ASU skipped as state, national voting site

BY ANGELA YEAGER
STATE PRESS

Students who wanted to vote on campus for Tuesday's primary elections searched in vain.

While voting sites have been at ASU in the past, an official in the Maricopa County Records office said there were no polling stations organized on campus for this year's primary.

And there won't be any planned for future state and national elections, she said.

"There are not enough students registered to vote in that precinct to justify having sites set up there," said Yvonne Reed, executive assistant in the Maricopa County Recorder's office.

Reed said non-students made up the majority of voters in this precinct and having voting sites at ASU just doesn't work.

"Parking was just horrendous for residents and for handicapped people (last time)," Reed said. Many students are either registered in other precincts or they aren't registered at all.

Instead, students can vote at several off-campus sites, such as the Tempe Visitor's Center and the Tempe Library.

However, Robert Stryk, Associated Students for ASU chief of staff, said he personally finds the situation unacceptable.

"This is a travesty," he said. "Government is always saying they want to get students involved, but here is a bureaucrat telling us it's too inconvenient."

Stryk said ASASU was never notified that voting would no longer be available on campus. He said he didn't think it was an issue, but now plans to bring it up with the other student government members.

"I am quite upset," he said. "This was never brought to our attention."

ASASU Vice President Paul Peterson said he doesn't know why ASU doesn't have voting sites on campus, but thinks they should be available.

"I really don't know why," he said. "We don't really have anything to do with the voting actually coming here, but we supply volunteers to work at the sites."

ASU previously had early voting sites set up for students, but Reed said it wasn't successful.

"It was a disaster," she said.

Students didn't seem to miss the voting sites for the same reason there will be no more voting on campus.

Cameras have locals saying 'cheese' on Mill

BY KIM PRENDERGAST
STATE PRESS

The next time you are walking in Downtown Tempe, make sure to look up and wave. On the corner of Mill Avenue and Sixth Street, above Urban Outfitters, sit two cameras that take pictures of what's happening on Mill.

Dave Kelley, the webmaster for the City of Tempe's web site, designed the program, and said the camera is for public relations, not surveillance.

"The cameras are purposely kept out of focus to ensure the privacy of pedestrians," he said.

There are currently two versions of the cameras, which have been named "Sneaky Peak." The new Sneaky Peak cost $1,500 while the older one was $12,000.

"You can predict the angle by checking out the dates and times on frames taken 24 hours ago," Kelley said.

The old version takes pictures every half-hour while the new Sneaky Peak allows web users to take control. They can take a picture with a single keystroke, and in one minute an image will appear on the Net.

A third Sneaky Peak is also in the works. This camera will provide live video footage of Mill Avenue on the Internet.

Kelley said he receives a lot of e-mail asking how to be in the right place at the right time to insure being shot by the camera.

The new instant camera, which looks out from Kelley's office, has been in operation since August and has had a great deal of success.

"Out of Tempe government web site's 11,000 pages, Sneaky Peak is the third most popular," said Kelley.

Kelley, who sits a few feet away from the camera, said he hears a picture being taken about four times an hour.

"It's cool. It had a snowball effect," he said. "We didn't think it was going to be as popular as it is."

The instant camera, which is a Kodak DC-50 model, works with a program Kelley wrote. The page offers a quality control and zoom focus for surfers, although the zoom function is already worn out.

"The biggest challenge was making the camera cooperate with the program," said Kelley, who described his job as "finding the easiest way for Tempe employees to publish information."

The camera, although increasingly popular with ASU alumni and people who have visited or lived in Tempe, is not popular with everyone, Kelley said. Some Tempe visitors and residents feel their privacy is being invaded.

"I don't like the idea of my picture possibly being on the web," said Dave Brown, a Tempe resident. "I feel that it is an invasion of privacy. I would never take someone's picture and post on the web for all to see."

Jeremy Weiss of the State Press
The reflection of Dave Kelley, webmaster for the City of Tempe's web site, is caught in the camera. Nicknamed "Sneaky Peak," the camera sits atop Urban Outfitters on Sixth Street and Mill and captures a candid image every 30 minutes for display on the city's web site.

Local bookstore braces for final goodbye Sept. 29

Books Etc., a privately owned local bookstore, will open its doors on September 29, as it has done since 1978.

And Joe McKersie, general manager and ASU graduate, will lock them for the last time, ending the business and his job.

Competition from national corporations is causing the bookstore, located in Tempe Center at the corner of University Drive and Mill Ave., to cease retail operations.

"It all started with the superstore wars between Borders and Barnes & Noble about six years ago," McKersie said. "Now books, audio, computer software and video games compete for the same dollar, so the large national chains are able to eat up the market."

As sales began to decrease, Books Etc. was dealt a blow from which McKersie says it never recovered. In March of 1997, a woman drove her car into the store and knocked out the entire front wall. For a month and a half, the store front was boarded up, and it appeared to be shut down even though the store was in full operation.

"After that incident there was a 50 percent cut in sales," McKersie said. "That was the final straw."

McKersie, 37, started working at Books Etc. in 1979 while attending ASU, where he obtained bachelor's degrees in history and economics. After getting a graduate degree at really care about these elections," said Sonia Dicke, a junior English major.

Dicke said she is registered to vote, but she isn't aware of the candidates or issues.

"I am only here for a semester, so I really don't know about things here," she said.

However, Bob Pelltow, a senior history major, said he planned to vote as soon as he got off work. He said he is interested in the elections and how it will affect Democrats in the state.

"I am primarily interested in how Ed

Ranger will do," he said. "It's nice to see someone who is young and enthusiastic."

Being a Chandler resident, Pelltow won't vote in Tempe, but he said he noticed the lack of enthusiasm on campus about the elections.

"I find that a lot of people just aren't interested," Pelltow said.

Reed said this lack of interest will keep ASU from having voting sites.

"We would have to know enough students are registered to outnumber residents living in the area to justify having voting there," she said.

Thunderbird Institute in Glendale, he decided to continue working at the bookstore, owned by John Wehr.

At the end of the month, McKersie will have to give up his job and search for another, but said his story is not unique.

"This seems to be a trend," McKersie said. "Across the nation national chains seem to be eating up small independents like us, who have no choice but to go out of business."

ASU purchased the Tempe Center where Books Etc. is located in the early 1980s. McKersie said all vendors received notification early on that ASU planned to level the structures in the year 2000, and received a letter last year stating construction would begin to tear up the parking lot in the spring of 1998.

"They haven't torn up the lot yet," McKersie said, "but that was a consideration of ours (for leaving). We can't really run a store without a parking lot."

McKersie said another reason for the decline in sales is the constant changes to the downtown area.

"Because of construction, events, and lack of parking, shopping in downtown Tempe has become more of a nuisance than it's worth," McKersie said. "The diversity and uniqueness of Tempe is gone."

Heat damage evident on Swissair cockpit scraps

By DAVID CRARY
ASSOCIATED PRESS

HALIFAX, Nova Scotia — Investigators have detected signs of heat damage on fragments of Swissair Flight 111's cockpit, evidence that could help determine why smoke billowed around the pilots before the jetliner crashed.

Vic Gerden, the chief crash investigator, said Tuesday that signs of heat stress have been found so far only on wreckage from the cockpit, not from the passenger cabin.

"There are some signs of heating on some of the small pieces of the wreckage retrieved," Gerden told a news conference. "The limited amount of wreckage retrieved to date indicates this area of heat stress is in the cockpit."

He refused to speculate on the extent of the damage or the exact cause of it.

Gerden also expressed hopes of gaining valuable data from the plane's recovered flight-data recorder, even though it stopped working during the final six minutes before the plane crashed into the Atlantic off Nova Scotia on Sept. 2, killing all 229 people on board.

Flight 111 crashed more than an hour after taking off from New York, bound for Geneva.

"The most crucial area is not the last six minutes, as some may think, but prior to those six minutes," Gerden said.

The recorder, retrieved by divers 190 feet underwater, might show how systems aboard the plane failed between the pilots' initial distress call 16 minutes before the crash and when the machine shut off, he said.

Investigators hope to get further information from the plane's cockpit-voice recorder, which is still on the sea bottom. A signal from that recorder has been detected, but bad weather Tuesday forced a one-day halt in diving operations.

The divers were expected to return to work Wednesday, supported by a new arrival from the United States — the Navy salvage and rescue ship USS Grapple.

The Grapple helped with the undersea recovery of wreckage of TWA Flight 800 off Long Island in 1996. It has a team of more than 30 divers on board, as well as equipment for lifting large wreckage from the seabed.

Divers are trying to confirm if three large pieces of wreckage found near the flight data recorder are sections of the plane's fuselage.

Also on hand is a 16-member U.S. Navy team from Panama City, Fla., which has brought advanced sonar and imaging equipment to provide greater detail of the ocean floor.

Gerden, a senior investigator with Canada's Transportation Safety Board, also released a more complete version of the last conversation between the Swissair pilots and an air traffic control tower in Moncton, New Brunswick.

Expanding on excerpts released earlier, the transcript showed that the pilots reported putting their oxygen masks on and later telling the controllers they would have to fly the plane manually instead of by autopilot.

Gerden reiterated that he saw nothing in the conversation to suggest unwise decisions or unprofessional conduct.

"The crew conversation was done in a professional manner throughout," he said, stressing that it would be premature to pass judgment until after all evidence was examined, including the cockpit voice recorder.

Memorial services were planned later this week in Halifax and at U.N. headquarters in New York for victims of the crash.

U.S. expresses doubt against claim by N. Korea — satellite, not missile

By GEORGE GEDDA
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The State Department cast doubt

Tuesday on North Korea's claim that the object it launched last week over Japan was a satellite and not a missile. At the time of the Aug. 31 launch, U.S. agencies concluded it was a missile.

U.S. analysts have not observed any object orbiting the Earth that correlates to the orbital data the North Koreans have provided in their public statements, State Department spokesman James P. Rubin said.

"Nor have they observed any new object orbiting the Earth in an orbital path that could relate to the North Korean claims," he said.

He added that irrespective of whether it was a missile or a satellite, the test demonstrated that North Korea has the capability to deliver a payload at a very long range.

After the launch, U.S., Japanese and South Korean officials said it was a test firing of a newly developed two-stage ballistic missile across Japan. The range was estimated at 930 miles.

A North Korean scientist who defected in 1996 said in an interview published Monday that Pyongyang has the capacity to put a satellite into orbit.

At the Pentagon, spokesman Kenneth Bacon said the military was still looking into North Korea's assertion that it launched a satellite.

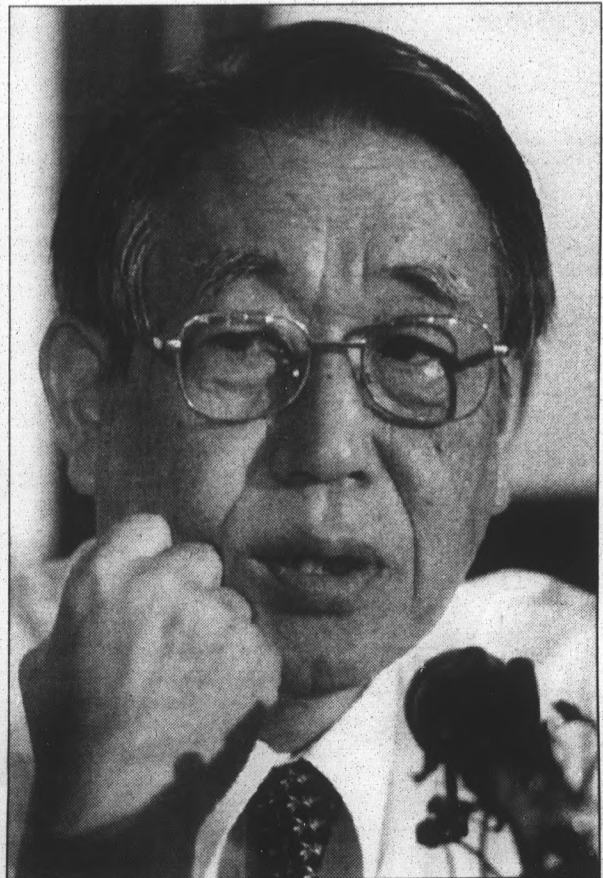

He said the U.S. Space Command at Peterson Air Force Base, Colo., has not observed an object orbiting the Earth that complies with North Korea's claim, nor has it picked up any radio transmissions such as those the North Koreans have said the object is emitting.

"We're still looking at the facts," said Bacon.

Bacon declined to comment on a report from Russia that North Korea was readying a second missile launch.

"You can be sure we'll be ready to monitor" whatever takes place, the spokesman said.

The test rattled both the United States and Japan because it demonstrated North Korea's ability to strike any part of Japan, including U.S. military bases. Nearly 50,000 U.S. troops are stationed there.

McVeigh conviction maintained by court

By STEVEN K. PAULSON
ASSOCIATED PRESS

DENVER — A federal appeals court on Tuesday upheld the conviction of Oklahoma City bomber Timothy McVeigh, who claimed testimony from victims' relatives produced a verdict and sentence based on emotion rather than reason.

The appeals court also rejected eight other avenues of appeal, including pretrial publicity, juror misconduct and barred testimony that others may have carried out the worst bombing on American soil.

McVeigh was convicted of murder, conspiracy and weapons-related charges in the April 19, 1995, bombing of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building and sentenced to death. The blast killed 168 people and injured hundreds more.

The emotional testimony from victims' relatives was proper, a three-judge panel of the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled.

"The devastating effects that the deaths of the victims had on their families and loved ones is certainly part and parcel of the circumstances of the crime properly presented," the court said.

Among the 38 witnesses who testified were Pamela Sue Whicher, who told the jurors of her children's feelings of regret at not hugging their father good-bye that day.

Diane Leonard described her vain search of hospitals for her husband. Kathleen Treanor recounted the discovery and return of her deceased daughter's hand six months after the explosion.

The panel said there was no misconduct when a juror decided McVeigh's guilt before the trial was over, and that he was not deprived of a fair trial despite media reports that he had confessed to his lawyers.

McVeigh also claimed that Carol Howe should have testified about others at a religious compound in Oklahoma who could have carried out the bombing, but the appeals court said her testimony was irrelevant.

Editorial

IRS corrects error; still keeps bad rap as miser

It seems even major league umpires make better decisions than the Internal Revenue Service.

The difference is, even umpires apparently have a heart.

The IRS stated on Tuesday that the fan who caught and returned the ball from Mark McGwire's historic 62nd home run would have to pay a gift tax if the value were determined to be more than $625,000. The tax would apply even if the fan decided not to take any money for it.

This federal gift tax should not have even been considered in the first place. This gift tax was a black mark baseball didn't need. It took the efforts of this season for baseball to return to its past glory, but the decree from the IRS nearly set the sport right back.

But later that same day, the IRS backpedaled faster than a left fielder trying to catch up to one of McGwire's moonshots. After plenty of jeers from the White House and the Capitol, the IRS announced it would not levy a gift tax on fans who returned No. 62.

How could the IRS have justified this tax in the first place? On a technicality, apparently.

Major League Baseball is the owner of the ball until it leaves the field of play. Then the ball is property of the fan who catches it. The ball, which can be bought for $6 or less at any sporting goods store, already has a price tag of $1 million attached to it.

McGwire had 61 home runs entering Tuesday's game against Sammy Sosa and the Chicago Cubs, and is on pace to hit 69. With 58 homers, Sosa is on track for 65. In the fifth inning of Tuesday's game, McGwire hit No. 62 when he lined a homer to left field.

Good thing for the IRS.

This gift tax was just another way for the government to squeeze more money out of us. It was the government's way of forcing us to pay for its own shortcomings. Thankfully, sensible heads prevailed.

Some politicians were appalled at the IRS's initial decree. Others threatened to introduce legislation guaranteeing that no taxes would be due.

When you think of it, none of the talk of McGwire's usage of Androstenedione or the fact that the record falls on an expansion season has been able to dampen the glory of this record. But the chicanery attempted by the IRS set a new low.

Only the IRS could ruin a special moment such as this. Only the IRS could turn one baseball fan's fond memories of a record-setting moment into an opportunity to make a buck.

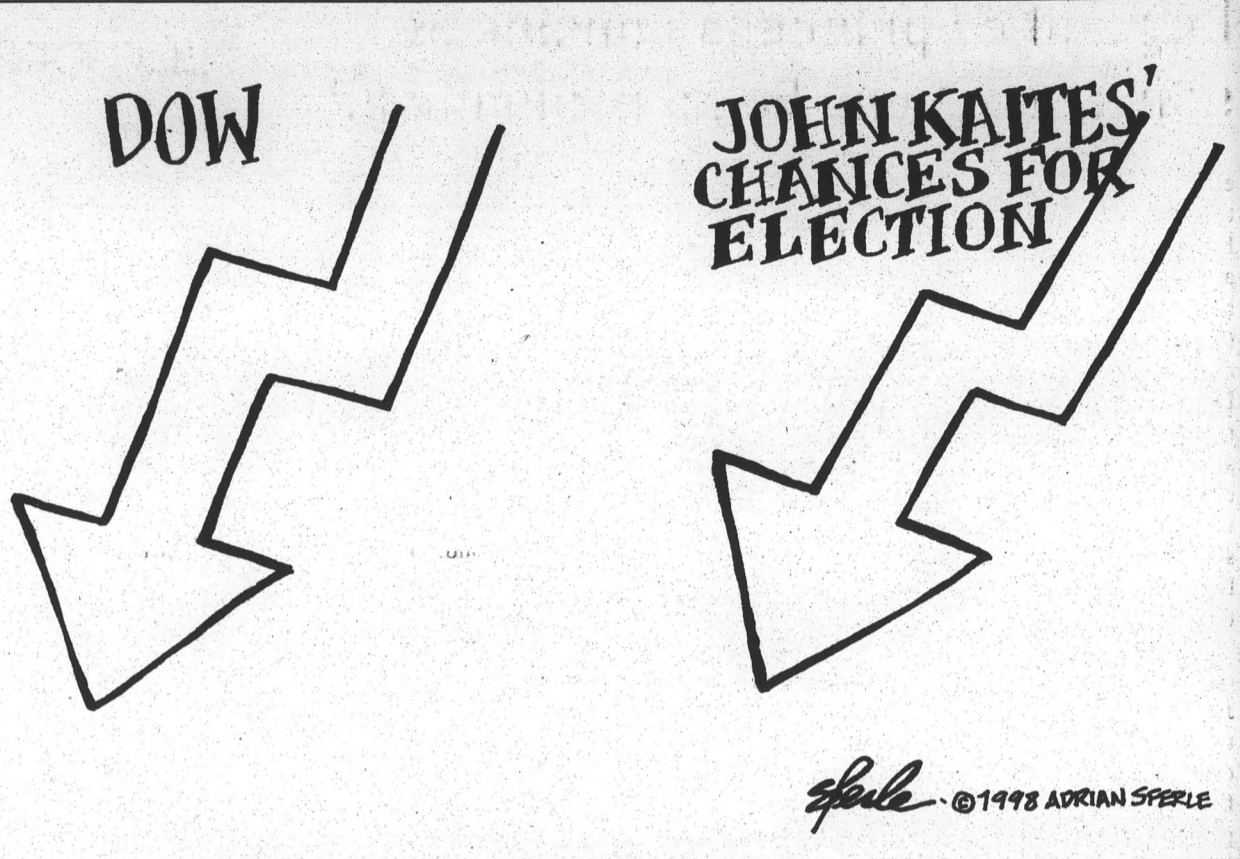

The home run ball is in no way the property of any one person or organization. It belongs in Cooperstown, N.Y., the home of the Baseball Hall of Fame, for all baseball fans to enjoy. McGwire himself has said the ball should go to Cooperstown. The moment No. 62 left the ballyard, was a special moment for more than just McGwire and the lucky fan catching it.

Everyone watching the game will have that memory locked in. And try as it might, the government can't touch that.

It's no wonder U.S. citizens are so distrustful of the IRS. We're gouged out of another way to enjoy what should be a memorable moment.

Unfortunately, No. 62 wasn't snagged by a fan. The IRS will have to wait another day to make a profit.

Thankfully, the IRS came to its senses and realized that the only value of No. 62 is be measured in sentimental terms.

Impeachment debate continues

How have we gone this far into the semester without one of the columnists writing about President William Jefferson Clinton? I thought the staff Christian-collation Republican or feminist would have got to this one first and tried to pound it in the ground. But no, this sweet, sweet morsel of a topic is up for grabs and I grabbed it.

As we started to watch this Monica Lewinsky affair unfold last semester, we all pretty much felt then as we feel now — that on some level, we all knew he did have inappropriate relations with her, but that we really didn't care as long as the country, and more importantly, the economy, was going well.

Why is that? If the economy were in a recession, would we use this lack of morals/judgment as an excuse to impeach him? Is there some sort of correlating relationship between our pocketbooks and our sense of right and wrong? If this is true, then the economy must be at some sort of all-time high because feminist groups have all rallied around Clinton. But is it because they really believe in him or is it because they are in bed with liberalism in any form, regardless if it is actually degrading and or conflicting to the very ideas with which feminism defines itself? You just know Bob Packwood is somewhere up in Oregon pulling his hair out.

But now that we have had the Lewinsky and the Clinton depositions, we know for the most part what happened and we also know that Clinton did lie to the American people. But is that enough to impeach him? Well, some think yes, but most of us, including myself, think no. However, if it can be proven that Clinton lied under oath, then that changes things dramatically and you will see a change in opinion against him, calling for his resignation or impeachment. Telling the truth under oath is the foundation of our legal system. Without that, where are we? If the sworn protector of our Constitution violated the basis of our legal system, you will see more and more Democratic leaders starting to distance themselves from the president and allying themselves with Republicans to impeach their fallen leader.

On the same note, the impeachment of Clinton could quite possibly be one of the worst things for any Republican hoping to win the presidency in 2000. If Clinton is impeached, then we would see Al Gore become president and you would again see him immediately start to distance himself from his predecessor's administration — he would quite literally have a running start for the 2000 presidency. A huge advantage that the Republicans, or other Democrats for that matter, may not be able to overcome. But it is not only the Republicans who don't want to see Gore become president.

The House minority leader Richard Gephardt, D-Mo., for the last two years has been positioning himself for the Democratic bid for presidency by openly criticizing his apparent chief rival for that spot, Gore. Do you think Gephardt wants to do anything that would give his rival an advantage over him?

So the way things stand, Clinton will probably not be impeached; but does he deserve to be? Well, that is very tough to say. The way our political system is set up, it is all or nothing in disciplining our president, but it is probably set up that way because we shouldn't have to discipline our president. There are no fines we can impose on him, like the fines imposed on Newt Gingrich a few years ago. Only impeachment — and as stated above, he will not be impeached simply due to politics. Imagine that — politics getting in the way of our politicians doing what is right.

What do we have to look forward to in the next two years? Basically a lame duck president with great approval ratings who, on some level, no one trusts. The Clinton presidency has been scarred irreparably and history will judge him quite harshly. However, this does not absolutely spell success for the Republican presidential candidate in 2000. They have their own set of internal problems, which they have to deal with in order to solidify their party and win the presidency.

As for their counterparts, look for one of the dirtiest Democratic primaries in recent memory, especially between the aforementioned Gore and Gephardt. Until that time, we will keep watching the Lewinsky scandal, because no matter what people say, we are all interested in it, like a great Melrose plot; it has sex, power, lawyers, berets — it is truly interesting.

Legend of princess continues; some ask 'why keep mourning?'

One year ago last week, I was at my parents' home flipping through channels. Every station was apparently featuring breaking coverage of the sudden and tragic death of Princess Diana. And, for a moment, I was taken aback. How could this elegant, trend-setting woman, who had given so much to so many, have her life cut so terribly short? Then I turned to Sportscenter.

Brian Ary
columnist

Not for the sake of sounding cold-hearted, I never shed a tear, never bought Elton John's Kiss from a Rose CD (or whatever the hell it was) and am not quite sure why everyone else did. Of course, I sympathized for her children. I can't even fathom the pain of losing a parent at all, let alone losing a parent the catastrophic way they did. I just wonder, is the death of someone rich and famous a greater tragedy than that of someone anonymous and poor?

Much as I hate to admit it, I'm pretty sure 2.5 billion people aren't going to watch my funeral. It's just hard to mourn for an individual who could purchase Barbados eight times. Yeah, I saw her on TV cradling little African babies with shrapnel stuck in them, but then I would see her ringing up a tab at one of the more exclusive apparel stores in the world, then fly off in a private jet to wine and dine with Dodi Al Fayed, who could buy the former USSR and detonate it just for fun.

One minute she's this selfless humanitarian, the next, torn at Gianni Versace's death because she can't pre-order his fall line. Ghandi never wore designer clothes. In fact, he hardly wore clothes at all.

Robert Pachelo, a sophomore broadcasting major at ASU, somewhat felt the way I did.

"I was shocked to hear about Di's death, but the commemoration of her death after a year is crazy," Pachelo said. "Pretty soon, the first anniversary of Mother Teresa's death will come and who's gonna commemorate it? In a way, call me sick or heartless, but maybe it is a good thing that she died. She can finally enjoy a life of privacy or at least one where she won't have to constantly endure the flashing bulbs of camera." (I don't know about death, maybe confinement in her castle.)

There's little doubt in my mind about Diana's compassion; I just believe it is a conflict of interest when you try to heal the world one day and buy everything in the world the next. But Pachelo could end this better than I could when he said, "At the end, she was only what she longed to be in the first place. A happy single mother in love."

Teen pregnancy can be reduced

My friendship with Andrea Jennifer Balsky columnist started many years ago, back when we were in elementary school. We'd jump rope on the school playground and play Barbies at her house after school. And of course we planned for when we were "grown up ..." We'd live in an apartment together and have starring roles on our favorite soap operas — she'd be on All My Children and I'd be on One Life to Live.

Years passed. As we got older, we went through the "excessive hair spray phase," talked about boys and eventually, the time came for us to part ways. I went to Arizona for college and she and her family moved to California. Of course we promised to write and call — but we each became busy in our new lives and we lost touch.

It was the beginning of my junior year at ASU when Christie got in touch with me again. I was so excited to hear her voice and began rambling on about college life, my classes, my friends, my boyfriend.

"What about you?," I finally asked. "What have you been up to?"

"I have a baby now," she told me. "I had him four months ago."

I was shocked. Speechless. Christie? No, it couldn't be. I listened as she told me how she became pregnant at 19. No, she hadn't meant to get pregnant, but it happened. She loved her son. He was her whole world.

"But I do feel like I missed out a little," she admitted. "I always wanted to go away to college and live in the dorm. Now I'll never get to."

I read somewhere that one out of every 10 teenage girls gets pregnant. Everyone seems to think that it is a huge problem and it seems everyone has a different idea on how to solve the problem. The sad part is, most of the ideas will do more harm than good.

There are many people who want "abstinence only" programs in high school, with no discussion of contraceptives. They want to teach teenagers to wait until marriage for sex. It's a great and noble idea in theory, but it's not going to work.

Teenagers will still have sex, even if the theory of abstinence is shoved down their throats. Programs like this might even add to the problem of teenage pregnancy. Without information on contraceptives, teenagers may go ahead and have sex unprotected. Also, the more some teenagers hear that something is "wrong" and "bad," the more they want to rebel and do it anyway.

Teens need to learn morals and get information about sex from parents. Too many parents just say "Sex is wrong!" and by saying just that, they are doing their child a huge disservice. Parents don't have to advocate their teens having sex, but they need to be willing to listen and talk openly with their children and not be judgmental.

Christie's parents are a perfect example. Sex? The word was never so much as mentioned in their household. But that didn't prevent her from having sex or getting pregnant at 19. Do you think her parents ever talked to her about condoms and birth control? Of course not. But if they had, maybe things would be different for her now.

The ongoing debate about making condoms available in high schools mystifies me. Why do some people think that just because condoms are available, teenagers who weren't planning to have sex will suddenly think, "Hmm, well, I have access to condoms now. I guess I will find someone to have sex with! Gotta test this piece of latex out!"

In addition, why do people think if condoms aren't available, teens will automatically stop having sex? The sad truth is that some teens are going to have sex regardless of whether a condom is available or not.

I think discreet condom-vending machines in school restrooms would do a world of good. Look at grocery stores where condoms are displayed behind the counter. How many 16-year-olds would feel perfectly comfortable walking up and asking the person behind the counter for "the blue box of Trojans, please?" I am sure some of you are thinking, "Well, if they are too embarrassed to buy condoms, then they shouldn't be having sex!" I agree, but will that stop a teenager who is hell-bent on having sex? Probably not.

Teenagers need all information about birth control and access to it. Without these things, babies will continue being born to mothers who should be worrying about finding a date to the prom, not changing diapers.

On a recent vacation home, I met up with Christie. We went out for lunch and our conversation was periodically interrupted by her little boy, who kept throwing his toys to the floor and screaming until mom retrieved them for him. He continually picked up coasters and kept putting them in his mouth. It took us five minutes to find a place to put his stroller. But it took just one look into his blue eyes for me to fall in love.

I respected Christie so much for being such a wonderful mom at age 20, for being able to be responsible for another life. But I still wished things could be different; still yearned for our apartment together and our future as soap opera stars ...

State Press Readers' Poll

What is your opinion?

Sometime this week, Mark McGwire is expected to hit his 62nd home run ball, breaking the all-time record. The person who catches this ball would most likely want to give it back to McGwire. Even though the Internal Revenue Service has changed its position, it originally wanted to make anyone returning the ball pay a gift tax on it; estimated to be 40 percent of the ball's worth. Do you think this is right?

ASU museum finally able to display Cuban art exhibit

BY HAYLEY RINGLE
STATE PRESS

More than two-and-a-half years in the making, the first major U.S. museum exhibition of Cuban art in the 1990s will be showcased at the ASU Art Museum.

The exhibit, entitled "Contemporary Art from Cuba: Irony and Survival on the Utopian Island," will feature 14 Cuban artists and runs from Sept. 27 - Dec. 13.

"ASU will have an opportunity to see work that has never been seen before in this country," said Marilyn Zeitlin, director of the ASU Art Museum. "I think it will be the first of many. We've proved it can be done. It just requires persistence and patience."

The artists featured in the exhibition have all been featured around the world and have collections now in Europe, she said.

"The only place their work has not been shown is in the United States," Zeitlin said. "There is very little Cuban artwork in the U.S."

Zeitlin traveled to Havana and was "knocked out by the work." She said her "ongoing relationship between art and social dynamics" spurred her to bring it to ASU.

She chose all the pieces that will be shown for the exhibition, and had to have a license from the Department of Treasury to bring back the artwork from Cuba.

But bringing Cuban citizens to the United States has been difficult. They have to go through a long process of interviews, applications and lots of paperwork to obtain a visa.

"Within the ranks of Cuban citizens, an artist has more room to travel because they have to show their work, and the Cuban government understands and supports that," Zeitlin said. "The artists must not show any sign that they want to emigrate."

Two artists have already had their visas rejected, but Karen Gilmore, administrative officer of fiscal affairs for the ASU Art Museum, said the project "... is doable. If we can't do it one way, we'll find another way to do it. All the federal agents have been very helpful and now we know them all."

Zeitlin said, "The whole process is not set up to be efficient. There has to be a limited and controlled intercourse between the two countries."

Everything in conjunction with the project is being done legally, she stressed. The American Trading with the Enemy Act, first brought about in the 1960s, has to be obeyed. The Act has been re-interpreted many times fluctuating with the current situation between Cuba and the United States.

"It's been very challenging working with this particular country," Gilmore said. "Our curators are known for doing things out of the ordinary."

All the Cuban artists featured in the ASU exhibition are between the ages of 24 and 39, and have all had quite a bit of notoriety, Zeitlin said.

"Sometimes you find a group of artists and you just can't explain it," Zeitlin said. "I feel that way about this group. They're really intense, smart and really skilled."

Artists in Cuba go to art school for 12 years, and are "trained more thoroughly than I have ever seen," Zeitlin said.

Gilmore said, "I think the quality of the work will be surprising. This is very exciting."

Zeitlin said she is impressed with the Cuban artists' commitment to the project.

"One of the artists said to me that there is no wall high enough that will stop this project," Zeitlin said. "We will meet you halfway if we need to."

The work featured will be funky, but not rough-hewn, Zeitlin said. The 64 pieces shown will feature concepts of psychological and spiritual irony.

"Great works of art come from social tension, rather than social tranquillity," she said. "I went to Cuba and was very impressed with the art. It looked really, really interesting."

Calculators expelled from high school AIMS test

BY JAYSON PETERS
STATE PRESS

Students at Tempe High School showed up Thursday for a geometry test they won't even be graded on. Their calculators, however, didn't.

Instead, the state will be graded on its performance in creating the test.

High school juniors and seniors across the state took a trial run of the Arizona's Instrument to Measure Standards (AIMS) test last week. The test, which will determine whether students, starting with the Class of 2001, graduate, does not allow students to use calculators of any kind.

Today's current sophomores are the first Arizona class required to pass a single test to graduate from high school.

New high school standards also require students to take four years of math — studying data analysis, algebra, geometry, measurement, problem solving, logic and number sense.

The field test at Tempe High School consisted only of the geometry portion of the AIMS math test.

Cari Jo Davis, assistant principal for registration at Tempe High School, said although it was a benefit for students to show their work and think problems through, it was frustrating to watch them be tested on standards they have not necessarily been taught yet.

"Down the road, it could be a good thing," she said.

Billie Orr, associate superintendent of standards and testing with the Department of Education, said the decision to ban calculators was made as much to level the playing field as it was to prevent cheating.

"We have basically been directed to develop a viable test that could be given equitably across the state," she said.

Orr explained that since some of the calculators students would bring to a test are programmable and therefore expensive, they pose a problem for both test security and equality among students.

"The new math standards talk a lot about problem solving, making things work together across the curriculum," she said. "Students will have to demonstrate proficiency on all of the levels to receive a diploma."

If they do not demonstrate such proficiency as sophomores, Orr said, they will have four more opportunities to pass the AIMS test, two in their junior year and two in their senior year.

"It's really based upon logic and the ability to problem-solve, rather than the ability to plug in numbers and solve a logarithm," said Kelly Powell, director of school and student accountability for the state.

Powell said since most states do not allow the use of calculators on high-stakes tests, such as the AIMS, a "systemic change in mathematics" is taking place.

"If the test is well-written, perhaps there isn't a need for the calculators," said Fred Schineller, who teaches math to freshmen at ASU. "It's a tool. It's not a solution book."

"I think that the calculator lends itself to allowing students to be able to solve more difficult problems because some of the mechanics are removed, allowing instructors to focus more on the problem-solving itself. It should help you see and help you visualize, but you have to understand the question and the problem."

Ultimately, the AIMS test will be administered to students in grades 3, 5 and 8 as well as high school students.

Arizona's Hispanic population now No. 6 in nation

TUCSON (AP) — Arizona now has the sixth-largest Hispanic population in the nation, topping the 1 million mark.

According to U.S. Census Bureau information released late last week, Arizona had 999,000 Hispanics in 1997 out of a total population of 4.55 million.

City planner David Taylor said the state quietly surpassed 1 million Hispanics sometime earlier this year. It won't be official until newer population figures come out. The growing numbers of Hispanics will influence marketing strategies, said Luis Ortiz, a market researcher with the Behavior Research Center in Phoenix.

"We are saying to national corporations, pay attention to this market, do not continue to ignore it because this is the market you may be catering to in the near future," he said.

PoliceBeat for Monday, September 7

ASU police reported the following incidents Monday:

- A student reported his 1992 Nissan truck missing from Area 3. The truck was later recovered by Phoenix police at 1645 E. Thomas Road.
- A man not affiliated with ASU was arrested for disorderly conduct and underage consumption of alcohol at 700 E. Sixth Street.
- Two men not affiliated with ASU were arrested, cited and released for underage possession of alcohol. In the same incident, one of the men was arrested for an outstanding warrant from the Maricopa County Sheriff's Office for failure to appear in court. He could not post bond and was booked into Madison Street Jail.
- A man not affiliated with ASU was arrested, cited and released for driving on a suspended license. He was arrested at Rural Road and Rio Salado Parkway.
- A man not affiliated with ASU was arrested on an outstanding warrant from ASU Police. He was unable to post bond and was booked into Madison Street Jail.

- A student was arrested, cited and released for possession of fireworks at 401 E. Apache Blvd.
- A student was arrested, cited and released for underage possession of alcohol at 401 E. Apache Blvd.
- A student reported that a tire on his car was damaged while it was parked at 401 E. Stadium Drive.
- Two students were arrested for possession of marijuana and possession of drug paraphernalia at 1215 E. Forest Ave. They were reportedly released at the scene.
- A student was arrested, cited and released for criminal littering at 725 E. Adelphi Drive.
- A man not affiliated with ASU was arrested, cited and released for trespassing and interfering with an educational institution at the Art Museum.

Tempe police reported the following incidents Monday:

- A man leaving K-Mart, 1330 W. Baseline Road, was approached by two other men. They asked for money, and when the man said he did not have any, one of the other men displayed a silver handgun. The two men took $16 and the man's car. They fled in an unknown direction and were not found by officers.
- A Tempe man taking a break Sunday outside a building, 600 E. Curry Road, was confronted by two men holding a .38-caliber revolver. The man was forced into his 1994 Jeep Grand Cherokee and taken to an ATM at 7201 E. McDowell Road in Scottsdale, according to reports. He was reportedly forced to withdraw $220 from the machine. The two men then beat the owner of the Jeep with The Club steering wheel lock in his car.
- Two men entered Circle-K, 7530 S. Priest Drive, early Sunday morning. They displayed small, chrome handguns and demanded money. The men reportedly left the store with the clerk's car and were not found by police. According to reports, a similar incident occurred at a Phoenix Circle-K.

• A Circle-K, 1323 W. Southern Ave., was robbed Sunday night. Two men displayed small, silver semi-automatic handguns and demanded money. One of the men reportedly demanded the clerk's car keys, but the clerk did not have a car. The men left the store and were not found by police. One of the suspects reportedly matched the description of one of the men involved in armed robbery of Circle-K, 7530 S. Priest Drive. According to reports, the men were believed to have used the stolen car from that robbery to arrive at this location.

Grateful grad boosts UofA law school gift to $50 million

By ARTHUR H. ROTSTEIN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

TUCSON — Big plans already were afoot at the UofA College of Law thanks to alumnus James E. Rogers' record-setting $20 million gift. Then he dwarfed it Tuesday, pledging another $30 million.

In April, Rogers, owner of Sunbelt Communications Co., a Las Vegas-based firm that operates eight television stations, committed $20 million to the college of law, the largest gift ever to any American law school.

Rogers' earlier donation was intended to help expand the law school's facilities, provide for scholarships and improve its library.

Under his revised plan, the gift will be paid out over 20 years beginning in January. The money will be used to strengthen the law school's programs and add new faculty members.

A stipulation of his gift is that it ends if the college's operating budget or other assets are reduced because of the new donations.

The college will be renamed the James E. Rogers College of Law.

In an interview, Rogers explained why he increased the size of his gift. "First of all, I had the capacity to do it," he said. "Secondly, I think there was a need for the additional amount."

Rogers, whose law school education cost him $3,000, has a net worth reputed to be comfortably in excess of $300 million. He declined to disclose his net worth. Rogers had a highly successful law practice in Las Vegas from 1964 to 1988 and since then has been owner and president of Sunbelt Communications, which operates TV stations in five western states.

After receiving his law degree in 1962, Rogers earned a master in law from the University of Southern California and taught at the University of Illinois law school for a year.

Those experiences led him to believe that UofA's law faculty could compete with both schools. In fact, the UofA College of Law, with only a $9 million budget annually, "can do really great things with another 20 to 50 percent, and has the ability to become a great regional law school with UCLA, USC, Stanford and Berkeley," he said.

Rogers, whose mother taught second grade for 40 years in Las Vegas, has made numerous other gifts and pledges to educational institutions.

"It's a very exciting thing," Rogers said. "It's a helluva lot more fun to give it while you're living than to leave it in an estate."

"This is transformative," said Joel Seligman, dean of the law school. "This is so much money over a 20-year period that all of us in this college of law anticipate that we'll not need to seek a tuition increase over the life of his pledge."

That would be the equivalent to a scholarship for every student who attends the law school in the future years of Rogers' gift, Seligman said.

Since 1993-94, the university's law school tuition has increased from $1,800 to $5,000. But that's still only one-third to one-fourth the cost to attend some of the nation's top public law schools.

"In effect it means we'll have a school where tuition levels will stand still for the future and the school can get better and better," Seligman said.

We have the largest selection of premium cigars, flavored cigars, imported cigarettes, cloves, chewing tobacco, and pipe tobacco in Tempe, all at the guaranteed lowest prices.

Researchers: third drug effective in treating herpes

By BRENDA C. COLEMAN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — Research has found a third drug to be effective in suppressing the painful sores of recurrent herpes infections, adding to the choices for treating the incurable sexually transmitted disease.

Famciclovir, marketed as Famvir, joins acyclovir and valacyclovir as safe and effective oral medications for preventing herpes outbreaks, which occur in some people six or more times a year, researchers said.

The Food and Drug Administration approved famciclovir for that purpose in otherwise healthy people last fall, based on findings of a study published in Wednesday's Journal of the American Medical Association.

The drug is not approved to prevent outbreaks in people with immune problems such as AIDS, but the FDA said in June it could be used on a short-term basis to treat outbreaks in such patients.

An expert not involved in the research said famciclovir is good news, even though it can cost more than double the other drugs.

"You have choices now," said the expert, Dr. Jeffrey P. Engel, associate professor of medicine at East Carolina University School of Medicine.

Acyclovir, much cheaper than the new drug because it is available generically, works well for the "vast majority" of people, he said Tuesday from Greenville, N.C. But options are always desirable, because effectiveness can vary with individuals, he said.

Herpes is one of the most common sexually transmitted diseases in the country, infecting approximately one of every five adults. Many people never know they have it. Other people may suffer genital sores that blister, break and scab several times a year.

In the study, patients taking famciclovir stayed free from outbreaks about nine months longer than patients taking a placebo, who typically had outbreaks in 47 days, said researchers led by Dr. Francisco Diaz-Mitoma of Children's Hospital of Eastern Ontario in Ottawa.

The study involved 455 men and women with recurrent genital herpes at 30 medical centers in Canada and Europe.

Colorado killing spree claims 5, one of whom is a suspect

By STEVEN K. PAULSON
ASSOCIATED PRESS

AURORA, Colo. — Two young gunmen killed four teens and a woman in a shooting rampage at two homes in this Denver suburb. One teen-age suspect was later found dead in a field and a second was taken into custody today.

Witnesses who saw the attack at one home Monday told police "two kids wearing bandanas" barged into the house carrying shotguns and opened fire, police spokesman Bob Stef said.

"They just walked in, fired the shots and walked out. Apparently it happened pretty quickly," Stef said.

Police today still had no idea of a motive for the shootings, Stef said this morning. "Anything is possible," he said.

A body at first believed to be a sixth victim of the rampage was identified early today as that of a suspect, Michael Martinez, 18, Stef said.

Police then tracked down the second suspect, a 17-year-old boy, at a home in Aurora and he was taken to the police station accompanied by his father, Stef said. Stef declined to identify the boy. Police believe he shot Martinez.

Officers were summoned to a baby blue two-story home in an upscale neighborhood Monday afternoon by neighbors who heard shots and screams. They found the bodies of a mother and two teen-agers — a boy and a girl.

Stef said police had responded to four previous calls at the house for family violence, all late last year, but no details were available.

Police also received a report of shots fired at a home about six blocks away about the same time, but saw nothing out of the ordinary there when they checked it out.

However, after they identified Martinez as a suspect and realized he had friends in the area of the second house, they returned there, forced their way in and found two bodies of boys in their teens.

A second police spokesman, Mark Hellenschmidt, wouldn't say today what attracted police attention to Martinez. "A particular name started to surface in relation to the triple investigation," he said.

Clues at the second house led police to a sixth body in a field 10 miles away, but it was several hours before that body was identified as Martinez.

Stef said police were not sure which house was attacked first. They also were unsure of a motive, but didn't think it was related to robbery, drugs or gang rivalry.

"Martinez was apparently an acquaintance of all five victims," Stef said. "Whether the second suspect was just along for the ride, or whether he knew them, too, is uncertain."

The shootings shook up residents of the upscale neighborhood, who were told to stay indoors for about five hours while police SWAT teams hunted for the fugitives.

David Clere, 41, who has lived in the area for 32 years, said the shootings brought back memories of a 1993 rampage that left four dead in a Chuck E Cheese restaurant in Aurora.

"This is a pretty wealthy neighborhood. It's not like we should have these bad elements around here," he said. "Crime has gone up because a lot of people have moved here from other states, trying to get away from crime, and I think they just brought it with them."

Embezzlement trial begins for Whitewater figure

BY AMANDA COVARRUBIAS
ASSOCIATED PRESS

SANTA MONICA, Calif. — Susan McDougal stole $150,000 from conductor Zubin Mehta and his wife by writing checks to herself and using the couple's credit cards for personal purchases, a prosecutor said Tuesday as the Whitewater figure went on trial for embezzlement.

"There doesn't seem to be a single account that Susan didn't dip into whether she had her name on it or not," prosecutor Jeffrey Semow said. "Susan McDougal was playing fast and loose with the Mehtas' checking account."

McDougal purchased items for herself using the Mehtas' department store credit cards but indicated in accounting books that the items were for the couple's foster daughter or their rental properties, Semow said.

McDougal, 43, worked as a bookkeeper and personal assistant to the Mehtas from 1989 to 1992. She is charged with embezzlement and tax fraud, accused of using the couple's checks and credit cards without authorization. If convicted of all counts, she faces a maximum sentence of seven years and four months in prison.

Among the credit card purchases were $695 at I. Magnin for clothes supposedly for the Mehtas. There were also $304 worth of women's clothes from Bullock's recorded as linens for the Mehtas' rental properties, he said.

"This is only a small amount of what Mrs. McDougal charged up," he said.

The defense was to present its opening statement later Tuesday. McDougal's lawyers have argued that the expenses were authorized.

McDougal, a former Whitewater business partner of President Clinton's, spent 18 months behind bars rather than testify before the federal grand jury investigating Clinton. She also served 3 1/2 months of a two-year Whitewater-related sentence for fraudulently obtaining a $300,000 loan in 1986. She was freed from prison because of a painful back condition.

As she headed to court Tuesday, McDougal said she was looking forward to the trial. The embezzlement case was filed five years ago.

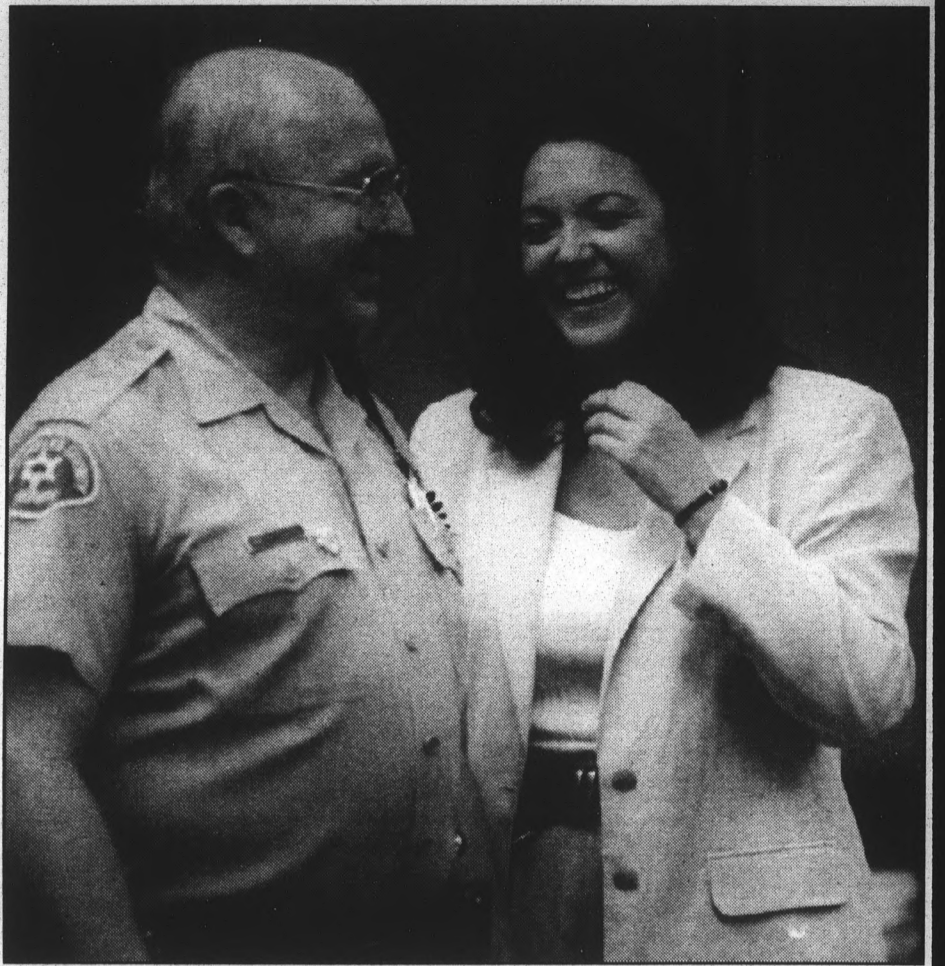

"It's been five years of my name being dragged through the mud. ... Today I get to fight back," McDougal said.

McDougal had lived a luxurious lifestyle in Arkansas but was unable to maintain her expensive tastes after moving to California in 1987, Semow said.

Mehta and his wife, Nancy, "were a golden opportunity for anyone and someone like Susan McDougal with a passion for luxury, a passion for spending money and a passion for living high," he said.

The case is unrelated to Whitewater prosecutor Kenneth Starr's investigation, and Superior Court Judge Leslie Light ruled previously that there will be no mention of Starr during the embezzlement trial.

McDougal still faces federal trial in Arkansas, where she was charged with criminal contempt and obstruction for refusing to testify before Starr's grand jury.

Nick Ut of the Associated Press

Whitewater figure Susan McDougal shares a laugh with Los Angeles County Sheriff's deputy Richard A. Breton inside the Santa Monica Courthouse, prior to opening arguments of her embezzlement trial Tuesday. McDougal is accused of stealing $150,000 from symphony conductor Zubin Mehta and his wife, Nancy.

Sleep disorders may explain some kids' poor grades

BY HERBERT G. McCANN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — Youngsters who do poorly in school may be suffering from a severe sleep disorder, and surgery can help these children bring home better grades, according to a study.

Sleep apnea — and the poor academic performance it causes — can be cured by removing the tonsils and adenoids, Dr. David Gozal, a professor of pediatrics at Tulane University, reported in the September issue of the journal Pediatrics.

Apnea, the severest kind of snoring, is a condition in which narrowed airways cause people to stop breathing briefly as they sleep. This causes them to wake up, sometimes hundreds of times a night, and often leaves them feeling tired the next day.

In children, signs of apnea include hyperactivity, a short attention span and aggressive behavior, all major hindrances to learning.

Tonsils can obstruct the airways, and Gozal said doctors have long known of the connection between tonsils and children's abilities. In 1889, for example, the British

Medical Journal published a study titled "The Awkwardness and Stupidity of Children With Large Tonsils."

However, no good clinical studies had documented the connection, said Gozal, who decided to investigate further when the parents of children who underwent tonsillectomies reported improved grades.

Gozal questioned the parents of nearly 300 first-graders whose school performance was in the bottom 10th of their class. He asked whether their children snored and how loudly, and whether they stopped breathing during sleep, had to be shaken awake or fell asleep during school or while watching television. All are symptoms of sleep apnea.

Obstructive sleep apnea syndrome was found in 54 children, of whom 24 had their tonsils and adenoids removed. Parents decided not to have surgery on the remaining 30 children.

A year later, almost all the children who underwent surgery improved their school performance an average of half a letter grade. The grades of the children who weren't treated remained the same.

"The conclusion of the study is if you intervene and treat the problem you should expect some improvement in the academic performance of these kids," Gozal said.

An expert not associated with the study said the findings shed light on an important issue. Dr. Carole Marcus, a professor of pediatrics at John Hopkins University and medical director of its Pediatrics Sleep Laboratory, said pediatricians and parents should pay more attention to the possibility of sleep apnea.

While all children snore, parents should be concerned if their child snores every night with occasional gasping or choking noises, she said. Severe cases of sleep apnea can stunt growth, lead to heart failure, cause seizures and result in mental retardation.

Snoring alone, however, does not mean a child's tonsils should be removed, she said.

Gozal said a thorough study is needed before parents decide on surgery.

"The history provided by the parent and physical examination is insufficient," he said. "You need a sleep study in a sleep laboratory to determine if the child needs treatment."

Utah population cast as genetics research mecca

BY KRISTEN MOULTON
ASSOCIATED PRESS

SALT LAKE CITY — What do you get when you pair Mormons' affinity for big families and genealogy with their enthusiasm for advancing science?

A geneticist's dream come true: a foot in the door at Utah family reunions.

Where else can a researcher collect 200 blood samples in one day to trace whether enlarged infant hearts or premature labor run in a family? asks Ken Ward, an obstetrician and geneticist at the University of Utah.

Ward says he and colleagues have been invited to countless family reunions since he came to Salt Lake 12 years ago, drawn by its reputation as a mecca for genetic research.

"We set up a little shade tent and have some orange juice and a phlebotomist," Ward says. "In between softball and hot-dogs, people will run by to share family history, sign consent forms, learn about the study and, frequently, roll up their shirt sleeves and give a blood sample."

Geneticists for 50 years have recognized the value of Utah's extended families and their precise genealogical records. And in the 20 years that genetics has been revolutionizing medical science, Salt Lake has become one of the centers of that research.

The University of Utah isn't alone in the forefront. The Howard Hughes Medical Institute and the Huntsman Cancer Institute, both based at the university and searching for genetic causes of disease, also attract top researchers.

"It's a matter of having built up over the years a critical mass of very good research people. That in itself can act as a magnet to come here," said Richard Koehn, vice president of research at the university and a geneticist himself.

Ward, a native of Long Island, N.Y., says when he was researching genetics in Washington, D.C., patients often didn't know where their siblings were, let alone their medical histories.

"Here, you're likely to have met dozens of your cousins and to have seen the premature baby who is still on an oxygen tank at the family reunion," Ward said.

Most of Ward's gene investigations begin with patients who, when queried, know of parents, siblings or cousins with similar problems. Ward discovered two genes involved in pregnancy toxemia using the approach.

"Families here tend to be a little closer knit and more involved, for better or worse, in each other's lives, business, tragedies and triumphs," Ward said. "Because of this phenomenon we are able to see patterns that may not be as obvious to other investigators."

DNA from three generations of several Utah families is part of a repository in France where geneticists from around the world obtain samples to create genetic maps. Ward said the Utah contributions have been among the most useful because of the size of the families.

What makes Utah unique is that it had what's called a "founder population." Several thousand original Mormon pioneers, many of whom were polygamous, settled the Intermountain West beginning in the 1840s and had large families who mostly stayed put.

Some 2 million people in Utah, Idaho, Nevada, northern Arizona and western Colorado and parts of Wyoming and Montana can trace their roots to those pioneers.

"If the original pioneer had a mutation responsible for cancer that spread through the family, that can be traced fairly easy," said Bill Hockett, spokesman for Myriad Genetics Inc., a company searching for genetic causes of disease with the hope of developing treatments.

Only Iceland and some remote island populations can rival Utah for its value to genetics research, both because they have founder populations and extensive genealogical data, Hockett said.

Myriad, founded by former University of Utah researcher Mark Skolnick, identified a gene involved in breast and ovarian cancer and watched its testing revenue rise 339 percent last year after the tests gained acceptance in the market.

The company has discovered a heart disease gene and is closing in on asthma and other cancer genes. It's also looking into genetic causes of depression and dementia.

"You couldn't do the same thing in many places in the world," Hockett said.

Other companies also are leveraging off the university's expertise in genetics. Biotechnology companies, many of them using genetics to varying degrees, now employ 11,000 people in Utah, up more than 25 percent in three years.

Researchers often tap into family tree data provided to the university by The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. The church gathers the information so members can perform sacred temple ordinances for the dead.

Access to that genealogical information is strictly limited, and the church gives the university no names of living persons to protect their privacy, Koehn said.

Navajo language gets CD treatment

BY DERRICK HENRY
ASSOCIATED PRESS

SHIPROCK, N.M. — An effort to create more written Navajo language literature is bypassing the printing press for the computer.

CD-ROMs designed by the Dine Studies department at Dine College are helping middle and high school students learn the language's basic speech and grammar.

"Kids who grow up bilingual have to grow up bi-literate and have access to the things they need," said Clay Slate, who worked on the disk completed in December.

The software for students in the Central Consolidated School District in San Juan County cost about $210,000 to create, Slate said. The college is preparing another CD-ROM aimed at elementary students.

About 80,000 people read, write and speak the Navajo language, said Bernice Casaus, director of Dine Studies. Dine, pronounced dih-NEH, is the word Navajos use to describe themselves.

The disk outlines the Navajo alphabet and includes a teaching guide and student-produced stories and drawings. It will be used in the school system's Navajo language bilingual program.

Other computer programs teach the language, but most are too advanced for beginning speakers. "What we're trying to get out there is the basics," Casaus said.

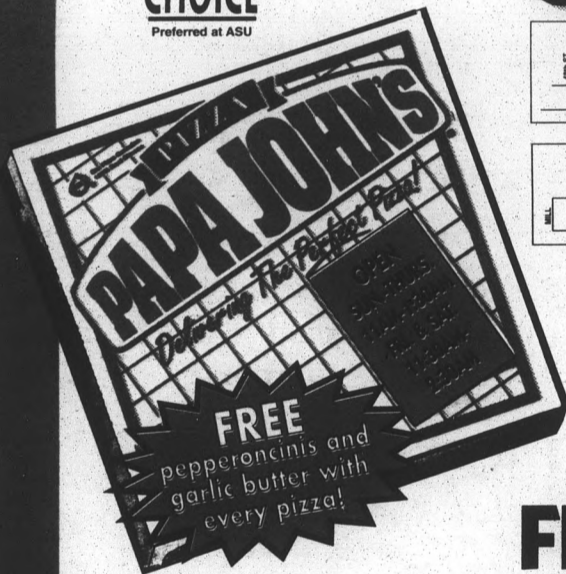

Two years ago, the college made a disk about place names in the area, which sparked interest in using CD-ROM technology to teach the language.

The project was called Saadlatah Hozhoon, which translates in English to "Above the words of language, there is beauty," Casaus said.

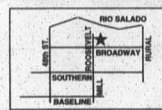

In that CD, elders fluent in the language and the geography of the region lecture using maps and pictures. Combining the oral and written versions of the language helps teach it, Slate said.

"It's richer getting both," he said. "With the multimedia we can do that."

Reno names Clinton in expanded probe of '96 campaign ads

By JOHN SOLOMON
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — For the third time in a month, Attorney General Janet Reno has launched a 90-day investigation that could lead to an independent counsel to investigate campaign fund-raising. The inquiry announced Tuesday will focus on whether President Clinton illegally benefited from Democratic ads during the 1996 election.

"I have commenced a preliminary investigation ... involving President of the United States William Jefferson Clinton concerning political advertisements during the 1996 election cycle," Reno wrote to the three-judge court that oversees the independent counsel law.

The inquiry will focus on whether Clinton and the White House coordinated Democratic issue ads to assist his re-election, and in doing so violated the federal spending limits he agreed to when he accepted taxpayer financing of his campaign. The White House denied any wrongdoing.

"The Clinton-Gore issue ads during the 1996 campaign differed in no substantial respect from the Dole-Kemp issue ads except for their respective party advocacy," Clinton's private lawyer, David Kendall, said in a statement. "Each Clinton-Gore ad was reviewed by counsel at the president's request to assure the ads' legality and approved prior to broadcast. When the Department of Justice's review process finally concludes, it will determine that the Clinton-Gore ads were entirely proper."

"These ads were not only lawful, they were completely appropriate," White House counsel Charles F.C. Ruff said.

DNC General Counsel Joe Sandler pledged in a statement that the party would cooperate with the inquiry "in every way."

The review grew out of a preliminary Federal Election Commission report that sources have said concluded the Clinton-Gore campaign violated rules governing issue advocacy ads. It would examine, among other things, Clinton's role in the 1996 campaign activities.

Under the independent counsel law, the Justice Department can open an initial 30-day inquiry to determine if allegations against any government officials covered by the law have merit. Reno did that last month on the issue ads.

The decision Tuesday is the second step — a 90-day investigation to determine if those allegations warrant appointment of a special prosecutor.

Reno for months has resisted Republican demands that she seek appointment of an outside prosecutor to look at questionable practices in the 1996 campaign. But the latest inquiry marks the third separate 90-day Justice Department review related to campaign fund raising that she has announced in the past month.

Any of the three preliminary investigations, including those ordered previously on Vice President Al Gore and former senior White House official Harold Ickes, could lead to appointment of an independent counsel. Or Reno could ask a three-judge federal panel to combine two or more under a single independent counsel.

The 90-day investigation of Gore focuses primarily on whether he truthfully described to federal investigators his understanding of how campaign finance laws applied to fund-raising activities he undertook two years ago.

Clinton urges Congress to spend $5 billion for public schools

By SANDRA SOBIERAJ
ASSOCIATED PRESS

SILVER SPRING, Md. — The Democratic governor turned up his nose and refused to share the stage with President Clinton, but a half-block from Pine Crest Elementary, one parent's sign warned off talk of scandal Tuesday: "Dear Press, The topic is education."

Inside, Clinton hewed to the theme and pressed a returning Congress to spend $5 billion to outfit public schools for a record 52.7 million children enrolling this fall — a 500,000 increase from last fall that has pushed many of this "baby boom echo" into temporary classrooms.

"Let's get people out of the house trailers and get them out of the falling-down buildings and give our kids something to be proud of," Clinton exhorted.

First lady Hillary Rodham Clinton and Vice President Al Gore fanned out to other schools in observation of the administration's "School Modernization Day." Wielding a new Education Department report finding this year's elementary- and secondary-school enrollment the highest ever, they tried to resuscitate the president's plan from February to provide $5 billion over five years in renovation and construction tax credits — a plan all but ignored by the Republican-led Congress.

"This ought to be an issue where we can all say that it's a national priority," Clinton said.

House Education Committee Chairman Bill Goodling, R-Pa., retorted in a statement: "If the federal government were the answer to failing schools, the 760 federal education programs now on the books would have fixed them a long time ago."

Left unspoken from the school's podium was the furor over Clinton's admitted affair with former White House intern Monica Lewinsky.

Maryland Gov. Parris Glendening, a Democrat seeking re-election in November, announced over the weekend that he disapproved of Clinton's behavior and was withdrawing his request for Clinton's help at an Oct. 2 fund-raiser. Lt. Gov. Kathleen Kennedy Townsend stood in for Glendening at the school in this Washington suburb.

Dick Breitenbeck, a Democrat visiting from Daphne, Ala., said he wouldn't be surprised if other candidates followed the governor's lead. "Everybody's looking for self-preservation," said the retired aviation worker.

But Silver Spring Democrat Debbie Segal, 42, a bookkeeper and mother who was part of Pine Crest's hand-picked audience, said Glendening may have miscalculated. "He's only shunning the school and the students," she said.

White House press secretary Mike McCurry said no other Democrats had canceled invitations to the president. Instead, some have sought to fill the Oct. 2 hole in his schedule, and the president remains "determined" to get on with business, McCurry said.

Clinton was to campaign Wednesday for Florida gubernatorial candidate Buddy MacKay in Miami and Orlando.

Rep. Albert Wynn, D-Md., whose district Clinton visited

Tuesday, laid bare the difficulty Democrats face. Off stage, Wynn pointedly declined an opportunity to say the president was a role model for children.

"I don't like to make any judgment about President Clinton as a role model, Mike Jordan as a role model or Charles Barkley as a role model. Parents are the best role models and that's where I'll leave it," said Wynn.

On stage, he cast Clinton as a promise keeper on policy, recalling that when they met in 1992 or 1993, Clinton pledged to increase spending on schools as soon as the federal budget was balanced. "He is following through on that promise," Wynn said.

Clinton's own remarks called to mind — intentionally or not — the common parlance aswirl in the Lewinsky matter. He spoke of holding students to "high standards, high expectations, high levels of accountability."

And, he said a politician should only be believed by his deeds. "The actions that the child sees walking up the steps to school every day are louder than all the words to the contrary of the politicians."

As the president weighs his next step, 42-year-old Vivian Clinton — no relation to the president — said there's no point in him resigning "because we'll only pick apart that next person too."

His compassion for the poor and all the good policies he's enacted "shouldn't be negated," said Susan Rohrer, 40, of Beltsville, Md.

Phineas Gage's bizarre mishap responsible for brain symposium

BY ANNE WALLACE ALLEN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAVENDISH, Vt. — Not a lot has happened in this small town since a railroad foreman named Phineas Gage got a hole through his head 150 years ago.

But some Cavendish people think Gage's mishap might be enough to put their town on the map. This fall, they're holding a brain symposium on Gage, whose case has been celebrated by students and scientists since his bizarre accident in 1848.

What little is known about Gage, a Lebanon, N.H., native who worked for the railroad in Cavendish for about 12 weeks, is dramatic. According to Dr. John M. Harlow, who treated him, Gage was blasting rock when an iron "tamping rod" exploded beneath him.

The pointed rod entered the left side of Gage's face and passed all the way through his head "and high into the air, falling to the ground several rods behind him, where it was afterwards picked up by his men, smeared with blood and brain," wrote Harlow.

Gage, 25, was in critical shape for many weeks. Though the holes in his head eventually healed, the brain injury had changed his personality. His former employers wouldn't take him back.

"The equilibrium or balance, so to speak, between his intellectual faculties and animal propensities, seems to have been destroyed," Harlow told the Massachusetts Medical Society on June 3, 1868.

"He is fitful, irreverent, indulging at times in the grossest profanity (which was not previously his custom), manifesting but little deference for his fellows, impatient of restraint or advice when it conflicts with his desires, at times pertinaciously obstinate, yet capricious and vacillating, devising many plans of future operation, which are no sooner arranged than they are abandoned in turn for others appearing more feasible."

Harlow said Gage later worked in various jobs, appearing in P.T. Barnum's freak show and driving a stagecoach in Chile. The tamping iron remained his constant companion for the rest of his life. He is thought to have died in San Francisco in 1861, aged about 38.

The case can now be found in most psychology textbooks, said Australian psychologist Malcolm

MacMillan, who has been studying Gage for a dozen years. It was even featured in "Ripley's Believe it or Not."

Gage's skull was later dug up and moved to Harvard Medical School's Warren Anatomical Museum, which also features the tamping iron that made him famous. The museum says it gets inquiries about Gage at least once a month.

But Cavendish, pop. 1,300, has never really capitalized on its famous victim. There's nothing to mark the spot where the iron went through Gage's skull. The hotel where he recuperated is long gone. The town library has a small exhibit about Gage, but that only went up this spring.

"Frankly, we've had a lot of famous people around," said local historian Barbara Kingsbury. "Three sisters from here in the 1890s became women doctors, all three of them."

Cavendish was also known for a while as the home of Alexander Solzhenitsyn, the exiled Russian author, who lived there for two decades before moving back to his native land.

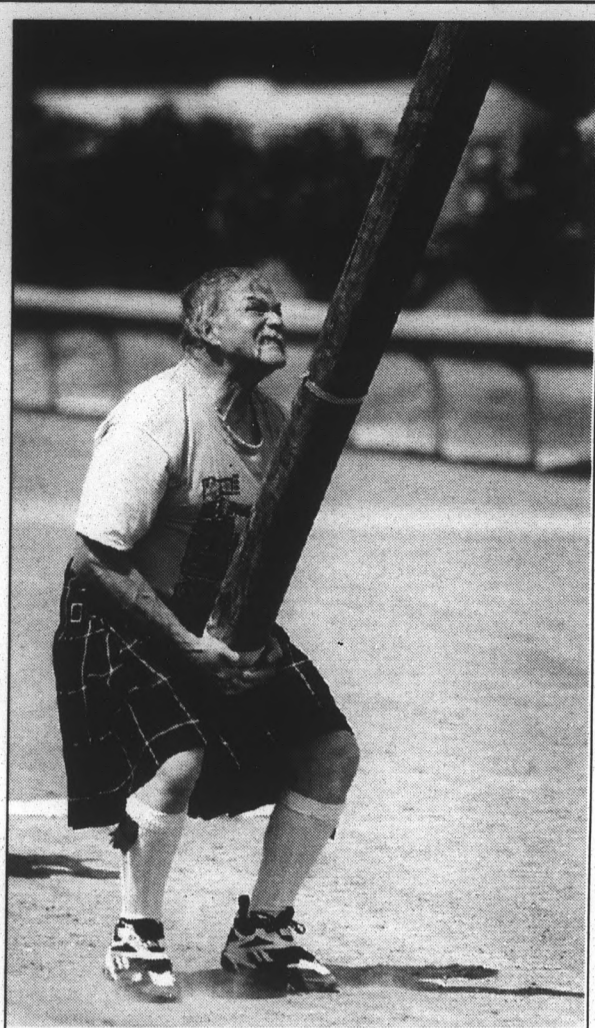

The symposium, which will feature about 15 experts on brain injury, is timed to fall on Sept. 13, the 150th anniversary of the accident, said organizer Tom Sabo.

The organizers are borrowing the skull and tamping iron from Harvard for the event. They are mounting a commemorative plaque, and they are offering a weekend of activities like hay rides, a theatrical reenactment of the accident, a craft fair, bird-watching tours and historical lectures.

MacMillan, a psychology professor in Melbourne who is writing a book about Gage, is helping the Cavendish Chamber of Commerce organize the event. He hopes it will renew interest in Gage's local ties and even produce more material for his research.

The symposium organizers hope that by bringing attention to Gage's Cavendish connection, they will help brain injury sufferers as well as inject life into the local economy.

"I'm slightly crazy. This is an academic thing," MacMillan said. "There's a chance of Gage becoming more famous now than he has been for years."

Negotiators resume talks in 11-day-old strike

By Karren Mills
Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — The White House on Tuesday dispatched two of its big guns to Minnesota to help get Northwest Airlines and its striking pilots back to the bargaining table.

Deputy counsel Bruce Lindsey and Transportation Secretary Rodney Slater arrived to meet with the federal mediator who has been working with the two sides. The two men will remain "as long as they can be useful there. They are primarily there to assess the situation," White House spokesman Barry Toiv said.

Northwest and the union representing its 6,100 pilots met separately at a suburban hotel amid tight security and a news blackout Tuesday, the third day of talks aimed at resumption of contract negotiations. The two sides also met separately with a mediator Saturday and Sunday in Chicago.

At the hotel, a blue screen and a large plant blocked a hallway leading to the area where talks were being held. Both sides were ordered by the National Mediation Board to say nothing about the talks.

Meanwhile, Northwest issued temporary layoff notices to 567 part-time reservation agents, boosting to about 28,300 the number of non-striking employees who have been laid off since the strike began.

The dispute, which centers on pay and job security, began Aug. 28 and is the longest airline strike since 1989, when a machinists' strike led to the collapse of Eastern Airlines.

Northwest has canceled all flights through Friday, and flights originating in Europe and Asia through Sunday.

Two feeder carriers that discontinued Northwest Airlink service when the strike began had been ordered by the Transportation Department to reinstate service Tuesday to 17 towns with no other scheduled air service.

Both carriers had said it would be impossible to comply.

Chase is over; McGwire hits 62nd

Slugger slams shortest, but biggest homer of '98 to finally surpass Maris

BY DOUG FLANAGAN
STATE PRESS

The pursuit of history is over. There is a new single-season home run king.

Mark McGwire hit a Steve Trachsel pitch over the left field fence at Busch Stadium in the fourth inning of Tuesday's game against the Chicago Cubs, breaking the 37-year old record of 61 set by Roger Maris.

Ironically, the record-breaking clout was McGwire's shortest of the season — a line drive that barely cleared the wall, measured at 341 feet.

"I tell you what, I was so shocked because I didn't think the ball had enough to get out," McGwire said.

"It's an absolutely incredible feeling. I can honestly say I did it."

After seeing it clear the fence, McGwire was so caught up in the moment that he missed first base as he rounded the bag. He had to return to touch it, being pulled back by coach Dave McKay.

From there, McGwire received handshakes from every Cubs infielder and hugged Cubs catcher Scott Servais as he crossed home with history. He gave his son, Matthew, a Cardinal batboy, a giant bearhug, then was mobbed by his teammates.

Soon after, Cubs rightfielder

Sammy Sosa, who has been McGwire's partner in the great home run chase of 1998, jogged in from his right field position to congratulate and hug McGwire.

During the 10-minute delay, McGwire hopped into the stands to speak to the Maris' six children, who were in attendance to see their father's record be broken.

"I just wanted to let them know that Roger is in my heart," McGwire said.

The ball was retrieved by Tim Forneris, a grounds crew worker. He said he would give the ball to McGwire.

"Right when it hit off the bat, I knew it was going out and it went right over the sign," he said.

"There were a bunch of ground-crew guys on the wall. But I was right on the edge and I said, 'That ball is mine.'"

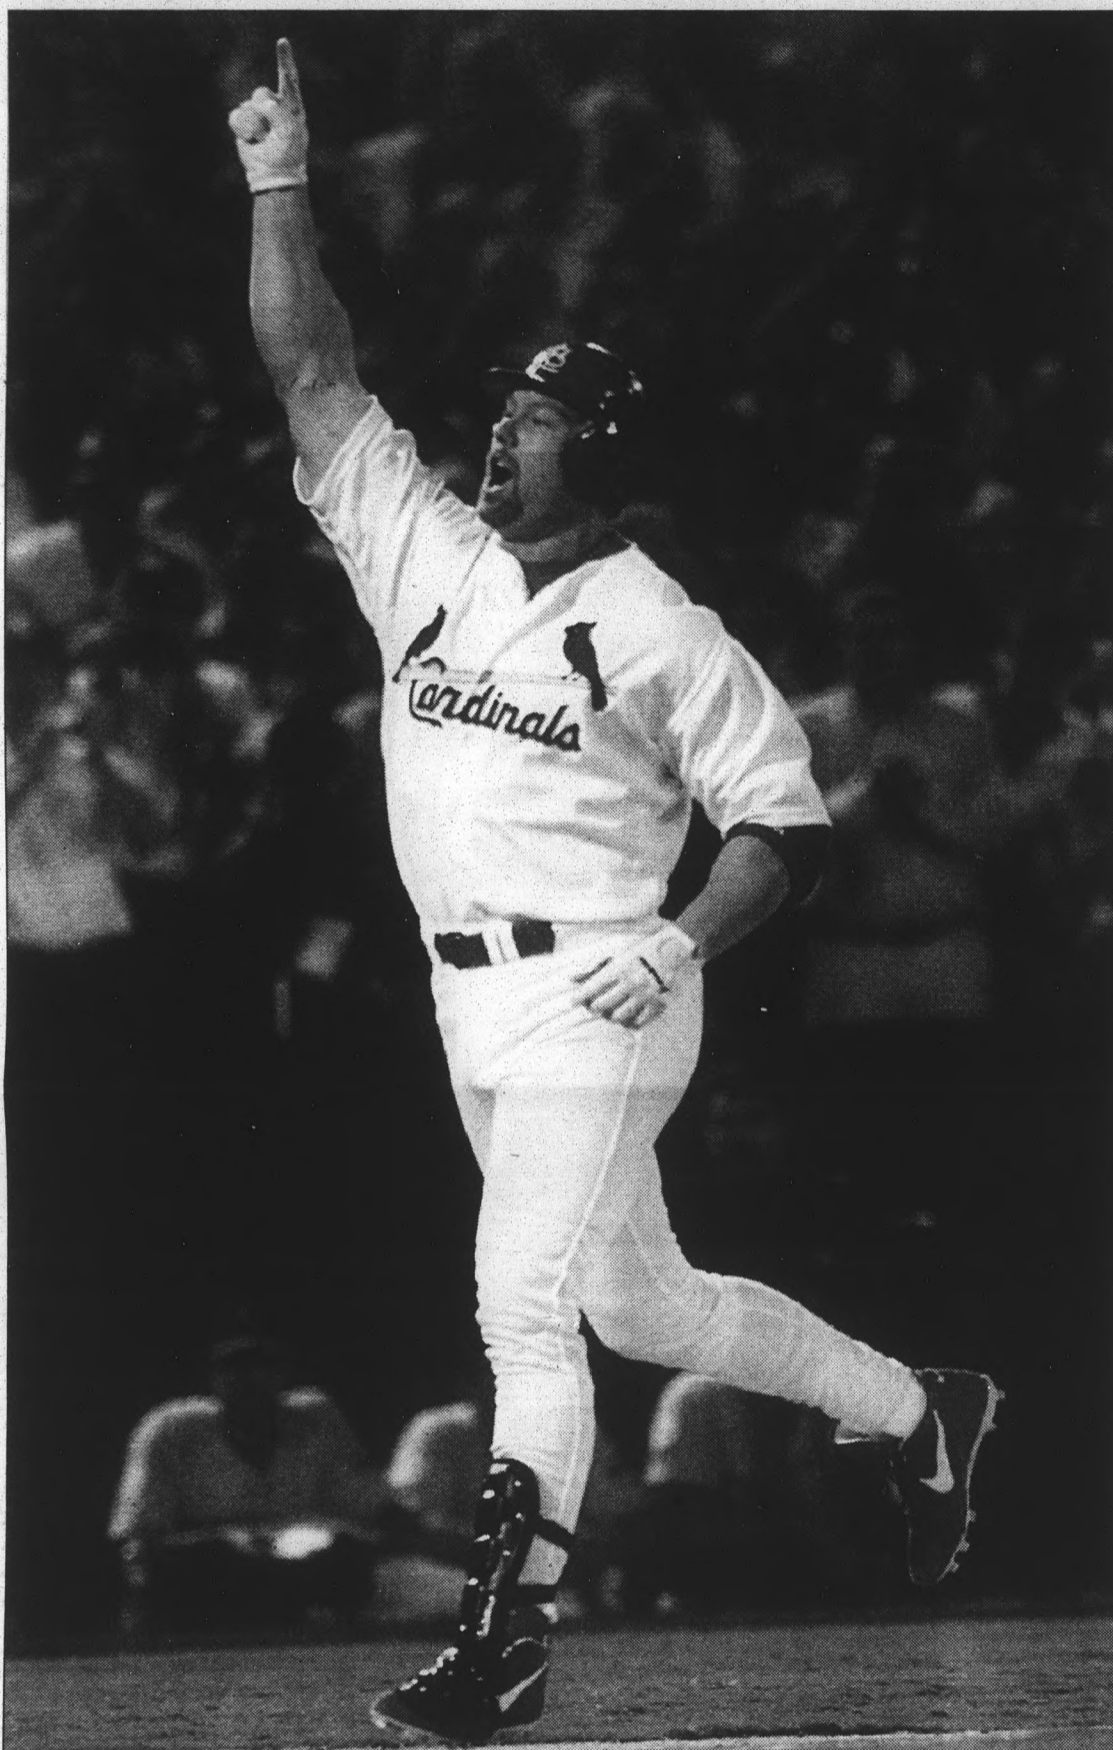

At the postgame press conference, McGwire sat next to the bat he used to break the record along with Maris' historic bat. He kissed both and expressed joy that his name will be forever linked to history.

"I can honestly say my bat will lay next to his (in the Hall of Fame)," he said, "and I'm damn proud."

The Associated Press contributed to this story.

'Traumatic' loss overshadows ASU's offensive brilliance

BY DOUG FLANAGAN
STATE PRESS

Todd Heap wasn't even expecting to play.

So when the true freshman tight end made a spectacular, one-handed touchdown catch in the back of the end zone late in the first quarter of Saturday's contest with Washington, he was understandably ecstatic.

"It's a dream come true," he said about his first collegiate play. "I was just glad to be in the game. It was a perfect ball — nobody else could've caught it. Kealy put it up, I got a hand on it, and I was fortunate to come down with it."

"It's just too bad it was only one play."

In truth, ASU's offense made several spectacular plays, most of the game living up to its lofty expectations. However, Washington's offense was better as the Huskies pulled out a 42-38 victory.

"(The loss) was traumatic for us in that we worked so hard and focused so hard on this game," ASU head coach Bruce Snyder said. "I think we're going to be a real good football team and to have it end up the way it did...."

Wide receiver Tariq McDonald added, "It's a tremendous disappointment to the players and the coaches. We knew the D had to step up, and (Washington) made the big plays and we didn't. That's how the game sometimes goes."

It appeared the Sun Devils would pull the game out in dramatic fashion when McDonald, on fourth down, snared an eight-yard pass from Ryan Kealy with two minutes left to give ASU a 38-35 lead.

But Husky quarterback Brock Huard, as he did for most of the contest, had an answer. He promptly marched his team 80 yards in six plays in a minute-and-a-half, topping off the drive with a 63-yard touchdown bomb to tight end Reggie Davis on fourth and 17. ASU's last-ditch effort came up short when Kealy's desperation pass from the Washington 39 fell dead between three Husky defenders in the end zone.

ASU held the lead for all of the first half, capitalizing on four of its six possessions. Kealy threw for two touchdowns and had ground support from J.R. Redmond

Faatulu, Coughlin lead Sun Devils to 2 wins

BY DAVID MYERS
STATE PRESS

The ASU women's volleyball team, led by junior setter Jolynn Faatulu and freshman outside hitter Jami Coughlin, were able to win two out of three matches last weekend in its own Airport Hilton/ Sun Devil Challenge at Wells Fargo Area.

The Sun Devils opened the weekend with a 15-13, 15-6, 13-15, 8-15, 15-7 victory over the UConn Huskies Friday afternoon. The Devils were led Coughlin's 20 kills and 19 digs. Junior Amanda Burbridge also helped out the cause by chipping in 17 kills and 15 digs.

The Sun Devils continued their winning ways Friday evening, beating the George Washington Colonials 15-10, 15-10, 13-15, 11-15, 15-10. Coughlin had another great game as she had a career-high 24 kills and 12 digs. Faatulu also contributed four kills, four service aces, 18 digs, two block solos and three block assists.

The person with the most praise for Coughlin was Sun Devil head coach Patti Snyder-Park.

"Jami was rock solid tonight," she said. "She is just a money player. She's so good all the way around."

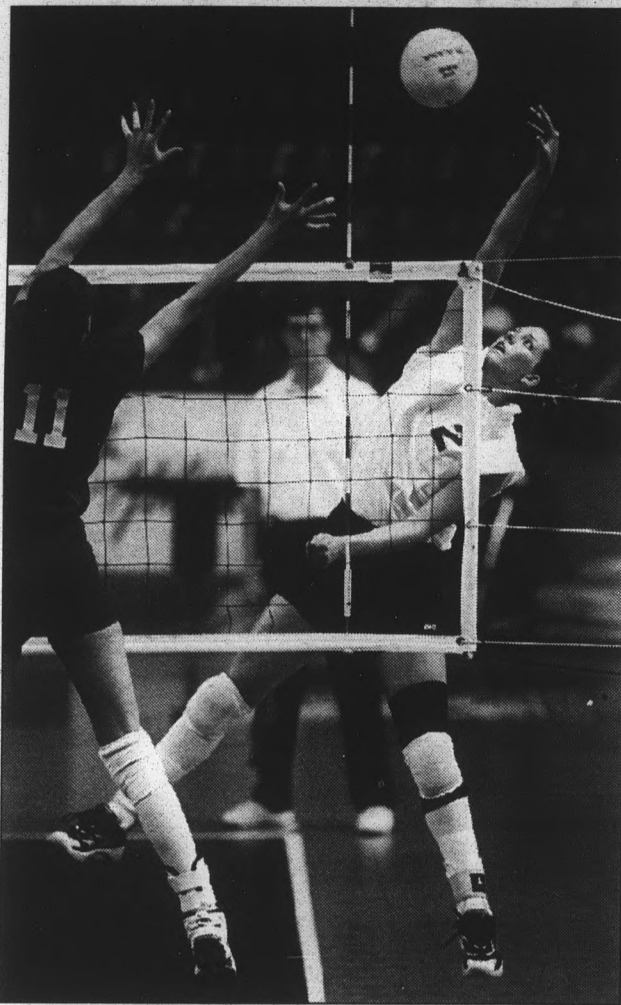

The team concluded the weekend's action with a Saturday afternoon loss to No. 20 Loyola Marymount Lions, 1-15, 5-15, 9-15. Burbridge led the team with 16 kills, and Faatulu had 30 assists, one block solo, and one block assist. The Lions were led by Jeannette Hecker, who chipped in five kills, 28 assists, eight digs, and three block assists.

Faatulu and Coughlin were each named to the all-tournament team along with LMU's Hecker and Cindy Weglarz and George Washington's Tai Berhune. McFarland was honored as the tournament MVP.

Even with the two victories, the team knows there are some things they need to work on, according to Jami Peck.

"We need to have the ability to close teams out," the junior blocker said. "In both our victories we had two game leads and blew them both. We need to end the games decisively instead of giving teams chances to win."

ASU travels to Hawaii for the Wahine Volleyball Challenge Sept. 10-12, hosted by the University of Hawaii.

Soccer team splits pair on road

The ASU women's soccer team traveled out east and took down No. 22 Massachusetts 4-2, then got taken out by Boston College 3-0.

ASU has a 2-1 overall record.

On Saturday, ASU junior forward Jennifer Peterson knocked in two unassisted goals. Freshman Stacey Tullock struck goal off a rebound shot in the first half and the sensational Karine Inoue registered an "insurance goal" in the 65th minute. UMass kept it close with two rebounded shots, but was outshot by ASU 21 to 16 and ultimately losing by two goals.

Unfortunately on Monday the Sun Devils were shut out by the Boston College Eagles 3-0. Boston College freshman Morgan Page delivered her first hat trick after a scoreless first half, while Eagles sophomore goalie Courtney Schaeffer made five saves and recorded her first shutout. ASU was outshot 14 to 12 in a tough defensive battle. Boston College improved to 1-1 while ASU falls to 2-1. Next up for Sun Devils is the Wisconsin Invitational to take on Marquette this Friday and take on No. 11 Texas A & M Sunday.

Gridiron roundup

There are 24 former ASU football players in the NFL. Here's a brief recap of some of their accomplishments during Week One of the '98 season:

•Cornerback Craig Newsome (Green Bay Packers) made seven solo tackles and one assisted tackle in the Packers' 38-19 rout of the Detroit Lions Sunday.

•Cornerback Phillippi Sparks (New York Giants) collected four solo tackles and three assisted tackles in New York's 31-24 defeat of the Washington Redskins Sunday.

•Cornerback Jason Simmons (Pittsburgh Steelers) had four tackles in his first NFL game Sunday as Pittsburgh beat the Baltimore Ravens 20-13.

•Safety Pat Tillman (Arizona Cardinals) made five solo tackles in his first NFL start Sunday. The host Dallas Cowboys spoiled Tillman's debut, winning convincingly 38-10.

•Linebacker Derrick Rodgers (Miami Dolphins) had a sack, two solo tackles and an assisted tackle in the hapless Indianapolis Colts No. 1 pick Peyton Manning's first career start. Miami defeated Indianapolis 24-15 Sunday.

•Tight end Steve Bush (Cincinnati Bengals) had one catch for five yards in the Bengals' season-opening 23-14 loss to the Tennessee Oilers Sunday.

•Receiver Keith Poole (New Orleans Saints) snatched one reception for 12 yards, and the Saints defeated the St. Louis Rams 24-17 Sunday.— From Staff Reports

SportsBriefs

From Staff and Wire Reports

Although their stellar college careers ended several years ago, three former Sun Devil golfers' success continues on the pro circuit.

Ex-ASU golfers Danielle Ammaccapane, Emilee Klein and Dina Ammaccapane finished 1-2-3 at the LPGA Safeway Open, which concluded Sunday in Portland, Ore.

Danielle Ammaccapane shot an even-par 72 Sunday to hold off Klein by one stroke and her younger sister Dina by three strokes to place first in the $600,000 tournament.

Klein, who began the final round three shots behind Danielle Ammaccapane, tied her with a birdie 4 on the 501-yard 10th hole that left both players 11-under par. Ammaccapane then birdied Nos. 12 and 13 on the 6,307-yard Columbia-Edgewater Country Club course to take the lead for good.

"I thought I was going to have to shoot three or four under to win," the elder Ammaccapane said. "I didn't have to do that, as it turned out."

Dina Ammaccapane, 30, finished with a 66 and was third at 207, her career-best finish, one spot higher than her previous best at the 1994 Sara Lee Classic. She

It was the top finish in a single tournament for the Ammaccapane sisters.

"He was in tears," Danielle said of her father, Ralph. "He was very happy for my sister and I."

Danielle Ammaccapane, who starred at ASU from 1983-87, finished with a 12-under par 204 total to win her second tournament of the year and the $90,000 first prize. She's won seven tour titles, the last coming in the Mercury Titleholders Championship in May.

Big play costs ASU victory

BY SCOTT BRACKEN
STATE PRESS

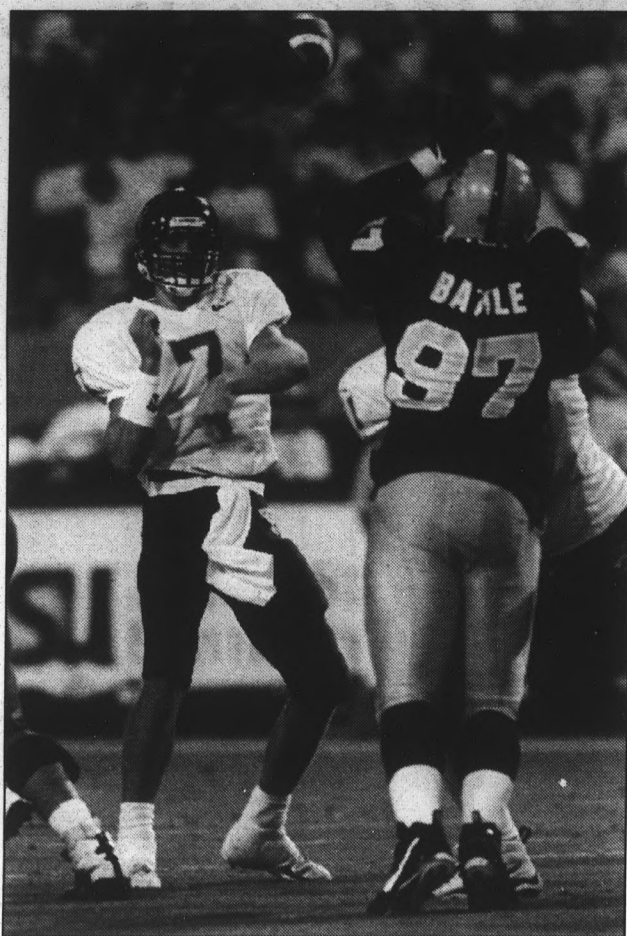

After dumping a pitch to no one for a 15-yard loss, the Washington Huskies pulled off one of the most fantastic finishes Sun Devil Stadium has ever seen and what Husky head coach Jim Lambright described as, "the biggest opening win in school history."

Facing a 4th and 17 on their own 37-yard line with less than a minute remaining amidst 72,000 plus screaming fans waving yellow pompons Washington tight end Reggie Davis managed to slip behind ASU defenders to pull down an over-the-shoulder toss from Husky quarterback Brock Huard, broke two tackles and raced 63 yards for the winning touchdown.

"Could this game have been any better?" Brock Huard asked reporters, while wearing the expression of a gold medalist during the National Anthem. "That was destiny tonight, divine intervention. Hollywood couldn't have written a better script. I would get up and do the fight song rendition for all our friends back home because this is the greatest game I've ever been a part of, ever."

"The funny thing is that play was a corner route that we couldn't connect on in practice for the last three weeks," Huard said. "I told Reggie at half-time, 'Reg you owe me two, you missed a couple there in the first half'. And Reggie came up to me right after the touchdown and the first thing he said to me was, 'there's your two back.'"

The Huskies stood tall in the locker room after their stunning victory in the waning moments Saturday night. And even though the Washington players didn't want to comment on the impact of losing to ASU two years ago in Tempe in a season when ASU went on to an undefeated season they did want to tell the Seattle media that this year they're for real.

Brad Lang of the State Press
Husky quarterback Brock Huard, who had ample time to throw all game, tosses a pass over the outstretched arms of ASU defensive lineman Albrecht Battle.

"We've been getting a lot of flack from the radio guys saying, 'someone needs to step up, someone needs to be a hero.' Did you guys see enough heroes tonight?"

We sure did Brock, but unless you beat UCLA, that cape is coming off.

Defeat

and Davaren Hightower, who each had scoring runs, and ASU led at half 28-14.

However, ASU's defense broke down in the second half and Huard took over. Huard, who threw for 318 yards and four touchdowns, found Dane Looker for a nine-yard touchdown pass midway through the third quarter to tie the game at 28, and running back Jason Harris gave the Huskies their first lead four minutes later on a five-yard touchdown run.

"I certainly give credit to Washington," Snyder said. "They never blinked. We were real good for awhile. There were parts of that football game where I saw brilliance on our part. So I'm really pleased with portions of what I saw. But we did lose it, and they won it."

Kealy almost matched Huard yard for yard, throwing for a career-high 302 yards and three scores. Redmond did nothing to hurt his Heisman chances, racking up 254 all-purpose yards (108 rushing, 68 receiving, and 66 returning). Redmond also had a punt return for a touchdown called back due to an illegal blocking infraction.

Huard's main target was his high school teammate, Looker, who had 11 receptions for 108 yards and two touchdowns.

The loss marks the third time ASU has lost its season opener in the last 13 years, with each loss coming against Washington. It also dropped the Sun Devils six spots in the Associated Press poll to No. 14.

"We're down right now," linebacker Stephen Trejo said. "But we have 10, hopefully 11 games left on the schedule, and we're not going to let this ruin our whole season."

Snyder added, "My take on this is that our team has great character. We will bounce back. And we will have an awfully good year."

Weekly Beer Trivia

In 1740, Admiral Vernon of the British fleet decided to water down the Navy's rum. Needless to say, the sailors weren't too pleased and called Admiral Vernon "old Grog" after the stiff wool program coats he wore. The term "grog" soon began to mean the watered-down drink itself. When you were drunk on this grog, you were "groggy," a word still in use today.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST
by Sidney Omarr
Wednesday, September 9

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Take initiative, go all out for originality, style, progressiveness, sex appeal. A different kind of love will be revitalized, "young again." Another Aries plays top role.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Focus on marital status, sale or purchase of home, being ready to deal with aggressive Cancer relative. Excellent cuisine, remember resolutions concerning "leaving table hungry."
GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Your kind of day! Forces scattered, you'll be called upon to restore order. Moon position highlights friends, hopes, desires, emotional fulfillment. Sagittarian plays featured role.
CANCER (June 21-July 22) You're back in rhythm. Means you know what is going on and what to do about it. Scorpio native declares, "You have such sex appeal you don't even know how much!" Taurus also involved.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Write, publish, advertise — flirtation lends spice, remember when to say, "Enough is enough!" Emphasis on philosophy, theology, getting beliefs across. Virgo figures prominently.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) What appeared to be a missed opportunity will once again be available. Focus on diplomacy, major domestic issues, including marriage. Sweet music plays inspirational role.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) You will see people, relationships in different light. Individual who appeared honest might turn-out to be "card shark." You'll muse, "This seems like a movie, but it is real!"
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) Emotions surface, you might find yourself "fatally attracted." Focus on organization, power play, financial coup. You have places to go, no time to waste.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) It is a matter of universal appeal, faith, that what goes around comes around. Crossing border from one land to another could be featured. Some spectators shout, "The race is on!"
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) You'll be saying, "Finally I get my way, and I am going to make the most of it!" Imprint style, don't follow others — hot coals of love could burn, unless careful. Leo represented.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) You'll be advised, "Slow down!" Key is to maintain steady pace, you might be on verge of striking it rich. Family and marriage figure prominently. Cancer, Capricorn persons play roles.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) Diversify, give special study to language, audience appears to listen to your unusual sense of humor. People comment, "You could be a stand-up comic!" Respond: "I will give that serious thought!"
IF SEPTEMBER 9 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: You will be told, "You have healing hands!" Interest revolves around medicine, healing arts. Aries, Libra persons play significant roles in your life, could have these letters, initials in names — I and R. You might be on verge of discovering method or machine aimed at helping the handicapped. On personal level, love relationship becomes intense, could be leading to change of marital status. Possible change of residence during December.
