Professor receives grant to study Parkinson's

By ANDREA J. BALSKY
STATE PRESS

ASU professor George Stelmach was recently awarded a $1.7 million grant which he hopes will lead him to clues in his search for a cure to Parkinson's disease.

Stelmach, an ASU professor since 1991, received the five-year grant from The National Institute of Neurological Disorders and Stroke in December.

Parkinson's disease has been generating more interest since actor Michael J. Fox and ex-boxer Muhammad Ali began experiencing varying effects of the disease.

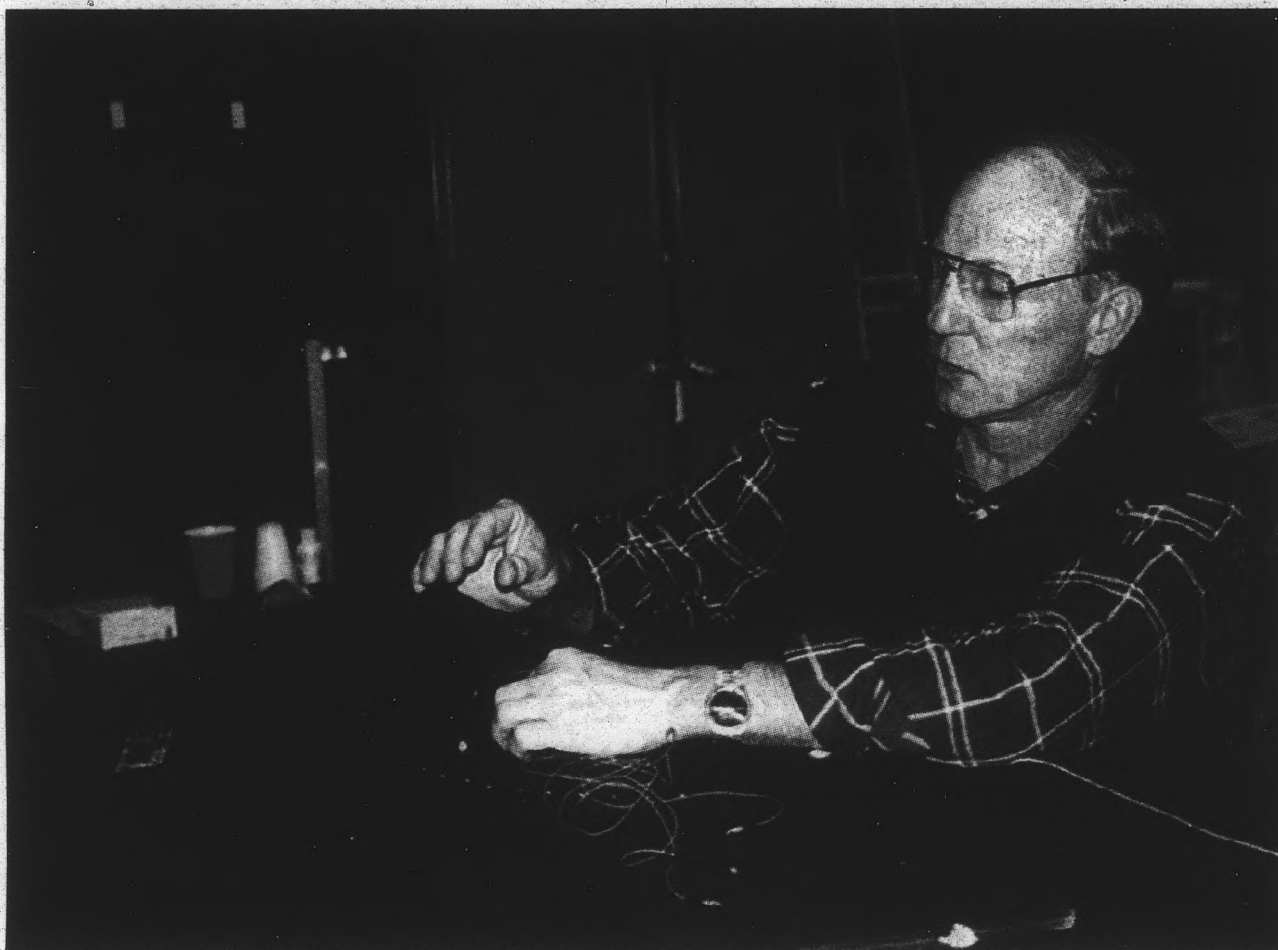

"When famous people get afflicted, the public notices and often research money filters from that," Stelmach said. "We would like to be able to show that our primary hypothesis — that with Parkinson's diseases there are impairments in the way the brain plans and organizes skilled movements — is correct one."

Parkinson's disease attacks the body's motor skills, commonly leading to muscular rigidity and tremors. While traditionally the elderly have been the primary victims of the disease, that trend is changing, Stelmach said, and younger people are becoming afflicted as well.

Stelmach was awarded the grant after a peer committee reviewed his work and gave him a priority score, said Natalie Larsen, a spokeswoman for the institute.

"There's a feeling of glee that your research has been evaluated by peers and chosen for funding," Stelmach said. "It was a nice feeling because faculty gets no state funding for this type of research."

Stelmach's ASU colleagues said they were pleased

Professor George Stelmach demonstrates how markers are attached to a patient's finger, thumb and wrist so that the hand movements can be reconstructed in real time, 3D space. Stelmach was awarded a $1.7 million grant which he will use to search for a cure for Parkinson's disease.

Contaminated meats no problem for ASU students, hot dog vendors

Grandy VanNoy, the vendor at the hot dog stand on the corner of East University Drive and South College Avenue, sells a hot dog to Martin Coldenons Wednesday. VanNoy believes that his customers do not have to worry about listeriosis, a bacterial disease that was found in hot dogs made by Sara Lee Corp., because he purchases his hot dogs from Vienna Beef.

A week after state health officials reported five cases of listeriosis — a bacterial disease recently found in packaged meat products such as hot dogs — ASU Student Health Services has not seen a single patient with symptoms of the illness.

The outbreak has killed 12 people while 62 others have been affected in a dozen states. People exposed to the disease may experience flu-like symptoms, said Chuck Catlin, Arizona Department of Health Services food safety manager.

The Sara Lee Corp. recalled their hot dogs and packaged meats produced by Bill Mar Foods from local grocery stores last month, Catlin said.

Students who visit one of the two nearby hot dog stands don't have to worry about exposure to tainted meat, said Grandy VanNoy, the vendor at the hot dog stand on the corner of University Drive and College Avenue.

VanNoy said he knows about the bacteria. However, he said, he buys his hot dogs from Vienna Beef, while the contaminated meats were sold by Sara Lee.

There has been no decrease in the number of sales since the outbreak, VanNoy said. He said he still sells about 70 hot dogs a day, the same number as last semester. He added that he has not had any complaints from students who buy from him.

Although VanNoy said his patrons have nothing to worry about, some students are still concerned that the tainted products were ever sold.

"I would like to know how long the company knew about the bacteria before they decided to recall the product," said Chris Winslow, an ASU comparative literature graduate student.

"The FDA needs to raise their standards," said Lisa Hach, an aerospace engineering sophomore. "Tainted foods shouldn't be reaching the public in the first place."

Blackout darkens two ASU campuses

By JAYSON PETERS
STATE PRESS

Construction work near campus left an estimated 30 buildings on the west side of campus without power from about 8 a.m. to around 9 a.m. Thursday.

A construction company digging at an unspecified location a half mile away from ASU caused a transfer feeder to malfunction, said Will Diaz, spokesman for Arizona Public Service, darkening lights and computer monitors between South Hardy Drive and South Mill Avenue. The outage also stretched from Rio Salado Parkway to East University Drive.

A transfer feeder is "a big relay switch where power is fed through overhead lines," Diaz said.

ASU staff members said the situation was always under control, but students said they would have liked more information about the outage.

Dorthy Tepe, a clinical laboratory sciences junior, said the University should have a system for providing information on such power outages to the people it affects.

"You don't know what type of disaster it could be," she said. "I work at a hospital and we have a call center."

She said the staff in the Social Sciences building registrar's site tried to find out what was causing the power outage and how long it would last, but they told her they did not know.

Bob Nelson, director of the Computing Technology Center, said several sites on campus — including the Computing Commons, two classrooms in the Business College C-Wing and the Sun Card Office — were back up and running faster than others because of new technology installed within the last year.

Nelson said special battery backups — known as UPS systems — provide up to 20 minutes of "ride-through" time that allowed an orderly shutdown instead of a sudden blackout.

Today for Friday, January 22

Campus clubs and organizations may submit written entries to the State Press in the basement of the Matthews Center. Requests will not be taken over the phone or via fax.

Deadline for requests is noon the day before publication and entries will not be accepted more than three working days before publication. Only one entry per organization per day is permitted.

Entries must contain the full name of the club or organization, a description of the event, date, time and the full address of the location. All requests are subject to editing for content, space and clarity. Incomplete or illegible entries will be discarded.

The Today Section is a daily calendar of events printed as a service to the ASU community. Requests are accepted on a first-come, first-served basis and are printed as space permits.

• The Counselor Training Center offers free services to faculty, staff, and students for depression, anxiety, and other personal issues.

• The Live Art Platform will launch their "Foreplay" benefit which will feature local art displays at the Alwun House at 1204 E. Roosevelt. Four ASU graduates are due to perform and a $6 cover charge will be charged at the door which will be used to benefit the organization.

• The Japanese Student Organization will hold a general meeting at 3 p.m. in the Memorial Union in room 206. The meeting will be to discuss upcoming semester events.

• The Young Democrats will hold a general meeting at 3 p.m. that is open to anyone who wishes to attend. The meeting will be in the Memorial Union, in the Coconino Room.

• The Graduate Student Affairs Vice President's Office will hold a meeting to go over opportunities available to volunteers in the graduate department at 12:30 p.m. on the third floor of the Memorial Union in room 1A and 1B.

• The MUAB Comedy Committee is holding auditions for the "Barren Mind" improvisation and the "Farce Side Comedy Hour" between 4 and 8 p.m. on the lower level of the Memorial Union in the Programming Lounge.

to hear about the grant as well.

"We're delighted," said Bill Stone, department chair for exercise science and physical development. "We think this is a very significant development."

Stelmach said the grant will enable him to hire research associates, buy equipment and help recruit outstanding young scientists to ASU.

"We've made a substantial amount of progress on the Parkinsonian project," Stelmach said of his research. "We have a much better understanding of movement control than we did several years ago."

Stelmach said he hopes the basic science research he and his lab group are doing will eventually help others find a cure for Parkinson's disease.

"Maybe in 20 years this will be a disease that can be eliminated," he said.

In the Memorial Union the outage inconvenienced students waiting to use elevators, create computer accounts in the new Montgomery Room lab and have Sun Card pictures taken.

But "because it was in the morning (the outage) didn't have too big of an impact," said Dale Witenhafer, campus card manager.

Ken Bonk, assistant director of the MU Activities Center, said employees were stationed at high-traffic points, and an ASU police officer was on hand to patrol the building.

"We double check all the vendors just to make sure people are OK," he added.

Burger King, ASU's Fast Copy and American Express Travel Management

Services were all shut down for the duration of the outage.

In an unrelated incident, power was out for more than an hour Thursday morning in the Technology and Applied Sciences department at ASU East. Wallace Reynolds, a spokesman for Salt River Project, said that outage was due to a bad breaker.

New cops to be hired without tax increase

BY GANGA SUBRAMANIAN
STATE PRESS

Tempe's understaffed police department will see the addition of 42 new recruits at a projected annual cost of almost $2.3 million, with no new taxes, the city council agreed Thursday.

The positions will include 23 sworn officers and 19 non-sworn or support personnel. The city will also create an additional pool of eight trained officers who will be "over hired" to meet future needs, said Ron Burns, Tempe police chief.

The Tempe Police Department made this plan in response to the recommendations outlined in a study conducted by the Institute of Law and Justice last March. The study was commissioned after police drew considerable flak for remaining understaffed.

The council addressed various issues concerning department staffing including attracting new officers to the force, retaining senior officers and recruiting civilian support personnel such as record clerks and secretaries.

Burns said the department will address turnover issues by implementing an

Councilman Joe Spracale said the department is looking to recruit "people who want to have a career in law enforcement in the streets and not in administration."

such an increase.

Councilman Ben Arredondo raised initial objections to the fines. "This is not a good way to do it," he said. Arredondo said using fines to raise funds for new officers may lead to an increase in tickets being issued, without an actual increase in violations.

Pat Flynn, deputy city manager also recommended that alarm fees and penalties for false alarms be increased. The city aims to raise an additional $275,000 annually through this, he said.

Mayor Neil Giuliano requested that the police department provide an actual implementation chart at regular intervals to the city council.

House could broaden AIMS exam

BY PAUL DAVENPORT
ASSOCIATED PRESS

PHOENIX - A legislative committee on Thursday endorsed a bill to require Arizona third and eighth-graders to pass their versions of the AIMS test before being promoted, though principals could make exceptions.

AIMS, short for the Arizona Instrument to Measure Standards, is a new test that high school students will begin taking this year to measure their knowledge of English and math required under the state's curriculum standards.

Beginning with students who are now ninth-graders, students will have to pass the high school AIMS test to graduate.

Third, fifth and eighth-graders will take their own versions of AIMS beginning in the spring of 2000, but there is now no requirement that students pass those tests to be promoted.

That would change under the bill sponsored by Rep. Tom Horne, a Phoenix Republican who is chairman of the House Committee on Academic Accountability. The committee endorsed both the AIMS-promotion bill and a companion measure introduced by Horne on school district accountability.

Horne said the AIMS bill would combat "social promotion" of students by making sure they can read before leaving elementary school.

"Now, hopefully the student has the incentive to do the work," he said.

Horne said he is also trying to provide ammunition for public education supporters in their efforts to persuade other lawmakers to spend more on schools.

"They're willing to spend more if they're assured of getting more product out of the schools," said Horne, a Paradise Valley Unified School District board member.

Several school lobbyists complained the bill does not provide extra money for summer school, tutoring and other help for students who fail to pass the test.

"That's not the point," responded Rep. Sue Gerard, R-Phoenix. "The reason why you do this is so everybody wakes up and doesn't wait until the third grade."

School lobbyists also noted that high school students have five chances to pass their AIMS test to graduate but that third and eighth-graders would have only one chance. David Krueger, the Tucson Unified School District's top testing official, said the stigma of being retained would increase dropouts, particularly in the eighth grade.

Using AIMS to combat social promotion is like using a tactical nuclear weapon to hunt javelina, he said. "You will probably get your prey but there probably won't be much left of it."

Analysts: rising job rate is not what it seems

BY AMANDA RIDDLE
ASSOCIATED PRESS

PHOENIX - Arizona ended the year with a record number of jobs, but state analysts warn that's an indication of a steady job growth that is finally expected to slow.

"This is more of a marathon runner type of economy as opposed to a sprinter," said Dan Anderson, Department of Economic Security research administrator. "The expectation is that the rate of job growth will not be as strong in the future as it has been in the past, but there's no indication of a recession at all."

While Arizona jobs hit a record high at 2.31 million, the state's unemployment rate also edged up slightly last month, DES announced Thursday.

The seasonally adjusted unemployment rate for December increased to 4.1 percent from 4.0 percent in November, DES reported.

DES attributed the rise in unemployment to a hiring frenzy in October and November by many employers fearing they would lack the workers they needed because of the nation's tight labor market.

"We didn't see the usual blip at the end of the year because employers got out early and hired their staff," Anderson said.

While 600 people were looking for work in December, businesses statewide added 9,800 jobs to their payrolls, attributing to Arizona's record high of non-farm jobs.

Anderson said the job growth in Arizona over the last few years has been a steady 4.2 percent, but analysts expect growth to slow this year to 3.5 percent.

"It's really been very, very steady in an over the year basis. We have been consistently creating jobs in most sectors of the economy," he said.

Growth in construction and the manufacturing sector, including high-technology companies such as Motorola and Intel, particularly caught state analysts by surprise, Anderson said.

Manufacturing rebounded from a three-month loss to add 700 jobs in December, a gain of 4,000 jobs over last year. Construction also added 600 jobs to the 11,000 created in the last year.

"Construction is a surprise, we expected it to peak in 1997 and slow in 1998, but we've seen increases every month," Anderson said.

"In manufacturing there were great expectation that was going to mean...we'd be losing a lot of jobs, in fact that has not been the case. I think that's quite encouraging to the state," he said.

The Tucson metropolitan area had the lowest unemployment rate in December, with 2.5 percent of its residents without a job, a slight 0.1 percent increase from the month before. The Phoenix area followed close behind with 2.9 percent unemployment, up from 2.7 percent in November.

While unemployment in Arizona increased, the national average fell slightly to 4.3 percent from 4.4 percent in November.

Meanwhile, in the state's rural areas, double-digit unemployment increased by as much as 2 full percentage points - 26.1 percent from 24.1 percent in Yuma County.

Apache, Navajo and Santa Cruz counties, also with unemployment in the teens, inched up anywhere from 0.3 percent to one full point. Every county expect Greenlee and Yavapai saw an increase.

Boos & Bravos

BOO — To the Arizona Legislature for ignoring the state universities' request for additional funding. Not only did our elected officials ignore the request, they actually recommended a .3 percent decrease in funds over last year. Even Gov. Jane Hull's 2.7 percent budget increase falls far short of the 19.4 percent increase requested by the state's three universities and the Arizona Board of Regents. We're already bracing ourselves for the tuition increases that are sure to follow such a paltry budget proposal.

BRAVO — To the 30 or so ASU students and faculty who sat down to take a stand against Tempe's newest law banning sitting on downtown sidewalks. Down here at the State Press, we can't figure out how taking a load off on a public right-of-way became a crime worthy of 30 days in the pokey and a fine that can run up to $500. Downtown Tempe merchants claim their customers are afraid to visit their businesses because of the homeless kids that linger along Mill Avenue. But a recent poll of Tempe residents showed that 67 percent feel safe in the downtown area at night. We think those paranoid shoppers from the rest of the Valley should go back to the mall.

BOO — To Rep. John Shadegg, R-Ariz., who decided to boycott President Clinton's State of the Union address Tuesday night and instead watch the annual speech from home. Republicans complained that Clinton's decision to go ahead with the speech showed a "lack of respect for Congress." What about the obscene lack of respect the Congress has demonstrated toward the president? Not to mention the junior-highish behavior exhibited during Tuesday night's address when Republican members of Congress sat in stony silence and refused to applaud even the most bi-partisan proposals put forth by Clinton.

BRAVO — To Phoenix Republican Steve May, one of only two openly gay members of the Arizona Legislature, for causing a fuss over some ridiculous legislation being proposed by his colleagues. He's trying to ward off bills backed by Rep. Karen Johnson, R-Mesa, and Rep. Linda Gray, R-Glendale, that would immobilize gay and lesbian high school clubs, stop same-sex couples from being foster parents, and discontinue taxpayer-paid insurance coverage to domestic partners of homosexual employees of any government agency in the state.

BOO — To the Miss Nude Arizona State calendar for its tasteless display of ASU coeds. Whose bright idea was this anyway? "I know, if I can get 12 women to pose nude with, say, a shotgun, I bet I can make a lot of money." We're just glad the venture flopped. We're not fond of anything that contributes to the objectification of women, which this calendar blatantly does.

Nothing 'fun' in teenage murder

Someone like Jessica Holtmeyer, a 16-year-old currently standing trial for murder, scares me. The teenager from Clearfield, Pa., a small industrial town of 7,500 approximately 125 miles northeast of Pittsburgh, is quoted as saying, "It was fun to hang someone. It would be fun to do that again." Does that scare you?

According to prosecutors, who are seeking the death penalty in the case, Holtmeyer had fun murdering 15-year-old Kimberly Jo Dotts. Holtmeyer's trial began Monday.

At 16, I had a brand new driver's license and thought driving was fun. Working on my high school's theater production was work, but it was fun. Hanging out with friends was fun.

Holtmeyer's story, as reported by the Associated Press, began when a group of seven young adults calling themselves "the Runaway Gang" embarked on a mini crime spree.

The group, planning to run away, allegedly stole liquor, a piece of rope and went to a place known as Gallows Harbor. Perhaps Holtmeyer should have lived in the 19th century — Gallows Harbor was once a place for Holtmeyer's kind of fun.

Dotts, described as "short, overweight and learning-disabled," was told that having a noose put around her neck would demonstrate loyalty to the group. When Dotts had the rope around her neck, someone yelled "yank it."

No need for gory details. Human beings die when they don't have enough oxygen. Dotts was a 15-year-old human being and she died. Her body was found nine days later.

I used to not think much of the death penalty. I was raised to believe that killing someone is wrong, no matter who does the killing. It wasn't until I read about Holtmeyer's idea of fun that I looked at the subject differently.

And in a growing sea of Jessica Holtmeyers, the death penalty is becoming a booming business.

Judging whether someone should live or die is an awesome task. The idea of causing someone's death is not fun for most people. Holtmeyer might be an exception. I have to wonder if someone who has no concept of the value of life should even have the privilege of spending her remaining years on earth in a prison.

For human beings to coexist, it is crucial for people to recognize that we need to treat each other with civility. We do not have to like everyone. I don't like Holtmeyer — I'm not sure I would be upset if she was given the death penalty.

Considering the circumstances, it might benefit society if she didn't have the opportunity to have any more fun.

Some people enjoy destroying things. Holtmeyer appears to be one of these people. "Holtmeyer was known as a bully at school and people told stories of her setting cats on fire and strangling a poodle," according to the AP story.

I don't want to live in a society with people like her. It may sound like I have no sympathy for Holtmeyer. Perhaps she didn't receive the early bonding that is crucial for humans to understand the value of life. She may not have been told that killing people isn't accepted in our society.

But Holtmeyer's crime does not seem to have been a crime of ignorance or passion. It was a crime of selfishness and apathy. Holtmeyer wanted to have fun and didn't care who suffered. I find that very disturbing.

I wonder what it would take for me to conjure up some sympathy for Holtmeyer. I wonder what it would take for me to even attempt to understand her thought process the night she killed Dotts.

But I don't wonder what it is like to have Holtmeyer's kind of fun, and I'm fine with that.

I'll stick to hanging out with friends, not hanging them.

Sidewalk-sitting ban calls for political action

"Let us learn from our mistakes lest we repeat them," are the words that first came to my mind when considering the passage of Tempe's sidewalk-sitting ban. Somehow it seems that our capacity to learn should result in change and growth. But, as proven by the Tempe City Council, things are not always as they seem.

This past Monday was Martin Luther King Jr. Day. It was a day spent in observance of a man who ultimately gave his life in the name of human equality. His era was marked by laws banning segments of the population not only from private businesses, but from public spaces as well.

Today we look back at those days and wonder how people could have justified such inhumane attitudes. We take for granted that everyone should be afforded certain liberties without regard to race or social class. Of course racism and discrimination still exist on a personal level — you can't legislate what people are allowed to think. But it is generally accepted on principle that such attitudes should not be promoted institutionally.

In a blatant betrayal of the spirit of Dr. King's message, the City Council enacted the sidewalk-sitting ban on Sunday. With a wink and a smile they tell us that the ordinance is in the interest of public safety.

But, some of the facts brought to light at the city council meeting, in which the ordinance was passed last month, paint a far uglier picture.

Before the vote, concerned citizens crowded the city council chambers for almost three hours to make their voices heard. They brought to the council's attention that there already existed an ordinance addressing the obstruction of sidewalks. They questioned the gradual removal of benches from downtown Tempe. Mostly they expressed their concern for the apparent dehumanization of government policy.

When it was all over and the moment of truth finally came, the city council failed to uphold their responsibility as representatives of the people. Mayor Neil Giuliano, as well as Councilmen Ben Arredondo, Leonard Copple and Joe Spracale passed the ordinance by a 4-3 margin. These men have abused the positions with which we entrusted them. We must hold them accountable.

It's hard to decipher the rationale used to justify racial segregation, but the motives behind Tempe's attempts at social segregation are far more transparent.

It's not surprising that the most vocal proponents of the new ordinance are business owners along Mill Avenue. The intent of the law is made even clearer with the passage of another less-publicized ordinance requiring street performers to obtain a $25 permit.

To put it simply, the city council has been pressured by business interests to sweep its homeless problem under the carpet. Rather than seeking to solve the problem by providing assistance to those who need and want it, they have decided to tailor laws so as to sanitize public space in the hopes of making more money.

Rationally, the criminalization of homelessness does not make sense. And yet the true intent of the sidewalk ordinance is absurdly obvious.

The question that remains is: How will we as a community address the blatant disregard for human liberty initiated by our governing body? The courts have refused to act thus far and so the duty lies with us. We have allowed politicians to operate under false motives and hidden agendas for too long and the idea of a representative body created by and for the people has been lost somewhere along the way.

Perhaps this is an opportunity to learn from the past. Through political activism and civil disobedience change can occur. The issue at hand now is not whether we should act, but whether we will. Are we going to take control of our government or are we going to allow the government to control us? Ultimately, what it comes down to is whether we as a society will allow this pattern to continue.

There is a time for change and the time is now. If the cycle of oppression is to repeat itself, then for the sake of our humanity, so must the cycle of liberation. We are the agents of that change; the responsibility is ours.

Norberg proof of brutality

Three weeks ago, Maricopa County agreed to cut a check for $8.25 million, made out to Jaron and Deena Norberg. The settlement — one of the largest of its kind in state history — ended the wrongful-death lawsuit brought against the county by the Norbergs, whose son Scott died three years ago at the hands of guards at the Madison Street Jail.

Gregor McGavin
columnist

But the settlement didn't prove anything, as Sheriff Joe Arpaio was quick to point out.

"I am relieved that this tentative agreement contains no admissions of fault or liability on behalf of our officers," the "Toughest Ex-Travel Agent in America" boasted in a written statement.

"Nor does the agreement require any changes to jail policy," he added.

Arpaio stressed that the decision to settle was made by the county's insurance carrier, rather than by his office. It was not an admission of guilt, nor did it have anything to do with justice. And he's right.

If justice had been served in this case, the jailers who killed Norberg would already be behind bars themselves. And so would their boss, whose history of ignoring abuse of prisoners and attempted cover-up in this case makes him an accomplice, at the very least.

After a 30-second internal "investigation," the sheriff's office declared that the force used on Norberg was reasonable, that he started the confrontation that led to his death and that eight guards with stun guns and batons just wasn't enough to restrain him.

The investigation claimed Arpaio's bully boys were justified when they handcuffed Norberg and strapped him in to a restraint chair. And when they zapped him repeatedly with a stun gun, covered his face with a towel and forced his head down into his chest, making breathing impossible, they did it because they had to.

This wasn't the first time an internal investigation exonerated Arpaio's guards for getting their sadistic jollies on the job. And although it was the first major payout for "Throw 'Em In" Arpaio, it definitely won't be the last.

County taxpayers can expect to fork over at least as much coin to Richard Post, the wheelchair-bound paraplegic whose need to urinate so outraged Joe's boys that they strapped him into their favorite torture device tightly enough to snap his neck and back, turning him into a quadriplegic. And the line forming behind Post is long.

Arpaio, however, has vowed not to change anything in his lockups. He says there's nothing wrong with the way his guards treat prisoners, that the odd death here and permanent disfigurement there is just jailers doing their jobs. He's so confident, he refuses to even check up on his men.

Not everybody believes him, though — like County Attorney Rick Romley, who's pressing ahead with a criminal investigation of the Norberg case and who'd like to know why important evidence like Norberg's larynx was curiously misplaced.

Or Norberg family attorney Michael

Manning, who says a videotape belies jailers' claims that Norberg was in a violent, drug-induced frenzy. Or like Patricia Duran, the jail clerk who was at Madison Street Jail that night in 1996, and claims jailers murdered Norberg for no reason.

And not the county's insurance carrier, who decided to cut its losses and hand over the $8.25 million settlement, rather than the whole $20 million fee they would have lost had the case gone to trial.

County taxpayers will stop believing him too. There will be more skepticism with each mammoth settlement or award. Arpaio, the most popular politico in the state, will lose much of his voter approval rating when the atrocities in his lockups start making a dent in voters' pocketbooks. Taxpayers only had to pick up the first $1 million in the Norberg case, but insurance is going to get hard to come by as the settlements start to rack up.

Of course, none of that will mean anything to Arpaio, who actually claims he was looking forward to going to trial in the Norberg case. He was looking forward to it because if he'd won, it would have proved his righteousness, underscored the effectiveness of his "get tough on crime" blustering and "look the other way" management.

And if he'd lost, it would have been just another bunch of liberal criminal-coddlers taking a shot at poor old Joe. Because nothing Arpaio or any of his jailers do is ever wrong. If you believe him.

New study finds more students are satisfied with ASU advising

BY JUNE D. WILHITE
STATE PRESS

A recent study conducted by the ASU Student Affairs research department shows that the number of students who are pleased with academic advising services has increased by 20 percent over the past four years.

The study, conducted in November and released earlier this week, revealed that 80 percent of students are presently satisfied with advising, compared to 61 percent in 1994.

"Advising units across campus have been working hard to improve their services and more are requiring advisement for their students," said Stephanie Jacobson, associate director of undergraduate academic services. "There's been a recognition that advising makes a significant difference in student success."

Senior Chris Bruening said he did not go to an adviser until his third year in school. But when he finally went, he regretted he did not go earlier.

"I felt like I was so late, but my adviser, Ria Hermann-Currie, has been really great in helping me get classes without having to start all over," said Bruening, who is working on his bachelor's of interdisciplinary studies in music and recreational management.

Almost 600 students participated in the survey and the results show that the level of satisfaction differs depending on what year the students are.

The least-happy students were among juniors, with 78 percent expressing their satisfaction with the academic advising. The number went up to 79 percent among seniors, 81 percent for freshmen and sophomores topped the list with 84 percent of them being pleased.

ASU departments have continually increased the number of advisers on staff due to the increase of student population, said Brenda Scheatzle, cross-college adviser for freshmen in the academic advising department.

The University now also sets aside the last two weeks in September and the first week in April as a priority advising period for freshmen.

"We like to help incoming freshmen choose a system so they register for classes that are transportable, classes they can get credit for under any major," Scheatzle said. "We deal with incoming freshmen, but we keep track of those without majors at least until their third year."

Why am I worn?
Roots and roots and leaves and dirt should get to know me. Why? Because I happen to be a distant cousin, the Air Terra Humana. Just because I've got an aggressive lug outsole, Air Max cushioning in the heel, a forefoot Air-Sole unit and a lovely protective fabric web doesn't mean they should feel jealous. Sure, I stomped on them tirelessly mile after mile, but isn't that what distant relatives are for?

Testimony continues in online porn case

By JOANN LOVIGLIO
ASSOCIATED PRESS

PHILADELPHIA — An Internet site operator who helps ill and disabled people who experience sexual dysfunction testified Thursday that he feared prosecution under a federal law aimed at keeping online pornography from children.

Mitchell Tepper's testimony came in the second day of a challenge by the American Civil Liberties Union against the Child Online Protection Act.

Tepper, a sexuality researcher for the University of Pennsylvania, operates the Sexual Health Network. He said many of his customers are too embarrassed to talk to their own doctors, and would be scared off if they had to register to use the site, as the law requires.

"I'm a shoestring operation operating out of my house," he said. "It would essentially put my home at jeopardy and close my business."

The law was signed by President Clinton in October but put on hold by a federal judge.

It is the second major effort by Congress to protect children using the Internet. The law would require commercial Web sites to collect a credit card number or some other access code as proof of age before allowing Internet users to view material deemed "harmful to minors."

Violators would face up to six months in jail and a $50,000 fine.

Supporters say the law is a sensible way to keep Internet pornography away from children. Unlike the Communications Decency Act of 1996, which the Supreme Court struck down on First Amendment grounds, the new law applies only to commercial sites.

The ACLU contends the law also violates the First Amendment and could be used to target homosexuals, AIDS activists, or doctors distributing gynecological information.

Cuban government vows to crack down on illegal alien smugglers

By ANITA SNOW
ASSOCIATED PRESS

HAVANA — Responding to a new wave of Cuban immigrants landing in south Florida, Cuba's communist government said Thursday it would crack down on alien smugglers who charge thousands of dollars for the journey across the Florida Straits.

"Unfortunately, there has been a notable increase recently" in alien smuggling from Cuba, Foreign Ministry spokesman Alejandro Gonzalez said at a weekly news conference.

"The illegal traffic of people is a dangerous, unscrupulous business... and Cuba intends to adopt the most severe measures against these people," he said.

In 1995, the United States halted a decades-old policy of accepting most Cuban refugees rescued at sea. That ended a mass exodus of refugees who set out in makeshift vessels to cross the 90 miles separating Cuba and Key West.

But authorities still accept refugees who make it to U.S.

soil, which has created a burgeoning industry for smugglers who charge refugees up to $8,000 and have boats that can outrun U.S. Coast Guard patrols.

South Florida has recently seen a surge in both Cuban and Haitian refugees wading ashore.

In the 12 months ending in September 1998, U.S. Border Patrol agents picked up about 1,200 refugees. They are now on pace to double that amount, detaining 600 since October.

Ninety-two refugees landed over the three-day weekend along the 120-mile stretch from Key West to Palm Beach. Since the start of the month, more than 150 have been picked up by Border Patrol agents.

Authorities attribute the increase to good weather and calm seas.

Two people were arrested and a boat was seized late Monday in Key West on suspicion of alien smuggling. Coast Guard agents also intercepted vessels carrying 14 Haitian refugees Monday night and eight Cubans the night before.

Report: Unplanned pregnancy, abortion, common worldwide

By BETH GARDINER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — More than a fifth of all pregnancies around the world end in abortion and unplanned pregnancy remains common, according to a report released Thursday.

Thirty-eight percent of the estimated 210 million pregnancies that occur each year are unintentional and 22 percent end in abortion, said a study by The Alan Guttmacher Institute, a research organization that receives some funding from Planned Parenthood.

About 35 of every 1,000 women of childbearing age have abortions each year, the report said. The rates are similar in the developed and developing countries, researchers concluded, although abortion laws are generally more restrictive in poorer nations.

Thirty-nine out of every 1,000 women of childbearing age reportedly have abortions each year in developed countries, compared to 34 per 1,000 in developing countries.

"The fact that the rate is that high in the developing world, where abortion is illegal, and therefore expensive or unsafe, it indicates to us how motivated women are" to get abortions, said Susheela Singh, the institute's director of research.

In developing countries that outlaw abortion or where it is widely unavailable, the mortality rate from complications of the procedure is far higher than in developed nations, 330 deaths per 100,000 abortions compared to between .2 and 1.2 per 100,000, researchers found.

In Africa, an estimated 680 of every 100,000 women who undergo an abortion die of complications, the study said.

About 26 million women have legal abortions worldwide each year, and about 20 million have illegal abortions, according to the report.

Eastern Europe had the highest rate of unplanned pregnancies and the highest abortion rate of any area of the world, 90 abortions per 1,000 women of childbearing age, the study said. Western Europe had the lowest abortion rate, 11 per 1,000 women, although its abortion laws are similar to those in Eastern Europe, according to the study.

Researchers said the disparity could be caused by the greater availability and use of contraceptives in the west.

The study found that 30 percent of all pregnancies in Africa were unplanned, as were 39 percent in eastern Asia excluding Japan, 34 percent in the rest of Asia, 52 percent in Latin America, 63 percent in Eastern Europe, 33 percent in the rest of Europe and 45 percent in North America, Australia, New Zealand and Japan.

The study's findings follow recent surveys that showed abortion and teenage pregnancy rates declining in the United States.

The U.S. abortion rate in 1995 and 1996 among women ages 15-44 was the lowest since 1975. Twenty-three of every 1,000 women of childbearing age had an abortion in 1995-96 compared to 22 per 1,000 in 1975, according to a Guttmacher study released in December. Twenty-three percent of all U.S. pregnancies end in abortion, the new study said.

Researchers attributed the high rates of unplanned pregnancy and abortion worldwide to inadequate availability and use of contraception.

Researchers compiled abortion statistics from surveys in 65 countries and used World Health Organization estimates for countries in which data was unavailable. They collected data on unplanned pregnancy from 49 countries and used local surveys to estimate rates for countries in which complete information was unavailable.

Worldwide abortion and unplanned pregnancy figures from previous years were unavailable.

Sun Devils' defense overwhelms Beavers

BY DOUG FLANAGAN
STATE PRESS

It wasn't pretty. In fact, at times, it was downright ugly — especially on offense.

But the ASU women's basketball team will certainly take its 57-53 home victory Thursday night against Oregon State.

"Hey, a win's a win," said Sun Devil center Rachel Holt, who had a game-high 17 points. "We needed to come back from a slow start, and we thought this would be a good opportunity."

ASU was able to emerge from the back-and-forth game thanks to its defense. Despite shooting 6 of 22 from the field in the second half, the Sun Devils actually outscored the Beavers by four.

"We did it with defense tonight," Sun Devil head coach Charli Turner Thorne said. "We focused on our defensive mentality in practice this week, because we know when it clicks in, we're going to blow people out."

The Sun Devils were especially stingy down the stretch — after allowing the Beavers to tie the score with 12:55 to play in the second half, ASU held Oregon State to just 12 points.

"The highlight was the end-of-game defense," she said, "which we didn't have at UofA. They didn't get any good looks or second shots. And that's good when the offense isn't there."

ASU held a 50-43 advantage with eight minutes left, but Oregon State started to feed the ball inside to its leading scorer, Sissel Pierce. She scored two of her team's next three buckets to cut the ASU lead to one, 50-49, with 4:45 to play, but for the remainder of the contest Pierce was shut down.

"They started going inside to Pierce on the hi-low," Turner Thorne said. "And we did a great job of adjusting and taking it away."

As for the poor shooting (ASU shot just 33 percent for the game), Turner Thorne said the Beavers played solid defense as well.

"We're not going to shoot this poorly too often," Turner Thorne said. "But you have to give credit to Oregon State's defense. They did a good job of mixing it up."

Besides defense, a key to the victory was the reduced number of turnovers ASU committed. On Jan. 7 in Seattle, the Sun Devils turned the ball over 39 times in a blowout loss. On Thursday, ASU turned the ball over just 19 times.

"Coach really emphasized taking care of the ball," said guard Leaf Newman, who had 12 points. "She's making us run for turnovers now, so she's getting us to think about it."

"We're making better decisions," Turner Thorne added. "We're still not where we need to be, but holding it under 20 is a plus."

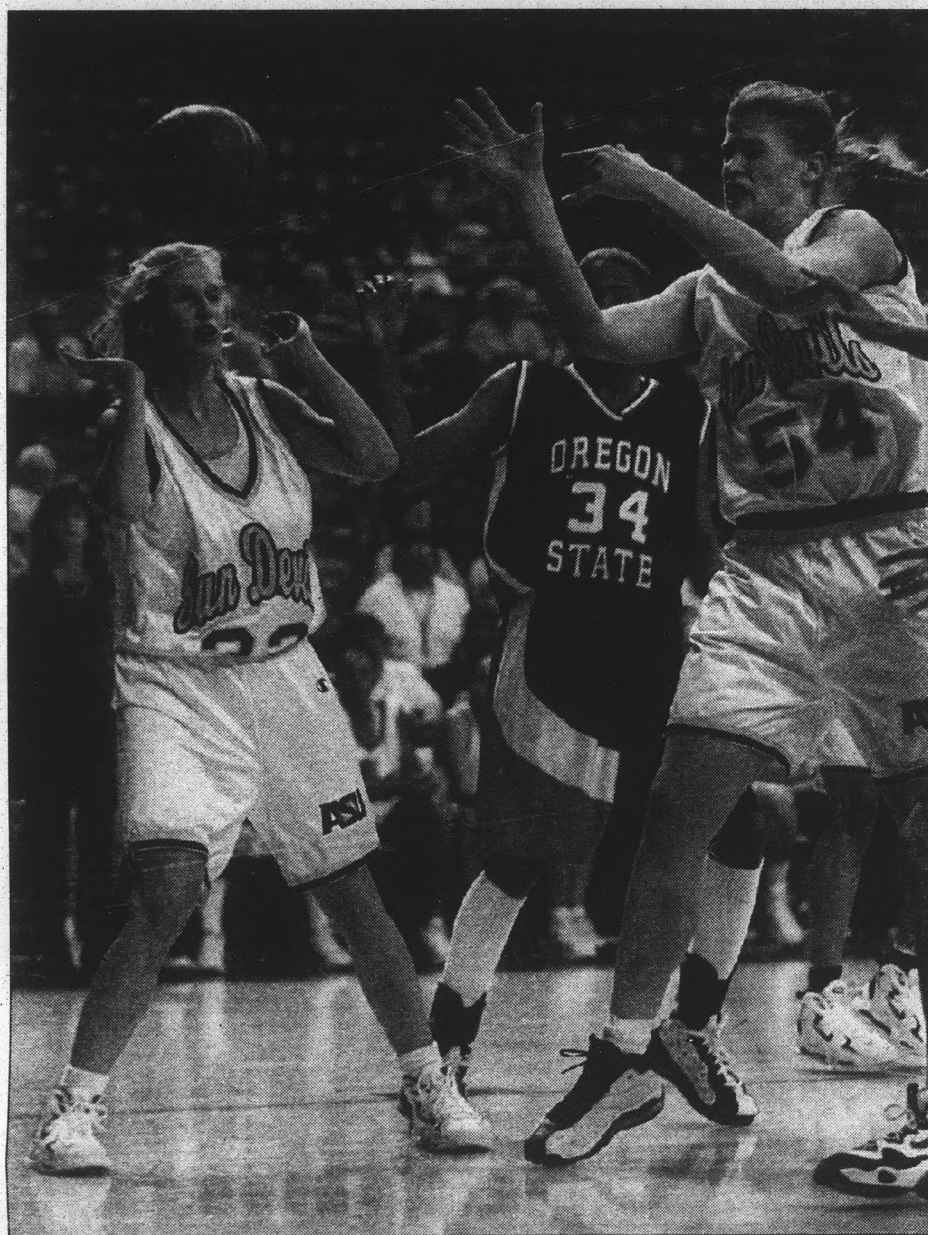

It appeared as if ASU would continue to bomb away from the outside, as it had against UofA on Saturday as Leaf Newman hit a pair of threes within a minute and a half. Her second, coming with 14:57 remaining in the first half, gave ASU a 14-8 lead.

However, the Beavers ripped off an 11-2 run that was capped by Pierce's two free throws that drew the Beavers even — for the first time since the opening tip — at 29. The teams went into the locker rooms tied at 31.

Turner Thorne said the fact that her team fought off two separate Oregon State comebacks is a sign they are maturing.

"At times, we showed great resiliency," Turner Thorne said. "It's great to fight back and win the game even though you let the team back in it. Now the next step is to always believe, never quit, and do it every time."

ASU center Rachel Holt (54) attempts to pass to point guard Natalie Tucker in Thursday's 57-53 win over Oregon State as Beaver Felicia Ragland looks on. ASU was able to, despite shooting just 6 of 22 in the second half, outscore Oregon State by four to pick up its second conference victory.

Beavers beat ASU 81-51

From Staff Reports

Deandra Tanner had 18 points, five rebounds and five assists as the Oregon State men's basketball team improved to 8-0 at home with an 81-51 blowout victory over the Sun Devils.

Going against the Pac-10's best field goal defense, ASU struggled badly from the field. After shooting 29 percent in the first half, ASU went into halftime trailing by nine, 33-24, and never recovered. The Beavers used a 10-0 run late in the first half to build the lead.

ASU's Alton Mason, who didn't travel to Corvallis with the team on Wednesday, made the flight on Thursday and played, but ASU was without guard Derrick Davis, who was academically ineligible. His situation will be reviewed following the weekend.

Oregon State had five players (Tanner, Adam Masten, Jason Heide, Clifton Jones and Ramunas Petraitis) score in double figures.

The Sun Devils now travel to Eugene where they'll face the Oregon Ducks, who lost to UofA 85-83 Thursday.

ASU not taking Vulcans lightly

BY PERCY EDNALINO
STATE PRESS

Sure, the ASU baseball team is expected to win this weekend's series against the University of Hawaii-Hilo.

But that doesn't mean Sun Devil players and coaches are going to take the Vulcans lightly.

Coming off a three-game series sweep over the University of Utah, the Sun Devils (3-0) aren't looking at the trip to Hawaii-Hilo as just a chance to work on tans and hone their surfing skills.

Third baseman Andrew Beinbrink said playing a team — a team the Sun Devils are supposed to easily beat like the Vulcans — is just as challenging as facing a traditional powerhouse like Florida State.

"It's a lot easier to get up for a Florida State series than it is for a Hawaii-Hilo series," he said. "Florida State has great baseball tradition like we do. They always field a great team. It's more of a challenge for us to play a team such as Hilo because it takes a lot of discipline to play at your best against a team that isn't supposed to give you much competition."

And how. Last season, ASU earned a four-game sweep over the Vulcans in Hawaii. The Sun Devils own a 6-0 lead in the all-time series between the two teams.

The Vulcans (3-3) opened this season by dropping the first three games of a six-game series at home against Sonoma State University. Left-handed pitcher Thomas Ford returns as the Vulcans' staff ace while right-hander Pat Lynch is stroking the bat at a .385 pace with two doubles. Designated hitter Paul Yap is hitting at a .353 clip with a triple.

"We're ready to get started," pitcher Chuck Crumpton said. "It seems early, but we're ready to go and we've worked really hard."

And how. Beinbrink said the Hawaii-Hilo series will be a good chance for team members to work out any weaknesses. He added that staying focused will be a key to ASU wins.

"Our goal is to go in there and win every game," he said. "That's what we want to do, that's what we expect, and that's what we plan on doing."

Andrew Beinbrink and the rest of the Sun Devils travel to Hawaii-Hilo for a five-game series which includes a doubleheader on Saturday.

Ice Devils to clash against bitter rivals

BY CLINT CURRIE
STATE PRESS

The ASU ice hockey team went through a dismal winter break in which it didn't win a single game. With a 4-9-2 record one may ask, "What's left?"

But ask an ASU athlete in any sport and they'll tell you the answer: Beat UofA.

"UofA is all we have left," goalie Greg Powers said. "For us seniors, we look forward to every game, but UofA is our national championship right now."

The games against the Icecats are 2 p.m. Saturday and Sunday at Veterans Memorial Coliseum.

The Sun Devils were eliminated from contention for the American Collegiate Hockey Championship tournament over the winter break with losses to Delaware, top-ranked Penn State and Life University.

Only the top ten teams in the ACHA are invited to the national tournament in Delaware. ASU is ranked No. 14, but is expected to slip when the new rankings are released later today.

"We've lost a lot of tight games this year," head coach Gene Hammett said. "We expected to struggle a little bit with all the players we lost from last year."

"We've been in every game in the third period," Powers said. "We could be undefeated right now."

In contrast, the Icecats are playing efficient hockey this year, holding on to a No. 5 ranking and a 12-3-1 record. The Icecats have been to the national tournament 15 years running, dating back to 1984, the last year they won the championship.

The Sun Devils' last game, against Life University, ended in a 6-6 tie. Center Nils Soderstrom scored four goals and assisted on the other two. The Gretzky-like player scored what appeared to be the game winning goal in overtime, but the referee did not allow the goal because the net was dislodged.

The Icecats could use a few wins before they embark on a seven game trip away from Arizona, but for the Sun Devils? They couldn't use a few wins, but they sure would love them.

"We want a big win," defenseman Gordon Hester said. "I want every guy on the team to show up and play hard. For a lot of guys, that's all that is left — beating UofA."

Hester's challenge for every player to play hard is desperately needed, especially on the defensive end, for ASU to sweep UofA. Powers was on the All-American third team last year, and has .912 save percentage this year.

He has faced over 50 shots each of his last four games. In comparison, the shot-per-game average in the NHL is about 25.

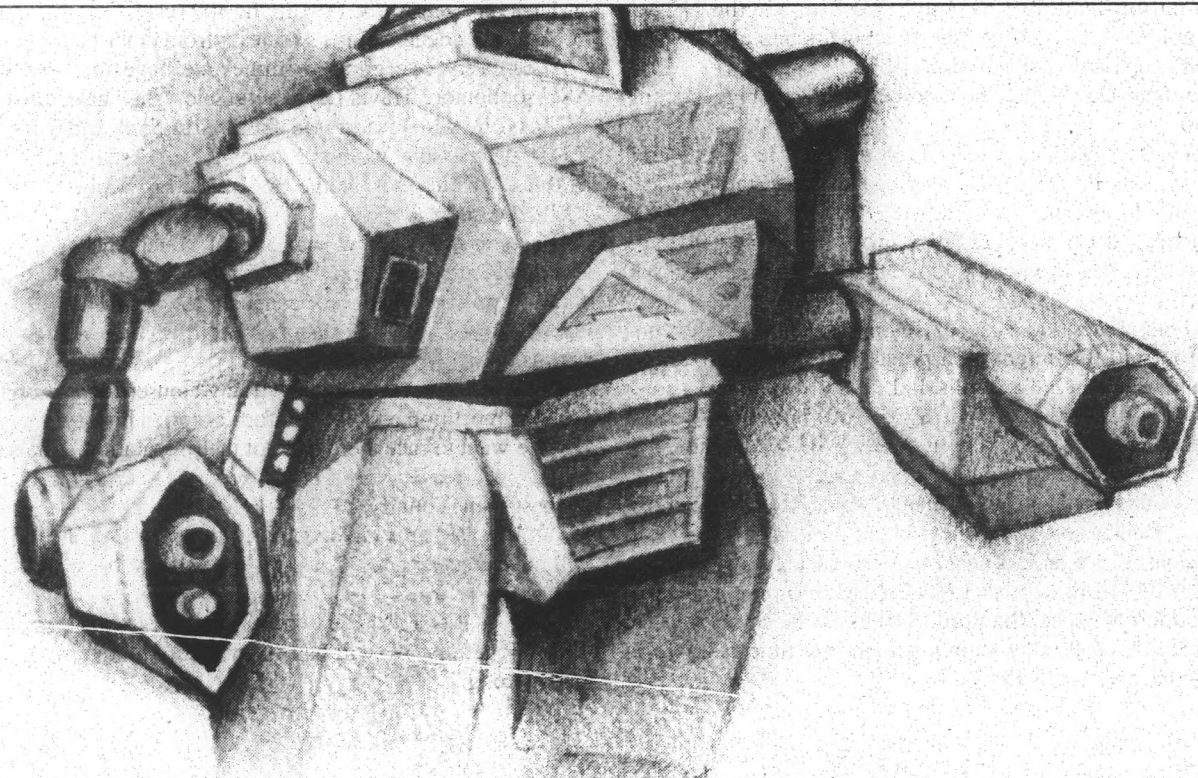

This isn't the first time the rivals have faced each other this season — they played two games in December. Both were close, hard-nosed games in which UofA won in the final period. The games were both in Tucson, known over the ACHA as a difficult place to play. The Icecats routinely draw crowds of 4-5 thousand at the Tucson Convention Center, and the officiating seems to fall in UofA's favor.

"The crowd down there is hostile and the officiating is a little slanted," Hammett said. "It's probably a goal or two advantage."

The home ice advantage will swing to ASU this weekend. The Icecats will see a rowdy ASU crowd at Veterans Memorial Coliseum.

"We need students to come out to this one and show UofA what kind of crowd we have," Hester said.

Also in ASU's favor: UofA is coming off a 6-5 home ice loss to No. 6 Towson last Saturday. After the Towson game, UofA head coach Leo Golembiewski said, "We're not playing the style of hockey we need to play right now."

Raw advice for real problems that (some) ASU students face every day.

My roommate and her boyfriend are loud. Lots of moaning and groaning, squeaking, etc. They go at it every night. You can imagine the kind of problems I have trying to sleep or getting work done. How can I make them shut up?

Insomniac

Chances are your Babs Bunny roommate and her Bugs Bunny boyfriend, are going to continue their loud love making ways. There are a few things you can do. Communicate with your roommate that you need your rest so that you can concentrate on things. Like school. You could buy itching powder and "accidentally" spill some on her bed (my personal favorite). But if all else fails, and you can't beat 'em, go to one of the clubs here in Tempe, find an Energizer Bunny of your own and go ahead and join 'em. You can keep going, and going, and goin...

Next Caller Please.

I have a lot of girls as friends. They call a lot and that makes my girl friend jealous-

In Love

I'm going to stop you right there because you need a refresher course in English. But lets just say that you really are an intelligent human being. First of all, guys don't have girls as friends. The girls that you consider friends are simply girls you haven't slept with and are trying to. Considering your intelligence, which is evident in your writing style, your girlfriend has reason to be jealous. But if you truly are in love, show her that fact with objects of affection. For the laymen, pluck a daisy out of a field and give it to her (stupid people make me sick).

Next.

I came to ASU to meet hot chicks. Where are they?

SWM

What the hell? Are you blind? Let me guess, you're a Mill Rat and the only female specimen you encounter are the kind who think that jumping in the Salt River counts as one of four annual bathings. "Hot chicks" literally grow on trees around here. We have a Rock climbing team. But let me be your tour guide into where to meet the centerfold of your dreams. The way I see it, there are three types of girls. There's the girls you just want to jump. There's chicks you want to take out from time to time as a trophy. And eventually, there's a wife.

For the most part you don't have to spend much. Just pay a $7-$10 dollar cover at either Pompeii or Club 411, use a lousy make love line like, "I bet you 50 bucks I can ram your head through my head board", and you're all set. Meet a date at Mill Ave Cue Club, Palapa, or any one ASU's post-prohibition establishments. There you can actually chitchat and converse with a girl more so than a dance club. They're too loud. But, if and when you settle down and matrimony starts biting you in the ass (or your mother nags for grandkids), you will have no problem meeting a wife in class. I have at least 15 future wives in every one of my classes. I can see my unborn children in their eyes. So pick what you want at this stage in life, and happy hunting.

Sixth-ranked Sun Devils ready for challenge

By CHRIS CARLOCK
STATE PRESS

You would think a team that had only two seniors and 10 of its 16 performers being underclassmen would find themselves in the process of rebuilding. But if four of the returners were All-Americans, the team probably wouldn't know what the word rebuilding meant.

That is the case for the ASU gymnastics team this season.

The Sun Devils came into this season ranked sixth in the nation and did nothing to hurt their status with a dramatic victory last Friday night against No. 8 Washington.

ASU is coming off a sixth place finish at the NCAA Championships last year and a second place finish the year before.

The Sun Devils have won eight of their last nine meets and 13 consecutive at home dating back to last season.

So everything is hunky-dory, right?

Well, not exactly.

ASU is without senior All-American Lisa Vincijanovic and junior All-American Amy Shelton. Shelton should be back in four weeks after hurting her elbow prior to last Friday's meet. But the status of Vincijanovic is up in the air and no return date has been set.

Can the Sun Devils keep winning without two key people?

"We did pretty spectacular last meet," assistant coach Kristen Smyth said confidently. "One of our biggest strengths is we have so much depth."

Senior co-captain Wendy Ellsberry and junior All-Americans Elizabeth McNabb and Elizabeth Reid are going to be counted on heavily to provide high scores and leadership.

McNabb and Reid showed last Friday they're ready to do whatever is asked of them to keep ASU in the gymnastic elite. Reid outscored everyone in the vault and uneven bars while McNabb topped the field in both the balance beam and the floor exercise.

If the Sun Devils are going to stay in the forefront of college gymnastics they're going to need help from everyone else as well.

The bulk of the team is freshmen, so the Sun Devils are counting on them to help with the load immediately.

"It's nice to have seven of them because they have each other to lean on," Smyth said.

After the team's last two fantastic finishes in the NAAs, expectations are obviously high. But the coaches think everything will take care of itself if the Sun Devils can stick to a simple plan.

"We just want to reach the end of the season healthy," Smyth said. "We train a certain way so that we'll be peaking at regionals (April 9-10). If we stay consistent and healthy then we can compete with anybody."

ASU continues its quest toward a healthy and productive season at 7:30 p.m. tonight at Wells Fargo Arena where they'll take on UC Santa Barbara. The Sun Devils are 4-0 lifetime against the Gauchos.

Junior All-American Elizabeth McNabb is being counted on to provide balance for ASU gymnastics.

Swimming and diving teams welcome challenge of No. 1 Stanford

By JOE MANTONE
STATE PRESS

A surprise win over the defending national champion and top-ranked Stanford swimming and diving teams Saturday would surprise nobody more than the Sun Devils themselves.

"Realistically, you can't expect to beat them," men's and women's ASU head coach Michael Chasson said. "We just have to go in and see what races we can win. If we can't win, then (we'll) see if we can get second."

Before the Sun Devil teams take on the nation's top-ranked teams, they swim against another Pac-10 top-10 foe, Cal, Friday at 2 p.m. at the Mona Plummer Aquatic Center.

Last year the women's team dropped its meet to the Bears 192-109. This year the sixth-ranked Cal. club should be just as tough.

The men's contest a year ago with the Bears proved to be the ASU's closet meet all season. The Sun Devils lost 124-122. Today, Cal comes to ASU as the nation's eight-ranked team.

While a victory seems unlikely for the Sun Devils' 10th ranked men's team (3-2) and the No. 20 women's team (5-2-1) over the Cardinal, the 11 a.m. meet at the Mona Plummer Aquatic Center could pose some interesting matchups.

ASU senior Francisco Sanchez should be completely healed after having pink eye in both eyes and an ear infection in both ears.

Sanchez's times were among the nation's leaders before the break. At the Texas Invitational on Dec. 6, Sanchez set the meet record twice in the 100-yard freestyle with a 42.95. That nation-leading time qualified him for the NCAA Championships. At the same meet, Sanchez also set the nation's top mark in the 50 free (19.55).

Cardinal Dod Wales looks to be Sanchez's biggest competition.

"Wales is their big gun," Chasson said. "He swims similar events as Francisco. Depending on what Stanford does with him, I think they can compete in an event or two."

In the Cardinals' 123-74 win over Pacific (9-3) on Tuesday, Wales swam a 48.90 in an exhibition race, the 100 butterfly.

If both Wales and Sanchez swim in the freestyle events, Chasson said this might be a preview of the March 25-27, championships in Indianapolis, Ind.

"They could be fighting it out in the NCAA Championship 100 free," the first-year ASU coach said.

Another event that could be close is the 400-medley relay.

The Sun Devils' team of Pablo Abal, Scott VonSchoff, Simon MacDonald and Sanchez set their best mark at the Texas Invitational (3:15.71). UofA, the only other team in the nation to better ASU's mark, swam a 3:14.44 at the same meet.

But do not expect Stanford (5-0) to not be competitive in this race. Its 400 relay team's season-low time ranks third best in the country (3:15.87).

"Historically, Stanford has been very good in that event," Chasson said. The Cardinal has won the Pacific-10 championship every year since 1991 in the 400 relay.

Stanford's deep roster separates it from other teams.

"For every one good swimmer we have in an event," ASU sophomore Travis Leyenhorst said, "they have three."

Chasson, who graduated from Stanford and was the Cardinals' assistant women's coach for three seasons, will be at the opposite ends of the pool with his former mentor, Richard Quick.

Chasson and Quick won a national championship in 1989, and they finished second each of the next two years. Quick — now in his tenth year of coaching the Stanford women's team (3-1) — sports six national title rings and nine Pac-10 crowns.

But ASU senior co-captain Tiffany Houser focuses on the actual competition and not Stanford's storied history.

"We want to race them and not their reputation," she said. "This is the reason why I came to ASU — to swim against the best in the country."

"I'm excited about it, and I know the other girls are too."

If the meet excites Chasson, it can only be seen in his modest goals.

"Our goal is too have some great races with them," he said. "Hopefully, we will have some people step up and race really strong."

Depth, experience strengths for women's tennis squad

BY ROBERT DEAL
STATE PRESS

Despite the loss of four-time All-American Reka Cseresnyes, team depth seems to be the key to continuing the winning tradition of ASU's women's tennis squad. With players in every class, experience combines with new talent, producing a team that will continue to be a national contender.

"We've got a strong, deep team all around," head coach Sheila McInerney said, "with a lot of players that could step up to and play in the top positions."

The team will kick off its regular season on Sunday (noon at the Whiteman Tennis Center) against 29th-ranked New Mexico. The Lobos have a very experienced and practiced team who return all but one of last year's players.

The Lobos are led by senior Joanne Shortall, the 34th-ranked player in the nation, and junior Ana Friganovic, ranked 37th.

"(New Mexico) is a really great team," McInerney said. "Their number one (Friganovic) beat our four-time All-American (Cseresnyes) in the championship finals last year.

"It's tough to kick off a season against a team like this, but the kids know that. We have no gimmies this season."

The Sun Devils will be led by sophomore Karin Palme, who comes off of an impressive 17-7 singles record last season which led to her 29th-place ranking and NCAA Singles Championship Tournament berth.

Also ready to step up to fill the shoes of the top positions is freshman Allison Bradshaw. Finishing high school ranked sixth in the nation, Bradshaw will be a healthy new addition to the team.

"She (Bradshaw) looks really good right now," McInerney said, "and could very well move up to the top spot before the season is out."

Bradshaw teams up with senior Katy Propstra to form ASU's top doubles team. The duo has a 5-2 pre-season record and goes into the regular season ranked 17th in the nation.

"This team's got a lot of power and persistence," Propstra said, "which will help us when we come up against the really tough competition."

The team's other senior, Allison Nash, comes into the season ranked 89th in the nation. Playing at the number three spot last year, Nash has both the experience and skills needed to be a dominant team leader, both physically and emotionally.

ASU senior Karin Palme will lead the Sun Devil women's tennis team into action on Sunday against New Mexico State. Palme went 17-7 in singles play last year.

"There is a lot of good team unity," Nash said. "We all get along really well and are good friends."

On the doubles court, Nash pairs up with sophomore Celena McCoury. The tandem finished last year with a bid to the NCAA Championship where they advanced to the field of 32.

"The competition is really hard," McCoury said, "but its a good thing in the long run, because it's the thing that makes us get better." The team has a very difficult schedule, going against seven top ten teams and only one unranked team.

"It's really tough being ranked so high in the nation, but still having (three) teams ahead of you in the Pac(-10) alone," assistant coach Paul Reber said. "You just have to be tough and never let your guard down."
