Derogatory message leads to resolution

BY STEPHANIE PATERIK
STATE PRESS

Associated Students of ASU is taking a stance against harassment on campus after a student discovered an offensive document saved on one of their computers.

The document spurred the ASASU Executive Committee to pass a zero-tolerance resolution Thursday, and a similar senate resolution will be proposed on Feb. 2.

Dale Noonkester, a women's studies senior, found the document while writing a term paper at ASASU's public relations computer in December. The derogatory document was saved as "Sensitivity Training 101" and contained offensive comments about ethnicity, gender, religion and sexual orientation.

"I was horrified to find such a horrible and hateful document," Noonkester said. "It blatantly attacked so many groups of people."

She printed out the document and filed a complaint with the department of Student Life on Jan. 6.

Paul Frost, ASASU president, said they do not know who wrote the document but believe it was someone within ASASU.

"Given the time of day that (the document) was created, we think it was probably a staff member or officer of ASASU," he said. "I'm very disappointed that something like this was created in ASASU's office area. We're taking all the rigorous steps we can to combat this type of ideology."

Noonkester, who chairs ASU's Women's Coalition, said she thinks the document was a backlash to sensitivity training that several officers had to take last semester. But she said she is pleased with how the University has handled the incident.

Robert Soza, interim dean of Student Life, said the University's focus is to address the issue instead of tracking down the creator of the document.

"It would be very hard to find the par-

Students respond to Clinton's trial

BY JODIE LAU
STATE PRESS

While the U.S. Senate continues debating the need for witnesses at President Bill Clinton's impeachment trial, Arizona approval ratings for the president reached 47 percent this week, the highest rating since April, according to a recent survey.

For some ASU student the ratings are not surprising.

Bonnie Irvine, a French graduate student, said she believes Clinton's favorable ratings are a result of his trial.

"The public is tired," Irvine said. "That's why his approval rating is so high."

Irvine added the nation is focusing on the wrong subject.

"There are more important issues to look at," she said.

She suggested that more work could be done "if Congress and the president were working together and not against each other."

But Kenneth Goldstein, an assistant professor in political science, said the trial is unique.

"This is not your normal trial," Goldstein said. "It's pure politics."

Pearl Filani, a marketing junior, agreed.

"It's not so much more about justice anymore," she said. "It's like, we want him out and we want him out no matter how. It's down to who has the power, the president or Congress."

An attempt to dismiss charges and end the trial was introduced in a motion Monday. However, prosecutors argued the trial should not end without calling witnesses. House managers interviewed former White House intern Monica Lewinsky on Sunday as a potential witness.

Despite Clinton's favorable rating, many students said they've heard enough about the Clinton trial and Lewinsky's role in it.

"The idea of hearing Monica Lewinsky makes me want to throw-up," Irvine said.

Christine Steward, a literature graduate student, said calling Lewinsky as a witness is "insane."

"She already went through everything, detail by detail," Steward said. "It's just unnecessary."

Senate Democrats said that bringing witnesses again would extend the trial. Republicans already voted against a plan that would have brought the trial to an end on Friday without witnesses.

"They need to make it flow as quickly as possible," Irvine said.

Michelle Fierro, a psychology freshman, said that too much money and time is going into this trial.

"They should leave him alone. It's none of our business," she said.

"I just didn't need to know all the details of what Monica and Bill did," Steward said.

Filani said the trial is making the United States look bad. "It shouldn't have to spread across the entire world for the whole world to know," she said.

Steward said she believed that people in other countries "aren't laughing at Clinton, but at how the people (in the States) are reacting."

"I really think it's an embarrassment to our country," she added.

"He's a nice guy that made mistakes," Filani said. "Unfortunately, his mistakes were put up in front of the whole world."

Attorney General Janet Napolitano to speak at Women of Color lunch

BY CARRIE
SEVERSON
STATE PRESS

Janet Napolitano, the first woman elected as Arizona Attorney General, will be speaking Wednesday at an ASU luncheon dedicated to women in leadership positions.

The luncheon, held at noon in the Memorial Union Ventana Room, is hosted by two ASU organizations — the Faculty Womens Association and Sister Friends: African American Women of ASU.

"Napolitano was asked to speak because of all the accomplishment in her career," said Toni-Marie Montgomery, president of the association.

Napolitano, whose speech is entitled "Creating and Capitalizing on Opportunities," began serving her term as Arizona's first female attorney general this month after being elected in November.

She brings to the post more than four years of experience as the Arizona U.S. Attorney. There, she managed more than 6,000 criminal cases, more than any other U.S. Attorney in Arizona history.

Napolitano also increased the number of prosecutions in the U.S. Attorney's Office by 160 percent during her tenure there.

Wednesday's luncheon, the Sixth Annual Women of Color Luncheon, will be part of ASU's Martin Luther King Jr. Celebration Week, which runs through Thursday. More than 100 people are expected to attend the event.

The Faculty Womens Association supports academic women employed at ASU. Sister Friends is made up of ASU's African-American faculty and staff women.

"We are sticking with the vain women in leadership role," Montgomery said.

ASASU will also send five members of the executive committee every year to Leadership

Settlement expected for reservation's water rights

MESA, Ariz. (AP) — A settlement is near in the Gila River Indian Community's water rights claim, negotiators say.

The long-awaited agreement would give Phoenix area cities more information on how to implement long-term water plans.

During years of disagreement over how much the Maricopa County tribe should get from the Central Arizona Project, cities' bids for portions of the CAP's unallocated supply have been put on hold.

"I think we're on the verge of an agreement," said Rod Lewis, attorney for the tribe.

Sen. Jon Kyl, R-Ariz., said he expects settlement terms to be pinned down a few weeks after negotiators meet in Washington this week.

Kyl and Lewis said some progress toward agreement

“ I think we're on the verge of an agreement. ”

Rod Lewis
Attorney for Gila River
Indian Community

has come from increased estimates of how quickly the tribe's underground water supply gets replenished.

More underground water available each year would mean less Colorado River water from the CAP is needed to meet the tribe's needs.

Meanwhile, construction began this month on a massive irrigation system to turn 146,330 acres of the Gila River community into farmland. That equals about 15 percent of all the irrigated acreage now being farmed statewide.

The tribe's water claims have been held up in litigation for years, casting an element of uncertainty in the long-term water plans for other areas.

"The Gila River Indian Community claim is large enough to put into limbo a whole lot of future water planning for other cities," said Grady Gammage Jr., president of the board that runs CAP.

Scottsdale, Mesa, and Chandler are among the cities seeking part of the CAP's unallocated flow.

Kyl said he expects up to half of the tribe's eventual water supply to be marketed to the cities. Marketing rules are one element in the settlement talks.

Futile search for local woman's body over, charges may be filed

BY ALICIA A. CALDWELL
STATE PRESS

After 59 days of sifting through nearly 8,000 tons of garbage, Tempe police investigators are still without the body of 49-year-old Cookie Jacobson.

The search was concluded Monday morning just before 11 a.m. as officers pushed rakes through the final section of garbage initially believed to be Jacobson's final resting place.

There was a sense of accomplishment as officers finished a job that started nearly three months ago, but it was tainted with disappointment, said Sgt. Chuck Schoville, Tempe police gang squad. He added that while officers were happy to conclude that search, they wish the outcome had been different.

Det. Michael Blanchard, Tempe police gang squad, said he and other officers will leave this search effort a little disappointed and sad.

Although a body has never been recovered from two previous landfill searches, one in Florida and the second in Phoenix, Blanchard said the search was "something that was necessary."

"I think that everyone here had a sense that this needed to be done," he said. "It was the right thing to do."

Laura Fulginetti, a forensic anthropologist, who helped with the Phoenix Police Department landfill search for a body, said, if needed she would help again, even knowing that the chances of finding a body are slim.

"I don't think that it's right that someone can throw away their loved one and no one will care," Fulginetti said.

Lt. Laura Forbes, Tempe police project manager for the search, said she hopes that the Tempe effort will send a message to people in the community that someone will care if a person disappears and hopes it will deter any future would-be body dumpers.

Schoville said everyone involved in the search was very confident that Jacobson's body, a key piece of evidence in the case, was not in the trash they searched.

"I am 100 percent confident that she was not in the trash we searched," Schoville said. He added that just because her body was not found does not mean that it was not in the landfill.

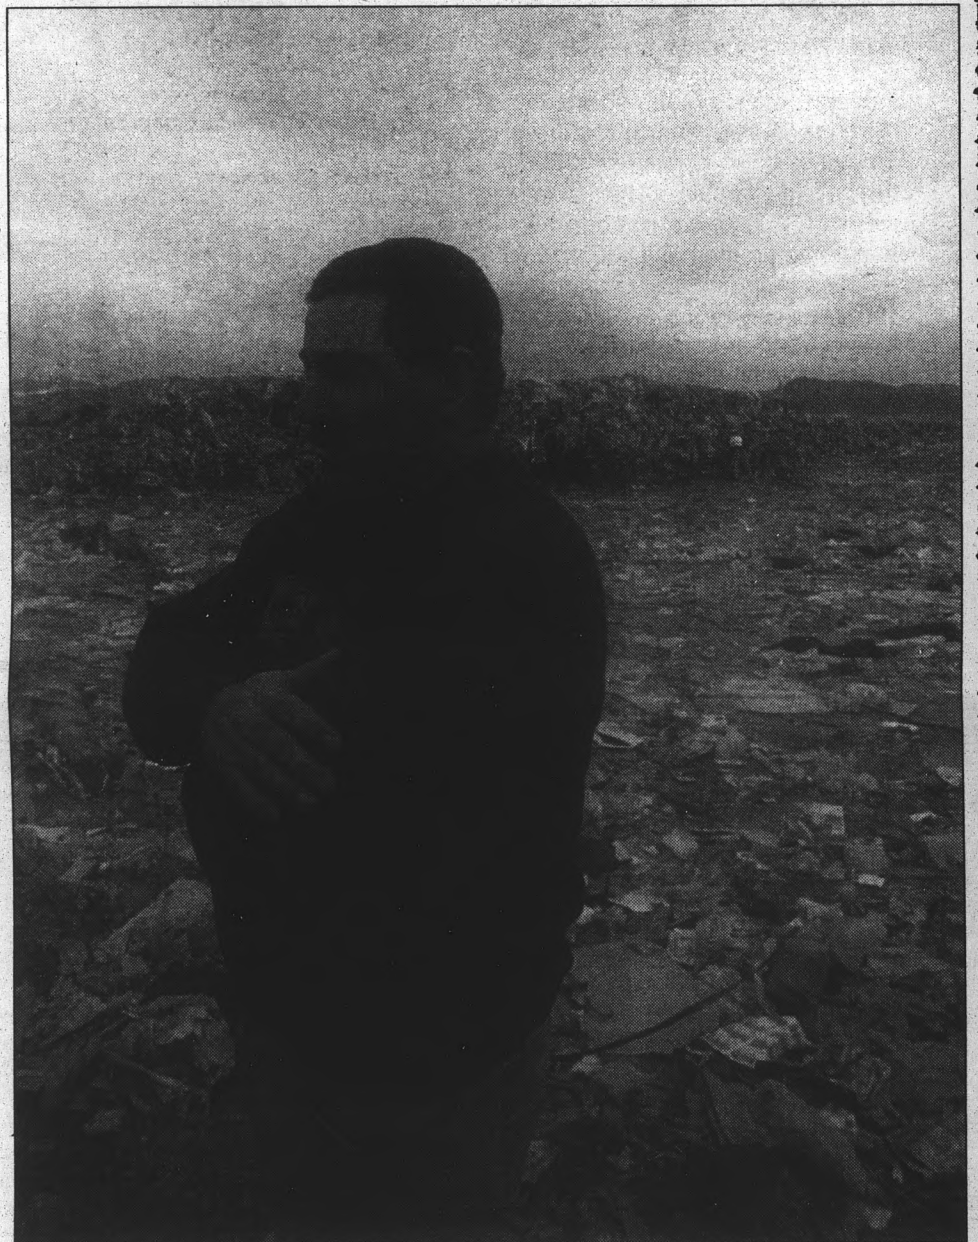

Forbes said it is possible that Jacobson's body was just beyond the trash cells officers searched. She said while people may question why the officers are not searching further, they set the perimeters of the search and need to stick to them.

"Landfills are not an exact science," Forbes said. She said because of the record keeping of Waste Management, investigators determined which cells could have contained the body, but there is always room for second guessing.

Forbes and Sgt. David Lind, spokesperson for the Tempe Police Department, said there is a remote possibility that Jacobson's body was taken to the Northwest Region Landfill near Surprise. However Tempe police will not be searching that area.

"Based on our numbers, it is remote (that Jacobson's body is there)," Don Cassano, Waste Management community relations manager.

Lind said that despite not having a body, investigators will submit what evidence they do have to the County Attorney's office. He said that officers will decide whether or not to charge the Jacobson children, 16-year-old Aaron and 13-year-old Laura, with their mother's murder.

Schoville said he only had one regret about the time he spent in the Butterfield landfill. "...I promised Gary O'Neill (Cookie's brother who visited the landfill in November) that we would find her and we didn't," he said. "If I ever see him again I'll apologize."

Donating to charities made easier through paying bills

BY GANGA SUBRAMANIAN
STATE PRESS

Starting February, Tempe residents will have the option of paying an extra dollar on their water and sanitation bills to aid various non-profit organizations.

The Tempe Municipal Services Statement will automatically add a dollar to the total of every utility bill, Beth Fiorenza, management assistant at the Tempe Community Council said. The proceeds, through the newly expanded Help to Others program, will benefit causes like the prevention of homelessness, strengthening families, support for victims of abuse or positive alternatives for youth.

The funds raised through the Tempe program will be used to support human services agencies like the Tempe Community Action Agency, the Boys & Girls Club, and the YMCA.

However, residents have the option of paying just the utility dues without contributing to the program, Fiorenza added.

"The objective is to expand community philanthropy," Fiorenza said.

Based on a projected target of 20 percent of households participating in the program, Tempe hopes to raise $136,000 annually including the match funds, she added.

Tempe follows other Valley cities, like Scottsdale and Glendale, that already have similar programs in place. Scottsdale's program, called Scottsdale Cares, has been in place for five years now, she said.

Fiorenza said Scottsdale raises $300,000 annually, including the match by The Arizona Republic Charities.

Tempe's program will kick-off by the second week of February. Every dollar contributed to the program will be matched by a 60 cents contribution from the organization, a fund of the Robert R. McCormick Tribune Foundation.

The donations made by citizens are tax-deductible. And, residents can also contribute more than one dollar to the program, Fiorenza said.

Although the Help to Others program is a couple of years old, Fiorenza said, the earlier version required residents to formally sign up for the program and, the proceeds were used to help the needy with their utility bills. In the expanded program, the donations will show up on the utility bill itself and the proceeds will benefit a wider range of projects, she added.

The expanded program was approved September by the Tempe City Council.

Donations of more than one dollar should be mailed to: Tempe's Help to Others, City of Tempe Customer Service Department, 20 E. Sixth Street, Tempe AZ 85281.

Corporate chains forget the little guy

Good-bye Floyd's Barber Shop.
Hello Supercuts.
So long Sam's Television and appliances.
Hi, Best Buy and Circuit City.
Long gone are the days of the mom and pop store when regular customers could expect to be greeted on a first name basis.

In an economy dominated by category killers and mega stores, we can forget walking into stores nowadays and being treated like people.

This has become a society run by people who have become slaves to a consumer-oriented, fast-food society. People are forced to work menial jobs with very little compensation and, as a result, have little interest in the quality of their work.

The truth is that most, if not all of us, have horror stories of being treated as a number in a larger picture of the consumption game — situations where we go in, slap our money down on the counter for a product and are met with a behavior that is, dare I say hostile, from an employee.

And even if you do complain, it is likely that there is nothing anyone will do about the insolent, little...well, you get the picture.

You see, the Blockbuster Video chains, Burger Kings, and Footlockers are so big, they know that if they lose a customer here or there, it really won't do much to hurt their business. Corporate chains don't need you. They've got the millions of other mall and fast food-addicted Americans to blow off.

The point of this is that corporate America has lost touch with the very source that keeps them alive—the customers. And, let's face it, what are we going to do about it—not buy anything anymore?

We all have to consume in order to take part of the massive rat race we call civilization and that is practically impossible to do without being capitalists in a capitalistic society, and John Q. Salesman knows this and he doesn't care one bit about you or me. Thus, down the toilet customer service goes.

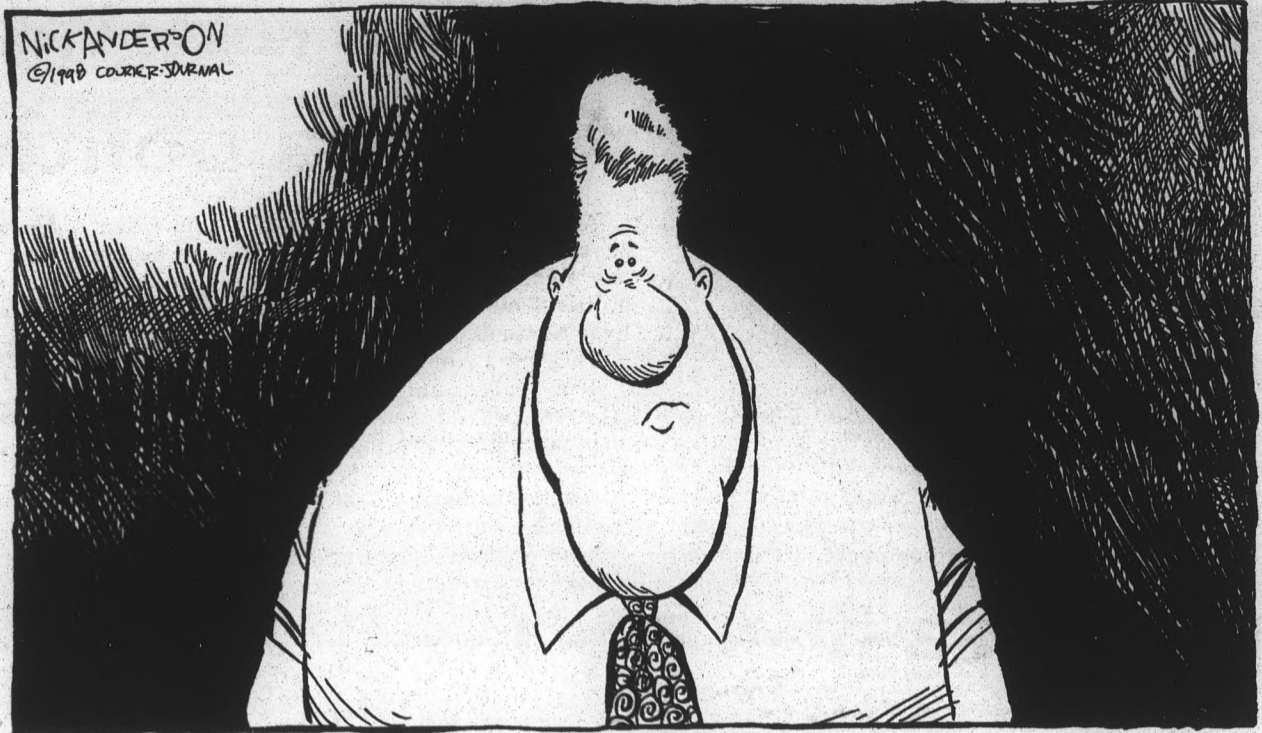

So what should we do about this?
Throw out your Nikes, take that slice of Domino's pizza out of your mouth, throw away your television set, and move to the backwoods of Tennessee.

Or we can simply start using the best assets God has endowed us with — our mouths and our compulsive need to bitch.

The problem, my friends, is not the high schooler at the AMC Theater that punches your tickets for $5.35 an hour. Don't be mad at our pimply-faced counterpart when he gives you attitude. The problem is what we folks on the lower end of the food chain affectionately refer to as "the man."

The man is is the bid that we need to nip, folks. We need to let the man know that we're pissed as hell and we're not having it anymore.

The bottom line is that if we all raise our voices high enough, and aren't afraid of maybe looking like a jerk in front of a couple of strangers, we might be able to go to our local movie theater or burger restaurant and get someone who at least appreciates that we're handing over our scarcely available dollar bills for their product and we demand a little respect.

The CASE against DR. SPOCK

Impeachment is about perjury

The impeachment trial of President Clinton is approaching endgame in the Senate. Since this yearlong saga may be over by the end of the week, now would be a good time to tackle a subject that will soon be behind us.

Scott D. Gillette
columnist

Yesterday, the State Press editorial about the impeachment trial proclaimed that "we are in the business of defending the right of all citizens, president or not, to lead private lives." Wrong.

This statement is indicative of the chronic distortion and misunderstanding of the facts in this case. Having an affair is a private, personal act. Lying about that affair, even to the entire country, is a private act. Lying under oath is not a private act: it is not only of deep public concern; it is a crime.

There can be no argument about why Clinton is on trial. However, serious people disagree about whether Clinton's actions are impeachable and the two major parties have been split down the line on this very issue.

While this trend is a partial reflection of party allegiances, the wide chasm between Republicans and Democrats on this issue reflect profoundly different world views and approaches to politics.

Democrats focus first on the community. They believe a better society will arise when the proper conditions exist for all individuals to reach their potential. Individual behavior must be understood in the context of the community. Therefore, the community should give individuals second chances, if the community believes such an opportunity is warranted. This is why Democrats believe Clinton should not be impeached when there is no majority that demands his removal from office.

Republicans place the individual as their primary focus of their ideology. They believe a better society can arise only by the actions and behavior of the individuals who make up that society. Everything depends upon the character of the members of any community. From this perspective, personal responsibility and fixed standards of behavior are indispensable in forging a better country.

Clinton will remain in power, so these competing views may not matter in this context. But an additional point must be stressed.

One of the major causes of suffering in this world is the excessive and arbitrary use of power that human beings use against each other. That is why political systems that grant absolute power to single individuals always fail — sooner or later, someone will come into power who has the tendency to abuse that power.

The United States was actually established to prevent the arbitrary wielding that tramples basic rights and to protect the blessings of liberty. Since everyone is accountable to the law, nobody is above it. While our nation has consistently failed to measure up to this ideal, that does not mean this ideal is not critically important.

So when individuals dismiss Clinton's actions with an air of casual cynicism, these individuals could be fermenting the conditions that allow future presidents the opportunity to abuse their power. Such a hypothetical abuse of power could have far more menacing consequences than obstruction of justice in a civil case of sexual harassment. History teaches us that tyrants thrive when they are not held accountable for their actions.

Moreover, this casual cynicism of not caring about what Clinton does also obscures the more important aspects of this whole scandal.

Would the White House be characterizing Monica as a stalker if it weren't for a famous blue dress? Clinton's lawyers would say, "There is no direct evidence of that." Or they could argue, as they have, that "There was no authorized attempt to impugn Monica Lewinsky's reputation." It would be difficult to prove any answer to this question. However, Clinton's pattern of evasion raises questions that are, to put it mildly, disturbing.

There is still one more puzzling aspect to this saga. Before the scandal broke last year, Clinton's popularity ratings were stable at 55 percent. Since that time, Clinton lied to the entire country, he permitted those lies to be spread and perpetuated for seven months, he committed further perjury in front of the federal grand jury, and then acknowledged that yeah, he had been lying all along. His approval rating now: about 70 percent.

These remarkable approval ratings may represent the American electorate's mechanism to prevent Clinton's removal from office. But who knows? Any alternative explanation would certainly be welcomed.

Better ask Brian?

Dear Brian,

A few years ago my grandmother passed away. We were very close. She lived about an hour away, but I always made sure I saw her at least once a week. Since her death, I have found myself talking to her, especially when things get bad. I know it sounds a little weird, but I feel like she's kind of watching over me. Last week I was really stressed out and I started talking to her when my boyfriend walked in on me. He asked who I was talking to and I explained. He thinks my behavior is unhealthy; in fact, I think it really weirds him out. He says that if I have problems I should come talk to him. Is he right, is my talking to her normal?

Signed,
Am I Crazy?

Dear Am I Crazy,

No you're not. Everybody deals with death differently. Your grandmother was obviously an essential part of your life — one that you have been unable to replace. If it makes you feel better to talk to her, then your boyfriend is going to have to learn to deal with it.

Telling him stories about your grandmother, looking at pictures of you and her together and explaining why she was so important to you may make it easier for him to understand.

Part of the problem probably lies in his need to care for you. He wants to be the one you run to. Make him feel needed. It may sound weird, but he may be a little jealous.

As for mental stability, most of the people in the world believe in some sort of afterlife. Why then is it so strange for one to believe that a loved one is listening or watching from somewhere above?

I sometimes find myself calling my grandparents' old number when tough times arise, although I am sorely aware that they passed on many years ago.

If it feels right, go with it, keep on talking, I am sure she's listening.

Dear Brian,

How many licks does it take to get to the Tootsie Roll center of a Tootsie Pop?

Signed,
A sucker

Dear Sucker,

The world may never know.

Seriously though, the last time I ventured to answer this question I was ten-years-old and knew little about scientific method. This time I was equipped with a college education.

I began by enlisting my friend, who happens to be an environmental resources major. What do Tootsie Roll Pops have to do with environmental resources? I don't know, but I didn't want to be the only idiot wandering around campus furiously licking lollipops.

All Tootsie Pops have almost identical compositions independent of their color and flavor. It just so happens I chose a red Pop; my accomplice, blue.

We unwrapped several pops before finding flawless lollies. I proceeded to place the Pop in my mouth and then remove it, sucking on the way out, while my partner chose the more direct route — licking one side vigorously. Get your mind out of the gutter — remember, we're talking about lollipops here.

The process was surprisingly quick — in fact it took less than a half hour to complete the research, although it did make us quite nauseous. My fellow researcher's method turned out to be the more expedient of the two. He hit Tootsie on lick number 309, then switched sides and got 327 for a mean of 318 licks.

The same feat took me a whopping 708 sucks. In my test, the Tootsie appeared on the side of the Pop that was in direct contact with my tongue. This compounded with the fact that when I was ten it took 1,246 sucks leads me to believe tongue size and strength are key variables in a test of this nature.

In conclusion, I find it disturbing that it took the author of this question 20-some-odd-years to figure out that damn owl was just trying to eat his Tootsie Pops. You should have just asked me in the first place. Happy licking and sucking ASU!

Arizona politics at low point

Arizonans may have thought the low point in state political history was the reign of Evan Mecham.

Megan Nielsen
columnist

They'd be wrong.

The subsequent Symington takeover proved Arizona is more than capable of covering one scandal with another — white collar criminal succeeding white collar criminal.

Like Mecham, Symington was replaced by a female Republican. Like Mecham, his successor was notably more effective.

But the political stupidity goes on in Arizona, well beyond the office of governor.

Our state legislature upheld the redneck image of Arizona politicians earlier this month when it released budget proposals drastically below what the universities requested, infuriating the Arizona Board of Regents.

"To arbitrarily do what they have done to the budget baffles me," said Regent Don Ulrich, who later compared the legislature's methods to Joe Arpaio's. "This is punishing the educational system. This is incredible."

Regents blamed the decision by the legislature not on political agendas or interest group influence, but on plain ignorance. According to President Judy Gignac, despite the fact that extensive research and data is sent to legislators to review before making their decision, very few even read the information.

"For the legislature not to support [ASU's requested increase] makes me wonder who we've elected," concluded Regent George Amos.

Indeed it does. But Former House Speaker Don Aldridge proved it doesn't matter who we've elected — an Arizona politician doesn't need to be employed to dupe his constituents. Despite the fact that he lost his position as speaker in 1998, he has raked in thousands of dollars in per diem salary. According to House sources, Aldridge was wheeled into work by family members, signed up for his $60-a-day allowance and then left for home.

In 1998, former Sen. James Henderson reported a claim for $13,142 to the Senate accounting offices. The cause? He claimed to have driven more than 40,000 miles in his pickup truck from his home to the state Capitol. This wasn't the first time Henderson's driving had raised eyebrows. He was investigated by the attorney general's office in 1992 for fraudulent mileage reports. However, attorney general investigator Paul Noack called the false mileage a "misunderstanding" and subsequently dropped the charge.

"Well, if I drive 100 miles an hour to 125 miles an hour, I can make it in 3 1/2 hours [to the Capitol] Henderson later rationalized.

Well, as long as we're in good hands.

How does this happen? How do we elect people like this to represent our interests?

While Arizonans are worrying about real things like taxes, health care and criminals, our politicians are worrying about themselves. Our state senators are taking road trips, our state representatives are taking field trips and our legislature is so far removed from Arizona's demands it can't even recognize the need for higher education.

Meanwhile, the citizens that Aldridge, Henderson and company are supposed to represent are facing real problems — problems public servants are supposed to solve.

Admittedly, we don't pay politicians enough. We wouldn't have nearly as much corruption if they were. But they're also not pushed hard enough.

Our politicians should be like workers of any other profession: If they don't meet the guidelines voters set forth, they get fired. If we don't see a positive result, they no longer have a job.

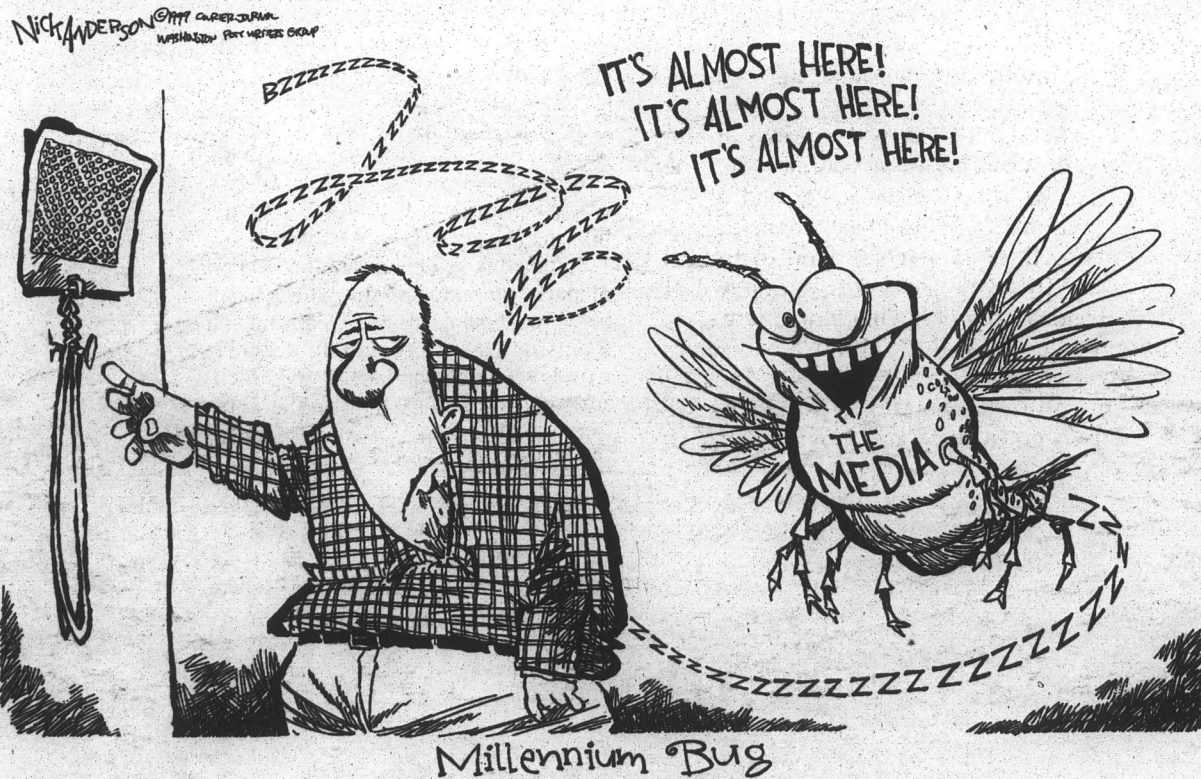

It's about time Arizona politicians begin living up to their title of "public servant." It's time to move on to legislation that helps, not hinders, the people. Legislation that unites the people, rather than divides them.

Take, for instance, Tempe Mayor Neil Giuliano's sidewalk ordinance. His decision to fine people who sit or lay on the sidewalk on South Mill Avenue leaves residents wondering if there's nothing else for our elected officials to do. Is crime really so low that we don't need our politicians concentrating on its reduction? Can our public officials really find nothing meaningful to legislate and improve?

The answer to solving our political woes lies in our own attitudes toward the system. As long as Arizonans expect their elected officials to act unethically, they will. They know they can get away with it. The solution to Arizona's political stupidity will come only when we decide to raise the bar and force politicians to be representative.

We just can't sit on the sidewalk while we come up with the solution.

Gammage opens door to ASU student artists

BY ANDREA J. BALSKY
STATE PRESS

Aspiring ASU student artists may have a chance to have their work exhibited at Gammage Auditorium during Fall 1999 and Spring 2000.

ASU's Public Events Department, which manages Gammage Auditorium, is accepting proposals for art exhibitions from both ASU students and other Arizona artists.

Bonnie Tauss, the exhibit coordinator, said work in any medium will be considered for this program, as long as the work can be displayed hanging on walls.

"We like to be able to present a full spectrum of art at Gammage, not just performing arts but visual arts as well," said David Harrison, a spokesman for the Public Events Department.

The purpose of the exhibit is to establish connections between different communities, Harrison said.

"We strive to be multicultural," he added.

"To tie in with the varied themes of the program material presented at Gammage, we are seeking work that is international and multicultural in nature and work that has the flavor of Americana," Tauss said.

Both Tauss and Harrison said they encourage students to submit proposals for the exhibit.

"We've had several individual ASU students and a couple different organizations participate in the past," Tauss said. "We love that."

Rita Rosenthal, student academic specialist of the graduate program in the ASU school of art, said she thought the possibility of being included in this future exhibit would be of interest to undergraduate students. She said undergraduates often have a hard time finding a vehicle to show their work.

"We (art students) always want an opportunity to get our work out there," said Shana Tinsley, an ASU senior fibers major. "It's hard to do that."

Sara Hubbs, a senior painting major, said she feels the multicultural aspect of the exhibition will appeal to art students and lead them to submit proposals to the public events department since the theme is so broad.

March 31 is the deadline to submit proposals.

“We like to be able to present a full spectrum of art at Gammage, not just performing arts but visual arts as well.”

— David Harrison, a spokesman for the public affairs department.

Conductor Robert Shaw dies after stroke

ATLANTA (AP) — Robert Shaw, who as leader of the Robert Shaw Chorale and the Atlanta Symphony and Chorus raised the art of choral conducting to new heights, died early Monday. He was 82.

Shaw died Monday morning at a hospital in New Haven, Conn., where he had been to see his son in a play at Yale. He had suffered a stroke Sunday night, said Meredith Harris, spokeswoman for the symphony.

Shaw first gained fame as conductor of the Robert Shaw Chorale, which he founded in the late '40s. He also held posts at the San Diego Symphony and Cleveland Orchestra. He was appointed music director and conductor of the Atlanta Symphony in 1967, keeping the post until his retirement in 1988.

When Shaw won one of the 1991 Kennedy Center Honors, center chairman James D. Wolfensohn called him "the dean of American choral conducting."

Shaw said at the time that he was pleased "because it's public recognition of the emergence of the choral art."

"The fact that choral singing has a much higher place in classical music than it did 50 or 60 years ago, I think, is reflected in the Kennedy Center Honor," he said. "I'm not vain enough to think I did it. It's recognition of an area of art."

He won 14 Grammy awards, and his latest album, with works from Barber, Bartok and Vaughan Williams, had been nominated for a 1999 Grammy for classical album.

At the time of his death, he held the titles of Atlanta Symphony music director emeritus and conductor laureate.

During his tenure there, he led the symphony from a part-time amateur ensemble of 60 players with an annual budget of about $500,000 to a 93-member orchestra with a multimillion-dollar budget.

He led it on tours across the United States, including a Carnegie Hall debut in 1971, and on a tour of Europe in 1988. The symphony and chorus performed at President Carter's inauguration in 1977.

In the '50s and '60s, the Robert Shaw Chorale made records for RCA Victor and toured extensively, including goodwill tours to Europe, the Middle East, South America, and in 1962, to 11 cities in the Soviet Union.

"When we went to Russia, we took 30 singers and 25 instrumentalists," he recalled in a 1991 Associated Press interview. "We did Bach's 'B Minor Mass.' Russia was officially an atheist state and I remember the most extraordinary thing in Moscow. It was broadcast, including half an hour of applause at the end."

In recent years, Shaw's annual choral workshops at Carnegie Hall drew directors and singers from across the nation. He conducted a performance of Handel's Messiah at Carnegie Hall in April 1996, on the 250th anniversary of the work's premiere.

Last year, he was inducted into the American Classical Music Hall of Fame in Cincinnati.

Shaw, a fourth-generation Californian, began singing in church choirs. His father was a minister whose five children were born in different towns during five pastorates. "All five had home piano study and all five harmonized when we were kids," he says.

Before he began the Robert Shaw Chorale, he organized a glee club for bandleader Fred Waring, which he later considered "the best voices ever assembled in the history of man." He had met Waring when the bandleader heard the glee club, which Shaw conducted during his student days at Pomona College.

Choruses began to flourish after World War II, Shaw said, when musicologists discovered the rich choral literature of the 16th, 17th and 18th centuries and technology developed to publish and transmit the scores.

"When I was growing up, there were junior high and high school choruses and fraternity sings," he said. "When I got to New York in 1938 the major large choruses were alumni clubs of men who'd left universities and got together to drink beer and sing on Wednesday nights."

At the time of his death, Shaw was in New Haven to see a play on which his son, Thomas, had worked at Yale University, Harris said. The play, Endgame, was Thomas Shaw's senior acting and directing project.

Besides Thomas, survivors include two other sons, Peter and John; a daughter, Johanna Shaw; a stepson; a sister; and a brother.

Missionary, 2 sons are buried after attack in India

By DONNA BRYSON
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BARIPADA, India — As church bells rang out, lepers led a funeral procession in southeast India on Monday for the Baptist missionary and his two sons who were burned to death by mob over the weekend.

The lepers were among hundreds who paid tribute to Graham Stuart Staines, who used to dispense drug treatment from a church-run leprosy clinic, preach occasionally and lead Bible-study camps.

The procession ended on the edge of town in a Christian cemetery where Staines' widow and daughter were the first to throw handfuls of dry, pebbly earth, which landed with a dull thud on the three wooden coffins in a common grave.

Police officers with guns slung over their shoulders were reminders of the string of attacks against Christians in India in the past year. Staines and his two sons were the first deaths in the recent violence.

Staines, 10-year-old Philips and eight-year-old Timothy were killed Saturday by a mob that set fire to their jeep as they slept during a Bible study camp in remote Kheonjar district, 140 miles west of Baripada. The area is 660 miles southeast of New Delhi, the capital.

Prime Minister Atal Bihari Vajpayee has condemned the violence and called for harsh, quick punishment for the attackers.

Police said Monday they had arrested 49 Hindu militants in the killings. The suspects were linked to Bajrang Dal, a group affiliated with the right-wing Bharatiya Janata Party that governs India. The Bajrang Dal denied its activists were involved in the killings. However, it and affiliated Hindu militant groups have been accused in other recent attacks against Christians in India.

Most of the attacks have occurred in the western state of Gujarat, where at least 12 Christian churches and 24 Hindu temples have been damaged in the last month after radical Hindus protested that Christian missionaries were converting tribespeople to their faith.

Christians make up 2 percent of India's 1 billion population, which is mostly Hindu.

Staines embraced Indian culture and was embraced in turn in Baripada.

Ashok Panda of the Associated Press

The burned jeep in which Australian missionary Graham Stewart Staines and his two sons were burned to death is seen Saturday outside Baripada, India. A group of Hindu radicals in eastern India attacked the family Saturday morning as they slept in their jeep after attending a Bible study.

Most outsiders simply pass by this town of 130,000 people. But the 58-year-old Staines settled here in a simple, concrete-floored house behind the Baripada Baptist Union Church. "The way he lived his life has been an inspiration to us all," said Father Anand Pal, a Catholic priest.

Dozens dead, hundreds injured from earthquake in Colombia

By JARED KOTLER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOGOTA, Colombia — An earthquake struck western Colombia on Monday, killing at least 87 people and injuring nearly 850 as it toppled buildings across the country's coffee-growing heartland, police and radio reported.

The early afternoon quake had a preliminary magnitude of 6, according to the U.S. Geological Survey in Golden, Colo. Its epicenter was located in western Valle del Cauca state, 140 miles from the capital, Bogota.

The death and damage toll appeared to be highest in Armenia, Pereira and Calarca — three cities near the epicenter.

"There's no way to measure this crisis," said the mayor of Armenia, Alvaro Pulido. Radio reports said several buildings on the city's main plaza, including a bank and the police barracks, had collapsed. He said thousands of people were left homeless.

In Armenia, there were at least 50 dead and more than 500 injured, according to the Colombian Red Cross. Radio reports put the death toll there as high as 100.

One city hospital alone had received more than 500 injured, RCN radio reported.

Television footage showed residents frantically trying to extract victims trapped below the debris of a fallen building in the city, the capital of Quindio state.

In Calarca, 90 miles west of Bogota, 30 people died and 250 were injured, RCN reported, citing local authorities. Several aftershocks were felt in the town but it was not clear if they added to the damage.

In Pereira, a city of 550,000 people and capital of Risaralda state, at least seven people died and 70 were injured, police said. Mayor Luis Alberto Duque declared a 12-hour curfew to aid rescue efforts and said the death toll was likely to rise.

About 200 houses were damaged and some crumbled beneath the impact of the powerful temblor, police said.

Television images from Pereira showed several demolished buildings, a taxi flattened under fallen debris and the body of a woman trapped under the rubble.

Offices and apartments rattled and swayed in Bogota, where the quake was felt for about 15 seconds.

Landslides caused by the earthquake blocked access to some rural areas affected by the quake.

President Andres Pastrana delayed a trip to Europe and was en route by helicopter from the capital to Pereira, his office said.

The earthquake was felt in most of the country, but the majority of the victims and damages were concentrated in 17 municipalities.

U.S. missiles strike southern Iraq

BY VIJAY JOSHI
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BASRA, Iraq — U.S. missiles slammed into residential neighborhoods in southern Iraq on Monday, demolishing sturdy, stone-walled homes as they killed at least 11 people, Iraqi officials said.

U.S. officials said its Air Force and Navy jets fired at air defense systems in response to "threats by anti-aircraft artillery fire" and by four Iraqi warplanes flying south of the 33rd parallel in violation of the no-flight ban.

Pentagon officials said it was likely that U.S. jets targeting the Iraqi air defense installations misfired and that at least two missiles may have resulted in civilian deaths in and around the city of Basra. Spokesman Navy Capt. Michael Doubleday said U.S. officials were "still assessing the site damage."

The missiles hit five areas of southern Iraq, including the working-class al-Jumhuriya neighborhood on the outskirts of Basra, Iraqi officials said. Several homes in that neighborhood were destroyed, their roofs caved in. Broken dishes and kitchen utensils were strewn among the rubble. Civilians worked late into the night to clean the debris from the morning strike.

Ahmed Ibrahim Hamash, the governor of Basra, said two aircraft fired five missiles that killed 11 people and injured 59.

The missiles struck in the morning and Hamash said most of the casualties were women, children or the elderly because many men had already left for work.

The missiles hit three civilian areas in or near Basra, as well as a site near the airport and another near the Rumeilah oil fields.

An engineer at the oil field was reported injured in the attacks.

Iraqi officials took reporters to the al-Jumhuri hospital, one of the city's two main hospitals. Several injured children and women were at the hospital. Iraqi officials said they had been wounded in the strikes.

In al-Jumhuriya, four homes were completely destroyed and six damaged, including Lufti Swadi's house. The blast ripped the front door off the 28-year-old baker's home, shattered parts of the walls and scattered the furniture.

In the village of Abu al-Khaseeb, four houses were destroyed and another four damaged. Iraqi officials were still assessing damage in the other civilian area that was struck.

Hamash said there were no military installations in the areas that were hit.

"There is not even a police station there, let alone a military installation," he said. "The United States claims to be a humanitarian nation but they are enemies of that concept."

At the al-Jumhuri hospital in Basra, Marwa Ali, 6, lay on a hospital bed swathed in a pink blanket. Dried blood was caked on her nostrils. She was about to go to school to take an exam when the missile struck, her sister Zeinab, 25, said.

"It began with a big bang," said Zeinab Ali, who was slightly injured with cuts and bruises. "I could see my house coming down on us. There was dust all over."

Marwa suffered multiple wounds to the scalp and a deep knee injury.

Deputy Prime Minister Tariq Aziz condemned the attack and said the United States and its allies would be held responsible. His remarks were reported by the official Iraqi News Agency.

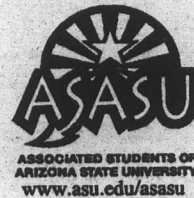

Basra, 350 miles south of Baghdad, is within the southern "no-fly" zone that the United States and its allies set up after the 1991 Gulf War to protect Shiite Muslims who rose up against the government of Iraqi President Saddam Hussein.

In the northern no-fly zone Monday, U.S. aircraft attacked three separate Iraqi anti-aircraft batteries, U.S. officials said. They said the aircraft fired missiles and dropped bombs after Iraq targeted or fired on the warplanes.

Bringing it ON

ASU freshman forward and Canadian import Theresa Jantzen hasn't had any trouble adjusting to the Valley of the Sun

By DOUG FLANAGAN
STATE PRESS

The city of Medicine Hat is peacefully tucked away in southeastern Alberta, along the South Saskatchewan River. The serene community of 46,000 mostly makes their livings as farmers, ranchers or traders. In the summers, the high temperature can climb to around 75 degrees Fahrenheit.

Meanwhile, 1,430 miles south, the bustling megalopolis of Phoenix is, with a metropolitan population of two and a half million, one of the United States' fastest-growing cities. In what is often referred to as the world's most livable city, the temperature in July can often approach a skin-melting 120 degrees.

So it goes without saying that Theresa Jantzen, who grew up in Medicine Hat and established herself as one of the province's best prep female players ever, was facing more of an adjustment process than most college freshmen when she decided to bring her jaw-dropping play, much needed height and an infectious friendly persona to the ASU women's basketball team this fall.

But Jantzen has met this — as she has any other challenge presented to her — with the steely resolve that she shows while blocking a shot, grabbing a rebound or leading her team to a comeback victory: bring it on.

"I think every freshman goes through a huge change," ASU head coach Charli Turner Thorne said. "But Theresa is — I don't know if you'd call it a free spirit — but she's someone who wants the most out of life and the most out of herself.

"A lot of people are born into a town and never leave it. They're very content to stay in their home town, home state. Theresa is the opposite of that. She is very adventurous. She wants to see the world. She wants to see what's out there. She wants the most that she can have out of her life experiences."

Jantzen said the contrasting climates have been the only significant difference she has had to adapt to.

"I'd never experienced anything that hot before," she recalled about her first trip to the Phoenix area. "(When) my parents left me, it was a little scary at first. But I love it here. I'm not homesick. I've made some good friends and everything is going good."

She Got Game

Thanks to a career that saw her average 29.5 points per game as a senior, 27.7 during her junior year, and 12.7 rebounds during her career at Medicine Hat High School (which she led to two straight provincial championship games), Jantzen's personal trophy case is far from empty: she was named the league's MVP (twice), Miss Alberta Basketball (twice) and the Medicine Hat High School Female Athlete of the Year her senior year.

In her first game in a Sun Devil uniform, Nov. 5 against a traveling team from Europe, the 6-foot-3 Jantzen started and scored 13 points and grabbed seven boards despite playing only 15 minutes due to a sore left foot. That foot kept her out of action until Jan. 4, when she returned to action against UCLA.

Twelve days later, in Tucson against arch-rival UofA, Jantzen had her best game of her young career, posting season-highs in points (12), rebounds (11) and minutes (20). Her point and rebound totals led the team.

After the game, instead of basking in the glow of her best collegiate performance, all she did was nitpick about her defense and bemoaned the fact that the Sun Devils let the game slip away in the second half.

But then again, that's typical Jantzen.

"I know for a fact that her (high school) coach (Boris Grisonich) was never satisfied, so she's always got this dissatisfaction with how she plays," said Leah Combs, Jantzen's roommate and fellow freshman forward. "If you ask her how she played, she'll always say that she could do better."

"I have a lot of goals, and I'm going to work hard to achieve my goals," Jantzen added. "I think it's all just a matter of how much I want it and how hard I work. (I'll) just keep working hard."

New Horizons

The summer between a high school athlete's junior and senior year is considered to be the most critical in determining the athlete's future destination. For Jantzen, that summer was filled with disappointment as a result of an injured ankle that scared away top-10 programs such as Stanford and Old Dominion.

So, in some respects, Jantzen chose ASU because other, more tradition-bound teams shied away from a potential health risk while Turner Thorne stuck by her.

But according to Jantzen, ASU had several other enticing elements to offer.

"First of all, I really like the coaches here," she said. "I really believed what they had to say. And all the players are young. I knew I could come in here and make an impact if I work hard. Also, I wanted to go to a big college that was well known. I just had a good feeling about this place."

Jantzen will admit she thought about playing at a Canadian college. She knew the coaches of the University of Edmonton, the University of Calgary and the University of Regina, and her father, Mark, played a year at the University of Saskatchewan.

So the opportunity was there. But for Jantzen, it just didn't add up to stay at home.

"I would've loved to have played in Canada," she said. "There's a lot of good coaches and teams up there. But I couldn't turn down the opportunity to come play Div(ision)-I basketball at a Pac-10 school."

Turner Thorne, for one, think she made the right choice.

"She's good enough to play anywhere in the country," she said. "We were a building program, not one that was already established. I think she liked that, though. I don't think she was caught up so much in that it had to be top-10."

"I think that she just knew (that) we have everything to win a national championship here, and she really bought into being a part of that. Again, she's a kid who loves a challenge. She's adventurous. She wants to make things happen and do great things. She's just that type of kid."

Senior Ed Carter and his doubles partner, Jeff Williams, are the 26th-ranked doubles tandem in the nation.

ASU begins quest for championship

BY ROBERT DEAL
STATE PRESS

With five returning starters and an All-American transfer, experience is the theme for the Sun Devil men's tennis team.

Ranked 17th in the country in the first preseason poll, the team has hopes of moving into a top ten spot and taking an NCAA championship.

"We're really confident," said senior Jeff Williams, who transferred to ASU after gaining All-American status at New Mexico. "We're looking not just to make the NCAAs like most teams — we're going to make a run for it all."

The first step in the men's strenuous schedule is at 1:30 p.m. today at the Whiteman Tennis Center against 22nd-ranked Fresno State. The Bulldogs came into the regular season ranked No. 1 in Region VII, but suffered a heart-breaking 7-0 loss in their opener against the nation's No. 5 team, UCLA.

Fresno State is led by sophomore Peter Luczak and juniors Oliver LeJeune, Rob Cheyne and Andy Scorteanu. Since the UCLA meet, the Bulldogs have added Scorteanu and LeJeune to their starting line-up; both were out due to academic ineligibility.

"(Fresno State) has a pretty old, experienced team like we do," ASU head coach Lou Belken said. "They had a great fall and came out ranked No. 1 in Region VII."

"They had a rough time at UCLA, but we expect the addition of (Scorteanu and LeJeune) to make it very tough."

The Sun Devils will be led by senior Gustavo Marcaccio. In the team's top spot, Marcaccio, who begins the regular season ranked No. 31 in the nation, will have to face off against many of the country's top players.

Belken feels that Marcaccio is ready to once again take on the responsibility of leading the team.

"I don't know that you could ask much more from somebody," Belken said. "He cares a lot about every individual on this team, and has pushed himself very hard both physically and mentally — to get where he is."

At the other top spots, the Sun Devils will be starting seniors Alex Osterrieth and Williams. Both players finished last season with winning records and are ready to do it again this year.

Williams is the newest edition to the team's top seeds. Valley native, he chose to transfer to ASU for the high level of competition brought on by the Pac-10.

"The Pac-10 is the greatest conference in the country," he said. "I wanted to get into the tougher competition, this is a great team to do that on."

Williams comes into the regular season ranked 92nd in singles and 26th in doubles with his partner, junior Ed Carter.

According to Belken, Carter is the team's strongest doubles player.

"He's a very quick player," he said, "and can play off his teammates well."

Although the team faces a schedule where every opponent is ranked, it has the advantage of playing all of its conference meets at home.

"Playing at home is a huge advantage because we're very familiar with the conditions of these courts," Belken said. "There are certain styles of play that work well here and that's what we do best."

Cardinal gaining momentum

BY NICK PIECORO
STATE PRESS
UofA

Pac-10 men's hoops notes

It was starting to look like UofA was one of the top teams in the country — a team capable of winning even when everyone isn't playing their best.

But the Cats have played five straight games decided by two points or less and have lost two of them. They survived against Oregon, ASU and Washington, but lost to New Mexico and Oregon State on Saturday.

ASU

Eddie House is again carrying this team. Forwards Bobby Lazor and Mike Batiste both had rough trips to Oregon, they combined for 20 points in both games, which is about half of what they usually score. The upcoming games against Cal and No. 3 Stanford are a good chance for the Sun Devils to prove that they belong in the upper half of the conference.

Cal

Sitting at 2-4 going into Saturday's game against Washington State, the Bears desperately needed a win. They got it, 75-68, to creep back into middle half of the conference. Cal's last non-conference game, a 78-71 upset of then-No. 9 North Carolina, looked to be a sign of things to come for the Bears, but they're now 3-4 in the conference.

Oregon

So far, the Ducks are the conference's biggest disappointment. Oregon went 8-1 in the non-conference schedule before losing six conference games. Four of those Pac-10 losses came at home by a combined nine points and their only conference wins came against Washington State (in three overtimes) and Cal.

Oregon State

The Beavers snapped a 17-game losing streak against UofA with Saturday's 60-59 win in Corvallis. That brings their home record to 9-0 this season, but they've still struggled on the road, most recently in losses to Washington and Washington State on Jan. 14 and 16.

Stanford

Off to their best conference start ever at 7-0, Stanford is looking more and more unstoppable. The Cardinal have won 13 straight overall and have all five starters averaging in double-figures. The most recent victim was Washington, who actually held a five-point lead at halftime. But Stanford pulled out a 67-60 victory, led by Mark Madsen, who had 20 points and nine rebounds.

UCLA

After losing by 13 to Stanford on Jan. 16, UCLA has won their last two, against USC and No. 24 Louisville, by a combined 30 points.

USC

The Trojans have lost four in a row and the light at the end of the tunnel isn't much brighter. They'll play five of their next seven games on the road, including games against Cal, Stanford and UCLA. They've already lost to those three teams at home by an average of 16 points.

Washington

Senior center Todd MacCulloch, who has recorded four straight double-doubles, is averaging 18.4 points (3rd in Pac-10), 11.2 rebounds (1st) and 1.71 blocks (1st) per game, but the Huskies are still only 3-4 in the conference.

Washington State

Washington State, who suffered a 49-point loss to Stanford on Thursday, has a chance to turn its season around with four straight games at home, where the Cougars are 4-1.
