ASASU presidential elections start again

BY MONICA J. AGUIRRE
 STATE PRESS

A new Associated Students of ASU election will be held today from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. after the Supreme Court decided Tuesday that a "do-over" presidential election should be held that would include all the original seven candidates.

If no candidate wins a majority, voters will have to cast their third ballot in the run-off election, 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. Wednesday.

"The elections this year were really messed up," said Sen. Kevin Molloy, Honors College, who did not support the senate's attempt to hold one run-off election. "I can see the benefits of starting over outweighing the argument for continuing with an election process that has basically been made a mockery of. Starting over is a fresh, good idea."

The seven original candidates are, Seth Deitchman, Paul Frost, Richard Gans, Brock Leach, Jeff Lujan, Damon Pace and Craig Reid.

Deitchman, Frost, Lujan, Pace and Reid confirmed they are campaigning in hopes of a final victory to save the day for ASASU. Leach has decided not to run. Gans was unavailable for comment.

All candidates names will be placed on the ballot.

Some senators hoped there would be a run-off between the top two selected superheroes of the April 2 election, Deitchman and Frost. They were not happy with the Supreme Court's decision.

"The first mistake the Supreme Court made was ruling in favor of the concert which only 1,500 students attended," said Sen. Andrew Leffberg, College of Business. "They made the students waste $20,000. Their second mistake is redoing the election right before finals. They interceded in the powers of the senate."

"The elections this year were really messed up. I can see the benefits of starting over outweighing the argument for continuing with an election process that has basically been made a mockery of. Starting over is a fresh, good idea."

— Kevin Molloy,
 ASASU Honors College senator

Reid submitted a bill Friday pleading one last time for the court to hold simply one run-off election.

"In the bylaws, the only way a special election can be held is by a two-thirds vote of the senate," Reid said. "That failed, Thursday. Whoever becomes president would be holding the position unconstitutionally. I've asked the Supreme Court to stop the election and make it constitutional and put Deitchman and Frost back in the election so the voice of the students would be heard."

A decision has not been made. Since elections are to run as scheduled today, assumption is the elections will not change.

"I hope students take it seriously, that the best candidate wins and that we can just move on," Molloy said.

Class of 2001 agenda includes God, big bucks

College freshman, the class of 2001, believe they will earn big bucks when they graduate, think sex before marriage isn't a problem and believe in God but don't go to church.

Nearly everyone in this group thinks they will reach their goals, but a majority hold a negative view of race relations in America and don't trust their Generation X classmates, according to a new survey sponsored by Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Company.

The survey of 2,100 college freshmen from across the nation, including ASU and 100 other colleges, tracks the demographics, beliefs and attitudes of the first class of the 21st century.

This is a class of citizens that balances the mind and the heart, Tillish said. It's a class grounded in reality, alive with optimism and a vision of a better world.

Nine out of 10 students surveyed said helping out was more important than helping oneself. And more than 73 percent report having volunteered in the past year. Most said they would share their winnings if they won the lottery.

Observances, marches mark Chernobyl anniversary

By PAVEL POLITYUK
ASSOCIATED PRESS

KIEV, Ukraine — With solemn ceremonies and rallies, Ukraine, Russia and Belarus on Sunday marked the 12th anniversary of the Chernobyl nuclear disaster that continues to haunt the three former Soviet republics.

Ukrainian President Leonid Kuchma declared that his country would adhere to pledges to close the ill-fated nuclear power plant.

"Chernobyl will be closed — that is clear," the president said after a ceremony near the monument to Chernobyl's victims. "We do not have any other choice."

But Kuchma said a definite shutdown date depends on when promised Western aid will arrive.

Chernobyl's reactor No. 4 exploded during a test April 26, 1986, killing at least 32 people in the immediate blast and sending a deadly cloud of radiation across large sections of Russia and Europe.

In a speech broadcast nationwide, Kuchma estimated the damage suffered by Ukraine at up to $130 billion, and said Kiev has to spend $1 billion a year to deal with the consequences of the accident.

The health ministry says close to 3,600 Ukrainians who took part in the cleanup effort have died from radiation exposure. Private groups say the death toll is at least twice as high.

Russian officials say an estimated 10,000 Russian "liquidators" — those involved in the clean-up — have died, and thousands more became invalids.

In 1995, Ukraine and the Group of Seven leading industrialized nations agreed to close the plant in exchange for Western aid. The money would help finish two nuclear reactors to compensate for the energy that Chernobyl provided.

But the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development is not expected to make a decision on whether to fund the new reactors until late this year.

Ukrainian officials say they are prepared to keep the plant's only functioning reactor open well into the next century if they do not receive the promised aid. It has been under repair since last year and is scheduled to resume producing electricity next month.

In Russia, Orthodox Church Patriarch Alexy II presided over a memorial ceremony at Moscow's Mitino cemetery, the burial site for 28 firemen who died at Chernobyl.

Government officials and victims' relatives took part in the ceremony and consecrated the grounds for a future chapel.

Wearing costumes to represent radioactive isotopes, parade participants march in central Minsk, Belarus Saturday to mark the 12th anniversary of the nuclear reactor accident in Chernobyl, Ukraine. Chernobyl's reactor No. 4 exploded during an April 26, 1986 test, killing at least 32 people in the immediate aftermath and sending a deadly cloud of radiation across parts of Europe.

In neighboring Belarus on Saturday, about 7,000 people demonstrated in the capital of Minsk, waving banners with the symbol for radiation and slogans such as "Chernobyl is our common pain."

Authorities on Sunday released 17 activists detained during the rally, but held more than a dozen visiting Russian protesters.

The demonstrators called for Russia to pay compensation to Belarusian victims of Chernobyl and demanded that Ukrainian authorities shut the plant permanently.

Speakers at the demonstration also used the occasion to denounce hard-line President Alexander Lukashenko.

Belarus says 2 million people suffered from nuclear contamination from Chernobyl, just miles from the Belarusian border. Authorities dedicated a new church Sunday to the victims.

Clinton's delivery provides knee-slapping fun at dinner

President Clinton holds up a mock copy of a magazine called 'Content' as he roasts the White House press corps Saturday at the White House Correspondents' Association annual dinner in Washington.

WASHINGTON (AP) — For one night, President Clinton was a comedian — and stole the show with a string of one-liners that poked fun at his recent globetrotting and the rhetoric of regret he uttered while abroad.

With Paula Jones watching from a rear table and celebrities like Warren Beatty and Sharon Stone in the room, the president gave hired comedian Ray Romano a run for his money Saturday night at the 84th annual dinner of the White House Correspondents Association.

Of Romano, star of the CBS sitcom "Everybody Loves Raymond," Clinton quipped: "Everybody loves Raymond? I can't stand a guy with a 100 percent approval rating."

"All over, TV executives are asking what can possibly fill the gaping hole on Thursday night once 'Seinfeld' goes off the air," Clinton continued. "I've got it: Congress on C-SPAN. Now there's a show about nothing."

He opened with a deadpan spoof of the greetings that he gave in his six-nation African tour — and, in a takeoff of his agonizing over an apology for slavery, expressed official "regret" for a number of things.

"It took until 1930 to welcome Pluto into the community of planets, and that was wrong," Clinton said. "And I am so sorry about disco. I mean, that whole era of leisure suits and bean bag chairs and lava lamps, ... that was wrong. Then, there's the Susan B. Anthony dollar. It did look too much like a quarter."

He told the crowd of 2,600 journalists and guests in the Washington Hilton ballroom that he was pleased to be visiting America. "This Washington is a very special place, and Hillary and I will never forget our visit here," he said.

Clinton ignored the presence of Mrs. Jones, who was the guest of conservative Insight magazine. He joked that he hadn't kept up with the news since the Pope's trip to Cuba in January, the same week that the investigation of his alleged relationship with former intern Monica Lewinsky became public.

"I hardly have any time to read the news anymore. Mostly I just skim the retractions," he said. Neither Lewinsky nor her lawyer, William Ginsburg, were present.

Israel warns Palestinians not to declare state without agreement

By JOSH KRIST
ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM — Israel warned the Palestinians on Sunday against unilaterally declaring an independent state next year after Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat again asserted his right to do so.

The sharp exchange came as a pair of U.S. envoys were holding meetings with both sides to lay the groundwork for a round of high-level London talks on May 4.

Mediator Dennis Ross, accompanied by Assistant Secretary of State Martin Indyk, met with Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu Saturday night and Sunday afternoon, and were to meet later Sunday with Arafat.

A day earlier, Arafat told reporters in Gaza that the Palestinians would press ahead with a declaration of statehood in May 1999 whether or not there is an agreement with Israel.

"It's our right, and we're going to declare it," said Arafat, who has made similar assertions in the past.

Top Netanyahu aide David Bar-Illan said Sunday that such a move would not only violate the peace accords but result in "the total scuttling of the agreement."

"It is the kind of move which leaves Israel free to take unilateral moves, too," he told The Associated Press. However, he refused to say whether that was an implied threat to annex parts of the West Bank.

Former Israeli Prime Minister Shimon Peres, who met Sunday with Arafat, tried to calm the waters, saying he hoped neither side would have to resort to unilateral steps.

"Nobody has to threaten anybody," he told reporters in Gaza. "I think the thing to do is reach an agreement ... We have agreed that by May 1999 we have to conclude our negotiations with the Palestinians, and I hope this will happen."

Meanwhile, another top Israeli official indicated Israel would resist any U.S. pressure to extend the scope of its next withdrawal from the West Bank.

"It will be Israel which defines its security needs and Israel which decides on the scope of the redeployment," said Cabinet Secretary Dan Naveh. "It is inconceivable that there be a situation where Israel is forced or dictated to in issues dealing with its security."

Students key players in ASASU drama sequel

This year's ASASU presidential elections seem like a Hollywood production filled with scandal, courtroom battles, good guys, bad guys (depending on whom you ask) and the ever-so-dramatic finish — a second presidential election sliding in just before the credits.

There's much more than just your average political mudslinging in this feature-length film. This student government fiasco is complete with campaign finance fraud accusations, claims of conflicts of interests on the inside and a disqualification followed by supreme court mandated re-qualification. All perfect ingredients for the next John Grisham novel.

But to most of us, this entire ASASU situation is more like the film Groundhog Day — minus the Sonny and Cher song. As students cast their ballots today, they will have the strangest feeling that they have done it before, as if they were living the same day over and over and over.

Probably because we have.

Not to fear, however. ASASU has assured us that this is it. Whatever decision the student body gives them in this election they are stuck with. There's no throwing out the results this time, baby.

However, this whole situation has left the student voice with a bit of laryngitis.

The catch is that our only opportunity to voice ourselves is a 12-hour window today, from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. Many students may not be on campus on Mondays and will unfortunately miss out on this spur-of-the-moment election process.

Also, there was an incredibly low turnout for the first elections, and many of the students who feel their votes were disregarded the first time aren't going to be quick to get to the polling sites this time around.

And of course there are those pesky final exams, projects and papers weighing heavily on everyone's minds. There's not a lot of room left on our mental planners to squeeze in the ASASU presidential elections part deux.

Taking all of these things into account, a single vote in this, the final ASASU presidential election, has an enormous impact.

While not voting makes a statement as well, do we really want to deal with the repercussions of having a candidate take office who received all of ten votes? Think about it: there are some pretty scary write-in ideas out there. We'll leave it to you to fill in the blanks.

So, for those of you out there who have been standing by or may have missed the election roller coaster the first time around, now is your chance. In the words of a certain Titanic star everyone is getting sick of, "make it count."

Telephone operators honored as great veterans

Although May 15 is not generally celebrated or even recognized, to a few gallant women who served in World War I, it is a red-letter day.

It all started when General John J. Pershing led the initial contingent of the American Expeditionary Force (AEF) to France in 1917 to assist the allied nations in the war against Germany. The American units could not reach each other or their French counterparts by telephone because of the language barrier. All of the telephone operators spoke French, none spoke English.

The U.S. Signal Corps could not cope with this problem, so General Pershing requested that women operators from America who could speak French be recruited on an urgent basis to serve in the AEF. The AEF. The American Telephone and Telegraph Company (AT&T) took on the task of locating and training telephone bilingual operators to operate the switchboards in both the French and English language, as required by the caller and the receiver.

But there weren't many operators in the AT&T system to fill the requirement. Those who were qualified were immediately granted leave for service overseas with the Signal Corps for the duration, and they began landing in France in March 1918.

The American switchboard operators were well received in France. When one overworked AEF officer lifted his telephone receiver to place a call and heard "Number, please" in English, he shouted "Thank God" with such fervor that everyone in the office laughed along with the American operator at the other end of the line.

After recruiting this first wave of trained switchboard operators, the Signal Corps sought to find additional women who spoke French and could be trained in switchboard operation. The Signal Corps made a nationwide sweep to recruit French teachers, American women of French descent and others who were proficient in the language, having traveled and lived in French-speaking countries. The women were offered the same privileges and allowances as were army nurses who were commissioned officers in the U.S. Army.

AT&T developed a "crash course" to train this latter contingent in the "cable-and-plug" switchboard of the era. As soon as they became proficient, they would board troop transports with AEF forces bound for France. In total, 223 women were recruited for this service, and they performed with distinction. General Pershing praised their work, recognizing that without their expertise, the AEF would have had difficulty in performing its mission.

The war ended in November 1918, and to the distress of these telephone operators, they learned that they had no standing in the military — they were not recognized as military veterans. There was no formal discharge ceremony, nor was an honorable discharge certificate awarded. Their official status was described as "civilian volunteers."

But this was not acceptable to the women who had withstood the rigors of war in positions of responsibility. They appealed to the Congress, which was sympathetic, but progress there was slow to nonexistent.

Finally, 61 years after the termination of World War I, on May 15, 1979, the Department of Defense Civilian/Military Service Review Board determined that the service of the telephone operators should be considered active military service. Thus, these patriotic women were given honorable discharges and the World War I Victory Medal, and became eligible for veteran benefits.

Now, 80 years after the war, not many of this gallant group of women are still alive, but their families can take pride in the service that they performed for their country in a time of need.

One more time

According to the ASASU supreme court, none of our votes for president on April 1 and 2 counted, so we get another crack at them today (and maybe Wednesday, if none of them can pull more than 50 percent of the vote). I guess the four wannabe judges that invalidated the will of the students proscribe to the theory "If at once you don't succeed, try, try and try again." Maybe they thought by springing the election on us at the last second, the candidates that barely registered a pulse in the last vote totals would have a "fairer" chance this go around. Everybody wins, right?

Wrong. If anyone comes out the big loser with these so-called "elections," it was all of the students that voted three weeks ago. If there is one thing I have come to realize, it is that ASASU (and that includes me, too) lost sight of what really counts: the voice of the students.

They lose because of four judges who took one look at this election and threw out the one sacred thing left in a democratic society, the vote. Seriously, when was the last time the U.S. Supreme Court threw out the results of an entire presidential election and ordered a "do-over"? Please tell me our law school produces better students of the law than this kangaroo court.

They lose because of a do-nothing senator from within the senate. I admit, the senate has been a major source of friction from within ASASU this year. However, Thursday night's meeting, I was proud to see everyone fight for the rights of the students by calling for an election that accurately reflected the will of the students the first time: a run-off election between Seth Deitchman and Paul Frost. But the bubble was burst because Kevin Molloy of the Honors College voted against the proposal because "it just didn't feel right." Excuse me? Were you in a coma when the students voted three weeks ago? Read my lips, senator Molloy voted against the students. Please tell me that this isn't the best the Honors College has to offer.

They lose because of egomaniacs like Adrian Fontes. The guy harps and harps on ASASU, endorses candidates for the election (of whom nearly all promptly lose) and then has the audacity to suggest that the four wannabe judges have abolished the insider game and given us our student government back. Being a journalism major, I have to chuckle at his anecdotes, but his ability to get simple facts right happens about as often as a spontaneous fight on Jerry Springer. Please tell me this future law student knows the definition of "dicta" better than the kangaroo court from which he draws his inferences.

My point having been made, there is only one solution to this problem. Consider the opportunity we have today as a chance to really influence who will head up ASASU next year. The presidential job is the most important position within ASASU, as he represents the students to the administration, the legislature and the general public. If you want a president who works hard, has no pretensions of glory and has a long record of student involvement; if you want a president who has stayed above all the nonsense and accusations that have been tossed around this year, then make sure you choose Paul Frost. I'm throwing my support behind Paul because he's the guy who can and will accurately reflect our needs as students with the administration. The students of ASU have been the losers throughout this entire process. But the irony is, only the students can pull this whole mess out of the gutter. Not the supreme court, not Adrian Fontes, but the students. So get out and vote today. Only you can make it right.

Issues not reported

Following what I believe to have been a completely biased story by your ASASU reporter in Friday's paper, I feel compelled to respond to a couple of items mentioned in the article and to call attention to some that weren't. I find it curious while your reporter interviewed three of the main supporters of the elections petition for their comments on the petition, as well as for their personal opinions of me, she made no attempt to balance the story with anything from my side except one bit of a quote I made during the meeting. Had she asked me for comment, I would have told her I felt badly about being the only person standing in the way of the petition's passage. However, I had to vote with my conscience and not merely to suit the demands of a roomful of people.

I would like to call attention to two very news-worthy items springing from Thursday night's meeting that were neglected by your reporter. First: among the senators who cast votes on the elections petition were two presidential candidates, presenting what I see as a big conflict of interest. In addition, I think it is indicative of the reporter's bias toward the elections issue that not a word was mentioned of the implications of that situation.

Secondly, Thursday night's meeting was perhaps the most important senate meeting of the year, the 1998-99 budget was on the agenda, and yet only 12 senators of the 19 currently holding office were present. Furthermore, the senators who walked out after the elections vote disabled the senate from continuing the meeting, leaving all $713,900 of the budget up in the air. For all their posturing about putting the students first, the same senators who lambasted the activities vice president for storming out of an earlier meeting let everyone down on Thursday night. I hope that next year's senate will be more responsible, and that next year's news coverage will be more equitable.

Student vote important — again

Like many students, I knew little more than what I read in the State Press about the affairs of student government — until, that is, I met with Benjamin Weisenberg, a member of the ASASU elections commission.

BRIAN POLICOFF
Columnist

This volunteer fact-finding body is made up of three members, the two others being Bryan Shea and Rick Golden. I was aware that Golden had been Damon Pace's former campaign manager, which made me suspicious of the commission's intent. My suspicion didn't last; Weisenberg was both forthcoming and surprisingly honest as to the specifics of the election rules and how they pertained to the case at hand.

After talking to him, I am confident the commission is one of the few political bodies on campus that can be trusted. Therefore, I would like to clarify for the student body the facts and follies of the recent ASASU presidential elections.

As you may already know, in the original general election Seth Deitchman received the most votes for the office of ASASU President, Paul Frost came in second, followed by Damon Pace. Soon after the results were announced, Damon Pace submitted a complaint to the elections commission regarding, among other things, the deliberate falsification of financial statements by Seth Deitchman. The reasons and/or motives behind Pace's complaint bore little relevance to the Deitchman case. Upon careful review of the evidence, the commission decided Deitchman had failed to remain within the campaign's spending limits and deliberately falsified his financial statements.

The ASASU election code allows a candidate up to 20 penalty points before becoming disqualified. Both of these violations carried with them 20-point penalties — each enough individually to disqualify a candidate. Together, Deitchman's 40 points of penalty presented the commission with no other reasonable option but to disqualify him.

Within days, Deitchman appealed the election commission's decision to the ASASU supreme court. He argued to reduce his penalty to fit the severity of the violation and reverse the decision of the commission to disqualify him.

The supreme court reaffirmed the decision of the elections commission, finding Deitchman guilty of deliberate infraction but reducing the penalty from 20, to one point. The supreme court also declared spending limits unconstitutional, thus absolving Deitchman of the remainder of his penalties. With one point in penalty violations, Deitchman has been reinstated as a presidential candidate in the second general election, this time with no spending limits.

The supreme court cited no reasons for their dramatic reduction of Deitchman's penalty points regarding his falsified financial statement. They did, however, state that spending limits were incoherent to the average student, and failed to ensure equal opportunity and treatment. This finding has little if any bearing on the case at hand.

Both the ASASU supreme court and the elections commission found Deitchman guilty of fraudulent intent, which means he understood the rules well enough to purposefully break them. In addition, each candidate was informed that if they had any difficulty understanding the rules and regulations of the campaign, they could look to the elections commission or elections coordinator for answers; Deitchman made no such attempt.

The supreme court stated that the current rules regarding campaign expenditures punishes those candidates who wisely utilize their campaign funds. This point is again without merit. Each candidate received a fair market value document, which indicated how much each item may be claimed for on their financial statement. If a candidate were to find a bargain, he or she is encouraged to file an interrogation that would validate the claim if it were not congruent with the price listed on the fair market value sheet.

I am thoroughly confused as to the supreme court's motives in this case. It is obvious spending limits are necessary to ensure a fair and equitable campaign process. Without them, those with superior buying power may purchase their way to the top of our school's student government.

ASASU is an important decision-making body. They make choices that invariably affect each and every student here at ASU. Many say they don't care about the elections; few even voted — myself included, I'm sad to say. Don't make the same mistake in the upcoming election. Choose a candidate whose ideals appeal to you; one who stands for what you believe in, most importantly one who is honest, and if you can't find someone like that on the ballot, write one in. Remember, when corruption exists at one level, it will eventually find its way elsewhere, and that is something none of us can allow.

Accountability teaches children, adults unforgettable lessons

Something unusual happened in Miami last week — Andrew Perkins was held accountable for his actions. He was handcuffed and hauled away by the police.

Ten-year-old Perkins was arrested for kicking his mother during a spat in a restaurant. Some say the juvenile system is out of control. I say the kids are. This incident is just a symptom of a greater problem that is undermining our society.

Accountability is something lacking in much of modern America. It used to be that individuals and institutions were held accountable for what they did. If you didn't study hard enough, you got a poor grade. If the party did a bad job governing, they were voted out. If you didn't work, you didn't get paid. There wasn't any welfare; and subsequently, you didn't eat.

I took a psychology for parents class over a decade ago, and the professor said there were natural and logical consequences for actions. These made us accountable for our actions. For instance, if children are told not to touch the stove but do so anyway, there is a good chance they will get their little hands burned. This made the children immediately accountable for their actions. The message was clear. Don't touch the stove!

GEORGE D. ROSE SR.
Columnist

Note that I said consequences above. There is no substitute for them. This holds true in all areas of life. They are the great teachers. It's not dialogue that makes people accountable; it's action.

Look at Saddam Hussein. Representatives of the United States talked to him repeatedly about abandoning Kuwait. They gave him repeated ultimatums, without results. When did he finally get the message? You got it — shortly after the first cruise missiles found their way to downtown Baghdad, and then only begrudgingly.

The sad thing about skipping out on accountability is that it makes us slaves and not masters of the world around us. We are no longer responsible for what we do. This is where we get the victim mentality. No longer are there personal incentives to do the best we can.

When we do poorly we blame the professor for not grading on a curve. We get mad when someone else gets the promotion (they must have brown-nosed the boss) even when they worked for it and made themselves accountable. We look for ways to do things that are easy even if they are not right. We don't worry unless we get caught. When we get caught, it's someone else's fault.

Still, though, getting caught makes us accountable, unlike any other time. This is what happened with our former governor over his business dealing. This is what happened with the young man who was caned for vandalism. This is what happened to young Andrew. They were all made accountable. I'm willing to bet they won't be so careless or brazen or aggressive in the future. I'm sure they are much smarter now that they've been made accountable. I don't think Andy will be kicking his mother again soon.

The trick in all of this is holding yourself and others liable for what's done before it's done. I'm sure if we would do that, this world would be a better place.

ASU considering Construction school move

BY KRISTEN HATCHER
STATE PRESS

Construction students may be hanging their toolbelts up at ASU East next year if a proposal for a move is put into effect; ASU officials have mixed reactions.

ASU East Provost Chuck Backus submitted a proposal to ASU Main last Monday that would move the Del E. Webb School of Construction to ASU East in the Fall of 1999.

A proposal has also been submitted by the dean in the College of Engineering and Applied Sciences to keep the school at ASU Main.

The move to the East campus could bring a level of success to the School of Construction not possible on the main campus, Backus said.

"Construction is a very good program, a nationally recognized program; we think we can make it the best one in the U.S.," he said. "We could give them high visibility and the resources to achieve that goal."

Backus said moving the school would also help the University deal with the projected surge of students attending ASU in the next few years.

Bill Badger, School of Construction director, said the proposal to move to East campus was not a surprise, having been asked years ago to move to West Campus, but he is not in favor of moving, then or now.

"It's kind of flattering, but what's best for the program and the kids is to stay here," Badger said.

The school currently teaches its students using a multi-disciplinary approach that includes architecture, business, construction and engineering, he said.

"Our students need education in all four of those areas," he said. "The students can't get that type of education at East Campus."

Badger said the college is not trying to pick on anyone's office, but they are trying to collect evidence to show that the college should stay on the main campus.

"What I'm cautioning my students and faculty (to do is) to think carefully about what's the right thing to do," he said. "Act professionally — my students are all professionals, my faculty are all professionals — and present your case."

Construction professor Al Chasey said Tuesday was the first time he had heard of an official proposal to move east.

"I guess there have been rumors for quite some time, but this was the very first official proposal that we have seen on what they were really thinking," said Chasey.

"From a personal level, I am not excited about it because as I view the vision of where the school is headed, the proposal that I have seen doesn't lead me to the same conclusion as to where they want the school to go."

Moving would interfere with the desire to see the school elevated to an even more professional level, he said.

"What we have seen (of the offerings at the East Campus) appears to be the more technical, vocational aspects, and we in the School of Construction are not the vocational teachers. We're managers. We teach and train managers," he said. "We think we would be put back to another level. People would get the wrong perceptions of who we are."

Chasey said no one has been able to tell him why the school can't achieve its goals here on the main campus.

"What is it that they see with our program that they think we would do better over on East Campus?" he said. "Why is it this can only happen on this campus and it can't happen on the main campus? The vision of the school should include where they want the school to be five years from now, not just location-wise."

ASU President Lattie Coor has asked that a decision on the proposal be finalized in two to three weeks. Meetings will be held with faculty and students to help determine the outcome of the proposal.

"I start with no pre-conceived notions as well," Coor said. "(My concern is also to) position this program for a very strong future."

Fatter paychecks luring Pima County deputies away

TUCSON (AP) — Pima County Sheriff's deputies are being lured away by larger paychecks as they watch their salaries remain frozen after six years.

"I've heard there are some other people who are thinking of leaving. They're good people — people who Pima County has invested money in — like some of their SWAT officers," said Fabian Cota, one of more than a dozen officers who have left the sheriff's department in the last three years for more lucrative agencies.

Tucson-area officers already earn about 17 percent less than their Phoenix counterparts, and to top it off, sheriff's deputies have had their pay frozen for six years.

On Friday, the Pima County Deputy Sheriff's Association submitted a proposed pay package to Sheriff Clarence Dupnik asking that salary step increases be restored. They have been flattened for six years, because of the pay freeze. The association also wants $1.24 million distributed based on experience.

The step increases are not included in the $53.4 million budget request the department has already submitted to the county budget office. The Board of Supervisors is expected to adopt the final 1998/1999 fiscal year budget this summer.

Students raise scholarship money for peers via annual golf tourney

BY ALLY ASHER
STATE PRESS

Students teed off for a good cause Saturday during the third annual Glenn Cheatham Golf Tournament.

The event, which was organized by five ASU recreation management and tourism students, is held each year to raise money for the Glenn Cheatham Memorial Scholarship Fund.

The scholarship, which is given to an ASU recreation management student each year, was started by Cheatham's wife to honor him for his contributions to ASU's College of Public Programs.

"I did this because of Glenn's dedication to teaching and education," Cheryl Cheatham said. "He was at ASU for over 20 years and this was something very important to his family to do, to honor his legacy."

This year's tournament was held at the Pavilion Lakes Golf Club located on Pima Road in Scottsdale. More than 80 students, faculty, alumni and community members attended the event, which more than doubled last year's tournament attendance.

"It was a great turnout," said John Patriarche, one of the five students who organized the event. Patriarche said he and his group have been organizing the event since the beginning of the semester.

"I think it's awesome ... It's a good thing to see there are this many people out here to support a good cause like this."

— Bob Pelletier, winner of last year's scholarship and participant in this year's tournament

"We exceeded our goal," Patriarche said. "We just wanted to make sure everybody had a good time and didn't get caught up in the winning aspect of it."

Bob Pelletier, the winner of last year's scholarship, said he would have participated in the tournament regardless if he had won the scholarship. He added he is thankful for the opportunity.

"I think it's awesome," Pelletier said. "I know the story behind Glenn and what he did for the school. It's a good thing to see there are this many people out here to support a good cause like this."

The proceeds of the golf tournament will be put toward the scholarship fund and the ASU Foundation. Cheryl Cheatham said she was extremely pleased with all the students' hard work and that she plans on continuing to provide scholarships in her husband's honor for as many years as possible.

"I'm so thrilled," Cheatham said. "I think it's wonderful, and I just hope it continues to grow."

Tempe aims to reduce traffic snarls with new TV program

BY AISLINN FAHY
STATE PRESS

Tempe City Council gave the green light to a licensing agreement with Etak, Inc., which will help the city monitor its traffic problems by simply having residents turn on a television.

According to a report presented to council at Thursday's issue review session, a real-time traffic information program, Traffic Check, has been developed over the past several months.

The Traffic Check server is located in the studios of Tempe Cable 11. It operates from data sent from a traffic workstation installed in Phoenix.

"The idea is to put the traffic problem in perspective," said Gary Latshaw, manager of ITS Development at Etak, Inc. "The concept is to get information to public to optimize travel plans."

The Arizona Department of Transportation created a model deployment initiative, which will introduce intelligent transportation system technology for the area. One of three proposals, AzTech, was selected for funding by the federal government and now consists of several governmental agencies, Etak, Metro Networks, TRW and other private companies.

Last summer, Etak, Inc. and Metro Networks proposed creating a real-time traffic information program to be aired on Tempe Cable 11.

According to the proposal, Metro Networks will compile all traffic statistics from various sources, including helicopter reports and ADOT information, as well as maintain the traffic workstation.

The server in Tempe then produces real-time traffic reports, using the data from the workstation.

Latshaw said that in addition to these maps, the server can generate video, switch to ADOT cameras and show bulletin-board information. Data is sent to the server via a permanent Internet connection.

Latshaw said that although the program is currently funded through federal grants, private-sector investment should cover all future costs.

Traffic Check will air weekdays during peak traffic hours, 6 a.m. to 8 a.m. and 4 p.m. to 6 p.m. Special events that generate large volumes of traffic will also be monitored with custom maps showing parking lots and traffic patterns.

"The first thing most people do when they get in the car is turn on the radio to see where the traffic is," Latshaw said. "This way, they'll be able to find out before that point."

This service, including all equipment and maintenance, is supplied free of charge to the city of Tempe in exchange for air time on Tempe Cable 11.

According to the report, the cost of the service is currently paid for through the AzTech program, but will eventually have private sponsorship cover the costs. Etak, Inc. will be responsible for securing underwriting funds and producing on air credits according to mutually agreed upon standards.

Domestic violence reaching 'epidemic proportions'

PHOENIX (AP) — Domestic violence is raging in Arizona. Already this year, at least five women and two teen-age girls were killed by a husband, boyfriend or stepfather in the Phoenix area.

"We have a crisis on our hands. It's reached an epidemic level," said Rep. Elaine Richardson, D-Tucson, who is proposing tougher legislation to protect victims. "Any time you have this many women die in this short amount of time, you have a problem."

Just last week, Laura Lee Hughes, 42, was found burned to death in a Mesa home. Her husband Vincent Barnes, 35, was arrested; police say their marital history was riddled with domestic disputes.

Women and children by the thousands have sought refuge in Arizona's 30 shelters, but despite the booming economy, most can't find ones with enough space.

Last year, about 7,500 women and children fleeing abusive homes received shelter, but more than twice that many were turned away for lack of space, according to the Department of Economic Security.

Laura Munoz was one of the women turned away. For three weeks, the mother of six sought help, but none of the eight shelters she contacted had any room. In February, she was stabbed to death in front of her children. Her husband is charged with murder.

One national study suggests that only 10 percent of domestic violence victims end up in shelters. Others can't get in, find another place to stay or don't seek help.

"It's an underreported crime," said Theresa Grates, chairwoman of the Maricopa County Task Force Against Domestic Abuse. "A lot of people don't call a shelter, don't call police, don't go get an order of protection."

"A lot of women just suffer in silence." In Arizona, police answered about 100,000 domestic violence calls in 1996, according to a study by the Governor's Office for Domestic Violence Prevention. Phoenix-area police say the call is one of their most common.

In the Phoenix area, there are just eight emergency shelters scattered across the city. The staff and volunteers work around the clock.

"All this is more than just beds," said Flo Mills of Faith House in Glendale. "I need to buy a prescription. I need to buy children's shoes. I need to buy bus fare. There's needs, needs, needs."

"It's endless."

The eight emergency shelters only have 217 emergency and transitional beds combined, and last year, they all operated with just more than $4.1 million including outpatient counseling and education programs.

Four of the shelters hope to add a total of 118 beds soon, but space will still be scarce.

Most of the money comes from government grants, with the rest provided by private donors and fund raisers.

"We have to scrape and beg for every dollar we get," said Connie Phillips, executive director of Sojourner Center. "When I see the amount of money being given out to other things, when I see how much money corporations spend on their holiday parties or trips, I get so demoralized."

"I think about all the people we could help with just a fraction of that."

But community leaders and victim advocates agree that more beds is only part of the solution.

"There's many, many things that are needed," said Ellie Gersten of East Valley Catholic Social Services, which operates My Sister's Place shelter in Chandler.

"It's not just beds. There will never be enough shelter beds."

Victim advocates argue that a "coordinated community response" should be adopted that would involve lawmakers, police, judges, educators, health-care professionals, religious leaders and others.

California, Mesa teams among U.S. Academic Decathlon winners

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — A team of California high school students Sunday were saved from having to eat loads of canned Spam by winning the U.S. Academic Decathlon.

El Camino Real High School of Woodland Hills, Calif. beat out 57 other high schools to win the prestigious competition in which teenagers from across America are tested for their knowledge.

Winning the silver medal was last year's defending champion — James E. Taylor High School of Katy, Texas. Mountain View High School of Mesa, Ariz. was third, followed by the Wheeler School of Providence, R.I. and the Whitney Young Magnet School of Chicago, Ill.

The California team spent as much as 50 hours a week preparing for the contest. They were hungry for victory, but not for the stack of canned Spam they had pledged to eat if they won anything less than the gold medal.

Wheeler's fourth-place finish was the best ever for a Rhode Island team at the nationals. The Wheeler team also scored higher than any other Northeast school, won a medal for the best performance of a small school, and walked away with a total of 11 individual medals.

In the overall contest, the maximum possible score for a single team was 60,000. El Camino Real racked up 52,131 points, and the Texas team was not far behind with 51,190.

Students competed in 10 events, including language and literature, math, science, social science, economics and fine arts. This year's curriculum theme was called: "Looking Outward: Forces Shaping Society."

Academic Decathlon teams consist of three "A" students, three "B" students and three "C" students. Team members spent eight months and longer preparing for the contest by memorizing millions of details contained in 1,500 pages of study guides written for the competition.

But more than a good memory is needed. Students are also tested for their performances during interviews with judges and for the delivery of speeches they have written.

Sex, not money, important to ASU's class of 2001

BY BECKY BEVINS AND AISLINN FAHY
STATE PRESS

Sex. Divorce. Religion.
Gotta have it.

At least that's what the Generation 2001 survey found about the first graduating class of the new millennium and ASU freshman seem to agree.

"I wouldn't say that I'm pro-premarital sex but I have no problem with it," said Nic Wegener, a broadcast journalism freshman.

The survey, conducted by Northwestern Mutual Life of 2,100 college freshmen from across the nation including ASU and 100 other colleges, track the demographics, beliefs and attitudes of the first class of the 21st century.

The study found that most students felt living together before marriage with a significant other would alleviate post-marital stress.

"I think that you should definitely try it out first," said Kevin Lilly, an exercise science freshman at ASU. "I think that maybe it would prevent a lot of divorce. My parents divorced when I was young and it was really bad."

However not all of those surveyed are ready to jump into the hormone pool hip deep without a ring.

"I am against pre-marital sex," said Matt Stoops, a freshman who has not yet declared a major. "I just don't think I would ever live with my spouse before marriage."

Some believe that the generation of 2001 is less materialistic than the generations before them.

"I don't care about money," Wegener said. "It's not like we are still living in the 80's, it was a pretty materialistic time. You know, like the movie Wall Street. You were there."

There are many students who aren't sure how much they will make.

"I will either make a lot of money or no money at all," said Wegener.

Nearly 90 percent of those interviewed by the survey said that religion is an important part of their lives.

"I don't go to church all that often," said Stoops. "But I think religion is really important."

ASU freshman tend to think that the times are more competitive.

"I think that it is so much harder to get ahead now," said Stoops. "But the times are also more relaxed in a lot of ways, people aren't as uptight."

Standards of a utopian society are rampant on college campuses according to some.

"We are more idealistic than other college students have been before," Wegener said. "Everyone wants to believe that they can make things better."

Class of 2001

According to the survey, the Class of 2001 is 75 percent white, 11 percent black, 12 percent Asian, Pacific Islander, Native American and about 8 percent are Hispanic. (Some students identify themselves as multiethnic.) Women outnumber men 53 to 47 percent.

"Generation 2001 students are not as radical as we saw in the 1960s, nor as materialistic as people in the 1980s," said David Krane, executive vice president of Louis Harris & Associates, the company that conducted the survey. "If Gen2001 is going to change society, it will do so by working within the system. Where some might say the students are naive, others would say that what is most surprising is that this group seems particularly enlightened — and even mature — when it comes to certain aspects of their lives."

Religious Contrast

Nearly 90 percent of students surveyed claim religion is an important part of their lives and they believe in God. Three-fourths believe in life after death.

Only 68 percent, however, attend religious services on a regular basis.

"In this country, attending religious services isn't as important as it used to be, even for Jews," said John Corrigan, a professor in the Religious Studies department. "Many people just go to a religious service for a funeral or wedding."

Despite the high number of students who said they believe in God, only 38 percent said they thought marriage was the cornerstone of societal values. That number increases to nearly 50 percent among students who identify with the Republican party.

Sex before marriage is accepted by 68 percent of students, who said it's OK if the two people love each other. The opinions of pre-wedding whoopee vary between genders, however, with 64 percent of women and 73 percent of men agreeing it's no problem.

"I really don't find that alarming," Corrigan said. "That doesn't mean they will have premarital sex, divorce or live together. It just means that they see nothing wrong with it. They don't object in principle."

Living together is a good idea before getting married, 64 percent of students said. Divorce is seen as an option by 61 percent if marriage isn't working out.

"There seems to be a broader spectrum of belief among students than there was 20 years ago," Corrigan said. "A lot of new religions have been invented and there is a much greater diversity of religious beliefs."

Race Relations

The current state of race relations in America is poor, and generally not expected to get better, according to the survey.

Fifty-five percent of those surveyed said they hold a negative view of the state of race relations. African-American students hold a more pessimistic view, with 71 percent criticizing race relations. White students were split about 50/50.

Forty-three percent think things will improve by 2001.

"We are in a very interesting period of race relations in the country at this time," said Albert McHenry, dean of the College of Technology and Applied Sciences at ASU East and an expert on race relations. "The generation gaps are very real and growing smaller. As time goes by and memories get shorter, you will find that the very young will have very little recall of what our society was like 20 years ago."

While McHenry said things need to improve more, race relations are improving. Students may have a skewed perspective on the state of relations between the races because they lack the historical context.

"Most of the young people in today's society expect and demand total equality," he said. "But there is a problem: some students don't recognize true racism."

Students who are from rural areas may have different ideas of what constitutes racism. Those who have little exposure to hate crimes or hate speech may be surprised when it appears on campus. Sometime, McHenry said he has to tell students when they have witnessed a racist act.

"It becomes a shock to them they see racism on campus for the first time," he said. "After that, everything becomes racism because they become over sensitized to it."

Yet McHenry said he sees the situation improving. Ten years ago, he would have never guessed that a black man would be named Phoenix Police Chief, or that the ASU men's basketball coach would be African American.

"Students especially expect everyone to be treated in a way that is totally color blind and they may not see any closure coming to that perspective," he said. "There are problems, but tremendous strides have been made. In general, there is little racism in Phoenix as compared to 10 years ago."

Yesterday & today...

Members of the Class of 2001 and the Class of 1901 share very different moments on the Marquette University campus in Milwaukee, Wisconsin. (AP style on this one: Wis.?) Recently, Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Company surveyed 2,001 freshmen from colleges and universities around the country about their hopes and aspirations. The study, called "Generation 2001: A Study of the First College Graduating Class of the New Millennium," was conducted by Lou Harris & Associates.

But the survey still shows different opinions on the state of race relations between the ethnic groups.

"The gap between whites and African Americans over the issue of race relations remains as wide to Generation 2001 students as it is with older generations," researcher Krane said. "And yet, there is a glimpse of hope — the direction of the future is positive."

The Future

Generation 2001 students see age as a good marker for judging moral integrity and honesty. This class tends to trust older people more than their classmates. GenerationXers are the least trusted.

"Another surprising finding from this survey is that Generation 2001 students are less trusting of their own peers and those immediately preceding them than they are of their parents and grandparents," said Krane. "But they don't want to be identical to their parents. The students surveyed think there are big differences — yet many of them accept that they still are able to learn from the example set by older generations."

When it comes to people more respected and admired, survey respondents ranked moms and dads at the top. Mothers, with 26 percent, beat out fathers, who gained 24 percent of the votes.

Yet for these students, who say they most respect the people who lived through the Depression, money was said to play a major role in the future. Money, 24 percent said, can and does buy happiness.

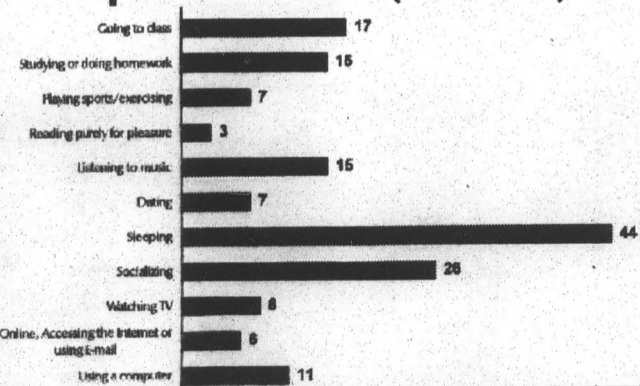

Hopeful starting salary for the first year out of school average $38,000, but 42 percent don't expect to earn more than $30,000 when they begin their careers. The average black student expects their starting salary to be about $50,000, while white students expect about $35,000.

As for reaching and setting goals, women are more focused, with 65 percent saying they have specific goals they intend to reach in the future, compared to 51 percent of men.

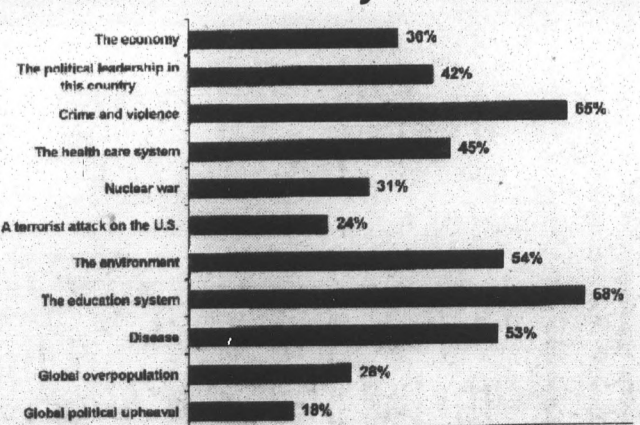

"Much is said about the materialistic tendencies of younger generations," Krane said. "However, this survey does not paint a picture of students who are greedy, over-aggressive and willing to do whatever is necessary to get ahead. Rather the research conveys an impression of a generation some might say has idealistic and naive expectations of the future."

"Generation 2001: A Survey of the First College Graduating Class of the New Millennium" was conducted between Nov. 11, 1997 and Jan. 12, 1998. Twenty-five minute telephone interviews were completed of the cross section of 2,100 college freshmen. Error margin is plus or minus 2 percent.

ASU drops last conference home game to UofA, 10-9

BY LORI HARO
STATE PRESS

The No. 10 ASU baseball team (32-16, 18-8 Pac-10 Southern Division) fell 10-9 to UofA (31-20, 11-15) Sunday in its last conference home game.

The Sun Devils were able to come up with one win on the weekend to get the season series win over the Wildcats (4-2).

Lefty Phill Lowery started the game for the Sun Devils. In 4 1/3 innings pitched Lowery gave up seven runs on eight hits with one walk and four strikeouts. Closer Chuck Crumpton (3-4) took the loss giving up one run on five hits with two strikeouts in three innings.

"Phill has been good for us all year long," ASU head coach Pat Murphy said. "He didn't have the good results today, but he only gave up one walk. The credit really goes to Arizona."

Darrell Hussman got the win for the Wildcats allowing no runs on three hits with one walk and one strikeout through 2 2/3 innings. Ryan Moskau earned his seventh save of the season.

"They came in here hot, they had 16 hits today (and) they hit the ball well," catcher Jeremy Jones said. "Hussman and Moskau pitched outstanding coming in, they just shut us down."

While it might be hard for some to find positives in the loss, this is one Sun Devil team that knows how to battle back.

"We not going to bat an eyelash. Our team is so close and we have such good leadership among the players and coaches, we're not going to let this get on us," Lowery said. "We lost all those games in a row against SC and Fresno State and we came back and we crushed Cal, that's just the kind of team we are, we don't give in to nothing."

ASU started the scoring off in the first inning, getting one run on designated hitter Casey Myers' sacrifice fly to right.

UofA came up with a three-run second inning on four consecutive hits by left fielder Jason Hendricks, third baseman Erik Torres, first baseman Mike Meyer and center fielder Rafell Jones. Torres would finish the day 4-for-5 with three RBI.

The Sun Devils picked up a pair of runs in the second inning on shortstop Michael Collins' sacrifice fly to center, scoring first baseman Dan Meier. Second baseman Richy Leon scored after Jones' erred on left fielder Willie Bloomquist's single to center.

ASU also got a run in the third after right fielder Mikel Moreno scored on first baseman Dan Meier's sacrifice fly to center.

The big inning for UofA came in the fifth when they came away with five runs on five hits. Shortstop Keoni DeRenne's single up the middle scored right fielder Colin Porter who had tripled to right field. Second baseman Eric Mattern drove in DeRenne with a single to right and designated hitter Kenny Corley then doubled to center to score Mattern. Torres finished up the scoring with a two RBI double to left center, driving in Corley and Hendricks, who had walked. The Wildcats also got one run in the sixth inning.

Down 9-4 the Sun Devils came up with a big inning of their own getting five runs in the sixth. Meier started it off with a double to left center. Collins singled to left, advancing Meier to third. Jones drove Meier in with a single to left. Bloomquist

Sun Devil catcher Jeremy Jones went 2-for-4 with one RBI and one run scored in ASU's 10-9 loss to UofA Sunday. "I love Jeremy Jones catching, he's a great catcher," pitcher Phill Lowery said. "With Jeremy back there you just know if anybody tries to run it's an out, he blocks, he hits, he's unbelievable."

reached base on an error by DeRenne, which allowed Collins to score. Center fielder Rudy Arguelles came up with a two RBI triple to left center and scored on Moreno's single to right.

The score would remain tied until Porter knocked the eventual game winning run over the left field fence in the eighth inning. Porter was 3-for-5 with one RBI and three runs scored on the day.

Another positive for the Sun Devils were the combined efforts by Arguelles, Meier and Jones. Arguelles was 1-for-9 the two previous games with the Wildcats, but went 3-for-4 with two RBI and scoring two. Meier was 2-for-3 on the afternoon

Coming off a second-place finish in the ASU Thunderbird/Savane Invitational last weekend, the Sun Devil men's golf team will go for its fourth straight Pac-10 title this week in Berkeley, Calif.

ASU, winners of three straight Pac-10 titles, has a record string of 10 straight NCAA top-10 finishes, including three straight in the top five, and despite a somewhat lackluster regular season expects to be at or near the top again this year.

"We've been practicing hard, and we are as ready as we can be," head coach Randy Lein said. "We want to win, I think we've been playing better and better with every tournament."

While the No. 10 Sun Devils have not had the most impressive regular season, with only one tournament victory on the year (the USC/Southwestern Invitational in March), Lein stressed the fact that this is nothing new or unexpected for ASU golf teams, and it is not a problem.

"We want to be playing our best golf at the end of April and into May," Lein said even before the season began. "The most important thing for our team is to do well at the Pac-10 and NCAA Championships."

"Last year we really didn't have much regular season success either," Lein said. "But then we won our event (1997 Thunderbird/Savane Invitational), and then we won the conference by almost 15 shots, then we finished second at Regionals, and then at nationals we had a real good shot at winning, so that's what I'm hoping for again this year."

The Pac-10 Championships will be played at the Orinda Country Club (par-72, 6,352 yards). The teams will play 36 holes today followed by 18-hole rounds on Tuesday and Wednesday. Each team will be play six men, with the top five scores counting toward the team score.

The Sun Devils will send three freshmen and three juniors into battle against the conference's best. In a strange twist, juniors Darren Angel, Brad Cannon and Greg Padilla will look to a trio of rookies for guidance. Freshmen Jeff Quinney, Paul Casey and Jin Park have outplayed their older counterparts the entire season.

"I think it makes everyone on the team work a bit harder," Casey said. "I mean when you're on a good team, you have to work hard or you'll never play, but with the freshmen on this team playing so well it makes everyone see that they have to step it up, and I think everyone is ready for the Pac-10's."

The biggest challenge for ASU this week should be inter-state rival and No. 3 UofA, but after the Thunderbird last week the Sun Devils know they have to look out for another team as well.

"I guess we know we can't take UCLA for granted anymore," Casey said after the Bruins came from nowhere to steal a victory at the Thunderbird. "But I think UofA is the team that we really have to look out for, but I think we have a better team, and with our depth I know we can beat them."

Softball squad sweeps Beavers, gets swept by Ducks

Brad Lang/State Press

Catcher Andrea Rodgers chipped in with three hits and two RBI this weekend as the 13th-ranked Sun Devils swept Oregon State on Friday and got swept by Oregon on Saturday.

BY DOUG FLANAGAN
STATE PRESS

The two pitching lines that ASU senior Carrie Breedlove has put up in her appearances against Oregon this season have a couple of things in common: they are strikingly similar and very uncharacteristic of Breedlove.

On March 29 in Eugene, Breedlove allowed eight runs on six hits in three innings of work in a 13-2 drubbing. On Saturday, the Ducks once again found success against Breedlove's drop ball, pounding out 15 hits, scoring nine runs and run-ruling ASU 9-1 in the second game of the double dip at Sun Devil Club Stadium.

The Ducks earned the series sweep by taking the first game 5-2.

Oregon (35-22, 7-11 Pac-10) jumped out to a 7-0 lead after the first two innings and added two more runs in the fourth to provide the necessary eight-run margin. First baseman Jennifer Apfelbaum went 3-3 with two RBI, and right-fielder Melisa Jeppsen, centerfielder Lindsey Welch, third baseman Katie Macky and catcher Kelly Planche each had two hits.

"The second game was a matter of they won the first game and they had nothing to lose," ASU head coach Linda Wells said. "And they just teed off. But they teed off up there too against Breedlove. (so) sometimes you just have to say, 'OK, well, sometimes pitchers don't match up with teams.' And that was this case."

"They took aggressive swings. You have to give them credit. They just scored run after run after run."

ASU (34-18, 6-12 Pac-10) scored its only run in the second inning. Shortstop Jennifer Gall, first baseman Lesley Murphy and centerfielder Jennifer Langenhuizen hit consecutive one-out singles. Catcher Andrea Rodgers then grounded into a 4-6 fielder's choice, allowing Gall to come home.

The first game featured more drama and a closer score, but the end result was the same — a Duck victory.

ASU got on the scoreboard in the first with an RBI double by third baseman Chris Gill, plating Langenhuizen.

Oregon responded with a run of its own in the second off Roxanne Tsosie (20-7), but the damage could have been much greater. Tsosie loaded the bases with no one out and got touched for one run, but responded by getting two ground ball force outs at home and a strikeout to end the threat.

"We were in a situation where Roxanne didn't really pitch great at the beginning of the game," Wells said. "She was struggling. (So when) we got out of that bases loaded deal with one run allowed, (we were relieved)."

The Sun Devils jumped back on top in the fourth. Rightfielder Kathy Ponce lined a two-out double to left field, and second baseman Devyn Braga followed with a single to right centerfield, bringing home Ponce to make the score 2-1.

However, the lead would not last long. In the sixth inning, shortstop Jill Robinson led off by reaching first on a fielding error by shortstop Holly Smith. Two batters later, Custer, the reigning Pac-10 Player of the Week, hit a towering home run over the left-field fence to give Oregon its first lead.

"Of course, it's disappointing for Tsosie," Wells said. "She's trying to pitch just well enough, and Holly makes an error, and the kid crushes one."

The Ducks put the game away with two more runs in the seventh — an RBI double by Robinson and a run-scoring single by Welch.

Tsosie allowed five runs, 10 hits and three base-on-balls.

"It seems like we crawled ourselves back to close to .500 (in Pac-10 play) and we can't quite get there," Wells said. "This would've been the perfect opportunity to get back in it. I describe it as putting the high jump bar up a little higher, and then once we miss, we have to drop it back and get our confidence about jumping over it again."

ASU men's tennis team falls hard at Pac-10 Championships

BY CARLO MERCALDO
STATE PRESS

The ASU men's tennis team fell and fell hard at the Pac-10 Championships in Ojai, Calif., over the weekend, winning only one singles and one doubles match.

"It was definitely disappointing for us," ASU's No. 1 singles player Gustavo Marcaccio said. "It's a very tough tournament, it was the best 32 players from the best conference in the nation and we just weren't playing well."

"But I think we will learn something from this tournament that will make us better in the long run, especially for regionals which is the most important part of the season for us. We just need to take these next two weeks and practice hard and work on our conditioning so we can be a 100 percent ready for regionals."

While it is apparent the 34th-ranked Sun Devils did not play their best tennis over the weekend, they also fell victim to some very bad luck.

Marcaccio got food poisoning by eating unwashed strawberries the morning prior to his first-round match with UCLA's Alex Decret and was unsuccessful in his attempts to fight through the illness. He was forced to leave the court several times during the match before losing, 6-4, 6-2.

Tim Hammond was dealt the unfortunate task of facing Stanford's Mike Bryan in the first round, where he was thumped, 6-1, 6-2.

Also feeling the wrath of an unlucky draw was sophomore Ed Carter, who had to square off against Cal's top-ranked Bobby Mahal. Carter put up a fight in the first set before folding, 7-5, 6-4.

"We got some really tough draws," Hammond said. "But it's really not that big of a deal because I don't think we were expecting that much, we're trying to use it more as a stepping stone for Regionals."

"With a tournament as tough as this one is, the most important thing is getting the opportunity to play some tough matches, and now we all have the experience of another good match under our belts to help us in the future."

ASU's lone singles victory came from sophomore Alex Osterrieth, who defeated Washington's Marius Lunde, 6-4, 3-6, 6-1. Osterrieth, a 23-match winner on the season, was then defeated in the next round by Stanford's Paul Goldstein, who is ranked 28th in the country, 6-4, 6-2.

In doubles action the Sun Devils, as has been the case all season, were given no respect in terms of seedings and were forced to play highly ranked teams in the first round.

Carter and Hammond were able to get a win against the top ranked team from UofA in Michel Stopa and Jerome Oliveri, 7-5, 6-4. However, in the second round they fell to Stanford's nearly unstoppable duo of Paul Goldstein and Ryan Wolters, 5-7, 6-0, 6-1.

ASU's second team of Marcaccio and Osterrieth were unable to get going against UCLA's tandem of Breen and Grinda, falling to the Bruins No. 1 team, 6-4, 6-3.

The Sun Devils will now get some much needed rest before returning to action in the NCAA Regionals, May 15-17.

"We just need to put this behind us and focus on regionals," Hammond said. "I think we are all feeling pretty tired after such a long season, so we'll take a couple of days off to rest and take care of school work, and then we'll practice hard for two weeks and get ourselves prepared."

Sun Devil Giardino shines at Pac-10 women's tennis tournament

FROM STAFF REPORTS

The No. 11 ASU women's tennis team fared well in the Pac-10 Individual Championships at Ojai, Calif., as Kerry Giardino won both her singles and doubles matches in the invitational bracket.

"Overall it certainly was a good weekend," head coach Sheila McInerney said. "The key to this tournament is to just get in as many matches as we can and to have three ASU players playing the last day really helps."

In Sunday's singles finals Giardino beat Stanford's Jen Heiser in three sets 7-6, 3-6, 6-3 to take the title. In doubles, Giardino along with freshman Faye DeVera defeated UofA's Vanessa Abel and Michelle Gough in a three-setter 6-4, 4-6, 6-2.

"They (Giardino and DeVera) play a lot in practice, but I'm probably surprised they won the whole thing," McInerney said. "I think it really shows our depth; we have eight great players."

The Sun Devils top doubles duo of Stephanie Lansdorp and Katy Propstra made it to the championship finals in doubles, but fell to Stanford's Ania Bleszynski and Julie Scott 7-5, 6-4.

ASU's top singles player, No. 28 Reka Cseresnyes advanced to the semifinals after knocking off No. 6 Scott 6-4, 7-6 in the quarterfinals. However in the singles' semifinals Cseresnyes fell to Stanford's Teryn Ashley 6-4, 6-3.

The doubles team of Alison Nash and Celena McCoury also advanced to the semifinals in doubles, but lost to Bleszynski and Scott in straight sets 6-0, 6-1. — Lori Haro

BOOTH, PARK ALL-PAC-10

Women's golf team members senior Kellee Booth and freshman Grace Park each were named first-team All-Pac-10, the Pac-10 announced on Friday.

Booth placed fourth at the Pac-10 Championships, while Park was tied for fifth. The Sun Devils finished the tournament in second place, behind UofA.

Named to the second team was junior Tui Selvaratnam (11th place).

Earning honorable mention status were senior Jean-Marie Busuttill and junior Keri Cornelius.

The conference also named UofA coach Rick LaRose as coach of the year.

The Sun Devils will begin their defense of their NCAA Championship with the NCAA West Regional at Stanford on May 7-9.

After that the NCAA Championships will be held in Madison, Wisc., from May 20-23. — From Staff Reports

DALY SOARS AT DRAKE RELAYS

Two-time indoor All-American Fiona Daly achieved a personal-best in the high jump event this weekend at the Drake Relays in Des Moines, Iowa.

Daly placed second with a leap of 6-feet, two inches. Her previous PR was 6-0 1/2 which she accomplished in 1996.

Three other field athletes competed. Long jumper Anthony Hazard placed second with a leap of 24-6 1/2. Jared Schrieber had a javelin throw of 200-10 to finish in 10th place and Charity Amama placed 11th in the women's javelin competition with a toss of 137-09.

ASU's men's and women's distance relay teams also competed in the 4x800 meter relay. The women's team, comprised of Kelly MacDonald, Priscilla Hein, Amanda Markland and Jennifer Bridgeman finished fifth in a time of 9:00.94. They also placed 11th in the distance medley relay with a time of 11:53.80.

The men's team, consisting of Vondre Armour, Phillip Prince, Matt Repak, and Ari Rodriguez, finished in tenth with a mark of 7:42.81. — Doug Flanagan

Power-play goals lead Coyotes to brink of series win

Coyotes' center Jeremy Roenick skates by Detroit defender Nicklas Lidstrom during the second period of Phoenix's 3-2 win over the Red Wings at America West Arena on Sunday. Phoenix leads the best-of-five series 2-1.

PHOENIX (AP) — The Phoenix Coyotes, their break-even regular season notwithstanding, are in contention to break out of the first round for the first time in franchise history since 1987.

Rick Tocchet and Jeremy Roenick scored power-play goals early in the third period, and Roenick redirected the winner past shocked Detroit goaltender Chris Osgood with 7:13 to play as the Coyotes beat the Red Wings 3-2 Sunday to take a 2-1 lead in their Western Conference playoff series.

"We just tried to stay positive and work hard. We had nothing to lose," Roenick said.

"Jeremy is a big-game player," coach Jim Schoenfeld said. "He enjoys the big-game situation. We talked before about pressure and how some people shy away from it, and some guys relish it. Jeremy looks forward to it."

The Coyotes, who trailed 2-0 from the first 1:01 of play, would have had a fourth goal, but Mike Gartner's shot on a breakaway was disallowed because of a two-line pass.

The strong finish reminded Tocchet of Muhammad Ali's famous strategy for wearing out an opponent.

"You blink, and it was 2-0," Tocchet said. "We never even knew what was happening. They went for the knockout in the first period, and we did a little rope-a-dope."

The defending Stanley Cup champions, who hadn't trailed in a playoff series since Colorado eliminated them 4-2 in the 1996 Western Conference finals, get their chance to even the series Tuesday night before returning to Detroit for Game 5 on Thursday.

The Red Wings were 3-1-2 against Phoenix during the season, contributing to the Coyotes' 35-35-12 windup and sixth-place playoff position. The last time the franchise made it as far as the second round was when the team was in Winnipeg. That year, the Jets beat Calgary in the first round before losing to Edmonton in the second.

This is the franchise's seventh first-round series since then.

Nikolai Khabibulin, who gave up goals to Sergei Fedorov and Brendan Shanahan on two of the Red Wings' first three shots, stopped the next 24 for the win. Three of his stops came in the final 1:24, after Detroit coach Scotty Bowman pulled Osgood for a sixth skater.

For Osgood, it was just the opposite.

He came in having allowed 10 goals on 48 shots, including the Coyotes' 7-4 win two days before, and with the memory of being benched throughout last year's playoffs in favor of Mike Vernon.

Osgood stopped 29 shots, including the first 18, in an impressive two periods.

But his effectiveness flagged along with Detroit's defense.

Knicks beat Heat, even series

MIAMI (AP) — The New York-Miami series is even, which means the Knicks have the edge.

With a burst of emotion that had been missing in Game 1, New York rallied from a 14-point deficit Sunday and beat the Heat 96-86 to tie their best-of-5 series 1-1.

The road victory gave New York the home-court advantage going into Game 3 Tuesday. The next two games will be at Madison Square Garden, where Miami's career record is 3-22.

"We'll have to come out like rabid dogs," Heat center Alonzo Mourning said. "We'll have to come together, just the 12 of us — all of us against all of New York."

In the second inning of the first game against Oregon State on Friday, OSU third baseman Kelli Krantz hit a deep fly ball to centerfield that most people assumed would drop for extra bases. However, Langenhuizen had other ideas. She turned, sprinted back and caught the ball with her back to home plate, a la Willie Mays, and doubled up Beyster at third, who had scampered home in anticipation of a base hit.

"We were fortunate because it was a mistake for Beyster to run," Wells said. "(But) I'm sitting there and I don't think she can catch it either. She outran that ball, then snagged it. It was a great play. It kept us with an opportunity to win."

ASU won the first game 2-1 and the nightcap 10-2.

ASU soccer players Kari Laughlin, Sharon Gillis, and Meghan Mullin were added to the Sun Devils' roster to make up for the loss of leftfielder Raja Woods. Gillis and Laughlin made appearances this weekend as pinch runners.

with one RBI and two runs scored. Jones chipped in two hits in four at-bats with an RBI and one run scored.

"Rudy and Danny Meier had some great at-bats, Jeremy Jones had some good at-bats, that's what we need," Murphy said. "We've got Willie and Mikel, (Andrew) Beinbrink and Casey carrying the load, we need the other guys to step up."

Saturday night's game was a slugfest between the two rivals as ASU won 16-13. The Sun Devils were led by Bloomquist and Beinbrink who both were 3-for-4. Bloomquist had one RBI with four runs scored, Beinbrink drove in two while scoring three.

Leon picked up his third win allowing seven runs on ten hits with two walks and five strikeouts. Wildcat Tony Milo (7-5) got the loss after giving up nine runs on seven hits with four walks and two strikeouts in 1 2/3 innings.

Friday night the Sun Devils lost another heartbreaker falling to the Wildcats 8-7.

Porter scored the winning run in that game also, after hitting a home run to center in the top of the 10th inning. Moskau got the win in the game giving up only three hits in four innings.

Crumpton took the loss giving up one run on one hit with one walk and three strikeouts in 2 2/3 innings. Myers led ASU offensively going 3-for-5 with one RBI and one run scored.

Despite the two losses the Sun Devils remain confident and positive and ready to continue to play the baseball they know how to play.

"We competed (this weekend), but we beat ourselves," Arguelles said. "We just got to stay with our approach, be aggressive and play the way we can play."

Lowery agreed.

"That's the kind of team we have, that's the way we are and that's the coaching we have, we're not giving in to anybody," Lowery said.

Warm, sweaty feeling means one thing sports nuts — playoffs

Is anybody else here at ASU starting to feel, if you will, a little warm?

If you are, and I know you are because you sweat more than a pink pig in heat, don't be alarmed. It's that time of year again.

But it's not the finals or term papers that are coming quicker than the meteor that will destroy our planet in the year 2000* (*Nostradamus, "Centuries"), it's not the long sleeve sweater and black pants you insist on wearing in 90-degree weather, it's not even the huge, gaping hole in the ozone that leaves all you sun-worshippers more burnt than some big palooka with a hooka.

No, no, no, it's none of those things.

With the Suns and Coyotes in the first round of their respective playoffs, the Cardinals coming off last weekend's NFL draft and the fact that the Diamondbacks are playing major league baseball in this state for the first time ever, Arizona is — for lack of a better overused analogy — heating up.

And there is nothing hotter than the playoffs.

It all started for me last Wednesday night with the hockey playoffs, then on Thursday it was hockey and basketball playoffs, then on Friday it was basketball and hockey, then on Saturday it was hockey and basketball, then on Sunday ... my goodness, will someone please stop the madness!

But no one can stop this madness for me because I'm a bonafide sports nut. I know it, I admit, and gosh darn it, I accept it. This is me, this is who I am, and as those great rap scholars Brand Nubians once said, you better love me or leave me alone. And I'm doing just fine, thank you. Just me, my TV, my lounge chair and my sports.

So what if my New York Rangers didn't make the playoffs. It's okay.

So what if my New York Knicks are without their best player, Patrick Ewing, and my New Jersey Nets have the unenviable task of facing defending NBA Champion Chicago Bulls in the first round. It's okay.

So what if my New York Mets are never on TV. It's ok ... well, no, that's not okay. But who ever said life is perfect anyway?

For me, however, the playoffs are as close to perfect as it gets. From the Knicks vs. Heat to Blues vs. Kings to Suns vs. Spurs to Devils vs. Senators to Rockets vs. Jazz to sports orgy at my house and everybody's coming. You bring the chips and I'll bring the whips.

As for football and baseball, there is a time and place for everything. And now is neither the time nor the place. To talk about the Cardinals — good draft or not — during the off-season, is as premature as a six-month fetus. And while the expansion Diamondbacks are doing their best, they're, well, the expansion Diamondbacks.

To all you boys and girls out there who are looking for a study break, give yourself two or three hours and throw a playoff game on the telly. Pick a game, any game, it really doesn't matter. Just be prepared to perspire.

Can you feel the heat yet? Bust out the roll-on and grab the remote control, it's time to get sweaty.
