Late charges increased for registration

BY BECKY BEVINS
STATE PRESS

Procrastination costs at ASU.

Students will be charged a higher penalty for late registration, with an increase from $10 to $25 effective this fall.

"We want to encourage students to register earlier for classes," said Jerry Snyder, ASU comptroller and treasurer. "Students who wait to register during the first week of the term are at risk of enrolling in classes that are already full and are creating problems within the registration process."

This increase will effect the 8 percent of the student population that waits until the first week of classes to register.

The last increase came in 1961 when the penalty was increased from $5 to $10. The increase will raise penalty fees to the other two state universities' level.

Aside from ensuring openings in classes, Snyder said registering early improves student performance because they are able to attend the first day of classes.

"We need to plan courses and course availability so that students can be accommodated and avoid lines across campus during the first week of the term," Snyder said. "Students who are registering late due to financial aid need to get their applications in earlier to avoid the penalty."

Steve Goldberg, a 23-year-old sociology major, said the fee increase ignores legitimate reasons for late registration.

"I think that the increase fails to take into consideration

Chew on this: stadium food proposal nixed

BY TIMOTHY TAIT
STATE PRESS

Stop packing the cooler — outside food is still prohibited in stadiums.

The state legislature killed a bill which would have opened the gates of publicly-funded arenas to outside food and beverages. The bill, proposed by Rep Jean McGrath, R-Glendale, was drafted to break the monopoly on refreshments in stadiums built with tax money.

The proposal, however, came under fire from managers of university arenas.

Tom Sadler, Sun Devil Stadium manager, said he feared a flood of alcohol into the stadium. Sadler said security would be increased to screen out the booze and predicted long lines to get in to events.

"I am really happy that it is dead," Sadler said. "It could have caused a lot of problems for us operationally, specifically with Sun Devil Stadium."

Currently, ASU officials allow sports fans to bring in some food and water. Alcohol is prohibited for all collegiate sports, but beer is served for other events in Sun Devil Stadium.

McGrath drafted the bill after the Arizona Diamondbacks announced plans to ban all outside food and beverages from the new Bank One Ballpark in Phoenix.

While the ball team changed those plans and will allow small coolers, McGrath said it wasn't enough. Because the stadium is funded by taxpayers, fans should be allowed to bring in goodies, she said.

"People have paid for these stadiums. They should not have to pay exorbitant prices," McGrath said before the bill was killed in a 25-15 vote March 11. "I resent the fact that I have to eat junk food when I go to a game."

Sadler said he thought the lobbying powers of the Diamondbacks, as well as ASU and UofA, helped in the bill's defeat, which would have affected stadiums with a capacity of 15,000 people and up. Cactus League spring training stadiums would have been excluded but ASU and UofA facilities would have been forced to comply if the law had been approved.

Sadler said he expected the bill to make a cameo appearance if fans aren't happy with the leniency of the food policy in the Bank One Ballpark.

And what happens at the ballpark could affect university facilities.

"The bill will resurface if there is an outcry from the public depending on what happens or doesn't happen at the ballpark," Sadler said. "If the public isn't happy, we could see this return."

Stay or go: Tempe schools await district's decision

BY AISLINN FAHY
STATE PRESS

For the first time in 15 years the Tempe School District will permanently close some school doors in response to the district's declining student enrollment.

Enrollment in Tempe schools has decreased by 125 students each of the past three years. Although it has not been decided which of Tempe's 23 schools will shut down, officials have already started planning for the inevitable.

"Of all the things I have had to do this is the thing, as superintendent, I have really not wanted to do," said Mary Ann Lawson, superintendent for the Tempe School District. "Nobody wants to close schools, but we have simply run out of options."

Lawson and other school officials spoke to a room full of faculty, concerned parents and residents Tuesday night at the first in a series of informative sessions, called Project Efficiency, at Fees Middle School.

An advisory board of representatives from each school began looking into the closures in December.

"This is really the only alternative we have left to explore," Lawson said, adding that the district didn't want to get rid of school music, physical education, library and computer programs.

No specific number of school closures has been determined, but the changes are set for the 1999-2000 school year. Once the buildings close the district plans to rearrange school boundaries to balance enrollment.

Tim Leedy, the district director of finance, said if enrollment continues to decline, more school closures will be inevitable.

"Closing a few schools is not a silver bullet that will solve all of our problems," Leedy said. "There is no magic figure when it comes to our funding as long as we don't have the students to fill our classrooms."

Leedy said the district has lost a total of 488 students since the 1994-1995 school year, which means funding of $2,550 per pupil, totaling $1.2 million, has been lost.

"This is money that we had a few years ago and we simply don't have now," he said, adding that increasing expenses exacerbate the problem.

Tempe opened 18 schools between 1961 and 1975. Declining enrollment hit the district in the early 1980s and the district decided it could no longer financially support all of its schools. Three schools were eventually shut down: Rural School, Mitchell School and Ward School.

Rural School eventually became the Smith's grocery store that sits on the corner of Rural and Southern roads and Ward School, near Price and Southern roads, became the Tri City Jewish Community Center. Mitchell School, a mile west of ASU, was purchased by Tempe under a lease/purchase agreement.

More than 15 years later, the Tempe School District is again burdened with low enrollment, and officials say deciding which schools to close will not be an easy task.

"It's not like we can just take the two or three schools with the lowest enrollment and close them," said Nancy Taylor, schoolboard president. "We have to look at what is best for the district as a whole."

Lawson predicted the effects of the 1996 budget crunch and consulted faculty, parents and residents for ways to alleviate the problems without cutting priority programs. Parents felt the district should maintain and support fine arts, Lawson said, as well as physical education, employee salaries and minimal class size as priorities.

Combining or closing schools was the last of a series of suggestions made last fall by parents.

"We thought we could get over the hump," said Kathy Bareiss, district spokeswoman. "The budget cuts were simply not deep enough."

Bareiss said the district is once again going to parents and asking them to get involved in most recent discussions.

The next meeting is scheduled for 7 p.m. Tuesday at Fees Middle School, 1600 E. Watson Drive, and will be both informational and question-and-answer.

The final meetings will be held the following three Tuesdays at 7 p.m. at the District Office, 3205 S. Rural Road.

Bareiss said that the district has dealt with similar problems in the past, and the key is to provide enough information to the decision-makers to ensure a good solution.

"It was hard then, and it will be hard now," Bareiss said. "We need to think of the best solution that will have the least amount of impact on our kids."

THE FOLLOWING INFORMATION WAS RELAYED TO THE STATE PRESS AFTER PRESS TIME MONDAY:

4 killed, 11 wounded in Arkansas schoolyard ambush

By JENNY PRICE
ASSOCIATED PRESS

JONESBORO, Ark. — Two boys in camouflage lay in wait in the woods behind their school, then opened fire with rifles on classmates and teachers when they came out during a false fire alarm Tuesday. Four girls were killed and 11 other people were wounded, including two teachers.

An 11-year-old and a 13-year-old boy were caught trying to run away shortly after the midday ambush at the Westside Middle School, police said. A third boy who allegedly pulled the fire alarm was being sought.

Authorities said as many as 27 shots were fired. Youngsters ran screaming back inside the school as their classmates fell bleeding, then cried as they waited for emergency workers.

"Someone pulled the fire alarm inside and they went outside, and two people in camouflage clothing started shooting," said Connie Tolbert, a secretary.

"We thought it was just firecrackers," said one student, Brandy George. "I saw one of my teachers get shot. I started running towards the gym."

Said paramedic Charles Jones: "We had children lying everywhere. They had all been shot."

Sheriff Dale Haas cried as he recounted the shootings.

Two of the dead girls were 12 and one was 11, state police spokesman Bill Sadler said. He did not know the age of the fourth victim. Their identities were not immediately released.

Ten of the wounded were female, including the two teachers, who required surgery and were listed in critical condition. Five wounded girls were admitted in stable condition. Three girls and one boy were treated and released. The wounded students were between 11 to 13 years old.

The school has about 250 students in sixth and seventh grades. Jonesboro is a city of 46,000 about 130 miles northeast of Little Rock.

The two boys, wearing camouflage shirts, pants and hats, were caught near the school with handguns and rifles. Officer Terry McNatt said they offered no resistance and said little. The boys, both students at the school, were being held at the county jail.

Investigators said the boys were running in the direction of a white van found about a half-mile away from the school with more guns and ammunition in it. It wasn't immediately certain if the vehicle was related to the shootings.

Karen Pate, a parent volunteer, was in the school gym when the fire alarm went off just after sixth-graders had finished lunch and returned to their classrooms. She fled outside and "saw girls falling to the ground."

"I helped one teacher who had been shot in the abdomen get out of there where she could lay down and we could start medical attention," Mrs. Pate said.

"Another student had got shot in the leg. As soon as she got hit, she couldn't walk and she fell into the doorway."

Mrs. Pate and her sixth-grade daughter were not hurt.

President Clinton, on a visit to Kampala, Uganda, said in a statement that he and the first lady were "deeply shocked and heartbroken."

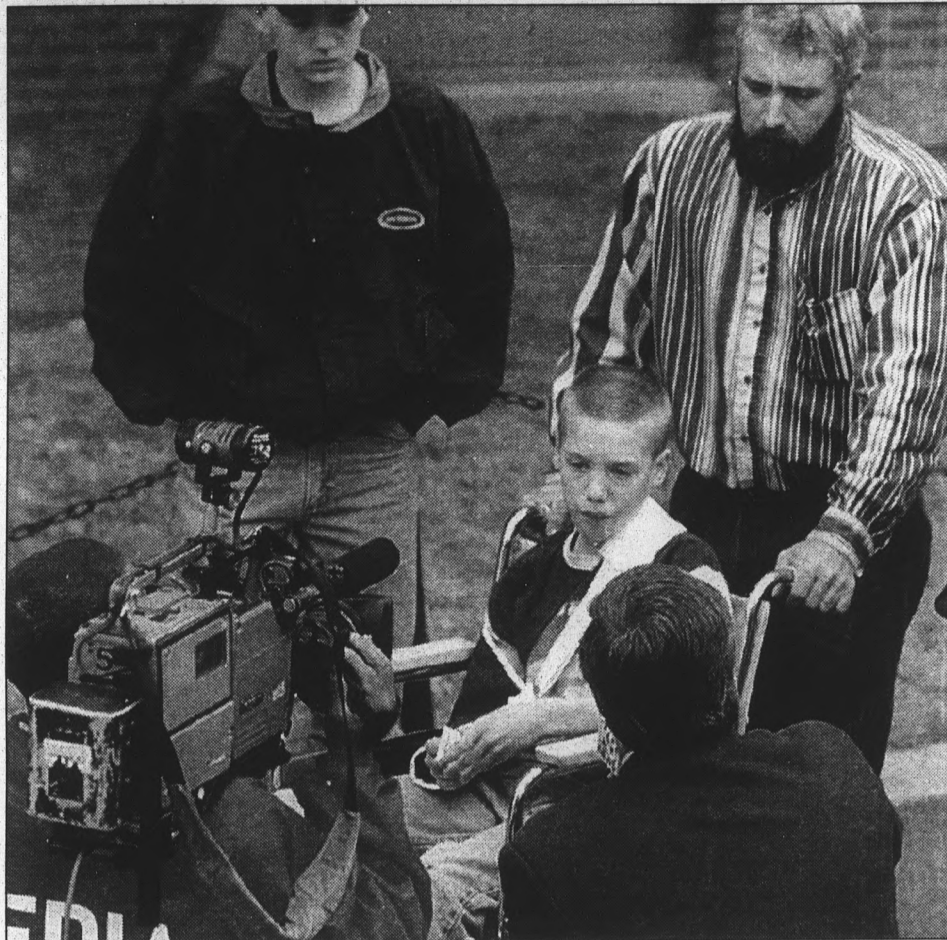

"We don't know now and we may never fully understand what could have driven two youths to deliberately shoot into a crowd," he said. "Our thoughts and prayers are with the victims, their families and the entire Jonesboro community."

Gov. Mike Huckabee said he was angry, as a parent, that such a tragedy could happen at a public school.

"It makes me angry not so much at indi-

It makes me angry not so much at individual children that have done it as much as angry at a world in which such a thing can happen.

vidual children that have done it as much as angry at a world in which such a thing can happen," he said.

Arkansas law does not prohibit minors from possessing shotguns or rifles, but it does bar people younger than 21 from possessing handguns. Other laws prohibit anyone from possessing a gun on public property or with criminal intent.

It was at least the third fatal shooting rampage in a school in the past five months.

On Dec. 1, a boy opened fire on a student prayer circle at a high school in West Paducah, Ky., killing three students and wounding five.

A 14-year-old student, described as small and emotionally immature, was arrested.

Two months earlier, a 16-year-old out-cast in Pearl, Miss., was accused of killing his mother, then going to school and shooting nine students. Two of them died, including the boy's ex-girlfriend. Authorities later charged six friends with conspiracy, saying the suspects were part of a group that dabbled in satanism.

On Dec. 15, a sniper in the woods wounded two students outside a school in the southwestern Arkansas town of Stamps. A 14-year-old boy was arrested after a manhunt.

Posters of a century on Web, at museum

By CARL HARTMAN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A drawing of a female nude that won second prize in a contest for the cover of an upscale magazine 100 years ago went on the World Wide Web on Tuesday in a show of posters at the Museum of American Art.

The date was August 1897 and Maxfield Parrish, one of the period's most popular artists, did the brightly colored lithograph for the monthly Century. Now no longer published, the magazine was a kind of 19th century New Yorker, according to the Library of Congress.

Parrish's designs, often featuring lush settings and female nudes, were produced for a wide variety of magazines, said Therese Thau Heyman, curator of the "Posters American Style" show.

All 120 posters in the show are online, from 1890s bicycle ads to a sharp image of the cockpit of a Boeing 777. Also included are images such as a stern, finger-pointing Uncle Sam recruiting for World War I, Marilyn Monroe poised over Niagara Falls in a movie ad and Norman Rockwell's evocation of freedom of speech — a young man in a windbreaker at a town meeting.

There's also Joan Baez and her two sisters in a black-and-white photo poster urging resistance to the Vietnam War, with the caption "Girls Say Yes to Boys Who Say No."

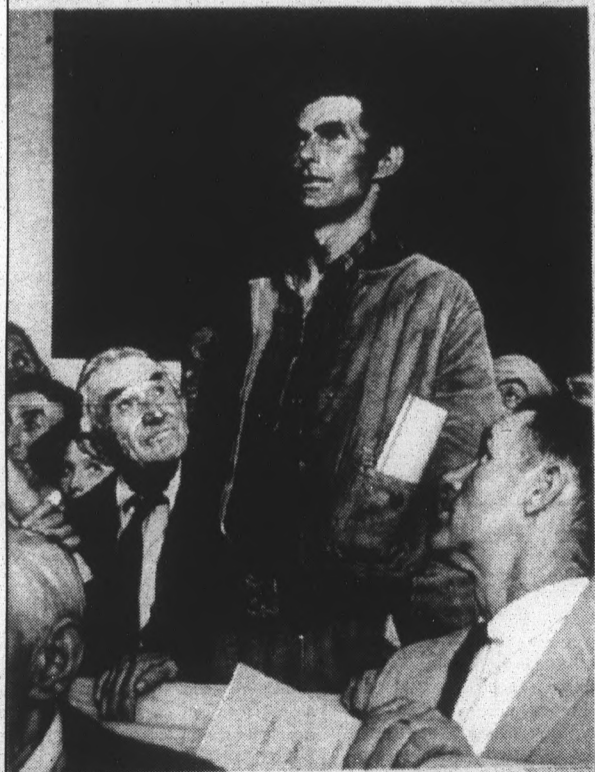

Also on the web site portion of the show is an elaborate system of references and background on the posters. It tells, for example, how Rockwell's posters initially were rejected for World War II propaganda in Washington and then won nationwide fame as covers of The Saturday Evening Post.

The site provides material on each artist, general social and political background on each poster and an explanation of the lithographic process by which many posters were produced.

The exhibit closes in Washington on Aug. 9. Admission is free.

Former Mormon accused of planning missionary abduction

MOSCOW (AP) — The kidnapping of two Mormon missionaries in southern Russia was plotted by a former member of the Mormon community, a Russian news agency reported Tuesday.

Andrew Lee Propst, 20, of Lebanon, Ore., and Travis Robert Tuttle, 20, of Gilbert, Ariz., were freed Sunday after being held for five days in Saratov, 450 miles southeast of Moscow.

Two suspects — a man and a woman — were arrested Sunday and Monday and have confessed to taking part in the kidnapping, Russian officials said. A third suspect remains at large.

Federal Security Service officials Vladimir Terentyev and Sergei Boldyrev said the man arrested Sunday was a 44-year-old businessman who co-founded a branch of the Mormon church in Saratov in 1993 and then quit the church, the Interfax news agency reported. The suspect's name was not disclosed.

The suspect asked a friend to invite the missionaries to his apartment, where masked men hit them over the head with sticks, Interfax quoted the investigators as saying.

The missionaries were forced into a van and moved to an apartment. There, the abductors photographed them and drew up a $300,000 ransom note, Interfax said. The note included a threat that the two would be killed if police were contacted.

According to the investigators, the suspect was motivated by financial reasons, the ITAR-Tass news agency reported. After four days, the kidnappers freed the hostages without being paid.

After being questioned by police in Saratov, Propst and Tuttle went to Samara, site of the Mormons' regional headquarters, ITAR-Tass said. From there, they were to go to Frankfurt, Germany.

The church's European spokeswoman, Gabrielle Sirtl, said the two men will be reassigned to other Mormon Church missions.

EDITORIAL

Serving community goal of today's forum

Now that the spring-break hangovers and sunburns are fading, you should be free to contemplate other things. Like the State Press.

Believe it or not, we'd actually like to know what you think — and you have the opportunity for face-to-face interaction with members of our editorial board today.

Spurred by recent events, such as our publication of a controversial cartoon by Brian Fairrington, the State Press is presenting an opinion forum in conjunction with the Memorial Union Activities Board.

The forum is at 12:30 p.m. in the MU Programming Lounge. We'd like you to come — and we'd like you to do most of the talking.

The State Press is actually quite similar to the Associated Students of ASU in that we both represent and serve students. As such, it's very important for both organizations to be connected with the communities they interact with and for.

We've devoted plenty of ink to possible ways for ASASU to improve community and representation thereof, but we realize that it's important for us to do the same.

The editorial pages do a lot to give you a voice, but sometimes it takes more than that. And we're aware of this.

Of course, it's a two-way street. In order for ASASU and us to succeed in engaging the community, you have to care. You have to read our paper, vote in their elections. Passive membership doesn't accomplish much.

Hopefully the State Press discourages apathy and passiveness. Our aim is to inform, educate, entertain, amuse and occasionally provoke you. We care about what we do — and we hope you care too.

It's because we care that we're having the forum. While your emotions may have cooled somewhat over the last week, that doesn't make your opinions — and especially your suggestions — any less important to us.

We realize we've alienated some of our readers; the forum is an attempt at repairing that relationship. Communities don't function very well when there's enmity between members.

So come to the forum and let us know what you think, what your suggestions and recommendations for improvements are. This paper is, after all, put out by people — not just amorphous names etched in an inky box on some page.

We'd like to listen to your concerns, and we'd especially like to listen to your suggestions. Our goal is to serve you, and that's something we can always do better. But we can't do that unless we know what your needs are.

We can't effectively serve and represent a community whose heartbeat we're not in sync with.

Parenthood — a job not to be taken lightly

M is for the many things she gave me.
O is for the other things she gave me.
T is for the times that she has left me.
H is for the hits received by me.
E is for the empty promises to me.
R is for the rage that sits inside me ...

It's funny. I don't remember these being the words to the song. But unfortunately it is a song that is sung by too many of our nation's youth.

When a woman gives birth, it is a wonderful, beautiful moment. She has carried this creation inside her for nine months: 36 weeks; 270 days. Then that life is placed in her arms, entrusted to her to love and nurture, to educate and give full support to, guiding that life to adulthood.

Somewhere along the way, some women didn't get the Official Mom Handbook.

Whether they learned it or didn't learn it from their own mother, or if it is for purely selfish reasons, too many women are abusing their children. Some would say abuse is a strong word, but usually it's from those inflicting it. I don't care what these women say — physical, emotional and sexual abuse does nothing but hurt, and sometimes even kill, a child.

There's an old saying, "It's a shame that we must have a license to own a dog but don't need one to raise children." Maybe there should be licenses, because over the past several years the number of abused children in our society has grown at an alarming rate.

We've heard of women who claim their child is lost or stolen, only to learn later that the disappearance, and usually death, was caused by the mother.

Several weeks ago, a Fountain Hills woman was accused of attacking her son with an ax because she was "under extreme stress."

More recently, Valley resident Kelly Blake allegedly put her three children into a tool shed and torched it, before dousing gasoline on herself and setting herself on fire. Because of her selfish act, two more of our youth lay dead at the hand of a parent.

What could possibly be so wrong with a child, or how bad could that child possibly be, for a mother to torture a child in this manner? Is there any stress, any unhappiness, any disappointment that a woman may go through that warrants that she turn these negative emotions towards a defenseless child?

And what puts the icing on the cake is that there are some women who will start the abuse before birth.

It bothers me more than anything to see a woman aglow from pregnancy raise a cigarette to her mouth. Or to hear those women who continue their drug usage because "my other kids came out okay ..." It is the same child who weighs less than five pounds at birth, is extremely shy growing up and is always two years behind others mentally.

What are these women thinking?! Are they so selfish that torturing their own body is not enough? What will it take for these women to realize that if they make the choice to carry a child to full-term, and decide to raise him or her, they only need to do one thing.

They don't need to worry about always being the best mom in the world. They don't need to be disappointed about not being able to give their child everything. All they need to do is love that child — unconditionally love that child, and let him or her know that no matter what he or she does, says or feels, Mom will always be there.

It may get hard at times, and the road may get long at others, and they might not agree with what their child says or the choices he or she makes. But one should never, ever take it out on a child.

Remember, our children are our future. If we take this away from them, or destroy them from abuse in the process, what kind of future can we expect to have?

Gallery overlooked

I wanted to comment on the article about the East 7th Art Market. I think that it is very unfortunate that people think that this gallery is a new concept in Tempe. There is a gallery that is totally and completely accessible to local artists, and more importantly, to ASU students. This gallery that I speak of is curated and managed solely by ASU students. Students can gain technical skills in running a gallery, in addition to exhibiting their work. Over the past 20 years, this gallery has exhibited work from students and local artists. Purchases have been made from artists, rather than asking them to donate art work.

Where would you think that a gallery like this exists? Would you believe that it is right here on campus in the Memorial Union? I am sure that you have walked past it a thousand times and never really took notice to the purpose of the gallery. This gallery is about you, your talents and dreams. Why do so many students neglect the resources that are so readily available to them?

I encourage anyone that is interested in art, whether you are an artist or not, to find out more about what the Union Gallery has to offer. First and foremost, the Union Gallery is an experimental field for students to gain experience about the magnificent art world. Contrary to Gilligan's comments, Tempe has had a gallery like the East 7th Art Market for over 20 years. It is a shame that the Union Gallery's potential and opportunities have been overlooked by ASU art students and local artists.

DUI debate

I can't believe you printed that crap on March 23 by David Wright, chair of the Public Safety Advisory Committee. Not only are his statements just plain dumb, but wholly lack any substance. Someone in his position should know what the law is in Arizona, with respect to DUI's, and rhetoric of a sob story does neither the public, nor his argument, any service. I'm further a little perturbed at the fact that our law school here on campus rarely is a deaf mute when it comes to providing factual information to the university community. The law in Arizona, with respect to DUI, is very clear and it's even written into its title ... "Under" the "Influence." In Arizona you can be found guilty if you are "under the influence." This can be .04, .09, 1.0 or even 2.3. What Wright and Gregor McGavin are discussing is completely irrelevant, with the exception of a prosecution's tactical advantage. The only reason why you would want to lower the BAC reading to .8 is because it creates a prima facie case for the state. It's a prima facie situation with MVD right now if you blow a .10 or more, guess what, you're guilty regardless of the circumstances. It doesn't matter if you were trying to save Mother Teresa's life ... if you have a reading of .10 or more, end of story. This is what the state wants to do by eventually lowering the amount, where if you really do only have one sip, you're guilty.

All Americans abroad deserve support in a crisis

Last Wednesday, 20-year-old Travis Tuttle of Gilbert was abducted in Saratov, Russia, while serving on a mission for his church. Sunday, he and his companion, Andrew Propst, were released with only minor injuries.

I don't hesitate to celebrate this happy ending. We are all relieved and grateful. But rather than view this as an isolated case of good fortune, I challenge all involved to look at this as a lesson learned that should prompt new standard responses for similar circumstances.

We should commend the American and Russian governments, mass media and informed citizens for their attention and action last week. The National Security Council, the State Department, the U.S. Embassy in Moscow and some U.S. legislators all turned attention to the kidnapping. Four FBI agents, including one experienced in hostage negotiations, were dispatched to assist Russian officials. The local Russian governor even collected funds to pay the $300,000 ransom, actively preparing for negotiations if officials decided to pursue such action.

On the home front, Americans from near and far, regardless of creed, flooded the young men's families with phone calls, pledging themselves to pray for their safe return. The media provided front-page coverage and daily news updates.

It appears that saturated public attention had a direct, positive effect. In fact, though speculative, such pressure may have been the crucial component to the men's releases. News accounts have said the kidnapers are believed to have backed off once they saw the intense attention their money-scheming plan drew. The men were recovered quickly and safely. No ransom money was paid, and two of the initial three suspects have been arrested. This was clearly a victory.

However, the unsettling truth is that Tuttle and Propst are not the first Americans to be abducted by captors hoping to get money. Kidnappings are not confined to missionaries either. Executives, tourists — basically Americans in general — are all-too-common targets. Perhaps most difficult to swallow is that few cases have received such attention. There are other sisters like Cambria and Michelle Tuttle, other fathers like Lee Propst and Roy Tuttle. But unlike them, many families have waited months — even years — for news or action to prompt the release of loved ones.

The families of Mark Rich, Dave Mankins and Rick Tenenoff would tell you this is all too true. Rich, Mankins and Tenenoff were abducted January 31, 1993, while serving in Panama for Florida-based New Tribes Mission. The men are believed to have been taken by members of the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia, known as FARC. Despite multiple press releases and a televised appearance of the victims' wives at the five-year anniversary of the missionaries' disappearance, few know of the men's plight or are involved in the case.

World magazine reported that Rich Cizik of the National Association of Evangelicals, said "No one has ever asked us to get involved. If someone were to make the need known, we would do something."

Cizik's response was typical of those contacted about the case, including members of Congress who concentrate on human rights and foreign affairs. With so few informed, I question just how committed we could be to recovering Rich, Mankins and Tenenoff. How many others are seemingly lost and forgotten? Are we really standing up for the rights to freedom and life for these fellow Americans? These victims and others like them are no less our own while abroad, and no less deserving of our help than Tuttle and Propst.

Law enforcement agencies and missions groups face extreme difficulty in handling hostage situations. To reason with terrorists, or try and predict what they will do, is a tricky endeavor. Many have a no-ransom policy to protect others from being future targets. There is good reason for this — to avoid encouraging others to try their luck at ransom profiting. But giving into ransoms versus applying pressure, are not synonymous. Pressure is needed for accountability on all levels. Media attention sparks citizens to pressure involvement of public officials. Public officials have the political and economic leverage to pressure foreign governments. Governments in cooperation can equip and push their law enforcement agencies to efficiently work together in cracking investigations. When all of these things are occurring, the pressure put on the terrorists will pile up, and hopefully, fewer will be able to take the heat.

Terry Anderson, who was taken captive for seven years while serving as the Associated Press bureau chief in Beirut, told World that more can be done to uncover terrorists' pressure points. Anderson said we should be asking, "Who sponsors them? Is the Colombian government doing what it can? They have bought out their own people; why aren't they doing something on our behalf? Why have not Americans been negotiated out in one of those deals?"

I couldn't agree more. It's time to put on the pressure. Let us address this while the topic is still fresh in our minds with last week's success regarding Tuttle and Propst. May we not let their story go down in history as a rare display of American action. May their victory become the rule and not the exception. Current political actions in ASASU affect students' future expectations

Ahhh, politics. College of Business senator Andrew Lefberg has thrown his endorsement in the ring. He has chosen Craig "Big Wind" Reid as his pick for ASASU president.

Lets look at these two guys for a second, and find out what exactly this means.

A conversation I recently had with Craig (currently serving senator) Reid, made me believe that he had energized the college he represents. His understanding and compassion, although longwinded, raised my hopes that he might be the man for the job.

Then I woke up

Let me ask this simple question. If "Big Wind" was having such a great impact on his college by getting people involved and making things happen, why are there no candidates to take his place in the senate? What kind of leader leaves an empty seat, so that his constituents, the ones he's been fighting so hard to represent, become unrepresented as he claws his way up the political ladder?

Big Wind.

Since it's obvious I'm not going to endorse this guy, let me tell you about his supporters, chiefly Andrew Lefberg, and why these people are so dangerous to student government at ASU.

Lefberg is a serving senator from the College of Business. He endorses "Big Wind," who just happens to be 31 years old. Not a problem, since the average age of ASU students is about 26. But every time I see Lefberg, he points out something about my age (I'll be 28 in about a week), and makes it plain that he feels someone as old as me should not be involved in student government.

The last time I checked, there were no age limits to civic involvement, and his own candidate is more than three years older than me!

Lefberg's guest column in the State Press a few weeks ago pointed out an even more amazing contradiction.

When speaking of the executive vice president Josh Carr, he plainly states, and I quote, "I for one would not put up with someone like myself (at certain times) if I was in his position. I would have thrown that person out of a meeting when that type of behavior occurred."

Is he saying that he is acting this way because he can get away with it? What happened to "do unto others?" What happened to courtesy? What happened to behaving like an adult when you represent the entire College of Business in an official proceeding?

That same column asks me directly why I don't put off graduation, so that I can serve the students I care so much about. I would ask him the same question, but he's not graduating. He's still going to be on campus next year. He's still going to care about the students he represented, but he's not running. If I cared, I would ask him why.

Then there's the letter he wrote on Nov. 18. In it, Lefberg publicly promotes the "coincidence" of his legislation and the lowering of prices at Burger King.

Please. There were many students involved with that process, and Lefberg tried to take all the credit. When challenged with his actions, he points to the word "coincidence" in his letter to try to say he's not taking credit for what happened.

I've already been thanked for calling him out on all this stuff, but his College of Business friends need to know one more thing before I sign off.

Last fall, Andrew Lefberg was the driving force behind a senate bill that was intended to pay senators RETROACTIVELY for volunteer jobs they were currently serving in. He wanted to be paid, with tuition dollars, for volunteer service he had already performed. Unethical is an understatement.

And now he wants to endorse "Big Wind," his senate crony, for ASASU president.

I am sad for all College of Business students. Although Andrew has a charming personality, and gets along well with others, he is the last person I would want to represent me.

Now, I've never sat down and had a beer with Lefberg. He's 19 and that would be illegal. I'm sure he's a fine person outside of politics.

Today, I have addressed issues and printed words directly from Lefberg himself. I could care less about his personal character or private past, but I do care about his public performance in office.

His endorsement is politically dangerous — thinking ASU voters, those who see past personalities, will see job performance and current alliances as indicators for the future.

Senator Andrew Lefberg, College of Business, needs to reassess his performance in office. His constituents need to see his performance in office for what it is.

MU science conference topic focus on government research funding's future

By CHRIS KAHN
STATE PRESS

National Science Foundation Director Neal Lane will join industry representatives, government officials and ASU, NAU and UofA faculty on Friday, to discuss the future of federal research funding in Arizona.

"What we're trying to promote is the notion that the state of Arizona has a research-based economy that needs to grow," said Patrick Burkhart, director of research development at ASU.

The Friday conference is part of a national series sponsored by the American Association for the Advancement of Science (AAAS), to examine the impact of research and development on various communities. A special AAAS report will be released at the conference, analyzing the amount of federal research investment in Arizona.

The American Association of Universities estimated, in 1994, that federal research and development funds can go a long way to benefit an economy, creating one job for every $23,118 granted to universities.

The conference, at 9 a.m. in the Memorial Union Ventana Room, will include panels where representatives from federal institutions like NASA, the National Science Foundation (NSF) and the National Institute of Health (NIH) will answer questions from university faculty and industry representatives about future funding opportunities.

Bringing the university faculty together with representatives from industry will help to develop more partnerships between these groups, said Jonathan Fink, interim vice provost for research at ASU.

"This facilitates the whole career path of our graduates," Fink said. "Our students get jobs with these companies, and if these companies already have a good relationship with faculty members, then it will benefit the students."

More than 400 students, faculty and industry representatives are expected to attend the conference.

Offices of Sens. Glenn, Jeffords receive mysterious packages

By The Associated Press

A package mailed to Sen. John Glenn contained racist rhetoric and a mysterious powder that discolored and numbed the hands of three workers. A similar package was sent to Sen. James Jeffords, but the suspicious substance was noticed before it hurt anyone.

The packages, mailed from Vermont, arrived Monday at Glenn's office in Columbus, Ohio, and Jeffords' in Burlington, Vt. A spokesman for Jeffords in Washington said the same person apparently sent the two packages and the letters containing racial and ethnic slurs.

In Columbus, the incident also forced the evacuation of the downtown federal building. Glenn's office was back open today and the three employees were expected to return to work later on the day. They were treated at a hospital and released Monday.

Erik Smulson, Jeffords' spokesman in Washington, said staff noticed a "questionable black material" when the package sent to the Vermont Republican's office was opened. The inner package containing the material was not opened; the material instead was turned over to the police for investigation, he said.

"It is our understanding that the letters are the same and are from the same person," Smulson said.

Vicki Butland, spokeswoman for Glenn's Columbus office, called the 12-page hand-written letter that accompanied the package "a militia type."

Deputy Fire Chief Ned Pettus said the unidentified substance turned the Glenn aides' hands a purplish color and made them numb for several hours.

The federal building in downtown Columbus was evacuated from 5:30 p.m. to about 10 p.m. so firefighters and hazardous materials crews could examine the substance, Pettus said. Glenn was in Washington.

"The package was addressed to Glenn and contained a sweater," he said. "Inside the package was a plastic bag with the substance. It spilled onto one employee's hands when the package was opened, and other employees came in contact with it when they tried to sweep it up."

The letter was angry and rambling but the intentions of the package were perfectly clear, fire Battalion Chief Howard White said.

"Someone's trying to make a statement," White said. "It wasn't meant to explode, it was meant to harm."

A sample of the substance was sent to Battelle Laboratories for identification. The rest will remain in a drum until the substance is identified.

The Columbus federal building also houses the offices of Sen. Mike DeWine, R-Ohio, Rep. Deborah Pryce, R-Ohio, several other federal agencies and the main downtown post office.

Fatal attack on dog highlights danger of swarming bees

LAKE HAVASU CITY, Ariz. (AP) — One moment Goofy, a 2-year-old Rottweiler, was lounging under a tree in his family's back yard after a bath.

The next he was dead from thousands of stings from a relentless swarm of angry bees.

The attack Sunday on the 100-pound pet was incredibly swift, said Cindy Coronel, whose husband Wig was stung about a dozen times trying to rescue the dog. The Coronels didn't know until it was too late that a swarm of bees had settled in an opening in their block-wall fence.

"Goofy couldn't even move, they got him so quick," Mrs. Coronel said Tuesday. "Our four young children watched Goofy die. It was terrible."

Experts say bees are on the move around Arizona, with clusters of thousands of individual bees showing up on tree branches, fence posts, walls and eaves in cities big and small.

Swarming is the honeybees' way of splitting one colony into two. When a hive gets crowded, about half its bees depart with the original colony's queen, said Stephen Roberts, a bee researcher ASU.

"This is a peak time of the year for swarms," Roberts said.

Many spring flowers used by Arizona honeybees are plentiful because of the rainy winter. That is helping colonies expand.

"The resources are abundant," Roberts said. "The bees are out there collecting pollen and nectar like crazy."

Africanized honeybees, or "killer" bees, tend to swarm more readily than the other honeybees they have been displacing, said UofA entomologist Carl Olson.

But although the Africanized bees also tend to be more aggressive, they are generally docile when they're traveling as a home-hunting swarm, Olson said.

A sample of the bees that killed the Rottweiler will be sent to Eric Erickson, director of the Department of Agriculture's Carl Hayden Bee Research Center in Tucson.

"If the bees are confirmed to be Africanized honeybees, it would be the first ones confirmed in Lake Havasu City. Parker is the farthest north we have confirmed Africanized bees, but that was a year ago," Erickson said.

Erickson said he had never heard of an incident quite like the dog attack.

"The shampoo might or might not have had anything to do with it. Actually, the mere odor of mammal breath is enough to cause an attack," he said. "The breath of mammals is extremely offensive to bees and can stimulate an attack."

Erickson's advice for fending off a bee swarm: "Once an attack starts, your options are fairly limited. Just try to get away. Get everybody in the house. You could throw a blanket over yourself and try to throw a blanket over the victim and drag him away, but you're going to get some stings."

Former FBI agent: papers indicate King assassination conspiracy

By RUSS BYNUM
ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — After 30 years of silence, a former FBI agent said Tuesday that papers he took from James Earl Ray's car after the assassination of Martin Luther King Jr. support claims of a conspiracy.

Donald Wilson, who worked in the FBI's Atlanta office when King was slain in 1968, showed copies of the documents Tuesday to Fulton County District Attorney Paul Howard.

Wilson claimed to have found in Ray's car an envelope containing two pieces of paper with the name "Raul" written on them. Ray contends he was set up by a shadowy gunrunner named Raoul, a man whose existence has never been verified.

"This is the first time ... that there has been a verification of the existence of a man whom James said set him up all of these years," said William Pepper, Ray's attorney, who was with Wilson on Tuesday.

Wilson declined to say why he withheld the papers from his FBI superiors. But Pepper described Wilson as having been an idealistic young agent who doubted the integrity of the FBI's investigation into King's death.

"It's become clear to me that he had grave concerns as to whether the bureau itself was not going to obstruct justice in this case," Pepper said.

Cartha DeLoach, who was assistant to FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover in 1968, said he was not aware of Wilson's evidence.

"If Mr. Wilson had received such evidence during the course of his official duties, he should have turned it in to the FBI," DeLoach said Tuesday in a telephone interview from his home in Hilton Head, S.C. "I think all evidence should be considered, but I think the FBI did a very thorough, excellent job."

Walter Fauntroy, a former House delegate from Washington who chaired a subcommittee that investigated the King assassination in 1978, said Wilson's information could be a "very significant development."

"The whole question of a conspiracy related to James Earl Ray turns on whether or not Raoul was a real handler,"

Donald Wilson, left, a former FBI agent who impounded James Earl Ray's car after the 1968 assassination of Martin Luther King, Jr., and William Pepper, an attorney trying to win a new trial for Ray, center, are swarmed by members of the media during a press conference on the steps of the Fulton County, Ga., Courthouse in Atlanta Tuesday. Wilson said he kept two slips of paper from the car that may bolster the theory a conspiracy was behind the slaying.

Ric Feld/Associated Press

Fauntroy said.

Wilson said he wants to meet with U.S. Attorney General Janet Reno to show her the documents, which he says he kept from his FBI superiors in 1968.

Ray pleaded guilty to killing King in 1969, but later recanted his confession and has been seeking a trial ever since.

Wilson was one of two agents who impounded Ray's white Ford Mustang from an Atlanta housing project on April 10, 1968, six days after King was assassinated in Memphis, Tenn.

One of the papers contained a list of names, including Raul, and figures that appear to be payments made to those people, Pepper said.

Pepper said Wilson, who lives in suburban Chicago, contacted him a year ago and hoped to release the new evidence in court. Pepper said Wilson agreed to come forward now because there's been little progress in winning a trial for Ray, who suffers from a liver ailment and may not live much longer.

Wilson said: "I'm here only on behalf of the King family, to secure hopefully what will be answers to the questions they've been seeking for some 30 years."

Coretta Scott King, the civil rights leader's widow, released a statement calling for an investigation of Wilson's evidence

"to help bring about at least some sense of closure to the pain my family and the American people have endured over unanswered questions surrounding this tragedy."

The Atlanta Journal-Constitution, which obtained copies of the papers Monday, reported Tuesday that one of the papers had the number 450,000.00 written at the bottom, with a date and a name that appears to be Raul. The other document contains a telephone number and the name Raul, the newspaper said.

Copies of the papers were not released to reporters Tuesday.

Wilson met Howard because the documents were found in Fulton County.

Howard said he would turn over the information to Reno because chances were "tenuous at best" that his office would have jurisdiction.

In an odd twist, the Journal-Constitution said a telephone number on one of the papers appeared to refer to Jack Ruby. The number is next to a capital J inside a circle. A 1963 Dallas directory showed that number listed to Ruby and the Vegas Club, the newspaper said. Ruby was arrested in 1963 for killing Lee Harvey Oswald, the suspected assassin of President Kennedy.

Nothing to lose but its chic

By Verena Dobnik
Associated Press

NEW YORK — You've come a long way, comrade.

A stylish new edition of The Communist Manifesto aims to make Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels the latest in radical chic.

The slender volume is being republished as a glossy, $13 hardcover for release in New York and London on May Day. The fashionable department store Barneys is thinking about it for a window display.

The publisher says the 1848 work speaks to a premonition on Wall Street that the capitalist party can't go on forever.

"There's a sense of anxiety tied to the millennium. People don't believe things will just carry on, with markets rising forever," says Colin Robinson, head of Verso publishers, which is printing 20,000 copies on the 150th anniversary of the manifesto. "Marx's description of a capitalist system prone to shocks and convulsions captures that mood."

The revolutionary book, now with a rippling red-flag cover, has become fodder for proletarian fantasy:

With a handle attached, the book could make a snazzy accessory to a designer dress, says Simon Doonan, creative director of Barneys on Madison Avenue. One could sashay toward the new millennium, the 19th-century words of Marx and Engels dangling at one's side.

Doonan is toying with the idea of featuring the Manifesto — along with red lipsticks — in the window as "conceptual art." His assistants are looking for the right lumpen — preferably with a Russian-sounding name.

With communism dwindling around the world, "it's OK to look at the book as camp," he says.

Around Wall Street, the very capital of capitalism, the Borders bookstore at the World Trade Center plans to give the book center display in the front of the store. Barnes & Noble will likewise market the Manifesto at its 483 superstores as "a storefront feature."

"Enough time has passed since the fall of the Iron Curtain so Marxism can again be seen as a utopian philosophy," says John Kulka, a Barnes & Noble merchandise manager of the means of production.

The new edition was designed by two trendy, Soviet-born, New York artists known as Komar and Melamid. With crimson end pages and a ribbon marker of the same color, "it's elegant enough to grace a coffee table," Robinson says.

That's not quite what its authors had in mind.

Written during the Industrial Revolution, the Manifesto called the working class to arms against the bourgeoisie.

The Manifesto opens with the famous words, "A spectre is haunting Europe — the spectre of Communism." It predicted that a catastrophic cycle of booms and busts would befall the new free-market system.

The 23-page pamphlet was "the most influential single piece of political writing since the French Revolution," historian Eric Hobsbawm, the intellectual guru of Britain's socialists, writes in introduction to the new, 96-page edition.

The Communist Party U.S.A., which is based in New York and claims 25,000 members of the masses could use a little marketing.

Priest pleads guilty on 3 counts

By MELISSA WILLIAMS
ASSOCIATED PRESS

DALLAS — A suspended Roman Catholic priest who lost a $119.6 million lawsuit over molestation allegations pleaded guilty today to three counts of sexually abusing altar boys.

Rudolph Kos, 52, entered the plea at the start of his criminal trial on eight counts.

Prosecutors then began opening statements in the trial on the remaining five counts. All eight counts involve four young men who told police they were molested about 1,350 times.

Kos could be sentenced to two to 20 years in prison for pleading guilty to two counts of sexual assault of a child and one count of indecency with a child.

Defense attorney Brad Lollar said the pleas "do reflect the facts of the matter. He believes he is guilty of three of the eight indictments." He would not say why the pleas were change from innocent, but he said the change had been planned.

In his opening statement, prosecutor Howard Blackman told jurors that Kos abused the power of the priesthood to prey on the altar boys.

"He assumed control of the altar servers and turned this program into a flesh pool into which he recruited his victims," Blackman said. "Evidence will show how this man, who was supposed to be their spiritual guide, used them for his own selfish sexual gratification."

The $119.6 million verdict returned against the Catholic Diocese of Dallas and Kos after the civil trial last summer was the largest monetary judgment of any clergy sex-abuse case in U.S. history.

The lawsuit alleged that Kos molested altar boys over more than a decade and that church officials knew about the problem and covered it up.

According to testimony during the 11-week civil trial, Kos sexually abused boys during a period from 1981 to 1992 at churches in Dallas, Ennis and Irving.

PepsiCo head uses $1 million of his bonus for scholarships

NEW YORK (AP) — PepsiCo Inc.'s boss is giving up $1 million in salary to provide scholarships for the children of its salespeople, warehouse employees, truck drivers and other "unsung heroes."

Roger Enrico, who grew up in a blue-collar family, was paid, before taxes, $900,000 in salary last year and received a $1.8 million bonus. Last fall, he asked the board to cut his salary to $1 a year and "consider using the savings to benefit our front-line employees."

"At a company like PepsiCo, everyone can make a difference. But in my opinion nobody is more important than the thousands of men and women who make, move and sell our products," he wrote in a memo to employees earlier this month. A copy was obtained Tuesday by The Associated Press.

Enrico said the board agreed to the pay cut in January and decided to contribute $1 million a year to a new scholarship program for children of full-time PepsiCo employees making under $60,000 a year.

Enrico said it was his way "to say thanks to our often unsung heroes."

He isn't giving up any future bonus money. Enrico, 53, has set no limit on how long he will continue forgoing his salary, company spokesman Richard Detwiler said.

A troubled woman panics, and her baby dies at border crossing

BY CAROLYN THOMPSON
ASSOCIATED PRESS

NIAGARA FALLS, N.Y. — For five years, every time Galiema Begg tried to get back to the United States, her visa requests were denied.

But last week, the South African woman was allowed into Canada. Only her fear of being caught by U.S. Customs agents was stopping her from driving across the border and continuing to Miami, where she hoped to introduce her 8-month-old son to his grandmother.

Her uncle and brother had driven to Canada to see her, and as they prepared to leave, she held onto her brother and cried. The men couldn't bear to leave her behind — so they took her and the boy with them on their return.

Ms. Begg's family says it was just an act of compassion. But it proved fatal for the baby — who died from being held too tightly while Ms. Begg cowered with him under blankets as the men drove their truck across the border on Thursday.

Now Ms. Begg, 30, is in U.S. custody, charged with criminally negligent homicide. Her brother, Achmat Begg, 31, and uncle, Mohamad Tahir Toffie, 57, face identical charges for concealing Ms. Begg and the child as they attempted to cross the Rainbow Bridge into Niagara Falls, N.Y.

The charges were transferred to federal court at a hearing this morning. They pleaded innocent at an arraignment last week in Niagara Falls city court.

"How could they be responsible for (the baby's) death when they only wanted to bring him to me and his beloved family here in Miami?" Ms. Begg's mother, Julie Begg, asked from her Miami home.

Galiema Begg and her parents, three sisters and two brothers, first arrived in Miami in 1986. Galiema attended Dade Community College and Florida International University in pursuit of a teaching degree. She taught deaf children in her spare time, her family said.

After school, she returned to South Africa to visit a sister who remained in Johannesburg, not knowing it would be nearly impossible to re-enter the United States. A State Department spokeswoman Monday could not say why her visas were denied.

Ms. Begg began slipping into depression after the first request for a travel visa was refused, her mother said. She quickly grew worse.

"She was losing mental stability very rapidly," said Julie Begg, 62. "She was roaming the streets of Johannesburg like some incoherent bum."

A man, a stranger, took advantage of Ms. Begg last year, the family said. She became pregnant.

Even after Ms. Begg's brother and uncle decided to let Ms. Begg cross back into the United States with them last Thursday, they weren't sure what to do.

The men later told police they planned to tell Customs the truth and ask for advice, but Ms. Begg panicked, so they instead covered her and little Mohamed Hadi-Begg with clothing and blankets.

Customs agents, alerted by the presence of a baby seat and baby clothes, but no baby, stopped the vehicle for a search. They found Ms. Begg and her unresponsive baby, who was pronounced dead soon after at a hospital.

'Let them light up': Arizona lawmakers give sparkler legalization another attempt

BY KATE HUNGER AND PAUL DAVENPORT
ASSOCIATED PRESS

PHOENIX — At first glance, the sparkler doesn't seem like much of a symbol — no bombs bursting in air, no sirens or whoops to celebrate Independence Day with an ear-popping bang.

It just sparkles.

But Arizona lawmakers have taken this most pedestrian of fireworks under their legislative wing for years, and now they're at it again.

To supporters of a bill to legalize sparklers and other non-explosive devices, to sparkle is the right of every American, and to take away that right is to laugh in the face of freedom.

But in a legislative hearing Tuesday, opponents of the bill questioned why sparklers and their low-tech cousins — including the snake, glow worm and popper — are enjoying such a steady swell of faith in the Legislature.

"I guess I missed it in the Constitution, the right to bear sparklers," said Rep. Kathi Foster, D-Phoenix.

Lawmakers passed a similar bill in 1996, only to have former Gov. Fife Symington veto it in the name of drought and fire safety.

The House Government Reform and State's Rights Committee on Tuesday approved the measure 8-2 after hearing from lobbyists for the U.S. Fireworks Safety Council, who support the bill, and from fire officials and advocates for burn victims, who don't.

Thomas Hinton, the council's administrative director, said later that more people visit the emergency room every year for toilet-seat injuries than for fireworks-related wounds.

Hinton also said the 10 states, including Arizona, that ban all fireworks account for more than 40 percent of all fireworks injuries.

"The injury data indicates that your chances of being injured are three times greater in a state that bans all fireworks than in a state that allows some," he said.

If the bill (SB1423) passes and legalizes the sale of sparklers to those 16 and older, Hinton said the explosive, airborne variety would be less appealing and the number of injuries would decrease. He also said passage would ensure the quality of the fireworks used by Arizonans.

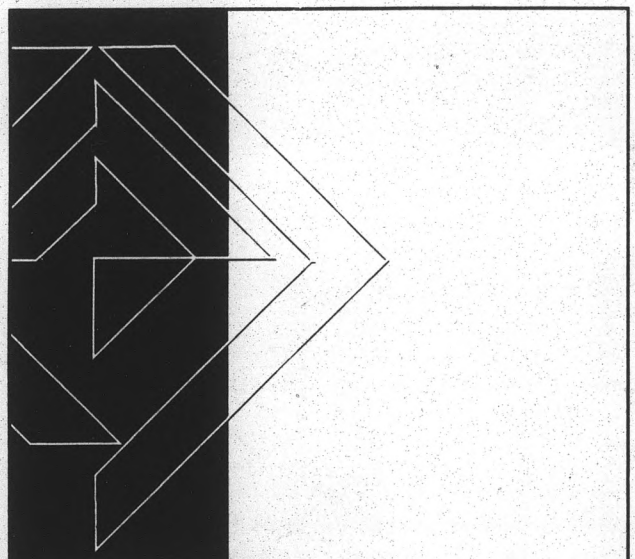

Rep. Laura Knaperek, R-Tempe, said she used fireworks frequently while growing up in the Midwest. She agreed that people buy illegal fireworks in other states and Mexico because they cannot be legally sold in Arizona. She said that prevents consumers from knowing what they're buying.

"What's out there now being sold, nobody knows what is in it," she said.

The bill would allow the governor to suspend the sale of such devices during extreme drought conditions and would allow cities and towns to impose their own restrictions on their sale and use.

But fire officials have consistently opposed efforts to legalize fireworks of any kind in Arizona. They aren't swayed by those who bemoan the loss of free choice.

"I think the one element of this whole issue that is being ignored is that every one of those devices has to be lit," said Phil Yeager, a spokesman for the Phoenix Fire Department. The Fourth of July is the busiest day of the year for the department, he added.

Study: too much TV can make kids obese

CHICAGO (AP) — A new study confirms that kids who watch a lot of television tend to be heavier than kids who do not, but it fails to settle the question: Which came first, the Simpsons or the Twinkies?

Kids who spent more than four hours daily in front of the tube were significantly heavier than children who watched fewer than two hours daily, according to researchers led by Ross E. Andersen of Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine.

Yet the study could not say whether watching television results in children getting fatter or being fatter induces children to watch more television, said an editorial accompanying the study in Wednesday's edition of The Journal of the American Medical Association.

Researchers looked at federal data on 4,063 U.S. children who were examined from 1988 to 1994 and found that 26 percent averaged more than four hours of TV viewing daily.

Non-Hispanic black children had the highest rate of watching; Forty-two percent watched four or more hours daily, the researchers said.

Levels of vigorous activity were lowest among non-Hispanic black children, Mexican-American girls and girls in general, the researchers found.

Men's tennis shoots down New Mexico State, 7-0

Jeremy Weiss/State Press
Junior Tim Hammond and the rest of the 25th-ranked ASU men's tennis team posted their third shutout of the season Tuesday against the New Mexico State Aggies 7-0 at the Whiteman Tennis Center.

By Carlo Mercaldo
State Press

Before the 25th-ranked Sun Devil tennis team could start thinking about its match against Pac-10 foes Cal and Stanford this weekend, it would have to get past a pesky New Mexico State squad on Tuesday.

That task, it turned out, proved less difficult than it had been imagined as a fired up ASU squad cruised to its third shutout of the season, beating the overmatched Aggies 7-0 at Whiteman Tennis Center.

ASU (6-6, 1-4 Pac-10) looked a bit flat early on, a possible delayed reaction to the team's upset loss in Santa Barbara on Saturday. Fortunately though the Sun Devils were able to shake it off in time to take charge of the match.

ASU head coach Lou Belken said this match could have been a dangerous one for ASU. Since NMSU does not have as much talent as most of the teams the Sun Devils have played recently, they ran the risk of taking the Aggies too lightly. However, Belken said he was happy with the effort the team gave.

"This was a good New Mexico State team," Belken said. "And this is the type of match you need to play well in to make sure you have confidence going into the weekend matches, and I think we did that."

The doubles play, which had been so key for the Sun Devils early in the season, but which had faltered of late, came back to form yesterday.

The first win of the day came at the No. 3 doubles position where Casey Was and Peter Dani crushed Alex Hauser and Enrique Marcos 8-3. The doubles point was clinched when Gustavo Marcaccio and Alex Osterrieth outlasted Jens Bolleyer and Paco Parades in a 9-7 victory at the No. 2 slot.

ASU was able to close out the doubles sweep when Tim Hammond and Ed Carter squeaked out a 9-8 (5) victory over the 48th-ranked doubles team of Adrian Contreras and Jason Noble.

In singles action, a shuffling of the lineup that included playing junior Tim Hammond at the No. 4 spot and introduced sophomore Miles Rogers to the No. 6 position did not seem to effect the team's play.

Hammond was able to cruise early, with a 6-3, 6-1 win over Yven Heine, giving ASU the first singles victory of the day.

"It was really good to get this win today," Hammond said. "Obviously we've got two really important matches coming up this weekend against Cal and Stanford, that we know we are going to have to play well in."

"So now it's important to win and just get into the habit of winning, because we've lost a couple of close ones recently and it's great to come out here and get a win, it doesn't matter who it's against."

At the No. 1 singles position, 50th-ranked Gustavo Marcaccio, brought home his 20th win of the season with a 6-3, 6-4 win over Adrian Contreras. The No. 2 singles slot saw Alex Osterrieth win his team-leading ninth dual of the season, beating Enrique Marcos 6-1, 6-1. Ed Carter was able to seal the deal for the Sun Devils with his 6-3, 6-4 win over Jason Noble at No. 3.

Peter Dani, playing at the No. 5 position, worked hard for a 6-4, 7-6 (6) win against Paco Parades. The Sun Devils closed out the sweep, when Miles Rogers won a split set match over Jens Bolleyer, 7-5, 6-7, 6-0 at the No. 6 spot.

Bottom half of Pac-10 softball teams among the nation's best

By Doug Flanagan
State Press

This is part one of a two part series previewing the 1998 Pac-10 softball season.

When the subject of the best softball conference in the nation arises in conversation, there is usually little or no debate.

With nine straight national titles and 12 of 15 overall, the Pac-10 has towered over the competition as the premier conference in the country.

The Pac-10 is so strong and balanced that ASU, going into the start of conference play this weekend visiting Oregon and Oregon State, is ranked eighth nationally, but was ranked fifth in the conference in the pre-season coaches' poll. Seven of the eight teams are currently ranked in the top-25 of the USA Today/UFCA Coaches poll.

"It's not even a close call, that's how strong it is," ASU head coach Linda Wells said. "UofA has been consistently number one (in the nation). Washington has been in the top three all year. We've been in the top 10, along with Cal. Stanford has moved up lately, to around 12. And down around 15 or 16, you see the Oregon schools. And UCLA would be ranked if not for their punishment (NCAA probation). So there's eight teams, all easily capable of being in the top 15 in the country."

In last year's title game, UofA defeated UCLA 10-2 in five innings to win its fifth championship of the decade. This also marked the sixth time two Pac-10 squads had faced each other in the national title game. In addition, Pac-10 teams combined for a 192-65-1 (.746) record versus non-conference opponents in 1997 and nine tournament championships.

The conference looks to be just as strong in 1998. According to Wells, it could be even stronger.

"This is the most balance I've ever seen in the Pac-10," she said. "All the teams are not just good; they're very good. Every game is (going to be) pretty tough."

"The Pac-10 conference is the toughest it has ever been," Stanford head coach John Rittman said. "Every program has dramatically improved. It is going to be a real shootout."

The following is a preview of the bottom four teams in the conference, in predicted order of finish.

8. Oregon. The Ducks, No. 19 in the country, will rely heavily on 13 newcomers to improve on last year's 24-35-1 mark (9-19 Pac-10). These include freshman pitcher Christine Birnbaum, who has been taking regular turns in the rotation so far this year, and freshman second baseman Melinda Watson, who has impressed head coach Rick Gamez with her defensive abilities and power.

"Last year we took some big steps in the right direction," Gamez said, "and we expect even more this season. We'll ask for big contributions from our new kids, but in the same respect the team will need a fresh commitment from the older players."

Returning players for Oregon, 23-10 on the season thus far, include sophomore outfielder Lindsey Welch, who earned first team All-Pac 10 honors last season (.337, 7 HR, 34 RBI), and junior Jennie Cook, who hit .303 last year. Cook also heads the Ducks' rotation, followed by Birnbaum, senior Maegan Christie, freshman Tracie Clark and freshman Bethany Smith.

Despite the losing record of a year ago, Gamez was more focused on his team's finish — winning nine of their last 16 games. The Ducks' ability to carry that momentum into the conference schedule hinges on their ability to compensate for the loss of a sizable chunk of the most powerful lineup in team history — the Ducks clubbed 39 homers, topping their previous best by 22 — and concentrating on basic fundamentals.

"We expect everybody to play because we need each player to contribute — whether they start or are off the bench," Gamez said. "The success of this team will need to be founded upon defense, and the mental approach which we have asked each individual to bring to this team come the spring."

7. Oregon State. Improvement is the recurring theme in Corvallis. Last year, the Beavers went 29-34-1, a 15-game turnaround from the year before. This year, OSU has begun the season 17-8 and vaulted to No. 18 nationally.

Head coach Kirk Walker has 12 returning players from a year ago, including seven starters. The team will be led by sophomore Tarrah Beyster, who was named the Pac-10 Player of the Week on Tuesday. Beyster has posted 13 of the Beaver's 17 wins so far this year as the team's primary hurler.

In addition, Beyster is a force on offense. She won the team triple crown last year, batting .391, hitting 12 home runs and driving in 35 runs. She completed her season by being named to the All-Conference first team.

Senior outfielder Alycia Stevens (.317, 72 hits, All-Conference second team) and junior outfielder Jodi Chmielewski (.307, 11 doubles) will help Beyster with the offensive load.

6. Stanford. The Cardinal have also been a team on the rise. Last year's 31-27-1 record was a seven-game improvement from 1996. Stanford placed fifth in the Pac-10, its highest finish ever with a 10-18 record, and narrowly missed a postseason berth.

This year, 11 players return to a team who posted victories over nine ranked teams in 1997. The experience has resulted in a 15-4 start and a No. 12 ranking.

The key to the Cardinal's improvement lies in its pitching staff. Juniors Becky Blevins and Marcy Couch were the team's top two pitchers last year and will be counted on, along with senior Jessica Schulman, by the coaching staff to stabilize the team.

"We will go with the pitcher that is hot at that time," pitching coach Lonni Alameda said. "The leadership of all three pitchers will do good things for us."

Blevins threw 28 complete games last year, posted a 2.05 ERA and ranked fifth in the Pac-10 with 143 strikeouts. Couch, a second team All-Conference selection, won 16 games and Schulman put up a team-leading 1.63 ERA.

On offense, the Cardinal will not be a powerful team (eight homers in '97), but will rely instead on a group of speedsters at the top of the lineup and several line-drive hitters to manufacture runs.

Junior shortstop Michelle Schneider led the team with a .302 batting average and has caught the eye of Rittman early on.

"Michelle is very focused on becoming an even better player," Rittman said. "She has great range for an infielder and is also a threat offensively."

March just as Maddening in women's tournament

Folks, I've got some news for ya.

The 1998 NCAA Men's Basketball Tournament isn't the only tourney worth your valuable couch time.

Try taking a gander at the women's version of March Madness.

Late last night I wandered into my house, turned on the VCR and played a tape I had set it up to record earlier in the day.

On came my own tape-delayed broadcast of ESPN's coverage of the Tennessee/North Carolina game.

I grabbed a bottle of Red Stripe and got ready to watch about 10 minutes of the game, or at least until the Volunteers buried the Tarheels.

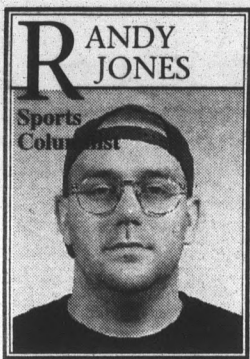

What a surprise I got.

UNC jumped all over the Volunteers, playing the same physical, up-tempo style UT has thrived on all season. The Tarheels appeared on the way to the Final Four when they led by a whopping 12 points with less than seven minutes to play in the game. This against a UT team (now 37-0 on the season) that had won all but three of its games by double-digit margins.

Dreams of 1991 and the 34-0 UNLV Runnin' Rebels having their heads handed to them by Duke in the Final Four started dancing in my mind.

Or even, last weeks' 25-point whooping of a cocky UofA squad by ASU's most wanted coach's team Utah.

However, led by the best player in college basketball today — Chamique Holdsclaw — sorry Antawn Jamison, the Lady Vols stormed back to win the game 76-70.

Holdsclaw scored 14 of her 29 points in those seven minutes as the Vols abruptly ended my daydreams.

By narrowly avoiding the upset, Tennessee kept at least one of the so-called dynasties of women's hoops in the tourney.

Much like the men's tournament, three No. 1 seeds said sayonara way before anyone thought they would. Old Dominion lost to Kay Yow's spirited North Carolina State squad, as they made their first Final Four appearance. Texas Tech bowed out in the to the other Tech, Louisiana Tech. And don't forget No. 16 Harvard's upset of No. 1 Stanford, the first 16 seed to beat a No. 1 ever, men's or women's.

If UT wins it all it will be three straight, a feat only UCLA's John Wooden has achieved, and seven overall. No wonder they call her the Wizard of Knoxville.

THE OTHER WILLIAMS

Venus Williams and Martina Hingis have had some of the most spirited matches in all of tennis lately.

With Hingis boldly saying pretty much that Williams couldn't carry her sport bra after a recent match.

Monday afternoon, Venus' sister Serena, put quite the scare into the No. 1-ranked Hingis, before bowing out in a 2-hour plus match.

After the 6-3, 1-6, 7-6 (7-4) squeaker, Hingis didn't have any disparaging words for this Williams..

"Serena is going to be a tough opponent in the future," she said.

Couldn't help but notice that this match was a toughie, Martina. Especially after your little "break" for leg cramps when you were down 5-4 in the third set. After a three-minute interlude, Hingis came back and finished off the 16-year old Williams. Not the greatest of tennis etiquette.

Hingis may have won this battle, but from the looks of frustration and confusion across the top dog's face during the match and the tossing of her racket during the last set, the war is far from over.

These two will be fun to watch the next few years, hopefully ending the monotony of the game since Hingis' arrival. Maybe there's a new sheriff in town.

DIVINE RULING

Special master Jack Friedenthal ruled on Monday that the Washington Redskins could keep the "franchise player" tag on defensive tackle Sean Gilbert.

Now, teams wanting Gilbert, who held out all of last year because supposedly God told him to ask for more money, now must give the Redskins first- and third-round draft picks as compensation for his services.

The Dolphins appear interested, which is fitting since Jimmy Johnson thinks he's God's gift to coaching.

And I don't think that the 'Skins are going to miss him with the additions of Dan "Big Daddy" Wilkinson and Dana Stubblefield.

Wonder what the voices are telling Mr. Gilbert to do now?

BACK IN THE SADDLE

Great to hear that ASU quarterback Ryan Kealy began tossing the ball again at Bill Kajikawa field on Monday.

It amazes me the way athletes recover from knee injuries these days. Too bad the sports medicine gurus of today weren't around for Bernard King who in his day was the ATM of the NBA, 'cause when you went to him, you knew it was money.

Tsosie named Pitcher of the Week; Men's golf takes 1st

BY DOUG FLANAGAN
STATE PRESS

For the third time in five weeks, an ASU hurler has been named as the Pac-10 Pitcher of the Week.

Senior Roxanne Tsosie, who posted a 3-0 record at last weekend's Diamond Devil Classic, was honored along with Oregon State's Tarrah Beyster by the conference on Tuesday. Tsosie fired two shutouts against Iowa State and Stephen F. Austin and picked up her first save of the season.

For the tournament, Tsosie threw 22 innings, struck out 14, and allowed only one run, lowering her ERA to 0.31.

This is the third time in Tsosie's career that she has received this award. She also joins fellow Sun Devil pitcher Carrie Breedlove in being recognized this season. Breedlove was the Pac-10's Pitcher of the Week for the first two weeks of the season and was the NFCA Player of the Week for the week of Feb. 24.

"I'm happy for (Roxanne)," ASU head coach Linda Wells said. "(Pitching) has been the part of our game that has been stellar all year. She (did) a great job over the weekend and was very deserving. The fact that Carrie and Breedlove have been honored so early in the season speaks alot for how our pitching has been doing so far."

Tsosie was unavailable for comment.

CASEY LEDS WAY FOR ASU

The ASU men's golf team used the 21st Annual Cleveland Golf Southwestern Invitational in Los Angeles to charge out of a slump in a huge way.

ASU, which has won this same event six times and twice in the last three years, led the tournament after all three rounds. The team finished with a 10-over-par 862, an amazing 23-strokes ahead of second-place finisher and defending champion USC.

The Sun Devils also captured the individual title as red-hot freshman Paul Casey scorched the North Ranch Country Club golf course in the final day. Casey fired a tournament record five-under-par 66, in the final round of the event to finish with a four-under-par 209.

ASU finished with five players in the top 12, including three freshmen. Jeff Quinney shot a three-over-par

216, which was good enough for a fifth-place finish. Closing out the stellar play of this overachieving trio of freshmen was Jin Park, who fired an eight-over-par 221, which placed him in a tie for 12th place.

The upperclassmen on this deep squad also played well. Junior Greg Padilla finished in sixth place with a four-over-par 217. Another junior, Brad Cannon, also came up big on this demanding course, finishing in eighth place with a seven-over-par 220.

Other Sun Devils who played well this week were Jonas Runnquist, who finished 22nd with a 13-over-par 225 and Tim Mickelson, who finished in a tie for 25th place.

ASU will attempt to feed off this impressive performance when they travel to Orlando, Fla., for the U.S. Collegiate Invitational in two weeks. — Staff Reports

What do you think?

The ASU men's basketball season has been over for nearly two weeks now, and a head coach for next season has yet to be named. An announcement from the university isn't expected until after the NCAA Tournament, which ends next Monday. Several candidates have been rumored for the job but apparently interim head coach Don Newman isn't among them. Newman led the Sun Devils, who were picked to finish last in the Pac-10, to an 18-14 overall mark, a tie for fifth place in the Pac-10 at 8-10 and an NIT Tournament berth this season.

Those in favor of Don Newman being promoted to head coach e-mail your response to newmanyas@asu.edu

The job appears to be Rick Majerus' to take or leave. Majerus, the current Utah head coach, has hinted in the past that he would like to coach at ASU, but with his team now in the Final Four, the price tag for him has skyrocketed.

Other coaches reported to be candidates include George Washington's Mike Jarvis, Xavier's Skip Prosser, North Carolina-Charlotte's Melvin Watkins and Mark Gottfried of Murray State.

The State Press would like to know who you — the fans, students, faculty and staff of ASU — think should be head coach of the men's basketball team. Reply to one of the two addresses listed, and tell us who you think should be coach and why.

Those in favor another coach write in at newmanno@asu.edu

Students should include their name, class standing and major. Faculty and staff should include their name and college. Results of the poll and selected responses will be published in Friday's edition of the State Press.

Minnesota stops Fresno State in overtime, 91-89

NEW YORK (AP) — With the man who exposed its off-court problems to America watching from the stands, Fresno State's improbable run to a championship ended Tuesday night.

Kevin Clark scored a career-high 30 points and Sam Jacobson added 24 as Minnesota advanced to the NIT championship with a 91-89 overtime victory over the Bulldogs.

Fresno State's season of scandal, which included arrests, suspensions and substance abuse problems for some of its star players, was recently the focus of a "60 Minutes" feature by CBS correspondent Mike Wallace.

After the story was aired, Fresno State coach Jerry Tarkanian criticized Wallace for not being up front with him about its content. But at halftime, Wallace, a guest of Tarkanian's, said he and the coach had spoken before the game and had "a very civilized conversation."

The Gophers (19-15) left Tarkanian's club with only a consolation game remaining while advancing to play the winner of Tuesday's second semifinal between Penn State and Georgia on Thursday night in the final.

"This loss really hurts because of all the adversity we went through," said Tarkanian, whose club had won its previous three tournament games by a total of eight points.

Minnesota, which won the NIT in 1993, is playing in its second straight national semifinals after making to the Final Four last year.

"We feel this is our Final Four," Gophers coach Clem Haskins said.

Fresno State was done in by poor shot selection down the stretch and a costly technical foul late in regulation.

With the Bulldogs leading 70-66 with five minutes left, Fresno State's Kevin Roberson was whistled for attempting to trip Quincy Lewis after a rebound. After Eric Harris made both technical free throws, Jacobsen hit a 3 to put Minnesota up by one, a five-point swing.

"The technical was the key point in the game," Tarkanian said. "I didn't see what happened."

Jermaine Fowlkes led Fresno State (21-12) with 25 points and Chris Herren had 14 — all in the second half.

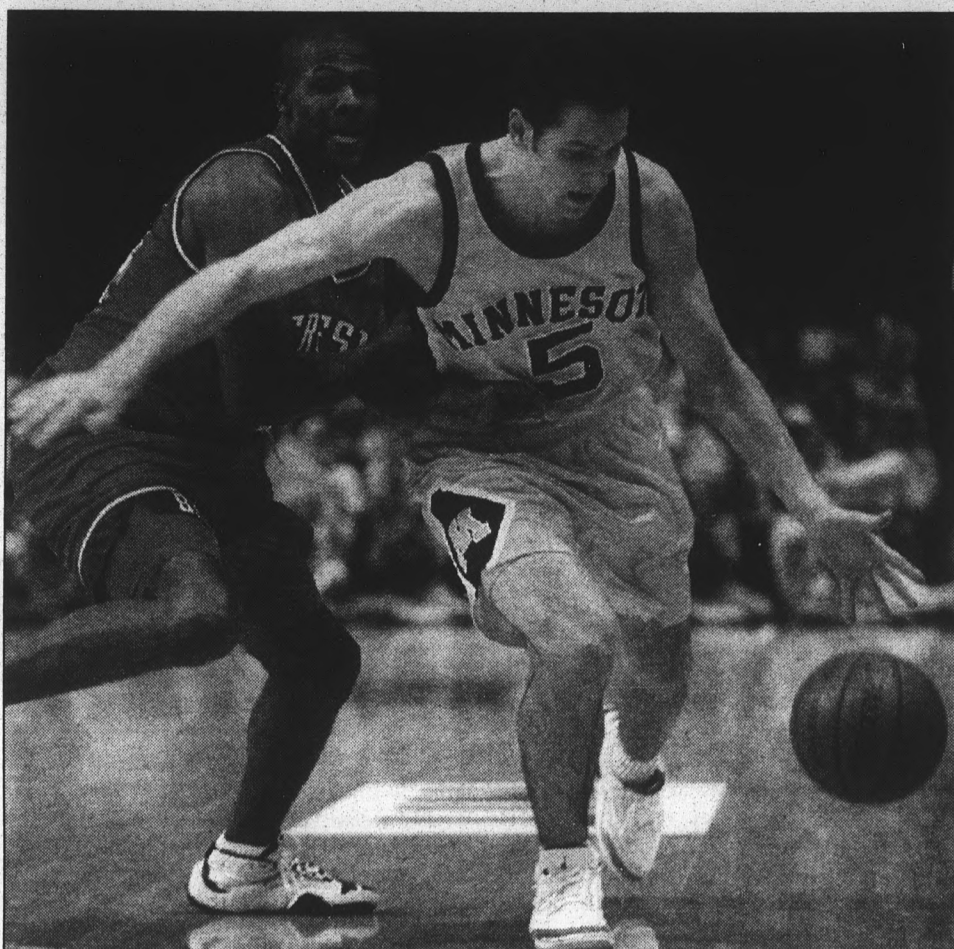

The second meeting between Fresno State and Minnesota was much tighter than the first, a 92-72 Gophers victory in December. The clubs went at each other hard from the outset, and went to overtime tied at 77.

Herren's free throw with 2:52 left in OT gave the Bulldogs an 82-81 lead before Jacobsen was fouled and made two to put the Gophers back up.

After Fowlkes missed — only his second in 12 attempts — Jacobson scored underneath to put Minnesota up by three with 2:10 remaining. Herren's bucket cut it to 85-84, and the Bulldogs got a chance to take the lead when Quincy Lewis missed, but Fresno turned the ball over.

Lewis made two free throws with 48 seconds left, and the Gophers closed it out at the free throw line after Herren lost control of the ball while making a baseline move.

Clark, who scored 21 points against Fresno State earlier this year, went 9-for-16 from the field and 9-for-9 from the line.

Minnesota's Sam Jacobson, right, is guarded by Fresno State's Terrance Roberson in the first half of their NIT semifinal at New York's Madison Square Garden Tuesday. Minnesota won 91-89 in overtime.

Penn State advances to final of NIT with 66-60 victory

NEW YORK (AP) — Penn State's men will now get a chance to match what their women's team has already accomplished.

Freshman Joe Crispin scored 18 points and the Nittany Lions advanced to the championship of the NIT on Tuesday night with a 66-60 win over Georgia.

Penn State (19-12) will meet a familiar foe in Thursday night's final. In Tuesday's other semifinal, Minnesota defeated Fresno State 91-89 in overtime, and will now play Penn State in an all Big Ten title game. The teams split their two meetings during the regular season.

"I think both teams were pulling pretty hard for each other," said Penn State center Calvin Booth, who had 11 points and five blocks.

The Fresno State-Georgia consolation game will precede the title game and match Bulldogs vs. Bulldogs.

During a timeout with Penn State leading 55-54 late in the game, the crowd at Madison Square Garden was informed that Penn State had won the women's NIT by beating Baylor.

Penn State fans erupted into chants of "We are Penn State" and the Nittany Lions responded down the stretch by outscoring the Bulldogs (19-15) 11-6 in the final 3:42.

"Really?" Booth said when told of the women's win. "I didn't hear that. I guess we have to win now."

Pete Lisicky had 13 points for Penn State, and made a pair of late 3-pointers to stop Georgia.

Freshman Jumaine Jones led the Bulldogs with 23 points and 15 rebounds, and Michael Chadwick had 12 points.

Trailing 46-36, the Bulldogs picked up their defensive pressure and went on a 13-4 run to close within 50-49. But Lisicky bailed out Penn State by draining a 3-pointer with five minutes left.

"His entire four years here, he's been a guy who does things like that," said Penn State coach Jerry Dunn. "There are players who want to take shots during the game. He wants to take a shot if the game is on the line."

With the Nittany Lions applying tough defense on the perimeter, the Bulldogs were unable to get a good look. But Penn State went cold from the field, and Georgia grabbed a 56-55 lead with 2:53 left on two free throws from Jones.

Crispin hit both ends of a 1-and-1 on Penn State's next trip, and after a miss and foul by Georgia, Booth made one free throw to put the Lions ahead 57-56.

After Chadwick missed a 3, Lisicky hit a 3-pointer from the top of the key with 1:45 left.

"Lisicky made a big 3, and I thought that was the shot we couldn't come back from," Georgia coach Ron Jirsa said.

Penn State junior forward Jarrett Stephens sustained a serious injury to his left knee in the first half when he was fouled by 250-pound Larry Brown while driving to the basket. Brown, the starting tight end on Georgia's football team, was called for an intentional foul after he sent Stephens flying into the basket support.

Pac-10

Junior outfielder Michelle Acosta will be counted on as the Cardinal's main power threat in the middle of the lineup. She led the team last year in doubles (11) and RBI (32).

5. UCLA. The Bruins' chances of returning to the College World Series and trying to improve on last year's second-place finish were wiped out before the season even started.

As a result of NCAA sanctions handed down, UCLA will not be eligible for postseason play in 1998. However, this does not mean they do not have a postseason-caliber team.

As many of her marquee players redshirt, coach Sue Enquist will have the opportunity to play many of her young recruits. These include pitchers Erin Weiler and Stephanie Swenson, who have been the aces of the staff so far this year — Weiler has a 6-2 record in nine games pitched with a 0.20 ERA, and Swenson is 4-5 with a 2.03 ERA.

Also standing out on the season is senior first baseman Kim Wuest, a member of the bronze medal-winning USA West squad at the U.S. Olympic Festival. She has started the season by hitting a team-leading .388, with four home runs and 12 RBI.

Enquist sees defense as her team's primary strength, with seniors Laurie Fritz (.324, 10 SB, second team All-Conference in '97) and Nicole Odom anchoring the infield. Fritz, a second baseman, and Odom, a shortstop, also are batting .361 and .360, respectively. The Bruins will have to make up for the loss of the graduated Stacey Nuveman, who led the team in average, home runs and RBI last year.

Seeding announced for regionals

FROM STAFF REPORTS

The seedings for the 1998 NCAA Midwest Gymnastics Regional were announced on Tuesday, and ASU, which will host the event at 6 p.m. on April 4th at the University Activity Center, once again is the No. 2 seed behind powerhouse Utah.

The Utes have captured the last 10 regional championships, and 13 of the 14 all time. The Sun Devils are the only other team to have won the title, finishing first in 1987 when the event was held in Tempe.

The last time ASU hosted was in 1994, with the Sun Devils finishing in third, behind the Utes and BYU.

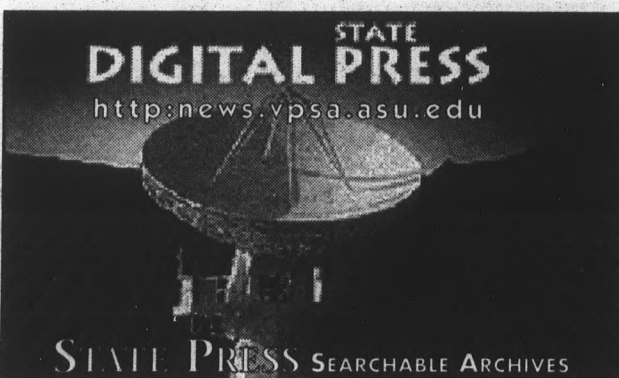

Regional seedings are based on Regional Qualifying Scores. The RQS is calculated by taking the teams' top two home scores, top two road scores and next two high scores, either home or away. From there delete the top and bottom scores and take the average of the remaining four scores. The top seven teams in the region qualify for the meet.

Utah, currently No. 3 in the country topped the list with a 196.0625. No. 9-ranked ASU was second with a 195.1125, while No. 10 Nebraska is third at 194.9437. Rounding out the remaining slots are No. 11 BYU (194.8312), No. 22 UofA (193.825), No. 24 Utah State (193.6063) and unranked Oklahoma (193.1375).

All-arounders who qualified to compete despite their teams' not making the cut will be — Denver's Jennifer White (38.7) and Dana Mims (38.3938), Air Force's Katrine Wateman (38.206) and Michelle Roxburgh (37.4312) and Southern Utah's Tamara Turley (38.15) and Kim Nomura (37.9562).

Tickets for the Midwest Regional are $8 for adults, $6 for juniors and seniors, $6 for adult groups of 25 or more and $5 for junior and senior groups of 25 or more. Those interested in ticket information should call the Sun Devil ticket office at 965-2381.

Arizona Diamondbacks' Jorge Fabregas is congratulated by teammates after a two-run homer in the seventh inning against the Chicago White Sox at Tucson Electric Park in Tucson, Ariz. The Diamondbacks defeated the White Sox ?? ??

D-backs top White Sox

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Jorge Fabregas homered twice, doubled and drove in four runs Tuesday, leading the Arizona Diamondbacks past the Chicago White Sox 6-3.

Fabregas hit a two-run homer in the sixth inning off Tom Fordham for a 4-3 lead. He had a solo home run, his fourth of the spring, in the eighth.

Fabregas also hit an RBI double in a two-run fourth, when the White Sox lost three balls in the sun and high sky.

Magglio Ordenez hit an RBI triple and scored on Chad Kreuter's sacrifice fly as the White Sox took an early 2-0 lead.

Albert Belle's RBI double in the sixth gave the White Sox a 3-2 lead. Mike Cameron had three hits and stole two bases for Chicago.

Devon White, Brent Brede and Travis Lee each had two of the Diamondbacks' 12 hits. Royals 15, Astros 0

HAINES CITY, Fla. (AP) — Terry Pendleton, trying earn one of Kansas City's final roster spots, hit a grand slam and Sal Fasano drove in five runs Tuesday as the Royals beat the Houston Astros 15-0.

Pendleton's slam came in the fourth inning off Jose Lima. Fasano doubled twice and singled, and is now 8-for-17 in his last seven games with 10 RBIs.

The Royals had 15 hits, including four each by Joe Vitiello and Shane Halter. Dean Palmer hit his fifth home run.

Chris Haney pitched six shutout innings. He has allowed only two earned runs with no walks and 11 hits in his last 12 innings.

Malone leads Jazz past Suns

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Karl Malone almost never misses a game.

He could have done so Tuesday night as he was bothered by flu symptoms, but that just wouldn't be the Mailman's way.

"We all knew Karl (Malone) was under the weather, and that made me open my eyes and realize my team needed me," said Greg Foster, who puled down a career-high 15 rebounds as the Jazz defeated the Phoenix Suns 92-73 Tuesday night.

Malone led the Jazz with 19 points, Foster had 12 and John Stockton dished off 11 assists for the Jazz, who moved back into a tie for the best record in the Western Conference.

Dennis Scott led the Suns with 16 points and Danny Manning added 14, but none of Phoenix's starters scored in double figures. The Suns shot just 37 percent (30-for-81) from the field.

The Jazz who won their fourth straight home game and for the 14th time in 15 games overall. Utah and Seattle, who play each other next Tuesday, each have a record of 51-17.

Foster, a seventh-year journeyman now with his seventh NBA team, grabbed 10 rebounds in the first 21 minutes of the game. He averaged nearly eight points and eight rebounds in Utah's just-concluded Eastern road trip, and tied his career-high of 18 points March 13 against Vancouver.

His playing time has increased lately as center Greg Ostertag as been injured.

"I like to shoot the ball, and I realized that if I rebound the ball, I'm going to play more," Foster said. "If I play more, I get to shoot more and have more fun."

After leading 42-35 at halftime, Utah outscored the Suns 13-2 in the first 5:22 of the second half, led by Stockton with five points.

Howard Easley scored six of Utah's last 10 points in the third quarter to propel the Jazz to a 71-50 lead entering the fourth.

Baseball team tames Antelopes, 10-0

BY LORI HARO
STATE PRESS

The ASU baseball team (20-12) had no problem handling Grand Canyon Tuesday night as the Sun Devils out hit the Antelopes 14-3 for a 10-0 shutout at Brazell Stadium.

Aaron Kramer got the win for the Sun Devils. The former Antelope went five innings, giving up no runs on two hits with one walk and 10 strikeouts. It was his longest appearance of the season.

Kramer pitched for Grand Canyon during the 1996 season. In his time as an Antelope Kramer made 19 appearances for an 0-2 record with three saves. Kramer had a 4.76 ERA, 14 walks and 44 strikeouts. Kramer currently has 35 strikeouts in 22.2 innings pitched.

"I didn't really feel as sharp as I wanted to be, but I'm pleased," Kramer said.

ASU head coach Pat Murphy was also pleased with Kramer's performance and said that while he could be used as a starter in the future, he feels Kramer does his best coming out of the bullpen.

"He did okay, but I think that he is more effective as a reliever," Murphy said.

Freshman Robby Milner, Chad Pennington and Drew Friedberg came in to finish the game. In two innings Milner gave up one hit with one strikeout. Pennington had one strikeout and one walk in one inning pitched and Friedberg walked two closing out the ninth inning.

Jeremy Aikins took the loss for the Antelopes giving up seven runs on six hits with six walks and four strikeouts in four innings.

The Sun Devils got at least one hit in each inning and scored every inning until the fifth. ASU started off with a three-run first inning when center fielder Rudy Arguelles, second baseman Willie Bloomquist and right fielder Mikel Moreno all scored as Bloomquist and designated hitter Casey Myers each hit doubles.

ASU scored two more runs in the second and one run in both the third and fourth innings.

The Antelopes didn't give up any runs in the fifth and sixth innings, but the Sun Devils were at it again in the seventh when left fielder Dustin Delucchi scored. First baseman Dan Meier singled to right and the right fielder Matt Forbes committed his third throwing error allowing Delucchi to score.

ASU scored two more times in the eighth inning. Moreno started the eighth off with a single to left and scored on Myers' double to left center. Mark Ernster, pinch running for Myers, scored on catcher Jeremy Jones' single to right.

The shut out was ASU's third of the season. The Sun Devils were led by Myers who went 2-for-4 with two RBI. Bloomquist and Moreno both had three hits apiece.

"I felt I had 3 out of 4 really good at-bats," Myers said. "I think we just got into a groove tonight. We didn't chase any bad pitches, but just hit the ball in the zone."

The Antelopes' third baseman Blake Woods had two of the team's three hits.

Murray State coach heading to Alabama

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. (AP) — Alabama has reached a deal to hire Murray State basketball coach Mark Gottfried, a former Crimson Tide star, as its new head coach, The Birmingham News reported on Tuesday.

Gottfried's hiring was expected to be announced today the newspaper said, quoting unidentified sources.

Alabama athletics officials did not immediately return calls seeking comment.

Gottfried, 34, and his wife visited the Alabama campus Monday. Gottfried will likely meet with Murray State players today to inform them of his departure, the paper said.

Murray State athletic director E.W. Dennison told another newspaper, The Mobile Register, that Gottfried "loves Murray."

"But when you double his salary, give him a long-term commitment and send him home, the reality is he's probably gone," added Dennison. "I know they're negotiating. I don't think we'll be able to keep him."

Gottfried's Murray State won the Ohio Valley Conference tournament this season and went to the NCAA tournament, losing to Rhode Island 97-74 in the first round and ending the year 29-4. He is 68-24 over three years in Murray, Ky.

Gottfried played at Alabama in the mid-'80s and helped lead the Tide to three straight appearances in the NCAA Sweet 16 from 1985-87. He still holds the school record for career 3-point shooting percentage at .485.

Alabama athletic director Bob Bockrath is acting as a one-person search team for Hobbs' replacement. He has not revealed his list of candidates, but has confirmed that Gottfried is a strong contender.

Weekly Beer Trivia

In the middle age, "nunchion" was the word for liquid lunches. It was a combination of the words "noon scheken," or noon drinking. In those days, a large chunk of bread was called lunch. So, if you ate bread with your nunchion, you had what we still today call a luncheon.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

by Frances Drake

Wednesday, March 25, 1998

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) You're at home in a social situation, but something that occurs at work throws you a bit off-kilter. Evening hours accent family togetherness.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) All those chores facing you have you stressed out. Once you tackle them, you feel better. Treat yourself to some takeout food after dark.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) What you're considering is a bit of a gamble. Be sure you know all the risks involved before plunging ahead. Later in the day, a business meeting brings interesting news.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) Your determination is admirable. However, don't be afraid to reach out if you need help. There are plenty of people who've been in the same situation.

LEO (July 23 to Aug. 22) While your energy level still isn't up to par, you still manage to get a lot done. Most of your day is devoted to household concerns. Be sure to return a friend's phone call.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 to Sept. 22) A loved one's words of praise mean a lot to you. You bask in a job well done. Later, be sure to pay attention to a domestic situation.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) A long-distance friendship is most satisfying. This person has very sound words of advice that you'd do well to heed. Part of the evening is devoted to a work project.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) You refuse to brook any interference where your job is concerned. However, your mate does mean well, despite your bad feelings. Try to reach an acceptable understanding.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Your work situation takes a turn for the better and you're feeling more enthusiastic. A challenge is just what you needed. On the domestic scene, a comfortable routine is satisfying.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 19) Be sure to check all locks before leaving the house. It's also a wise idea to be sure all appliances are shutoff. On the job, you're sharp and on top of things.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 to Feb. 18) Someone from your past is worrying about you. Perhaps you should do a better job of keeping in touch. Later in the day, an activity of a physical nature is appealing.

PISCES (Feb. 19 to March 20) You're at your helpful best where family and co-workers are concerned. You no sooner solve one problem, when you're off working on another. You make a good impression during evening hours as well.

YOU BORN TODAY are logical and methodical. You enjoy order and neatness and aren't given to flights of fancy. Mathematics and science are your best fields. Engineering, research and brokering are possible careers. While some see you as a bit stiff, you are a warm person, capable of maintaining long-lasting relationships
