ASASU passes proposal for paid positions

BY MONICA J. AGUIRRE
STATE PRESS

The Associated Students of ASU passed a petition Tuesday night changing the traditionally volunteer senate positions to financially-compensated posts for the 1998-1999 academic year.

"It's not much, but it's a start," said Sen. Andrew Lefberg, College of Business, who introduced the bill along with Autumn Ness, activities vice president of ASASU.

"At least people agreed on something," he said.

Senators who win the student body elections next Wednesday and Thursday will be paid $75 a semester, if the Finance Committee finds a way to implement the petition. Those who choose to serve as chairman of the appropriations, finance, government and operations committees will be paid $100 per semester.

Now that the petition has won a majority of the senate, the finance committee must agree to transfer $4,046 dollars from already existing ASASU funds and incorporate it into next year's budget to put the stipends into effect.

The future senators will be asked to hold two office hours per week and donate five hours a month to ASASU-sponsored volunteer activities. Attendance at senate meetings will be mandatory.

"A stipend would increase the integrity of the legislative body, and by having a form of compensation for senators, a senator would be held more accountable for their job," Lefberg stated in the petition.

The stipend will not be retroactive to benefit the senators currently in office.

Although the petition won the majority of votes, the senate did not unanimously agree.

"There are some things that are just nice to do on a volunteer basis," said Sen. Kevin Molloy, Honors College. "I don't want money, and I don't feel I deserve it."

Molloy feels students who want to run for senate are not running for the money, and those who would run simply for the money do not have the right intentions.

He also feels it is wrong for the current senate to force

New recycling machine exchanges cans for coupons

BY DAVID WOODFILL
STATE PRESS

You can stop clipping coupons because a new, on-campus recycling machine will distribute coupons from local merchants when students feed it their aluminum cans starting next week.

The machine, called the Can Merchant, cost between $28,500 and $34,000 and is manufactured by a local company called Diversified Recycling Technology.

The proposal to bring the machine to campus was brought to the Associated Students of ASU's attention in July by Richard Zimmerman, who works for AZ Sunshine Publishing, which handles marketing for the company.

"It's a really cool idea," said ASASU Activities Vice President Autumn Ness. "We have to find a way to get students motivated to use these services."

The machine will have a screen where students can select various types of merchandise coupons from restaurants, dry cleaners and other types of area services.

The Can Merchant can hold coupons from more than 50 different businesses.

The machine will be introduced under a six month trial period to see how much use it will get. After the probationary period, administration officials will evaluate the machine's use to the campus community and possibly negotiate a contract with the manufacturer, which will pay an undermined percentage of revenue to the University.

"It won't cost the University anything," Zimmerman said. "We service it, empty it and clean it."

"We want to figure out a way to give back to the students who recycle and also get the local merchants to promote recycling."

"The concept is to go out to local compa-

Strengthening ties to Mexico the focus of conference

BY ALLY ASHER
STATE PRESS

The efforts to promote bilingual education and cultural sensitivity within ASU's student teacher education program will be celebrated tonight at the Binational Teacher Exchange Program conference.

The conference will be at 5 p.m. in the courtyard between Farmer and Payne Education buildings. More than 70 officials, teachers and students currently involved in the program are expected to attend, and commend the success of the recent efforts in the College of Education.

"The program is beneficial for students because it develops close, personal and social ties with our Mexican counterparts," said Dr. Sheryl L. Santos, Associate Professor in multicultural studies and coordinator of binational programs.

Santos said the Binational Teacher Exchange Program tries to internationalize the teacher education program by focusing on increasing ties with Mexico to relate to an increasing number of Hispanics in Arizona schools. She added the program not only benefits the college students, but the vast majority of elementary children involved as well.

"It helps improve our Spanish language skills as well as academic understanding," Santos said. "It also helps the other kids learn English when they come over."

Santos said the program, which teaches students the importance of bilingual education, emphasizing cultural sensitivity and intercultural understanding, provides students with the opportunity to travel to Mexico and observe the cultural differences in school atmospheres.

"Our bilingual teachers will be better in the Phoenix classrooms working with recent Mexican immigrants because they will have more cultural knowledge," Santos said. "Teachers will be able to help the children learn more and allow them to feel comfortable in our country which is their new environment. Everybody wins."

Although the company still has not yet secured any agreements with any merchants, and the date of its arrival has not been determined, Zimmerman said he is confident that merchants around Tempe will soon follow suit.

The aluminum recycling bins which were previously used have been removed from the campus because of improper use, said Patricia Chase, business manager of property fiscal management.

The big green bins were removed during spring break because students were throwing garbage into them instead of cans and it was costing the recycling department $100,000 to empty, she said.

Bilingual Ed.

Josue Gonzalez, director of the Center for Bilingual Education and Research, said there is an ongoing problem with educating Mexican children in Arizona schools. He said the exchange program helps prepare future teachers for an environment which continues to change.

"We tend to view education as stopping at the border, which doesn't serve the needs of the children," Gonzalez said. "We need to work more closely with schools in Mexico to learn how to best educate these kids. Arizona teachers need to know about where these kids come from."

Albanians return to village after Serbian police clash

By KATARINE KRATOVAC
ASSOCIATED PRESS

GLODJANE, Yugoslavia — When Ilir Shacekrimaj returned Wednesday to the village he and his mother fled during a gunbattle with Serb police, their home was littered with bullet shells.

The windows were broken, there was a bloody scarf in one room and blood stains in the bathtub.

The 18-year-old ethnic Albanian told a reporter he had no idea what had happened — to his home or to a brother he had left behind.

Confusion and fear were shared by families of other missing Albanians following Tuesday's 11-hour clash — the latest violence in the Serb crackdown on the independence-minded province of Kosovo.

Earlier this month, about 80 ethnic Albanians, who outnumber Serbs in Kosovo 9-to-1, were killed when Serb police moved against alleged armed Albanian separatists hiding in four other villages.

Two ethnic Albanians and one Serb policeman died in Tuesday's fighting. Three officers were wounded and one Albanian villager was reported hospitalized in a coma.

Eleven people were reported missing and the main ethnic Albanian party said it feared they had been arrested. But police said only one person — an activist in the Albanian party — had been arrested.

Serb police said the clash was sparked when what they call "terrorists" ambushed a police patrol. Dozens of police soon surrounded four neighboring hamlets, sending residents fleeing amid the crackle of gunfire and thud of mortars.

On Wednesday, police displayed piles of bombs, guns and hand grenades they said were found in a house in Glodjane, a village near the Albanian border where the fighting had been concentrated.

A clandestine militant group, the Kosovo Liberation Army, has claimed several attacks over the past 20 months in which some 50 people died. But it is not clear that the group has any real structure.

Sava Radovanovic/Associated Press

A group of ethnic Albanian women show victory signs during their protest in Pristina, Yugoslavia, some 300 kilometers (185 miles) south of Belgrade Wednesday. They protested against action by Serbian police against ethnic Albanians in nearby villages.

The clash occurred on the eve of a six-country meeting in Germany called to find ways to force Yugoslavia — which consists of Serbia and Montenegro — to stop the repression in Kosovo.

The United States and five European nations agreed to ban weapons shipments to Yugoslavia next week. The United States failed, however, to win support for immediate tougher sanctions against Yugoslavia.

Instead, the meeting gave Yugoslav President Slobodan Milosevic four weeks to start talking to the province's Albanians. It also urged the Kosovo Albanians to publicly renounce terrorism and violence.

House passes $1.3 million for possible impeachment probe

By DAVID ESPO
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — House Republicans muscled through additional millions to investigate President Clinton on Wednesday as lawmakers clashed sharply over the prospect of impeachment. Democrats accused the GOP of a "partisan witch hunt."

Overriding Democratic objections, Republicans provided a $1.3 million infusion for the Judiciary Committee, where it will be available to help the GOP prepare for any impeachment evidence from Independent Counsel

Kenneth Starr.

An additional $1.8 million will help finance a different committee's long-running investigation into alleged campaign finance irregularities.

Democratic Rep. Steny Hoyer of Maryland protested that the new funding was part of a "coordinated effort to harass ... to really undermine the ability of the White House to do the business expected of it."

Illinois Rep. Henry Hyde, who would oversee any impeachment investigation, said earlier in the day that Democrats were resorting to "raw partisan politics," in an attempt to create "an adversarial aura" where none existed.

Some Democrats said it wasn't the chairman of the Judiciary Committee they were worried about, but Speaker Newt Gingrich, who has taken a prominent role in the behind-the-scenes GOP planning for any impeachment inquiry. "At this point we're more concerned about Dr. Jekyll" than Hyde, quipped Rep. Barney Frank, D-Mass.

Democratic sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Gingrich had spoken two or three times within the past several days with Democratic leader Dick Gephardt about congress-sional business without broaching the subject of impeachment planning.

The infighting erupted as lawmakers acknowledged they have no firm information on when — or whether — Starr will submit a report to Congress citing evidence of impeachable offenses by Clinton.

The political calculation was equally uncertain.

Clinton remains high in the public opinion polls, despite a two-month battering over alleged improper sexual conduct, and most Republicans have been reluctant to attack him.

Israel tries to tone down U.S. proposal for West Bank pullout

By HILARY APPELMAN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM — Under U.S. pressure to break a yearlong deadlock in peace talks with the Palestinians, Israel is reportedly upping its offer for a West Bank pullback, inching closer to an American proposal for a handover of 13 percent more of the disputed territory.

But Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu's offer falls far short of the demands of Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat, who warned this week that the peace process was "taking its last breaths."

The jockeying for position came as U.S. envoy Dennis Ross left Wednesday night for a new mediation effort in the region.

In the past, Israel has said it could hand over no more than an additional 9 percent of the West Bank, but Israeli media reports said Wednesday that Netanyahu was ready to withdraw from up to 11 percent, provided other Israeli demands were met.

The new offer would apparently link some of the West Bank land under Palestinian control — currently scattered islands in a sea of Israel-occupied territory.

Territorial continuity would make it easier for the Palestinians to achieve their goal of statehood. The Palestinians now have full control of more than 3 percent of the West Bank and partial control over 24 percent.

Netanyahu adviser David Bar-Illan confirmed that Israel was making a "quality versus quantity" pitch to the Americans, but said there had been no increase in the amount of land Israel was willing to give up.

Palestinian Cabinet minister Hanan Ashrawi said any Israeli withdrawal must be credible both in quantity and quality, and accused Israel of trying to evade its obligations under the Israel-Palestinian peace accords.

"The Netanyahu government does not want the United States to present any meaningful initiative or even to fulfill its guarantees as the broker of the peace process," she said.

The American plan calls for a withdrawal from 13.1 percent of the West Bank over 12 weeks, with each pullback met by Palestinian moves to increase security.

United Nations Secretary General Kofi Annan listens to Uzi Landau, Chairman of the Foreign Affairs and Defense Committee, while attending a committee session at the Knesset, Israel's parliament in Jerusalem Wednesday. Still basking in the glow of his success in Iraq, Annan staked out a high profile in Arab-Israeli peacemaking, offering to play a role in an Israeli troop withdrawal from Lebanon.

Children key element in school-closure decision

History appears to be on the verge of repeating itself for the Tempe School District.

Officials with the school district held the first in a series of meetings Tuesday night to air concerns with faculty, parents and residents regarding likely school closures. The closures are being planned in response to declining enrollment.

The decision as to which schools should stay and which would be shut down is a difficult decision for district officials to make, but it is one that must be made with extreme consideration to the pupils at the schools that may be affected.

Strange, isn't it? During the early '80s, legislators, educators and school-district heads moaned about declining enrollment. Now, 15 years later, they're wrestling again with the same dilemma.

Things apparently are coming full circle.

But while some have said the school closures are inevitable and that every option has been exhausted, we believe those options should be re-evaluated again. For all we know, a spurt in enrollment could be on the horizon. Let's not be too hasty in shutting down schools that may be needed in such an event.

Conceivably, up to three schools could be closed, but that is just an estimate. Reality is that more than three schools could be closed if enrollment continues to decline.

Certainly, some schools may be completely under capacity, thus becoming a drain on the budget, but before the school district makes any moves, we'd like the members to think long and hard again about the situation.

And if they've thought long and hard about things, they should think about it again. Kids are ultimately the ones who will be affected by any decision made.

Oh, and keep the partisan politics and commercial-growth lobbyists out of the mix. This decision is tough enough to make without letting the greedy get involved.

It's a bit unreasonable when schools are torn down to make way for a new Smith's or Smitty's. Certainly, if circumstances arise that warrant a school's closure, then so be it.

But we'd like to think that education is so key in this state that those circumstances are very extreme.

Improving the quality of education and increasing enrollment in our state's schools are vital goals, but shutting down schools shouldn't be done just to see a new shopping center rise from its ashes. That was the case in the early '80s when Rural School was shut down and a Smith's grocery store raised in its stead.

This isn't about partisan politics, profits or commercial growth; it's about the kids of Arizona.

They deserve our best.

Credit long overdue to ASASU's Execs

ASASU executive offices are among the most challenging positions any student can hold.

ADRIAN FONTES
Guest Columnist

This year, despite criticisms about ASASU, our executive officers have displayed dignity and control.

Our campus affairs vice president, Audrey Church, has had a difficult year. Church's office oversees the Safety Escort Service. This year has seen one criminal incident after another. Despite that, her volunteers have continued to work long into the night, escorting students safely to their destinations.

If this service has saved only one student from being attacked this year, and I'm sure it has, then Church and her staff deserve a heartfelt thanks from the entire University community.

Autumn Ness, our activities vice president, has had to deal with adversity. Her problems resulted from attacks originating within the student government itself. There were even rumors that at one point, some senators wanted to impose a dress code within senate meetings to prevent her from her unique and colorful form of self-expression.

Last fall, Ness had some difficulty dealing with the problems. But since then, she has gained the tools necessary to become an efficient leader while under fire. She now has the ability to deal with adversity and continue with her work.

Ness may still wear glitter eye shadow and funky shoes, but her experiences in office have helped her become more professional than I could have ever imagined her to be.

Before I continue, I will maintain the same claim about ASASU that I have had for some time. I owe this to all the students who have shared their support with the point of view that ASASU needs to be, at the very least, taken through a complete overhaul.

Tony Knowles has a unique opportunity this year. He is only the second graduate student affairs vice president that ASASU ever had. Recent criticisms cast little doubt on his ability as a leader. The office is still in its infancy, but Knowles has moved it towards a solid future. He has done this by dealing with the issues that can make or break this office.

Knowles does have his detractors. Some critics have made claims about his "effectiveness" in office. Although I have heard the stories, and have speculated about the rumors, I must admit that, to date, I have seen no proof brought to the attention of the State Press reporter who has been asking questions.

Andy Ortiz is the president of ASASU.

The Ortiz administration has purposefully stayed as far away from the spotlight as possible. Despite administration stonewalling and foot-dragging, he is still working towards his predecessor's (former ASASU president Mark Baumgartner) goal of teacher evaluations and many other issues. Also, Ortiz has closed the gap between city, state, federal and student government.

Often criticized for not getting involved in the childish arguments that occur in the ASASU senate, Ortiz retains the position that he has better things to worry about.

He's right.

The ASASU presidency is bigger than one person. It is an office that fights the battles that average students don't even know are being fought. Ortiz and his administration are quietly making headway in those battles.

Internally, the most important office at ASASU is the executive vice president. Josh Carr beat me in a run for that office last year. Had I not been running, I would have voted for him (not just because he was the only other candidate).

Carr gets the last mention because he has the crappiest job. Every other Tuesday night, he must try to bring the ASASU senate together for deliberation. This is not an easy task, considering some of the childish antics they continue to display.

Josh Carr has a light touch and a solid foundation. His style of leadership allows the senate to sink itself while he quietly continues to make sure the "business" of supporting campus clubs and organizations runs as smoothly as possible.

The executive officers are like a collective Captain of the Titanic, dutifully steering the ship while it sinks under them.

The administrative branch (executive officers) simply administrate. That's why we pay them and their staff.

Our senators are responsible for making change. They are the legislators responsible for the structure of the government.

It's too bad this year's senate never figured it out. Adrian Fontes is a senior studying communication and can be reached at adrian.fontes@asu.edu via e-mail.

Do your own ASASU research

Ahhhh, Adrian Fontes. As campaign manager for Craig Reid, I am inclined to respond to Fontes' criticism of Craig in yesterday's newspaper.

Bottom line folks, Craig Reid will work for you. He is not a "wind bag" as Fontes has alluded to. He has very strong personal convictions and he did not desert his college by vacating his senate seat. He chose to run for president. Last time I checked that meant he wanted to represent the entire student body, not only his college. Fontes informed me that Craig should have been out recruiting people to run for his senate seat. Yes, he could have done this. However due to the negative image Fontes has portrayed of ASASU, as well as the lack of advertising for the campaigns, the fact that the education college has no candidates on the ballot cannot be placed entirely on Craig's shoulders. He's not your fall guy, Fontes!

It seems as though Fontes is constantly blaming someone for the small amount of candidates in the election. First it was Chris Zock, now Craig — who is he going to pick on next, Sparky?

The personal in-fighting between Andrew Lefberg and Fontes should be kept out of the newspaper. Who really cares whether or not they hate each other? Printing that kind of trash is irresponsible journalism on behalf of the State Press. And yes, I would say this even if Craig was left out of today's column.

Craig Reid will not be prejudiced against anyone willing to endorse him. If someone likes his ideas — great, let them tell the school. We are not ashamed of Lefberg's endorsement. If Fontes finds Lefberg unethical and immoral, that is merely his opinion. There are plenty of other people who know Lefberg is not.

Come up to the third floor of the MU some time, everyone up there knows about the fighting between Fontes and Lefberg, and someone would be happy to give you an unbiased account of the events that caused these articles to be printed. Then you can make your own decision about who is right in "Lefberg vs. Fontes." That is, if you really care!

All I am asking is that the students make an educated decision about whom they care to elect as president of this student body. There are seven fine candidates running. The best man will prevail.

Thank you for your time.

Are you bitter?

This in response to the article written by Adrian Fontes regarding this year's election candidates. ASU has been recently subjected to the winnings and moanings of a bitter student about what is wrong with the association and how he thinks that there are mystical answers to all the student population's problems by eliminating the association. His constant badgering of ASASU has finally enraged me to the point of extreme annoyance. I do not think that Adrian has a good-enough handle about what it takes to run a successful campaign, yet he has ripped apart and criticized everyone else's attempt to successfully win an office. He has finally crossed the line by making humorous generalizations of each candidate and assigning what he considers to be cute nick names. Instead of analyzing what each candidate has to offer the association like a grown and mature individual would do, he mocks the association that would not elect him and those who work to dedicate time and effort towards improving it. I have a nick name for you, Adrian: Bitter Boy!

Look out Denver

This letter is in regard to the continuing, repetitive, and senseless indoctrination being provided by one Adrian Fontes. I wish I could warn the students, faculty, and staff of Denver University about the individual who will soon grace their great campus.

Fontes is a self-serving, bigoted, loud mouth who has the belief that he is "holier than thou." He would rather complain or simply criticize the actions of those who have the courage to do something for their school, than take real action to back up his concerns.

Yes, Fontes has suggested that ASASU be abolished, but that's all you get from this man — suggestions. After former public programs senator Matt Morgan graduated last semester and relinquished his seat on the ASASU Senate, I asked Fontes if he would be interested in filling that vacancy. Fontes proclaimed to me that he prefers to be on the outside where he can hide behind his thoughtless words printed in the State Press.

Fontes' personal vendetta against Andrew Lefberg has overwhelmed him to the point that he can no longer face reality. Don't let his biased and personal attacks affect your opinion on certain candidates or present senators.

Denver already has the Nuggets, they don't need another loser.

Lefberg shows effort

Over the past semester and a half I have read many articles and editorials on the affairs of ASASU. Being a business student, I have kept track of the actions of my college senators and have been pleased with their performance.

Haven spoken with Sen. Lefberg on several occasions and have evaluated his performance on the basis of actions not just words. He has drafted a great deal of legislation, granted some of it can be questionable. He tried to "pull the plug" on concerts because he approached it from the rationale that if the students did not want to hear them, the money could be used elsewhere, preferably campus organizations. He has also taken the initiative to write new legislation, which is no meager task. Why might this be a notable issue? Because there are currently senators who do not even take the time to draft anything new. Do not consider these examples as the sum total of his work, merely a sample.

To clarify the senate pay issue, readdressed by Fontes, the bill would not have paid senators "RETROACTIVELY" but would have been paid to the incoming group.

Fontes should be commended for the enthusiasm he shows towards the on goings of ASASU. If all the students were as astute about the actions of the student government as he is, we would surely have a politically active student body as opposed to the relative laissez-faire attitude that now persists. Unfortunately, Fontes feels the need to vent his concerns by taking pot-shots at our elected officials and those that vie for office.

Making funny nicknames for candidates and lambasting senators is quite possibly the least constructive method of improving ASASU. The best way would be to run for office. Students' voices are heard on election day, stating that, with their vote, they support the ideas of a candidate. Last year the students sent Fontes a message, and that message was a resounding nay. Andrew Ortiz became our president not Fontes.

Andrew Lefberg has worked in ASASU to represent his constituency the best he can. That's more than Fontes can ever claim.

Las Vegas—where a kid can be a kid

BRIAN POLICOFF
Columnist

Well, spring break has come and gone, and I hope you enjoyed it as much as I did. My buddies and I spent four days in Las Vegas, and fun is what we had. First, we drank and smoked, then smoked and drank and gambled all our dough. They don't call it "sin city" for nothing, folks.

We walked from casino to casino with drink in hand (usually a Long Island iced tea, for you curious alcoholics) and a cigarette in the other. My friends and I wandered up and down the Strip each day, taking an occasional break from our gambling endeavors to check out an all-nude review.

On my way out of one of the casinos, and quite coincidentally on the way to another, I noticed a billboard that read "Las Vegas isn't just for adults anymore." This was just the first of many signs indicating that Las Vegas is the perfect vacation spot for families. One went as far as to say that Vegas was a great substitute for Disneyland. The funny thing is that these advertisements seemed to be paying off. I noticed far more children in Vegas than I ever had before.

Circus Circus has always provided Las Vegas with adequate under-21 entertainment, but risen to brave new heights with an indoor theme park, Grand Slam Canyon. M.G.M. Grand and New York, New York, among others, have joined in on the bidding for the juvenile market in Vegas.

City officials have also done their part to make Vegas a more wholesome, family environment. Businesses of ill-repute are no longer allowed to distribute pornographic flyers by hand. They must now place them in storage facilities located on the side walk, much like the ones from which you probably picked up today's State Press.

Yes indeed, it appears Vegas has become the perfect place to take your children on holiday. Where else could they possibly see transvestites, pimps and hookers, all in their native setting?

I myself witnessed a boy of eight learn a valuable life lesson. A drunk wandered into the bathroom and proceeded to scream obscenities at the toilet while punching it. One day that little boy will know just what to do if the toilet stall starts talking back.

I saw another child standing with his mother when an elderly man and a very young, scantily clad woman began kissing passionately. The boy asked his mother, "why is that young lady kissing that old man on the lips?" "It must be his granddaughter, honey," answered the mother nervously. "But Mommy, they're kissing with their tongues!" cried the boy. "They must be from Europe," answered the mother as she lead her son quickly away. Kids do say the darnedest things.

What could be more educational and fun for the whole family than spending a week in a state that features legalized gambling and prostitution? Forget Mickey Mouse, we've got loan sharks. So for those students out there that have youngsters, next time you plan a vacation get away, make it Vegas.

Tempe to distribute 500 bus passes monthly during summer

By AISLINN FAHY
STATE PRESS

Tempe is planning on taking renters and new homeowners for a ride this summer, and it won't cost them a cent.

The city is planning to give out 500 bus passes every month from now until August, in hopes of increasing ridership, and has chosen to focus on those who haven't formed their commuting habits yet.

"Once these new residents try the service, then hopefully they will continue to use it," said Amanda Nelson, community outreach and marketing coordinator for the city.

The free pass program is the next step in a series of planned marketing and incentive ideas including radio and newspaper ads, working with employers on increasing ridership and finding out through demographic information who is riding buses.

Nelson said that the city has received a positive response from previous programs like the "Free Sunday" program, which allowed residents free bus service on Sundays, as well as the free bus passes Tempe mails to those selected for jury duty.

Statistics for bus ridership in Tempe show that there was a 42 percent increase in 1997, with a total of 1.7 million residents currently riding.

Nelson said the free passes will be good for Tempe routes and allow riders to connect to other routes serving the entire Valley.

"We are trying to make our transit system more viable," Nelson said. "This is just another way that we are hoping we will open the service up to more people."

The passes, which have a $34 value, are free for local routes only, and the city will foot the bill with money from the transit fund, paid for from a half-cent sales tax.

Nelson said that besides the free passes, 49 new alternative-fuel buses will be added to Tempe's transit system this summer. Also there will be an increase of service on University Drive, Priest Drive, Mill Avenue and Rural Road, as well as new routes being established on Broadway and Baseline roads.

"We recognize the need to create increased mobility for our residents," Nelson said, adding that 85 new bus stops are being installed for the new service, and disabled access is being improved at the 134 existing stops.

"By adding more and increasing service, hopefully more people will get out of their cars and start using buses," Nelson said.

Miss America visit to focus on AIDS and related tennis tourney

By BECKY BEVINS
STATE PRESS

Miss America will visit ASU today to speak about AIDS prevention and promote the World Teamtennis Collegiate Challenge.

Katie Shindle is traveling to ASU as part of a tour that includes 10 other universities, including Princeton and Stanford, to promote the WTT tennis tournament. Billie Jean King is the current director and the official spokesperson of WTT. Other celebrities, such as Elton John, have also worked closely with WTT in charity events to raise money for HIV and AIDS charities.

"Both professional and recreational tennis tournaments are branching out to the college market and we thought that this would be a great way to do it," said Marjorie Gantman, the marketing coordinator for World Teamtennis.

The tournament will work in conjunction with ASU intramurals.

"This is a great way to promote both tennis and AIDS prevention here at ASU," said Geoff Hubbard, ASU intramural coordinator. "We are excited to be involved in the event."

The tour and tournament are being sponsored by Home Access Health. The company makes home AIDS tests that can be bought at a drug store and sent in for confidential anonymous results to be mailed back.

"They have sponsored the Elton John tennis tournament in the past," Gantman said. "They are very supportive of the efforts of tennis and AIDS prevention and awareness."

Shindle has devoted her reign as Miss America to speaking about HIV prevention.

She will be giving a speech entitled, "On the Way to a Cure: Preventing HIV Transmission in America" today from 12:30 to 1:30 on the Student Services lawn.

The World Teamtennis Collegiate Challenge will be a six week league with coed teams of at least two men and two women competing in men's singles, women's singles, men's doubles, women's doubles and a mixed doubles match. The winners receive a free trip to the national finals in September at a site to be determined.

Uncertain of funding, wary universities consider tuition hike

PHOENIX (AP) — With the state budget pending and lawmakers preoccupied with a school-finance conundrum, university presidents are proposing tuition increases to avoid winding up financially pinched.

There's a $45 million gap between what the universities have requested for next year and what the Legislature has indicated so far it's willing to give them.

An increase of between 3 percent and 5 percent was to be discussed during a teleconference hearing Wednesday night.

If an increase is approved, it would be the sixth in six years. The budget for ASU, UofA and NAU is about $681 million.

Residents now pay $2,058 a year in tuition and fees. Nonresidents pay $8,710 at ASU and UofA and $7,824 at NAU.

With a $10-million gap between what the Legislature approved and universities requested last year, tuition was raised 2.5 percent for residents and 4 percent for nonresidents.

Tuition increases typically are set after the legislative budget is approved, when the universities know how much the state will provide. This year, with a special session on how to repair an unconstitutional system of financing public-school construction tying up legislators, the budget has yet to be approved, leaving universities uncertain what to expect.

They have requested an additional $68 million; legislative subcommittees have approved an increase of about $39.5 million, including $16 million for a faculty pay increase.

Christine Thompson, executive director of the Arizona Students' Association, pointed out that the state constitution requires that tuition "be as nearly free as possible."

She said the association, which represents the 100,000 public university students in Arizona, would like tuition frozen or held to an increase no greater than the rise in inflation in Phoenix in 1997. ASU's Center for Business Research put inflation at 4.4 percent.

Appeals court allows Symington to remain free during appeal

By MICHELLE RUSHLO
ASSOCIATED PRESS

PHOENIX — A federal appeals court ruled Wednesday that former Gov. Fife Symington may remain free on bail while appealing his bank fraud conviction.

Symington faces a 2 1/2-year prison term for defrauding lenders during his previous career as a real estate developer. He resigned as governor following his conviction in September.

He was ordered to report to a minimum-security federal prison near Las Vegas last Friday, but that was stayed pending a decision by the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in San Francisco.

On Wednesday, a three-judge panel of the 9th Circuit ruled that Symington's appeal raises a "substantial question" and is "fairly debatable," justifying bail.

George Cardona, an assistant U.S. attorney in Los Angeles, said prosecutors probably won't try to have the bail order overturned. He said he couldn't estimate how long Symington's appeals could take.

In seeking bail, Symington's attorneys contend they have a strong case for getting the conviction overturned and that Symington would be in danger in prison because of his reputation for being tough on crime.

Senate panel endorses informed consent abortion measure

BY MATT KELLEY
ASSOCIATED PRESS

PHOENIX — Abortion opponents in the Arizona Senate have revived a failed House proposal to require state-scripted counseling and a 24-hour wait before a woman could get an abortion.

The Senate Family Services Committee endorsed the plan on a 4-3 vote Tuesday after approving it as an amendment to replace another bill (HB2072). Backers said women are often misinformed or uninformed about the risks and consequences when they get an abortion.

"I have felt so guilty and been so ashamed that I locked it deeply inside me," said Theresa Dando, a Tempe nurse who said she had an abortion 14 years ago. "If there had been informed consent in 1984 and a waiting period, I would not have had an abortion."

Opponents of the measure said state law already requires doctors to get their patients' informed consent before any medical procedure, including abortion. The bill could keep doctors from tailoring their discussions to a woman's personal needs, said Dr. Candace Lew of Mesa.

"It is the physician's job to provide this information to the patient," said Lew, an obstetrician-gynecologist who said she does not perform abortions. "It should not be the state ... that provides this information to the patient."

Under the bill, a doctor would have to explain possible physical and emotional risks to a woman seeking an abortion 24 hours before the procedure. The woman also would have to receive, in person or by certified mail, a state-written pamphlet including pictures of a developing fetus and information about agencies which provide alternatives to abortion.

"I see this as a woman's right to know issue," said Rep. Laura Knaperek, R-Tempe, the measure's main House sponsor.

The House Rules Committee, which determines constitutionality of bills, rejected the measure earlier this month on a 6-4 vote. Opponents of the bill also argued Tuesday that it violated the privacy guarantees in the Arizona and U.S. constitutions.

"The state is going to be required to defend a constitutional challenge to this bill and that constitutional challenge will be successful," said Leon Silver, a Phoenix lawyer who has represented Planned Parenthood in past lawsuits challenging abortion restrictions.

Supporters said similar laws in 30 other states have survived federal legal challenges.

The information about risks required by the law would include information about a possible increased risk of breast cancer, which Lew objected to because she said several studies of the question had come to opposite conclusions.

"It's a difficult situation for a doctor to be forced by law to say one thing when the scientific facts are otherwise," Lew said. "There are scientific studies both ways on some of these cases and the other side is not given."

Sen. Tom Patterson, R-Phoenix, an emergency room doctor, said the bill would require doctors to give "medically accurate" information about possible risks such as breast cancer.

"If two doctors at the legislative hearing can't agree on what the term 'medically accurate' means, I think it (the bill) is on its face unconstitutionally vague," Silver said.

First known case reported under nation's only assisted-suicide law

By BRAD CAIN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

PORTLAND, Ore. — An elderly woman stricken with breast cancer has become the first known person to die under the nation's only doctor-assisted suicide law, an advocacy group said Wednesday.

The Oregon woman in her mid 80s, whose name was withheld by her family, died Tuesday night, about 30 minutes after taking a lethal dose of barbiturates mixed with syrup, and washed down with a glass of brandy, the advocates said.

"I'm looking forward to it," the woman said in a tape played for reporters by the group Compassion in Dying. "I will be relieved of all the stress I have."

Oregon's Death with Dignity Act, first passed by voters in 1994 and affirmed last year, allows doctors to prescribe lethal drugs at the request of terminally ill patients who have less than six months to live. Doctors may only prescribe a lethal dose, not administer it.

The woman said she had been given less than two months to live and could no longer enjoy beloved pastimes, like gardening in her back yard.

"I've always been able to get around and do things," she said. "Suddenly I'm in a position I can't walk very good and I'm having trouble breathing."

Surrounded by family members and her physician in her Portland home, she fell into a deep sleep five minutes after taking the concoction.

"She swallowed the medication and died a half hour later, very peacefully," said Barbara Coombs Lee, author of the law.

In the five months since the last court fight ended and the measure took effect, there had not been a single case of someone coming forward to take advantage of the law and make a public point about the right to die.

Supporters of the measure say they have had numerous inquiries from patients, but this is the first case they know of where a person has used the law.

State officials, citing privacy laws, would not confirm whether there has been a case. They say they will release a preliminary report as soon as they have recorded 10 suicides.

Oregon's chief epidemiologist, David Fleming, said he had no previous word about the elderly woman's suicide plans.

In the campaign last fall over the measure, opponents suggested that the state would become a magnet for people who wanted medical assistance to die.

Though that groundswell has not materialized, opponents were still dismayed at news of the first state-sanctioned suicide.

"This is a tragic and sad day for Oregon and the United States," said Bob Castagna, a spokesman for the Oregon

Catholic Conference. "May God have mercy on all of us."

Said Gayle Atteberry of the group Oregon Right to Life: "It makes my heart break that we have stooped so low in society that we allow the terminally ill to kill themselves instead of reaching out with true compassion that would be being with them to the end."

The law has been the focus of national debate since the first campaign in 1994 when voters passed it by a narrow margin, and in 1997 when it was put back on the ballot by the Legislature and overwhelmingly passed again.

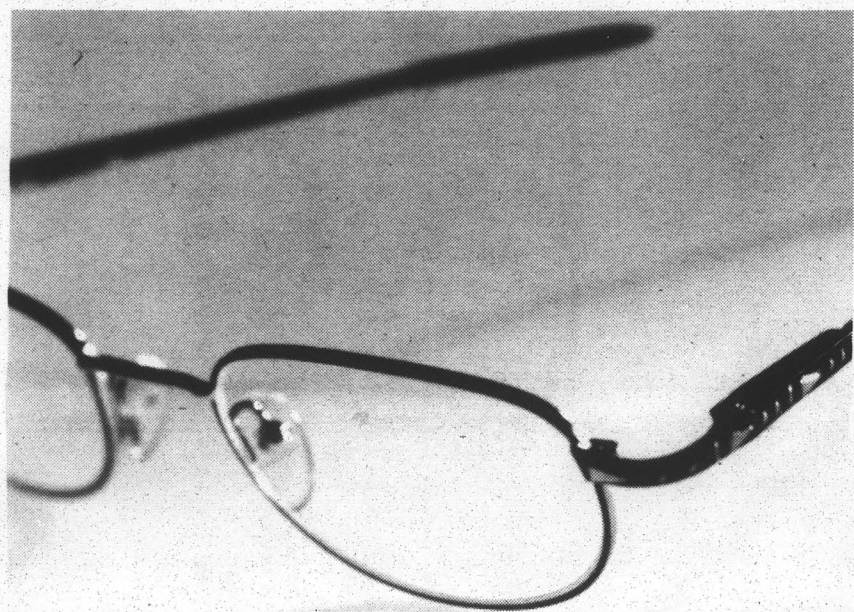

A warning from Washington clouded the law almost as soon as it went into effect. The Federal Drug Enforcement Administration, in a notice solicited by Congressional opponents of the Oregon law, warned that any doctors who prescribed drugs for suicide could risk sanctions.

Justice Department officials have since indicated that federal drug officials are unlikely to interfere with the Oregon law.

The latest furor over the law came last month when a state panel made assisted suicide part of the list of procedures available to the 270,000 low-income residents covered under the state's health plan. Federal money, by law, cannot be used in assisted suicide.

But Oregon officials said the costs of the procedure could be covered using only state money.

No. 1 Wildcats team to beat in Pac-10 softball race

The versatility of utility player Jennifer Gall has been one of the main reasons for ASU's 23-6 start this season. The Sun Devils will continue to rely on the junior in their quest for the Pac-10 Championship.

BY DOUG FLANAGAN
STATE PRESS

This is part two of a two-part series previewing the 1998 Pac-10 softball season.

4. California. A dynamic one-two punch in the circle will lead the Golden Bears in their hopes of returning to the women's College World Series.

Senior Whitney Floyd, a two-time All-American, returns this season after missing the majority of 1997 with an injury. Floyd topped the 20-win mark in both 1995 and 1996.

She joins junior Holly Yost, who established herself as one of the conference's best and most durable pitchers in Floyd's absence last year. Yost won 29 games in 56 appearances, completed 37 games, pitched 319 innings and threw 27 consecutive games to end the Bears' '97 campaign. Yost is also Cal's most feared presence at the plate. She led the team with a .327 batting average.

"I think a lot of people thought we were going to throw in the towel last year, especially after Whitney got hurt," Cal head coach Diane Ninemire said. "But I think it made our team stronger because we saw we could succeed without having a top gun in there. Hopefully, the players learned something about themselves that will make them stronger and bring more confidence into this season. This year, we have the depth to overcome almost any adversity."

With a 17-player roster, Ninemire will have numerous options, especially on offense. The Golden Bears will present a much different look in 1998 — one that adds the elements of speed and slapping to go along with power.

Top returnees include junior catcher Megumi Takasaki, who batted .314 with seven steals last year; senior first baseman Jennie Ackley, third on Cal's career RBI list with 90, adding a team-leading eight home runs in '97; and sophomore Lisa Lancin, who batted .307 and led the squad with nine stolen bases in her first collegiate season.

3. Arizona State. The eighth-ranked Sun Devils have utilized the hot hands of senior pitchers Carrie Breedlove and Roxanne Tsosie to sprint out to a 23-6 record, despite a noticeable lack of depth.

Both Tsosie and Breedlove have been honored as Pac-10 Pitchers of the Week, and Breedlove was named the National Fastpitch Coaches Association Player of the Week for the week of Feb. 24.

Alternating turns in the circle, Tsosie has registered a 14-2 record, a 1.08 ERA and 64 strikeouts. Breedlove has a record of 10-4, a .080 ERA and 79 strikeouts.

Head coach Linda Wells was not expecting her squad to be a team based on power (her recruiting class for 1999 will change that) but to her surprise the Sun Devils have already hit eight home runs, four times as many as they hit in all of 1997.

The source behind this power has been sophomore third baseman Christine Gill, who leads the team with three home runs and 25 RBI while batting .326.

Senior left fielder Raja Woods, who would be effective in any of the top five spots in the batting order, has been the catalyst of the offense while hitting primarily in the two hole. The 1997 All-Conference honorable mention pick is batting a team-leading .395, connecting for two home runs, 13 RBI and stolen 14 bases in 17 attempts. Woods also sports a .485 on base percentage.

Also counted on to contribute to the offense by Wells are junior shortstop Holly Smith (.286, 20 RBI in '98), junior utility player Jennifer Gall (.312) and senior centerfielder Erin Hull (.326, nine SB). Men's basketball players honored at annual awards banquet

FROM STAFF REPORTS

The ASU men's basketball team held its annual awards banquet Wednesday night at The Point in South Mountain without its most valuable player.

Guard Jeremy Veal, who is the school's all-time leader in points (1984) and who led the Pac-10 this in scoring season, averaging 20.8 points a game, was named MVP for the second straight year.

The All-American honorable mention selection, however, was unable to attend the ceremony because he is currently in San Antonio, Texas, preparing for the NABC All-Star Game being played Friday at the Alamo Dome, the site of this year's Final Four. That all-star game features the nation's premier senior players.

Others recognized for helping the Sun Devils to an 18-14 season record, a tie for fifth place in the Pac-10 (8-10) and an NIT

VEAL

Tournament berth included Mike Batiste, Urit Kelly, Bobby Lazor and Ahlon Lewis.

Batiste was awarded the Tony Cerkvenik Rebounder of the Year Award. The 6-foot-8 junior averaged 7.8 boards a game, tied for fifth in the conference.

Kelly received the Coaches Award, which recognizes the player who best exemplifies the team concept. The senior averaged 4.8 points and 3.8 rebounds in his 61 game career at ASU.

Lazor, a business marketing major with a 3.61 GPA, earned the Academic Award. The 6-foot-9 junior who transferred from Syracuse is on course to earn his degree this May. Lazor was also a member of the GTE District VII Academic team. On the court, he averaged 16.8 points and 7.8 rebounds.

The Most Improved Player Award was given to senior Ahlon Lewis, who this season broke the school record for assists in a season (294) and led the nation in the same category (9.2 per game). Interim head coach Don Newman called Lewis, who averaged 2.7 assists last season, "the most improved player in the nation."

Veal, Kelly and Lewis were also presented senior awards.

Men's swim team heads to Auburn for NCAA Championships

BY JASON JOSEPH
STATE PRESS

After six months of rigorous training, swimming in national tournaments and working its way up to No. 12 in the nation, seven ASU men's swimmers will compete in the NCAA Men's Swimming Championships in Auburn, Ala., today through Saturday.

"We've done a good job all year," ASU assistant coach Sean Farrell said. "The rest of the country is finally recognizing us as a national powerhouse."

The Sun Devils head into Alabama with a season record of 6-4, while going 1-3 in the conference. ASU won its last four meets to end the dual meet season.

"We look really good of late," senior tri-captain Craig Hutchison said. "We have some momentum behind us and I think we are capable of finishing in the top-10."

Of the seven swimmers, only two have NCAA Championship experience. Hutchison will make his second NCAA appearance this weekend. Junior All-American Francisco Sanchez will compete in his third NCAA tour-namment while at ASU.

"Since I've been here before, I feel much more confident and comfortable," Sanchez said. "I've been telling some of the younger guys to relax, have fun, but get the job done."

For Sanchez, a native of Valencia, Venezuela, this meet will offer him a chance to regain his national title in the 50-yard freestyle, a title which was taken away from him last year after he finished fourth in the event.

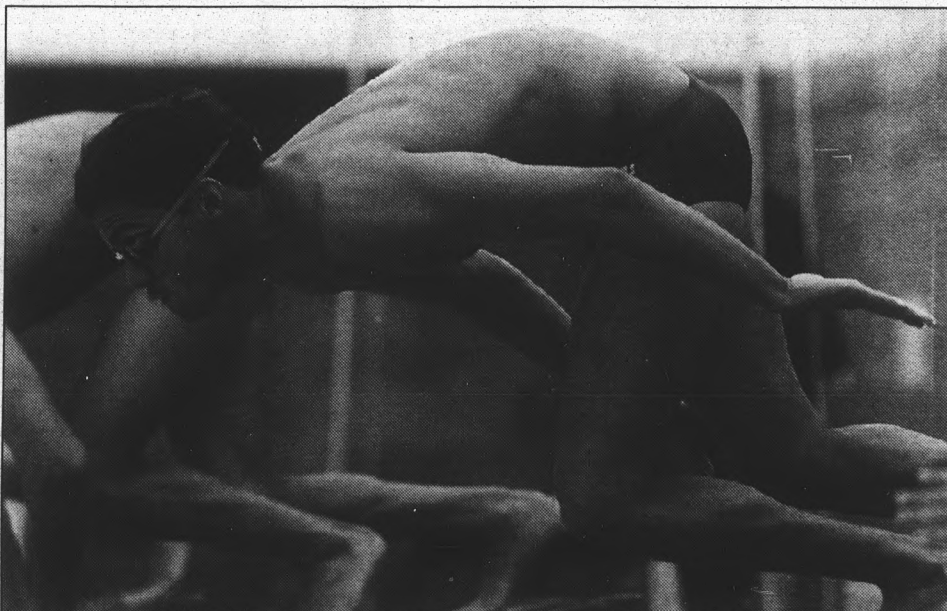

"I always want to be the best," Sanchez said. "I'm confident that I can take back the national crown this year."

Last season, the Sun Devils placed 11th in the NCAA tournament. This year, Farrell said that the team is more prepared to win.

"Our team has all the potential it takes to win," Farrell said. "We are on track to do some great things. It all has to come together at the right time."

For the fast-paced Sun Devils, the relays look to be the strongest part of their game.

"Our short relay squads are arguably the best in the nation," Hutchison said.

Junior Francisco Sanchez will lead the ASU men's swim team at the NCAA Championships today through Saturday in Auburn, Ala. Sanchez will be looking to reclaim the NCAA title he lost last year in the 50-yard freestyle.

Spring time to shine for defensive ends Yancy, Ford

BY SCOTT LEWIS
STATE PRESS

The ASU football team has a 7-11 problem. It isn't that the Sun Devils have been spending too many late nights sucking down slurpees and eating hot dogs at the 24-hour mini-mart.

The problem is that seven of the 11 starters from last season's defense graduated. Which leaves a lot of holes and plenty of competition during spring practice at defensive line, linebacker and in the secondary.

But no position was left more depleted than defensive end, where — for the second season in a row — both of the previous season's starters are gone. Last year, Hamilton Mee and Vince Amey had to replace Derrick Rodgers, now of the NFL Miami Dolphins, and Brent Burnstein, who recently signed with the Arizona Cardinals.

This spring, sophomore Quincy Yancy and senior Derrick Ford are the frontrunners to be the new bookends of the defensive line. And, at 6-foot-8, 250 pounds and 6-1, 234 pounds, the undersized Yancy and Ford, respectively, might want to make those 7-11 stops and start loading up on the Big Bites.

Head coach Bruce Snyder, however, isn't concerned about things that are out of his control. Things like the size of his football players or the sun in Arizona.

"If we are undersized, what are we going to do about it?" Snyder said. "So there's no use talking about it. It's like, it gets hot here in the summer. What are you going to do about it? We are the size that we are."

"I do know Derrick (Ford) is more of a linebacker-sized kid and Quincy is more of a power forward. But they're both playing end and they gotta play end based on their abilities."

In limited playing time last season, Yancy and Ford finished with nine tackles apiece. Yancy recorded his first career sack in ASU's Sun Bowl victory over Iowa, while Ford had three sacks on the season. One of Ford's sacks, against Washington State's quarterback Ryan Leaf, caused a fumble that he recovered in the end zone for a touchdown.

"There is no concern (about being undersized)," Yancy said. "No fear. We just got to go out and do our job. If you get triple-teamed, you get triple-teamed, you just do your job. You have to sell out for your team."

"I think if you go 100 percent every play, it doesn't matter how big you are or how fast you are," Ford added. "I don't think size is an issue at all."

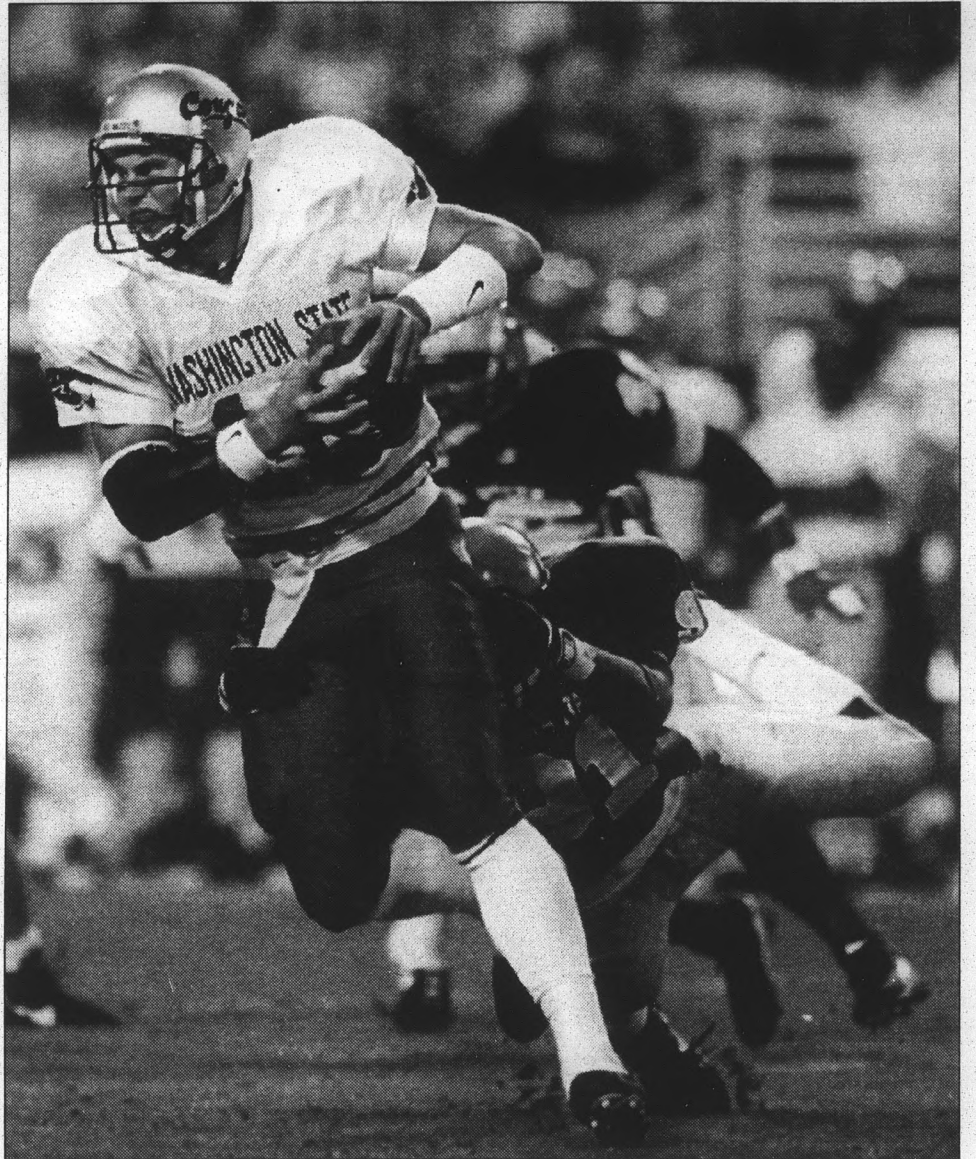

Both players have speed and strength. Now, with highly-regarded transfer Junior College All-American Erik Flowers and high school All-American Mike Pinkard not arriving until the fall, both players have this spring to show that ability on the football field as the starting defensive ends.

"I think Quincy is going to be a really good football player," Snyder said. "Everybody's worried about the fact that he's too tall or too skinny or that he looks like a basketball player. He's a football player mentally. He's not a basketball player playing football. He's going to be fine."

"(Ford's) been here a long time and he has never started," Snyder added. "He knows that if there is ever a golden moment, an opportunity in time, to salvage his college career, it's this spring and this fall. There's really nobody ahead of him. If he comes on and plays, it's his job to lose. It hasn't happened yet for him to play a lot. If he can turn it on, one, that's good for him. Two, that's good for our defense."

Snyder is pleased with the work ethic he has seen from Yancy and Ford thus far in spring practice. In particular, their ability to rush the passer has been most impressive. Their play against the run, however, has been less than spectacular. But as Snyder said, they are the size they are. What can you do about it? According to Ford, anything it takes, as long as he is the starting defensive end in the fall.

"I do have a golden opportunity," Ford said. "I'm just gonna do what I can to take advantage of that. Seems like since I've been here I have been waiting in the ranks, so to speak. I do have an opportunity and I plan to take advantage of it."

Quincy Yancy is unable to bring down Washington State quarterback Ryan Leaf in ASU's 44-31 victory over the Cougars last season. Yancy, along with fellow defensive end Derrick Ford, will be counted on this season to provide a pass rush and bring down opposing quarterbacks.

NCAA probe of wrestlers' deaths lacks focus on real issue

There is nothing like college sports. In the pure spirit of competition, student-athletes display pure emotion and desire for the pure love of the games they play.

Which does sound, if you would, oh so pure. Too bad — in the immortal words of De La Soul — it's pure plug bull.

The NCAA, the governing body of collegiate athletics, is as pure as ASU spring breakers Chris and Tim after a week in Mazatlan. Which, if you didn't catch the sarcasm, is not pure at all.

For years, the NCAA has raked in millions of dollars in profit from the big-money basketball tournament and New Year's Day football games, while the student-athletes who provide the entertainment are left nothing but dried-up leaves on the lawn. Scholarships — which generally cover tuition, housing, food and books for high-profile sports — are nice, but pale in comparison to the real money that the NCAA suits are collecting over in their cushy Kansas headquarters.

But my grief with the NCAA has nothing to do with greed. They're money-hungry scum and I have accepted that. But the latest job the NCAA has pulled cannot be ignored.

SCOTT LEWIS
Sports Columnist

Over a two-month span earlier this year, three college wrestlers died while attempting to make weight for competition. In response, the NCAA formed a committee to investigate.

In the Feb. 20 issue of the Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report, the results of the investigation were released and, as expected, the report concentrated on dehydration and the various weight-loss tactics. The report also discussed the need for surveillance and advisement.

It might appear to an outsider looking in that the NCAA did a thorough investigation. But, as an insider looking out, I can tell you that if the investigation was thorough, then it was a thoroughly half-assed job of investigating.

There were two common links to all three deaths: 1. At the time of death, all three were wearing rubber suits. 2. All three were using creatine, the popular muscle supplement.

Rubber suits have been used by wrestlers for a long time and deaths were practically non-existent in the past. Creatine, on the other hand, is as new as an untapped keg full of brew. So what did the NCAA say about creatine in its thorough investigation? Not a thing. Nothing, nada, zip, zero, zilch, donut.

Here is the possible missing link behind all three deaths and it is completely ignored. I wish someone would investigate the NCAA and recommend advisement and surveillance for their sorry asses.

To the supporters of creatine, I will tell you that I have taken it before and I'm about to take it again. It's an excellent supplement for the recovery and building of muscles. But for a wrestler trying to lose water weight, creatine — which retains water in the muscles of the body — can be deadly. Mass skeletal breakdown deadly.

As Casey Strand of the ASU wrestling team said, "It just doesn't make any sense to take creatine if you're cutting weight."

But the NCAA ignores the facts and says "the key is to change behavior." Will someone please tell me how you are supposed to change behavior if the NCAA refuses to identify the behavior?

I don't know why the NCAA has ignored creatine as an aid in the cause of death, but I'm sure there is a reason. Based on past NCAA dealings, it probably has something to do with money. As I see it, the NCAA is nothing but a hypocritical, corrupt, elitist organization that is to college sports what Don King is to boxing.

If only collegiate athletics could take the lead of Mike Tyson and fire the bastards.

No. 6 women's tennis team ready to hold court against Oregon

Reka Cseresnyes and the No. 6 Sun Devil women's tennis team look forward to their second home match of the week when they take on the Oregon Ducks today at the Whiteman Tennis Center at 1:30 p.m.

BY LORI HARO
STATE PRESS

The No. 6 ASU women's tennis team hopes to keep its four-match winning streak going when it takes on the Oregon Ducks at the Whiteman Tennis Center today at 1:30 p.m.

The Sun Devils have posted a 11-3 record on the season and are 4-3 in the Pac-10 South. ASU's only losses have come at the hands of Stanford, Cal and arch-rival UofA.

However, the Sun Devils have gone undefeated in non-conference matches and plan to continue on in their winning ways.

ASU most recently beat Washington 7-2 on Sunday. The Sun Devils also won two conference matches over spring break defeating both USC and UCLA.

Oregon is coming off a weekend loss to Long Beach State 5-4 and were shutout by the UofA Wednesday 6-0.

McInerney believes that ASU has been doing so well lately because all of the athletes have just "really come out to play every game." She attributes the team's most recent win to the high level of competitiveness the Sun Devils have shown.

"I think this is the first time since I've been here that we swept USC and UCLA in the same season," McInerney said. "We've just been competing really hard and when you compete really hard you just have a good chance to win."

ASU's great play has not gone unnoticed. The Intercollegiate Tennis Association's most recent rankings had the Sun Devils at No. 6, moving up three notches from their previous No. 9 standing.

Several Sun Devils also moved up in the rankings. In singles Cseresnyes moved up to No. 29 from No. 44. Freshman Karin Palme moves from No. 60 to No. 43.

speed to propel the Sun Devils.

For how long ASU's season is extended will lie in their ability to overcome depth problems and the two senior pitchers staying hot. Wells thinks this can happen easily.

"I think, for this group, it's realistic to finish in the top four in the Pac-10 and repeat postseason play," she said.

2. Washington. The Huskies' softball program is reminiscent of the 1997 incarnation of the Florida Marlins — five years ago, they didn't exist, but in that short span of time the team has built itself into a national power.

Husky's head coach Teresa Wilson has built the team from scratch into one that placed second nationally in 1996 and returned to the CWS final four last year. This year's team looks to be just as strong, staying at No. 3 in the nation for the majority of the season.

Washington's most valuable asset as they enter Pac-10 play is their experience — 10 of the 15 players have played in the women's College World Series, and the Huskies return seven of last year's starters.

As with other elite squads, the strength of the Huskies is the pitching. Senior Eve Gaw will head up the rotation that includes sophomores Jamie Graves (21 wins, six saves in '97) and Jennifer Spediacci (1.96 ERA, 10 complete games).

"There is no animosity between them," said Wilson, herself a former collegiate pitcher. "They do not care who pitches for how long or when or where, as long as they get the job done as a staff. You very rarely see that in college softball."

The Huskies also return most of a powerful lineup that nailed 32 home runs last season. Wilson is counting on junior first baseman Becky Newbry, who led the team with a .346 batting average, 72 hits, 47 RBI and six home runs, to fill the shoes of the graduated All-American Sara Pickering, as the leader of the offense.

In addition, senior Leah Francis will once again take her spot in centerfield as the lone returning outfielder. Francis hit .305 last season and stole 16 bases.

1. UofA. Two straight national championships. Five in the '90's. Current national ranking of No. 1.

The Wildcats have proven that they are not only the best team in the Pac-10, but the best team in the country.

UofA will return four first-team All-Americans off of last year's national championship-winning team, including the College World Series MVP, four players who hit .300 or better and a pitcher who posted a 36-2 record last year and pitched every inning of postseason play for the Wildcats.

"We have eight freshmen, so that's 50 percent of our team," head coach Mike Candrea said. "But we have a very good nucleus of seniors. Nancy Evans, Alison Johnson, Leah Bratz and Lety Pineda are all All-Americans. So our strength is leadership from them."

Candrea, last year's National Coach of the Year and owner of a national championship ring for each finger on one of his hands, said that this year looks to be "business as usual."

"We have quality depth," Candrea said. "There are a lot of players who can play. I think early in the season it will be a matter of who's swinging the bat, because almost everyone on this club is capable of putting it together sooner or later."

Senior centerfielder Johnsen was the '97 Pac-10 Player of the Year, leading the nation with a .534 batting average. She also hit seven home runs and drove in 63 runs.

Johnsen is one of seven returning starters that Candrea has at his disposal. Also back is senior utility player Bratz, who led the team with 21 home runs and 78 RBI, and senior third baseman Pineda, who was third in the Pac-10 in home runs (16) and fifth in RBI with 56.

In the circle, Evans, a senior, returns after a 1997 campaign that saw her come out victorious in 36 of her 38 decisions. Evans will tutor an otherwise young staff that will include freshmen newcomers Becky Lemke and Meghann Pricer.

With all the success UofA has had recently, the harsh glare of the spotlight might try to thrust undue pressure on the Wildcats. However, according to Candrea, it hasn't affected his squad.

"We don't really talk about (being a dynasty)," he said. "We just go out every day and do the little things to become a better team. The game is played between the lines, not in the

Driver Chris Trickle, nephew of Dick, dies

LAS VEGAS (AP) — For more than a year after being shot in the head, race car driver Chris Trickle fought against all odds to come out of a coma. His family stayed by his bedside, hoping and praying for the miracle that never came.

On Wednesday, their struggle finally ended. Thirteen months after a bullet ended Trickle's promising racing career, it finally ended his life.

The 25-year-old Trickle died Wednesday afternoon at a local hospital, where he had been taken earlier in the day by his parents. A hospital spokeswoman confirmed the death, but said the family wanted no details released.

Trickle, a promising stock car driver and the nephew of Winston Cup driver Dick Trickle, was never able to fully come out of the coma caused when he was shot in the head on Feb. 9, 1997, while driving to play tennis with a friend.

His death came less than a month after Trickle made a public appearance at a fundraiser held before the Las Vegas 400 Winston Cup race. Though not conscious, his parents brought him in a wheelchair to the fundraiser that raised $20,297 to help pay for his care.

Trickle's parents and girlfriend had cared for him nearly constantly since the shooting, which police have yet to solve.

Sanchez added, "We're ready to go all out in the relays, especially the 4-by-50."

The 4-by-50 relay squad of Sanchez, Hutchison, freshman Adam Guzauskas and junior Guillermo Diaz DeLeon looks to the favorite heading into the meet.

The Sun Devils managed to finish the season nearly injury-free, and Farrell considers that a blessing.

"Luckily for us, nobody has come down with any illnesses or injuries," Farrell said.

One concern the team has is the endurance factor.

"While everything is looking good for us, the only thing we're worried about is our endurance," Farrell added.

"We've been resting for the past few weeks since our last meet, and our energy level isn't where we want it to be."

Traveling with the team include Sanchez, Hutchison, Diaz DeLeon, Guzauskas, sophomores Pablo Abal and Greg Plank and freshman Scott Von Schoff.

Curry, Capel shine at McDonald's game

NORFOLK, Va. (AP)—Local favorites and future teammates Ronald Curry and Jason Capel scored 19 and 22 points, respectively, and the East beat the West 128-112 Wednesday in the McDonald's All-American High School Game.

Curry added 13 rebounds, nine assists and four steals at Scope, only a few miles from where his exploits at Hampton High School made him one of the top recruited players in the nation in football and basketball.

Curry and Capel, whose father coaches at nearby Old Dominion, will both attend

North Carolina next season.

Al Harrington added 17 points, Dan Gadzuric 15 and Vincent Yarbrough and Kevin Lyde 14 for the East. The West was paced by JaRon Rush and Quentin Richardson with 19 points apiece, and Rashard Lewis with 17.

and Katy Propstra were slated at No. 11. The duo's previous ranking was at No. 13.

McInerney doesn't think much about the rankings figures that they usually end up about where they should at the end, but does recognize that the rankings reflect how competitive the Pac-10 South is.

There are 12 players from the Pac-10 South ranked in the top-50 for singles and six teams ranked in the top-25 for doubles.

All teams in the conference are also ranked in the top-20, with Stanford leading the nation at No. 1. Cal falls behind the Sun Devils at No. 8 while UCLA and USC are No. 14 and No. 18 respectively. The UofA stands at No. 19.

ASU only has five more matches in the regular season, including three conference rematches against Stanford, Cal and the UofA. ASU will next play New Mexico at home on April 1.

What do you think?

The ASU men's basketball season has been over for nearly two weeks now, and a head coach for next season has yet to be named. An announcement from the university isn't expected until after the NCAA Tournament, which ends next Monday. Several candidates have been rumored for the job but apparently interim head coach Don Newman isn't among them. Newman led the Sun Devils, who were picked to finish last in the Pac-10, to an 18-14 overall mark, a tie for fifth place in the Pac-10 at 8-10 and an NIT Tournament berth this season.

Those in favor of Don Newman being promoted to head coach e-mail your response to newmanyes@asu.edu

The job appears to be Rick Majerus' to take or leave. Majerus, the current Utah head coach, has hinted in the past that he would like to coach at ASU, but with his team now in the Final Four, the price tag for him has skyrocketed.

Other coaches reported to be candidates include George Washington's Mike Jarvis, Xavier's Skip Prosser, North Carolina-Charlotte's Melvin Watkins and Mark Gottfried of Murray State.

The State Press would like to know who you — the fans, students, faculty and staff of ASU — think should be head coach of the men's basketball team. Reply to one of the two addresses listed, and tell us who you think should be coach and why.

Those in favor another coach write in at newmanno@asu.edu
