Monica Fajardo, a pre-business sophomore, and Dennise Castrillon, a computer systems engineering junior, gear up Monday to help earthquake victims of their native country, Colombia. With help from the Red Cross, the two students are organizing a fund-raising event this week outside the Memorial Union.

Earthquake-ravaged country gets help from ASU students

BY ANDREA BALSKY
STATE PRESS

In an effort to help the people of their native country, two ASU students will start fundraising on campus this week for Colombian earthquake victims.

Monica Fajardo, a sophomore pre-business major, and Dennise Castrillon, a computer systems engineering major, came up with the idea of fundraising after learning that no one on campus had started collecting money for their country.

Later this week, Fajardo and Castrillon plan to raise money by setting up booths outside the Memorial Union and collecting donations from students walking by. All of the donated money will be given to the Red Cross, who will distribute it to the Colombian victims who need it the most. Additionally, they will be collecting food and clothes.

Castrillon, who is originally from Medellin, Colombia, said that she thinks it is important that students contribute to this cause.

"If people like us don't do anything, who will?" she said. "I think people just think 'Oh, they'll be fine,' but that's not true. There are still people with no homes, people who are hungry."

The earthquake, believed to be the worst to hit Colombia in more than a century, struck the western part of the South American country Jan. 25. It left more than 1,000 people dead and destroyed cities and villages where most of the world's coffee is grown. There were incidents of looting following the earthquake because there were not enough supplies available to meet the needs of the people.

Fajardo, who is originally from Colombia's capital, Bogota, feels the fundraising is necessary — especially now that the earthquake is not mentioned as frequently in the news.

"They really need the help down there," she said. "In the news, they've stopped talking about it, and people start forgetting about it, but it's still an ongoing problem in Colombia. People have lost everything."

Both Castrillon and Fajardo want to hold the fund-raiser as a way to give something back to the community and to help the people of their native country.

Besides student donations, the organizers also need students to volunteer their time to help with the effort. Some members of ASU's Society for Hispanic Professional Engineers have agreed to help with the fundraising, but still more are needed, Fajardo said.

"We want to get students involved," she said. "I think if students can volunteer, or even if everyone just gave $1, that would help a lot."

Fajardo and Castrillon have no set goal of how much money they want to raise.

Although Castrillon said she knows that the fund-raiser won't raise millions of dollars to help earthquake victims, she believes that any amount of money will help.

"By donating, students are contributing to the survival of others," she said.

ASASU resolution rallies around tuition cap bill

BY STEPHANIE PATERIK
STATE PRESS

Associated Students of ASU officers are sending a message to state representatives and the Arizona Board of Regents today that tuition for Arizona universities must be capped.

The ASASU senate passed a resolution last week in support of the Tuition Tax Relief Bill, which would limit how much ABOR can increase tuition each year to 1 percent above the rate of inflation.

The student government is sending copies of the resolution, along with a letter expressing their support for the bill, to state representatives on behalf of the student body.

"It seems like what ABOR says, goes, and there's no way to appeal their decisions," said ASASU Sen. Robert Sistik, who introduced the resolution. "We feel that having nine members (of ABOR) delegate tuition to over 100,000 students is a pitfall."

Sistik said he became concerned about Arizona's rising tuition when he learned that ABOR was discussing the possibility of increasing tuition by 30 percent in the next couple of years. In November, he began meeting with members of the Legislature to see what could be done to prevent these dramatic increases.

However, he said the idea of the house bill is not to put more power in the hands of the Legislature.

"We're not giving the Legislature more power, we're taking it from ABOR," Sistik said.

He added that the bill does not limit ABOR's authority in any area other than tuition.

Sistik and Paul Frost, ASASU president, have met frequently with Rep. Michael Gardner, R-Glendale, about the issue. Gardner is one of four representatives who proposed the tuition cap bill.

Turmoil in Indonesia forces student out

BY ERLAND AAS

Troops were everywhere and tanks rolled the streets of Java on an early February day, making ASU student Chris Green fear for his safety.

"It was pretty messy," the political science and religious studies senior said. "All the people seemed to have a feeling of inevitable violence."

Green was in Indonesia to finish up research for his thesis on the socio-religious hierarchy in traditional Javanese Islamic schools.

While Indonesia is awaiting its first truly free election in 35 years, scheduled for May 1, tension is building up on the main island, Java.

"The feeling is that before the dust settles it's going to be pretty bloody," Green said.

It was one major incident that made him reschedule his departure and return to Tempe last week.

"I was trying to get into Surabaya (a city on Java), but all the roads into the city were sealed off by the army, because there were demonstrations and riots in the city," Green said. "The soldiers refused to let me in because they were afraid I would get killed. That's when I realized that if the military was that worried about my safety, then I should be, too."

Despite his early departure, Green managed to complete his field research.

Peter Suwarno, an ASU assistant professor in Indonesian, said it is extremely chaotic in country right now, but most likely there will be no blood bath before the election.

"The only reason that it could happen would be after the election — not before," Suwarno, who is from Indonesia, said. "Because before the election people still have hope that the election will be conducted fairly, democratically and openly."

But Suwarno said a lasting peace depended upon the outcome of the election.

"If it is proven that the ruling government manipulated the votes and the election process, and if the ruling government wins the election, then I think that there will be (a revolt)," he

Some observers are afraid the military will control Indonesian politics from behind the scenes no matter what the outcome of the election is.

already support this bill," Sistik said. "Our efforts (at ASASU) will hopefully persuade those who are unsure about the idea of a tuition cap."

Frost said the bill, which is currently in caucus, would allow students to better plan for their financial future at the University.

"This limits (ABOR's) ability to continually raise our tuition without justification, which is what they've done for the past three years," he said. "Before they raised tuition last time, 150 students officially spoke out against it. It felt like ABOR was just rubber-stamping what the (universities) presidents wanted."

ASASU is encouraging NAU and UofA student governments to support the bill as well, but they have made no official statements so far, Sistik said.

"This would give students peace of mind that tuition can't be raised too high," Sistik said. "When you enter as a freshman, you could plan on how much it can increase by the time you get out."

Court martial for ASU graduate underway

BY ESTES THOMPSON
ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAMP LEJEUNE, N.C. — A Marine pilot and former Arizona State University student was hotdogging when his jet sliced through a ski gondola cable in the Italian Alps, killing 20 people, a prosecutor said in opening statements Monday at the aviator's court-martial.

In addition to flying his radar-jamming plane too low and too fast "whenever he had the opportunity" that day, Capt. Richard Ashby broke regulations by putting the aircraft through a barrel roll, Lt. Col. Carol Joyce said.

Ashby is charged with 20 counts of involuntary manslaughter, and other offenses, and could be sentenced to more than 200 years in prison.

Ashby, 31, was at the controls of an EA-6B Prowler on Feb. 3, 1998, when its wing cut the cable. The gondola plummeted to the ground, killing all 20 people aboard.

"Whenever he had the opportunity to fly too low and too fast, he did it," Joyce said.

Joyce said the Marine Corps had banned flights below 1,000 feet in Italy after a 1996 accident. The cable that Ashby's jet struck was 370 feet above the ground.

In addition, the prosecutor said, one of the two back-seat officers in the jet will testify that Ashby performed a 360-degree barrel roll as the jet swooped through a mountain valley.

A jet loses altitude fast during such a roll, the first prosecution witness testified later.

"At low altitude...it becomes very dangerous," said Maj. David Wilkinson, an aircraft weapons system officer from Marine Corps headquarters.

Ashby's attorney Capt. Jon Shelburne told the jury in his opening statement: "It was just an accident. It was an accident waiting to happen."

The pilot's lawyers have said that he didn't know the cable was there because it wasn't on the map he was issued, and that an optical illusion may have made him think he was flying higher than he was.

Community volunteers walk beats to make local neighborhoods safer

BY GANGA SUBRAMANIAN
STATE PRESS

Tempe citizens sporting bright orange and yellow vests and armed with cell phones will patrol their neighborhoods as part of a new city crime deterrent program.

The Citizens on Foot Patrol is a group of community volunteers who walk the streets and report suspicious activity and other problems to the police, said program developer Kathy Groenewold.

She said all volunteers will receive basic training and complete a four-hour ride-along with a Tempe police officer in their beat area. Volunteers will be trained on how they can spot suspicious activity, she added.

Tempe's program is modeled on a program run in Portland, Ore. Although Phoenix, Mesa, and Glendale have similar programs, these cities allow their volunteers to drive around in their own vehicles.

"In Tempe it's strictly walking," Groenewold said.

She said that because they are on foot, Tempe volunteers will be conspicuous in their bright vests. "Any visible vigilant activity is a deterrent for crime," she added. Also, the cell phones which will be handed out to volunteers will be programmed to dial 911 or the police non-emergency number.

Despite the fact the program has just been launched, residents of various apartment complexes have already started patrolling their neighborhoods regularly.

Nancy Dewitt, property manager at the Sonoma Park apartments at 2430 South Mill Ave., said there are nine volunteers in the complex. "We've had a great response," she said. She said the volunteers also alert residents who inadvertently leave vehicles unlocked or property unattended. She also said the main problem facing her complex is vehicle vandalism and vehicle thefts.

Volunteers submit a report of their surveillance activities regularly, she added.

Megan McGuire, an ASU Spanish senior and a volunteer at Sonoma Park, said she walks the area three or four days a week. "I haven't seen anything suspicious — fortunately," she said.

As for efficiency of community policing Groenewold said definite numbers that indicate that the programs work are not available.

Four people shot to death

PHOENIX (AP) — The sound of gunfire is not unusual in one of south Phoenix's roughest neighborhoods.

But neighbors were stunned at what happened early Sunday — the discovery of four people shot to death in a home.

Police said they had no witnesses, no suspect descriptions and there were no signs that anyone forced a way into the one-room brick shack.

"Nothing has been ruled out. Motives could range anywhere from debts to gang activity," said Det. Mike McCullough, a police spokesman.

The victims were later identified as Larry Eagens, 23, Rolanda King, 18, Jamal Lewis Aham, 21, and Leon Williams, 24. McCullough said they all were from Phoenix.

Police said they had numerous calls about shots being fired in the neighborhood throughout the early morning hours

Sunday and couldn't pinpoint what time the four were shot.

They added that large numbers of people had come and gone from the house Saturday. Someone who had been at the house earlier returned around 2:30 a.m., found the four dead and called police.

The area around the house is filled with small homes, most with their windows either barred or boarded up.

Some houses are separated by large weed-filled vacant lots, strewn with beer-bottle glass and empty spray-paint cans. Large painted concrete slabs show where homes used to be.

Eagens was renting the house, according to friends.

"He was (a gang member) when he was younger, but he got out. He was a family man," said Shante Langston, 19.

Police investigate death of 5-year-old for possible neglect or abuse

TUCSON (AP) — Police say there is something suspicious about the death of a 5-year-old girl who may have been left in a locked room with three other children at a baby sitter's apartment.

Investigators are looking into whether child abuse or neglect played a role in Felicia Gaspar's death, Detective Sgt. Ronald Thompson said Monday.

Felicia started vomiting Saturday while under the care of the sitter, a 51-year-old woman who lives at the same apartment complex as the girl and her family, Thompson said.

At some stage that night, the girl began vomiting blood, but the sitter did not take the girl to a doctor.

The sitter told police she knew the girl was ill, but it was unclear if she knew about the blood.

Thompson also described what he called a "lockup room" where police suspect

Felicia and her two young siblings, ages 5 months and 3 years, may have been kept. The sitter has a 6-year-old son.

He said the room has a deadbolt lock on the door and viewing holes. A television in the room is bolted on a table, and a hinged Plexiglas screen can be positioned in front of the TV controls so they cannot be changed.

The sitter found the child's body early Sunday when she went to check on her. Police believe the girl had been dead up to two hours.

Thompson said the sitter went to find the mother's boyfriend, who called 911.

Detectives are withholding the baby sitter's name pending further investigation.

Police do not know why the child became ill. Authorities have not ruled out an undiagnosed medical condition as the cause.

An autopsy was scheduled Monday.

Honors students are University's priority

Well, roll out the red carpet everyone — the honors gang is coming through.

In an blatantly discriminatory act, the University's Residential Life department, along with the Honors College, has decided to oust residents currently living in Center Complex's Best and Irish Halls to make room for their more-valued, and let's face it, more-important Honor's College students.

All residents currently living in these halls will have to pack up and find some other place to live, even though Residential Life doesn't seem to have a clue where that might be. After all, McClintock Hall, where the honors gang now resides, will become an all-freshman dorm, so that cuts that option out of residents' already slim housing choices.

When contacted for comment, Jennifer Hiatt, assistant director of Residential Life, said studies show honors students do better and retention rates go up when they associate with other honors students.

"We're not trying to say that they (honors students) are more important, their needs have just changed," Hiatt said.

But what about the needs of the other students? It turns out nobody seems to care. When asked if it was unfair to displace students in Center Complex so the honors gang doesn't have to be inconvenienced with cramped living, officials at Residential Life refused to comment.

In a story from last Tuesday's issue of the State Press, the department said displaced students can request new residence halls for next semester. Of course that doesn't mean they're going to get one.

As Louis Garcia, director of Ocotillo and Mariposa Halls, said, "It's important to remember that we do still have options available. Those options (getting into a dorm) just may be a little more competitive."

Ge... that's really nice. It's good to know the bureaucrats in Residential Life and the Honors College value our non-honors residential population so much.

"The Honors College expressed to us they need more space to expand," said Garcia in last Tuesday's article. Well then, allow us to pack their bags and hold the door for them!

It's hard for us here in the little basement we call the newsroom to imagine that people aren't raising their voices along with their picket signs for these unfortunate students.

Let's say this was an issue of race and a group of ethnic students were singled out in favor of another. Would we still idly sit by and do nothing?

Where are the crowds coming to sit in protest in front of Residential Life's doorstep like they did on Mill Avenue two weeks ago?

Are we at the State Press the only ones outraged by this complete lack of adherence to people's rights not to be discriminated against because they're not straight-A students?

Republicans reap what they sow

Practically every television and radio show in existence has over-analyzed and dissected the outcome of the Senate's vote on the impeachment of President Clinton.

Megan Nielson
columnist

As usual, only Saturday Night Live is right.

The show opened last Saturday with a scene featuring caricatures of Bill, Hillary, Monica, Vernon and company. Clinton made a tongue-in-cheek promise "not to gloat" about recent events in the Senate and the obvious outcome of his impeachment hearing. His cabinet passed around mugs of beer, Betty Curry danced across the stage and Clinton's aides scoffed openly at conservatives.

The skit closed as Clinton leered again into the camera, jeering at the Senate, "I don't care what you do!"

And America laughed along with him.

As conservative critics labor tirelessly to impeach the president, he's just too darn presidential for the rest of the country to care.

While Henry Hyde and his gang were arguing, cross examining and deposing, we were watching Clinton meet with leaders in the Middle East and give the State of the Union. While House managers were yelling about the motives behind Operation Desert Fox, we were paralyzed by the black-and-green coverage of CNN, stricken as the voices of prayer intermixed with the sounds of bombs falling on Iraqi land and patriotic as we watched our president give a Bushesque address about his decision to fight Saddam Hussein.

For these reasons, it comes as no surprise that as one of the most historic moments in American history comes to a close, there is little anticipation. Why? Because although senators have pretended to be nonpartisan and uncertain as to what vote they will cast, Joe Schmo off the street could have told you several months ago what the outcome of this trial will be.

The Senate won't convict President Clinton this week.

They're in enough trouble as it is.

Conservatives made their mistake in aiming too high in punishing the president. They set their sites on a man grudgingly beloved by the public, despite his private ills, and tried to remove him from a position he'd been elected to twice.

What Congress should have done from the start is move to censure and not impeach. It would have been a nonpartisan procedure reminiscent of Watergate and it would have gotten the job done.

What the Senate is discovering now is that if constituents throw a fit, they must acquit.

Americans like Bill Clinton. He's a good speaker, a great swindler and even better at putting the spin on scandal. No matter what he does or how he does it, his approval ratings only skyrocket higher. There's nothing the Senate can do or say that will ever change his popularity. That isn't to say Clinton is a good president — he's just a good politician.

People won't remember him as the man who appointed more women and minorities than any other president. They won't recall him as a champion of health care or the environment. We will remember him just as he's portrayed on Saturday Night Live: A charismatic, sex-crazed swindler, who, like Reagan, has the ability to make his enemies look ridiculous.

That is the only victory the Senate can claim when the trial is over. Although they have failed to prove that Clinton's Altoid outings with Lewinsky endangered the nation, they have smeared him in history.

He will retain his seat and his power, lame-duck as it may be. But as the next history books are written, Monica Lewinsky's picture will be placed next to his. School children will learn through their history classes what was previously exclusive to sex education.

But a historical smearing is no political victory. And as Senate and House elections approach, there are sure to be many casualties for the partisan decisions made in the past few months.

As senators climb into their sedans and head home after the failed proceedings, one thought must be ringing through their minds:

So close, but no cigar.

Black Americans have long military history

In February we celebrate the history of black Americans. This gives us the opportunity to pay tribute to the many black men and women who have served their country through military services.

guest columnist

We all have heard of Colin Powell, born and raised in Harlem, who entered the Army and achieved the highest post accorded any soldier in the military — chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

But it all started much earlier. Some 3,000 black soldiers helped gain freedom for our country in the American Revolution. Another 180,000 fought for the Union in the Civil War. The combat record of the black soldiers was so exemplary that after the Civil War, the War Department created six regiments of black soldiers to help in the Army's mission of protecting the pioneer settlers who were migrating to the West.

In World War I, more than 400,000 black Americans served in the armed forces. At first, there was some skepticism about their ability to withstand the rigors of combat. Any doubt about their suitability was erased by the 360th U.S. Infantry Regiment, an all-black unit. After supporting the French Army for 191 days on the front lines, the regiment received the French Croix de Guerre for bravery in combat.

Black nurses also served with distinction in that war.

One historian wrote, "although these nurses were required to live in segregated quarters, the strength and dignity of the black women prevailed, and they served their country and practiced their profession with great skill and distinction."

Of the 1 million black Americans in uniform during World War II, perhaps those who fought with most distinction were the black airmen of the Tuskegee Training Program, who were trained to become aviators.

Commanded by Brigadier General Benjamin O. Davis Jr. the 332nd Fighter Group received a Distinguished Unit Citation from the President of the United States for gallantry in combat. His fighter group sank a destroyer of the German navy, a feat never before accomplished by fighter pilots alone. Another Tuskegee unit, the 90th Fighter Squadron, received three Distinguished Unit Citations. That squadron was credited with destroying five enemy aircraft in less than four minutes, another feat without precedent.

Perhaps the most famous of all pilots in the Tuskegee program was Daniel "Chappie" James. The youngest of 17 children, James was a combat veteran of World War II, Korea and Vietnam. James flew 78 combat missions into North Vietnam and led a flight in which seven Soviet MiG 21s were destroyed — the highest kill of any mission during the Vietnam War. At the end of his military career, James received his fourth star, becoming a full general. He became widely known for his speeches on Americanism and patriotism, which won him praise and acclaim throughout the world.

Fifty years ago, in 1948, President Harry Truman issued an executive order that called for equal opportunity and equal treatment for all members of the armed forces. Thus, the segregation of black military units ended and in the Korean conflict, white and black soldiers fought side by side in the same units.

Today, black Americans comprise about 20 percent of the military force — higher than their proportion of the overall U.S. population, which is about 12 percent. What is more significant, each passing year shows that black Americans in the military force are increasing in rank and responsibility.

There is one black American whose military service is known and respected throughout this nation and the world. His achievements — as well as the rank and recognition he received — should daunt the most determined doubters about the upward mobility of black Americans in the military. Army General Colin Powell was the first black American to become the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. His brilliant service as chairman during the Persian Gulf War (Operation Desert Storm) redefined the role.

College conspiracy for 'tuition slot machine'

When I arrived at ASU, I looked forward to four years of learning, four years of growing and four years 'till my diploma. Well, I've been here more semesters than I care to say and I've had some success in the first two categories.

Brian Policoff
columnist

I know all sorts of obscure literary trivia and other than the fact that I like to draw in coloring books slightly more than the average 23-year-old, I think I'm actually beginning to mature into a reasonably responsible adult. So what about that damn piece of paper? I have come to the ominous conclusion that it doesn't really exist.

How many close, personal friends do you have who graduated from ASU? None? I thought not! Me neither! Sure, you always hear about graduation and every once in a while an acquaintance lets you know that he or she won't be around campus anymore because they're "graduating," but can they really be trusted?

Freshman year I thought I was looking at four years. Then I read sophomore year that it took something like four-and-a-half. Well, I liked college so far, so I figured, not a problem. Junior year I read that it was taking longer and longer to graduate and five years was pretty normal. So, I dropped a few of my tougher classes in an effort to remain average. After all, what was my rush to get into the real world, anyway? Recently, I've heard the average has risen to almost six years and that's what got this underachiever thinking.

ASU made up this graduation rumor to keep us sliding coins in the old tuition slot machine and dreaming the impossible dream. Didn't you always wonder why the classes you need are only offered at 7:40 a.m. or in the fall or semi-annually, for that matter? Were you always curious why your advisor never has any advice? Isn't it convenient how all the power in Tempe goes off at 8 a.m., leaving you staring at a blinking alarm clock when you roll out of bed at 12:30 p.m.?

Last semester I actually went to a "graduation ceremony" just to see if they really existed. They put up a brilliant front, you know, hundreds of people in caps and gowns, speeches, etc. After the festivities were over, I ran into someone I knew outside the event. This person had been in several of my classes and was quite possibly the most vacuous individual I had ever met. In a jovial way, I inquired as to how he achieved this colossal feat.

"I don't have a dentist appointment today," he replied blankly.

"OK? Oh, one last thing, may I see your diploma?"

"Sorry," he replied, "they didn't actually give it to me, but they said they'd send it to me in the mail."

"Sure they will," I muttered, as I bid the dolt farewell.

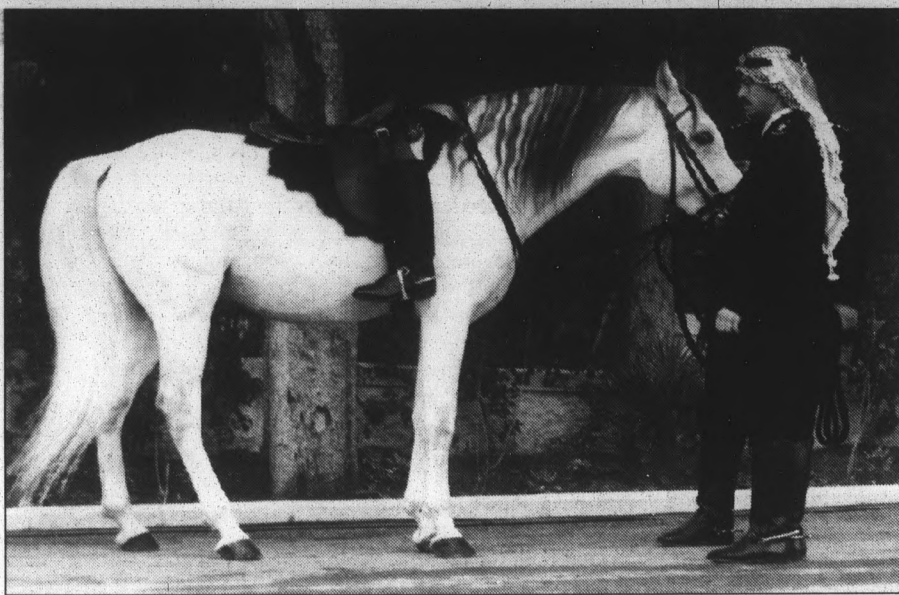

So I had come to the conclusion I was never to graduate. The possibility of actually getting a B.A. was sounding more and more like B.S. As a last ditch effort, I tried advising one more time. Now don't ask me how, but the guy actually knew his stuff. He had to be a ringer brought in for those occasions where the University hierarchy determines that they need to get rid of someone who is getting too suspicious.

He calculated my hours, analyzed my requirements, hell — he even knew the difference between a global and a cultural requirement. Next thing I knew, he was telling me fairy tales about how with something called a "program of study" could make the dreams of tassels dancing in my head come true. I was dazzled by his mysticism and thought maybe graduation is possible.

So, it looks like only a couple semesters left to go. At least, that's what they tell me. Just remember, if I get out it's just because I got too close to their secret. Now that I'm suspicious they want me to join their clandestine club ... they have a catchy name for the members too. They call them alumni.

Anthropology lecture series deals with modern health issues

BY ANDREA BALSKY
STATE PRESS

The Applying Anthropology Lecture series scheduled this semester will address not only the topics of social relationships and culture, but will also concentrate on health-care and disease-prevention issues that are encountered in everyday life.

"The lecture series will make people more aware of how anthropological training can be used in the contemporary world," said Michael Winkelman, an anthropology professor and the medical anthropology concentration director.

The series began at ASU as a freshman seminar four years ago. A year later, Winkelman, who taught the program, decided to open the series to the entire University community.

The program shows how anthropology is relevant in everyday life, by including topics such as AIDS research and intervention for Native American diabetes.

"By addressing cultural factors, people are better prepared to adapt to the conditions which apply in society today," Winkelman said.

He also said the topics discussed this semester were largely generated by the guest speakers invited to take part in the lecture series. However, he added, "the people invited are selected because of something that they are doing which involves the use of anthropology."

Speakers will discuss legal issues, environmental concerns and health research and education, as well as others.

"I think (learning about) AIDS awareness is really great for ASU students," said Summer Stitz, a broadcasting junior. "It'd be beneficial for people to attend, so they could learn more."

"It'd be a good addition to this University," said Rachele Sokul, a social work senior. "I think any discussion on AIDS is good."

Sokul also said she thought the discussion about Native American diabetes would provide important information to students, considering how prevalent the disease is among that group.

"It's a severe problem in Arizona and needs to be dealt with," she said.

Aryn Seminara, a computer information systems junior, said she thought the program could help undergraduate students who are interested in anthropology learn more about it.

"It would be good for those who want to see what the major has to offer," she said.

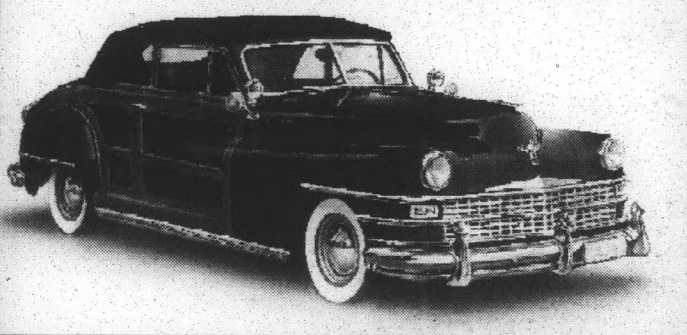

Winkelman said he believes learning about anthropology has another benefit.

"By using anthropological perspectives, we can understand both the present conditions, as well as what happened in the past to influence the present," he said.

Astronaut to speak at ASU

BY CARRIE SEVERSON
STATE PRESS

Taking humans beyond the outer limits is the topic of an upcoming lecture.

Tom Jones, a NASA astronaut, will speak Feb. 10 on the possibilities of the human element of the space exploration in the next century. The talk, held in Physical Sciences F-Wing, is open and free to the public as part of ASU's geology department seminar series.

Jack Farmer, director of the ASU Astrobiology Program, said Jones will bring a different perspective on science to ASU.

"There are many students interested not only in the surface of planets, but also the human exploratory aspects of space," Farmer said.

Jones' speech is entitled "From Low Earth Orbit, LEO, to the Moon, Asteroids and Mars: Field Exploration in the Next Millennium." He will talk about journeys to near-Earth asteroids, as well as the moon.

Jones will also speak about the challenges space agencies face in the operation of the International Space Station, which is being built more than 200 miles above Earth, including the risks that future explorers face.

George Stelmach, an ASU professor of exercise science and director of the motor control lab, is conducting research to learn how people adapt to altered environments. Stelmach said there is a challenge in preparing people to spend long periods of time in space.

"Having a speaker like Johns provides an opportunity for students to see and hear what it is like in space," he said.

Jones has been a NASA astronaut for nine years and is a veteran of three space shuttle missions. He is now training for an assembly flight that will launch in late 1999.

Grief and tradition as Jordan's King Hussein is laid to rest

By JAMAL HALABY
ASSOCIATED PRESS

AMMAN, Jordan — Against a tableau of haunting images — a riderless white stallion, a sea of sodden black flags, a pale queen in tears and a simple white burial shroud — Jordan's beloved King Hussein was laid to rest Monday under a gray-veiled sky.

Dignitaries and leaders from all over the world — some from states sworn to enmity — lionized the king, a testament to the enormous stature that belied Hussein's status as the monarch of a small and unassuming desert kingdom who preached peace in a turbulent region.

The funeral produced some stunning scenes of reconciliation, including a handshake between a radical Palestinian guerrilla leader and Israeli President Ezer Weizman. Nayef Hawatmeh's guerrillas commandeered a school in Maalot in 1974, a hostage operation that killed 24 Israelis.

The king was buried on a day dominated by extraordinary images. Ordinary Jordanians viewed Hussein more as a father than a monarch, and wept from the heart. Grief-stricken, they pelted his coffin with flowers. Police had to strain to hold back surging crowds seeking a final glimpse of Hussein.

Echoing the poignancy of the proceedings was the appearance of the king's riderless white stallion and Noor, the American-born queen, glimpsed briefly in the palace doorway as she watched her husband's casket borne off for a solemn procession through Amman, his capital.

The five-hour funeral was also the occasion for some delicate diplomatic pas de deux, drawing sworn enemies like Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and Syrian President Hafez Assad. The two stayed well apart, but even so, their presence at the same event was unprecedented.

Wrapped in a simple shroud that harkened to the austere ways of his desert forebears, Hussein's body was lowered into a grave in the royal cemetery under the somber gaze of his soldier son and heir Abdullah, crowned king upon his father's death Sunday from cancer at age 63.

King Abdullah, who has indicated he will continue his father's moderate policies, began Jordan's new era right after the funeral, holding 31 evening meetings with visiting heads of state.

Despite a scale of spectacle reminiscent of a desert epic — with 800,000 people crowding the streets, the funeral was by far the biggest ever seen in staid Amman — the event had a deeply personal tone.

Noor, Hussein's fourth wife, spent most of the day cloistered, receiving condolence calls. True to Muslim tradition, she and other women did not participate in key ceremonial events: prayers over the body, the procession from mosque to graveyard, or the burial itself.

About a half-dozen foreign women, mainly visiting dignitaries like Queen Beatrix of the Netherlands, participated in paying respects at the palace, which was not a violation of Islamic funeral traditions.

4 US presidents salute Hussein

BY TERENCE HUNT
ASSOCIATED PRESS

AMMAN, Jordan Four U.S. presidents involved in a quarter-century search for peace in the Middle East bade farewell to a beloved ally Monday, standing together in silent tribute beside the casket of King Hussein.

Bill Clinton, George Bush, Jimmy Carter and Gerald Ford joined an extraordinary array of world leaders in paying respects to the monarch who ruled Jordan for 46 years and was recognized as a steady voice of moderation in Arab-Israeli peacemaking. Jordanian officials said about 50 heads of state attended.

Hussein really did bring people together, Clinton marveled. People coming from all around the world, countries that are at each other's throat, here meeting in peace and friendship and the sanctity of the umbrella of this great man.

Clinton got a hug from ailing Russian President Boris Yeltsin. He chatted briefly with Syrian President Hafez el-Assad, a holdout to Mideast peace talks. He talked with Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat, Britain's Prince Charles and Prime Minister Tony Blair, France's President Jacques Chirac, Egypt's President Hosni Mubarak, Spain's King Juan Carlos and many others.

The U.S. presidents—two Democrats and two Republicans—flew here overnight together on Air Force One, exchanging remembrances of the king and comparing notes on Russia, North Korea, the Middle East and Kosovo.

In a near-freezing cold, the four presidents and a crowd of dignitaries stood patiently outside Raghadan Palace to enter the throne room where Hussein's casket rested. Later, they joined hundreds of officials in a procession behind the king's caisson.

Hussein's horse, an Arab stallion named Amre, strode down the streets, a pair of boots backward in the stirrups, symbolizing the fallen horseman.

Clinton, Carter and Bush expressed confidence that Hussein's 37-year-old son, the newly crowned but politically untested King Abdullah, would follow the path of peace blazed by his father. He'll do just fine, Bush said.

Carter recalled that King Hussein sought permission for Abdullah to attend all official U.S.-Jordanian discussions at the White House many years ago, when the boy was just 12. Carter said he was confident Abdullah was qualified to lead.

A parade of luxury sedans brought world leaders to the palace for private audiences with the new monarch. After a 25-minute meeting with Abdullah, Clinton and the former presidents met with the staff of the U.S. Embassy. Clinton recounted his talk with the new king.

He said in the most moving way I and all of my brothers and sisters have absorbed our father's teaching. We know what we are supposed to do and I intend to do it. And he said it in a way that exuded the quiet, humble confidence that I saw so often in his father, Clinton said.

The president ran into Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu in a tent outside the Royal Guard's Mosque on the palace compound. Only Muslims were allowed inside for the prayer ceremony.

Later, Clinton spoke of the Israeli delegation and Hussein's ability to unify people.

I looked at the Israeli delegation today, I could hardly believe my eyes, Clinton told the U.S. Embassy staff. All the candidates for prime minister were there. They were walking together.

I don't know if they talk at home, Clinton said, but they were all talking here. I thought it was as if Hussein was hugging them all, you know?

World media: Boredom, admiration, disdain for Clinton saga

By KRISTIN GAZLAY
ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — Perhaps the headline in the conservative Oslo daily Aftenposten says it best: "Impeachment confuses the world."

Editors and journalists around the world wonder why Americans are making such a big deal about a politician's private life — even if it is their president. "We see this as completely crazy," says Helen Vogt, foreign editor of the Norwegian news agency NTB.

Add a big dash of boredom — and that about sums up the world media view of the saga of President Clinton, now that talk of an affair in the White House has segued into talk along partisan lines in the Senate impeachment proceedings.

"Once we knew Clinton would not be removed from office, we saw the trial as sort of symbolic spanking," says Gerard Dupuy, editorial writer for the left-leaning daily Liberation in Paris, where Clinton news long ago dropped off the front page.

"It's like going to a football match and knowing it's fixed because you know what the result will be," says David Richardson, foreign editor of Press Association, a news agency that serves Britain's newspapers. His clients have rarely inquired about Clinton developments "once we got over the novelty of a president being put on trial," he says.

And yet, many journalists add, though the story has largely dropped off the world's front pages, a lesson is being reinforced for the readers still paying attention: This is how a democracy works.

Press restrictions in many countries would ban the reporting of most, if not all, of the details in the Clinton case — and not just the salacious ones.

"The proceedings show that even the president can be brought to justice," says Mohammed Mashmouhi, deputy editor in chief of the leftist Lebanese newspaper As-Safir. "They confirm that democracy in the U.S. is still strong, even though democracy can be exploited for political purposes."

Ezio Mauro, editor of La Repubblica, a Rome-based liberal daily, says Italian readers admire a democracy that can impeach its president without "belittling" itself. "(Still) they are surprised that such a powerful man may have to resign for a private matter," he says.

"The proceedings show positively that Americans are really trying to find truth and ways to resolve the problem," says Choi Maeng-ho, international news editor of The Dong-A Ilbo, a mass-circulation national daily in Seoul.

Other journalists argue, however, that the impeachment proceedings have tarnished the United States' image and exposed its citizens — and particularly its politicians — as hopelessly judgmental and naive.

For a sex scandal to shake a society's foundations, says Tapio Sadeoja, foreign editor of Finland's largest evening tabloid, Ilta-Sanomat, is "just so incomprehensible to Europeans."

In Russia, never mind Americans' tut-tutting over the sex stuff: Such matters as perjury or obstruction of justice aren't even considered serious offenses.

"People who are interested in politics see the shades, such as Republicans' interests behind the proceedings, but an average reader only sees the developments as something absurd," says Igor Golembiovsky, editor of the liberal New Izvestia daily in Moscow. He says the proceedings have "undermined a general respect for the U.S. democracy."

Vibeke Sperling, head of the foreign desk at the leading Copenhagen daily Politiken, says Clinton's fight for his political life over an internal matter has inadvertently strengthened some of the leaders the United States tries to police, such as Iraq's Saddam Hussein and Yugoslavia's Slobodan Milosevic.

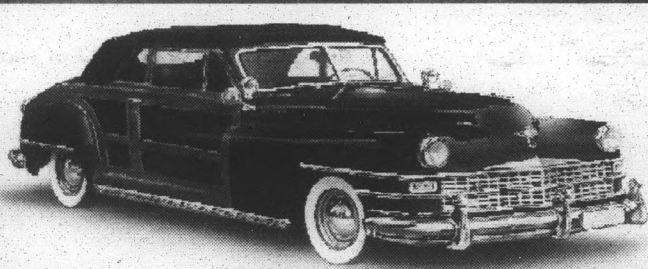

"A lot of the world wishes they (Americans) would just get it over with and behind them," says Mike Osborne of the Australian Associated Press news agency.

OK to renounce him in the face of torture, Dalai Lama says

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — The Dalai Lama is advising Tibetans in China to give in to Beijing's pressure to denounce him rather than suffer punishment for their devotion.

The spiritual leader's spokesman in the northern Indian city of Dharamsala said today the Dalai Lama had given that advice to more than 1,000 Tibetan refugees he met with in three groups over the last three months, most recently on Saturday.

According to the text of his statement to the refugees, the Dalai Lama told Tibetans that any sensible person would know that their denunciations of him were made under duress.

"Except for a few ignorant fools, who would ever believe the false statements and propaganda by China?" he said.

To stamp out support for the Dalai Lama, Chinese authorities have subjected monasteries to "patriotic education" campaigns in which monks have been forced to denounce the Tibetan leader as a separatist.

The Dalai Lama said he is often "saddened and troubled" by reports of Tibetans being subjected to detention, beatings and imprisonment after having been found in possession of his pictures.

Many Tibetans remain loyal to the Dalai Lama, who fled to India in 1959 following a failed uprising against Chinese rule. Over the years, hundreds of thousands of Tibetans have joined the Nobel Peace Prize winner in India.

Death toll in Indonesia's religious riots rises to 105

JAKARTA, Indonesia (AP) — At least 105 people have been killed in a month of religious riots in the eastern Indonesian province of Maluku, police said Monday.

Over 100 others were seriously injured and 2,960 houses were burned in the violence between Muslims and Christians in the past three weeks, said police spokesman Cap. Jekriel Philips.

The death toll was raised to 105 following reports that 10 people had been killed in riots in Kairatu, Philips said.

Kairatu is a small town on Seram island, 1,400 miles northeast of Jakarta.

The recent string of violence began Jan. 17 on Dobo island in southeast Maluku, where eight people were killed in riots.

Two days later, a riot broke out in Ambon and lasted nearly a week. At least 85 people were killed. Some 20,000 people are still seeking refuge at military bases, police stations, mosques and churches.

Another riot broke out on Sanana island, northwest off Ambon, in which two were killed.

Indonesia is the world's most populous Islamic nation. Maluku, which was known in Dutch colonial times as the Spice Islands, has a large Christian population.

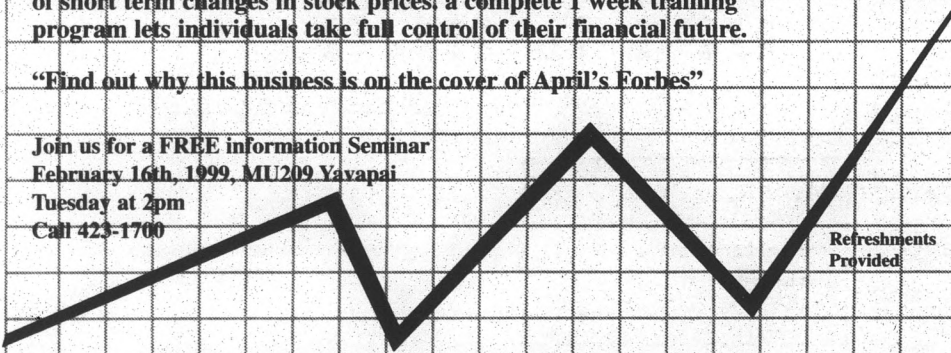

Indonesia, facing its worst economic crisis in decades, has been plagued by political and social unrest.

Action appeal put Mel Gibson's 'Payback' on top

By MICHAEL FLEEMAN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Action-deprived men stormed movie theaters for Mel Gibson's revenge flick Payback, dumping She's All That to No. 2 and destroying the debut of another teen love story, Simply Irresistible, final figures showed Monday.

Payback, with Gibson as a crook settling scores after his double-crossing wife shoots him, had the best opening of the year with $21.2 million in ticket sales.

With the end of TV football fever, Gibson's mostly male, older fans returned to theaters in droves. The demographics mirrored those for the Lethal Weapon series. Indeed, Paramount held back Payback over the summer so it wouldn't clash with Lethal Weapon 4.

She's All That collected $11.7 million for second place while Patch Adams cruised along with $4.4 million for third. Varsity Blues, sharing She's All That youth audience, grossed $3.8 million for fourth place.

However, another movie seeking teen approval flopped.

Simply Irresistible, with TV's Sarah Michelle Gellar, debuted with a disappointing $2.23 million for ninth place, stung by bad reviews and fierce competition.

Saving Private Ryan, which DreamWorks re-released to cash in on its Golden Globe wins and the buzz surrounding Tuesday's announcement of Oscar nominations, was at No. 5 with $3.6 million. Another film with Oscar potential, Shakespeare in Love, was sixth with $3.5 million.

The quirky coming-of-age story Rushmore, with Bill Murray, did strong older-audience business in limited release, grossing $1.8 million on 103 screens for a healthy per-theater average of just under $18,000.

The top 10 movies at North American theaters Friday through Monday, followed by studio, gross, number of theater locations, average receipts per location, total gross and number of weeks in release, as compiled by Exhibitor Relations Co. Inc. and ACNielsen EDI Inc.:

1. Payback, Paramount, $21.2 million, 2,720 locations, $7,802 average, $21.2 million, one week.

2. She's All That, Miramax, $11.7 million, 2,620 locations, $4,447 average, $30.7 million, two weeks.

3. Patch Adams, Universal, $4.4 million, 2,729 locations, $1,615 average, $122.4 million, seven weeks.

4. Varsity Blues, Paramount, $3.8 million, 2,364 locations, $1,625 average, $44.3 million, four weeks.

5. Saving Private Ryan (re-release), DreamWorks, $3.6 million, 1,027 locations, $3,515 average, $3.6 million, one week.

6. Shakespeare in Love, Miramax, $3.5 million, 833 locations, $4,158 average, $36.2 million, nine weeks.

7. A Civil Action, Disney, $3.1 million, 2,031 locations, $1,514 average, $51.6 million, seven weeks.

8. Stepmom, Sony, $2.5 million, 2,358 locations, $1,066 average, $87.2 million, seven weeks.

9. Simply Irresistible, 20th Century Fox, $2.23 million, 1,359 locations, $1,643 average, $2.23 million, one week.

10. You've Got Mail, Warner Bros., $2.2 million, 2,016 locations, $1,086 average, $111.1 million, eight weeks.

Rob Evans has been involved with college basketball for almost 35 years, both as a player and now as a coach.

He's played with and coached hundreds of players. For someone to rank among the smartest players Evans has been around would be quite an achievement.

ASU guard Eddie House is one of those players. Actually, he ranks pretty high on Evans' list.

"He is a very smart player, very smart," said Evans, ASU's first year head coach. "He understands the game.

"Eddie is one of the smartest players I've been around in 30 years of coaching."

Evans knows that smart basketball and experience, not just talent, wins games. And he believes that House has all of the above — brains, brawn and experience — which enables him to be one of the top players in the Pac-10.

"I think Eddie House is, potentially, one of the better guards in this country," Evans said.

He may not be among the elite guards in the nation yet, but House, a junior from Union City, Calif., is certainly one of the best in the conference. He's averaging a 19.4 points, second in the Pac-10, nearly seven points higher than he averaged in either of his first two seasons.

"He knew this year he was going to be the scorer," ASU senior forward Mike Batiste said. "He was going to be one of the go-to guys on the team, and during the last 30 seconds he was going to have the ball in his hands ... He's taken the challenge and he's doing real well."

House attributes his accurate jump shot, the main weapon in his arsenal, to hard work with his father, Ed. During House's high school years, the two also worked on adding to his offensive options as well as playing smart basketball.

"I could always shoot even when I was little, but it was a matter of being consistent with it and improving and adding new techniques," House said. "Things that we worked on when I was in high school was making me shoot over a broom, so if I was playing against someone that was bigger I could still be able to get my shot off against anybody."

House regularly uses that high-arching shot whenever he's inside the three-point stripe.

But he does plenty of damage from long range, where he makes 40 percent of his attempts. His lightning quick catch-and-shoot make him a tough defensive assignment.

Evans said House has "as quick of a release as anybody I've ever seen," enabling him to get off shots either right after catching the ball or with only a whisker between him and the defender.

Instinctively good

There have been countless times in practice where Evans has been impressed with House's instincts.

"Just in practice," Evans recalled, "we've got guys going 100 miles an hour. Eddie's at the point. He pushes the ball down and he doesn't have what he wants, so he pulls it out. And I'm like [slaps forehead], man, I've been waiting to see somebody do this all year ... He didn't see what he wanted, he didn't have the numbers and he said, 'Let's get a good possession out of this thing.'"

"(Playing smart) comes from experience and constantly getting it pushed inside of my head from my father," House said. "After every high school game that I ever had, he would take me home and we would watch film right after the game ... We'd be up till 12, 12:30, I watching game film. He'd tell me what I did wrong, what I should have done.

"He never thought I listened to him. He thought it was in one ear, out the other. But it all soaked in."

And House said it's still soaking in.

"(After every ASU game), I don't even get a chance to dial," House said. "He's already called."

House expects his teammates to play smart, which was evident at the start of the Oregon game in Eugene on Jan. 23. He got on them for not running the right defense.

"He pretty well let everybody know what they were supposed to be doing," Evans said, "and that they weren't concentrating right off the bat."

Evans said that House is a coach on the floor all the time.

"There's instances like that not only in games, there's instances like that in practice," Evans said.

"If we run a play, then he might say,

'You're supposed to be over here.' He knows all of the positions. He knows where everybody is supposed to be."

House believes that knowing your opponents, as well as the plays, can be an edge.

"I get the assignment from coach and the night before I'll go watch some tape on them," House said. "See what they like to do — their tendencies. Most players — no. All players that I know can't score if they don't touch the ball."

Defense is something House takes personally. He's already shut down UofA's Jason Terry once this season, holding him to 11 points (about half what he averages) on four of 15 shooting.

"If you want to be the best you have to play against the best and you have to shut down the best," House said.

When the Sun Devils play UofA Wednesday night, House will have another crack at Terry, something he's looking forward to.

"It's another match-up where you're going against the best and that's how you measure yourself," House said.

Triumphs and tribulations

House could be very bitter right now, he has every reason to be. He had his attitude and desire questioned by many last season. He's going on his third head coach in as many years at ASU. And he's constantly been injured (a broken jaw this year and three root canals his freshman year being the most serious among his many injuries).

But House has put a whole new spin on it. "Without struggle there is no progress," he said. "I'm finally moving along and progressing."

It was tough for him to progress with people questioning everything he did prior to this season.

"I didn't have a different attitude (over the last couple of years). I was just misunderstood," he said. "That's just how it is. People form their opinions. Those same people who were forming those opinions are speaking differently of me now because they've gotten to know me.

"They had something to say about everything I did. Every little thing I did was like 'Oh, look, there he goes again.'"

House was arrested in September 1997 in connection with the theft of a compact disc player. House said at the time that he was "just in the wrong place at the wrong time" and that he was not guilty. The police agreed, dropping the charges.

House wasn't happy with the little attention which was given to the fact that he wasn't guilty, but how when he was arrested, it was a big story. That's why he would like to stay out of the news and only in the sports section of papers.

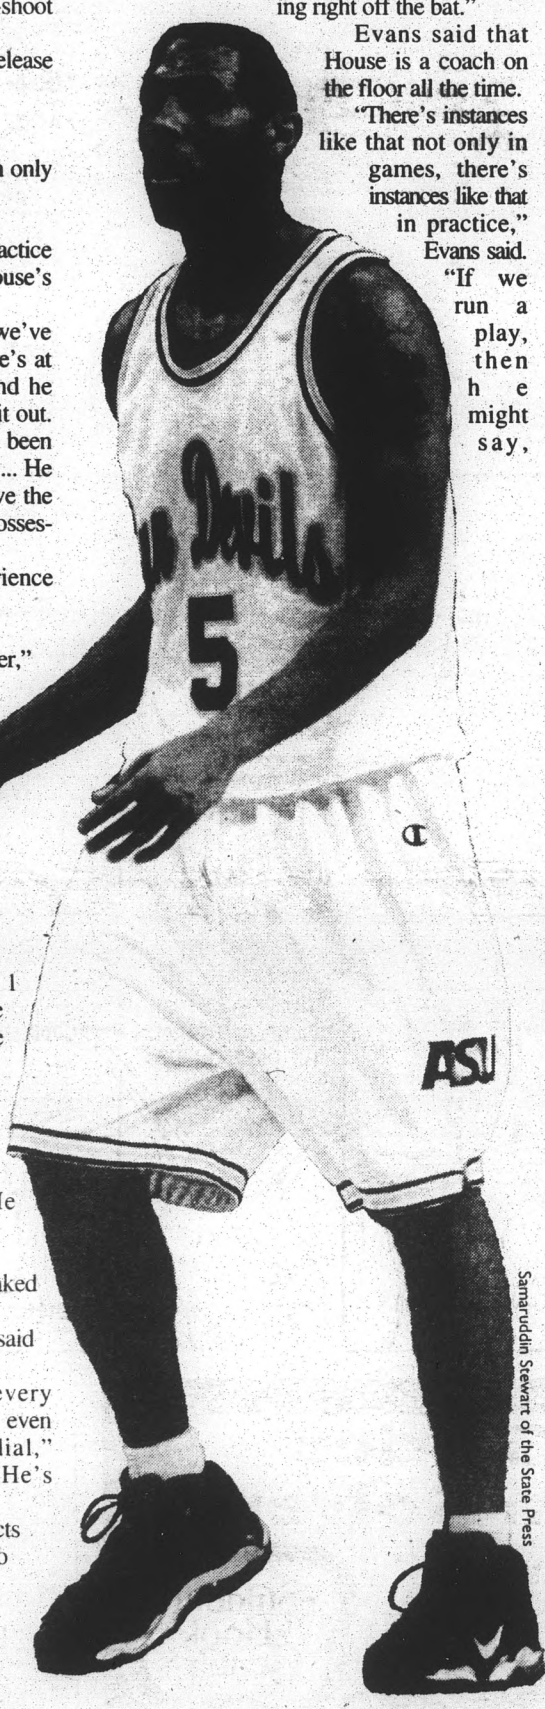

"The good thing about the sports page is that the sports page writes about a man's triumphs and the front page writes about his failures," House said.

Now, it's mostly triumphs for House.

"(Playing smart) comes from experience and constantly getting it pushed inside of my head from my father. After every high school game that I ever had, he would take me home and we would watch film right after the game."

Red Hot Sun Devils

The stats will show that Tom only had eight points and made one of two three pointers on Saturday against Washington, but oh what a big one it was. The troy senior hit with 5.3 seconds left tied the game at 59, and the Sun Devils eventually won 72-69.

Raspberry came within a half a second of breaking a school record at the Iowa State Invitational in Ames, Iowa, on Saturday. The senior ran a 21.40 in the 200-meters, a mark that ranks second in ASU annals behind Ed Loveplace's 21.35 ran in 1990.

Hess, along with freshman Lea Carver, were ASU's only bright spots on the balance beam in Friday's meet with Oregon State. However, despite the junior's 9.8 score on the beam, the Sun Devils still fell to the Beavers, 194.150-193.175.

Batiste led a valiant, but ultimately futile, comeback effort Saturday against Washington, scoring 22 of his 28 points in the second half. He's now fifth in the Pac-10 in scoring, averaging 17.1 points and eighth in rebounding, averaging 6.8.

Jantzen receives honor

BY DOUG FLANAGAN
STATE PRESS

Jantzen

Amongst emotional, upset victories, thrilling last-second three-pointers, and a baby watch that is coming extremely close to culminating, freshman forward Theresa Jantzen managed to steal a bit of the spotlight for herself with her play this weekend for the ASU women's basketball team.

Jantzen was announced as the Pac-10 Women's Basketball Player of the Week on Monday by commissioner Tom Hansen.

Jantzen played a critical role in the Sun Devils' two home victories over Washington State and Washington over the weekend. She scored a career-high 16 points and grabbed seven boards in ASU's 80-66 victory over the Cougars on Thursday and, in her second career start, posted her second career double-double with 13 points and 12 rebounds on Saturday.

"I was a little surprised," she said. "Our team played really good this weekend. I did my part on the team, but I think it was a team effort. It's an honor because there's a lot of (good) players in the Pac-10. I was excited."

However, Jantzen said the most important thing for her to come out of the weekend was the pair of victories, not the award.

"That's the most important," she said. "It was just awesome to get two wins this weekend, especially against Washington. We really pulled together. I'm still excited from that game."

Not quite yet

ASU head coach Charli Turner Thorne, who was originally due to have her first child, Conor, on Saturday (the day of her team's 72-69 overtime victory over the Huskies), did not have labor induced early Monday morning as was planned.

Because of other patients who actually went into labor on Monday, Turner Thorne was pushed back onto a waiting list for today. If she can't have labor induced today or doesn't have Conor naturally, she plans to be at practice and will have labor induced Wednesday morning at 6.

Gladish musically motivated

BY SAM GANCZARUK
STATE PRESS

The mental preparation before a wrestling match is a vital aspect of winning. With this in mind, ASU's Erik Gladish had a shattering experience Sunday at Oregon State.

Gladish was pumping himself up to wrestle the 17th-ranked wrestler in the country in the 197 pound weight class, Shane Zajac.

"I had a mindset of what the psychologist called a optimal experience," Gladish said. "Prior to this match I had been wrestling and getting real pumped up. I was listening to real hardcore rap and just wanting to go out there and fight them rather than wrestle him."

So he decided to try something different. Real different.

"This time I felt myself get in that zone and I felt my whole body start to shake from adrenaline and my hands went numb," Gladish said. "I decided to kick back a little bit. So I flipped on the radio on my Walkman and it was this Mexican station. I just started listening to some Mexican music and I guess I just relaxed more."

This relaxation gave him a definite different mindset.

"I just decided to have fun with the match instead of all of the pressure. I felt like all the pressure was off my back," Gladish said. "I threw out all my ammunition on the mat, as coach says."

Gladish then proceeded to wrestle the best match of his college career, winning by a decision of 13-10.

However, despite the inspiration it gave Gladish, he does not plan on making Mexican music part of his collection.

"I think music is a powerful medium," he said, "so I am going to definitely start to mix up hardcore with more maybe softer music."

Sun Devils not overconfident

By ROBERT DEAL
STATE PRESS

After a week and a half of rest since its victory over UCLA, the ASU men's tennis team is ready to face off against Utah at 1:30 p.m. today at the Whiteman Tennis Center.

Although Utah is currently unranked, the Sun Devils are not taking the match as a gimme.

"UCLA was great," senior Jeff Williams said, "but if we want to win it all, we have to play hard against every team no matter what they're ranked."

Utah is led by senior Ben Coates, who is currently 86th nationally in singles play. Coates, along with teammate Philippe Rodrigue, combine to form the nation's 13th-ranked doubles team.

Coates and Rodrigue most recently attended the National Rolex Indoor Championships in Dallas, where their doubles play earned them one of the 16 spots in the tournament. They squeaked into the second round, where they were finally defeated by the Illinois team of Jeff Laski and Gavin Sontag.

Utah comes to ASU after two impressive victories over Utah State and Weber State. The team last beat Weber State in a 7-0 sweep, extending its record to 2-0.

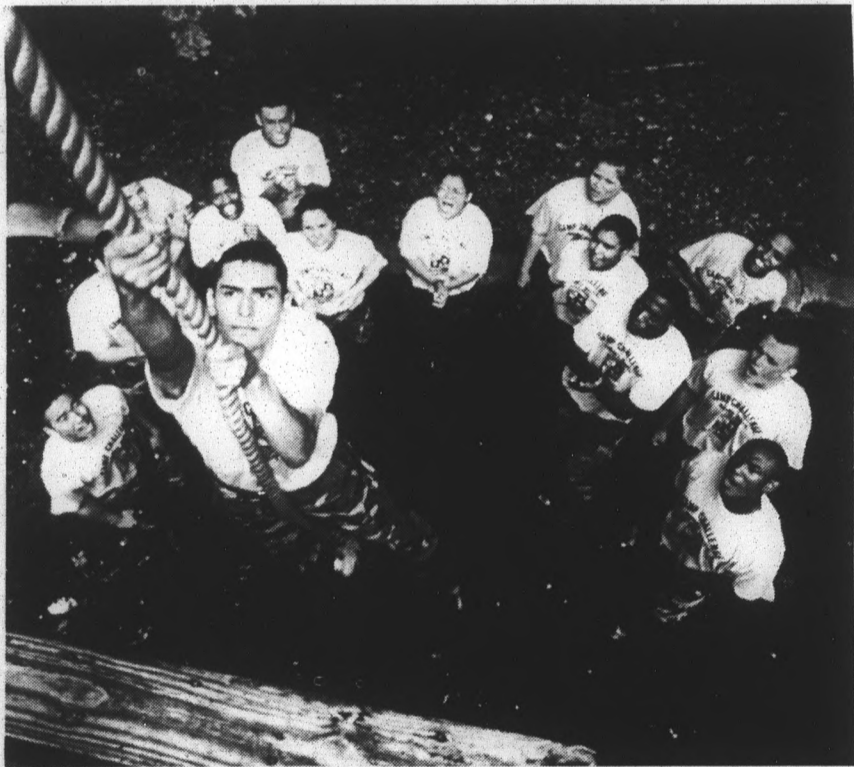

The Utes are an experienced team, with five upperclassmen in starting positions. A newcomer to the Utah squad, Ashley Dyer, also proves to be a threat. Starting at the No. 2 singles spot, Dyer easily won his debut matches, beating his opponents 7-6, 6-1, and 6-0, 6-1. He has also started on the top-seeded doubles team with Coates, where they quickly took care of Weber State's top doubles team 8-3.

ASU is practiced, rested, and more than ready to do battle with the Utes, and hope to extend its winning streak and boost its chances for Pac-10 and national titles.

"Every dual match is just another battle in the war this season is proving to be," ASU head coach Lou Belken said.

Hyun Dong Lim of the State Press
Jeff Williams (left), Tim Hammond and the rest of the ASU men's tennis team will attempt to carry the momentum it received from its first-ever win over UCLA last week into today's home match with Utah.
