ASU student honored by USA Today

BY DAVID WOODFILL
STATE PRESS

For those who know Alon Unger, it's no surprise that he's been named one of the country's top undergraduates.

"He's always been a very bright boy," said Alon's mother, Dina.

Unger, a senior biology and religious studies major, was recognized with 20 other students in the Feb. 13 issue of USA Today as one of the top undergraduates in the nation.

He is the sixth ASU student to receive the award in the past seven years.

Unger, the son of Israeli immigrants, has been studying at Thammasat University in Bangkok, Thailand. He was honored at a reception with the other students in Arlington, Va.

To be considered for the award, students must be nominated by a faculty member of their college and are considered by the degree of their academic performance and public service accomplishments.

"He's truly a superior student," said Bill Weidemaier, the Honors College professor who nominated Unger. "He made a particularly good candidate for the award, both by virtue of his academic accomplishments and services for the community."

Unger is a Truman and a Flinn scholar and is a public health activist in the fight against AIDS. Among other things, he has served in Washington D.C. as a lobbyist for the AIDS Action Council.

Unger's mom said he's always been concerned for other people.

"He always complains that we spend too much money that we could contribute to other things," she said. "I'm very proud to be his mother."

"In high school, we could tell that he would be great someday."

Ted Humphrey, dean of the Honors College, said a student like Unger is a rarity.

"I've never met a student who combines academic scholarship and public service to such a high degree of excellence," he said. "He's by far one of the very top students in the University."

Unger said he doesn't feel his public service accomplishments are anything extraordinary.

"It's not so much a matter of having enough time, it's a matter of finding the time," he said. "Other people go to movies after school or play sports — these are just the things that I love to do and if you find something you really enjoy, you find time to do it."

He added his award is largely a reflection of ASU's degree of excellence.

"We've had more of these scholarships awarded to our students than any other public university in the country," he said. "I'm in really good company because I come from a school where people are doing a lot of interesting things."

Dr. Neal A. Lester, Professor of African American Studies, is surrounded by his doll collection, representing various ways African Americans have been portrayed throughout the years.

Shattering black stereotypes English professor's mission

BY ALLY ASHER
STATE PRESS

Dozens of dark-colored, decorative dolls line the shelves of Professor Neal Lester's office.

Designed to represent stereotypical black characters such as "mammies" and "picaninies," the dolls serve as grotesque reminders of the negative images used to portray African American culture years ago.

"I collect the dolls and take them with me when I teach," said Lester, an ASU English Professor. "They make me look at how prevalent negative images are of black people. The images confront you in a way that a book cannot, which makes it more real."

Lester, 38, has dedicated the majority of his career to researching the African American experience, primarily focusing on literature. He said he would like black awareness to be extended during the whole year, not just during Black History Month.

"When we talk about African American history, we are talking about America," Lester said. "This is one aspect of our American history, to talk about people who contributed and who are part of the fabrics that make up this country."

Lester's interpretation of societies' black images helped lead his own spiritual journey. His long, black dreadlocks help re-assure his African American identity, he said.

"I couldn't control many things around me, but at least I could make some decisions about my hair," Lester said. "Part of the spirituality was not having to follow someone else's standards, allowing my hair to do whatever on its own."

Lester said he studies different African American symbols to help provide identity for himself and his students. He often refers to hair when comparing different cultures and their perceptions.

"I think hair is a big issue for black people,"

Outreach programs reach high schools statewide

BY CHRIS KAHN
STATE PRESS

They can be easy to miss, shuffling among the swarm of college students, staring wide-eyed at the jewelry vendors and the mall preachers.

But everyday kids statewide come to ASU to take advantage of the many museums and laboratory tours available.

Starting as independent projects of individual departments, the relationship between ASU and Valley schools has grown. There are at least 350 separate campus programs that incorporate some type of outreach to K-12 schools.

Theresa Gonzales teaches her children at home but brought them to the ASU Planetarium and the Global Surveyor TES laboratory to teach them about planetary science.

"I think it's good for them to see a big campus like this," Gonzales said. "Now when they see the news, they'll understand a little bit about what's going on."

The increasing involvement of universities in K-12 education can be explained by the changing role of university science over the past few decades, said Fred Staley, professor of elementary education. Science used to be concerned only with pursuing intellectual interests, but today there is a greater emphasis on passing on information gleaned from research to the public.

"I think there were walls between scientists and the community 10 years ago," Staley said. "Scientists had their work and teachers had their text books, but with new advances in technology, teachers couldn't keep up with it on their own. They needed to connect with university science."

Other than on-campus tours, research projects like the Central Arizona—Phoenix Long Term Ecological Research Project (CAPLTER) also have been trying to work with the public. CAPLTER will involve Valley elementary and high school students in collecting and comparing ecological data with scientists.

"The purpose of our outreach program is to give kids a sense of what it means to do science, and also to give them an idea of possible careers," said Peggy Lindauer, education liaison for the Center for Environmental Studies.

Although ASU's K-12 outreach programs have traditionally been generated by individual departments, they've become so numerous and have stretched so far across the Valley that the president's office is creating a web page devoted to mapping out areas affected by research.

"It's a way of keeping track of what ASU is doing in the community," said Larry Mankin, special assistant to ASU President Lattie Coor. "Researchers will be able to see what others are doing in the locations of interest, and it benefits the public by providing them with an accurate assessment of ASU outreach programs."

The web page would use a geographical information system that would allow browsers to click onto a map of areas such as Apache Junction or Ahwatukee and discover what projects are going on.

Lester

Lester said. "It seems simple, but hair is central in terms of identity issues. There are ideals of having straight and long hair, pretty hair that bounces, whereas black hair does not do that. It sends a message that black people should change the way they look."

A husband and father of two, Lester was born and raised in Georgia and obtained his degree in English from West Georgia College in Carrollton, Ga. He obtained his masters degree and Ph. D. in English while studying at Vanderbilt University in Nashville, Tenn.

Before joining ASU's English Department in the fall, Lester taught African American literature for eight years at the University of Alabama. His research specializes in African American literature and African American cultural studies, emphasizing drama, 19th century American literature and the works of black playwright and poet Ntozake Shange.

Lester said it was Shange's exploration and documentation in African American culture that brought his "awakening" and allowed him to become more involved in his cultural field of study. He studied Shange's Broadway play For Colored Girls Who Have Considered Suicide When the Rainbow is Enuf, which "celebrates the realities and experiences of black women," he said.

"I remember being in school and not having enough time to study Shange," Lester said. "So I researched For Colored Girls on my own. It was the toughest, most non-traditional play. It stumped me."

Lester said his interest in Shange's work expanded while attending Vanderbilt. Among his vast collection of published articles and essays, Lester wrote the first comprehensive examination of Shange and her theatrical work.

"I was always interested with the African American experience, but I made an emotional connection with Shange," he said. "Nothing really focused on the complexity and rhythm of poetry like her. She opened me up to the world of black folks and language and the black definition of self."

Aside from using Shange's inspirational works, Lester said he tries to incorporate as many "real life" examples in his classes as possible. He uses everything from graphic rap music tapes to cultural video clips as teaching tools, hoping to provoke reactions from his students.

"I'm always looking for things to bring into the classroom," Lester said. "I love energy. I love challenging discussions that make me go back and re-research."

Lester gives several talks and lectures in the community and is currently in the process of publishing a book on talking rituals, which is scheduled to come out next fall.

"We celebrate our own creation through talking," Lester said. "Words and rhythms that black people say establish the community. That's what I'm talking about. Who I am and what I've experienced."

Lester said his overall goal is to develop a great following of students who are genuinely interested in exploring African American literature and cultural studies.

"I want people to look back and say 'You know what, I really learned something from his class,'" Lester said. "It's important for me to make an impact on someone's life beyond a book. I think we need to open ourselves up to the possibilities that difference can bring us positive things."

Clinton defends strike option; U.N. urges diplomacy

By TERENCE HUNT
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Clinton, preparing Americans for possible airstrikes against Iraq, said Tuesday that military force is never the first answer "but sometimes it's the only answer." Unless the international community acts, Saddam Hussein will conclude it "has lost its will," Clinton said.

Cautioning that an attack would not be risk free, the president said, "I know that the people we may call upon in uniform are ready. The American people have to be ready as well."

Clinton used a Pentagon setting and a nationally televised speech to define military goals and a rationale for action.

He said airstrikes would leave Saddam "significantly worse off than he is now." And if one attack does not achieve U.S. goals, "we will be prepared to strike him again," the president said.

Clinton said U.N. inspectors charged with dismantling Saddam's biological, chemical and nuclear weapons have encountered "lies, stonewalling, obstacle after obstacle" in the seven years since the Gulf War.

If Saddam is not stopped now, Clinton said, "He will conclude that the international community has lost its will. He will then conclude that he can go right on and do more to rebuild an arsenal of devastating destruction."

"And some day, some way, I guarantee you, he'll use the arsenal," the president said. He said Saddam "could end this crisis tomorrow simply by letting the weapons inspectors complete their mission."

Defense Secretary William Cohen said, "Iraq must understand that our patience is not infinite. And at some point we will have to act to reduce the menace posed by Iraq's weapons of mass destruction and to reduce Iraq's ability to threaten its neighbors."

Iraqi Deputy Prime Minister Tariq Aziz, replying to Clinton, said the United States has no authority to attack. None of Iraq's neighbors want it to be bombed, Aziz asserted, while countries as far away as New Zealand, Australia and Britain are joining to help the United States.

"It is not a coalition for peace. It is a beligerent coalition to destroy a nation," Aziz said in a CNN interview.

Clinton is expected to continue his public focus on Iraq in coming days, and the White House said he may eventually address the nation from the Oval Office. On Wednesday, Cohen, Secretary of State Madeleine Albright and National Security Adviser Sandy Berger will conduct a public forum in Columbus, Ohio, about the showdown with Iraq.

As the administration made its case to the public, a new poll showed American support for military action weakening. Forty percent of those surveyed said they supported a military strike to resolve the Iraqi standoff, compared with 50 percent two weeks ago, the CNN/USA Today/Gallup poll showed. Yet if Clinton did order airstrikes, 76 percent said they would approve.

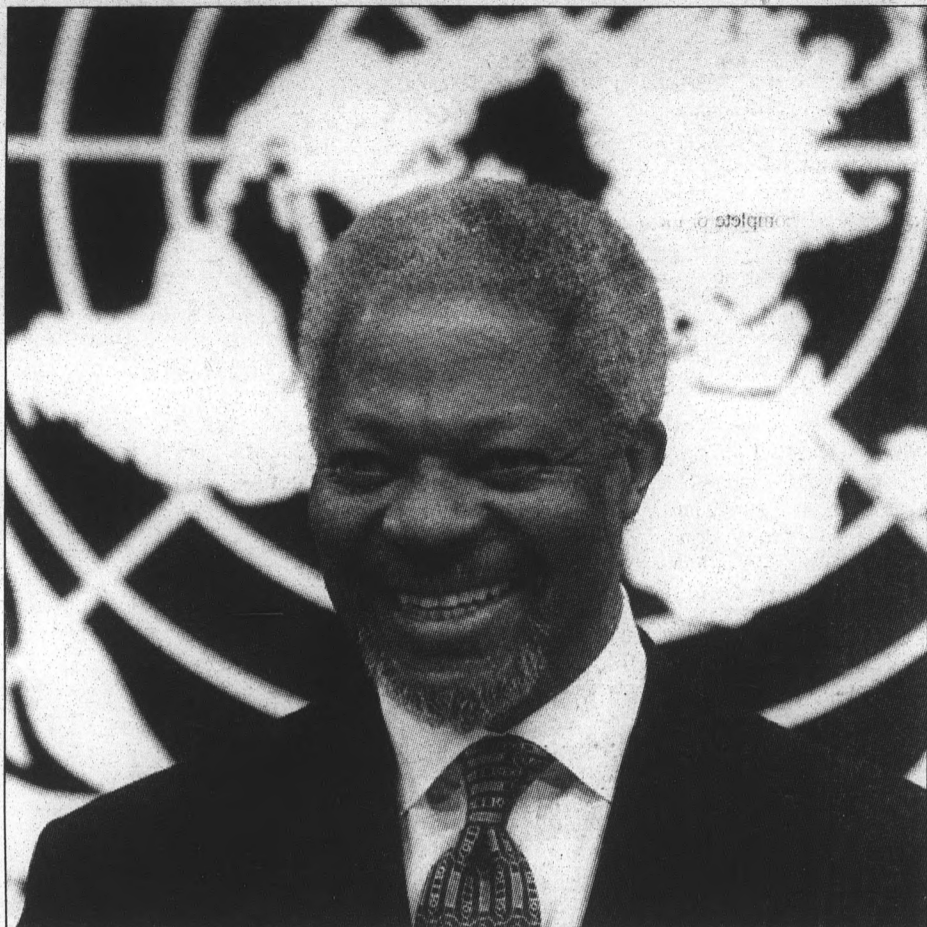

In a last-minute diplomatic effort, U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan announced Tuesday that he would travel to Baghdad in an effort to resolve the standoff. White House spokesman Mike McCurry said the United States will insist that Annan have "very clear instructions" from the Security Council and "a very unambiguous message to deliver." Clinton called Annan to review diplomatic efforts with Iraq, a White House official said.

The State Department said U.S. objectives have not changed: unlimited access to more than 60 presidential sites and "dozens and dozens" of others where weapon ingredients may be hidden.

For weeks, Albright and other officials have said diplomacy had virtually run its course. State Department spokesman James P. Rubin said Tuesday that "the window has not yet shut," although he appeared to be skeptical that Annan's mission would produce a reversal by Saddam.

Clinton underscored the conditions that Saddam must fulfill.

"Iraq must agree — and soon — to free, full, unfettered access" to suspected weapon sites "anywhere in the country," he said.

United Nations Secretary-General Kofi Annan smiles during a news conference at the United Nations Tuesday, where he announced plans for his trip to Iraq. Annan said he will arrive in Iraq on Friday.

Clinton was briefed at the Pentagon by Marine Corps Gen. Anthony Zinni, the U.S. commander in the Persian Gulf, and Gen. Henry H. Shelton, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, about military options and the status of U.S. forces.

Amid confusion about the endgame of attacks and calls in Congress for toppling Saddam, Clinton spoke with precision about U.S. goals.

"Let me be clear," the president said. "A military operation cannot destroy all the weapons of mass destruction capacity. But it can and will leave him significantly worse off than he is now in terms of the ability to threaten the world with these weapons, or to attack his neighbors."

Following any strike, the United States will continue monitoring Iraq's activities "with all the means at our disposal," Clinton said. "If he seeks to rebuild his weapons of mass destruction, we will be prepared to strike him again."

Appeals court blocks OSHA job safety incentive program

By KEVIN GALIN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A federal appeals court blocked the Labor Department on Tuesday from implementing new workplace safety regulations targeting 12,500 job sites that the government claims are the most dangerous in the nation.

The U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia granted a motion by the U.S. Chamber of Commerce to delay implementation of the new Occupational Safety and Health Administration program until the business group's challenge of it is resolved in court.

Stephen Bokart, an attorney for the chamber, said the Cooperative Compliance Program attempted to force employers to participate by threatening them with inspections.

"OSHA is attempting to move forward with an agenda to force American companies to comply with standards the agency has failed to get properly promulgated," Bokart also said.

Charles N. Jeffress, Labor's assistant secretary for OSHA, noted that the court hadn't ruled on the merits of the program.

"We are confident that when the court does look at this award-winning program, it will agree that this proven way of reducing workplace injuries and illnesses is in the interest of both American workers and businesses," he said.

When it unveiled the program last November, OSHA touted it as an ambitious plan to reduce injuries and illnesses in the workplace. The agency said the 12,250 workplaces that it targeted could reduce their chances of being inspected from 100 percent to 30 percent by agreeing to establish a safety and health program, fix hazards and provide OSHA with annual health and safety data.

The Chamber of Commerce argued that amounted to telling business officials that they were guaranteed to face inspection unless they participated; OSHA countered that because the targeted workplaces were considered dangerous they were already facing inspection.

Take-down diplomacy: Iranians cheer U.S. wrestlers at meet

By BRYAN BRUMLEY
ASSOCIATED PRESS

TEHRAN, Iran — An Iranian crowd burst into cheers Tuesday when U.S. wrestlers carried the Stars and Stripes into an international meet — marking the first time in 18 years the American flag was displayed with honor rather than hatred in Tehran.

The U.S. flag, burned and trampled again and again here since the Islamic Revolution of 1979, received more applause than any of the other 16 national banners, save that of the host nation.

Wrestlers on the five-member U.S. team carrying the flag waved back enthusiastically.

"I never know what to expect wherever I go, but more so here because other countries don't call us 'Great Satan,'" said wrestler Melvin Douglas, a 1993 world champion. "But ... I'm not a Satan. I'm a sportsman."

The cheers, said coach Joe Seay, "felt very good."

"But what was very special is that they had our flag. We had brought our own flag, but we had no need for it, because they had one already for us," Seay said. "That showed caring."

The Americans, and the Iranian organizers, have stressed the athletics — rather than the diplomacy — involved in the landmark visit.

The U.S. team's arrival came a month after Iranian President Mohammad Khatami spoke to CNN about opening the door to cultural and sports exchanges between the two estranged nations. Even the moderate Khatami, however, has said he sees no need for diplomatic ties.

Iran's hard-line spiritual leader, Ayatollah Ali Khamenei, on Tuesday again called the United States the "Great Satan." Khamenei said that the U.S. military build-up in the Persian Gulf threatened the Islamic world, though not Iran in particular.

Iranian state television, reporting the start of the event, did not show the American flag or mention the presence of the U.S. team.

U.S. Wrestling National team walks in during the opening ceremony of Takhti Cup wrestling tournament Tuesday. An Iranian crowd cheered the U.S. flag as it was carried in Iran with love rather than loathing for the first time in 18 years, at the opening of an international wrestling tournament.

EDITORIAL

CBS Olympic coverage colored by perception?

You should care about Nagano. You should care about the figure skating. You should care because it's a lesson in the importance of reading, watching and thinking critically.

CBS' coverage of the Olympics has been mighty boring so far — so much so that the network is succumbing to irresponsible journalism for the sake of some kind of scandal or drama that would increase viewership during the prime-time slot. Have you noticed?

In the absence of a Kerrigan-Harding showdown, the network has scraped up every ounce of controversy or drama in an attempt to spice up its lackluster coverage. First there was the highly sensationalized feature about a Russian pairs skater who was a virtual prisoner under the abuse of a previous partner.

Then there were the repeated allegations of biased judging in the ice-dancing competition. Considering the judging patterns in scores, the assertion didn't seem completely unreasonable. However, CBS insisted on conducting all its coverage, commentary and interviews based on the assumption of bias.

Interestingly enough, The Arizona Republic made no such mention of bias, at least in the Associated Press story it ran. The story noted that a number of other ice dancers began "sniping" about the competition immediately after it was over.

Whom should we believe? CBS' bias was blatant, but not necessarily lacking a factual basis. The AP story run by the Republic didn't appear to even consider biased judging as a reason for the skaters' back-biting, however.

So maybe it's just figure skating. A few more days and it will all be over, right? Maybe so, but it's always important to consider the assumptions that govern a person's statements. As the reader or viewer, you need to realize that bias is always a possibility.

Are there assumptions behind the presentation of a particular story? Are they valid? Does the writer or reporter have a particular world view that explains his or her views? Are they making judgments about a huge issue based on the exceptions instead of the norm?

Ask yourself why an issue might be presented in a certain light — and if that's valid or not.

It's a valuable mindset to have in your classes, too. Obviously the assumptions of a professor aren't particularly important in a math class, but they can be critical in other disciplines.

Does your biology professor interpret everything from an evolutionary standpoint? Is your religious studies professor presupposing the absence of the supernatural? That's not necessarily wrong, but it's nevertheless important to know where someone's coming from.

World views matter. So does truth.

Growth of AIDS epidemic threatens future

I want each of you to do a simple mental exercise. Look around campus and imagine that every one of your fellow students and faculty are dead.

GEOERGE D. ROSE SR.
Columnist

Now drive on any roadway in Tempe, Mesa, Chandler or Gilbert. Imagine that every driver in every car is dead and that every person in every house or apartment in all of these cities is also dead.

It's a sickening thought to imagine this. It's not just to be morbid but to demonstrate just how many people have died from AIDS since world AIDS day this past Dec. 1. More than 600,000 people have died globally since then. More than twice that number have contracted HIV worldwide. This is according to statistics provided by the United Nations. This means that in just over a year more people will die from AIDS than live in the state of Arizona. That's a scary thought.

They say that globally, one in every 50 people has HIV. That means that if this student body was representative of the global situation, there would be almost 1,000 students at ASU with the virus. Another scary thought.

According to Dr. Merson, executive director of the World Health Organization (WHO) Global Program on AIDS, the situation will get worse before the end of the century.

"We are still in the early stages of the epidemic in terms of the disease and death it will cause," Merson said. "So many people have already been infected that the cumulative number of AIDS cases will quadruple by the year 2000."

It is also reported that in industrialized countries the main means of transmission is still through homosexual contact, though the number contracting the disease through heterosexual contact is growing. One in 92 American men aged 27-39 are infected with HIV. The number of women contracting the disease is growing. Unfortunately for women, they are at an increasingly greater risk. Much of their infection comes from IV drug use or contact with males who are IV drug users.

AIDS is now the third leading cause of death in American women ages 25 to 44 and the leading cause of death among African American women.

In areas where the epidemic is full-blown, 60 percent of all new HIV infections are among 15- to 24-year-olds. This age profile matches that of the late high school and college age groups. So why risk it?

The state and federal government have come under increasing criticism about their efforts to promote abstinence among this same age group. Their main objective is to reduce the number of out-of-wedlock births (thus reducing the state's obligation), but a valuable side effect of this would be a significant reduction in exposure to the AIDS virus.

This concept is not popular (especially among young unmarried males looking for partners), but it is the most effective means of avoiding unwanted pregnancy, AIDS and other STDs. Total abstinence by both partners until marriage virtually guarantees freedom from the specter of AIDS. Abstinence may be a difficult thing, but well worth it.

I don't know anyone who has AIDS or HIV that is happy they have it. Most, I'm sure, would take back the act or situation that exposed them to this deadly virus. All wonder about when this killer will take their lives. Most would advise you to avoid risky behavior. All would tell you that AIDS kills.

Look around campus and imagine that every one of your fellow students and faculty are dead ...

Professor remembered

I would like to take a moment to reflect on a now year-old tragedy that escaped mention in the ASU State Press.

Today is the one-year anniversary of the death of one of ASU's finest professors and I cannot, in good conscience, fail to comment on this sad occasion. The ASU community lost a wonderful educator when Professor George Hughston passed away. Dr. Hughston was a professor in the Department of Family Resources and Human Development, until his untimely death last February. Dr. Hughston was active in his field and had also served as the chair of his department in the 1980s. These accomplishments did not distinguish him from many other professors here at ASU, however. What made Dr. Hughston especially valuable as a professor was his unparalleled dedication to teaching undergraduates. That's right, not merely taking on the one or two obligatory classes most professors teach, but actively teaching four or even five sections of undergraduate classes per semester. Many students enrolled in his Personal Growth in Human Relationships (FAS 330), Family Development (FAS 432) and Fundamentals of Marriage and Family Therapy (FAS 440) courses. Students and non-students often recognized him from his televised Personal Growth in Human Relationships course. Dr. Hughston was an animated lecturer, and many students took more than one class from him during their academic careers.

Although his death was not well publicized at the time, students (graduate and undergraduate) and faculty filled Danforth Chapel to beyond capacity at Dr. Hughston's memorial service one year ago. I met George Hughston through my friend (and his teaching assistant) Lois Goldblatt. I chose Dr. Hughston as my graduate committee chairperson, and he happily served as a resourceful mentor to me during my graduate studies. I personally, and many others in the ASU community, continue to feel the loss of the friend, professor and mentor Dr. Hughston was to us. If there is a meaning in Dr. Hughston's sudden and unexpected death, I fail to see it, but I know that I am not alone in my admiration of the unique individual George Hughston was.

We want Newman

I have been following ASU basketball since my freshman year, and have seen it all. From the era of the Freider Fanatics to the horrendous point-shaving scandal, and now the coaching situation. To be quite honest with you, it has made me sick. I attend all of the basketball games week in and week out, and have always supported any decisions the Sun Devil organization has made, but not this one. Don Newman deserves the coaching job at ASU. Not only is this a coach the players can relate to, but he is also a man of integrity, hard work, success and dedication. I don't understand what Mr. White's problem is, looking for a "big name" coach. As far as I am concerned, you already have a big-name coach, Don Newman. With everything this program has gone through in the last four years, you think the least this Mr. White could do is have some faith in what Don has brought to this ball club. But instead, what do you have? You have a guy somewhere up in the organization making decisions that will stand no matter how many games we win this year. Heck, I think we could even win the NCAA National Championship with the seven players that actually play for us, and Mr. White would still say, "Sorry Don, I appreciate what you have done for us, but you're not a big-name coach." This is absolutely ridiculous and the most absurd thing I have ever heard in my life; don't you have a head on your shoulders, Mr. White? Don, let me say this to you, "Thank you for bringing such success to the Sun Devil basketball program this year; you're awesome and we love ya."

Education is issue

I am writing in response to Ms. Craig's article about the English-only test on Feb. 16 ("English-only tests impede student success"). Ms. Craig's argument was ill thought out, if at all, specifically the fact that a 4.0 grade point average is only achieved through hard work, and not to mention near-complete comprehension of the English language. Therefore the student in the scenario would in fact have no problem passing the test, now would they? In regard to foreign exchange students, most of them only come for a semester or two and probably won't need a diploma from an American high school. Now the real injustice is letting kids who are passing with Ds slip through the cracks. Why shouldn't we test them to make sure that they are acquiring the vital skills they will need for the future? Another thing that bothered me about Ms. Craig's article was the fact that race was brought in. As a Hispanic, I know that even though English may not be our first language, guess what? We can still learn English. Now, instead of looking for the impediment of the test, why not look at the benefit for all students, a better education and a brighter future.

Sanctions only hurt U.S. cause

Sometime in the coming days, it is quite likely that the United States

SCOTT D. GILLETTE
Guest Columnist

will engage in military conflict with Iraq.

For the past couple of years, the United States and Iraq have played a cat-and-mouse game, in which Iraq defies the United Nations resolutions by inhibiting the inspection of weapons sites, only to back down at the last minute when the United States sufficiently rattles its sword. During this time, U.S. policy toward Iraq remains in a quagmire — the United States wants to contain Saddam Hussein and maintain its interests in the region, but does not seek to use military force unless absolutely necessary. Such conflicting goals could be compatible were it not for one critical variable.

That variable has been the sanctions against Iraq. The United States has effectively isolated Iraq from the world, but ironically at the expense of our interests, because the sanctions have not helped our cause one iota.

For starters, the sanctions have alienated many nations who were allies of the coalition during the 1991 Gulf War. Russia, always starved for cash, has $8 billion in debt that it seeks to collect from Iraq. France and China also seek closer economic relations with Iraq and reject the sanctions as a policy. Finally, many citizens in Arab states define our policy as imperialistic.

Now there is a danger that some of these nations could conceivably sell military arms to Hussein, but our ability to prevent that scenario would actually increase if we lifted the sanctions. This is because these nations would cooperate with the United States if they have an incentive to do so. Right now, they do not.

Our ability to curtail Saddam Hussein is also hindered by the sanctions. The Iraqi government has repeatedly stressed that it will not seek to cooperate with the U.N. weapons inspectors unless the sanctions are lifted. In fact, Secretary of State Madeleine Albright, has stated that even if the Iraqis comply with the United Nations, the sanctions will not be lifted. As a consequence, Hussein has no incentive to comply and loses nothing if he does not.

This does not imply that Hussein is a sensible individual. He is a psychopath and a serious threat to the international community. But he does understand power, and Hussein would recognize that if world opinion demanded that the weapons inspections continue, on the basis that the sanctions had been lifted, he would have to comply or face the unrestrained power of the United States. For now, he sees no reason to cooperate and is probably unconcerned by the suffering that the sanctions have created.

It is a sad truth in this world that innocent people who have the smallest ability to protect themselves suffer the greatest burdens. Iraq, during the last five years, bears this out. It is no exaggeration to state that hundreds of thousands of people have died from the sanctions. Pope John Paul described them as "pitiless."

For moral and prudential reasons, we should lift the sanctions, while at the same time redoubling our efforts at eliminating the potential for the Iraqi government to produce weapons of mass destruction. Such a policy would provide us the flexibility to get the job done.

Right now, our heavy-handed approach gives Hussein the best cards. These ideas, while considered in some circles, have not changed minds in the corridors of power.

Nothing will change because of this column, but I must say my peace. And time is running out.

George Will once wrote, "Anyone who does think about the 20th century without shivering does not understand the 20th century." The United States, to its eternal credit, combated and eventually vanquished the totalitarian nightmare that pervaded this century. But now our nation has the responsibility to provide the leadership that can keep the peace over the long haul. History will not be kind to the United States if such leadership is not provided.

White House controversies reflection of society's actions

I have been observing the recent fervor over the alleged indiscretions at the White House with increasing dismay.

True, I am disappointed with President Clinton, but I am more disappointed with the American public.

The time has come when we must ask ourselves what really is at issue here. Are we, as a society, truly "up in arms" over our Commander-in-chief, who can't seem to control his sexual impulses?

Yes and no.

This scandal — along with a long list of others — certainly merits a spirited debate (in the press or elsewhere), but the real battle lies in the "changing of the guard" on a system of values that no longer holds appeal for our generation.

ROBERT JEWETT
Guest Columnist

Our society was founded on principles that meant something to the men and women who laid the cornerstone of freedom in our country. Words like honesty, character, excellence, integrity and honor were held as ideals — goals to be obtained.

Certainly, our forefathers were not perfect. They too did less-than-honorable things.

The difference is that our forefathers were held to a standard. They were accountable to the people they served, and that society had an ideal by which to measure their actions.

In our society there is no right or wrong. Not only are excuses like "I had a bad childhood," or "my husband was a jerk" tolerated, but used to defend crimes that range from mass murder to infidelity.

We have evolved from a culture where authority was understood and revered, to one where the individual is expected to have no loyalty but to his or herself.

We, as Americans, have torn down the shrine to God and Country, and in its stead have erected a Monument to Self.

Part of this Great Monument to Self requires that we hold our leaders to a standard other than excellence. What better excuse could there be for our misbehavior than to have a dishonest, lecherous leader conveniently waiting in the wings for us to point to when we are accused?

It is particularly nice when we are accused by our own conscience to have lowered that little standard for everybody, isn't it?

In short, it has been said that every society gets the king that best fits it, and we clearly are no exception to the adage.

Broadcasting majors win 'Baywatch' competition

BY BECKY BEVINS
STATE PRESS

Tuesday's rain wasn't enough to dampen the spirits of more than 200 star-struck ASU students, who showed up at the Student Recreation Complex to try out for the Baywatch national search and win an appearance on the show.

"I'm just here to have fun," said Jaime Reda, a 19-year-old art student who entered the competition.

That seemed to be the sentiment for the entire afternoon's activities.

More than 700 frenzied spectators gathered in the SRC gym to laugh, cheer and admire many of the more physically blessed contestants.

"I am here to cheer on my friends who have entered the competition," said Bryan Tillman, 21, a communications student. "I think it's a cool idea, but I sure don't feel like going up there."

The competition consisted of three rounds — the first of which was the parade of all contestants on-stage to give their name, major and something interesting about themselves.

While many struggled for the answers, there were 20 males and 20 females who displayed the poise and charisma the judges were looking for to move on to round two.

One of the judges for the competition was Michael Bergin, a Baywatch celebrity.

"I am looking for personality, uniqueness and of course a good body," Bergin said. "It's the whole package."

Craig Wright, owner of Baywatch brand shoes, was also on hand to judge contestants and to hand out flip-flops with the Baywatch logo.

"Enthusiasm, sincerity and character are what I am looking for," Wright said. "I think ASU is particularly great because there is such a great diversity represented. There is someone from everywhere up there; Arizona is such a melting pot."

The second round consisted of a question-and-answer session in which the contestants were allowed to display more of their personality and strut their stuff.

Question categories were: gender-bender and general personal information. As a last resort, the less verbal could opt just to dance their time on stage away.

The third and final category consisted of contestants reading from an actual Baywatch script.

The winners were Aubree Knecht, and Josh Meindertsma, both broadcasting majors.

"I had no idea what they were looking for, but I guess it worked out. This is so fabulous," Knecht said.

Meindertsma said he couldn't believe he won.

"I am reeling; I thought I would get up in my Hawaiian shirt and be laughed off of the stage," he said.

After a long day of oozing personality and good looks, the two will get an appearance on Baywatch.

"ASU was a great kickoff to our tour all over the U.S.," said Jason Altshuler, event producer. "This school was great and all of the contestants were great. ASU has got a great mood."

Students sacrifice sleep, warmth for dorm-room assignments

BY ALYSON HURT
SPECIAL TO THE STATE PRESS

With dreams of scoring the "perfect" dorm room, about 20 McClintock Hall residents braved the cold and camped out Monday night in front of the Student Services Building.

Residence Life re-application for students wanting to live in the same dorm but a different room began Tuesday morning and continues through Thursday.

The students, joined early Tuesday morning by other McClintock residents, staked out their place in line in hope of changing from the dorm's "A" rooms to the larger

"B" rooms next year.

"It was like camping out for concert tickets, except that a concert lasts five hours and housing is for two whole semesters," Melissa Mayette, a pre-business major, said. "That's why this was important to us."

Most of the early birds were placed in "B" rooms. Some even organized suite arrangements with friends.

"B" rooms are considered jewels for McClintock residents, due to their scarcity and distribution usually only to returning students. Over the past few years, it has become a McClintock tradition for "A" room residents to camp out the night before re-registration to make sure they snag a "B" room for the next year.

Students arrived as early as Monday afternoon to begin camping out. Mayette and her sister Jessica arrived at 4 p.m.

This year's campers had to endure cold temperatures, which dipped into the 30s Monday night. They were let into the Student Services lobby around 5:30 a.m. Many used that opportunity to take a nap, drawing curious stares from those who worked in the building as they filed in to work.

POLICE REPORT

- A reported that someone damaged a light pole on the southwest side of Neeb Hall.

- A woman not associated with ASU was involved in a single car accident in Area 3.
- A shotgun was impounded for safekeeping by ASU Police.
- An employee reported that someone criminally damaged her 1989 Oldsmobile at Lot 42.
- A man not associated with ASU reported that on Monday he was assaulted by an unknown male at Packard Drive and Rio Salado Parkway.

- An employee reported that she lost one key belonging to the University.

- A student reported that she lost one key belonging to the University.
- A man not associated with ASU was arrested, cited and released for possession of marijuana at Parking Structure 5.

The Tempe police reported the following incidents on Tuesday:

- A man entered a store at 2044 E. Southern Avenue and took some beer from a display. The suspect took the beer to the check-out counter and produced a gun from a holster tucked in the waistband of his pants. He demanded money from the register, then fled the store with the money and the beer. He was not located.
- Two 15-year-old juveniles took several balloons from Danelle Florist shop, 35 W. Southern Ave., and fled the area on foot. The owner of the shop caught up with the suspects at 201 W. Hermosa and recovered the stolen balloons. One suspect pulled out a butterfly knife from his pants pocket and threatened to stab the owner. Both suspects then fled south on Kyrene Road. Officers responded to the scene and spoke to witnesses who were able to identify the suspects. They were arrested at Superstition Park Apartments, and the knife was recovered also.

• An employee of Crescent Jewelers, 1310 W. Elliot Road, was standing outside the locked front door and was approached by a man with a chrome handgun. He pressed it against her side and demanded she open the door. The employee told the suspect she was waiting for the manager to unlock it for her. The manager, who was inside the store, saw the man and called the police. He fled the area. The handgun was found nearby but the suspect was not found.

• Officers responded to a home invasion with suspects at an apartment complex located at 900 W. Grove Parkway. One victim was confronted by three or four suspects in the south parking lot of the complex. He ran but was caught. The suspects demanded money and hit him on the head with a metal rod which caused a 2- to 3-inch gash. The victim was able to escape and run to his apartment. At the same time, two additional suspects escorted another victim to the apartment at gun-point also demanding money. A female occupant had escaped through a bedroom window with her boyfriend, but left behind the male roommate and a friend. One suspect was apprehended, the metal rod was recovered but not the handgun.

Straight from the State Press scanner:

• Two men were seen going into a bathroom in the Farmer Building and locking the door. They would not open the door after several requests from others.

PRESENT & PAST

BY MATT PAULSON
STATE PRESS

Last September Don Newman walked into the media room of the Intercollegiate Athletic Building at ASU and began preparing for what would become the biggest challenge of his career.

The former head coach of Cal-State Sacramento and assistant at other schools, was appointed interim head coach of the men's basketball team for the 1997-98 campaign, replacing Bill Frieder who had resigned a few weeks earlier.

The virtual unknown took what then appeared to be a no-win situation — taking over a troubled ASU program (both on and off the court) and for a big name coach — and turned it into a win-win situation for both the team and himself.

The Sun Devils, currently 16-9 overall and 6-6 in the Pac-10, are guaranteed of having their first winning season since 1994-95. They are a strong possibility for post-season play and with four more wins should be a lock for the NCAA tournament.

Newman is now one of the hottest names in college basketball. He is in the current edition (Feb. 16) of Sports Illustrated and has hosted his own chat line on ESPN Sportszone.

He's been mentioned by his peers and the media as the leading candidate for Pac-10 Coach of the Year and is also a possibility for National Coach of the Year.

If ASU, which was picked to finish last in the conference in the Pac-10 media poll, ends the year with 20 wins, Newman will have the best winning percentage all-time among Sun Devil head coaches.

If he doesn't remain at ASU, Newman has been rumored to be the next head coach of, among other schools Washington State and Oklahoma.

On the other end, Frieder has been enjoying his time away from coaching, staying busy with various activities, but still staying close to the game he loves and has coached for 32 years.

Currently working for Fox Sports, helping out in Michael Jordan and Jason Kidd basketball camps and pondering the idea of managing a hedge fund, Frieder said he's enjoying life and never looks back.

The two coaches, who have been friends for the past 23 years and still talk with each other once a week, sat down on separate occasions with the State Press.

DON NEWMAN

Have you ever been part of such a determined team, as a coach or player?

N: Always, when I was a player. That's just me. But I think these guys are showing such determination and a sense of pride, it's just beautiful to see because they're wearing it. They wear it on the floor. They wear it off the floor. If there ever was a sense of team and a commitment to a cause, these guys are exemplifying it.

When you see the players' comments in the paper, giving you all the credit for that, saying they want you back next season and saying that they might leave if you leave, what's your reaction?

N: We're very close. They know that I'm in their corner, that I'm there for them and I'm out there giving 100 percent along with them. One thing I don't want them to do — they don't have to campaign for me. I want them to take care of their business. I want them to be student athletes. Make sure that they're doing what they should be doing as young college athletes on this campus. Let the powers that be make the decisions on Don Newman and what's going to happen. That way they keep their focus where it should be — our team is where it should be and then we can really achieve what we're capable of achieving. Anything else would be distractions, and I don't want them taking on that responsibility.

How do you feel about the publicity you're getting?

N: Well, I don't know about individually, all I really care about is where the team is going and where the program is going. The rest of the stuff just happens along the way, if it happens at all, but I'd like to think that Don Newman is a very grounded individual. As you mentioned, (I'm) being tabbed as (a top) coach. Last year (3-23 at Cal State Sacramento) I was being tabbed as not so good a coach and maybe a guy who couldn't coach at all. So it's all irrelevant to me. I want these guys to understand that I'm happy for them and this program. I have the ability to coach a major college program and run a winning program and those are the things I want to be known for.

You've said you would like to coach at ASU next year, but if you're not, do you expect that you'll be coaching somewhere?

N: I'd like to think the I've proven that I can coach at this level and this is my profession. Yes, I expect to be coaching next year. All the issues we'll have to be dealt with at the end of the season. It's quickly approaching and we'll see what happens.

Do you feel the job here is still available?

N: I never think it is a closed door. It was (Athletic Director) Kevin (White)'s gut feeling that got Don Newman in this possession. He and I have a very good relationship. We're open in our conversations, and it's a decision that's going to be made at the proper time. Right now the focus is one thing — this ballclub and getting into post season play.

Is this season the pinnacle of your coaching career so far?

N: It can get better with an extension and an opportunity to build a fine program like this. But it's certainly the highest level in college that you can be and when you're locking horns with the (Kansas head coach) Roy Williamses, the Lute Olsons (UofA), the Mike Montgomerys (Stanford) and some of the best in the country and being successful against them, you know you're doing something right.

I look forward to every night when we line up and every day in practice. It represents an opportunity for you to get better as a coach and for your team to get better as a team. That's what I'm all about.

This is a lot of fun, isn't it.

N: Yeah, it is. I have a lot of fun. I love what I do.

BILL FRIEDER

What's life like around the Frieder household these days?

F: It's really been hectic. I'm doing a lot of odds and ends that I've always wanted to do and staying involved with some basketball things. It's kept me really, really busy.

What have you been doing basketball wise?

F: I've done some games for Fox. I'm going to be the director of the Jason Kidd basketball camps this summer both here and in California. I'm still working with the Michael Jordan fantasy camp for men over 35.

Have you ever been antsy to back on the bench during this basketball season?

F: No, not really. I've just kind of moved on.

You don't miss it at all?

F: Not really. I mean obviously when you something for 32 years, you miss it a little, but I've really been so busy that it hasn't been that noticeable.

Have you had any other coaching offers?

F: Not really. No, and I don't know what I would do if I got any.

So, are you done with coaching?

F: I don't know. I've moved on.

When opportunities come up, you access them and go from there. But there is no reason to look back and no reason to project ahead on things you don't know about.

How do you like being a broadcaster?

F: It's been fun. I've really enjoyed it. I don't know if I would do it for a living, but to do it as a sideline has been kind of fun. It keeps you in the game and keeps you close to the game. It's just a way to stay involved in basketball without all the pressures of being a coach.

The ASU men's basketball team has surprised everybody this season.

Has it surprised you that much?

F: When Kevin White and I accessed the team and when I talked to Don Newman about our team when I hired him, we knew we were going to be a lot better. We knew we were going to have a winning season. We would have been disappointed without a post season tournament. That was for several reasons.

A year ago we had six new players after we had lost five players in the spring. You just don't win in this league with six new players. Then on top of it, it was the toughest the league had ever been. Four teams went to the Sweet 16 and our fifth place team won the national championship.

This year, half of those team lost everybody. Oregon lost their whole

No. 6 Sun Devils should get good test from other Cougars

BY LORI HARO
STATE PRESS

The No. 6 ASU baseball team (10-3) will once again face the Cougars when they take the field today at 4 p.m. at Packard Stadium.

However, this time it will not be against Washington State but BYU.

The Cougars are currently 5-1 after playing Air Force, Southern Colorado and the University of San Francisco. BYU lost 15-6 in the one game they played against San Francisco.

The Cougars were 37-18 last season, good for second in the WAC North. The Sun Devils lead the Cougars in the all-time series 35-8. ASU was scheduled to play the Cougars last year in the Fiesta Bowl Diamond Classic, but ironically it was rained out. ASU made up the game later that weekend and won 9-3 with Phill Lowery pitching.

In 1996, ASU beat BYU twice, with Lowery getting the win in the second game 15-5.

The Cougar's strength lies within its offense. Outfielders sophomore Spencer Oborn and senior Brad Winget are top returnees for the Cougars and will anchor the outfield. Oborn hit .403 last season with 15 home runs and 75 RBI. Winget hit .370.

"They're a good ball club and Gary Pullins is one of the finest coaches," head coach Pat Murphy said. "BYU wins 35-40 games a year. They'll be a great test for us."

This season Winget is batting .640 (16-25) with six RBI. Oborn is hitting .370 with 10 hits and three RBI.

The Cougars' pitchers have a combined 5.33 ERA. Right-handers Jeremy Thomas, Jeremy Guthrie and Wesley Zlotoff all have one win. Thomas has a 1.08 ERA with 10 strikeouts.

After a total of seven pitchers were used in Sunday's game against Washington State, head coach Pat Murphy decided to go with right-hander Richy Leon for the start. Leon has made three pitching appearances this season, his first in the alumni game where he pitched one inning allowing one run on one hit with two strikeouts.

Leon also pitched an inning at Hawaii-Hilo allowing no runs on no hits with no walks and one strikeout. He closed out Sunday's game allowing no runs on one hit with one walk and two strikeouts.

"I just think it'll be a mental change (going from closer to starter)," Leon said. "I've just got to change my mind set from just hitting and playing defense to pitching."

Pitchers Chuck Crumpton, Aaron Kramer, Chad Pennington, Drew Friedberg and Robby Milner will probably also see time on the mound.

Junior Michael Collins will get the start at shortstop while Leon pitches. Senior Rudy Arguelles will be back in center field. Arguelles has been out with an abdominal tear since the Hawaii-Hilo series in the beginning of February.

Murphy thinks that this midweek game should be a good test for the team before heading out to take on Cal this weekend. The series will open up Six Pac play for the Sun Devils and will be the second road trip of the season for ASU.

team. Southern Cal lost four starters. Cal lost five starters. Washington State lost a lot of people, and we had a lot of people back.

But what Newman has done is exceeded everybody's expectations and done far better than anyone, including myself could have anticipated.

What do you think Newman's secret is?

F: I've known Don for 23 years now. I recruited him in high school. When I hired him, I liked his enthusiasm, his work ethic and the fact that he's very positive. I think he brought all that to ASU this year and I think it's worked.

If you were Athletic Director, would you make Newman one of the candidates for head coach next season?

F: I've got to make sure I get quoted accurately on this. I've been burnt on this. I think Kevin White will do what's the very best for Arizona State University. He will make the right decision. Now, if that means he can get a guy like Gene Keady from Purdue or Rick Majerus from Utah or who ever else, he's deciding upon in the high profile coaching area, then it's going to be hard for him not to hire that person.

On the other hand, if the list that I'm hearing about and reading about in the papers, — and I'm not saying they're coming from the athletic department — if that's the list, the list with assistant coaches and coaches with losing records and first- and second-year coaches, then Don Newman belongs on that list. He should be interviewed if those people are going to be interviewed. He'll make the right decision and if he can get a high profile coach, he's probably got to go that direction. Everybody would support that.

Weekly Beer Trivia

Beer's the reason the Pilgrims landed at Plymouth Rock. It's clear from the Mayflower's log that the crew didn't want to waste beer looking for a better site. The log goes on to state that the passengers "were hasted ashore and made to drink water that the seamen might have more beer."

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST
by Frances Drake

Wednesday, February 18, 1998

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) It's decision-making time. Whether a domestic or work concern, you have no room to vacillate. Once this is resolved, you can relax.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) Answering phone calls, e-mail and snail mail clears your schedule for an important work project. A direct inquiry deserves a direct answer. Be candid.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) A new hobby or interest captivates you. However, you need to be sure to tend to that project at work. Evening hours can be devoted to your new diversion.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) You feel as though a big weight has been removed from your shoulders. Cares of the past simply melt away. Share this good mood with loved ones.

LEO (July 23 to Aug. 22) Some start the day with a bit of a hangover. However, as time goes on, you regain your admirable energy. You can be quite productive.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 to Sept. 22) You're being a bit petty and you know it. You need to lighten up on that loved one. Once you do, harmony is assured.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) Your creative juices are flowing quite nicely. In fact, you're positively inspired. A late-night excursion proves educational.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) This isn't the time to let your guard down. Stick to your usual diligence on the work front. A domestic concern takes up the evening hours.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) You've set your sights on a goal and that's admirable. However, don't be so focused on this that you ignore the needs of friends and family.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 19) A co-worker has a helpful suggestion that you'd be wise to heed. On the home front, a child is being a bit uncooperative. Be sure to lay down the law.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 to Feb. 18) You're all work and no play as you go about your day. As a result, you accomplish much more than you'd thought you would originally. Feel free to relax during evening hours.

PISCES (Feb. 19 to March 20) You have more time than you think to complete your tasks. If you cram them into one day, you're more apt to make mistakes. An evening entertainment is a nice diversion.

YOU BORN TODAY are very particular about your home and your clothes. Cleanliness and neatness are of paramount importance to you. Some view this as a bit compulsive, but you are happiest when everything is in order. Your logical mind embraces mathematics and science most readily.
