Give yourself a break. Go to Homestead, where you can build your own Web site—quickly and easily. And have fun doing it. Then, you can do all kinds of cool stuff with your Homestead, like share photos with friends. Or create an online party invite. Or keep in touch over summer break. Best of all, Homestead is absolutely free. You could even win a Pentium III PC just for building a Homestead. So check it out. It's fun. It's fast. And it's way easier than A, B, C.

*HOW MUCH DO YOU PAY FOR USED CDs?

* I don't want to work this summer and I need to raise some cash now.

We pay the most. And we buy a lot. Just bring 'em down and we'll get you set up with some extra spendin' cash. Maybe you just need some fresh tunes for the road. We can do that too. Cash or trade - you're covered at Hoodlums. We're downstairs in ASU's Memorial Union. 727-USED.

Theta dad remembered

By Jennifer Lamb

The sororities' move to a new facility in the fall has frustrated and upset many students, but for graduating senior Chelsea Olson it means losing memories she and her father shared at the Kappa Alpha Theta floor in Palo Verde Main.

The late Duane Olson passed away this year from cancer. One of Chelsea's fondest memories of her father was renovating her sorority floor together her freshman and sophomore year.

With the help of others, Olson and her dad had refurbished Theta's furniture, made new pillows and drapes, scraped old wallpaper, re-painted the entire floor and personalized the room doors for each girl.

"We re-did everything," said Olson.

The Theta makeover was contagious to everyone on the floor said Olson. "They (sorority sisters) would always come knocking on my door asking if my Dad was coming by today and if he needed any help. It united all of us and we had a lot of fun."

Sitting in Theta's chapter room, she reflected, "When I walk in here, this is where my memories are." She pointed to a table and smiled, "I know that in the cement under those tiles, my Dad's initials are carved. They are special to me."

Olson is sad to see Theta and the memories it holds go. "Theta is important to me for many reasons. It has a lot of sentimental value. Theta has been a safe place and a huge growing experience for me throughout my college years."

Olson also said that Theta has value to many of the other girls on the floor as well, especially those graduating with her. "Everyone became close to my Dad because he was always around. He was like the father of Theta. We all grew up together and now are graduating. If Theta moves, the memories and contributions we and my dad are leaving behind to the younger girls will be lost."

Olson feels a new sorority floor just wouldn't be the same. "You can't replace such a great house. We have made Theta what it is today. We worked hard to create such a nice and comfortable place to live. There is nowhere Arizona State University can move us that has the same quality and personal value as Theta does right now," explained Olson.

Olson is graduating this year with a bachelor's degree in broadcast journalism and with minors in Spanish and business. After graduation she plans to work as a producer on a television station. Her ultimate goal is to start working with a Spanish station in the United States and then move to work at a sister station in Mexico.

Unruly neighbors

By Lindsey Burke

College students are notorious party animals whose weekend living habits often consist of drinking, partying and staying up making noise until wee hours of the morning.

But there are negative consequences for all of this, and it can sometimes leave students homeless.

"It's a problem that concerns the whole community, not just the guilty party," Patty McNish of the Hyde Park apartments in Tempe said. Reasons for eviction can be as unusual as fist fighting, drugs, prostitution, or as simple as non-payment of rent.

Renters can also be served with a written warning for failure to remove garbage, or leaving cigarette butts and beer bottles outside the building. However, in most cases McNish cited, students are asked to leave due to excessive noise and partying.

When potential tenants are looking at the property, they are told that they have three chances until they are asked to vacate the building. "We warn them that we are not a party community. Sure, we have college kids living here, but we also house elderly people and working professionals."

Like Hyde Park, the Wilshire Pines apartments in Tempe also serve a number of student renters. "It's three strikes and you're out," said Andrew, a rental agent at Wilshire Pines who chose to have his last name withheld.

Sometimes unruly leaseholders are asked not to renew their lease which is "slightly more common, and not as pushy" as an eviction notice.

However, sometimes students can be set apart from other renters because of the 'college kid' stereotype. ASU computer science major Reed Arvin, and art major Michael Gordon were asked to leave the Tempe apartment they shared because of excessive noise.

"After our first warning, it seemed like our neighbors were out to get us," Gordon explained. "We quieted down after that, but the notices just kept coming. We even received an eviction notice for a party that we didn't throw."

Students understand that respect for those living around them is necessary, but "they need to understand our need to unwind on the weekends," Arvin said. The two were asked to leave at the end of January, when the third eviction notice was delivered. The date on the notice was for a party that the apartment next door to them had given. "It was a great party, but we sure didn't throw it," Gordon said.

Kevin McLaughlin, a sophomore engineering major at ASU says college students often think freedom means being able to party whenever they want, wherever they want.

"I understand getting together with a few friends and having a couple of beers on Friday night, but staying up until three every weekend with the stereo blasting is ridiculous."

He has called the manager at his apartment complex a few times to get help handling noisy situations.

"Some people have to get up and go to work on Saturday morning, so it becomes necessary once in awhile," he said. "If they can't keep noise at a reasonable level, they need to find a place where other people won't be disturbed...an apartment complex isn't the place."

Being quiet is a matter of respect for neighbors McNish explained. Even if college kids have a stressful week at school, it's not something that their neighbors need to know about with the help of a blaring stereo.

Michael Gordon agreed that maybe they should have been a bit less rowdy and more considerate of their neighbors at the time.

"We probably did deserve to be kicked out, but they shouldn't have assumed that because we were young, we could be the scapegoat for other loud renters. It wasn't fair."

Champion Robot?

Kyle Chessir, 15, of Kokomo, Ind., pulls his team's robot, named "TKO," along a walkway at the 1999 FIRST Robotics Competition national championship held at Epcot at Walt Disney World Resort in Orlando, Fla., in April. High school students from Michigan, Indiana and Illinois competed.

Now and then success story

This could be called the "Now and Then Survivor" story! If you don't know this smiling face, then you must be very new to town.

Darlene M. (Joseph) Vollhardt has been involved in the restaurant business in downtown Tempe for the past 25 years. This milestone is quite an accomplishment, seeing as the most consistent thing in downtown Tempe is change itself.

In the mid-'80s Hayden Square was constructed, adding a whole new look and feel to the north end of Mill Avenue. In the late-'80s/early-'90s, the rest of Mill got a new streetscape. Also in the early-'90s, Centerpoint became anchored on the south end of Mill, again giving Mill Avenue a very grown-up look. Now in the late-'90s the town lake is becoming a long awaited reality. Meanwhile, countless restaurants have come and gone.

In 1975, Darlene's parents, Sid and Rose Joseph, opened Sid's Warehouse Deli and Pub. "The Warehouse" soon became "the" local hangout. Darlene and family always made you feel welcome and service was first class!

Sid's Warehouse was located on the corner of Forest and University Drive for 15 years. After Sid retired from the restaurant business, Darlene and husband Steve moved up the street one block to open Mama's Pizzeria at the corner of Myrtle & University.

Once again proving that she's a true survivor, Darlene provided the service that the Warehouse was famous for. Darlene and Steve have weathered redevelopment blues and economic hardships to proudly celebrate their 10-year anniversary at Mama's.

Darlene has really earned the affectionate title of "Mama." During these 10 years of working hard as an owner/operator, Darlene also found time to give birth to two beautiful daughters, Nicole and Danielle.

Anyone that visits Mama's Pizzeria during the day has probably experienced the kind hearted, genuine sweetness that Darlene radiates. If you were a regular customer six or seven years ago, Darlene would still probably be able to serve up your favorite toppings on a pizza and know your drink preference as well.

While Tempe experiences many changes, you'll always find familiar faces and warm smiles at Mama's Pizzeria.

By Dena Michelle Jones

Stress busters.

Most, if not all, college students encounter stress. Students have found innovative ways to relieve the pressures and conquer stress.

Some say that coffee cramming has become a routine practice. Others have found creative methods to tackle the pressures.

College life does not merely involve attending classes on a daily basis.

For most, college life also consists of an endless social life, dating, working, family involvement, meetings and countless hours of homework. Some also have added tension if they live far from home and others feel the heat if they live too close.

These collegiate adventures also create pressure to maintain a balanced life, manage time correctly and still have fun.

The pressures can develop into stress causing irritability, tension and anxiety along with severe illnesses.

Students use many methods to combat stress strategically.

Dan Navarro, junior film major, said that he thinks the most stressful part of college life is prioritizing his time and, "choosing between school, social life and work." Navarro said that he relieves stress by riding his mountain bike, drinking coffee or going to movies.

Coping with stress daily is an important part of the collegiate experience.

Robb Royse, freshman said, "I get things done so I have less stress and turn off the TV because it wastes too much time."

There are several techniques that students use to relieve stress.

These methods may not eliminate stress entirely, but they can minimize the negative results that stress causes.

Joyce Gullett, sophomore education major said, "I relieve stress by crying, talking to people about it or exercising.

Advice for dating at ASU

By Jennifer J. Holly

He saw her from across the crowded room, their eyes locked. He left that night with her number.

Two days later he called early in the afternoon, and he was to pick her up that night at eight. He showed up on time wearing a white button-up shirt, khakis, a black belt, black shoes and dark socks. He rang the doorbell. They walked to his car, and he opened her door.

They arrived at the restaurant, and he pushed open the door and walked in as she followed behind. They waited 45 minutes for a table. As for dinner, he finished the plate, soaking up every last drop with bread. He talked about an ex-girlfriend of the past six months, but paused every few minutes to answer his cell phone. When the bill came she paid.

Afterward, they hiked up "A" Mountain and gazed at the stars. They talked for hours, and their pagers and cell phones were silent. At just the right moment, he leaned over and kissed her gently.

When he dropped her off, he walked her to the door, and she thanked him for the wonderful night. He asked if he could see her again.

Yeah right! Here's what really happened.

They did see each other across the crowded room, but it took him three more beers before he stumbled over to ask for her number.

Five days later he called at around eight, and asked her out for the same night at nine. He showed up 20 minutes late wearing a faded Nascar T-shirt, jeans with a hole in the knee, and old tennis shoes. He honked from the road to let her know he was there.

They arrived at the restaurant and he pushed open the door and walked in as she followed behind. They waited 45 minutes for a table. As for dinner, he finished the plate, soaking up every last drop with bread. He talked about an ex-girlfriend of the past six months, but paused every few minutes to answer his cell phone. When the bill came she paid.

He took her back to his place where he lived with his best friend. All their "bros" were there, already drunk, so to catch up, he did a keg stand. The guys played Super Nintendo, belched and farted, and reminisced about the "good old days" when they put cement in all the locks of the doors in their high school.

His roommate and best friend hit on her before eventually passing out. He realized she was still there and told her he loved her. The next morning they woke up naked in his bed. As she was getting out of the car he told her he would call. Yeah, right!

What went wrong?

Miscommunication. According to Deborah Tannen's, You Just Don't Understand, men and women have different styles of communicating.

Men tend to be more self-involved and concerned about where they stand in society, Tannen wrote. When they speak, they try to out do the other so their status is not challenged, she wrote.

For example, Jack likes telling people about his brand new Jeep Grand Cherokee with six-inch-lift, chrome grille, and $3,000 Rockford Fosgate stereo system including 12-inch sub-woofers.

Tannen wrote that women, on the other hand, are more caring about others and their relationships with them. When women talk, it is to seek and give support and build closeness, she wrote.

For example, Susan often talks about her relationships with her friends and family, dwelling on small facts and creating scenarios on how a problem, big or small, can be solved.

To better understand the problem, and possible solutions, more than 100 men and women were surveyed and the following dating tips were compiled. Tips were given from each sex for each sex.

Guys to Girls

- Be honest. Don't ever lie, you'll get caught! Honesty is the best policy. An example is shown by Camille Young, 19, a communication major who said, "I love you is serious. No joke. Don't mean it, don't say it."

- Be yourself. This is just being honest about who you are.

"Just be you! It's that simple," said Jaime, 18, a psychology major. Courtney Angone, 18, undecided about her major, added, "You don't need to try so hard to impress a girl."

Gina Callei said, "Don't be afraid to trust your feelings. Friends' opinions are OK, but don't let them decide who you like."

- Confidence is very sexy. Just ask her out. "Don't get scared! If you like her, let her know, and don't freak out when she likes you back," said Callei.

As for the rejection factor, Amy Young, 21, a journalism major, said, "Rejection doesn't happen to every male that asks a girl out. If you have the guts to ask, chances are the girl will be flattered and say yes." Even though this is the '90s, most girls still expect guys to make the first move and ask her out on a date.

- Plan the date. Now that you got the date, where are you going to go, what are you going to do? Jackie Storch, 20, a communication major, has the same opinion as most women when she said, "Have something planned."

Take note, this does not include just hanging-out in your room or apartment, taking her on errands you had to do anyway, or partying with your bros. "Come up with creative ideas for dates, not just parties and movies," said Christine Haberkorn, 18, a business major.

- Wear something appropriate. Don't feel like you have to change your style, but please, dress appropriately. If you are going to a nice dinner, don't wear dirty jeans and a tank-top. "Make an effort to look nice," said Joanne Kozlik, 21, an accounting major.

A good tip: brown shoes and brown belt, black shoes and black belt. Never mix. As for those white athletic socks guys seem to wear with everything, there's a reason they are called athletic socks. However, if you're wearing jeans, they're OK. If there are any questions, call a good friend of the female gender, or your mother.

Looking nice includes shaving and doing your hair. Cologne is nice, but don't put on so much that your date keels over because she can't breathe.

Finally, "Try to communicate about what to wear by discussing where you are going on your date," said Tara Semmerling, 20, a dance major. You don't want the girl to wear a skirt and high heels if you'll be doing something active.

- Be chivalrous. "Chivalry is not dead. Being a gentlemen is still accepted," said Amy Young. Every girl interviewed said guys should always open the door. Vanessa Nettle, 18, a music education major added that "... if she doesn't say thank you, ask her if she wants to go burn her bra."

When it comes to cars, unlock and open her door. If she doesn't reach over and unlock yours, don't do it again.

"Do small thoughtful things out of the blue," said Jamie. She adds, "Subtle compliments always do the trick."

As for other things, "Be mature. Act like your own age," said Wen Chyi Chiu, 23, a journalism major. J. Smith, 22, a biology major also said, "Being loud and driving fast isn't attractive."

Manners are always important. Remember your pleases and thank you's, and table etiquette.

- Conversation, communication, and feelings. The most important of all. This is where much confusion takes place.

"If you're unsure about something she says, ask what she really means," said Christine Haberkorn.

"Ask questions, and really listen to the answers," said Jenny Dyches, 19, a dance major.

"Learn how to listen to her; and know when to listen and when to fix things," said Gina Callei.

Talk about things. "Tell her what you think. Bring her into your mind and thoughts," said Carly, 19, a psychology major.

Remember to be open minded and not to push her opinions aside, but validate them. You don't have to agree, but you are not entitled to put her down, she said.

As for topics to avoid, "Don't ask about the past. It's better left unsaid," said Amy Young. And, honesty is best, with this exception, "If she asks you if she looks fat, honesty probably isn't the best policy," said Vanessa Nettle.

"Jealousy and control makes for a bad relationship base," said Carly, 19, a psychology major.

Camille Young, 19, a communication major said, "Girls don't like guys that are too sensitive, but don't have the emotional level of a rock!" But, "don't say nothing is wrong if something is wrong," said Monica Adams, 22, a social psychology major.

Finally, if the relationship progresses, "Define your relationship, so each person knows if they can date other people or not," said Tara Semmerling.

• Matters of money. The waiter puts the bill on the table, the girl reaches for her purse while saying, "Let me pay." The guy says no. Leave it at that. She offered, but he paid. However, if she asks you out, she pays, and you take on her former role.

Joanne Kozlik said, "Don't feel like you have to spend money. Picnics and picked flowers are really romantic!" Carly, 19, a psychology major added, "Money isn't always everything. Showing you care is more important." As for how much money you have, J. Smith, shared the feelings of most girls surveyed when she said, "No one but shallow girls care what kind of car you drive." This also includes what you can and can not afford to do, so don't worry, if she's bothered by it, she is not worth seeing, she said.

• Sex. Heather Williams, 18, a business major, said, "Don't expect sex on the first date." "Don't expect sex on the first date, second or third," said Angie Hanson, 19, undecided.

If you do get lucky, "Practice safe sex!" reminds Amy Hardy, 26, a journalism major. And for God's sake, "Don't kiss and tell," said Gina Callei.

• Don't be a jerk. "Don't be a jerk-off to a girl you like when you're around your friends, then nice to her when you're alone with her," said Courtney Angone. She was just one of the many who complained that the great guy she met turned into a complete ass when around his friends.

Here is a small list of other things recommended not to do in front of a girl who interests you: use excessive bad language; belch or fart; scratch or adjust yourself.

• Don't play games. Guys don't do it as much as girls do, but it happens. A common game, "Don't act like you like her, then totally ignore her," said Jenny. Another, don't flirt with other girls in front of her. It pisses you off when she does it, and it pisses her off when you do it, she said.

The girls agreed that it all comes down to respect.

Guys to Girls

• What to wear, what to wear? First of all, little or no make-up. The guys were vociferous about this.

"Be as natural as possible. Blemishes give you character," said Shaun Urista, 18, a pre-business major.

Clothes? "You don't have to be slutty to be sexy," said Seth Dyson, 19, a recreation major. Most guys said they like it when girls dress more casually, but still feminine. When it's time to dress up, think conservatively, they said.

"If you're bigger than my Geo Metro, don't wear spandex," said Michael Grunwald, 23, a public relations major.

Finally, a dab of perfume goes a long way, they said.

• No stuck-up attitude and no games.

"If you're interested in finding someone, don't walk around with your head in the air and your eyes focused straight ahead," said Justin Cisek, 19, a finance major.

Kenyon Martin, 19, undecided about his major, agreed, "Lose the snobby stuck-up attitude. If you think you are all that and more, you're probably not, so, get over it."

What should a girl do then? Make eye contact and smile was the number one response.

So you've caught his attention, and he's had the courage to approach you. Now what? No games, guys hate games, they said.

Justin Cisek said, "Don't try and play hard to get. It just pisses guys off and makes them lose interest."

Another common game, "Not returning phone calls," said William Pluchel, 21, a journalism major.

Always be open-minded, and willing to do things.

"Be spontaneous. Be willing to do something wild at the spur of the moment," said Erik Hutchinson, 21, a biology major.

And, just common sense, "Don't hit on my friends," said Dave Baldinger, 20, a supply chain management major.

• Ask him out. Guys said they want girls to approach them and ask them out. As Jeff Frey, 18, undecided, said, "Don't wait for him."

When you do take the initiative, remember, "If he doesn't flirt back, lay off already!" said Omid Hamidi, 20, business and CIS major.

To get his attention, eye contact is essential. "One glance followed by a second glance. Anything more is too easy of a pick-up," said Jeff Williams, 20, a communication major.

• Be yourself, and be honest. Erik Hutchinson said, "Don't try to impress the guy by being someone you're not. It will come back to kick you in the ass."

Simply, as Jeff Frey said, "Be yourself, please!"

• We all know the jerks, but don't forget the nice guys. Guys ask, "Why do girls date the jerks and blow-off the nice guys?"

"Just because one man screwed you over doesn't mean all men will," said by Shaun Bairbridge, 21, a small business major.

Also, know and like the guy for who they are, not what they are. "A lot of girls like to date guys because of their status, just because some guy is in a fraternity or a sports player. [The girl says] "Oh! Wow, a nice bodied frat boy or football player! I will look so good with him!" said Justin Cisek.

• The money thing. When asked who should pay, most of the guys said they should pay, but the girl should offer once. The same scenario as above.

However, when choosing a guy to date, "Don't care about how much money I have, or how I dress, or any other superficial nonsense," said Matt Desmond, 19, a communication major.

• Little annoyances. Have you ordered a salad and diet coke when out on a date? Asked if you look fat? Had a little too much to drink? Said "I don't care, whatever you want is fine with me?" Kept your pager or cell phone on while on a date? Made a guy wait for you to get ready? Do you nag? These are just a few of the things that guys say annoy the hell out of them.

When out on a date, eat! Joe Cracchiola, 18, a theater arts major said, "We won't think you're pigs. I promise."

• "Leave some space. Just some. We all need it," said Dave.

• Communication. Conversation. Ask him questions. However, "Don't ask questions you don't want answers to," said Brian Durand, 24, a French and marketing major. Also, don't talk about ex-boyfriends, they don't want to know, really.

• Silent communication. You don't always have to talk.

"Understand when we are quiet," said Keith Nelson, 25, a philosophy major. If a guy is upset, he does not necessarily want to talk about it right away.

Give him time, and when he's ready, he will come to you.

When you are upset, don't expect the guy to read your thoughts.

You have to tell them. "Disclose and vent your emotions in me. I'll be there, as I know you would be for me," said Matt Desmond. If you just don't feel like talking, explain.

They will understand.

As for arguments, Eric Best, 19, a music education major said, "If a guy says something that can be taken two ways, and one makes you angry and hurt, the guy meant the other one."

If this is not the case, do not yell. It does not make the situation any better.

• Sex from a man's point of view. Shiba Basuthakur, 18, an Electrical Engineering major said, "Don't just hook-up with anyone.

There's a difference between classy and trashy."

For a guy hooking-up and dating are two different things.

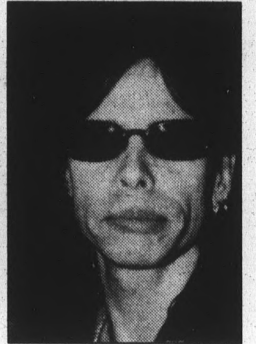

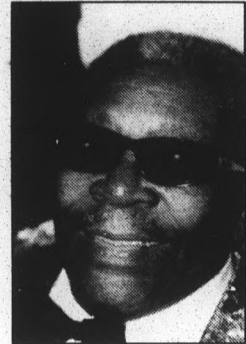

Sex? "Sex is evil. Evil is sin. Sin is forgiven. So let's begin.

Just kidding, sex is in no way mandatory," said Joe Cracchiola. No decent guy is going to pressure you into having sex.

Seth Dyson gave this advice, "When you're feeling groovy, tell him. You'll both be feelin' it in a while." In other words, communicate.

Indian studies will provide history's missing chapter

By Jennifer Lamb

Professor James Riding In heads a new Indian studies program at Arizona State University and works to return sacred Indian objects robbed from ancient grave sites in hopes of educating students and the public about Indian culture.

"There is a hidden chapter of history," said Riding In. "My effort is to re-teach a missing part of our text books. Much of Indian culture and history has been misrepresented or excluded from our education's curriculums."

The new Indian Studies curriculum is designed to provide students with intellectual and practical knowledge of Indian culture and history, said Riding In. The program is already underway with courses such as Introduction to American Indian Studies available.

Riding In and his colleagues hope to have a bachelor's program for Indian studies majors up and running soon. It is currently awaiting approval by the Board of Regents.

Riding In hopes that when students graduate with an Indian studies major they will work for agencies and in-service oriented activities.

In addition to heading the new Indian studies program, Riding In spends much of his time in the repatriation of Indian objects. Repatriation is the returning of sacred Indian remains and objects to their affiliated tribes for proper burial.

"The dead have a right to a proper re-burial. They have been stolen from their graves," said Riding In.

Objects and remains were taken from Indian nations across America to be displayed in museums or personal collections. Indian skulls were collected from gravesites and used in research. One research study used stolen skulls in an attempt to prove that Whites were superior, said Riding In. The study eventually lost its credibility and was stopped.

"There is a long legacy in this nation of disrupting Indian grave sites in the name of science and curiosity," said Riding In.

Riding In's goal is to document this untold history of misconduct, have laws passed to protect Indian burial sites, and receive legislative authorization for the repatriation of sacred objects

Riding In is a member of the Pawnee tribe in Oklahoma. He attended public high school both on and off the Indian reservation in New Mexico and later served four years in the service. He later received a bachelor's degree in history from Fort Louis college in Colorado, and master's and doctorate degrees in history from University of California Los Angeles.

Riding In taught at alternative schools on the Zuni reservation for many years and finally came to teach at ASU in 1990.

Riding In said he became interested in learning and teaching history because of his father.

"He would tell me many stories about Pawnee history," said Riding In.

"I began teaching because what I learned in school was different than the truth. There was some mention of the Indians but the views were biased and the Indians were stereotyped. Mostly, Indian history was just excluded from the curriculum."

ASU student preparing for 2-year Mormon mission in Australia

By Holly Heap

He drives a new Nissan Altima, just upgraded the RAM on his Pentium II IBM computer and has a great job with good pay and benefits. He is always surrounded by friends and family and just started his junior year at ASU as a social work major.

Tempe native Troy Duncan lives the life most 20-year-olds dream of.

Starting this summer he will be walking everywhere. No computer, no telephone, not even television. He'll be working 70 hours a week. The pay? Not a dime. He won't get to see his family or friends, and will phone them only twice a year. Education? Put on hold.

What will change Duncan's life?

Duncan will serve a mission for the Mormon church in Australia. He is scheduled to leave in July to start two years as a volunteer for the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Duncan said despite all he had, he was not happy where he was in life until he decided to serve a mission. Now he wants to help others to change their lives. "Because I know how much a difference Christ's teachings made in my life, I want others to have the same opportunity."

But serving a mission will not be easy. Many missionaries are faced with the challenge of learning new languages, adjusting to a new culture and way of life. The job can be hazardous and sometimes fatal. In the past missionaries have been kidnapped and even killed, and many suffer persecution and hostility.

Also taxing is the preparation to go on a mission. The Mormon church requires missionaries to go through three to 10 weeks of intense training in one of nine centers throughout the world.

Before entering the center, Duncan's life is filled with numerous doctor visits. Vaccinations and physical examinations will all be part of his summer. Also shopping for the two dark suits and seven white shirts that will be his uniform for the next two years.

Missionaries are also required to "pay their way," with help from family and friends. Duncan said he is working hard now to save money and pay off debts before leaving.

Duncan admits he will miss the material things, women, and especially his family, but said it is the best time for him to go because he has no real commitment to his own family or kids. He doesn't mind putting off school.

Students like Duncan are asked by the Mormon church to put everything on hold to preach about the church across the world.

Duncan's situation is not uncommon among the 2000 or more LDS students that attend ASU.

"Of the 1000 ASU students who attend the Tempe Institute of Religion on campus, the majority have served missions," said Director Arthur Meacham.

"Serving a mission is to a student's advantage. Most will mature, gain discipline and create better study habit," full-time missionary and worker at the Institute of Religion, Elder Gee of Salt Lake said.

Meacham agreed that most students improve their grade point averages after serving a mission. Most "C students" become "B students."

"I can't think of a better way to enhance your education than to serve a mission," said Meacham. It's an expectation of boys age 19 and encouraged of girls age 21 and older.

"A sacrifice is to exchange something of value for something of greater value, the mission is no different, you get more back than you invest," Meacham said.

Dozens of students caught cheating in ethics course

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Twenty-five San Diego State University business students got an "F" for cheating. The class? Ethics.

About one third of those enrolled in a business ethics course were caught using answers to a quiz last month. All were given failing grades for the course and most were placed on probation.

The scandal was reported this week in the student newspaper, The Daily Aztec, and in today's San Diego Union-Tribune.

"What did I learn? Obviously not to cheat. It's not worth it," one student told the Union-Tribune.

Lecturer Brian D. Cornforth said he set a trap to catch cheaters after receiving a tip that students were using answers they culled from tests given to an earlier session of the class.

"A line must be drawn in the sand," he said. "This is just too egregious, it's too heinous a cheating scandal."

Julie Logan, the university's judicial procedures officer, said the case was unusual because of the number of students involved: "Most of my cheating cases are just one person making the decision to cheat on their own."

Noisy dorms a problem when studying for finals

By Julie Born

The base-thump from a stereo makes a loud backdrop for students yelling, laughing, and screaming down the corridors of Arizona State University residence halls at 2 a.m.

Noise pollution like this has disrupted the sleep and study time of many ASU students.

In all the residence halls most noise complaints are filed between 10 p.m. and 2 a.m. According to Jennifer Rutg, a desk assistant at Manzanita Hall, 2 a.m. is the prime time for noise complaints. On the weekend Manzanita gets around 10 official complaints a night. "On the week-days it's noisy until midnight," said Rutg.

Much of this noise is from students returning from parties on the weekend. The disturbances vary depending on the dorm and the floor. The noise complaints most often involve students talking or yelling too loud, the rest are attributed to loud music.

A residence hall assistant at the Center Complex, Bryan Cole, said the number of noise complaints increases during any holiday weekend. Complaints also rise during football-game weekends. He said most students party during the last days of finals so complaints increase again.

All residence dorms adhere to the same policy when dealing with noise complaints. Once a complaint is filed the person it is filed against will go in front of the residence hall director. The director will deal with the student as they see fit. A student can be evicted from a residence hall if noise complaints continue to be a problem.

Cole said it is generally up to the residence assistant of the accused to deal with the complaint. Some assistants give warnings said Rutg, others immediately write up the student.

Best Hall and the study intensive dorm, Mariposa, get about two to three complaints on the weekend. The freshman dorms have more noise complaints than the dorms that include upperclassmen.

If you want peace and quiet during finals, the dorms might not be the best bet, try the library.

Public display of affection not always appreciated by crowd

By Dena Michelle Jones

Embracing tightly on a stroll down Palm Walk. Clasp sweat-soaked palms in class. Aggressively kissing. Exchanging vast amounts of bodily fluids in the Memorial Union.

Swapping spit in public is socially acceptable to some, to others it is not.

Students publicly display their affection to each other across campus. Often times, couples hold hands or hug as they depart and head to class. Others may fondle each other while waiting in the Coffee Plantation line. Yet, some find dark places to passionately caress and kiss each other at the end of a long day.

What is acceptable? When amidst all of these public displays of affection students have different opinions.

Lindsey Carlsness, freshman interior design major, said, "I think that hugging, hand holding and quick kisses are okay. Anything more than that is uncomfortable for others. I think it is a private personal thing. I do not do it and I expect the courtesy to be returned."

Students are bound to come across passionate couples while on campus. Some tell the kissing coeds to rent rooms and grope each other behind closed doors.

Jason C., an education student said, "I believe that hugging and chicken-peck kissing is acceptable, but leave the tongue and body groping for the bedroom."

Just how far is too far?

Maria Pallas, nutrition major said, "I am at school, not a porn show. Hugging and kissing, but nothing more. There is a time and a place for everything, but if no one is looking, then I don't care what you do."

Despite some criticism, college couples will continue to tenderly embrace when given the chance. External and public exhibits of endearment may be intended to demonstrate love and adoration.

Some students, however, wish that the extreme outward expressions of the inward emotions be left to more secluded locations than Cady Mall.

National Park reaches balance with climbers, environmentalists

By Martha Bellisle

JOSHUA TREE NATIONAL PARK, Calif. (AP) — His toes clinging to tiny knobs on the rock's face, Jake Safstrom reaches with one hand to clip his rope to a metal anchor bolt screwed into the rock. He inches to the next bolt and repeats the moves until he reaches the top of Headstone Rock.

The bolts left tacked along the route mean safety for Safstrom's ascent of a sheer cliff, so when Park Superintendent Ernia Quintana proposed a ban on bolts, citing environmental concerns, climbers around the country revolted.

This month, after a year of often bitter debate, park officials, climbers and environmentalists agreed on a plan that provides permits for installing new bolts and lifts restrictions on replacing old ones.

"It has been a long, sometimes painful process, but we've been able to come together and come up with a plan that's both sensitive to the resources and friendly to the visitor," Quintana said.

Joshua Tree is the first national park to draw up a plan to supervise climbers, said Carol Anthony, a spokeswoman for the National Park Service in Washington.

The deal could set a precedent for other parks balancing conservation needs with increased demands for recreation.

Thousands of climbers from around the world are drawn to Joshua Tree, about 150 miles east of Los Angeles, by some 4,000 climbing routes up hundreds of huge granite boulders and the mild desert climate.

But as climbing's popularity has grown, so has its impact: feet trample fragile desert plants at the bases of climbs; gymnastic chalk used to dry sweaty hands marks the routes; and unofficial surveys say as many as 8,000 bolts litter the park's cliffs.

Last year, about 1.4 million people visited Joshua Tree, and climbers made up the biggest share, said Assistant Superintendent Mary Risser.

"The sheer volume of the increase in recreational climbing was a red flag for us, and we said, 'Whoa, something needs to be done,'" Quintana said. "So we said no bolts — and that meant removing the ones that were there."

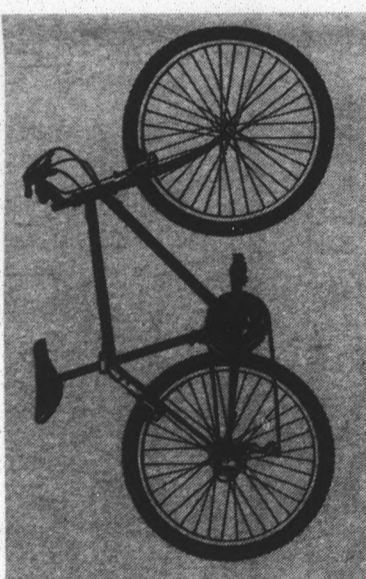

Quintana and some environmental groups favored removable climbing hardware that would be removed by the last climber in each group.

The moratorium came in December 1997. The next year, the U.S. Forest Service prohibited all bolts in its wilderness areas, arguing that the fixtures violated the 1964 Wilderness Act's ban on permanent improvements.

Heated debate led Quintana to change his approach, and to the Forest Service rescinding its ban pending a study.

"They asked us to look at their climbing routes as vertical trails, so we did," Quintana said. "It was an eye opener for me."

Climbing

Some climbers argued that since park officials place sign posts, walking bridges and other permanent fixtures along hiking trails through wilderness areas, there should be no objection to a 2 1/2-inch piece of metal that often can't be seen from the ground.

Under the compromise, to take effect by September, climbers can install new bolts after they receive approval from a yet-to-be-established climbing committee. Old bolts can be replaced without a permit. Climbers also are asked to replace shiny hardware and brightly colored webbing with less-noticeable materials.

"It's good that bolting can continue — this route wouldn't be possible without bolts," Safstrom, 36, of Los Angeles said after his climb. "It's a big safety issue."

Study shows students avoid choosing high-tech educations

By Martha Mendoza

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP) — College students are opting away from high-tech degrees even though the computer industry is desperate for well-trained graduates, according to a recently released study.

The report, issued by the American Electronics Association, found that high-tech degrees — including engineering, math, physics and computer science — declined 5 percent between 1990 and 1996.

Preliminary findings from 1997 and 1998 indicate the trend is continuing, the AEA said.

"Although there are some bright spots in the CyberEducation results, the bottom line is that the U.S. educational system is not adequately preparing our youth for today's information age economy," said AEA president William Archey.

The AEA said elementary and high schools must do more to get students ready to tackle a high-tech education.

Of the decreasing number of high-tech degrees awarded, the study found a significant portion went to foreign nationals. Non-U.S. citizens received 45 percent of the nation's doctorate level high-tech degrees.

Among the states, California's colleges conferred the most high-tech degrees, but it also had one of the greatest declines, awarding 1,600 fewer degrees in 1996 than in 1990.

Grey Baker, a 19-year-old freshman at Stanford University, said he will probably major in humanities, history or political science. He won't choose a high-tech subject, he said, because he's interested in examining more abstract ideas.

"I'm here at college mainly to learn to explore, because I love thinking about ideas," he said. "I'm really not trying to study a subject which will get me a job."

Nationwide the unemployment rate for high-tech careers is extremely low — 1.6 percent for engineers and 1.2 percent for math and computer scientists last year.

Lack of trained workers has been a common complaint in the high-tech industry.

Lobbyists successfully pressed last year for Congress to raise dramatically the number of foreigners with high-tech skills who can be hired by American companies. Critics argued the industry is overlooking qualified domestic workers in its search for cheaper labor.

GATEWAY TO YOUR FUTURE.

Scientists solving ultimate medical supply problem: new brains

By Daniel Q. Haney

BOSTON (AP) — Scientists want to fix the things that go wrong inside your head. Their plan: Grow replacement parts for broken brains.

They make it sound easy. Just brew a batch of gray matter. Drill a hole in the skull. Put in the new stuff. Wire it up like the original.

Voila! New brains.

Despite its whiff of mad scientist run amok, this scenario is surprisingly close to reality. Researchers can already do amazing things with mouse brains. And as they frequently point out, mice really are an awful lot like us.

Some human experiments already hint at what's possible. Since the 1980s, doctors have cautiously tested transferring brain cells from aborted fetuses to victims of Parkinson's disease. For some, it seems to work remarkably well, restoring lost control of movement.

To those on the cusp of this new technology, Parkinson's is almost too easy. It involves the death of just one small bit of material, the brain cells that make the message-carrying neurotransmitter dopamine.

No, they have their sights on much more complicated targets. In the years to come, they see the possibility of rewiring broken spines, patching up strokes, correcting multiple sclerosis, undoing inherited metabolic disorders, maybe even rebuilding the wrecked brains of Alzheimer's disease victims.

"I mean not just putting in cells to produce a neurotransmitter or make a little local connection," explains Dr. Jeffrey Macklis of Children's Hospital and Harvard Medical School in Boston. "I mean really rewiring complex circuitry in the brain. Ten years ago, this would have been considered totally crazy. Five years ago, it would have been a little bonkers."

Macklis goes on to walk about his mice, the critters of choice for those who study such things. When immature cells are transplanted under precisely the right conditions, they migrate across the animals' tiny damaged brains. They take root in just the spots where they are needed. They morph into the exact brands of cells that are missing. They connect up with other parts of the brain. In short, they seem to work.

"Mice brains are fundamentally not that different from humans'," says Macklis. "The idea of using immature cells and guiding their differentiation to rebuild complex circuitry is no longer crazy."

Until recently, human fetuses were the only source of brain material for such jobs, but they were never ideal. Doctors' qualms go beyond the ethical thickets of recycling aborted material. Fetuses will always be in short supply; it takes several to treat just one patient. And quality is hard to control, especially considering that many were aborted for a reason, such as genetic abnormalities.

But now scientists seem certain that transplanting brain material — what they call cell therapy — is about to become practical. The reason is the discovery of entirely new reservoirs of brain material. At dozens of universities and biotech firms, they are developing three main varieties — animal brains, cancerous growths and the tissue wellspring called stem cells.

One of these sources can be found at a gleaming biomedical lab off a country road about 60 miles west of Boston. The first thing that makes the place seem a little odd is the technicians' get-ups: green surgical scrubs with knee-high black rubber boots. Then there's the smell.

Despite fans that turn over the air 19 times an hour and filter it cleaner than an operating room's, the lab carries a certain barnyard redolence, an unmistakable eau de pig. This lab is also a barn, home to 65 or so grunting, rooting animals. But the end product is brain parts, not pork chops.

"This is literally the cleanest pig facility on the face of the earth," says David Boucher, the veterinary technician who makes sure the walls sparkle, the germs stay far away and the animals themselves enjoy unpiglike spotlessness.

It may be the world's most expensive pig facility, too. The 275-pound Yorkshire sows — "the girls," Boucher affectionately calls them — cost between $20,000 and $30,000 apiece to raise this way. However, the price will fall dramatically if pig cells are approved for routine human medical use, and production scales up.

When it's time for a still-experimental transplant, the technicians kill three artificially inseminated pigs that have been pregnant exactly 27 days. Then they surgically remove their fetuses. (Killing the sows, they say, is the only way to get the unborn pigs out antiseptically.) It takes the brains of 26 pig fetuses to gather 48 million dopamine-producing cells, enough for one person with Parkinson's. The cells are shipped to a hospital, and less than 72 hours later, they are inside someone's brain.

So far, these pig cells have been tested on 20 people with Parkinson's, six with epilepsy and six with Huntington's disease. Of the first 11 Parkinson's patients treated, three improved significantly.

"I have no doubt this can work and produce tremendous benefit," says Dr. Greg Stewart of Genzyme, which is developing the treatment with Diacrin, another biotech firm.

While the supply of fetal pig cells is not a problem, there are other drawbacks. Patients may need to take immune-suppressing drugs to keep their bodies from rejecting the tissue, and there is a remote chance that dangerous animal viruses might be passed along.

"I don't think it's an elegant way to solve the problem," says Dr. Michael Levesque of Cedars-Sinai Medical Center in Los Angeles.

A bit more elegant, perhaps, is a method being tested at the University of Pittsburgh. Doctors there are experimentally transplanting human cells into the brains of stroke victims.

The cells are similar to stem cells, the factories that manufacture various kinds of tissue inside the body. But there's a catch: These cells began as cancer, grown in test tubes from a 22-year-old's testicular tumor.

The transplants are being tested on 12 stroke victims. All suffer paralysis or other serious disability, even though the strokes destroyed only a small bit of their brain tissue.

Three seem to have improved. One walks better, another is less stiff, while a third has better control of arm and leg movements. Are the extra cells responsible? Or is this the natural course of recovery?

Dr. Douglas Kondziolka, the surgeon in charge, does not know. Still, he says, "We were hoping for a glimmer of efficacy so we could continue on. We've seen even a little more than a glimmer."

Fixing a stroke, however, is far more challenging than relieving Parkinson's. A stroke leaves a dead zone inside the brain. Missing are many kinds of cells that were hooked up in complex patterns.

In their attempt at repair, surgeons add their cancer-derived cells to the ring of damaged tissue that surrounds the dead area. Just why this might do some good isn't completely clear. But the doctors speculate that the new cells help the hurt ones by restoring connections, releasing neurotransmitters and pumping in amino acids.

As best they can tell, the transplanted cells have been transformed from cancerous gonadal cells to stable nerve cells through a series of manipulations. But the idea of using cancer cells makes some doctors uneasy. Others worry that the challenges of repairing strokes are just too vast to even attempt yet.

For generations, scientific dogma held that the adult brain cannot repair itself, because it lacks stem cells. Wrong. Recently, scientists found that adult brains do indeed harbor stem cells, although their exact function is still a mystery. But when coaxed properly in a test tube, they will divide over and over again, making brand-new neurons.

"The biggest hurdle is not getting cells into the nervous system," says Kessler. "It's not getting them to differentiate and to live. The biggest hurdle is getting them to reconnect in the proper way. That is an extraordinarily daunting process, when you think of the billions of connections that have to be formed."

Yet scientists such as Macklis and

Dr. Evan Snyder, a Children's Hospital colleague, think this is entirely possible. For one thing, their experiments suggest that damaged parts of the brain send out help signals that can recruit transplanted cells and show them what to do.

In mice, at least, immature neurons injected into the head will travel across the brain to where cells are dying. There they assume the form of the missing cells, stitching themselves seamlessly into the brain's circuitry.

Cells injected into the brain's fluid-filled ventricles eventually migrate all through the head. The researchers say such an approach might eventually conquer diseases that involve many parts of the brain.

The whole idea of bringing in replacement cells from someplace else grew out of the belief that the brain cannot repair itself. But with the discovery of brain stem cells, that dogma is crumbling.

"Cell therapy might be even more interesting, not less," says Snyder. "Not only might it mean we put back cells that the brain does not grow on its own, but maybe we will do it by augmenting a natural response."

In short, these scientists envision a day when repairing a broken brain will involve no transplants, no operations. Instead, it will mean triggering the brain to awaken its supply of stem cells, to grow its own spare parts, to literally fix itself.

Mexican gray wolf gets second chance to survive in wild

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Meet Brunhilda, the poster wolf for efforts to return rare Mexican gray lobos to the American Southwest.

You might already know her by her picture, even if you do not know her name. She is the photogenic creature whose image often runs with newspaper stories about a federal wolf restoration project in national forests along the New Mexico-Arizona border.

She has her own story, too.

Even though Brunhilda was born in captivity two years ago, she has displayed remarkable wildness, according to biologists who have watched her roaming free in the Apache-Sitgreaves National Forest and in captivity at the Sevilleta National Wildlife Refuge in central New Mexico.

They say she is savvy, physically strong, domineering, bold and loyal.

In short, she possesses qualities wolves need to survive in the wild — qualities especially important for the captive-bred pioneer wolves of the restoration project, who are expected to raise the first new generation of wild Mexican gray wolves, or lobos.

But Brunhilda's virtues in the wild also can create problems for her around civilization, biologists say.

Brunhilda left her parents shortly after gaining her first taste of freedom last year in the Apache-Sitgreaves forest. Alone, she wandered far, about 70 miles as the crow flies. She traveled unafraid, near people and farms and onto private land. She attacked and injured a miniature horse.

She was recaptured after she strayed off public land.

Now, she may get a second chance.

Biologists were planning last week to take the pregnant Brunhilda and her mate deep into the backcountry of the Blue Range Primitive Area along the New Mexico-Arizona border and release them. But those plans were postponed after biologists discovered that Brunhilda's pregnancy was further along than they thought.

After she gives birth, biologists say they probably still will move Brunhilda and her mate into the mountains. But they might keep the pups in captivity.

Last year, Brunhilda was one of 11 Mexican gray wolves released in the Apache-Sitgreaves. Until those wolves were released, biologists believed lobos were extinct in the wild.

But the first year of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service's wolf reintroduction program in the Southwest was plagued with gunfire.

Five of the wolves were shot to death. Several, like Brunhilda, were recaptured. Among those first 11 restored to the wild, only Brunhilda's cautious father remains free.

Going into the reintroduction effort's second year, biologists again are hoping that captive-bred wolves can raise the first wild-born generation of pups in decades.

The key to the reintroduction effort, biologists say, is getting that first healthy, wild-born generation living in the wild.

"They think Brunhilda is up to the task of helping raise that first generation.

"She's amazing," said Colleen Buchanan, a Fish and Wildlife Service biologist and the caretaker of the lobos at the Sevilleta refuge. "You know when an animal has it and when an animal doesn't. She has it."

Brunhilda made an impression on biologists and other observers even before her release.

On a chilly January morning in 1998, Interior Secretary Bruce Babbitt led a horde of biologists, wildlife advocates, reporters and camera operators to the Campbell Blue holding pen north of Hannagan Meadow, Ariz.

The conventional wisdom was that the wolves, traumatized by their move, would hide in their kennels until the humans left.

That wasn't the case. Almost as soon as the door to Brunhilda's kennel was opened, the 9-month-old wolf pup bounded out. She ambled a few feet across the snow, then stopped and looked back at the dozens of reporters, photographers and television crews watching her. She explored her new surroundings, curious and energetic.

Cameras clicked and rolled. The images today are not only seen in newspapers, they are on an Arizona Game and Fish Department poster and a new Forest Service map for the Blue Range Primitive Area.

"She's the poster wolf for the program," said Dave Parsons, the Fish and Wildlife Service's Mexican wolf recovery leader.

She was nicknamed "Brunhilda," for a princess of Norse mythology, because of her "monstrous" size as a pup, Buchanan said.

The characteristics biologists have found encouraging in Brunhilda — her apparent intelligence and strength — by no means guarantee her success.

Two months after Brunhilda was moved into the holding pen near the New Mexico-Arizona line, the pen gates were opened. Biologists who have viewed videotape from the pens say Brunhilda was the first one out.

A month later, Brunhilda's three-member, tightknit family, including her mother and father, was joined by a female from the six-member Hawks Nest pack, which was released at the same time about 3 miles away.

Buchanan said it's unusual for wolves to leave their packs before their second year. "My gut says it has something to do with that other wolf joining up with them," Buchanan said.

Wolves wander to find mates. But biologists knew Brunhilda's wanderings would be unsuccessful: There were no potential mates out there.

On May 9, she crossed the boundary of national forests along the New Mexico-Arizona line designated for the wolf releases. And biologists began efforts to recapture her.

The next day, while still wandering outside the boundary, Brunhilda approached a cow and calf. Biologists tracking her from an airplane scared her away.

She turned south back into the wolf recovery area, but on May 13 she was again spotted outside the boundary. On May 16, she attacked the miniature horse.

On May 18, she was recaptured in open country near Show Low, Ariz., about 70 miles as the crow flies from the Campbell Blue pen.

"She had tremendous stamina," Parsons said. "I couldn't believe it. She was in excellent condition."

At the time of Brunhilda's capture, the wolf was "acting much wilder than before her release into the wild," Buchanan said.

She was returned to captivity at Sevilleta, but it did not suit her. "I saw her jumping up the fences trying to get out. She was howling a lot," Buchanan said.

When fall rolled around, it was time to find Brunhilda a mate. Biologists decided to try something new.

breeding program was strictly a computer dating service. Biologists would punch numbers into a computer, and the computer would tell them who to pair up with whom.

This time, however, they put Brunhilda into a pen with three brothers. They decided to let Brunhilda choose her own mate.

Among the three brothers, the biggest was picked on constantly. Despite his social standing, Brunhilda selected the big wolf "within five minutes," Buchanan said.

"I don't know what she keyed into. My guess is it was his size, although I don't have anything to back that up," Buchanan said. "Ever since they have been together they are practically inseparable. They sleep next to each other. They are very compatible. They are a very strong pair."

Today, five wolves roam free in the Apache-Sitgreaves National Forest, and five more are in forested holding pens awaiting release. Biologists plan to release at least four more wolves, probably including Brunhilda.

Recently, they said they had hoped to take Brunhilda and her mate deep into the remote Blue Range area, where the wolves would have less help from biologists and they would be harder to track.

"We wanted to put her in the wilderness," Buchanan said. "We have to choose animals that we think have best shot at making it."

Traveling With Your Pet

(NAPS)—Alby Mangels, a worldwide adventurer and host of Travel Channel's popular series "Adventure Bound," takes his pooch on boats, planes and jeeps everywhere from Africa to the Andes.

Here are some tips for traveling with your pet:

General Information

- The Right Choice—If you decide you want your pet with you start making plans early.
- No Trains—Pets may travel on most airlines, but only animals that help people with disabilities are allowed on trains.
- Visit Your Vet—You will need current vaccinations, and health and rabies certificates if you are crossing state lines or intend to board your pet during any part of the trip.

Air Travel

- Airlines generally ship animals in the cargo compartment. Some airlines allow passengers to carry their pets in the cabin if they are in a small enough carrier that fits under the seat. There is usually a charge for transporting your pet.

- Book a non-stop flight. It's much easier on your pet and avoids the possibility of it getting lost.

Going By Car

- Stop every couple of hours to allow your dog (and you) to stretch, explore and get some air. Always keep your pet on a leash.
- Feed your pet at least two hours before leaving on a trip—he'll be less likely to get motion sickness.
- Never leave your pet alone in the car on hot days.

For more information, check with your vet, the airline you're traveling with, or in books available at your library or bookstore. The American Humane Association (800-227-4645) publishes a very readable brochure called "Enjoy the Ride," that gives general information about pet travel.

Traveling across great white north into American dream

(NAPS)—Every person should travel coast-to-coast at ground level at least once in a lifetime. It's a voyage that enables one to grasp the incredible geological, social and cultural mosaic that is North America.

Now, the opportunity to comfortably explore the continent at a reasonable rate is available to U.S. and Canadian residents. Amtrak and VIA Rail Canada have teamed up to offer the new North America Rail Pass—the first pass designed for travel in both countries at one low price.

The 30-day pass offers unlimited travel along 28,000 miles of scenic railroads in the U.S. and Canada, with more than 900 destinations from which to choose.

The pass is comparable to the Eurail train passes North Americans have used for years while exploring Europe.

Enjoy some of the world's most renowned rail routes, such as Amtrak's

Southwest Chief from Chicago to Los Angeles, or VIA Rail's Canadian from Toronto to Vancouver. Then, compare and contrast the beauty of the famed Canadian Rockies with their rugged American counterparts as you travel on Amtrak's California Zephyr between Chicago and the San Francisco Bay area.

Historic, cosmopolitan Montreal provides a European touch on North American soil. It's also an easy gateway to the walled city of Quebec and on to the seafaring Canadian Maritimes, or to the beautiful wilderness of northern Quebec.

If you'd like to truly go off the beaten path, consider VIA Rail's Skeena, which meanders from Jasper, Alberta in the Canadian Rockies to Prince Rupert and Prince George, both in northern British Columbia. Look out from the skyline car—you may see bald eagles, black bears or moose.

View the "great white north" on the Hudson Bay, running through Manitoba from Winnipeg to the distant port of Churchill. The Lake Superior explores the challenging terrain of northern Ontario.

For an exciting ride U.S.-style, try Amtrak's Sunset Limited from Orlando to Los Angeles. It wanders along the Gulf Coast, through New Orleans, San Antonio and El Paso before proceeding to New Mexico and Arizona.

The North America Rail Pass provides incredible flexibility. In the space of 30 days, one can travel from San Diego to Vancouver...to Halifax, Nova Scotia...to Miami...then back to San Diego. If you want to stop over along the way in Seattle or Winnipeg or Washington or Tucson, feel free.

Travelers may upgrade to first-class sleeping accommodations or special service for an additional charge. All segments of travel will require a reservation; at least one travel segment must occur in both the U.S. and Canada. To lessen the chance of encountering sold-out trains, it is recommended that all reservations be made when the pass is purchased. Some restrictions apply.

For more information about the pass, call any Amtrak or VIA Rail ticket office, your travel agent or Ticket By Mail (1-800-USA-RAIL in the U.S., 1-800-561-8630 in Canada). Or check the railroads' Web sites at www.amtrak.com or www.viarail.ca.

Extend Vacation Memories

(NAPS)—Whether travel plans involve the tropics or the slopes, vacations produce priceless memories. Photo experts for Kodak offer the following tips for capturing these moments.

- For extreme sports or outdoor shots, use the Kodak Max Sport one-time-use camera. It's loaded with Kodak Gold Max film that self-adjusts to virtually any picture-taking condition and is waterproof in up to 14 feet of water.

- Too much sunlight can ruin a great shot. For outdoor photos, take advantage of the low angle of the sun during the early morning and late afternoon. If you are taking pictures on a bright day, be sure not to shoot directly into sunlight.

- Try new camera angles and be sure to take multiple pictures. An Advanced Photo System camera with zoom lens may offer three print formats—panoramic, group and classic.

- Common objects such as trees often make perfect frames. These will help to lead the eye to the center of the picture and add an interesting flavor.

- No matter what you're doing, take a camera with you. After all, it doesn't do you any good sitting in the hotel room.

Music Lyrics Contest

It's so easy! Just draw a line from the lyric on the left to the correct lyric on the right.
You don't even need to know the song to figure it out!

There will be 10 prizes awarded!

1. Take this pink ribbon
2. You could say I lost my faith
3. Lost in a dream
4. Forever trusting who we are
5. If God will send
6. The first time I saw you
7. But there's a full moon rising
8. Looking out at the road
9. Got a gun in my holster
10. Canta me
11. I remember every little thing
12. And I think to myself
13. They say the sky above
14. You're the closest to heaven
15. Up and down the puppies hair

let's go dancing in the light in science and progress is Caribbean blue that I've ever been rushing under my wheels got a horse between my knees canciones de valor
fleas and ticks jump everywhere and nothing else matters
you were waitin' tables at the corner diner what a wonderful world nothing is what it seems off my eyes
as if it happened only yesterday
His angels

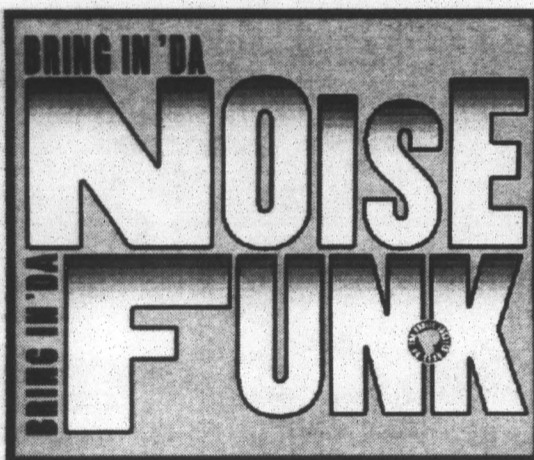

Here are your hints:

1. No Doubt; 2. Sting; 3. Megadeth; 4. Metallica; 5. U2; 6. George Strait; 7. Neil Young; 8. Jackson Browne; 9. Randy Newman; 10. Los Lobos; 11. Meat Loaf; 12. Louis Armstrong; 13. Enya; 14. Goo Goo Dolls; 15. Dave Matthews Band

These five people won tickets to see
BRING IN 'DA NOISE, BRING IN 'DA FUNK tonight at Gammage.

Here is how they express their noise for ASU.

Denielle Burl:

My noise reaches out in colors –
vibrant reds and blues that rip across the cool green landscape as I sprint my way from one end of the day to the other – as fiery as the sun which beats its drum at noon.
Close your eyes to see it.
Listen.

June D. Wilhite:

I scream. I shout. I say it loud because I am proud. I will shout this pride across the countries and seas afar with the golden torch that burns maroon flames. ALL will hear about sun devil excellence. Again and again I will say this loud...I am proud. Proud to be an ASU student.

Marla Keethler:

The diversity.
The unity.
The energy of hope and ambition.

Sharing experiences.
Making memories.
Anticipating the future, contemplating the past, and living for the present.

Facing challenges,
relishing successes,
enduring defeats.

Walking among strangers,
yet feeling welcomed.
This is my school.
This is my noise.

Nicole Cohen:

The cars honking their horns.
The city lights blaring through my bedroom window.
A baby screaming at the top of her lungs.
A husband howling at his wife.
A woman screeching.
A slap!
A cry...
A hug, that is the strongest noise of all.

Louie Flores (to the song "Play that Funky Music"):

Play that funky music ASU!
Play that funky music USA!
Lay down da boogie.
Woogie all night long to Da Noise!
Da Noise!
When da Noise Funk stops at Gammage,
There's sure to be a loud noisy rampage!
So don't you pack that trunk,
Cause you're sure to miss
Da Noise Funk!!

Analysts fear bull stampede

By Chet Currier

NEW YORK (AP) — Even if the bull market in stocks remains as healthy as ever, analysts worry that many aggressive investors are headed for a painful letdown.

It defies reason, they say, to expect the market averages to keep climbing in the future as fast as they have in the recent past, fresh from four consecutive years of 20 percent-plus gains.

While the stock-price indexes keep gaining ground, sudden changes in trends within the bull market can still take a heavy toll on "momentum" investors who like to own the hottest stocks of the day, or on day traders playing the market through the screens of personal computers.

"I don't mean to imply that the bull market is coming to an end, but investors must lower their expectations for market returns," H. Vernon Winters, chief investment officer at Mellon Private Asset Management said.

"Individuals are enraptured with stocks," Winters said in a luncheon speech to the Estate Planning Council of New York City last week. After taking a recent look at some establishments where the customers were day-trading stocks, Winters concluded, "this is going to end very badly."

"It's a wild market," adds Yale Hirsch, an Old Tappan, N.J., adviser who has published the newsletter Smart Money and the annual Stock Trader's Almanac for more than 25 years. "A shift by a fraction of a percent of the money at work can send some stocks flying and others plunging."

Ever since the bull market took off on its latest run, in 1995, analysts and money managers have warned repeatedly that stocks could not keep up the pace they were setting indefinitely.

But as the market has chalked up one year after another of powerful gains, their warnings have been drowned out by the roar of the bulls.

"Is it time to adjust expectations for future returns upward? Absolutely not," said Gus Sauter, who oversees the hugely popular index funds at the Vanguard Group in Valley Forge, Pa.

"Half of the stock market gains over the past 15 years are due to increases in price-earnings ratios," Sauter said in a current report to Vanguard investors. "So the only way to achieve future gains of the same magnitude is to have further dramatic increases in P-E ratios, or valuation levels.

"Right now, valuations are higher than they have ever been, so it's hard to make a compelling case that we're going to get any substantial increases in valuations from here.

"If current valuation levels remain intact, then future stock market returns can come from only two sources: Earnings growth and dividends. Earnings have typically grown at about 6 percent per year, and the current dividend yield is less than 1.5 percent.

"So a reasonable estimate of returns over the next decade is 8 percent annually, and that's assuming that valuation levels don't decline, which they very well could."

In his speech, Winters said, "Stock prices are very high, but conditions are really wonderful. Innovation, mainly in the form of technology, is allowing the U.S. economy to grow much faster than anyone thought possible. We expect continued growth, low inflation, and interest rates remaining low.

"The problem I have is valuation. I love the Internet, but is it really that easy to make money? I think large U.S. growth stocks are perhaps the most overpriced asset in the world at this point."

Winters concluded, "We think that the bull market will continue, but it is in a maturing phase."

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

by Sidney Omarr

Tuesday, May 4, 1999

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Key for you to succeed today is patience, timing. Capricorn, Cancer natives will play outstanding roles, could have these letters, initials in names: B, K, T. Older lady will help.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Travel preparations necessary — Sagittarian proves of valuable assistance. Focus on entertainment, participation in charitable-political campaign. Key words: exercise, diet, nutrition.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You work yourself in and out of difficulty — character is doing right thing when nobody is looking. Before night falls, you'll win friends and influence important people. Scorpio involved.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Be ready for change, travel, variety of sensations. You exude aura of personal magnetism, sensuality, sex appeal. Written message received is enabling you to promote exciting vacation.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): What seemed lost cause will be revised to your advantage. Attention revolves around home, security, income potential, marital status. Gift received, could be home-baked cake.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Go slow, avoid self-deception, see people, places as they are and not merely as you wish they might be. Pisces individual challenges your veracity. A secret is exposed.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Focus on business, career, added responsibility, dealings with Capricorn individual. Relative who claims to know everything will be caught short on knowledge. Romance gets hot, heavy.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): What you once thought would last forever will be concluded. Let go of preconceived notions, extricate yourself from unsavory situation, relationship. Added recognition is yours if you are ready.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Spotlight on income potential, ability to locate valuable lost article. Relationship draws to close, another is on horizon. Emotional shock will be part of scenario. Leo, Aquarius featured.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Questions loom large concerning direction, motivation, marital status. Cancer native invites you to dinner, promises broiled lobster. You could encounter future spouse, soul mate.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Scenario features fun, frolic, ability to predict future and to make it come true. You'll be dealing with lively Gemini who seems intent on wearing you thin. Sagittarian also in picture.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Look beyond the immediate — specific events foreshadow future. Emphasis on publishing, advertising, plans for journey. Taurus, Scorpio persons figure in dynamic scenario. Luck with number 4.

IF MAY 4 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: You were separated from one or both parents at relatively early age. Taurus, Leo, Scorpio persons play significant roles in your life, could have these letters, initials in names — D, M, V. At times your determination sinks to level of plain stubbornness. You are creative, passionate and when you are not in love you feel empty. Change in domestic life featured this year, possible change of residence, marital status.

Man in sunflower costume stages garden protest, demands mayor

NEW YORK (AP) — Elementary school children visiting City Hall were enthralled by the scene: Matthew "Flower" Power, dressed as a sunflower, scaling a tree.

Power climbed the 50-foot tree on Friday morning and then refused to come down. He demanded a meeting with Mayor Rudolph Giuliani to discuss his concerns over 114 community gardens scheduled to be auctioned May 13.

Police cleared sidewalks, inflated a huge air pillow under the tree, and then sent an officer up after him. After about 90 minutes, Power, 24, finally agreed to come down. He was charged with reckless endangerment, resisting arrest and disorderly conduct.

"It was fun," said Power, still wearing his silky costume around his head as officers put him in a police van. "Too bad the mayor didn't show."

The mayor, it turns out, wasn't at City Hall. A spokeswoman, Sunny Mindel, called the protest "a serious waste of police manpower and resources."

Former ASASU officer, RA says farewell

ASU's day to day presence in my life I will miss dearly, but my blood that flows maroon and gold will keep my memories fresh. Through the four years that I have been a student at ASU, I have gained much more than a degree from the College of Business. The experiences learned outside of the classroom are the ones that will live with me forever in my heart.

In Residential Life I was a resident Assistant for seven semesters, and I learned something everyday from my residents, fellow RAs and Hall Directors. Robert Boglin, my Hall Director over at Cholla Hall taught me how to balance my life (which I am still learning), in that process I have gained a friend for years to come. I have made many mistakes that I have learned from and I also had many successes that others have imitated and improved.

During my sophomore year, I decided to utilize the Disabilities Resources for Students (DRS) office to help me overcome my learning disability. Both Gale Johnson and Susan Williams assisted me to strengthen my disability. Besides helping me be more successful in my academics they also guided me in expanding my horizons. The powerful tools that I discovered in myself have brought me to opportunities that I would have thought impossible. In the process I transformed my disability into a positive aspect in my life and it has become a dynamic asset.

One aspect about that I noticed before I became a Sun Devil was its fantastic intercollegiate athletics program(s). Games, matches, tournaments were both won and lost on the mats, courts, and fields of ASU. I must refer to one game in particular that everyone here will have heard of or experienced personally. 19-0, does that score ring a bell? This was the day when ASU football was really put on the map. The Saturday that we defeated the powerful Nebraska Cornhuskers and stopped their winning streak. Thank you to all the players, coaches, fellow fans and especially Spider-Man. This is where, Eric, Max, Brad, Joe, many other friends and myself sweat, bleed and scream the ASU maroon and gold pride.

This enthusiastic spirit that most see in the realm of a sporting event is in my veins everyday as a student.

Deitchman

I decided to run for an important position of our student government, let me assure you it was not for personal gratification. Though I did not win the election, I surely did not lose. I became an officer of ASASU for the sole purpose to have ASU shine as the bright gold color that we are and should be forever more. I hope that more students in the future get involved in great organizations like ASASU, Student Alumni, RHA, IFC, Panhellenic, MUAB and the other 400 fantastic organizations that our great school has to offer. The satisfaction that I get out of being an active Sun Devil will grow stronger every time I come back to visit my alma mater.

The time that I spent here has gone too fast, but I know that I will always have a place that I can return to with great memories. I will always be able to say that I made a lot of good friends here, I experienced and learned more than I would have ever expected to, and I became a Sun Devil for life. Thank you to everybody who made my college career something that will live with me in my mind, heart and soul for the rest of my life. With love, spirit, and allegiance to Arizona State University, a Sun Devil forever will I be.

With love and dedication to making ASU the best, Seth "Spider-Man" Deitchman.

DO IT ALL

Become a Sales Rep at the State Press

Jennifer Hadden, Student Sales Rep

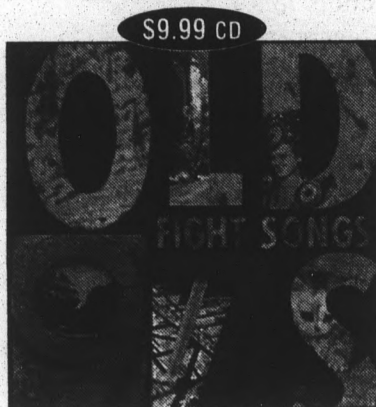

The State Press has been a valuable learning experience for me. In a Marketing Minor, and this job has given me the opportunity to learn what advertising is all about before I graduate. From sales to promotions to designing ads, I do it all. I work one on one with owners, managers, and marketing directors of several local & national businesses. I set my own hours and enjoy the convenience of working on campus. Combine that with the casual environment & friendly staff and it's the perfect job for any college student.

The State Press needs ad reps. No sales experience necessary. We do ask that you have a vehicle to use, have a year to commit to the position and are taking no more than 13 credit hours per semester. INTERESTED? QUESTIONS? Call Kathy Welsh at 965-6555 or pick up an application at the info desk of the State Press in the basement of Mathews Center.

ASU Police ready for emergencies

By Holly Heap

In the wake of school shooting massacres and bomb threats across the nation, ASU police have hired more police aids and Campus Security Assistants.

Current officers are training through mock emergency role plays and classroom scenarios.

"We expect our next training will reflect the Littleton Colorado massacre," said ASU Police Sgt. Bill Wright in an interview Thursday morning.

The Arizona Peace Officers Standards and Training Board will certify police officers and conduct monthly training to prevent and react to emergencies in the future.

Police believe there are not a lot of preemptive measures that can be taken, all you can do is react, said Wright.

But campus police feel confident they are ready for such an emergency.

"We are prepared for this kind of thing," said Wright.

In the past 10 years many bomb threats have been made, especially around finals time. Sgt. Wright said that police have a well-developed plan to avoid such threats. The plan would have instructors give a tentative meeting place for the finals and alternating classrooms if a threat is made where students could retreat and resume testing. The faculty has not yet accepted this plan.

The full time police aids and part-time CSA's do basic security control on campus, such as checking doors and patrolling after hours. They do not carry weapons but can detain people and call police to have them arrested. They will also help spot violators of the gun control policy on campus.

Police spokespeople said they are not opposed to establishing measures of protection such as visitor registration, metal detectors and more gun control, but say the public would reject the idea.

Wright said "there comes a point when people will trade their freedom for safety."

With three active squads of 10 officers on each patrolling campus daily students should feel safe. But Wright asserts that student's safety is not completely up to the police, it is a personal matter. He wears his gun even off duty. But students are not allowed to carry guns on campus, even if they have a concealed weapons permit.

To ensure student's safety Sgt. Wright advises:

- Report any suspicious person(s).
- Use call boxes on campus to contact police quickly in an emergency.
- Be alert and trust gut instincts and feelings when in danger.

People in the news

• TAIPEI, Taiwan (AP) — Photographers who covered Leonardo DiCaprio's tumultuous trip through Taipei Airport accused the "Titanic" star on last week of having insulted them.

Their renewed anger was sparked by a statement issued by the star's publicist, who said DiCaprio's party was verbally assaulted by paparazzi when he arrived en route to Los Angeles after completing filming of the movie "The Beach" in Thailand.

"DiCaprio's transit was news, and as journalists it was our job to cover and report the news. ... But his aides obstructed our work and swore at us," the photographers said in a statement. "We were reporters on duty, not the so-called paparazzi," it said.

• WORCESTER, Mass. (AP) — The designer of the smiley face thinks rocker Marilyn Manson needs to lighten up.

Manson stormed off the stage Wednesday during a concert in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, apparently angry that someone stuck a large, yellow smiley face on one of his props.

After the singer left, concert-goers rioted and 23 people were arrested.

Harvey Ball, who lives in Worcester, said he's proud at the use of his smiley face. Ball is sending Manson an autographed smiley face pin with "Lighten Up Marilyn" written on it.

Ball, 77, also wants to warn Manson about World Smile Day, which he is declaring for Oct. 1.

"I hope he doesn't have any concerts booked on that date," he said.

• GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (AP) — "Tool Man" Tim Allen has agreed to take another lap around downtown streets in a celebrity race.

The Michigan native, who plays Tim Taylor in the ABC sitcom "Home Improvement," will drive a Saleen Ford Mustang in the second running of the West Michigan Grand Prix, organizers said last week.

"We're excited to be coming back to Grand Rapids for the second year," said Melissa Denoff, a publicist for Team Saleen. "I thought Tim had a great time last year, and the fans were having a blast having him there."

• NEW YORK (AP) — Former Sen. Alfonse D'Amato has quit his job as an attorney with a Manhattan law firm — a little more than a week after accepting it.

D'Amato said he quit as senior counsel with Nixon, Hargrave, Devans & Doyle LLP, citing his obligations to his consulting firm, Park Strategies Inc.

"Over the last week it has become obvious that with the number of clients under retainer at Nixon, Hargrave and the wide spectrum of clients I now represent through my consulting company ... it becomes too time consuming and enormously difficult to avoid potential conflicts and the appearance of conflict," he said Friday.

• LITTLETON, Colo. (AP) — There's no leeway when they talk about a curfew around here. Rocker Lenny Kravitz was already playing his last tune, but officials pulled the plug at 10:30 p.m. sharp.

"That is part of the rules for running Fiddler's Green," said Arapahoe County Commissioner Polly Page. "They agreed to that in order to operate."

The agreement was hashed out between the county and the operators of the private amphitheater about a decade ago because of noise complaints.

Mark Norman, senior vice president of Universal Concerts, the promoter of Thursday night's concert, said it was his decision to turn off the juice on the band's equipment and turn up the house lights.

"It's extremely unfortunate, but if I didn't do it, I'd be out of business," he said.

Kravitz had warned the audience he would likely be cut off because he was running late.

"The audience wasn't really happy about it," Norman said. "We had a couple of calls from people wanting their money back, but the show had been going on since 6 p.m."
