Glitch prompts queries from parents

BY FAITH MARIN HEIDTKE
STATE PRESS

A letter sent by the ASU Parents Association to about five prospective students' parents recently has one dad wondering if his son is anything more than a number at ASU.

The letter sent congratulations to 867-53-0921, replacing the prospective student's name with a social security number, on admission to ASU.

"We will miss 867 when he goes to school, and are very interested in a college in which he will receive personal attention," said one father in his response to the congratulatory letter.

Social Security numbers have been of particular interest at ASU with two privacy rights bills currently moving through the state legislature. The bills, which are scheduled to be heard this week, would prohibit the use of social security numbers as ID numbers in the state's three public universities.

ASU student Josh Benton, a nutrition senior, has his own view of the personal attention given to students.

"ASU is such a big school all you have to do is go into any lecture class and there is probably about 200 students in there. The instructor is not going to know your name unless you make an effort," Benton said.

"I guess a letter like that would have affected my decision (to come here) because it doesn't sound very personal or individual. It can cause you to reconsider or rethink your decision."

According to Mike Dickson, associate director of Undergraduate Admissions, five letters were sent out replacing the student's names with their social security numbers because of an error in the computer system.

Dickson said the error was caused by a test done on the system. After noticing the problem, he said, it was fixed and the five letters were thought to have been destroyed.

But they weren't, and now the University has received three responses from parent's about the lack of personal attention shown to their children. The New York Times also got word of the mishap and printed a blurb about it on their website.

The ASU Parents Association and the Office of Parent Programs could not be reached for comment Monday afternoon.

A corrected letter was sent to the five individuals who responded to the letter, but other students may be out there, Dickson said.

Shane Daley, an ASU biology junior, discusses a riparian habitat at the Mayer Elementary School Saturday. Daley, who was awarded a $5,000 scholar-citizen grant in August, is developing a school-yard habitat in conjunction with the students.

Valley kids take in school-yard habitat

BY CARRIE SEVERSON

Shane Daley is determined to improve the learning process of children, and he does it by working with them — not in the classroom, but on the playground.

Daley, an ASU biology junior, set up a program that teaches elementary and high school students about their surroundings by allowing them to design their own school-yard habitat.

After they are finished, students will use the projects to learn more about science by collecting data on plants and animals that live in the area.

A $5,000 Scholar Citizen grant gives Daley the financial backing to administer the program.

"The goal of my project is to stimulate the student's scientific thinking process through the development and later use of the school-yard habitats," Daley said.

Students of all grade levels from Meyer Elementary School in Tempe and Trevor Browne High School in Phoenix will be participating in the study during the next two years.

ASU scientists also work to train teachers, who can then better instruct their students about designing and installing the habitat, Daley said.

Susi Huffaker, a third grade teacher at Meyer Elementary, said each student has a hand in the project.

'Hispanic' lists ASU in top 25 schools

BY FAITH MARIN HEIDTKE
STATE PRESS

The March issue of Hispanic magazine ranked ASU 20th among the top 25 colleges and universities for Hispanic students.

Tim Desch, director of Undergraduate Admissions, said ASU has been in the top ranks of this category before.

The Census Bureau said Hispanics will become the largest U.S. minority subgroup by the year 2005.

Some say this growth poses problems for the Hispanic community.

With recent efforts to end affirmative action programs in college admissions severely limiting minority enrollment, choosing a college can be a challenge, according to Hispanic magazine.

The magazine ranked the colleges according to diversity of the student body, curriculum, student organizations, faculty, and recruiting and retention rates. A primary consideration is given to the schools demonstrating a commitment to diversity.

Campus scores in 'U.S. News' rankings

ASU ranked in the top 50 universities for five of its graduate programs in the annual rankings published in U.S. News & World Report's 2000 America's Best Graduate Schools Monday.

Graduate programs in geology and education are ranked in the top 25, while programs in business, law and engineering landed in the top 50.

U.S. News & World Report ranks graduate programs in business, law, medical, engineering and education schools using data from the universities as well as reputational rankings by faculty and recruiters.

Gene Glass, associate dean for research at the College of Education, said ASU has moved up four places from 28 last year to 24.

"We look at the rankings pretty seriously — especially reputation rankings by peers," he said.

ASU's graduate program in geology is ranked 25 this year, but was not present on the 1998 list.

James Tyburczy, interim geology chair, said the department is pleased to be perceived by peers as a top 25 program. However, Tyburczy said, the rankings are related more to perception than actual achievement.

The MBA program has been ranked 31 in the country overall and 12th among public institutions.

"Rankings are the report card for a program," said Lee McPheters, associate dean for graduate and executive programs in the College of Business.

He said the median starting salary for MBA graduates has grown from $62,500 in 1997 to $78,500 in 1998, placing the program in the top 25 based on starting salaries.

Some faculty members say the rankings may not reflect the true quality of the programs.

Glass said there is "East Coast chauvinism" in the computation of rankings. He said most of the survey respondents are from the Midwest and the East coast.

"We belong between the top 10 and 15," he said.

went out in teams of four to a particular quadrant and mapped the type of grass," Huffaker said.

The second graders were then assigned to count the number of people in a particular quadrant and calculate the human impact of their movement on earth.

"This is an on-going project that will definitely help the children," Huffaker said.

Daley said his project will be part of a larger set of activities that will develop during the next two years at each school.

An organization providing people with a scientific basis about the environment — The Southwest Center for Education and the Natural Environment — is also helping Daley in the study. The group has a partnership with the ASU Center for Environmental Studies.

Kathy Kyle, executive administrator of SCENE, said their mission is to provide science expertise in the community.

Kyle said the project allows students to gain hands-on experience in the process of scientific inquiry.

Daley hopes this project, with information pertaining to use of the environment and its users, will help students to understand their habitat and all of its functions. He added that if successful, his research can be used as a model for other schools.

Dan Jankowski, associate dean of academic affairs for the College of Engineering, said a large component of the rankings is based on reputation.

"What does reputation mean?" he asked. "My personal reaction is that we are better than the rankings."

McPheters agreed with Jankowski and Glass. He said the 40 percent weight placed on popularity and reputation could work to the school's disadvantage as a large number of the survey respondents are from the East Coast.

"Diversity in the student body continues to be a primary mission of the institution. We strive to be diverse in every way possible, and it is always a priority," Desch said.

ASU's current undergraduate Hispanic student body is made up of about 2,855 students — or 11 percent.

The University also has numerous programs for the Hispanic community. Tau Psi Omega, Gamma Alpha Omega, Kappa Delta Chi, and Omega Delta Phi are all members of the Hispanic Greek Council, and an ASU program, called the Hispanic Mother Daughter Program, follows girls from high school to college in order to encourage and support college entrance, are only a few.

"We have an excellent department of Chicana/Chicano studies," said Gary Keller, director of the Hispanic Research Center. "The University does extremely well bringing in students in diverse backgrounds, not only Hispanic."

Lawsuit may block public funding of campaigns

By MATT KELLEY
ASSOCIATED PRESS

PHOENIX — Arizona's new law allowing political candidates to use state money for campaigns is unconstitutional and should be blocked, a lawsuit filed Monday at the Arizona Supreme Court said.

Opponents said the Citizens Clean Elections Act, also known as Proposition 200, violates the free speech rights of candidates, political donors, and lobbyists.

"Proposition 200 attempts, with an excessively heavy hand, to remove the influence of private money from public campaigns," said the lawsuit, filed by the Arizona Chamber of Commerce, two lobbyists, and three politicians. "It impairs the rights of citizens to promote candidates independently of their formal campaigns."

The law allows candidates who gather between several hundred and several thousand $5 contributions from voters to qualify for up to $1 million in state money to run their campaign. That money would come from a new $100 lobbyist registration fee and higher court fees.

Candidates who do not choose to get state money would face new restrictions on fundraising and spending.

Supporters of the elections law say it was carefully drafted to avoid the constitutional problems cited by critics.

"I think the claims that are registered here are weak," said Tim Hogan, a lawyer for a group backing the elections law. "I think the claims that are being made here are just an attempt to delay it."

The law's opponents originally asked

Justice Charles Jones on Monday to block Gov. Jane Hull from appointing members to the panel which will oversee the new election funding system. They also asked Jones to stop the state from collecting the lobbyist registration fee.

But they later agreed to drop those requests and instead just ask the high court to declare the entire law unconstitutional, said John Lundin, one of the opponents' lawyers.

Under the law, candidates who want to participate in the public funding system would have to collect $5 contributions from voters in their district. The numbers of contributions needed to participate in the system range from 200 in a legislative race to 4,000 for a candidate for governor.

An appointed elections board would then distribute money to each qualifying candidate, ranging from a total of $25,000 for the primary and general election for legislative candidates to a total of $1 million for each gubernatorial candidate.

The money would come from a state fund that would include proceeds from the new lobbyist registration fees, surcharges on civil and criminal court fines and voluntary donations from Arizona tax returns.

Candidates who do not use the publicly funded system would face greater limits on their fundraising and spending — including a 20 percent cut in the maximum contribution they could accept from an individual. If a non-participating candidate spends more than the limit, the publicly funded candidates could get up to three times as much as their original amounts.

A pile of insulation removed by firefighters sits outside the Petro Stopping Center on Interstate 10 near Casa Grande Monday. The business, one of the largest in Pinal County, was closed Monday morning after an early-morning fire. It is believed to have started in a wall but the cause is not known. A Petro employee suffered smoke inhalation and was transported to Casa Grande Regional Medical Center. Managers and employees talk in the background at right.

Concern grows over tree cutting

PRESCOTT (AP) — Illegal tree cutting is taking a greater toll this year in national forests in central and northern Arizona, where annual losses already number in the thousands.

Law officers have been noticing fresh stumps all around the Prescott and Kaibab national forests, courtesy of people in pursuit of free wood.

"We have people that make a living stealing wood off the national forest and private land," said forest law enforcement officer Jon Shumate.

He estimates people stole 200 to 300 cords from the Prescott and Kaibab forests this past year. He covers the 3 million acres on both forests with two other law enforcement officers, although officials from other agencies help out as well.

Shumate said he has caught tree cutters who were hauling wood as far as Los Angeles, where they were getting $1 per stick.

While there is a problem with overcrowded stands of trees after decades of suppressing natural fires, illegal cutters aren't helping that situation any, said forest ranger spokesman Gary Wittman.

Illegal cutters tend to go after the larger trees, while forest officials are doing everything they can to increase the number of old-growth trees.

Illegal cutters also take dead standing trees, or "snags," that are important habitat for dozens of species. They create illegal roads to get deep into the forest, creating erosion problems. And they rarely, if ever, cut where forest officials would have cut.

"They cut where they can get away with it," Shumate said.

One group of five people cut 400 cords out of the Kaibab in one year before officials caught them in the act and charged them with felonies.

Forest law enforcement officials catch dozens per year with the help of other forest employees.

Forest officials allow cutting of live trees in specific areas as a management tool, although they aren't offering any such sales at this time.

People could cut trees for personal use at the last sale for only $13.90 per cord. Allowing the public to cut these trees reduces the Forest Service's cost of achieving its management objectives, official said.

Before officials offer such sales, experts from a variety of fields check for things such as biological or archaeological problems.

The forest also sells annual permits for dead and down trees for just $15 for three cords.

People with these permits can take logs just about anywhere on the forest, except in developed recreation areas, commercial timber sale areas and places where signs prohibit it for other reasons.

"For what we charge, why steal it?" Wittman said.

Listeria infected Tucson woman's fetus, lawsuit says

By ARTHUR H. ROTSTEIN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

TUCSON — A lawsuit filed Monday contends that listeria bacteria from contaminated processed meat infected an unborn child and caused bacterial meningitis that was diagnosed after birth.

Of 10 known cases of listeria contracted in Arizona, two have resulted in deaths, said Brad Christensen, a spokesman in Phoenix for the state Department of Health Services. One was a 43-year-old Tucson man, the other a miscarriage in Coconino County, he said.

John and Lori Carlson's lawsuit was the third filed in Arizona naming the Sara Lee Corp. All were filed jointly by attorneys Steve Copple in Phoenix and Richard Grand in Tucson.

The suits allege the listeria infections resulted from eating tainted meat produced at Sara Lee's Bil Mar processing plant in Zeeland, Mich., which has been linked to a listeria outbreak nationwide.

The Carlsons contend that Mrs. Carlson became infected while pregnant after eating Sara Lee products on Feb. 4.

Amniotic fluid taken after her baby stopped moving in the womb showed severe listeria infection, the lawsuit said.

Labor was induced and she gave birth to daughter Kelsey at 32 weeks' gestation, weighing 3 pounds 6 ounces.

The child could not breathe on her own but was resuscitated by neonatologists at Tucson Medical Center, the lawsuit said.

It alleges that the listeria infection caused bacterial meningitis, and the baby was hospitalized in neonatal intensive care for 19 days.

Association will hear plan to snuff out domestic abuse

PHOENIX (AP) — A plan proposed to bring area communities together to fight domestic violence would help victims get more help and get it faster, supporters say.

Nurses, counselors and teachers would receive more training to identify victims under the regional plan crafted by the Maricopa Association of Governments. Court cases would also be prosecuted faster, and judges would devise a better system of issuing protective orders.

"It is far-reaching... but if you want to nip it in the bud, you go get it," said Phoenix Councilman Cody Williams, chairman of the association's domestic violence subcommittee.

The impetus for the plan came after Laura Munoz, a mother of six, was stabbed to death in her Phoenix home as some of her children watched. Munoz had tried to leave her husband, but she was turned away from several shelters because there were no beds available, shelter officials said.

The association will hold a public hearing on the draft plan Tuesday in Phoenix.

Bad drivers: get off the road or get a clue

Look out your window as you're driving down the street.

They're all around you — drivers who shouldn't be allowed on a skateboard, let alone behind the wheel of a car. But time after time, we see these people on the road.

They cut us off, they ride our tail, they shout at us even when they're the ones at fault.

According to a report released earlier this month by the Surface Transportation Policy Project, the Phoenix metropolitan area has the third-highest rate of fatal accidents caused by aggressive driving in the country. They attribute this to a high dose of tailgating, disobeying laws and traffic signs, speeding and otherwise erratic driving.

The study reported 215 deaths in the Phoenix area in 1996 that were attributed to bad driving.

In all fairness, the Valley has done some things to ferret out problematic drivers. Several cities have implemented photo radar which has seen some marginal success, especially in Mesa, according to an ASU study. And a piece of legislation recently passed in the legislature eliminating a legal loophole that allowed drunk drivers to escape prosecution by claiming they weren't drunk at the time they were pulled over, because the alcohol wasn't yet absorbed by their bodies.

But despite all the effort, there will always be those motorists who seemed to have obtained their driver's licenses by sending in a form they cut from the back of a cereal box. And so, in the interest of our readers we have conveniently categorized the top signs that you might be a lousy driver.

The sleepy motorist

This is the man or woman who never seems to be pleased with the shade of color the green lights are, because they refuse to proceed through the intersection after the light turns.

You know who you are. You're the one who gets a whole line of traffic to honk their horns and scream, yell and spit at you because by the time you decide to go through an intersection, the light has already turned yellow.

The blind motorist

Everyone is familiar with this driver. He or she is the one who will pull out in front of you (usually from a parking lot), totally oblivious to the cars speeding in their direction. Thank God for anti-lock brakes, the absence of which would have caused many nasty situations in our fair city.

The stubborn protagonist

This is the commuter who gets kicks out of not letting one merge onto a freeway. You know this type — they're the ones who speed up as soon as they see you speed up, and slow down as soon as you slow down. Just a message for y'all who think this is funny: We don't know what your problem is. Maybe you were dropped on your head as a baby, but humor that sick — well, it's just ain't funny at 65 or 70 mph.

The all-too-friendly tail-gater

Finally, this is the driver who always seems to want to get way too up-close and personal as you watch him looming behind you in your rearview mirror. If this behavior is something you've become accustomed to doing, just remember that as soon as a little kitten or some other cute and furry, little obstruction jumps out in front of the car ahead of you, the old saying "kiss my butt" will take on a totally differently meaning as you careen your car into the guy ahead of you.

If any of these descriptions fit you, please do us all a favor and flush your keys and driver's license down the toilet.

How China Acquired Sensitive Technology...

DURING THE REAGAN/BUSH ADMINISTRATIONS

DURING THE CLINTON ADMINISTRATION

Gun ownership demands responsibility

What friends called a "good one," went bad last week, when Brian Ball, a Tempe resident and homeless-rights aficionado, picked up his semiautomatic pistol, got out of his pickup truck and started shooting at three police officers.

When all was said and done, Ball was dead and two officers had been shot — one placed in critical condition.

The shoot-out, the East Valley's third in two days, has been labeled a senseless and unpredictable crime. The officers were shot at while arresting transient Dave Vanlandingham, a 22-year-old man whom Ball apparently had no connection with.

Surprisingly, Ball's family expressed support for the Tempe police officers' actions in a statement released to the media. "Our thoughts go out to the families and officers who were injured during this unfortunate incident," the statement pronounced.

Ball's motive became clear when his ex-wife, Michelle Grimes, came forward to offer her perspective. According to Grimes, he was a drug-using, delusional gun enthusiast who harbored great sympathy toward the homeless because of his poor upbringing.

More disturbingly, he once turned his gun on Grimes during an argument, threatening her life.

All of this begs the question: What was this guy doing with a gun in the first place?

If a man displays this kind of erratic behavior — if he turns his gun on his own unarmed wife — how do we allow him to possess a firearm? How can we know that a threat against his family won't escalate to a crime against society?

Brian Ball had no business owning a gun. The right to bear arms is among the most highly contestable, debatable rights America has. Owning a gun is a privilege — one Ball proved he was not deserving of years before he turned a gun on police.

According to Grimes, her ex-husband would regularly approach strangers and threaten their lives. To say that it was impossible to predict the violence Ball bestowed on Tempe last Friday would be completely inaccurate; anyone who knew him could have seen it coming. And that is the greatest tragedy of all — this crime could have been prevented years ago.

Ball really was a good guy gone bad. He passionately supported the rights of the homeless. He took the disenfranchised home with him on many occasions and allowed them to bathe and eat in his home.

But his final act was not philanthropic, it was violent. He was so caught up in his own beliefs and philosophy, he forgot how to be rational in the real world. He pulled the trigger without considering whom his victims were — men who risk their lives every day, for a meager salary.

Even more tragically, the officer who Ball put in critical condition was a friend of the homeless as well.

The recent sieges of violence against East Valley police all share one similarity: They are crimes perpetrated by criminals who never should have owned a weapon to begin with. The standards against people who break our laws and then obtain weapons cannot be high enough. Chances are, if Ball had been prevented from purchasing a firearm after demonstrating violence with a weapon in the past, he would still be alive.

And Mill Avenue would be all the more safer.

Choice integral to improving public schools

In the past few years, almost every social and economic indicator that measures life in the United States has moved in a positive direction. However, this is not a time for complacency, because there are still many public policy issues that deserve increased attention. One of the more important issues is primary and secondary education.

Scott D. Gillette
columnist

Even though spending on public education has increased dramatically in the past 40 years, SAT scores have precipitously declined. This fact undermines the liberal notion that more money for education will inevitably lead to a better education for children. Having said that, it would be silly to say that the more money that is spent on education, the worse education becomes.

So why have SAT scores declined? Why does an Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development report state that "the effectiveness of U.S. primary and secondary education system can be characterized as mediocre at best?"

The biggest reason is the decline of the nuclear family. The rising divorce and illegitimacy rates of the past 35 years mean less structure and stability for kids, which in turn leads to poorer school performance. Another reason for declining educational performance can be attributed to television.

However, another cause has to be considered: The decline in educational quality has been most apparent in the poorest communities in the United States. Part of this decline should be blamed on new social pathologies these schools face. But these schools have also been harmed by the insular bureaucracies that stifle creativity and turn good into bad.

These are the areas that can least afford a decline in the standards of schools. This fact demonstrates the need for major policy reforms in these areas, the most important being school choice and the establishment of voucher systems.

Such policies grant parents a set amount of money per year that can be used to educate their kids at a public school or to be used toward tuition at a private school. By providing parents with greater leverage in choosing a school for their kids, different methods of education can be practiced. Children who might languish in a particular public school may thrive if they are put into a different environment. Moreover, parents will repossess the ability to hold public schools accountable for their actions.

Of course, these proposals have received political opposition around the country, most notably from teaching unions and federal and state bureaucracies. Moreover, these bureaucracies are powerful because they are so large. Dr. Marianne Jennings, a professor at the Lincoln Center for Applied Ethics at ASU, points out that "the United States is the only country in the world in which more money is spent on non-classroom personnel, i.e. administration, than on those personnel who have actual classroom contact."

But improving the state of education in poorer areas is far more important than protecting the public school monopoly that protects the select few.

Unfortunately, not too many people in the educational establishment feel the same way. Here's the thinking of Al Shanker, the president of the American Federation of Teachers: "I will begin to care about the quality of children's education in this country when they start paying union dues." Yikes.

“Children who might languish in a particular public school may thrive if they are put into a different environment. Moreover, parents will repossess the ability to hold public schools accountable for their actions.”

Another argument against school choice is that the money may go to schools with a religious focus, violating the separation of church and state. This argument would make sense if the government decreed a religion for specific schools, but parents would be deciding whether their children attend religious-based schools. It is sheer hypocrisy to declare that tax money cannot be used for certain purposes and then completely ignore the interests of the taxpayer, when it's their money in the first

Iraq sanctions should be condemned

Students like Brad Whisler ("Iraq newest scapegoat after end of Cold War," State Press March 5) and Dina Ra'ad are not alone in their opposition to the U.S. government policies in Iraq. The Student Committee of the Iraq Action Coalition has been formed to end the silent war our government has been waging against the people of Iraq for more than eight years. Student governments across the nation have followed the lead of the University of Michigan's resolution condemning the sanctions against the people of Iraq.

The Student Committee of the Iraq Action Coalition agrees with the statements of Noam Chomsky, Howard Zinn, Edward Herman and Edward Said in their national call for action. "The time has come for a call to action to people of conscience. We are past the point where silence is passive consent — when a crime reaches these proportions, silence is complicity."

Students should not be silent and accepting of the U.S.-led sanctions that will kill 4,500 infants and toddlers this month, according to UNICEF reports. Today, this policy will kill 250 people in Iraq, as it did yesterday and as it will do tomorrow. Since 1991, more than 1 million people have died due to the scarcity of food and medicine and the spread of water-borne diseases — all direct consequences of the sanctions.

Since 1991, United Nations agencies and independent human-rights organizations have been reporting on the devastating impact of the sanctions on human life in Iraq.

Four years ago, UNICEF reported that: "Sanctions are inhibiting the importation of spare parts, chemicals, reagents, and the means of transportation required to provide water and sanitation services to the civilian population of Iraq. What has become increasingly clear is that no significant movement towards food security can be achieved so long as the embargo remains in place."

And what is our government's response? When asked on 60 Minutes about the death of half a million children in Iraq — more children than died in Hiroshima — Madeline Albright responded, "we think the price is worth it."

Students across America are saying no. The death of one child is a death too many. It's time that ASASU joined this effort and passed a resolution demanding that Congress and the president immediately end the ongoing sanctions war against the people of Iraq and denouncing the trade sanctions against the people of Iraq as immoral, illegitimate and contrary to fundamental principles of humanity and human rights.

Readers' Poll

What is your opinion?

The Senate Governmental Affairs Committee recently held a hearing regarding the independent counsel law (PL 103-207), set to expire on June 30, unless renewed. Proponents claim that the law, initially created after Nixon dismissed the special prosecutor investigating Watergate, is needed to avoid conflicts of interest between the attorney general and the president. Critics argue the law gives the independent counsel too much power.

Should the law be renewed?

- A. Yes
- B. No
- C. Don't know; don't care

ASU campus 'mom' Nancy Lubas retires after 28 years

BY ERLAND AAS
STATE PRESS

For 28 years, Nancy Lubas pampered ASU students in residence halls across campus.

For almost three decades, she was both a mother and a friend for thousands of students. But that all ended Feb. 26, as she retired, marking the end of an era.

When Lubas started her career with Residential Life in 1970 at Manzanita Hall, ASU only had 24,000 students. Since then, she has witnessed the campus grow into one of the largest in the nation.

"Look at this," Lubas said, while holding up an aerial photo from 1970. "This is what it looked like. You don't see the football stadium and there was no activities center."

Manzanita was also different in those days. Back then, Manzanita was an all-women's dorm, housing about 1,000 women.

"The girls had to be in by midnight," Lubas recalled. "Yes, we had more rules back then. The girls couldn't have curlers in their hair or wear PJ's in the cafeteria."

Some of the students who were under Lubas' supervision in the 1970s are now parents of ASU students.

"This kid's parents went to ASU in the 1970s," Lubas said, pointing at Ryan Shaughnessy, a justice studies senior and a resident assistant at Cholla.

"My dad was in a fraternity and my mom went to Manzanita when Nancy worked there," Shaughnessy said. "So if my dad wasn't able to sneak into the dorm to meet with my mom, if it wasn't for Nancy being a little lax on her running around the hall trying to catch him, I might not be here."

With her 28 years of experience, Lubas' co-workers said they think she was an invaluable asset to Residential Life.

"She is the one running this place," said Robert Boglin, director at Cholla.

"I'm going to miss her," said Kristin Borns, a public administration graduate student and RA at Cholla. "I don't know how we're going to run this place without her."

Residents could always be sure to find cookies and other snacks in "Mom's" office. Cookies, chocolate kisses — it's all part of a healthy environment, Lubas said.

"We're here for such a short time, we need to help one another," she explained. "No matter if it's just a smile, a laugh, a hello or a cookie — it all helps."

Lubas would always do more than her job asked, Shaughnessy said.

"Every morning, Nancy would come in with a four-course breakfast," he said. "So now the hall will be malnurtured, I guess."

Lubas will be missed by her colleagues and there's no doubt she'll miss them too.

"I enjoy the kids and I call them my kids," Lubas said. "I feel like they're my extended family. I've been dealing with the [18-22] age group for almost 30 years, and I think it has kept me alive."

She said she sometimes deals with problems in untraditional ways.

"Maybe this is not professionally right for a person working at ASU," Lubas said. "But if I see a kid stressing out, and if I know he's of age, I'll say 'Hey, you need to relax. Go out and have a beer!'"

Lubas said she is big on hugs, but that she can do some butt-kicking too, when the situation requires it.

"If Joe Blow is only sitting around and watching television all day, and if I see him more in there than going to class, then I'll tell him to drag his butt to the library," Lubas said.

There is a reason why Lubas cares so much for all the people that cross her path, Boglin said.

"What a lot of people don't know about Nancy is that it was her childhood that made her this way," he said. "She has had a very tough childhood, both financially and emotionally."

Boglin added, "She has made everyone her family, and for your family you do everything you can; that's what makes her so special."

Lubas could probably have run Cholla for a few more years, had she not had other pressing issues.

"My son has cancer," Lubas said. "Right at this point I want to be with him."

Project honors ASU women making a difference

Leah Fasten of the State Press
Erenia Lara, an ASU communications senior, cleans up a display promoting the woman's studies program in the Memorial Union Monday. Lara is one of the 18 ASU students who are "Women Making History Today," a project celebrating Women's History Month that is sponsored by the Office of Student Life.

BY JUNE D. WILHITE
STATE PRESS

She could barely speak English at age 12 when she and her family arrived in the United States from Nicaragua.

Now in her mid-twenties, Erenia Lara, a communication senior, is one of 18 ASU women who are "Women Making History Today" — a project sponsored by the Office of Student Life to celebrate Women's History Month by recognizing the accomplishments made by ASU women.

"It's an awesome honor especially because of what I've been through," Lara said. "To be compared with such great women, it's just overwhelming."

Lara recalls a time when her parents didn't know what their next meal was going to be.

"I don't know how we did it," she said. "I don't know how my parents survived, especially not being able to speak English."

As the first person in her family to go to college, Lara said she feels privileged just to be able to get an education. In her effort to educate others, she spends Wednesday evenings teaching immigrant men and women to speak English.

"I saw a need to help women from different countries to communicate better," she said. "I teach them the simplest ways to communicate — how to pronounce words clearly or how to read their children's homework."

Kerrie Strunk, a political science senior, said she nominated Lara because of how she overcame obstacles in her life while maintaining a positive, healthy attitude.

"I have never met someone that has gone through so much and yet was able to sustain such a determined and enlightened outlook in life," Strunk said. "I consider her a friend, a role model, a fellow fighter for women and minority rights and an example for all of us."

Despite the accomplishments she has already achieved, Lara continues planning future goals. Her dream is to become an attorney and an advocate for women's rights and education.

In the meantime, Lara serves as president of the Women's Coalition, which recently signed a partnership with Gililand Middle School in Tempe, where its members will mentor female students.

"We want to be a positive re-enforcement for young girls," Lara said.

Nonnie Shivers, who leads the "Women Making History Today" project, said Lara represents ASU student leaders and scholars who are overcoming immense obstacles everyday to achieve their dreams.

"Courageous, passionate and committed to her ideals, Erenia is the epitome of a leader and scholar," Shivers said. "As a woman of color, she serves as a role model for others and is committed to clearing obstacles and tearing down barriers for women, so that they too will succeed."

ASU starts new aide program to assist campus police

BY JAYSON PETERS
STATE PRESS

ASU has some new eyes and ears to help police crack down on would-be burglars and thieves.

The Department of Public Safety added nine police aides to its campus police force.

"We have a lot of equipment and supplies that are subject to possible theft," said Lt. John Sutton of ASU police. "The aides are going to help augment the regular officer force."

The aides went into service last week, patrolling academic buildings on campus. That means sworn ASU police officers will now be able to focus on more serious crimes.

The University has tried unsuccessfully to reinforce its law enforcement personnel with private security companies in the past, Sutton said.

"That didn't work for various reasons," he said.

"(The University) couldn't find security people that were able to meet the background checks and requirements."

The aides, like officers, must submit to background checks and polygraph tests before being hired, Sutton said. They only receive four weeks of training, as opposed to the four months required for officers. And they don't carry weapons or make arrests.

The department currently has more than 40 sworn police officers and has received a federal grant to hire more.

Police aides are paid and work full or part time. They can be recognized by their light blue uniforms. Sworn ASU police officers wear khaki and their Tempe counterparts dark blue.

Sharon Zellmer is finishing her police aide training this week. The 1989 ASU graduate in social work will work part time.

"I've re-oriented myself with the campus," Zellmer said. "I've learned where buildings are that I didn't even know existed."

Sutton said aides must memorize details such as alarm system information and the various activities going on within academic buildings.

"They're going to have to really have a good memory," he said.

That requirement doesn't deter Zellmer from her choice.

"I was attracted to the University atmosphere," she said. "I've always had an interest in law enforcement. I like that it was a new program and that I would have a chance to make a new start."

And although it's an option for police aides, Zellmer said she currently has no plans to become a sworn police officer.

"I haven't come to that conclusion yet," she said.

Yosemite murder case evokes grief, uncertainty in hometown

By JOHN HOWARD
ASSOCIATED PRESS

EUREKA, Calif.—The discovery of two people's remains in a torched rental car near Yosemite National Park has added an element of fear to this town's feeling of grief.

And a new mystery: Where is the third victim?

"We have no evidence at this time to show the third victim was in the car," FBI spokesman Nick Rossi said today. "The recovery of the third victim is a priority at this time."

Authorities hoped to release the identities of the two bodies this evening. Meanwhile, federal arson investigators were searching for chemical clues today in the charred rental car, which was taken from its wooded dumping ground to a hangar at a nearby airport.

The disappearance of Carole Sund, a member of a prominent real estate family, her teen-age daughter, Julie, and family friend Silvina Pelosso on Feb. 15 prompted a massive search in this mining country just outside the park.

Hope of a possible innocent misunderstanding faded when, within days, Mrs. Sund's wallet was found in the middle of a busy intersection in a town two hours away.

Then nothing for almost a month before someone spotted the burned-out shell of their rental car Thursday and two unidentified bodies were discovered in the trunk.

"I think people here are sort of waiting for the other shoe to fall," said Weldon Benzinger, a science teacher at Eureka High School, where saddened students built hallway displays honoring Julie, 15, and Silvina, 16, an exchange student from Argentina.

Jens Sund, Carole's husband and father of Julie, was in seclusion over the weekend while relatives made a pilgrimage to the site in remote Long Barn where the charred car was found. "The senseless waste of these precious lives is so incomprehensible I can't even begin to understand why it happened," he said in a handwritten statement.

The last confirmed sighting of the trio was in El Portal, a tiny mountain town at the edge of Yosemite where the three sightseers had dinner at the Cedar Lodge.

On Thursday, the burned hulk of their red 1999 rented Pontiac was found off winding Highway 108 in rugged Tuolumne County. The family's hopes were raised: There was no word that the three had been found.

But a day later, FBI agents disclosed the discovery of the incinerated remains of two people in the vehicle's trunk.

"That was the worst moment for the family, the worst. That was a very, very long day," said Ron Caton, who is related to the Sund family by marriage.

Carole Sund's father, Francis Carrington, was visibly anguished Sunday as he sat, head in hands, at the site where investigators made their grisly discovery. He and his wife, as well as FBI agents, Silvina's tearful parents and Sund's brother marked the spot with flowers and a cross.

"It's the worst feeling of all, not knowing what happened," Carrington said. "Can you imagine not even finding out if your relatives are dead? It's just terrible."

Mexican writer wows crowd

BY ERLEND AAS
STATE PRESS

Global problems need global solutions, said Carlos Fuentes, the famous Mexican writer and political voice, to a full house at Grady Gammage Auditorium Monday night.

"Inequality is the shame of Latin America," said Fuentes in his speech. "A Dialogue For The Americas." He said Latin America's problems are based on its seemingly insurmountable social inequality, and this inequality must be the starting point for any change.

Fuentes inaugurated the Centennial Lecture in 1989, and since then it has become an annual event, featuring great personalities. He is the first speaker to be invited for a return performance. He said it was nice to come back and see how solidly the lecture series has developed.

After a brief discussion of Latin America's history, Fuentes identified the remedies for the region's problems as social equality, justice, education, health services and better jobs.

He said global problems demands global solutions, but emphasized that these solutions would have to be carried out at the national levels.

He noted the importance of the involvement of the third sector, or civil society in this problem-solving process.

The third sector — worker's unions, agrarian co-operatives, feminists and other activists — need to organize and be strong in order to keep an eye on the private and public sectors he said.

"Poverty in Latin America is growing, no diminishing," Fuentes said.

New grandmaster breaks chess color barrier

BY BETH GARDINER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — A 33-year-old chess player who honed his skills in Brooklyn's Prospect Park has become the first black to achieve the title of grandmaster, the game's highest rank.

"The stereotype in this country is that African-Americans don't do well at things like chess," Maurice Ashley said. "We're understood as physically gifted and great entertainers, but when it comes to something intellectual, that lags behind."

There are some 470 grandmasters worldwide, 45 of them in the United States.

A Jamaican immigrant, Ashley spent much of his adolescence working on his game in Prospect Park. He joined the Black Bear School of Chess, a group of people who played hard-fought games in the park for hours on end.

"Maurice almost did it by himself," said Jerald Times, a fellow chess devotee who met Ashley in the park a decade ago. "He didn't have a whole Russian chess school."

Ashley later began coaching the Mott Hall Dark Knights, a Harlem middle school chess team that won three national championships. He took a leave in 1997 and devoted himself to chess full time, flying to tournaments around the world.

On March 14, at a tournament at the Manhattan Chess Club, Ashley achieved the rank of grandmaster by completing a rigorous set of requirements at high-level chess tournaments in a set period of time.

The U.S. Chess Federation said Ashley is the first black person in the world to become grandmaster.

"He made me believe that I could do it, because we're both minority," said Brian Ovalle, a 13-year-old Dominican-American on the Mott Hall team. "It's like when Jackie Robinson broke the color barrier."

Kevorkian allowed to represent himself in Michigan murder trial

By JUSTIN HYDE
ASSOCIATED PRESS

PONTIAC, Mich. — Acting as his own lawyer, Dr. Jack Kevorkian went on trial on murder charges for the first time Monday and told a jury that like an executioner, he was merely carrying out his professional duty in a videotaped suicide shown on 60 Minutes.

Kevorkian was charged after he gave a lethal injection to a patient with Lou Gehrig's disease and dared prosecutors to do something about it.

Kevorkian said in his opening statement that he acted out of compassion for 52-year-old Thomas Youk and was no more culpable than an executioner. "To have a crime, you need a vicious will and a vicious act," he said.

Prosecutor John Skrzynski objected, contending that Kevorkian was arguing law rather than summarizing his case. Judge Jessica Cooper agreed, and she briefly dismissed the jury to ask Kevorkian what he was trying to say.

"What I was trying to prove here is that I didn't have the intent to kill, just as the executioner doesn't," Kevorkian said. "His intent is to do his duty, because he may despise what he is doing. But he's forced to do it by his position."

Earlier, Kevorkian won the right to represent himself despite the misgivings of the judge, who asked him: "Do you understand you could spend the rest of your life in prison?"

"There's not much of it left," the 70-year-old Kevorkian said.

After the ruling, 12 jurors and two alternates quickly were selected out of a pool of 80 people. The judge asked candidates whether they knew anyone who had suffered a terminal illness, and several people were dismissed after saying they had strong opinions about the case.

By his own count, Kevorkian has taken part in more than 130 suicides since 1990. He has been tried four times on assisted suicide charges, with three acquittals and one mistrial.

In Skrzynski's opening statement, the prosecutor said there was a key difference between those cases and this one. "This is not an assisted suicide case," Skrzynski said. "Tom Youk did not kill himself with Jack Kevorkian's help. Jack Kevorkian killed Tom Youk by injecting him with drugs."

Kevorkian will be allowed to consult with lawyers David Gorosh and Lisa Dwyer during this trial but said that defending himself was "what I've planned all along." "There are certain points I can bring out better than anyone else," Kevorkian said. "There are certain questions I can ask."

When Cooper asked Kevorkian whether he knew what the inside of a state prison looked like, Kevorkian replied that he had seen The Shawshank Redemption twice.

Cooper warned Kevorkian that that what he says in court can be used against him in future proceedings. But he countered: "I plan to say nothing but the truth."

Cooper then reluctantly granted his request. Sitting at the defense table, Gorosh shook his head. The lawyer has said he advised Kevorkian not to represent himself.

Kevorkian is charged with killing Youk, who had amyotrophic lateral sclerosis, also known as Lou Gehrig's disease, a progressively fatal illness that eventually leaves victims unable to speak, swallow or move. His family said Youk was having trouble breathing and was afraid of choking on his own saliva.

Web site warns motorists about U.S. speed traps

By ALEXIS CHIU
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — Drivers trying to avoid speed traps might want to take a spin on the information superhighway first.

At a Web site called speedtrap.com, motorists have posted details on thousands of speed traps around the country, including location, average fine, the type of car police use and the local scanner frequency.

"This is the most notorious speed trap in Georgia, perhaps the U.S.," reads an entry for Ludowici, Ga., where former Gov. Lester Maddox once posted billboards warning tourists to avoid the town because ticket-related corruption was so bad.

The Web site was created in 1995 by Andrew Warner, a 23-year-old Atlanta resident who says he has only one speeding ticket to his name.

"It started out mainly in the South, looking at entrapment cases," says Warner, who works as a network engineer. "But it's evolved into a general driver's service. Everybody can relate."

An entry for the Massachusetts town of Dover reads: "They will pull you over for less than 5 mph over the limit at any location, even if you're riding a bicycle."

An exaggeration, says Dover Police Chief Joseph Griffin, who laughed when he heard the description. "We're not quite that zealous," he says. "But if somebody says, 'I better not speed in that town,' then someone else has done my job for me."

Though the site carries a disclaimer saying it is not "an effort to undercut the efforts of police to control motorists' speeds on dangerous roads," some entries read like instructions for outsmarting the law.

"The state trooper drives a gold Ford Crown Vic," reads a Connecticut entry. "You don't see him until it's too late. ... I have seen him parked sideways using laser, so beware, he is very tricky."

Still, some law-enforcement officials applaud the net result.

"The purpose of speed enforcement is to reduce car crashes and save lives," says Massachusetts State Police Capt. Robert Bird. "Whether you can get people to slow down by warning that police may be there or by catching them in the act, it accomplishes the same thing."

Slippery slope to court? Florida clubhouses ban soap

BY KAREN TESTA
ASSOCIATED PRESS

DEERFIELD BEACH, Fla. — Trying to avoid a slippery slope to litigation, the Bonaventure Town Center Club has banned soap in the showers.

Feel free to work up a sweat on the racquetball courts, take a swim in the Olympic-size pools or soak in the steam from the hot tub. Just don't dare lather up in the locker room.

And not just bar soap is banned, but body wash, shampoo, conditioner and shaving cream, too.

"We've been sued. We've settled. We've lost a lot of money," said Bob Fedderwitz, executive director of the recreation center in Weston, a well-to-do community of families and retirees near Fort Lauderdale.

He would not say how much the club had paid out or how many lawsuits it has been hit with since its 1984 opening, except that it's "quite a few."

"We're just a litigious society," Fedderwitz said. "Anybody who hurts themselves, when they see an establishment like ourselves that's required to carry X dollars in insurance, that's very attractive to attorneys."

And very unattractive to insurance companies.

Fedderwitz said the club's insurer was considering dropping its coverage if the place didn't do something about the lawsuits. The ban went into effect a few weeks ago.

At Century Village in Deerfield Beach, soap has been banned in locker rooms and at poolside showers since the retirement community was built 25 years ago.

The 15,000 residents of Century Village, where the average age is between 70 and 75, are accustomed to community regulations, and most respect the soap ban, said Amadeo Trinchitella, the 81-year-old chairman of the recreation committee.

As for the occasional suds smuggler, "we try to say that there's going to be penalties — such as we're going to keep you from going to the (community) shows," Trinchitella said. "But it's kind of an idle threat."

Some of those at Century Village consider leaving the soap at home a way of looking out for one another.

"With our age group, we're very careful," said Eddie Levine, 83, chairman of the pools.

Fedderwitz said people at the Town Center Club aren't in a lather about the ban either. He said there have been only a few complaints.

After all, he said, "if they really want to take a soapy shower and not worry about smelling, they're three minutes from their house."

"A good team beats five of those 10 because you've got to account for home cookin' and stuff like that. But a good team beats five of 10. Two of 10? Unacceptable" — ASU head baseball coach Pat Murphy

State Press for Tuesday, March 23, 1999

ASU looks for return of attitude against 'Lopes

BY NICK PIECORO
STATE PRESS

On Friday night, the Sun Devils jumped all over Boston College pitcher Stephen Langone. After the first inning, Langone found himself down 5-0 and scratching and clawing to stay in the game.

But early on, Langone did just enough to wiggle out of danger and hang in the game. He wound up throwing seven innings. The Eagles rallied and all of a sudden the Sun Devils were in a one-run game, leading 6-5 in the sixth inning.

Although ASU (24-10) won the game by that score, head coach Pat Murphy again came across something that has been worrying him all season — his team's lack of grit.

When Langone was on the edge of a cliff in the first inning, and the Sun Devils didn't push him off, Murphy realized again what needs to be addressed.

"We've been one of the only programs around," he said, "that's been in the top 10 two years in a row and the reason we were is because of our attitude."

"We've got to capture that back. You can break this down into hitting, pitching or defense. You can do anything you want. Bottom line is it's all about attitude. We've got to come to the ballpark with an attitude."

"We had (Langone) on the ropes, but couldn't put him out."

With Cal coming in over the weekend and the conference schedule about to start up, Murphy is hoping his players will come around.

"We better grasp some identity and grasp some grittiness real quick," he said. "Or we're going to be behind the eight ball playing catch up."

ASU, ranked 20th by Baseball America, has played one of the toughest schedules of any team in the country — something that is sure to help against the Pac-10's quality opponents. ASU has played 10 road games against top-25 opponents.

"We've won two of those 10 games," Murphy said. "A good team beats five of those 10 because you've got to account for home cookin' and stuff like that. But a good team beats five of 10. Two of 10? Unacceptable."

Keep in mind, these are truly top-notch opponents — teams that have had good programs for a while now. ASU played three-game sets against No. 1 Florida State, Stanford, which is No. 4 and 5 depending on which poll you look at, and UofA, No. 23 in one poll. ASU also lost a close one last Tuesday to No. 11 Cal State Fullerton.

"Up to this point, our schedule has been the toughest because we've played those 10 on the road," Murphy said. "But I'm not a fool to believe that that makes us a good team, because we haven't won."

"It's about getting your team ready to play baseball in the big games. To this point, on the road we haven't played well in the big games."

Tonight at 7 the Sun Devils will host Grand Canyon (22-8) at Packard Stadium. ASU crushed the Antelopes 18-6 on Feb. 23, so it won't exactly be a big-game atmosphere. But Grand Canyon will throw Mike Torres, which could be a positive for the Sun Devils. Not because he's bad, but because he's good.

"They've got their number one (pitcher) going," Murphy said. "So it gives us an opportunity to get better and that's what it's all about."

"We've been one of the only programs around that's been in the top 10 two years in a row and the reason we were is because of our attitude. We've got to capture that back."

Pat Murphy,
ASU baseball coach

Samaruddin Stewart of the State Press
Chip Gosewisch, who's hitting .356 and is third on the team in RBI, and the rest of the Sun Devils will host Grand Canyon tonight at 7 at Packard Stadium.

Nearsighted Cubs foolish for risking Wood's bright future

Did the Chicago Cubs mail in the check on Kerry Wood and their 1999 campaign last season in game three of the National League Division Series against the Atlanta Braves?

We all know the answer to this question is yes, you dummy. Of course the Cubs ended this year's hopes of a playoff berth by throwing him last October. Wood pitched in the third game of the Division Series, a series which the Cubs obviously were not going to win. Wood threw five innings in that game and was missing his primary weapon, his cutting curveball.

Why?

We'll never know for sure, but I'll betcha it was because he wasn't fully healed from a sprained ulnar collateral ligament. The nearsighted Cubs risked the future for the present.

That one game may have cost Wood his whole career. He injured the same ligament on March 13 against Anaheim, this time tearing it completely. He lasted 26 pitches in all, and he managed to average 95 miles per hour after the injury.

The Cubs will miss Wood, who won the National League Rookie of the Year last season with an impressive 13-6 record and a 3.40 ERA. He had 233 strikeouts in 166 2/3 innings to help anchor the Cubs' staff. He was being tabbed as the club's opening day starter for the next decade.

His most impressive game — the one that exploded him onto the baseball scene — was his 20-strikeout performance on May 6 against the Houston Astros. That tied Roger Clemens' record nine-inning performance for punchouts.

Questions have been raised about the development of Kid K. In 1996, when Wood was in class A ball, he made just 22 starts and experienced some arm trouble. His pitch count was limited to 100.

So why then did the Cubs allow him to go over the 100 limit pitch count knowing he had arm problems already?

Curt Schilling of the Philadelphia Phillies has responded to some of these questions.

"It befuddles me how organizations can continue to bring kids up from the minors on 100-pitch counts and then bring them to the big leagues and let them throw 125-130 pitches," Schilling told USA Today.

Wood had two lengthy outings before he went down with his arm injury last year. In his second-to-last start before going on the disabled list he threw 132 pitches and struck out 16 Cincinnati Reds batters. In his very next start, on Aug. 31, Wood threw 117 pitches against the Reds.

Cubs general manager Ed Lynch had something to say about the whole ordeal.

"We were very, very conservative with Kerry," Lynch told ESPN. "Whether this was bound to happen, I don't know."

Sure Ed. I believe you (lying through my teeth), as you count the dollars that Wood brought in for you. The Cubs need to plan for the future.

Why Ed. Why?

Wood not the only one

Do the names Steve Busby, Paul Wilson, Mark Fidrych, Gary Nolan and most recently Matt Morris mean anything to you?

Busby was one of the top young starters with the Kansas City Royals in '74 and '75. He won 40 games and pitched two no-hitters before the age of 26. His career ended when he injured his rotator cuff and was finished by the age of 30.

Wilson, the Mets' first overall pick in 1994, came down with shoulder problems after a fine rookie season and has been trying to come back ever since.

"The Bird" (Fidrych) was a different pitcher that caught the eye of the nation with his unusual habits such as talking to the baseball. He also had a great rookie year but hurt himself at the beginning of the 1977 season and never recovered. He finished with 29 career victories.

The 19-year-old Nolan led the White Sox survive late-inning rally, outlast Mariners

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Jim Parque, tentatively Chicago's No. 3 starter, allowed three runs and four hits in five innings Monday as the White Sox took an eight-run lead and outlasted the Seattle Mariners 11-9.

Seven Seattle pitchers allowed 11 hits, while Seattle's defense committed four errors that led to nine unearned runs. The Mariners' improved defense this spring gave up five unearned runs in the first 19 spring games.

Darrin Jackson hit a bases-loaded triple in the seventh to put Chicago, which opens the season at Seattle, ahead 11-3.

Brian Simmons, expected to be Chicago's starting center fielder, left in the fourth after his second single and second stolen base of the inning because of a cut left palm, an injury sustained when he got caught on second baseman David Bell's spikes.

Seattle scored five runs in the seventh off Keith Foulke.

Russ Davis and John Mabry hit home runs for the Mariners, Davis' fifth of the spring and Mabry's second. Davis, Seattle's third baseman, also made his first error of the spring, leading six runs in the fourth off Bobby Ayala, who also walked three. Davis set a team record with 34 errors last season.

"You want to stay away from the big innings and you want to stay away from walks," Mariners manager Lou Piniella said. "You'd like to see your pitchers a little closer to the plate."

Ayala had nine of the Seattle's 21 blown saves last year, when he went 1-10 with a 7.29 ERA. He will earn $1.8 million this season, and the Mariners have been trying to trade him this spring.

The Mariners started minor leaguer Joel Pineiro, who gave up one run and five hits in two innings.

Jose Mesa, signed as a free agent to be Seattle's closer, pitched two scoreless innings.

Nevin raps 4 hits as Angels win

Phil Nevin went 4-for-4 with three RBI and Tim Belcher allowed three unearned runs over 5 2/3 innings as the Anaheim Angels defeated a split squad of San Diego Padres, 9-7.

Mo Vaughn and Troy Glaus each added two hits and an RBI as the Angels scored three in the fifth inning to take a 6-3 lead. Belcher allowed five hits and walked three, but was victimized by errors from Nevin behind the plate and shortstop Jeff Huson.

Stan Spencer took the loss for San Diego, giving up six runs — three earned — and nine hits over 4 2/3 innings. Chris Jones went 2-for-4 and Ed Giovanola and

Fish outslug Montreal

MELBOURNE, Fla. — John Roskos belted a grand slam after an intentional walk in the bottom of the ninth inning to give the Florida Marlins a wild 14-10 exhibition victory over the Montreal Expos.

Loser Ben Fleetham, who retired just one batter, walked Tim Hyers intentionally to get to Roskos. Roskos delivered with the bases loaded for the second straight game. He had a three-run double Sunday in a 10-4 victory over St. Louis.

Derrek Lee homered and drove in three runs and six other Marlins had one RBI apiece. Lee, Luis Castillo and Alex Gonzalez each had two hits.

The Marlins cruised into the eighth with a 7-4 lead before Montreal erupted for five runs. Florida scored three times in the bottom of the inning but Mike Barrett hit his second solo homer of the game in the ninth to forge a 10-10 tie.

Wilton Guerrero and Manny Martinez, who had three hits, also hit solo shots for the Expos.

Montreal starter Carl Pavano, acquired before the 1998 season in a deal with Boston for Pedro Martinez, gave up seven runs — six earned — and 10 hits in four innings.

Park shuts down Royals

VERO BEACH, Fla. — Chan Ho Park pitched six innings and combined with three relievers on a five-hitter to lead the Los Angeles Dodgers to a 4-1 exhibition victory over the Kansas City Royals.

Park yielded a run and three hits with a walk and six strikeouts. Lefthanders Greg Cadaret and Pedro Borbon each pitched a hitless inning before Alan Mills finished up for his third save. Mills allowed the two other hits.

Rick Wilkins homered for the Dodgers to open the scoring in the third inning but Jeff King tied it in the fourth with a sacrifice fly.

Los Angeles broke the deadlock in the fifth when loser Erik Hanson balked Adrian Beltre and Wilkins into scoring position to set up an RBI single by Jose Vizcaino and a sacrifice fly by Kevin Gibbs. Dave Hansen drove in the final run with a groundout in the sixth.

Hanson allowed three runs and six hits in five innings. Johnny Damon had two of Kansas City's five hits and Todd Hollandsworth added a pair of hits for the Dodgers.

Ogea, Radke match shutout innings

FORT MYERS, Fla. — If only the Phillies and Twins got pitching like this every game.

Philadelphia's Chad Ogea pitched five shutout innings and Minnesota's Brad Radke threw six Monday during the Phillies' 6-4 win.

Ogea allowed three hits, struck out two and walked none, while Radke gave up two hits, walked one and struck out four, including Scott Rolen to end the sixth with runners on second and third.

Wakefield defeats former teammates

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BRADENTON, Fla. — Tim Wakefield allowed one hit in five innings and five relievers finished a two-hit shutout as the Boston Red Sox beat the Pittsburgh Pirates 1-0 Monday.

Wakefield struck out four and walked two in his first appearance in McKechnie Field since being waived by the Pirates during spring training in 1995.

Wakefield starred as a rookie on the Pirates' 1992 NL East championship team, going 8-1 and beating Atlanta twice in the NL championship series. But he won only six more games for Pittsburgh before being released.

"It was different, weird," Wakefield said. "But once the game got started it was back to normal. I saw a lot of guys I used to play with and there was a little bitterness. But that's the nature of the game and the nature of the business."

Wakefield has since been one of the AL's most consistent starting pitchers with Boston.

The only run scored on Mike Stanley's double play grounder in the fifth after Pirates center fielder Turner Ward lost John Valentin's fly ball in a cloudless sky, loading the bases. Valentin was given a single.

That play led to the only run off the Pirates' Chris Peters in four innings. Expected to be the Pirates' No. 5 starter, he was pitching for the first time since straining a biceps muscle a week ago, walking two and giving up four hits.

Pirates right fielder Jose Guillen prevented another run by easily throwing out Damon Buford at the plate in the seventh inning.

Brad Clontz got the final out in the ninth, striking out Freddy Garcia with runners on first and second.

Thompson, Encarnacion lead Tigers to victory

LAKELAND, Fla. — Justin Thompson had another strong outing for Detroit and Juan Encarnacion had three hits, including a pair of doubles, as the Tigers beat the Texas Rangers 3-2 Monday.

Thompson, who led the Tigers in innings, strikeouts and complete games while going 11-15 last season, gave up two runs and six hits in five innings with three strikeouts and two walks.

Mark Clark, in his fourth start of the spring, gave up all three runs and six hits in five innings. Encarnacion, who appears to have won the starting job in left field, doubled in the first and scored on Bobby Higginson's RBI single.

Juan Gonzalez singled home Mark McLemore and Royce Clayton, each of whom had singled, for a 2-1 lead in the fifth, but the Tigers scored twice in the bottom half.

Encarnacion doubled home Frank Catalanotto and Gregg Jefferies' sacrifice fly drove in Luis Garcia with the go-ahead run. Brandon Reed held the Rangers hitless for three innings and Sean Runyan pitched the ninth for his first save.

Phillies second baseman Marlon Anderson throws the ball to first base after forcing Minnesota's Chad Allen out in the first inning of the Phillies' 6-4 win on Monday.

Ogea, acquired from Cleveland during the offseason for reliever Jerry Spradlin, has yet to give up a walk in 16 spring innings.

Rico Brogna homered and had three hits for the Phillies. Chad Allen went 2-for-3 for the Twins, improving to 24-for-48 this spring.

Relievers Eddie Guardado and Frankie Rodriguez were tagged for six runs and eight hits in the seventh and eighth innings.

With the score 4-all in the eighth, Philadelphia loaded the bases on singles by Brogna and Kevin Jordan and a walk to Billy McMillon. Brogna scored on a groundout and Jordan came around on Dave Doster's sacrifice fly.

Minnesota got three runs in the sixth off winner Yorkis Perez. Todd Walker hit a two-run double and Eddie Williams singled in a run.

Philadelphia took a 4-3 lead in the seventh on Brogna's solo homer, Chris Bennett's RBI single and Kevin Sefcik's RBI double. Joey Espanda's run-scoring grounder tied it in the bottom half.

Cards blast Baltimore

JUPITER, Fla. — Hours after St. Louis learned pitcher Matt Morris will miss the season because of an elbow injury, the Cardinals got a spring-high 15 hits and beat the Baltimore Orioles 12-3 Monday.

Darren Bragg had three hits, while Eli Marrero, Fernando Tatis and David Howard had two apiece. Marrero had three RBIs, and Mark McGwire, Pat Kelly and Willie McGee two apiece.

Wood

Cincinnati Reds with a 14-8 record and 206 strikeouts in 1967. He then caught the injury bug the next two years with a sore shoulder in the spring of '68 and a pulled forearm muscle in '69. He made only 37 starts during this time and lost his velocity. He eventually returned as a control artist and won 15 or more games four times in the '70s. He finally retired at the young age of 29.

The most recent phenom to go down is Morris, the Cardinals' 24-year-old right-hander. He was supposed to be the ace of the staff, but after making his first spring start on March 16, an MRI afterward revealed a severely sprained elbow. He will probably miss the entire '99 season.

But this is not his first arm problem. In '98, he was missed all but one start prior to the All Star break with a shoulder injury. He returned to post a 7-5 record with a 2.53 ERA.

Will Wood become one of these burned out phenoms? I hope not, for the Cubs' sake. The lovable losers have not won a pennant since 1945 and a World Series since 1908.

But is Wood too talented for his own body?

Pitching guru Dr. Tom House, a former Texas Rangers pitching coach, believes that this is so.

"The generated arm strength and the muscle mass and the muscle stamina didn't match up," House said Monday. "That's why he broke. He was not strong enough or mature enough or hard-working enough for what his gene pool produced."

House also eluded to the fact that Wood has to strengthen his body to stay healthy.

"The only way those kids who throw hard enough can support it is if they have to find enough strength to make it all hold together," House said. "The support system — primary muscles, secondary muscles and connective tissue — weren't functionally strong enough with Kerry to balance the 100 mph arm speed."

When Wood starts his rehab, he will have to go through a strenuous and painstaking process. All Cubs fans will be praying to the baseball gods above. I will be right there with them because I am a loyal lover of the losers!!

Sammy Sosa (left) and coach Billy Williams won't be laughing so much this year if the Cubs' fortunes take a turn for the worst, as expected, with fireballer Kerry Wood sidelined.

Duke women stun Lady Vols, join men in Final Four

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Duke needed a supreme effort and an off night from Tennessee star Chamique Holdsclaw to win the NCAA East Regional title.

It got both Monday night.

The Blue Devils (28-6) joined their men's team in the Final Four with a stunning 69-63 victory over the top-seeded and three-time defending national champion Lady Volunteers.

Holdsclaw, the top women's player in the game, missed her first 10 shots and finished 2-for-18 from the field for eight points — matching her season low.

She fouled out with 25.4 seconds left to end her stellar career, receiving a standing ovation.

Georgia Schweitzer matched her career high with 22 points as third-seeded Duke became the first program to place both its men's and women's basketball teams in the Final Four since Georgia did it in 1983.

Duke, which lost to Tennessee by 14 points in December, will face Georgia in the national semifinals in San Jose, Calif.

The women did it in front of male counterparts Trajan Langdon, Chris Carrawell and Shane Battier, who had driven an hour from the Duke campus to the Greensboro Coliseum to cheer the women on.

Semeka Randall led Tennessee (31-3) with 18 points.

Tennessee fans outnumbered the Duke contingent by thousands, but the Lady Volunteers came out uninspired and soon found themselves down by 13 in the first half.

The Lady Volunteers then made their first four shots of the second half, including the opening bucket of the period by Holdsclaw, to close to 38-34.

But Duke withstood a 5 1/2-minute span without a basket as Tennessee got as close as 46-45 with 6:52 left.

The Blue Devils were limited to three second-half baskets before Nicole Erickson, who was saddled with first-half foul trouble, made a 12-footer. She added a running banker 50 seconds later for a 55-50 lead.

Tennessee never got closer than five down the stretch as Duke sank 12 free throws over the final 1:31 to clinch it as Erickson added 17 points.

Both teams started slowly, but none slower than Holdsclaw, who was averaging 29 points in three NCAA tournament games this season. The senior forward couldn't find her range from anywhere on the floor and her superior jumping ability didn't seem to be there on this night.
