deficit Monday night.

Xavier (17-6, 9-4 Atlantic 10) steadied its wobbly season by hitting 45-of-63 from the foul line and pulling it out in the second half with four players limited by fouls. The 45 free throws tied the school record.

Lumpkin hit 16 of Xavier's final 25 points to give George Washington (20-6, 9-4) its first three-game losing streak of the season. The Colonials fell into a second-place tie with Xavier in the Atlantic 10 West, a half-game behind Dayton. The top two teams in each division get first-round tournament byes.

No. 20 West Virginia 71, Marshall 58

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — Greg Jones scored 24 points and No. 20 West Virginia won without leading scorer Damian Owens.

West Virginia (21-5) finished its non-conference season 11-0.

Caray still in critical condition

RANCHO MIRAGE, Calif. (AP) — A sudden change in heart rhythm was blamed for the collapse of Chicago Cubs announcer Harry Caray.

Caray was stricken at during a Valentine's Day dinner with his wife.

The 78-year-old announcer remained in critical but stable condition Monday at Eisenhower Medical Center. His condition has remained unchanged since he was admitted on Saturday night after falling at the local Basin Street West nightclub.

Nursing supervisor Jane Taylor confirmed that Caray's condition but declined further comment.

Family spokesman Bill Wills said "a sudden change in heart rhythm which seriously affected his circulation" caused the Hall of Fame broadcaster to collapse.

"His heart output is normal now," Wills was quoted as saying in Monday's The Desert Sun of Palm Springs.

Doctors were unsure what caused the problem. Caray had a stroke in 1987 but doctors have ruled out another stroke, Wills said.

"No one has even suggested that," he said.

Wills did not immediately return a phone call from The Associated Press on Monday.

Caray's son-in-law, Coley Newell, said over the weekend that Caray was unconscious but was breathing on his own.

Mrs. Caray told Chicago radio station WGN on Sunday that her husband fell when he leaned on a table that gave way.

Well-wishers included Cubs officials, fellow broadcasters and Chicago Bulls star Michael Jordan, who wished Caray a speedy recovery.

"I love to hear his voice on the radio and the TV as well. Hopefully he can recover well," Jordan said after the Chicago Bulls defeated the Detroit Pistons 99-90 Sunday.

Basin Street West general manager Peter Marin said Sunday that two of his employees, bartender Chris Boni and waiter Bobby Wherle, performed cardiopulmonary resuscitation on Caray before paramedics arrived.

"Both have been trained in CPR and did a fabulous job," Marin said. "The paramedics were incredible and efficient in taking care of the unfortunate situation and they were wonderful in assisting Mrs. Caray, calming her, keeping her informed on what they were doing."

Caray, a broadcaster for 53 years, has also worked for the St. Louis Cardinals, Oakland Athletics and Chicago White Sox.

Caray cut back his broadcasting duties last year. His first scheduled Cubs telecast on WGN this season is an exhibition game March 8 against the Oakland Athletics.

U.S. wrestlers arrive in hostile Iran

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — From a distance, an American flag painted on the wall of a tall government building in Tehran looks like it could be welcoming a U.S. wrestling team, the most prominent group of Americans to visit Iran since its 1979 revolution.

But a closer look reveals skulls in place of stars, and the red streaks of falling bombs in place of stripes. "We will never make up with the United States even for a moment," says an inscription underneath, summarizing nearly two decades of hostility between Iran and a country still known to many here as the "Great Satan."

That resolve is one face of Iran's Islamic Republic, set up after the revolution ousted the U.S.-backed shah. The other, of relative tolerance, comes from Iran's moderate president and those who invited the team.

As they arrived at Tehran's airport early Tuesday, the American wrestlers were greeted by Mohammed Reza Taleqani, deputy chairman of the Iranian wrestling federation. "The only thing I care about is wrestling," Taleqani said.

"We are very happy to be here. It's an opportunity we've been waiting for a long time," said coach Joe Seay of Perry, Okla. "We're not politicians. We're sportsmen."

About 50 mostly foreign journalists were on hand for the team's arrival, ignored by most local media. But the muted Iranian reception did not cool the enthusiasm of the Americans.

"Iranian wrestling fans are the greatest in the world," said team member Zeke Jones, 31, of Chandler, Ariz. "If there is any political fallout from this, it is not our concern."

Iran's top judge, Ayatollah Mohammad Yazdi, earlier Monday echoed sentiments of a hard-line faction in the government that wants no strengthening of ties with the United States.

"If some sportsmen come here, it has nothing to do with (closer) government relations," he said.

But the invitation attracted attention after President Mohammad Khatami, in remarks broadcast last month, encouraged sports and cultural exchanges as a means of improving understanding between people of the two nations.

The remarks, telecast in Iran and the United States, were widely viewed as a diplomatic opening by Khatami, a moderate cleric elected in May 1997 on a platform of pragmatic changes in Iran.

Despite comparisons with the ping-pong diplomacy that led to improved relations between the United States and communist China in the 1970s after decades of estrangement, no one expects a quick refastening of ties between Tehran and Washington.

The United States severed relations with Iran after Muslim militants stormed the American Embassy in Tehran months after the 1979 revolution and held 52 Americans hostage for 444 days.

More than half of Iran's 60 million people are too young to remember the revolution, and many are ready to put the past behind them. An opinion poll by Khatami's office, published in newspapers Monday, showed that 74 percent of Iranians believed Khatami's call for better ties with the United States was "very necessary." Some 64 percent said it "could lead to better or much better ties."

No margin of error or sampling size were provided. The American wrestling team's visit highlights the new attitude.

"This event should be seen for what it is: a wrestling match with some very interesting possibilities," said John Marks, head of Washington-based Search for Common Ground, a private group that promotes international understanding with the United States.

IN MANY COMPANIES
IT TAKES YEARS TO PROVE YOU'RE MANAGEMENT MATERIAL...

WE'LL GIVE YOU 10 WEEKS.

Ten weeks may not seem like much time to prove you're capable of being a leader. But if you're tough, smart and determined, ten weeks and a lot of hard work could make you an Officer of Marines. And Officer Candidates School (OCS) is where you'll get the chance to prove you've got what it takes to lead a life full of excitement, full of challenge, full of honor. Anyone can say they've got what it takes to be a leader, we'll give you ten weeks to prove it.

Marines
The Few. The Proud. The Marines.

MARINE OFFICER

If you've got what it takes to earn the title Marine Officer see Captain Williams at the fountain, Feb. 17th or call (602) 257-0310
