Tuition cap bill one step closer to law

By JAYSON PETERS
STATE PRESS

Despite lobbying from the Arizona Board of Regents, state legislation that could restrain the board's authority to raise university tuition is one step closer to being a reality.

The House Public Institutions and Universities Committee voted 4-2 Tuesday to send House Bill 2338 — the Tuition Tax Relief Bill — on to the Rules Committee. If passed, it would then travel to the Committee of the Whole and eventually to the state Senate and the governor.

Besides establishing a maximum tuition increase, the bill would allow the state Legislature to appoint a member to advise ABOR. The non-voting member would be appointed annually by the speaker of the House or the president of the Senate and membership would alternate each year between the House and the Senate.

The bill would also require 10 days advance notice of ABOR meetings in local newspapers.

Tony Seese-Bieda, an ABOR spokesman, said the regents expressed concern that their ability to govern higher education in Arizona would be negatively impacted by this legislation.

There was a strong sense that they wanted to retain the board's authority, responsibility and flexibility for setting tuition, and not be restrained by the cap, he said.

Seese-Bieda said he does not expect the bill to reach the Senate until March. It could take the rest of the legislative session before it passed into law, if ever, he added.

The bill was first heard in the Public Institutions and Universities Committee on Jan. 26. Chairman Jean McGrath, R-Glendale, held it then for further consideration by the committee.

Tax breaks put money back in students' wallet

By ANDREA BALSKY
STATE PRESS

A new IRS form will give ASU students the chance at a tax break for paying tuition.

The form, 1098-T, tells students that they, or the person who claims them as a dependent on their taxes, may be eligible for two education tax credits which can put up to $1,500 back in their pockets.

One credit, the New Hope tax credit, applies to students in the first two years of their college education. The credit applies to the first $1,000 of tuition and 50 percent of the subsequent $1,000.

The Lifetime Learning tax credit applies to the rest of students. The tax credit is 20 percent of the first $5,000 spent on tuition.

“ This is the first time the federal government has given financial aid to students going back to school. It's a momentous piece of legislation to assist (the students). ”

Kelly Farmer
comptroller's office tax manager

The tax forms were mailed on Monday to more than 60,000 students who were enrolled in a credit gaining class for any academic term during 1998, said Jerry Snyder, comptroller and treasurer of the ASU comptroller's office.

The credits are designed to reduce a student's tax obligations. However, students will not receive a refund if they don't have a tax obligation from work earnings or other income, Snyder said.

This is the first time the federal government has given financial aid to students going back to school, said Kelly Farmer, tax manager of the comptroller's office. It's a momentous piece of legislation to assist (the students).

There is no IRS requirement for a student to claim either of the two tax credits, Snyder said. Still, students should look over the new form that they will receive in the mail, he added.

(Students) should read the information, Snyder said. Some might be able to get $1,500 from the federal government.

Some ASU students said they are interested in filing for the tax claims.

This could benefit students and their parents, and make college accessible, said Ryan Morgan, a communications senior.

Since Morgan has recently transferred to ASU, he is not eligible for the tax breaks this year. However, he said, he'd definitely be filling out the form next year.

Svea Komorim, a painting senior, also said she would be interested in the tax credits.

I would like to get money back because I pay out-of-state tuition, she said.

The Arizona Alliance of Black School Educators will start its 10th annual conference today in the Memorial Union in an effort to light the torch for ASU's celebration of Black History Month.

The four-day conference, sponsored by the African-American studies department at ASU, will celebrate the theme of The Community Inter/Intra Net: Making Educational Connections.

We always tried to have the event in conjunction with Black History Month, said Dene Wallace, district coordinator of federal programs and student assessment and chairman for the Black School Educators conference. What we stand for and what we do to help educators is ongoing (throughout the year).

Aside from celebrating Black History Month, the conference will offer several workshops addressing the effect of school uniforms, cultural diversity in the classroom, and student mentoring programs.

Former Surgeon General, Dr. Joycelyn Elders, will also join the Wallace said.

Other guest speakers include Lisa Graham Keegan, state superintendent of public instruction, who will talk about Arizona's focus for all students and Paul Mohr, director of special programs, planning and coordination for the Alabama State Commission on Higher Education. He will speak on the role of black colleges in the new millennium.

It's going to be very exciting to see our academic importance reinforced, said Jennifer Mabry, chief of policy and operations in the Arizona Department of Education, who recently became a member of the Arizona Alliance of Black School Educators. It will be a benefit to anybody who goes — parents, students and faculty.

Stressed-out workers get help with hotline

BY PAISLEY DODDS
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — City workers feeling the blues can call up a "mood meter," an automated phone system that screens for depression. They just can't expect to talk to a live person.

"Callers listen to recorded descriptions of how they feel and are asked how often they feel that way.

Descriptions range from "I get tired for no reason" to "I feel others would be better off if I were dead." Callers punch the digits and hear a recorded diagnosis that urges severe cases to get counseling.

Officials said the hotline is valuable for the city's 18,000 workers, who are often blamed for the city's maladies. But it's also good for the city: Healthy employees are less likely to be absent and are more likely to be productive, officials say.

"It's not meant to replace an appointment with a mental health professional, but it's a push in the right direction," said Joe Cullinan, clinical director of the city's Employee Assistance Program.

The hotline was installed in October and so far has received 155 calls, Cullinan said.

Other public employers, such as the city of Toledo, Ohio, the Broward County (Fla.) Sheriff's Department, and federal agencies such as the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, have also adopted the hotline, provided by the Wellesley-based National Mental Illness Screening Project, a nonprofit organization.

"As an employee, it's a great idea," said city human resources worker Bill Kessler, 46, of Boston.

Panel backs compromise on business tax

By PAUL DAVENPORT
ASSOCIATED PRESS WRITER

PHOENIX (AP) - A compromise on a tax issue that divided powerful segments of the state's business community is competing to be in the Arizona Legislature's tax-cut mix.

The House Ways and Means Committee on Tuesday voted 11-0 for a bill (HB2430) to let companies choose either of two methods for having their corporate income tax calculated.

Sales now account for 50 percent of the basis for calculating a company's tax obligation, with payroll and property each at 25 percent. The bill would increase the sales factor to 60 percent and lower the payroll and property factors to 20 percent each.

The change would benefit manufacturers such as Intel and Motorola as well as other companies with big plants and work forces in Arizona but larger sales outside the state.

Previous proposals to change the apportionment outright to increase the sales factor was opposed by retailers, utilities and other companies which sell most of their products or services in state. Those companies would have paid more under such a switch.

However, a compromise to let companies choose either method defused the opposition.

"This is not a business (tax) cut. This is a specific industry cut," said Michelle Ahlmer, an Arizona Retailers Association lobbyist. The group's support for the current bill was contingent on it giving companies the choice of apportionment methods.

Promoted as an economic development tool to attract new industries, the bill carries a hefty price tag - $47 million a year - with $17 million for the apportionment change and $30 million for reducing the corporate income tax to 7.5 percent from 8 percent.

The bill now must compete with a pack of other tax-cut proposals, including a rival measure to lower the corporate income tax without offering the apportionment option and several proposals to reduce or eliminate the vehicle license tax.

Report sparks some more debate over bilingual educational programs

PHOENIX (AP) - Only 4 percent of students in bilingual education programs last year learned enough English to transfer into regular classrooms, according to a state Department of Education report.

State education officials say reforming bilingual education is essential.

"If we are a state that believes in providing an extraordinary education to all students, and that raising student achievement levels is important, we cannot sit idly by and accept results like these," state Superintendent of Public Instruction Lisa Graham Keegan said in a letter Monday to legislators.

But some are complaining the report released Monday is not an accurate gauge of what is happening in bilingual programs.

For one, the report doesn't "differentiate one (bilingual) program from another," said Leonard Basurto, director of bilingual education and Mexican-American studies for the Tucson Unified School District. "All the students were lumped together."

Also, by focusing in large on reclassification rates, the report does not address how bilingual programs are actually set up, Basurto said.

"To a lot of people, bilingual means Spanish only, when as a matter of fact, there is more English than Spanish," he said.

The report shows 4 percent, or 4,527 of 111,207 limited English-proficient (LEP) students, were reclassified as English-proficient by their school districts last year - compared with 2.8 percent in 1996-97.

Students are reclassified when they meet five criteria: oral proficiency, reading, writing, parent opinion and teacher verification.

Only 38,478 students were actually subjected to those criteria. Of students reassessed last year, nearly 12 percent were reclassified.

Fifty-three percent of those students passed the oral language proficiency portion, 36 percent passed the writing portion, and 22 percent passed the reading portion of the assessment process.

Laura Penny, head of communications for the Education Department, acknowledge that much of the data is skewed because some reports from schools were riddled with mistakes.

High school districts reported having bilingual students in kindergarten-through-third grade programs, for instance, and elementary schools reported bilingual students in high school.

Other schools simply never made a report, even though the filing deadline was extended three times.

Teacher faces dismissal; didn't report donations

MESA, Ariz. (AP) - A high school teacher who talked Microsoft Corp. into donating $20,000 of software for his students and then contributed another $20,000 himself for school projects may now face anything from suspension to dismissal for his efforts.

School district officials say Desert Vista High School teacher George Alper failed to follow accounting procedures for the gifts and failed to submit proper purchase requests.

They are asking the Tempe Union High School District's governing board to suspend Alper without pay for 20 days because of "unprofessional and insubordinate conduct." He could potentially even be dismissed.

"We believe these violations are serious. We need to send a message to Mr. Alper," Janis Merrill, the district's attorney, said during a hearing Monday. "He is a fine teacher. But there are many factors as to what makes a fine teacher - and following rules and regulations are one of those."

The special hearing, halted Monday after about two hours, will continue by early next week.

Alper admits not following certain district policies, but said helping students was his only goal.

"School district funding procedures...are not set up to handle any issues in a timely fashion," he wrote in a Nov. 8 letter to Desert Vista Principal Joe McDonald.

"School districts are paralyzed by their inability to change with the times and the net result is a paralysis in the learning process and students are not prepared to function in the world they will soon enter," Alper wrote. "My only intent was to provide my kids with the best equipment, the best opportunity, and the best education."

Alper's troubles began in about 1997, when he donated about $20,000 of his own money to benefit the school's yearbook, television production program, and computer lab.

About $3,000 bought food for his students when they worked late, according to the letter. The rest was used to purchase computers, electronic equipment, cameras, lenses and supplies.

According to district policy, all donations must be presented to the district governing board for approval and recorded in property records.

District officials also allege Alper bought computer items with student activity funds.

During this school year, Alper sold and traded computer equipment for new equipment, according to the charges. Alper has no records of the transactions, district officials said.

"This is not a situation caused by a 'lack of awareness' of, or 'ignorance' of district procedures," according to the charges against Alper. "You have intentionally disregarded district procedures because you find them 'cumbersome.'"

Because of this, Alper created serious inventory control problems that has thrown the district's financial records into chaos, Merrill said.

But Alper's attorney, Susan Sendrow, said the teacher attempted to get the proper paperwork.

"All things considered, his students were better off. And when confronted, he readily admitted his actions and cooperated with the administration," Sendrow said.

Concealed weapons can be hidden threat

So the guy brought a gun to the Phoenix Open. He brought a permit, too.

While his behavior was certainly inappropriate and scary, it had little to do with the weapon he had stuffed in his fanny pack. It was the alcohol that got Brian K. Murphy all riled up. It was the gun that got everyone else.

It was a hidden gun that was legal to carry in our state because Murphy, a 40-year-old Phoenix man, had a permit. Arizona isn't the only state that allows concealed weapons, either. More than 30 other states grant gun-carriers the same privilege.

Which is what it is — a privilege.

Proponents of concealed weapons permits contend that the ability to carry a gun — secretly — helps save lives. The very nature of these guns being concealed takes away the criminals' ability to tell whether a potential victim is armed. This, some claim, makes criminals less likely to strike since the outcome is potentially dangerous.

While we're certainly not against the right to bear arms, we do find fault with the right to carry a camouflaged gun. And the argument that concealed weapons stop criminals certainly doesn't hold up to the fact that people sometimes let their emotions get the better of them.

How many times have you found yourself raving mad while driving? Ever wonder how you could have given the guy next to you the finger just because he cut you off? It's emotion getting the best of you. It's emotion defying reason. And it happens to all of us.

There's no way to test for it. Some people just lose control. Some, like Murphy, more than others.

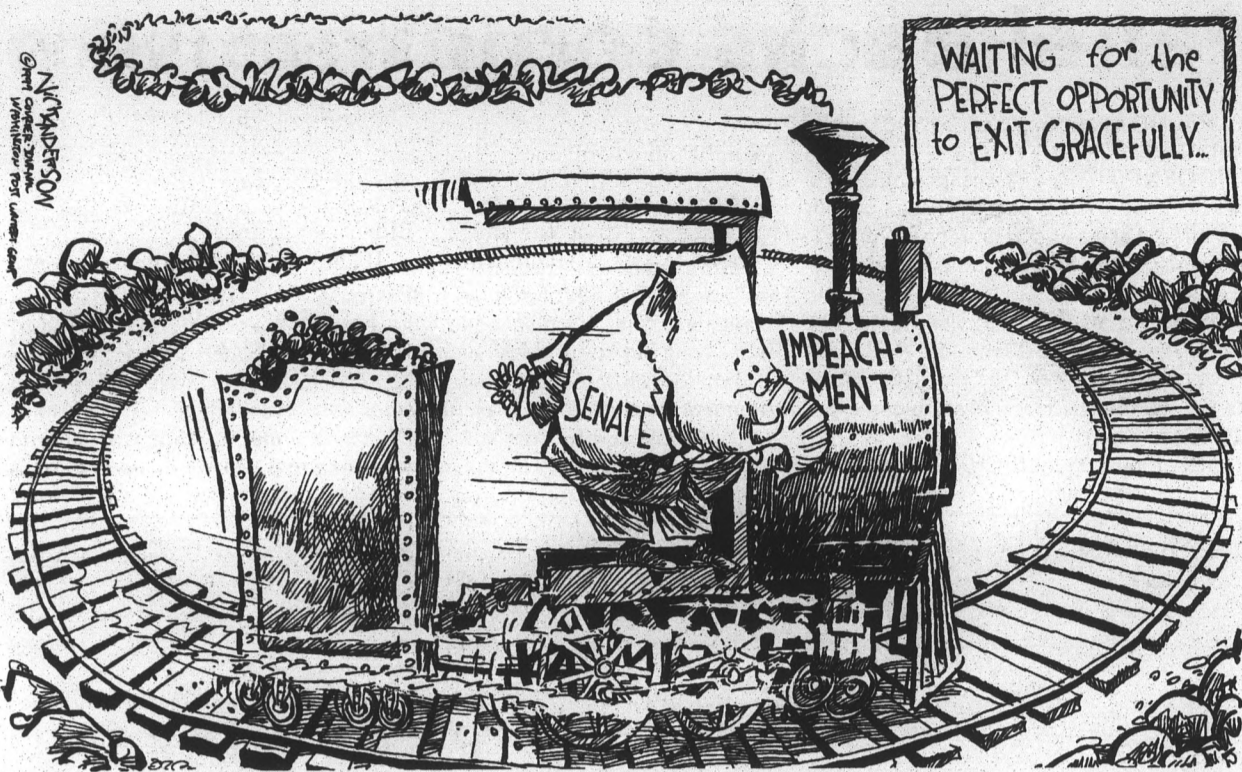

We don't think concealed weapons make otherwise law-abiding citizens criminals. But they do make the probability that potentially dangerous situations like the one at the Phoenix Open, will escalate into deadly confrontations.

Maybe what us Arizonans need to do is stop crying about our ruined image from the scuffle last weekend and start thinking about the laws that make these situations possible.

Banning guns at future Phoenix Open events, as event organizers have decided to do, is not enough. People are walking around with guns strapped to their shoulders, and we don't even know it. Does that scare you? Does it make you think before you raise your hands in frustration while on the road?

It should. And if you don't like it, change it. Just because the majority of the rest of the nation has decided concealed weapons are a good thing certainly doesn't mean we have to follow along.

If a guy who was following the law and didn't hurt anybody got the public this fired up, we hate to think what could have happened had it been someone else. Someone less able to control those wild emotions.

Gay club an asset to Valley school

The struggle for dignity as a human being begins with recognizing who you are and accepting yourself. I was reminded of that recently when I met two young people who are trying to retain their dignity in the face of bigotry.

Jesse Evans is a student attending a high school in the East Valley that is embroiled in a controversy surrounding a club he helped establish in his school. I'll refer to the club as "the alliance," because Evans spoke to me on the condition that I not reveal the name of his school or the club. The club is an alliance of gay and straight students who want to come together to provide a safe and supportive space for gay, lesbian and questioning youth.

It is precisely the kind of club that the state Legislature is considering banning with House Bill 2051, which would prohibit the use of school monies, property, resources and employees for any student club that "encourages criminal or delinquent conduct, promotes sexual conduct or sexual orientation or that contradicts the state's abstinence requirements" in public schools.

Evans has a problem with the bill.

"The Equal Access Act specifically prohibits banning clubs based on their content," he said. "The right to freedom of assembly and freedom of speech is guaranteed to all U.S. citizens, homosexual or heterosexual, under 18 or over 18."

Evans said the visibility of an alliance of this type is important in order to reach students who may be feeling the pain and isolation of growing up gay. "Our club will save lives," he said.

The U.S. Department of Health and Human Services reports that gay and lesbian youth account for up to 30 percent of all teens who commit suicide. They do so because they can not face the stigma of being a homosexual in this society.

As I sat listening to his gentle and convincing voice, I was taken aback by some of the things he said. I had assumed that so much had changed since I was a teenager a decade-plus ago. I'd forgotten that dark corner of isolation, of not having someone to talk with that you could trust to understand. That darkness still exists for gay youth.

Shawna Rae Kempainen columnist

Having a place to go where you can be yourself and feel valued and safe is an important part of lighting the way.

"The pain and self-loathing; the misconceptions you have about yourself are horrible," said Evans, who admitted to himself in the ninth grade that he was gay. "I thought that all gay people had AIDS and were child molesters. I remember that pain."

Evans said that he has a supportive, loving mother to whom he is "out." Imagine the isolation of the young boy or girl growing up in a family where prejudice against "queers, dykes and fags" is an accepted part of everyday conversation. They need a place to find support and understanding. Schools serve as the major institution of socialization for children in this country and as such, should not ban an organization that seeks to promote self-esteem and acceptance.

Evans' fight for the club has not been easy.

It took many months for the administration to finally approve the paperwork for the alliance to meet at school and that came only after Evans threatened to sue the school under equal-access laws.

"Our principal cares about his students," Evans said. "The administration was sometimes unfair, but out of genuine fear for us." The alliance then had to face an unsympathetic student council which eventually voted approval by a small margin.

The club has officially been in existence for two weeks. It meets twice a week, has more than 20 members and two teacher sponsors. There are great challenges ahead for the alliance — there are parents who are upset that such a group even exists in their children's school. And then there's the state Legislature.

Arizona is one of three states with bills pending that would limit the rights of gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgendered students.

I think today's youth are lucky to have people like Evans and the students in the alliance. We all need people who are willing to take a stand for our rights and provide a place to rejoice in freedom and celebrate themselves. The wounds of intolerance can be healed with the salve of acceptance.

Stadium tax would misdirect funds

I won't shop at Fiesta Mall. I won't eat at the Landmark. I won't buy groceries, clothes, CDs or even greeting cards in Mesa.

I won't buy anything in Mesa if its voters, along with Gilbert and Queen Creek voters, approve the quarter-cent sales tax to fund the proposed Rio Salado Crossing football stadium and convention center.

If Mesa and either Gilbert or Queen Creek approve the project May 18, the sales tax will be invoked for 20 years to fund the voters' $500 million share of the construction costs.

Earlier this week, The Arizona Republic polled Mesa voters and found them fairly evenly split on this issue. In fact, the margin is so close that it seems the 10 percent who are currently undecided will decide the outcome.

That this poll is so close, that more voters cannot see the injustice of this proposal, worries me.

One-fourth of a penny on every dollar doesn't sound like much, does it?

No. But, if you add it to all the other taxes you already pay, it's just one more piece of your income that you won't see. After all, at least 25 percent of your income goes to federal taxes, Medicare and Social Security, and then another few percent goes to the state government.

By the time these governments wring you dry, your city and county governments tax another 6 to 8 percent of what you spend to fund their enterprises.

But, where will this $500 million

Stephanie Conner
columnist

go?

Not to police departments. Not to fire departments. Not to education. Not to feeding the homeless.

No, it's going to a far more worthwhile endeavor: a stadium for the Arizona Cardinals and a convention center for all the big-time conventions that overflow the facilities in downtown Phoenix.

The fundamental problem here is the appropriation of public funding for private enterprise.

If the proposed stadium and convention center are built, more people will come to Mesa. I cannot argue with that. However, the greatest financial burden will rest on the regular citizens who work, live and shop in Mesa. The greatest benefit will come to entrepreneurs, like Bill Bidwill, who will save on some of the start-up costs.

Maybe Jerry Colangelo was able to coax the City of Phoenix into paying for Bank One Ballpark, but Mesa voters must be smarter than that.

While Phoenix citizens funded the endeavor, the real winners were big corporations: the Diamondbacks franchise, Bank One, TGIFriday's and other food vendors. Where is your share of that investment's return? In Mr. Colangelo's hands.

At least Colangelo had one argument on his side: Phoenix didn't have a baseball stadium, and for baseball fans, that element was critical.

Bidwill cannot make the same claim. The Arizona Cardinals have been in the Valley for 10 seasons, and they have had a home here at Sun Devil Stadium.

It's a good stadium. It's state-of-the-art, and it's as good as many other NFL stadiums around the country. It's good enough for the Sun Devils, the Fiesta Bowl and even the Super Bowl.

So the Cardinals are the only team in the NFL who share a stadium with a collegiate team. They feel slighted, even a little embarrassed, Bidwill has claimed.

If they think their opponents are laughing because of their stadium, perhaps they should take a look at their record over the past decade.

Finally, $500 million is simply a lot of money. This is not pocket change that can be thrown around on a whim when worthier causes exist.

Although we cannot trace every tax dollar, we know where some of our money goes. We see children come home with textbooks. We see police officers patrolling the streets, and we see fire engines racing toward burning homes.

Sometimes, we wish we could see more tangible benefits from our tax dollars.

Sure, we want a larger budget, but we don't need more money for football stadiums or for private businesses.

We want children to have smaller classes, better teachers and more supplies. We want more police officers protecting these children.

If Mesa had half a billion dollars to spare over the next 20 years, they should put it toward these children. Toward their education. Toward the safety of their neighborhoods.

Not into pipe dreams of a return on this tremendous investment. The taxpayers will not see the financial reward for all that they have been asked to invest in this project.

Maybe there is one item I will buy in Mesa—a symbolic gesture, really.

Toilet paper.

Further allegations surface against Clinton

Last November, the conventional wisdom about the Monica Lewinsky scandal was that the charges against President Clinton would never lead to his impeachment in the U.S. House of Representatives and the subsequent Senate trial.

One circumstance may have persuaded more than a dozen moderate Republicans to vote for impeachment in December. Many of these Republicans examined classified evidence in an office set up in the Ford Building. This secret information was apparently critical in their decision. No Democrats went to the Ford Building to see this information.

I was watching television the day impeachment occurred and caught an interview with Rep. J.D. Hayworth from Arizona. He pointed out that there was additional information about the president, not available to the public, which influenced the decision of many of his colleagues. He insisted he was not trying to tease anyone with information, but he did acknowledge that this classified information had nothing to do with Lewinsky.

Hayworth has a reputation for being partisan and combative. What stood out in my mind from the interview was Hayworth's expression while explaining the existence of this classified information. He looked completely blown away — shocked. His general countenance may be a consequence of the incredibly trying day that he had just experienced, but the classified information seemed to have a profound effect on him.

In an internal memo from ABC News, obtained and reported on by the Internet news site, Newsmax.com, top producer Chris Isham reveals that some of the classified materials examined by House members concerned a woman referred to as Jane Doe #5. According to the memo, Hayworth had said off the record that information about Jane Doe #5, as well as other women, made Clinton look like a "sexual predator." (More information on the memo can be found at www.newsmax.com.)

Paula Jones' lawyers inappropriately revealed Jane Doe #5 as Juanita Broaddrick.

Broaddrick met Bill Clinton in 1978, when he was the attorney general for the state of Arkansas. She had volunteered to work on his gubernatorial campaign and he went to her room ostensibly to discuss her nursing-home business.

According to the Drudge Report — www.drudgereport.com, NBC interviewed four sources and gleaned that several years ago, Broaddrick confided the following: Clinton forced himself on her and she resisted. There was extreme violence, ripped clothing and then rape.

Broaddrick told Phillip Yoakum, a friend from Arkansas, about the alleged incident. He actually encouraged her to come forward with these charges when Clinton ran for President in 1992 and wrote her a letter in an attempt to persuade her.

The contents of this letter were revealed by NBC News last March. "I was particularly distraught when you told me of your brutal rape by Bill Clinton ... (how) he started trying to kiss you and ran his hands all over your body until he ripped your clothes off and how he bit your lip until you gave into his forcing sex upon you." According to Paula Jones' lawyers, who filed the document in their sexual harassment case against the president, Clinton then used both bribes and intimidation to keep her silent.

It must be pointed out that he said he was told of the event in 1981, when it allegedly occurred in 1978. The leaked ABC News memo indicated that Yoakum was considered to be unreliable.

However, Yoakum also referred to a nurse who took care of Broaddrick after this alleged incident at a nearby hospital. The nurse, according to NBC News, stated that Broaddrick was "distracted, her lips were swollen at least double in size ... She told me they had intercourse against her will."

Both Yoakum and the nurse refer to Broaddrick's lip. Either both individuals colluded in making up this story or they both saw the same thing.

Broaddrick has changed her story at least twice. After acknowledging the story just after it allegedly occurred, she denied any sexual encounter with Clinton in January 1998 in an affidavit for the Paula Jones case. However, the following point cannot be overstated: when the House Judiciary Committee released documents last year, it was revealed that Broaddrick, as Jane Doe #5, had contacted Ken Starr's office and stated that she had submitted a false affidavit.

On March 30, 1998, the London Daily Telegraph interviewed Broaddrick and she acknowledged a "traumatic encounter" with Clinton that "turned her life upside down." She refused to go into more detail, saying she did not want to "relive her ordeal."

According to the Drudge Report, Lisa Myers of NBC News has investigated these charges since last April and has conducted an interview at Broaddrick's home for the show Dateline. The contents of that interview are not known.

NBC News will probably not air the interview. One executive reportedly expressed the fear of "throwing the impeachment trial into chaos."

Should they air the interview? I believe so. That's why I wrote this column.

Survey: People who choose to cohabit pre-marriage are more likely to divorce

BY MICHELLE BOORSTEIN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — A growing body of research has found that contrary to popular belief, people who live together before marriage are more likely than other couples to divorce.

According to a report released this week from the National Marriage Project at Rutgers University, studies done over the past decade found the same connection between living together before marriage and splitting up after.

The hot question for marriage and family sociologists these days is why.

Many researchers believe the reason is partly that people who live together are more unconventional to begin with and are less committed to the institution of marriage and more open to the possibility of divorce.

The authors of the latest report suspect something more insidious — that living together slowly erodes people's ability to commit and their faith in the institution of marriage.

"You get into a pattern that works against having a long-term, committed relationship," said Barbara Whitehead, co-director of the National Marriage Project.

The project is nonpartisan but is funded by mainly conservative, traditional family foundations.

Among the recent studies on cohabitation and marriage was one released in 1997 by the National Center for Health Statistics. It showed that 27 percent of women who lived with someone before getting married ended up divorced within five years. Ten percent of women who never lived with a boyfriend saw their marriages dissolve in the same period.

Another study, which was done in 1992 and based on figures from the National Survey of Families and Households, found that couples who lived together before marriage are 46 percent more likely to see their marriages dissolve.

Old Main being restored to its former Romanesque glory

By STEPHANIE PATERIK
STATE PRESS

Old Main, a token from ASU's past, is on its way to becoming more than just a relic.

The three-story, red-brick building, originally constructed in 1898, was first renovated in 1952. Its appearance was altered during that renovation, but by May 2000, Old Main is set to be restored to its original design and purpose.

After a month of construction, Old Main is on its way to meeting that goal, said ASU's project coordinator Jason Eslamieh.

The restoration of the oldest building on campus will cost $5.7 million, Eslamieh said. The state Historic Preservation Office donated $243,000 for the project and local University funds will cover $1.5 million. Private donations, primarily from alumni, make up the remaining cost.

"Our alumni are funding most of the cost, which is a testimony from them that ASU needs a home for its alumni to come back to on campus," said Susan Dolberg, director of the ASU Alumni Association.

Of the building's 30,000 square feet, 21,000 will be renovated to recreate its original luster.

Once completed, the building will house the University's Alumni Association offices. A ballroom that used to host Wednesday night dances is being recreated to host meetings, weddings, caucuses and possibly Arizona Board of Regents' meetings.

All of the building's interior will be decorated in the Romanesque style of its original time period, and its face will don balconies and an elaborate staircase.

"This was the largest, most innovative building in Tempe when it was built," Eslamieh said. "Now it will serve as a point of reference for the campus, to measure our history and rate our successes by."

Old Main has never been accessible to disabled people, which spurred the design committee to create a freestanding utility tower on its north side. It will contain an elevator and restrooms that will be linked to Old Main with a bridge.

"It's really important for us to keep this building intact," Eslamieh said. "We're trying to maintain the historic integrity of the building, so we're making all additions freestanding."

While construction workers continue to renovate to meet their schedule, the Alumni Association anxiously awaits the completion of its new home.

"It will be nice for us to have a permanent place to function," Dolberg said. "And because the University has grown so quickly, it's important for all of us to recognize our roots and let (Old Main) be the anchor for the University."

ASU provost Milton Glick said he is pleased with the project's progress.

"The restoration is moving right along, and it's part of our effort to encourage a life-long relationship between students and alumni," he said. "It's going to be a very important link for the University with its alumni."

Legislative bills affecting Arizona university students go online

By JAYSON PETERS
STATE PRESS

With the future of Arizona's universities in the hands of state lawmakers, efforts are being made to keep students informed of important legislation.

For the first time, a summary of legislative bills that could affect ASU, UofA and NAU is available on the Arizona Students' Association Web site.

"We're trying to utilize that mechanism more," said Sam Leyvas, ASA executive director. "Everybody seems to be on the Web. It's just a great way to see what's going on."

Leyvas said the material has always been available in hard copy. Putting it up on the Web, he said, was in response to frequent calls from students and government agencies.

"The more information that's out there, the better," Leyvas said.

The Arizona Board of Regents has provided a legislative bill summary on its Web site for the last four years, said Norma Salas, ABOR spokeswoman.

"It's convenient for interest groups at the universities (such as ASA)," she said. "They like to stay informed, so we keep them informed about the bills as they go through the process (of becoming law)."

Some bills pending include a proposed cap on tuition increases, a ban on remedial courses at universities and community colleges and a proposal to rename ASU West "Barry Goldwater State University" and make it a four-year, baccalaureate university.

Leyvas expressed doubt Tuesday that the ASU West name change item would survive to become law.

"My sense is that Barry Goldwater really wanted very little (recognition)," he said. "That was part of the greatness about (him), a testament to who he was."

Salas said several additional Senate bills should be posted by Friday. The delay, she said, is due to a rush in Senate bills submitted simultaneously by the Monday deadline.

Some of the bills left to be summarized on the ABOR Web site include one that would prohibit the use of social security numbers as student identification numbers and a return of legislation that would protect "whistleblowers" — university employees who expose wrongdoing — from punishment.

New Arizona ad campaign encourages abstinence

By JODIE LAU
STATE PRESS

The Arizona Department of Health Services is spending $3.5 million on a statewide campaign to promote abstinence before marriage.

The campaign, which began mid-January, is designed to reduce the teen birthrate and out-of-wedlock births in Arizona. Currently, the state has the third highest birthrate for teen-agers ages 15-19 in the nation. Eighty-two percent of teen pregnancies in 1997 were from unmarried mothers, according to ADHS data.

Brad Christensen, ADHS communications director, said abstinence is an important topic in Arizona and needs to be addressed.

"If we don't do anything, that's not going to help," Christensen said. "Teen-agers have to have abstinence presented to them as an option."

Christensen said he believes the state is "on the right track" toward making abstinence a priority.

Part of the program cost is devoted to advertising and local organization programs. Radio spots are expected to air within the next few weeks and three television spots began running in mid-January and will continue through June.

"People really like the ads," Christensen said. "They think they're heading in the right direction with impact."

"It's not a 'Say No' campaign," he added. "We're also not trying to suggest that sex is bad or dirty — only that it can wait."

Locally, organizations are offering abstinence-based educational programs and services. These programs are geared toward both teen-agers and adults alike.

The ASU Community Health Services clinic in Scottsdale is one of the 13 organizations educating the community on abstinence. The clinic, sponsored by ASU's College of Nursing, is working with the Phoenix-based Salvation Army Drug and Alcohol Recovery Center.

The clinic is offering four 10-week sessions, designed for rehabilitation graduates, making it one of the few programs geared toward the adult community. The last session will begin in March.

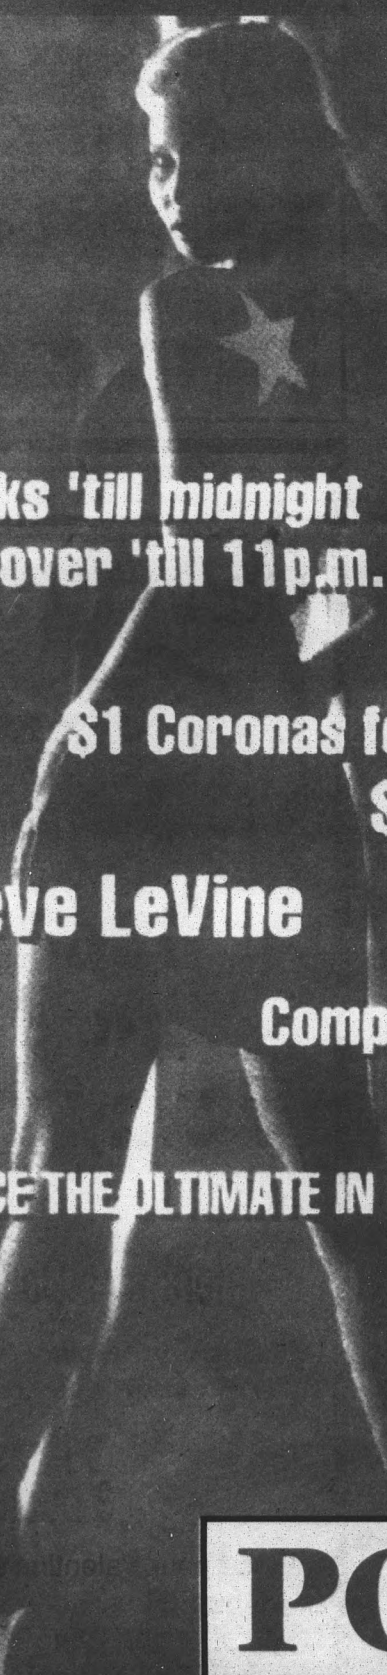

"We're teaching this particular group of individuals how to make choices," said Elizabeth Holman, director of ASU Community Health Service. "We expand upon self-esteem, responsibility, self-worth and the ability to make decisions."

Margaret Manchester, a family nurse practitioner, is working with the class and said she believes the program is going well.

One hundred participants have already been through the program and currently there are 40 students enrolled.

"The adult population needs to receive this information," Manchester said. "I'm hoping that (the class) will influence their choices as far as sexual behavior goes."

Police said she used a computer to change her move-in date from month to month and was therefore able to make the apartment appear vacant. This resulted in a $5,200 loss to the complex's management company. She was booked into the Tempe City Jail.

Reports compiled by State Press reporter Jayson Peters.

Couple says they were threatened

ALLAHABAD, India (AP) — A Christian missionary couple said Tuesday they were threatened and ordered to close their school in northern India, but they did not know who was responsible.

"They came to our school and asked us to shut it down," John Sylvester said of the incident last fall in a village 50 miles from the northern town of Allahabad.

Sylvester, an Indian citizen, and his American wife Helen Kay Sylvester have worked in the rural area since 1988, running an elementary and middle school for 350 children. The school remains open.

"We don't know who they (attackers) were, and we said so to the local authorities," Sylvester said. "This is a sensitive issue and I do not want to aggravate the problem."

Christian groups across India have counted some 100 attacks in the last year ranging from the burning of Bibles to the Jan. 23 killing of an Australian missionary and his two sons in southeastern India.

Many of the attacks on Christians were allegedly carried out by right-wing ideological affiliates of the governing Bharatiya Janata Party. Hindu rightists deny responsibility for the attacks.

New food shortages feared in earthquake zone

By Vivian Sequera
Associated Press

ARMENIA, Colombia — Emergency food supplies are dangerously low for the more than 200,000 people left homeless by last week's earthquake in Colombia, authorities said Tuesday.

The officials said private donations were dropping off precipitously, and appealed for more aid to fill the gap between what Colombians need and what the government and international relief agencies have rushed in.

Aid officials were trying to avoid a repeat of the first few days after the Jan. 25 earthquake, when food shortages were widespread due to the magnitude of the devastation and bureaucratic delays. Frustration over those shortages fueled waves of looting.

"We have food for four or five more days," said Juan Manuel Urrutia, head of the Colombian Institute for Family Well-Being, a government agency. "We're working to avoid a food crisis."

The highest priority for aid are children, he said. About 25,000 children were receiving milk and basic foodstuffs in Quindio — the state most severely affected by the magnitude-6 earthquake.

The U.N. World Food Program was distributing about 25,000 food rations packets a day, he said. And a plane from Italy stocked with portable kitchen gear, generators and $200,000 worth of beans was expected at Armenia's airport on Tuesday.

Despite strong foreign donations, Urrutia said the cash-strapped Colombian government would have to begin purchasing food, in part to make up for a falloff in donations by private Colombians.

At the central donation center in Bogota, where as many as 6,000 people arrived daily to donate supplies during the first days after the quake, only 400 showed up Monday with boxes and shopping bags of food.

Earthquake survivors need to get enough calories not only to survive but to return to work or begin rebuilding their shattered homes.

It will cost as much as $950 million to rebuild and repair the estimated 35,000 homes rendered uninhabitable by the earthquake, two-thirds of them in Armenia, Colombia's planning director Jaime Ruiz said Tuesday.

Anatilia Parra sits by the destroyed church of Barcelona, a small village near Armenia, which was damaged by last week's earthquake, Tuesday. The powerful earthquake that shook Colombia's central coffee-growing region killed near 1,000 people and made tens of thousands homeless.

More than 600 people were killed in the state capital, Armenia, a city of 300,000 residents that now is largely in ruins. Calarca, a town 15 minutes from Armenia, had at least 110 deaths in the earthquake and more than 200 people were killed elsewhere in the coffee-growing region.

Year after tragedy, families press for compensation

By Vania Grandi
Associated Press

CAVALESE, Italy — The families of the 20 people killed when a U.S. Marine jet sliced a ski gondola line demanded Tuesday that the United States compensate them for their losses.

Some 25 relatives, gathering in Italy one year after the tragedy, complained that the United States allocated $20 million to the ski resort town, while failing to give enough compensation to them.

"How could twisted metal be more important to the U.S. government than twisted bodies and lost lives?" said a statement read in four languages by the sisters, brothers, daughters and mothers of the victims.

"It is clear that the United States is responsible for this accident, and it is only fair for these families to be compensated for the wrongful death of their loved ones," it said.

A EA-6B Prowler jet on a low-level training mission severed the cable of the Mount Cermis gondola line on Feb. 3, 1998.

The 20 killed were a Polish mother and son, seven German sports buddies, five Belgian classmates, two retired Italian shopkeepers, an Austrian concert violinist and railway worker, a Dutch student and the Italian cable car operator.

Defense and prosecution lawyers have agreed that the Mount Cermis ski lift was not marked on the map given to the pilot, Capt. Richard Ashby, 31, an ASU alumnus now residing in Mission Viejo, Calif. However, prosecutors claim he was flying too fast and too low when the jet struck the cable.

Ashby's court-martial begins Thursday in Camp Lejeune, N.C. He faces a 200-year sentence if convicted of 20 counts of involuntary manslaughter. The jet's navigator, Capt. Joseph Schweitzer, 31, of Westbury, N.Y., faces court-martial later.

"I don't care if he (Ashby) gets 200 years or 20 in prison, because that does not bring our family back," said Sindy Renkewitz, 20, whose father and older sister were killed.

The attorney representing the German and Polish victims, John Arthur Eaves, said he had asked Washington for approximately $5 million for each victim.

"In the U.S. a few days ago, a baseball used by (Mark) McGwire to hit his 70th home run sold for $3 million," Eaves said.

"Certainly, the value of these people is worth more than a baseball."

Eaves appealed to Congress to give "special treatment" to the victims, so they can avoid years of waiting for action in Italian courts.

The U.S. Embassy in Rome said Tuesday it had no comment on the demands.

The victims have so far received $5,000 from the United States to cover immediate expenses plus $62,000 from the Italian government, 75 percent of which was reimbursed by the United States.

The United States gave millions to the town of Cavalese, which lost business when the gondola was destroyed. A new cable car began running in January, thanks in part to the funds.

Dueling Jaggers prepare for nasty divorce battle

BY SUE LEEMAN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — Reports say she may unleash American divorce lawyers in search of a massive payout. He still maintains they were never legally married.

Jerry Hall's woebegone expression last week during a Paris shopping spree said it all: Her divorce fight with Rolling Stone Mick Jagger, the man she lived with for 21 years and married in 1990, promises to be down and dirty.

The feisty Texas-born model put up with years of infidelities, but apparently considered it too much to bear when newspapers reported 29-year-old Brazilian model Luciana Gimenez Morad was five months pregnant with Jagger's child.

One consolation: The public — and the British tabloids — certainly seem to be on Hall's side.

"Jumping Jack Cash and the art of being a cad, cad, cad," The Express said in one headline, over a column that began, "Why is Mick Jagger so hell-bent on showing everyone what a complete pig he is?"

The Daily Mail ran a grim and grimacing picture of the 55-year-old Jagger next to a headline posing the question, "Is this the stingiest old man in Britain?"

Gossipmongers reported this week that Hall, 42, is investigating Jagger's activities in Los Angeles, where he often has spent time at a mansion the couple owns there.

That's giving rise to speculation that she might be attempting to ferret out information damaging to her fizzled flame in the hopes of moving her divorce hearing from Britain to the United States, where even those who merely cohabit can claim as much as 50 percent of their partner's income.

Who's to say? Neither party is entertaining questions.

"Absolutely no comment," a spokeswoman for Hall insisted this week. Publicists for Jagger did not return several phone calls.

Jagger and Hall — who have four children, the youngest 1 year old — also own homes in London, New York, France and on the West Indian island of Mustique worth a total of more than $16 million, though it has not been disclosed whose names are on the titles.

The considered opinion is that she is after a suitable slice of his wealth — perhaps $48 million out of what is rumored to be a $240 million fortune.

One thing's for sure: She will not settle for the $1 million awarded to her predecessor, Bianca, in 1979.

Jagger is contesting Hall's petition on the grounds that the couple's Hindu marriage ceremony on the island of Bali was simply a religious ceremony carrying no civil weight.

To represent him in the divorce battle, he is reported to have appointed Rolling Stones lawyer Joyce Smyth, a tax expert with little experience with litigation or divorce cases.

By contrast, Hall has hired the high-profile firm of Mishcon de Reya, which handled Princess Diana's 1996 divorce from Prince Charles and won her a $27 million settlement.

New York-based lawyer Raoul Felder, who has been hired by the Brazilian model for undisclosed reasons, has speculated that Hall will "have a hard time arguing that her main residence is in America. ... It is clear their home is in London."

But Mark Stephens, an international litigation expert with the London firm Stephens Innocent, said that might not be the case. "It is the domicile of her birth and she has property there, which will help," he said.

Rebels confirm they will attend peace talks

BY KATARINA KRATOYAC
ASSOCIATED PRESS

PRISTINA, Yugoslavia — Ethnic Albanian rebels reluctantly agreed Tuesday to take part in weekend peace talks aimed at ending the bloody 11-month conflict in Kosovo — a decision that focused international pressure on the hard-line Yugoslav government.

Rebel participation had been thrown into doubt after spokesman Adem Demaci recommended against sending delegates. However, the main Kosovo Liberation Army spokesman, Jakup Krasniqi, told reporters in central Kosovo that the KLA would name its delegates Wednesday.

"We have some objections to the proposed document, but we are certainly ready to go," Krasniqi said in comments welcomed by Clinton administration officials.

Yugoslav President Slobodan Milosevic has sent the matter over to the Serb Parliament, which meets Thursday, and resisted giving any signal on whether the Serbs will send delegates to the talks organized by the United States and five European countries. The government has been against any terms that would erode its control over Kosovo, a province in Serbia, the main republic in Yugoslavia.

Both sides face the threat of NATO strikes if they haven't started talks by Saturday in Rambouillet, France, and reached a deal by Feb. 19 to end the conflict over Kosovo Albanians' demand for independence.

More moderate Kosovo Albanian political leaders already have said they would attend, but the key negotiating parties to any settlement are President Slobodan Milosevic's government and the KLA, the warring parties in the conflict over ethnic Albanians' demand for independence.

Krasniqi said the KLA wants to send four delegates as part of the ethnic Albanian negotiating team, expected to number about 15.

The proposed U.S. peace plan at the talks in France would give Kosovo greater autonomy for the first three years. Political parties would decide what happens after that.

Krasniqi said KLA representatives will demand that Kosovo become an international protectorate for three years while negotiators work out a final status for Kosovo. They also want any decision on Kosovo's future to be put to a referendum by the "people of Kosovo."

Ethnic Albanians are by far the majority among the 2 million people of Kosovo, and most want independence.

While deferring the question of participation in the talks, the Yugoslav government appealed to the U.N. Security Council to convene an urgent meeting on Kosovo to prevent what it called the "open and clear threat of aggression" posed

Dimitri Messinis of the Associated Press
From behind a mud-splattered car window, an ethnic Albanian makes a victory sign from a convoy of cars leaving the village of Stimlje, Yugoslavia, Tuesday, headed for Pristina to retrieve the remains of 45 relatives massacred in the village of Racak on Jan. 16. After two weeks of forensic investigation, authorities allowed relatives to pick up the bodies.

by NATO's threatened military strikes.

The NATO threat "directly undermines the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the FRY (Federal Republic of Yugoslavia) and flagrantly violates the principles enshrined in the U.N. Charter," Yugoslav Foreign Minister Zivadin Jovanovic said in a letter to the council.

Despite the anti-NATO maneuvers, Dusko Matkovic, a vice president of Milosevic's Socialist Party, suggested in remarks published Tuesday that the Serbs are likely to send their delegation to France.

He said NATO pressure "further strengthens Serbian and Yugoslav resolve to find a peaceful solution for Kosovo through negotiations."

The conflict between Kosovo separatists and Serb and Yugoslav forces has killed at least 2,000 people, most of them civilians, and made refugees out of hundreds of thousands.

Hundreds of people have been killed in continuing violence since an October truce halted most combat, including 45 ethnic Albanians whose brutal slayings in Racak on Jan. 15 prompted renewed international calls for peace in Kosovo.

Survivors from Racak gathered Tuesday outside the morgue in Pristina on Tuesday to demand Serbs release the Racak bodies for burial. The Serbs refused, despite intervention by the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, and the villagers said they wouldn't leave until they had all the corpses.

Meanwhile, the ethnic Albanians' Kosovo Information Center reported Tuesday that two villages in Kosovo's Drenica region and another in the Podujevo region were shelled by heavy Serb artillery overnight. There were no reports of casualties.

"We had our opportunities in every ballgame that we played except in the Oregon State game. I feel like we've improved a lot. We've given ourselves chances to win basketball games" — ASU men's head basketball coach Rob Evans

Sun Devils working on late-game situations

BY NICK PICORO
STATE PRESS

Before practice Monday, ASU men's basketball coach Rob Evans and his team convened to watch the last part of Saturday night's loss to Stanford on video tape.

"(We) looked at it as a team," Evans said Tuesday at his weekly press conference, "and looked at the things we should have done, we could have done, and hope that when we come up again in that situation we'll execute a little better."

During the last 10 minutes of the game, the Sun Devils (12-9, 4-5 in the Pac-10) went from up six points to losing by 10, thanks mainly to a 16-0 run by the Cardinal during which they held ASU scoreless for nearly nine minutes.

Evans said that his team has been working on late-game situations for a while now, having lost close ballgames to UCLA, USC, UofA and now Stanford.

"We've been really working at that. We've worked at that for a while," Evans said. "The thing that you find is that it's always something different so it's hard to figure out what to work on. It's a turnover here, or a missed free throw here.

"We've just fallen short of making plays. But we've made some plays in some ballgames, too."

The Sun Devils had won two straight close games, against Oregon and Cal, prior to the Stanford loss.

Swingman Derrick Davis' availability, due to academic matters, is still unknown.

"The kid has to do a lot of things," Evans said. "He's had to take some tests and do a lot of things. It just has to run its course."

Junior Jason Patton, who's played more in Davis' absence, has been improving, according to Evans.

"I think he's playing better in practice," Evans said. "He's doing a good job of rebounding the basketball for us. We're looking for some bodies — we're looking for some guys that can step up and give us some minutes. He's a guy that has played a little bit of basketball on this level. He was the logical guy. And he's stepped in and given us some pretty good minutes."

Patton fouled out of the Stanford game after playing only 16 minutes, making the Sun Devils even more vulnerable at the small forward position.

"It's been a tough match-up for us all year," Evans said. "That's a position that's really been a tough situation for us because we're playing smaller guys there that are not really rebounders and are not guys who can really get in and defend inside as well. So we've been having to try to overcome that one all year long."

At the halfway point of the conference schedule, Evans believes that the team has improved all season long, from game to game, even in those that the Sun Devils didn't win.

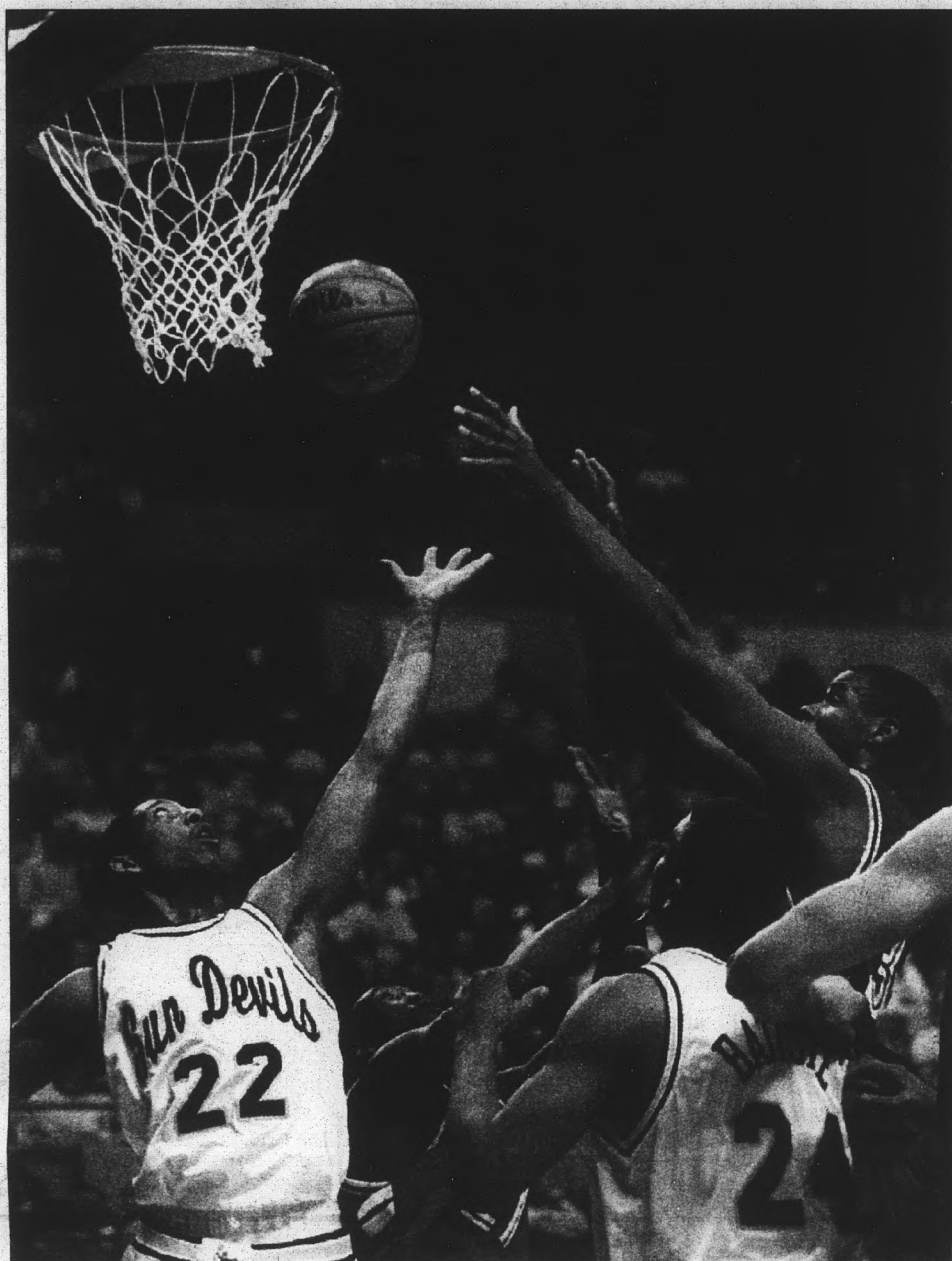

"I felt like we played pretty well. We had our opportunities in every ballgame that we played except in the Oregon State game," he said. "I feel like we've improved a lot. We've given ourselves chances to win basketball games."

The second half of the season also presents more of a challenge from the standpoint that the teams have all seen each other once.

"Everybody knows a bit more about their opponents," Evans said. "The players know a little bit more about each other."

"We've just fallen short of making plays. But we've made some plays in some ballgames, too."

Due to the academic woes of swingman Derrick Davis, Jason Patton (22), formerly an afterthought of head coach Rob Evans, has been receiving more minutes in recent games, and, according to Evans, has been one of the team's most productive bench players.

Golfers place fifth

BY CLINT CURRIE
STATE PRESS

The ASU men's golf team rallied early Tuesday and secured fifth place — while passing up UofA — in the Ping/Arizona Invitational in Tucson.

To open the second day, Jin Park shot a 66 on the par-71 course and Brad Cannon shot a 69 to help pull the Sun Devils up in the tournament from their No. 11 spot.

UofA fell three notches, going from No. 8 to No. 9, in the 19-team field. Summing up UofA's day was Derek Gillespie. On Monday, he netted a first round 66 (5-under par). Gillespie's final round was a 74 (3-over). UofA had a total of 879 (27-over) for its three round total.

Park's performance earned him a tie for fifth place out of the 103 golfers. He shot rounds of 71-66-75 (1-under). ASU's next best performers, Greg Padilla and Jeff Quinney, tied for 20th place at 4-over. Padilla had rounds of 75-70-72 and Quinney had rounds of 70-71-76. Brad Cannon finished in 54th place at 12-over with rounds of 78-69-78.

In tournament play, five golfers participate for the team with only the top four finishes counting toward the total team score. ASU's fifth golfer was Paul Casey. The Ping turned into his worst collegiate tournament. He tied for 93rd place, shooting 26-over par. What makes Casey's finish more surprising is the fact that he is the defending Pac-10 and NCAA West Regional champion and is the 19th best player in the country, according to the MasterCard Men's Collegiate rankings.

ASU's third individual, Jason Hause, tied for 80th place at 18-over.

Unranked Washington beat out seven top-25 teams to win the tourney. The Huskies shot a total of 861 (9-over). The top team in the tournament, No. 3 Houston, finished in the No. 7 spot. Also floating among the top eight finishers was USC, UCLA, Fresno State, Florida, and Pepperdine. UofA's J.V. team finished directly behind its varsity counterpart in the No. 10 spot.

Jeremy Hein of the State Press

Jeff Quinney tied teammate Greg Padilla for 20th place at the Ping/Arizona Invitational in Tucson on Tuesday. Quinney had rounds of 70, 71 and 76 to help ASU rally and capture fifth place in the tournament.

ASU to celebrate women in sports

FROM STAFF REPORTS

Sun Devil women's sports teams will be in the spotlight for the next two weeks beginning on Thursday.

ASU and American Humanics will present a celebration of girls and women in sports from Feb. 4-13. The celebration, which includes a number of ASU women's athletic events, is held in conjunction with the National Girls and Women in Sports Day on Thursday.

The celebration will start on Thursday with the ASU women's basketball game against Washington State at 7 p.m. at Wells Fargo Arena. The game will be the first of five ASU athletic events that groups of boys and girls up to age 17 can watch for free if they wear a t-shirt representing a youth agency or school (i.e. Girl Scouts, Valley Big Brothers-Big Sisters).

On Friday, USA gymnast Amanda Borden will address the crowd at 6 p.m. before the gymnastics meet between ASU and UCLA, which will start at 7:30.

The finale of the week comes on Saturday, Feb. 13, when the ASU women's basketball team hosts UofA as part of "Take a Kid to the Game Day." Game time is 6 p.m. at Wells Fargo Arena.

All-American Williams sacrifices personal glory to be a piece of the Sun Devils' championship puzzle

BY ROBERT DEAL
STATE PRESS

In his first year as a Sun Devil, senior Jeff Williams has added a lethal touch of "American Pride" to the men's tennis team.

Williams, who transferred from New Mexico, finished last season at the Lobos' No. 1 seed and made an appearance in the NCAA tournament on both the singles and doubles courts. He ended his season ranked 26th nationally in singles and 31st in doubles, helping him gain All-American status.

Williams attended Greenway High School in Phoenix, where he won the Arizona state championship his junior and senior years before being recruited to New Mexico to play for coach Tim Cass, who now serves as head coach of the Texas A&M team.

"I decided to go to New Mexico because of coach Cass," Williams said. "I had to get away from home for a while. I wanted to try to get out on my own."

He played at the No. 1 spot for three years, where he totaled an impressive 53-32 singles record and a 53-20 doubles record.

"He was an incredible player straight out of high school," Cass said. "He was always fun to watch and has an incredible attitude and will to win. I wish I had him on my team now, but I anticipate that he will do well with the competition in the Pac-10."

It was his junior year that he finally earned his All-American status and decided to transfer to the Pac-10.

"I came here for the competition that only the Pac-10 can provide," Williams said. "I'm only looking for one thing and that's the national title as a team."

"I did all of my individual stuff last year, I want to do it as a team this year and I know we have what it takes to take it all."

By transferring to ASU, Williams was forced to give up his coveted No. 1 spot to play at the No. 2 or 3 spot alongside teammates Alex Osterrieth and top-seeded Gustavo Marcaccio.

"(Williams) showed a lot of courage coming to a new team his senior year," ASU head coach Lou Belken said. "He had a very comfortable situation where he was. He was secured at No. 1 at New Mexico, but he wanted to come and challenge himself on a very good team in a great conference."

Williams doesn't seem to be too affected by the loss of his top position. He just wants to help in a team effort.

"I played No. 1 there, and I basically had a good year at that No. 1 spot," Williams explained. "It was a bit of a weaker team, though."

"I don't care if I'm playing at No. 6 so long as I can get my one point for the team that brings us that much closer to the big win in the end."

Before the addition of Williams to the Sun Devil lineup, the team was full of juniors and seniors that have played together for several years as one unit. While most would

Senior Jeff Williams, who was Texas A&M's No. 1 seed until this year, transferred to ASU and has made a flawless transition to the Sun Devils' lineup, where he often plays as the second or third seed.

Hyun Dong Lim of the State Press think it to be difficult just jumping onto a team as tight-knit as this, Williams has had no trouble adapting.

"The team's been great accepting me," he said. "I get along with all the guys and have made a lot of close friends."

"I feel so at home here. I won the state championship twice out here at Greenway my last two years of high school, and now it feels great to be back."

Priding himself on his strong forehand, Williams plays with a "quicker is better" attitude. It was in New Mexico that weather conditions gave him the ability to play the faster game that he prefers.

"The altitude's a lot higher in New Mexico," Williams said, "and the ball travels a lot quicker. It's so much slower here — it's like playing on clay courts in Argentina."

A typical match for Williams will start with a strong, aggressive first set. It's the second set that tends to slow down and make for lengthier volleys and groundstrokes.

"A lot of times I get bored out there," he said. "I'll play hard the first set and slow down a little bit in the second. It's something I really need to work on."

In the event that a match is forced to a third set, Williams once again steps his game up and plays at full force to defeat his opponent in quick style.

"If it comes down to a third set, it's a one time shot, and I tend to step up more in that situation," he said. "I like the third set because I get new fresh balls on the court, and it speeds the game up considerably."

While it is the loud cries of "vamos!" from Marcaccio's front court that fill the air at most ASU men's tennis dual matches, each player seems to have his own theme and his own ways of expressing the way he is playing.

"We got all these foreigners out here yelling all these different languages," Williams said. "I just prefer the old 'come on' approach. It's a good way to bring a little bit more of that American pride back to the school."

After college, Williams plans to further his tennis career on the professional tour. After playing in a few satellite tournaments, he hopes to eventually be world ranked and make his appearance in grand slam tournaments.

"I'm going to go play on the tour, and do it as long as I possibly can," Williams said. "With any luck I'll eventually make it into the top 100 in the world. At least that's my goal."

Although he dreams of one day winning the US Open, Williams must now concentrate on every collegiate match ahead of him this year. Starting at the No. 2 or 3 spot, he assures that he can help the team succeed and eventually end up winning it all.

"We're going to take the national title with this team," he said. "I have no doubt about it."

Elway should be like Mike

John Elway's greatness is permanently etched into the minds of bonafide sports nuts everywhere. And he has just reached the pinnacle of a storied professional football career by leading the Denver Broncos to their second straight Super Bowl triumph.

What else can the 38-year-old quarterback prove? Nothing.

That is why Elway, Super Bowl XXXIII's MVP, should retire on top. He should be like Mike and call it quits now, when the honor and dignity of being a champion is still there.

Michael Jordan knew when it was time to quit.

For His Airness, that time came last June — but announced in January — after the Chicago Bulls won their sixth NBA title in eight years. Indeed, it was a glorious ending to a fabulous career. Jordan's steal and subsequent game-winning shot with 1.1 seconds left at the United Center perfectly summed up the hardwood legend's greatness: unstoppable in the clutch.

For Jordan, that decision came because he realized he had no significant goals left to accomplish. And he understood that his dynamic repertoire of moves had seen its better days. This was a man who looked fatigued and drained — both mentally and physically — in last year's playoffs.

I'm not saying Elway doesn't have the capability to produce another Pro Bowl-caliber season. He still can fire the deep pass as good as other top gunslingers around the National Football League. And he can still engineer game-winning drives at will if needed.

But can Elway sustain hit after hit next season?

Who knows. Remember, Elway missed three games in '98 due to a variety of ailments. In his place, backup Bubba Brister filled in capably as the Broncos coasted to a 14-2 regular season.

Critics will say Elway should come back to try to win that elusive third straight Super Bowl. Sorry folks, it ain't gonna happen. The New York Jets, Jacksonville Jaguars, Minnesota Vikings and others will be ready — and more importantly hungry — to dethrone Denver.

Sadly, few things are as pathetic as watching a former superstar athlete cling to his career like Linus did to that damn blanket.

Baseball observers can point to Willie Mays' career as one that lasted several seasons too long. The ex-Giant, whose career spanned 24 seasons, didn't know when to quit, as was evident by his subpar output as a New York Met. Many will say it was painful to see the Hall of Famer look so average after years of consistent greatness.

Muhammad Ali didn't have a clue that his once sensational skills were diluted toward the end of his career. The flamboyant fighter was humiliated by Trevor Berbick in a 10-round fight on Dec. 11, 1981 in the Bahamas.

Wouldn't Ali's career have had a sweeter ending if he retired years before?

Of course.

Do us and yourself a favor, Elway. Be like Mike, not Mays or Muhammad. Ed Odeven can be reached via e-mail at starks4three@asu.edu.

Super Bowl MVP still has it

Should he or shouldn't he?

That is the question on all Denver Broncos fan's minds. John Elway has led the Broncos to five Super Bowls, winning the last two.

He had a rough year in '98 but he is still well equipped to lead the Broncos to another Super Bowl. Bubba Brister did a admirable job in backup role for the Broncos, but a 75 percent Elway is better than a healthy Brister.

There are other incentives for the return of Elway. He is already considered one of the top five greatest quarterbacks ever to play the game. If he returns, he could do what no other player has ever done — lead his team to three consecutive Super Bowl titles.

What a way to bring in the millennium.

Other players have made one last attempt at a championship in their respective sports as well. These players include Larry Bird, Joe Montana and Kareem Abdul-Jabbar.

Abdul-Jabbar had one final tour in the 1989-90 NBA season that was filled with gifts and lasting memories. The Los Angeles Lakers center played his final season when he was 42 years old. The Lakers returned to the Finals, but were swept in four games by the Detroit Pistons. He showed his greatness in game three, scoring 24 points and grabbing 13 rebounds. He was happy to go out with a chance of winning the title. During his final season he averaged 10.1 points a game and shot 47 percent from the field.

Super Bowl XXXIII is a great indication that Elway still has the arm and body to compete in the NFL. He completed 18 of 29 passes for 336 yards, the third-highest total in Super Bowl history. He was the unanimous choice for MVP.

Last year, after winning his first Super Bowl and beating the Green Bay Packers, he ignored those critics and played. The team and Elway came close to completing an undefeated season, but lost to the New York Giants after they had won 13 straight. That did not phase the Broncos as they went on to finish 14-2 and win the Super Bowl.

Elway threw for 2,806 yards, 22 touchdowns and 10 interceptions in '98. He was plagued with a few minor injuries, but nothing too serious.

The Broncos, in general, are young, except for a few aging players. Defensive end Neil Smith and linebackers Seth Joyner and Bill Rowmanowski are going to be a year older.

The final incentive for Elway's return is T.D., Terrell Davis. The Broncos will not throw the ball as much as any other team. Davis is the most complete running back in the game. He could carry the ball 30 to 40 times a game. This would limit Elway to only throw the ball 25 times a game.

That powerful Super Bowl feeling Elway felt would be gone forever. He played his whole career, hoping, dreaming of that feeling. If he retires, Elway will never feel it again. If he doesn't ...

After going 0-for-3 in the Super Bowl, how does 3-for-3 sound?

Vaughn traded to Reds for Sanders

SAN DIEGO (AP) — The Padres' Greg Vaughn, who set a club record with 50 homers last year, was traded to the Cincinnati Reds Tuesday in a five-player deal that sent oft-injured Reggie Sanders to San Diego.

San Diego also sent left-handed pinch-hitter Mark Sweeney to the Reds, who also gave up infielder Damian Jackson and minor leaguer Josh Harris. The Padres have been looking to unload Vaughn, who will make $5.75 million in the final season of a three-year contract. But they take on Sanders' $3.7 million salary, plus his history of injuries.

Cincinnati general manager Jim Bowden said the Reds originally wanted San Diego GM Kevin Towers to agree to pay more than $1 million of Vaughn's salary.

"But when the day was done, their need was to reduce payroll," Bowden said. "He told me we had the athletes they wanted."

Cincinnati was 12th in the NL with 138 home runs last season and traded Bret Boone, its home run leader, to Atlanta after the season.

Bowden said that if the Reds compete for a playoff spot and ticket sales increase, they could afford Vaughn for an entire season. If they don't contend, Bowden said Vaughn could be traded in July.

The trade of Vaughn continues a financial makeover of the Padres, who claim that they've lost about $50 million since John Moores and Larry Lucchino bought the team in December 1994.

Although Towers said that money wasn't behind the trade, he noted that Vaughn will be a free agent after this season and could command a huge contract to stay beyond 1999. Sanders has an option for 2000 at $3.7 million.

"The thing that's most appealing is we're able to control Reggie for another year and Vaughn, we didn't know if we could," Towers said. "That salary fits in very well to the structure of all our other players, so we can stay competitively balanced throughout our 25-man roster."

Since being swept by the New York Yankees in the World Series, the Padres had a new ballpark approved by the voters, but also lost have lost ace Kevin Brown, center fielder Steve Finley, third baseman Ken Caminiti and have traded starter Joey Hamilton.

Lenny Ignelzi of the Associated Press

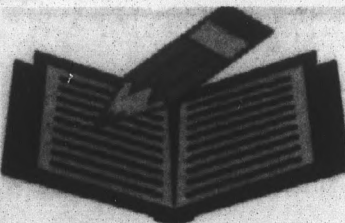

Greg Vaughn will be cooling himself off in Cincinnati this year as opposed to San Diego as a result of Tuesday's trade that sent the slugger to the Reds in a five-player deal.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Recently, you attempted to let things go. Fortunately, you snapped back to reality. Diet was affected — too much of a good thing. Capricorn plays role.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You gain allies, you also help others to resolve dilemmas. Let go of losing proposition. See people, places as they are, not merely as you wish they could be. Aries represented.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Someone is planning to pull a surprise on you. Have facts, figures in order — you'll be told. "I love you truly!" Emphasis SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Study Libra message, be positive you are getting fair deal. Friends, hopes, wishes, good fortune in finance, romance — these part of current cycle. Gemini represented.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Strive for harmony, dance to your own tune, play role of mediator in connection with family quarrel. Repeat some steps in order to assure accuracy. Libra in picture.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Toss aside preconceived notions. You could be entering world of mystery. Be open-minded without being gullible. Pisces individual becomes valuable ally. Define terms.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You are back in town and in fashion. Don't let down in drive for excellence. Make intelligent concession but don't waver from principles. Message becomes clear in dream soon.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You are on precipice of fame, fortune. Publicity accompanies record-breaking performance. You'll ask, "Is this really happening to me?" It is and you deserve it.

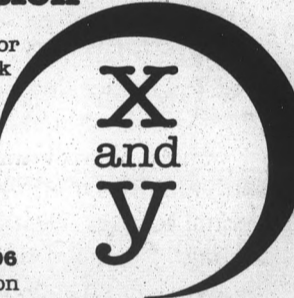

IF FEBRUARY 3 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: You have unusual sense of humor, a way with words, ability to transform puzzles into wisdom. February and November will be your most memorable months, financial investments featured along with desire for romance.
